THE PREFACE.

THE Reader can desire no better Recommendation of the History now published, than to be assured that it is the genuine Work of the great Earl of Clarendon. The Work itself bears plain Characteristicks of its Author. The same Dignity of Sentiment, and Style, which distinguishes THE HISTORY OF THE REBELLION, and all other the Works of this noble Writer, breathes through the whole of this Performance.

THE Reason, why this History has lain so long concealed, will appear from the * Title of it, which shews that his Lordship intended it only for the Information of his Children. But the late Lord Hyde, judging that so faithful and authentick an Account of this interesting Period of our History would be an useful and acceptable Present to the Publick, and bearing a grateful Remembrance of this Place of his Education, left by his Will this, and the other Remains of his Great Grandfather, in the Hands of Trustees, to be printed at our Press, and directed that the Profits arising from the Sale should be employed towards the establishing a Riding-School in the University. But Lord Hyde dying before his Father, the then Earl of Clarendon, the Property of those Papers never became vested in him, and consequently this Bequest was void. However, the noble Heiresses of the Earl of Clarendon, out of their Regard to the Publick, and to this Seat of Learning, have been pleased to fulfil the kind Intentions of Lord Hyde, and adopt a Scheme recommended both by him, † and his Great Grandfather. To this End They have sent to the University this History to be printed at our Press, on Condition that the Profits arising from the Publication or Sale of this Work be applied, as a Beginning for a Fund for supporting a Manage, or Academy for Riding, and other useful Exercises, in Oxford.

THE Work here offered to the Publick consists of two Parts. The Second, which is the most important and interesting Part of the Work, is THE HISTORY OF THE EARL OF CLARENDON'S LIFE FROM THE YEAR 1660 TO 1667, from the Restoration to the Time of his Banishment, and includes in it the most memorable Transactions of those Times. It may be therefore considered in two Views. It is a Second Part of LORD CLARENDON'S LIFE; And is also a Continuation of his former History, entitled THE HISTORY OF THE REBELLION, from the Year 1660, where that ends, to the Year 1667. This is carefully printed, without any material Variations, from a Manuscript all of Lord Clarendon's own Hand-writing, excepting some few Pages in the Hand of his Amanuensis, which are only Transcripts from two Papers, the one, a Letter from the Chancellor to the King on the Subject of his Majesty's declared Displeasure; the other, a Paper containing his Reasons for withdrawing himself, which He left behind him to be presented to the House of Peers.

TO this our noble Benefactresses have thought fit to prefix as a First Part, THE HISTORY OF THE EARL OF CLARENDON'S LIFE, FROM HIS BIRTH, TO THE YEAR 1660, extracted from another Manuscript of Lord Clarendon's own Hand-writing. This other Manuscript is entitled by his Lordship, THE HISTORY OF HIS OWN LIFE, and contains likewise the Substance of THE HISTORY OF THE REBELLION. However, it is not the Manuscript from whence that History was printed, but appears rather to be the rough Draught from whence that History, or however great Part of it, was afterwards compiled. For although He tells us towards the Close of this Work, that He wrote the first four Books of THE HISTORY OF THE REBELLION in the Island of Jersey, (many Years before the Date of this HISTORY OF HIS LIFE) yet He likewise informs us, that He did not proceed to compleat that History till after his Banishment. It is therefore supposed by the Family (and the Supposition seems to carry with it great Probability) that, seeing an unjust and cruel Persecution prevail against him, He was induced at that Time to extend the original Plan of his Work, by introducing the particular History of his own Life, from his earliest Days down to the Time of his Disgrace, as the most effectual Means of vindicating his Character, wickedly traduced by his Enemies, and artfully misrepresented to a Master, whom He had long and faithfully served, whose Countenance and Favour being transferred to the Authors and Abettors of his Ruin, might probably in the Eyes of the World, give too much

Colour to their Aſperſions. But afterwards, on more mature Thoughts, his great Benevolence, and publick Spirit, prevailed on him to drop the Defence of his own private Character, and reſume his original Plan of THE HISTORY OF THE REBELLION. However his noble Deſcendants, willing to do Juſtice to the Memory of their Great Grandfather, and thinking it might be alſo of Service to the Publick to deliver his Exemplary Life as compleat, as They could authentically collect it, have cauſed ſuch Parts of this Manuſcript, as related to the Earl of Clarendon's private Life, to be extracted, and according to their Direction it is printed.

The Directions are as follows.

" THE LIFE OF LORD CHANCELLOR CLA-" RENDON FROM HIS BIRTH TO THE RESTO-" RATION OF THE ROYAL FAMILY, is ex" tracted from a large Manuſcript in his own " Hand-writing, in which is contained what has " already been printed in THE HISTORY OF " THE REBELLION; and therefore Care has " been taken to tranſcribe only what has never " yet been publiſhed: But as thoſe Paſſages are " often intermixed with the Hiſtory already " printed, it has been found neceſſary to preſerve
" Connection, by giving * Abſtracts of ſome " Parts of the printed Hiſtory, with References
" to the Pages, where the Reader may be ſatis" fied more at large. And, as great Pains have " been taken to put this Firſt Part in the Order
" it now ſtands, it is deſired that in this firſt
" Edition it may be printed exactly after the " Copy to be ſent.

" THE original Manuſcript of THE CONTI-" NUATION OF LORD CHANCELLOR CLAREN-
" DON'S LIFE FROM 1660 TO 1667 INCLUSIVE
" is very incorrect, many Words being omitted,
" that muſt neceſſarily be ſupplied: But it is de-
" ſired that no other Alterations may be made,
" except in the Orthography, or where literal,
" or grammatical Errors require it, or where " little Inaccuracies may have eſcaped the At" tention of the Author. The Work muſt be " printed entire, as it now ſtands, no Part of it " left out, not an Abſtract, nor a Reference
" omitted."

THESE Directions have been punctually obſerved. The Second Part is printed from his Lordſhip's Manuſcripts entire, without any Omiſſion, or Variation, except as above. And with Regard to the Firſt Part, the Extract ſent to us has been carefully compared with the Original Manuſcript itſelf, and found to agree: So that the Whole here offered to the Publick is the genuine Work of the Lord Chancellor CLARENDON. And both theſe Valuable Original Manuſcripts are given to the Univerſity by our noble Benefactreſſes, to be depoſited in the Publick Library.

* Thoſe Paſſages are indented. Thoſe printed in Italicks, Pages 29, 40, 44, 66, the Note Page 50, and ſome others ſtill leſs material, were added with the ſame View.

The LIFE of EDWARD Earl of CLARENDON

From his Birth to the Reſtoration of the ROYAL FAMILY in 1660.

PART the FIRST.

Montpelier, 23 July 1668.

Place of Mr. E. Hyde's Birth. His Genealogy.

HE was born in Dinton in the County of Wilts, ſix Miles from Saliſbury, in the Houſe of his Father who was Henry Hyde, the third Son of Laurence Hyde, of Weſt-Hatch, Eſq; which Laurence was the younger Son of Robert Hyde of Norbury in the County of Cheſter, Eſq; which Eſtate of Norbury had continued in that Family, and deſcended from Father to Son, from before the Conqueſt, and continues to this Day in Edward Hyde, who is poſſeſſed thereof: The other Eſtate of Hyde having ſome Ages ſince fallen into that of Norbury, by a Marriage, and continues ſtill in that Houſe.

Some Account of his Family: of his Grandfather.

LAURENCE, being, as was ſaid, the younger Son of Robert Hyde of Norbury, and the Cuſtom of that County of Cheſter being, to make ſmall Proviſions for the younger Sons of the beſt Families, was by the Care and Providence of his Mother, well educated, and when his Age was fit for it, was placed as a Clerk in one of the Auditor's Offices of the Exchequer, where He gained great Experience, and was employed in the Affairs and Buſineſs of Sir John Thynne, who under the Protection and Service of the Duke of Somerſet, had in a ſhort Time raiſed a very great Eſtate, and was the firſt of that Name who was known, and left the Houſe of Longleat to his Heir, with other Lands to a great Value. Laurence Hyde continued not above a Year (or very little more) in that Relation, and never gained any Thing by it; but ſhortly after married Anne, the Relict and Widow of Matthew Calthurſt, Eſq; of Claverton near Bath in the County of Somerſet, by whom He had a fair Fortune: And by her had four Sons and four Daughters, that is to ſay, Robert, Laurence, Henry, and Nicholas, Joanna, married to Edward Younge of Durnford near Saliſbury, Eſq; Alice, married to John St. Loe of Kingſton in the County of Wilts, Eſq; Anne, married to Thomas Baynard of Wanſtrow in the County of Somerſet, Eſq; and Suſanna, married to Sir George Fuy of Kyneton in the County of Wilts, Knight: And theſe four Sons and four Daughters lived all above forty Years after the Death of their Father.

LAURENCE, ſhortly after his Marriage with Anne, purchaſed the Manor of Weſt-Hatch, where He died, and ſeveral other Lands; and having taken Care to breed his Sons at the Univerſity of Oxford, and Inns of Court, leaving his Wife, the Mother of all his Children, poſſeſſed of the greateſt Part of his Eſtate, preſuming that She would be careful and kind to all their Children, upon that Account left the Bulk of his Eſtate to Robert his eldeſt Son, who married Anne the Daughter of ..... Caſtilian of Benham in the County of Berks, Eſq; who had many Children, and lived to the Age of eighty, and left his Eſtate a little impaired by the Marriage of many Daughters, to his Son. To Laurence his ſecond Son (who was afterwards Sir Laurence, and Attorney General to Queen Anne, and a Lawyer of great Name and Practice) He left the impropriate Rectory of Dinton, after the Life of Anne his Mother, charged with an Annuity of forty Pounds per Annum to his third Son Henry for his Life; and He charged ſome other Part of his Eſtate with an Annuity of thirty Pounds per Annum to his youngeſt Son Nicholas, for his Life, relying upon the Goodneſs of his Wife, who was left very rich, as well by his Donation, as from her Huſband Calthurſt, that She would provide for the better Support of the younger Children; two of which raiſed their Fortunes by the Law, Laurence, as was ſaid before, being Attorney General to the Queen, and Nicholas, the youngeſt Son, living to be Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's Bench, and dying in that Office; both of them leaving behind them many Sons and Daughters.

Of his Father.

HENRY, the third Son, being of the Middle Temple at his Father's Death, and being thought to be moſt in the Favour of his Mother, and being ready to be called to the Bar, though He had ſtudied the Law very well, and was a very good Scholar, having proceeded Maſter of Arts in Oxford, had yet no Mind to the Practice of the Law, but had long had an Inclination to travel beyond the Seas, which in that ſtrict Time of Queen Elizabeth, was not uſual, except to Merchants, and ſuch Gentlemen who reſolved to be Soldiers; and at laſt prevailed with his Mother to give him Leave to go to the Spa for his Health, from whence He followed his former Inclinations, and paſſing through Germany, He went into Italy, and from Florence He went to Syena, and thence to Rome: Which was not only ſtrictly inhibited to all the Queen's Subjects, but was very dangerous to all the Engliſh Nation who did not profeſs themſelves Roman Catholicks; to which Profeſſion He was very averſe, in Regard of the great Animoſity Sixtus Quintus (who was then Pope) had to the Perſon of Queen Elizabeth: Yet Cardinal Allen, who was the laſt Engliſh Cardinal, being then in Rome, He received ſo much Protection from him, that during the Time He ſtaid there, which was ſome Months, He received no Trouble, though many Engliſh Prieſts murmured very much, and ſaid, "that my Lord Cardinal was much to be "blamed for protecting ſuch Men, who came to "Rome, and ſo ſeeing the Eccleſiaſtical Perſons of "that Nation, diſcovered them afterwards when "They came into England, and ſo they were put "to Death."

AFTER He was returned into England his Mother was very glad, and perſuaded him very earneſtly to marry, offering him in that Caſe, that whereas She had the Rectory of Dinton in Jointure for her Life, upon which He had only an Annuity of forty Pounds per Annum, for his Life, the Remainder being to come to Laurence the ſecond Brother and his Heirs for ever, She would immediately reſign her Term to him, for his better Support, and would likewiſe purchaſe of Laurence, the ſaid Rectory for the Life of Henry, and ſuch a Wife as He ſhould marry; upon which Encouragement, and depending ſtill upon his Mother's future Bounty, about the thirtieth Year of his Age, He married Mary, one of the Daughters and Heirs of Edward Langford of Trowbridge in the County of Wilts, Eſq;

by whom in preſent, and after her Mother, He had a good Fortune, in the Account of that Age. From that Time, He lived a private Life at Dinton aforeſaid, with great Chearfulneſs and Content, and with a general Reputation throughout the whole Country; being a Perſon of great Knowledge and Reputation, and of ſo great Eſteem for Integrity, that moſt Perſons near him referred all Matters of Contention and Difference, which did ariſe amongſt them, to his Determination; by which, that Part of the Country lived in more Peace and Quietneſs than many of their Neighbours. During the Time of Queen Elizabeth He ſerved as a Burgeſs for ſome neighbour Boroughs in many Parliaments; but from the Death of Queen Elizabeth, He never was in London, though He lived above thirty Years after; and his Wife, who was married to him above forty Years, never was in London in her Life; the Wiſdom and Frugality of that Time being ſuch, that few Gentlemen made Journies to London, or any other expenſive Journies, but upon important Buſineſs, and their Wives never; by which Providence, They enjoyed and improved their Eſtates in the Country, and kept good Hoſpitality in their Houſes, brought up their Children well, and were beloved by their Neighbours; and in this Rank, and with this Reputation this Gentleman lived till He was ſeventy Years of Age; his younger Brother the Chief Juſtice dying ſome Years before him, and his two elder Brothers outliving him. The great Affection between the four Brothers, and towards their Siſters, of whom all enjoyed Plenty and Contentedneſs, was very notorious throughout the Country, and of Credit to them all.

HENRY HYDE the third Son of Laurence, by his Intermarriage with Mary Langford, had four Sons and five Daughters, and being by the Kindneſs and Bounty of his Mother, who lived long, and till He had ſeven or eight Children, poſſeſſed of ſuch an Eſtate as made his Condition eaſy to him, lived ſtill in the Country, as was ſaid before. Laurence his eldeſt Son died young; Henry his ſecond Son lived, till He was twenty ſix or twenty ſeven Years of Age; Edward his third Son was He who came afterwards to be Earl of Clarendon, and Lord High Chancellor of England; Nicholas died young; Henry and Edward were both in the Univerſity of Oxford together; Henry being Maſter of Arts the Act before his younger Brother Edward came to the Univerſity, who was deſigned by his Father to the Clergy.

Time of the Author's Birth. His Education.

EDWARD HYDE, being the third Son of his Father, was born at Dinton upon the eighteenth Day of February in the Year 1608, being the fifth Year of King James; and was always bred in his Father's Houſe under the Care of a Schoolmaſter, to whom his Father had given the Vicarage of that Pariſh, who having been always a Schoolmaſter, had bred many good Scholars, and this Perſon of whom we now ſpeak, principally by the Care and Converſation of his Father (who was an excellent Scholar, and took Pleaſure in conferring with him, and contributed much more to his Education than the School did) was thought fit to be ſent to the Univerſity ſoon after He was thirteen Years of Age; and being a younger Son of a younger Brother, was to expect a ſmall Patrimony from his Father, but to make his own Fortune by his own Induſtry; and in Order to that, was ſent by his Father to Oxford at that Time, being about Magdalen Election Time, in Expectation that He ſhould have been choſen Demy of Magdalen College, the Election being to be at that Time, for which He was recommended by a ſpecial Letter from King James to Dr. Langton then Preſident of that College; but upon Pretence that the Letter came too late, though the Election was not then begun, He was not choſen, and ſo remained in Magdalen Hall (where He was before admitted) under the Tuition of Mr. John Oliver, a Fellow of that College, who had been Junior of the Act a Month before, and a Scholar of Eminency.

He is ſent to Oxford.

THE Year following, the Preſident of the College having received Reprehenſion from the Lord Conway then Secretary of State, for giving no more Reſpect to the King's Letter, He was choſen the next Election in the firſt Place, but that whole Year paſſed without any Avoidance of a Demy's Place, which was never known before in any Man's Memory; and that Year King James died, and ſhortly after, Henry his elder Brother, and thereupon his Father having now no other Son, changed his former Inclination, and reſolved to ſend his Son Edward to the Inns of Court: He was then entered in the middle Temple by his Uncle Nicholas Hyde, who was then Treaſurer of that Society, and afterwards Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's Bench; but by Reaſon of the great Plague then at London in the firſt Year of King Charles, and the Parliament being then adjourned to Oxford, whither the Plague was likewiſe then brought by Sir James Huſſy, one of the Maſters of the Chancery, who died in New-College the firſt Night after his Arrival at Oxford, and ſhortly after Dr. Chaloner Principal of Alban-Hall, who had ſupped that Night with Sir James Huſſy, He did not go to the middle Temple till the Michaelmas Term after the Term at Reading, but remained partly at his Father's Houſe, and partly at the Univerſity, where he took the Degree of Bachelor of Arts, and then left it, rather with the Opinion of a young Man of Parts and Pregnancy of Wit, than that He had improved it much by Induſtry, the Diſcipline of that Time being not ſo ſtrict as it hath been ſince, and as it ought to be; and the Cuſtom of Drinking being too much introduced and practiſed, his elder Brother having been too much corrupted in that Kind, and ſo having at his firſt Coming given him ſome Liberty, at leaſt ſome Example towards that Licenſe, inſomuch as He was often heard to ſay, "that it was a very "good Fortune to him, that his Father ſo ſoon re-"moved him from the Univerſity," though He always reſerved a high Eſteem of it.

Mr. Hyde entered of the Middle Temple.

BEFORE the Beginning of Michaelmas Term (which was in the Year 1625) the City being then clear from the Plague, He went from Marlborough after the Quarter Seſſions with his Uncle Nicholas Hyde to London, and arrived there the Eve of the Term, being then between ſixteen and ſeventeen Years of Age. In the Evening he went to Prayers to the Temple Church, and was there ſeized upon by a Fit of an Ague very violently, which proved a Quartan, and brought him in a ſhort Time ſo weak, that his Friends much feared a Conſumption, ſo that his Uncle thought fit ſhortly after Allhallandtide to ſend him into the Country to Pirton in North Wiltſhire, whither his Father had removed himſelf from Dinton; chuſing rather to live upon his own Land, the which he had purchaſed many Years before, and to rent Dinton, which was but a Leaſe for Lives, to a Tenant. He came Home to his Father's Houſe very weak, his Ague continuing ſo violently upon him (though it ſometimes changed its Courſe from a quartan to a tertian, and then to a quotidian, and on new Year's Day He had two hot Fits and two cold Fits) until Whitſunday following, that all Men thought him to be in a Conſumption; it then left him, and He grew quickly ſtrong again. In this Time of his Sickneſs his Uncle was made Chief Juſtice: It was Michaelmas following before He returned to the Middle Temple, having by his Want of Health loſt a full Year of Study, and when He returned, it was without great Application to the Study of the Law for ſome Years, it being then a Time when the Town was full of Soldiers, the King having then a War both with Spain and France, and the Buſineſs of the Iſle of Ree ſhortly

Removed to Pirton.

Returns to the Middle Temple.

ſhortly followed; and He had gotten into the Acquaintance of many of thoſe Officers, which took up too much of his Time for one Year; but as the War was quickly ended, ſo He had the good Fortune quickly to make a full Retreat from that Company, and from any Converſation with any of them, and without any Hurt or Prejudice; inſomuch as He uſed often to ſay, "that ſince it pleaſed God to "preſerve him whilſt He did keep that Company "(in which He wonderfully eſcaped from being in-"volved in many Inconveniences) and to withdraw "him ſo ſoon from it, He was not ſorry that He "had ſome Experience in the Converſation of ſuch "Men, and of the Licence of thoſe Times," which was very exorbitant: Yet when he did indulge himſelf that Liberty, it was without any ſignal Debauchery, and not without ſome Hours every Day, at leaſt every Night, ſpent amongſt his Books; yet He would not deny that more than to be able to anſwer his Uncle, who almoſt every Night put a Caſe to him in Law, He could not bring himſelf to an induſtrious Purſuit of the Law Study; but rather loved polite Learning and Hiſtory, in which, eſpecially, in the Roman, he had been always converſant.

Sets out on the Norfolk Circuit.

IN the Year 1628 his Father gave him Leave to ride the Circuit in the Summer with his Uncle the Chief Juſtice, who then rode the Norfolk Circuit; and indeed deſired it, both that he might ſee thoſe Counties, and eſpecially that He might be out of London in that Seaſon, when the Small Pox raged very furiouſly, and many Perſons, ſome whereof were much acquainted with him, died of that Diſeaſe in the Middle Temple itſelf. It was about the Middle of July when that Circuit began, and Cambridge was the firſt Place the Judges begun at; Mr. Juſtice Harvey, (one of the Judges of the Common Pleas) was in Commiſſion with the Chief Juſtice: They both came into Cambridge on the Saturday Night, and the next Day Mr. Edward Hyde fell ſick, which was imputed only to his Journey the Day before in very hot Weather; but He continued ſo ill the Day or two following, that it was apprehended that He might have the Small Pox; whereupon He was removed out of Trinity College, where the Judges were lodged, to the Sun Inn, over againſt the College Gate, the Judges being to go out of Town the next Day; but before they went, the Small Pox appeared; whereupon his Uncle put him under the Care of Mr. Crane an eminent Apothecary, who had been bred up under Dr. Butler, and was in much greater Practice than any Phyſician in the Univerſity; and left with him Laurence St. Loe one of his Servants, who was likewiſe his Nephew, to aſſiſt and comfort him. It pleaſed God to preſerve him from that devouring Diſeaſe, which was ſpread all over him very furiouſly, and had ſo far prevailed over him, that for ſome Hours both his Friends and Phyſician conſulted of Nothing but of the Place and Manner of his Burial; but as I ſaid, by God's Goodneſs He eſcaped that Sickneſs, and within few Days more than a Month after his firſt Indiſpoſition, He paſſed in moderate Journeys to his Father's Houſe at Pirton, where He arrived a Day or two before Bartholemew Day.

Falls ſick of the Small Pox at Cambridge.

Returns again to Pirton after his Recovery.

HE was often wont to ſay, that He was reading to his Father in Camden's Annals, and that particular Place, in which it is ſaid, "Johannes Feltonus, qui "Bullam Pontificiam Valvis Palatii Epiſcopi Londinen-"ſis affixerat jam deprehenſus, cum fugere nollet, Fac-"tum confeſſus quod tamen Crimen agnoſcere noluit, &c." when a Perſon of the Neighbourhood knocked at the Door, and being called in, told his Father, that a Poſt was then paſſed through the Village to Charleton, the Houſe of the Earl of Berkſhire, to inform the Earl of Berkſhire that the Duke of Buckingham was killed the Day before (being the 24th of Auguſt, Bartholemew Day, in the Year 1628) by one John Felton, * which diſmal Accident happening in the Court, made a great Change in the State, produced a ſudden Diſbanding of all Armies, and a due Obſervation of, and Obedience to the Laws; ſo that there being no more Mutations in View (which uſually affect the Spirits of young Men, at leaſt hold them ſome Time at Gaze) Mr. Hyde returned again to his Studies at the Middle Temple, having it ſtill in his Reſolution to dedicate himſelf to the Profeſſion of the Law, without declining the politer Learning, to which his Humour and his Converſation kept him always very indulgent; and to lay ſome Obligation upon himſelf to be fixed to that Courſe of Life, He inclined to a Propoſition of Marriage, which having no other Paſſion in it, than an Appetite to a convenient Eſtate, ſucceeded not, yet produced new Acquaintance, and continued the ſame Inclinations.

And from Pirton to the Middle Temple.

ABOUT this Time his Uncle Sir Nicholas Hyde Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's Bench, died of a malignant Fever, gotten from the Infection of ſome Gaol in his Summer Circuit. He was a Man of excellent Learning for that Province He was to govern, of unſuſpected and unblemiſhed Integrity, of an exemplary Gravity and Auſterity, which was neceſſary for the Manners of that Time, corrupted by the marching of Armies, and by the Licenſe after the diſbanding them; and though upon his Promotion ſome Years before, from a private Practicer of the Law, to the ſupreme Judicatory in it, by the Power and Recommendation of the great Favourite, of whoſe Council He had been, He was expoſed to much Envy and ſome Prejudice; yet his Behaviour was ſo grateful to all the Judges, who had an entire Confidence in him, his Service ſo uſeful to the King in his Government, his Juſtice and Sincerity ſo conſpicuous throughout the Kingdom, that the Death of no Judge had in any Time been more lamented.

Death and Character of his Uncle Sir Nicholas Hyde.

THE Loſs of ſo beneficial an Encouragement and Support in that Profeſſion, did not at all diſcourage his Nephew in his Purpoſe; rather added new Reſolution to him; and to call Home all ſtraggling and wandering Appetites, which naturally produce Irreſolution and Inconſtancy in the Mind, with his Father's Conſent and Approbation, He married a young Lady very fair and beautiful, the Daughter of Sir George Ayliffe, a Gentleman of a good Name and Fortune in the County of Wilts, where his own Expectations lay, and by her Mother (a St. John) nearly allied to many noble Families in England. He enjoyed this Comfort and Compoſure of Mind a very ſhort Time, for within leſs than ſix Months after He was married, being upon the Way from London towards his Father's Houſe, ſhe fell ſick at Reading, and being removed to a Friend's Houſe near that Town, the Small Pox diſcovered themſelves, and (ſhe being with Child) forced her to miſcarry; and She died within two Days. He bore her Loſs with ſo great Paſſion and Confuſion of Spirit, that it ſhook all the Frame of his Reſolutions, and Nothing but his entire Duty and Reverence to his Father, kept him from giving over all Thoughts of Books, and tranſporting himſelf beyond the Seas, to enjoy his own Melancholy; nor could any Perſuaſion or Importunity from his Friends, prevail with him in ſome Years to think of another Marriage. There was an ill Accident in the Court befel a Lady of a Family nearly allied to his Wife, whoſe Memory was very dear to him, and there always continued a firm Friendſhip in him to all her Alliance, which likewiſe ever manifeſted an equal Affection to him; amongſt thoſe was William Viſcount Grandiſon, a young Man of extraordinary Hope, between whom and the other there was an entire Confidence. The Injury was of that Nature, that the young Lord thought of Nothing but repairing it his own Way; but thoſe Imaginations were quickly at an End, by the King's rigorous and juſt Proceeding againſt the Perſons offending, in committing them both to the Tower, and declaring that "ſince "He was ſatisfied that there was a Promiſe of Mar- "riage in the Caſe, the Gentleman ſhould make "good his Promiſe by marrying the Lady; or be "kept in Priſon, and for ever baniſhed from all "Pretence or Relation to the Court," where He had a very great Credit and Intereſt: This Declaration by the King, made the neareſt Friends of the Lady purſue the Deſign of this Reparation more ſolicitouſly, in which They had all Acceſs to the King, who continued ſtill in his declared Judgment in the Matter. In this Purſuit Mr. Hyde's paſſionate Affection to the Family embarked him, and They were all as willing to be guided by his Conduct; the Buſineſs was to be followed by frequent Inſtances at Court, and Conferences with thoſe who had moſt Power and Opportunity to confirm the King in the Senſe He had entertained; and thoſe Conferences were wholly managed by him, who thereby had all Admiſſion to the Perſons of Alliance to the Lady, and ſo concerned in the Diſhonour, which was a great Body of Lords and Ladies of principal Relations in Court, with whom in a ſhort Time He was of great Credit and Eſteem; of which the Marquis of Hamilton was one, who having married an excellent Lady, Couſin-German to the injured Perſon, ſeemed the moſt concerned and moſt zealous for her Vindication, and who had at that Time the moſt Credit of any Man about the Court, and upon that Occaſion entered into a Familiarity with him, and made as great Profeſſions of Kindneſs to him as could paſs to a Perſon at that Diſtance from him, which continued till the End and Concluſion of that Affair, when the Marquis believed that Mr. Hyde had diſcovered ſome Want of Sincerity in him in that Proſecution, which he pretended ſo much to aſſert.

The Occaſion of Mr. Hyde's Introduction to the Marquis of Hamilton.

THE Mention of this particular little Story, in itſelf of no ſeeming Conſequence, is not inſerted here only as it made ſome Alterations, and accidentally introduced him into another Way of Converſation than He had formerly been accuſtomed to, and which in Truth by the Acquaintance, by the Friends, and Enemies, He then made, had an Influence upon the whole Courſe of his Life afterwards; but as it made ſuch Impreſſions upon the whole Court, by dividing the Lords and Ladies, both in their Wiſhes and Appearances, that much of that Faction grew out of it, which ſurvived the Memory of the Original; and from this Occaſion (to ſhew us from how ſmall Springs great Rivers may ariſe) the Women, who till then had not appeared concerned in publick Affairs, began to have ſome Part in all Buſineſs; and having ſhewn themſelves warm upon this Amour, as their Paſſions or Affections carried them, and thereby entered into new Affections, and formed new Intereſts; the Activity in their Spirits remained ſtill vigorous, when the Object which firſt inſpired it was vaniſhed and put in Oblivion. Nor were the very Miniſters of State vacant upon this Occaſion; They who for their own Sakes, or, as They pretended, for the King's Dignity, and Honour of the Court, deſired the Ruin of the Gentleman, preſſed the Magnitude of the Crime, in bringing ſo great a Scandal upon the King's Family, which would hinder Perſons of Honour from ſending their Children to the Court; and that there could be no Reparation without the Marriage, which They therefore only inſiſted upon, becauſe They believed He would prefer Baniſhment before it; others who had Friendſhip for him, and believed that He had an Intereſt in the Court, which might accommodate himſelf and them if this Breach were cloſed any Way, therefore if the King's Severity could not be prevailed upon, wiſhed it concluded by the Marriage; which neither himſelf nor They upon whom He moſt depended, would ever be brought to conſent to; ſo that all the Jealouſies and Animoſities in the Court or State, came to play their own Prizes in the widening or accommodating this Contention. In the Concluſion, on a ſudden, contrary to the Expectation of any Man of either Party, the Gentleman was immediately ſent out of the Kingdom, under the Formality of a temporary and ſhort Baniſhment, and the Lady commended to her Friends, to be taken care of till her Delivery; and from that Time never Word more ſpoken of the Buſineſs, nor ſhall their Names ever come upon the Stage by any Record of mine. It was only obſerved, that at this Time there was a great Change in the Friendſhips of the Court, and in thoſe of the Marquis of Hamilton, who came now into the Queen's Confidence, towards whom He had always been in great Jealouſy; and another Lady more appeared in View, who had for the moſt Part before continued behind the Curtain; and who in few Years after came to a very unhappy and untimely End.

NOW after a Widowhood of near three Years, Mr. Hyde inclined again to marry, which He knew would be the moſt grateful Thing to his Father (for whom He had always a profound Reverence) He could do; and though he needed no other Motive to it, He would often ſay, that though he was now called to the Bar, and entered into the Profeſſion of the Law, He was not ſo confident of himſelf that He ſhould not ſtart aſide, if his Father ſhould die, who was then near ſeventy Years of Age, having long entertained Thoughts of Travels, but that He thought it neceſſary to lay ſome Obligation upon himſelf, which would ſuppreſs and reſtrain all thoſe Appetites; and thereupon reſolved to marry, and ſo, being about the Age of twenty four Years, in the Year of our Lord 1632, He married the Daughter of Sir Thomas Ayleſbury Baronet, Maſter of Requeſts to the King; by whom he had many Children of both Sexes, with whom He lived very comfortably in the moſt uncomfortable Times, and very joyfully in thoſe Times when Matter of Joy was adminiſtered, for the Space of five or ſix and thirty Years; what befell him after her Death will be recounted in its Place. From the Time of his Marriage He laid aſide all other Thoughts but of his Profeſſion, to the which He betook himſelf very ſeriouſly; but in the very Entrance into it, He met with a great Mortification; ſome Months after he was married, He went with his Wife to wait upon his Father and Mother at his Houſe at Pirton, to make them Sharers in that Satisfaction which They had ſo long deſired to ſee, and in which They took great Delight.

His ſecond Marriage.

HIS Father had long ſuffered under an Indiſpoſition (even before the Time his Son could remember) which gave him rather frequent Pains, than Sickneſs; and gave him Cauſe to be terrified with the Expectation of the Stone, without being exerciſed with the preſent Senſe of it; but from the Time He was ſixty Years of Age, it increaſed very much, and four or five Years before his Death, with Circumſtances ſcarce heard of before, and the Cauſes whereof are not yet underſtood by any Phyſician; He was very often, both in the Day and the Night, forced to make Water, ſeldom in any Quantity, becauſe He could not retain it long enough, and in the Cloſe of that Work, without any ſharp Pain in thoſe Parts, He was ſtill and conſtantly ſeized on by ſo ſharp a Pain in the left Arm, for Half a Quarter of an Hour, or near ſo much, that the Torment made him as pale (whereas He was otherwiſe of a very ſanguine Complexion) as if He were dead; and He uſed to ſay, "that He had "paſſed the Pangs of Death, and He ſhould die in "one

" one of those Fits;" as soon as it was over, which was quickly, He was the chearfullest Man living; eat well such Things as He could fancy, walked, slept, digested, conversed with such a Promptness and Vivacity upon all Arguments (for He was omnifariam doctus) as hath been seldom known in a Man of his Age: But He had the Image of Death so constantly before him in those continual Torments, that for many Years before his Death, He always parted with his Son, as to see him no more; and at parting still shewed him his Will, discoursing very particularly, and very chearfully of all Things He would have performed after his Death.

His Father's Removal to Salisbury.

HE had for some Time before resolved to leave the Country, and to spend the Remainder of his Time in Salisbury, where he had caused a House to be provided for him, both for the Neighbourhood of the Cathedral Church, where He could perform his Devotions every Day, and for the Conversation of many of his Family who lived there, and not far from it; and especially that He might be buried there, where many of his Family and Friends lay; and He obliged his Son to accompany him thither before his Return to London; and He came to Salisbury on the Friday before Michaelmas Day in the Year 1632, and lodged in his own House that Night. The next day He was so wholly taken up in receiving Visits from his many Friends, being a Person wonderfully reverenced in those Parts, that He walked very little out of his House. The next Morning, being Sunday, He rose very early, and went to two or three Churches, and when He returned, which was by eight of the Clock, He told his Wife and his Son, " that He had been to look " out a Place to be buried in, but found none " against which He had not some Exception, the " Cathedral only excepted; where He had made " Choice of a Place near a Kinsman of his own " Name, and had shewed it to the Sexton, whom " He had sent for to that Purpose: and wished them " to see him buried there;" and this with as much Composedness of Mind as if it had made no Impression on him; then went to the Cathedral to Sermon, and spent the whole Day in as chearful Conversation with his Friends (saving only the frequent Interruptions his Infirmity gave him once in two or three Hours, sometimes more, sometimes less) as the Man in the most confirmed Health could do. Monday was Michaelmas Day, when in the Morning He went to visit his Brother Sir Laurence Hyde, who was then making a Journey in the Service of the King, and from him went to the Church to a Sermon, where he found himself a little pressed as He used to be, and therefore thought fit to make what Haste He could to his House, and was no sooner come thither into a lower Room, than having made Water, and the Pain in his Arm seizing upon him,

And Death.

He fell down dead, without the least Motion of any Limb. The Suddenness of it made it apprehended to be an Apoplexy, but there being Nothing like Convulsions, or the least Distortion or Alteration in the Visage, it is not like to be from that Cause; nor could the Physicians make any reasonable Guess from whence that mortal Blow proceeded. He wanted about six Weeks of attaining the Age of seventy, and was the greatest Instance of the Felicity of a Country Life that was seen in that Age; having enjoyed a competent, and to him a plentiful Fortune, a very great Reputation of Piety and Virtue, and his Death being attended with universal Lamentation. It cannot be expressed with what Agony his Son bore this Loss, having, as He was used to say, " not only lost the best Father, but the best " Friend, and the best Companion He ever had or " could have;" and he was never so well pleased, as when he had fit Occasions given him to mention his Father, whom He did in Truth believe to be the wisest Man He had ever known; and He was often heard to say, in the Time when his Condition was at highest, " that though God Almighty had " been very propitious to him, in raising him to " great Honours and Preferments, He did not value " any Honour He had so much, as the being the " Son of such a Father and Mother, for whose Sakes " principally He thought God had conferred those " Blessings upon him."

THERE fell out at this Time or thereabouts, a great Alteration in the Court and State, by the Death of the Earl of Portland, Lord High Treasurer of England. The King from the Death of the Duke of Buckingham had not only been very reserved in his Bounty, but so frugal in his own Expence, that He had retrenched much of what had formerly issued out for his Houshold, insomuch as every Year somewhat had been paid of his Debts. He resolved now to govern his Treasury by Commission, and to take a constant Account of it; and thereby to discover what had been of late done amiss. The Commissioners He appointed were, the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury Dr. Laud (formerly Bishop of London) the Lord Keeper Coventry, and other principal Officers of State, who together with the Lord Cottington (who was Chancellor of the Exchequer, and by his Office of the Quorum in that Commission) were to supply the Office of Treasurer in all Particulars. The Archbishop of Canterbury, who till now had only intended the good Government of the Church, without intermeddling in secular Affairs, otherwise than when the Discipline of the Church was concerned, in which He was very strict, both in the High Commission, and in all other Places, where He sat as a Privy-Counsellor, well foreseeing, as He made manifest upon several Occasions, the Growth of the Schismaticks, and that if They were not with Rigour suppressed, They would put the whole Kingdom into a Flame, which shortly after fell out to be too confessed a Truth; though for the present his Providence only served to increase the Number of his Enemies, who had from that his Zeal contracted all the Malice against him that can be imagined, and which He, out of the Conscience of his Duty, and the Purity of his Intentions, and his Knowledge of the King's full Approbation of his Vigilance and Ardour, too much undervalued; I say, as soon as He was made Commissioner of the Treasury, He thought himself obliged to take all the Pains He could to understand that Employment, and the Nature of the Revenue, and to find out all possible Ways for the Improvement thereof, and for the present Managery of the Expence. Many were of Opinion that He was the more solicitous in that Disquisition, and the more inquisitive into what had been done, that He might make some Discovery of past Actions, which might reflect upon the Memory of the late Treasurer, the Earl of Portland, and call his Wisdom and Integrity in Question, who had been so far from being his Friend, that He had always laboured to do him all the Mischief He could, and it was no small Grief of Heart to him, and much Occasion of his ill Humour, to find that the Archbishop had too much Credit with the King, to be shaken by him: and the Archbishop was not in his Affections behind hand with him, looking always upon him as a Roman Catholick, though He dissembled it by going to Church; and as the great Countenancer and Support of that Religion; all his Family being of that Profession, and very few resorting to it, or having any Credit with him but such. It is very true, the Archbishop had no great Regard for his Memory, or for his Friends, and was willing enough to make any Discovery of his Miscarriages, and to inform his Majesty of them, who He believed had too good an Opinion of him, and his Integrity.

THE Truth is, the Archbiſhop had laid down one Principle to himſelf, which He believed would much advance the King's Service, and was without Doubt very prudent; that the King's Duties being provided for, and chearfully paid, the Merchants ſhould receive all the Countenance and Protection from the King that They could expect: and not be liable to the Vexation particular Men gave them for their private Advantage; being forward enough to receive Propoſitions which tended to the King's Profit, but careful that what accrued of Burthen to the Subject, ſhould redound entirely to the Benefit of the Crown, and not enrich Projectors at the Charge of the People; and there is Reaſon to believe that if this Meaſure had been well obſerved, much of that Murmur had been prevented, which contributed to that Jealouſy and Diſcontent which ſoon after brake out. This Vigilance and Inclination in the Archbiſhop, opened a Door to the Admiſſion of any Merchants or others to him, who gave him Information of this Kind; and who being ready to pay any Thing to the King, deſired only to be protected from private Oppreſſions. The Archbiſhop uſed to ſpend as much Time as He could get, at his Country Houſe at Croydon, and then his Mind being unbent from Buſineſs, He delighted in the Converſation of his Neighbours, and treated them with great Urbanity.

THERE was a Merchant of the greateſt Reputation (Daniel Harvey) who having a Country Houſe within the Diſtance of a few Miles from Croydon, and underſtanding the whole Buſineſs of Trade more exactly than moſt Men, was always very welcome to the Archbiſhop, who uſed to aſk him many Queſtions upon ſuch Matters as he deſired to be informed in; and received much Satisfaction from him. Upon an Accidental Diſcourſe between them, what Encouragement Merchants ought to receive, who brought a great Trade into the Kingdom, and paid thereupon great Sums of Money to the King, Mr. Harvey mentioned the Diſcouragements They had received in the late Times, by the Rigour of the Earl of Portland, in Matters that related Nothing to the King's Service, but to the Profit of private Men; and thereupon remembered a Particular, that, after the Diſſolution of the Parliament in the fourth Year of the King, and the Combination amongſt many Merchants to pay no more Cuſtoms or Impoſitions to the King, becauſe They had not been granted in Parliament, which produced thoſe Suits and Decrees in the Exchequer, which are generally underſtood, and a general Diſtraction in Trade; many Merchants of the greateſt Wealth and Reputation reſolved to continue the Trade; and in a ſhort Time reduced it into ſo good Order, and by their Advice and Example diſpoſed others to make a punctual Entry of their Goods, and to pay their Duties to the King, that the Trade ſeemed to be reſtored to the Nation, and the Cuſtoms to riſe above the Value They had ever yielded to the Crown; which was no ſooner brought to paſs, than the Earl of Portland (who endeavoured to perſuade the King that this great Work was entirely compaſſed by his Wiſdom, Intereſt and Dexterity) diſobliged the Merchants in a very ſenſible Degree, in requiring them to unlade their Ships at the Cuſtom-Houſe Quay, and at no other Quay or Wharf, upon Pretence that thereby the King would have his Cuſtoms well paid, of which otherwiſe He would be in Danger to be cozened; and alledged an Order that had been formerly made in the Court of the Exchequer, that fine Goods which were portable (as Silks and fine Linens) and might eaſily be ſtolen, ſhould always be landed at the Cuſtom-Houſe Quay. The Merchants looked upon this Conſtraint and Reſtraint, as a great Oppreſſion, and applied themſelves to him for Reparation and Redreſs; They undertook to make it evident to him, that it was merely a Matter which concerned the private Benefit of the particular Wharfingers, and not in the leaſt Degree the King's Profit; that the Cuſtom-Houſe Quay was of great Value to the Owner of it, who had a very great Rent for it, but that it yielded the King Nothing, nor would in fifty Years or thereabouts, there being a Leaſe yet to come for that Term; that the Mention of fine Goods, and the Order of the Exchequer, was not applicable to the Queſtion; that They diſputed not the landing of fine Goods, but that the Pretence was to compel them to bring their groſſeſt, and their Merchandize of the greateſt Bulk to that Quay, whereas They had been always free to ſhip or unſhip ſuch Goods at what Wharf They would chuſe for their Conveniences; there being the ſworn Waiters of the Cuſtom-Houſe attending in the one, as well as the other; that the reſtraining them to one Wharf, and obliging all the Ships to be brought thither, muſt prove much to their Prejudice, and make them depend upon the good Will of the Wharfinger for their Diſpatch; who in Truth, let his Deſire be never ſo good, could not be able to perform the Service, without obliging them to wait very long, and thereby to loſe their Markets. All this Diſcourſe how reaſonable ſoever, made no Impreſſion upon the Treaſurer, but He diſmiſſed them with his uſual Roughneſs, and reproached them that They deſired all Occaſions to cozen the King of his Cuſtoms; which They looked upon as an ill Reward for the Service they had done, and a great Diſcouragement to Trade. The Archbiſhop heard this Diſcourſe with great Trouble, and Indignation, and being then interrupted by the coming of Perſons of Quality, told him, He would ſome other Time run over all theſe Particulars again, and that He ſhould recollect himſelf for other Inſtances of that ſtrange Nature.

Mr. Harvey's Complaint to the Archbiſhop of the Earl of Portland.

THE next Time the Archbiſhop returned to Croydon, which He uſually did once in the Week during the Summer, and ſtaid a Day or two, impatient to underſtand more of the Matter, He ſent for Mr. Harvey, and told him, "that his laſt Diſcourſe had "given him much Cauſe of Sorrow, in finding how "the King had been uſed, and that He knew his "Nature ſo well, that He could confidently ſay, "that He never knew of that kind of Proceeding, "and that He wondered that the Merchants had "not then petitioned the King, to hear the Matter "himſelf." He anſwered, "that They had left no "Way unattempted for their Eaſe, having no Fear "of diſpleaſing the Treaſurer; that They had cauſed "a Petition to be drawn by their Council, which was "ſigned by all the principal Merchants in the City, "wherein (to obviate the Calumny concerning refu-"ſing to pay, or ſtealing Cuſtoms) They declared, that "They were all very willing to pay all Duties to his "Majeſty, and would never refuſe the ſame (which "was a Declaration, would have been much valued "a Year or two before, and ought to have been ſo "then) only deſired to be left at Liberty to ſhip "and land their Goods as They had been accuſtom-"ed to; that They had given this Petition to a Se-"cretary of State to preſent it to the King, who "referred it to the Conſideration of the Treaſurer; "and thereupon They purſued it no further, know-"ing how He ſtood reſolved, and the Cauſe of it, "which troubled them moſt, viz. that that Cuſ-"tom-Houſe Quay did, though not in his own "Name, in Truth belong to Sir Abraham Dawes, "one of the Farmers of the Cuſtoms, and the only "Favourite of the Lord Treaſurer, all the other

"Farmers

"Farmers being offended with the Order, which "They ſaw would offend the Merchants." The Archbiſhop aſked "where that Petition was; that "He thought it ſtill of that Moment, that He "would be glad to ſee it." He anſwered, "He "knew not where it was; but He believed it to re- "main in the Hands of Mr. Hyde, who had drawn "it, and was of Council with the Merchants through- "out the whole Proceedings; and was ſo warm in "it, that He had exceedingly provoked the Lord "Treaſurer, who would have ruined him if He "could." He aſked who that Mr. Hyde was, and where He was; the other ſaid, "He was a young "Lawyer of the Middle Temple, who was not afraid "of being of Council with them, when all Men of "Name durſt not appear for them; and that He "was confident that He, having been always pre- "ſent at all Debates, remembred many Circumſtan- "ces in the Buſineſs which the other had forgotten; "that He was generally known; and had lately mar- "ried the Daughter of Sir Thomas Ayleſbury."

Mr. Harvey mentions Mr. Hyde to the Archbiſhop.

WITHIN a few Days after, the Archbiſhop meeting Sir Thomas Ayleſbury at Court, aſked him whether He had married his Daugther to one Mr. Hyde a Lawyer, and where He was; He anſwered, He had done ſo, and that He lived in his Houſe, when He was not at his Chamber in the Middle Temple. The Archbiſhop deſired him to ſend him to Him, for he heard well of him; and the next Morning He attended him, and found him walking alone in his Garden at Lambeth; He received him civilly according to his Manner, without much Ceremony; and preſently aſked him, whether He had not been of Council with ſome Merchants in ſuch a Buſineſs, and where that Petition now was; "He anſwered him not knowing why He aſked, "that He had "been about two Years paſt, of Council with ſome "Merchants about ſuch an Affair, in which the Earl "of Portland had been much incenſed againſt him, "that He remembered He had drawn ſuch a Peti- "tion, which was ſigned by all the conſiderable "Merchants of London, but that there was little "Progreſs made thereupon, by Reaſon of the Aſ- "perity of the Treaſurer." He aſked ſtill for the Petition that was ſo ſigned; He told him, He thought He had it himſelf, if He had it not, He was confident He could find who had it: He deſi- red him, that He would find it out, and bring it to Him, and any other Papers concerning that Affair, or the Buſineſs of the Cuſtoms. He ſaid, "the "King had, contrary to his Deſire, made him one "of the Commiſſioners of the Treaſury; that He "underſtood nothing of that Province, but was "willing to take any Pains which might enable him "to do his Maſter Service, which made him inqui- "ſitive into the Cuſtoms, the principal Branch of "the Revenue; that his Neighbour Daniel Harvey "had ſpoken much Good of him to Him; and in- "formed him of that Complaint of the Merchants, "which he thought had much Reaſon in it, but it "was like other Acts of the Earl of Portland; that "He would be willing to receive any Information "from him, and that He ſhould be welcome when "He came to him." He told him, in ſhort (which He heard would pleaſe him beſt) two or three Paſ- ſages that happened in that Tranſaction; and ſome haughty Expreſſions which fell from the Treaſurer, when upon his urging that the Farmers would not hold their Farm, if He did not ſtrictly hold the Merchants to Cuſtom-Houſe Quay; He told him, "that if the Farmers were weary of their Bargain, "he would help the King to forty thouſand Pounds "a Year above the Rent They paid, and that They "ſhould be paid all the Money They had advanced "within one Week;" upon which the Earl indeed had let himſelf out into an indecent Rage, uſing many Threats to him; which He found was not in- grateful to the Archbiſhop, upon whom he attend- ed within a Day or two again, and delivered him the Petition, and many other uſeful Papers, which pleaſed him abundantly; and He required him to ſee him often.

Mr. Hyde attends the Archbiſhop.

BY this Accident Mr. Hyde came firſt to be known to the Archbiſhop, who ever afterwards uſed him very kindly, and ſpoke well of him upon all Occaſions, and took particular Notice of him when He came of Council in any Cauſes depending at the Council Board, as He did frequently; and deſired his Service in many Occaſions, and particularly in the raiſing Monies for the building St. Paul's Church, in which He made a Journey or two into Wiltſhire with good Succeſs; which the Archbiſhop ſtill ac- knowledged, in a more obliging Way than He was accuſtomed to; inſomuch as it was ſo much taken Notice of, that Mr. Hyde (who well knew how to cultivate thoſe Advantages) was uſed with more Countenance by all the Judges in Weſtminſter Hall, and the eminent Practiſers, than was uſually given to Men of his Years; ſo that He grew every Day in Practice, of which He had as much as he deſi- red, and having a competent Eſtate of his own, He enjoyed a very pleaſant, and a plentiful Life, living much above the Rank of thoſe Lawyers, whoſe Bu- ſineſs was only to be rich; and was generally be- loved and eſteemed by moſt Perſons of Condition and great Reputation. Though He purſued his Profeſſion with great Diligence and Intentneſs of Mind, and upon the Matter wholly betook himſelf to Buſineſs, yet He made not himſelf a Slave to it; but kept both his Friends at Court, and about the Town, by his frequent Application and conſtant Converſation; in Order to which, He always gave himſelf at Dinner to thoſe who uſed to meet toge- ther at that Hour, and in ſuch Places as was mu- tually agreed between them; where They enjoyed themſelves with great Delight, and publick Repu- tation, for the Innocence, and Sharpneſs, and Learn- ing of their Converſation. For He would never ſuf- fer himſelf to be deprived of ſome Hours (which commonly He borrowed from the Night) to refreſh himſelf with polite Learning, in which he ſtill made ſome Progreſs. The Afternoons He entirely dedi- cated to the Buſineſs of his Profeſſion, taking In- ſtructions and the like; and very rarely ſupped, ex- cept He was called out by ſome of his Friends, who ſpared him the more, becauſe He always complied with thoſe Summons; otherwiſe he never ſupped for many Years (before the Troubles brought in that Cuſtom) both for the gaining that Time for himſelf, and that He might riſe early in the Morning ac- cording to his Cuſtom, and which he would ſay, He could never do when He ſupped. The Vaca- tions He gave wholly to his Study and Converſa- tion, never going out of London in thoſe Seaſons, except for two Months in the Summer, which He ſpent at his own Houſe in the Country, with great Chearfulneſs amongſt his Friends, who then reſort- ed to him in good Numbers.

His Method of ſpending his Time.

HE never did ride any Country Circuits with the Judges, which he often repented afterwards, ſay- ing, that beſides the knowing the Gentry, and Peo- ple, and Manners of England (which is beſt attain- ed that Way) there is a very good and neceſſary Part of the Learning in the Law, which is not ſo eaſily got any other Way, as in riding thoſe Cir- cuits; which as it ſeems to have much of Drudgery, ſo is accompanied with much Pleaſure, and Profit, and it may be, the long Lives of Men of that Pro- feſſion (for the Lawyers uſually live to more Years than any other Profeſſion) may very reaſonably be imputed to the Exerciſe They give themſelves by their Circuits, as well as to their other Acts of Temperance and Sobriety. And as He had denied himſelf that Satisfaction purely to have that Time to himſelf for other Delight, ſo He did reſolve, if the Confuſion of the Time had not ſurprized him, for three or four Years (longer He did not intend) to have improved himſelf by the Experience of thoſe Journies.

HE was often heard to ſay, that, "next the immediate Bleſſing and Providence of God Almighty, which had preſerved him throughout the whole Courſe of his Life (leſs ſtrict than it ought to have been) from many Dangers and Diſadvantages, in which many other young Men were loſt; He owed all the little He knew, and the little Good that was in him, to the Friendſhips and Converſation He had ſtill been uſed to, of the moſt excellent Men in their ſeveral Kinds that lived in that Age; by whoſe Learning, and Information, and Inſtruction, He formed his Studies, and mended his Underſtanding; and by whoſe Gentleneſs and Sweetneſs of Behaviour, and Juſtice, and Virtue, and Example, He formed his Manners, ſubdued that Pride, and ſuppreſſed that Heat and Paſſion, He was naturally inclined to be tranſported with." And He never took more Pleaſure in any Thing, than in frequently mentioning and naming thoſe Perſons, who were then his Friends, or of his moſt familiar Converſation; and in remembring their particular Virtues and Faculties; and uſed often to ſay, "that He never was ſo proud, or thought himſelf ſo good a Man, as when He was the worſt Man in the Company;" all his Friends and Companions being in their Quality, in their Fortunes, at leaſt in their Faculties and Endowments of Mind, very much his ſuperiors: and He always charged his Children to follow his Example in that Point, in making their Friendſhips and Converſation; proteſting, that in the whole Courſe of his Life, He never knew one Man, of what Condition ſoever, arrive to any Degree of Reputation in the World, who made Choice or delighted in the Company or Converſation of thoſe, who in their Qualities were inferior, or in their Parts not much ſuperior to himſelf.

WHILST He was only a Student of the Law, and ſtood at Gaze, and irreſolute what Courſe of Life to take, his chief Acquaintance were Ben. Johnſon, John Selden, Charles Cotton, John Vaughan, Sir Kenelm Digby, Thomas May, and Thomas Carew, and ſome others of eminent Faculties in their ſeveral Ways. Ben. Johnſon's Name can never be forgotten, having by his very good Learning, and the Severity of his Nature and Manners, very much reformed the Stage; and indeed the Engliſh Poetry itſelf.

Character of Ben. Johnſon.

His natural Advantages were, Judgment to order and govern Fancy, rather than Exceſs of Fancy, his Productions being ſlow and upon Deliberation, yet then abounding with great Wit and Fancy, and will live accordingly; and ſurely as He did exceedingly exalt the Engliſh Language in Eloquence, Propriety, and maſculine Expreſſions; ſo He was the beſt Judge of, and fitteſt to preſcribe Rules to Poetry and Poets, of any Man who had lived with, or before him, or ſince: If Mr. Cowley had not made a Flight beyond all Men, with that Modeſty yet, to aſcribe much of this, to the Example and Learning of Ben. Johnſon. His Converſation was very good, and with the Men of moſt note; and He had for many Years an extraordinary Kindneſs for Mr. Hyde, till He found He betook himſelf to Buſineſs, which He believed ought never to be preferred before his Company. He lived to be very old, and till the Palſy made a deep Impreſſion upon his Body, and his Mind.

Of Mr. Selden.

Mr. SELDEN was a Perſon, whom no Character can flatter, or tranſmit in any Expreſſions equal to his Merit and Virtue. He was of ſo ſtupendous Learning in all Kinds, and in all Languages (as may appear in his excellent and tranſcendent Writings) that a Man would have thought he had been entirely converſant amongſt Books, and had never ſpent an Hour but in Reading and Writing; yet his Humanity, Courteſy, and Affability was ſuch, that He would have been thought to have been bred in the beſt Courts, but that his good Nature, Charity, and Delight in doing good, and in communicating all He knew, exceeded that Breeding. His Stile in all his Writings ſeems harſh and ſometimes obſcure; which is not wholly to be imputed to the abſtruſe Subjects of which He commonly treated, out of the Paths trod by other Men; but to a little undervaluing the Beauty of a Stile, and too much Propenſity to the Language of Antiquity; but in his Converſation He was the moſt clear Diſcourſer, and had the beſt Faculty in making hard things eaſy, and preſenting them to the Underſtanding, of any Man that hath been known. Mr. Hyde was wont to ſay, that He valued himſelf upon nothing more than upon having had Mr. Selden's Acquaintance from the Time he was very young; and held it with great Delight as long as They were ſuffered to continue together in London; and He was very much troubled always when He heard him blamed, cenſured, and reproached, for ſtaying in London, and in the Parliament, after They were in Rebellion, and in the worſt Times, which his Age obliged him to do; and how wicked ſoever the Actions were, which were every Day done, He was confident He had not given his Conſent to them; but would have hindred them if He could, with his own Safety, to which He was always enough indulgent. If He had ſome Infirmities with other Men, They were weighed down with wonderful and prodigious Abilities and Excellencies in the other Scale.

Of Mr. Cotton.

CHARLES COTTON was a Gentleman born to a competent Fortune, and ſo qualified in his Perſon, and Education, that for many Years He continued the greateſt Ornament of the Town, in the Eſteem of thoſe who had been beſt bred. His natural Parts were very great, his Wit flowing in all the Parts of Converſation; the Superſtructure of Learning not raiſed to a conſiderable Height; but having paſſed ſome Years in Cambridge, and then in France, and converſing always with learned Men, his Expreſſions were ever proper, and ſignificant, and gave great Luſtre to his Diſcourſe, upon any Argument; ſo that He was thought by thoſe who were not intimate with him, to have been much better acquainted with Books than He was. He had all thoſe Qualities which in Youth raiſe Men to the Reputation of being fine Gentlemen; ſuch a Pleaſantneſs and Gaiety of Humour, ſuch a Sweetneſs and Gentleneſs of Nature, and ſuch a Civility and Delightfulneſs in Converſation, that no Man in the Court, or out of it, appeared a more accompliſhed Perſon; all theſe extraordinary Qualifications being ſupported by as extraordinary a Clearneſs of Courage, and Fearleſſneſs of Spirit, of which He gave too often Manifeſtation. Some unhappy Suits in Law, and Waſte of his Fortune in thoſe Suits, made ſome Impreſſion upon his Mind; which being improved by domeſtick Afflictions, and thoſe Indulgences to himſelf, which naturally attend thoſe Afflictions, rendered his Age leſs reverenced, than his Youth had been; and gave his beſt Friends Cauſe to have wiſhed, that He had not lived ſo long.

Of Mr. Vaughan.

JOHN VAUGHAN was then a Student of the Law in the Inner Temple, but at that Time indulged more to the politer Learning; and was in Truth a Man of great Parts of Nature, and very well adorned by Arts and Books; and ſo much cheriſhed by Mr. Selden, that He grew to be of entire Truſt and Friendſhip ſhip with him, and to that owed the beſt Part of his Reputation; for He was of ſo magiſterial and ſupercilious a Humour, ſo proud and inſolent a Behaviour, that all Mr. Selden's Inſtructions, and Authority, and Example, could not file off that Roughneſs of his Nature, ſo as to make him very grateful. He looked moſt into thoſe Parts of the Law, which diſpoſed him to leaſt Reverence to the Crown, and moſt, to popular Authority; yet without Inclination to any Change in Government; and therefore, before the Beginning of the Civil War, and when He clearly diſcerned the Approaches to it in Parliament (of which He was a Member) He withdrew himſelf into the Faſtneſſes of his own Country, North Wales, where He enjoyed a ſecure, and as near an innocent Life, as the Iniquity of that Time would permit; and upon the Return of King Charles the Second, He appeared under the Character of a Man, who had preſerved his Loyalty entire, and was eſteemed accordingly by all that Party.

HIS Friend Mr. Hyde, who was then become Lord High Chancellor of England, renewed his old Kindneſs and Friendſhip towards him, and was deſirous to gratify him all the Ways He could, and earneſtly preſſed him to put on his Gown again, and take upon him the Office of a Judge; but He excuſed himſelf upon his long Diſcontinuance (having not worn his Gown, and wholly diſcontinued the Profeſſion from the Year 1640, full twenty Years) and upon his Age, and expreſly refuſed to receive any Promotion; but continued all the Profeſſions of Reſpect and Gratitude imaginable to the Chancellor, till it was in his Power to manifeſt the contrary, to his Prejudice, which he did with Circumſtances very uncommendable.

Of Sir Kenelm Digby.

SIR Kenelm Digby was a Perſon very eminent and notorious throughout the whole Courſe of his Life, from his Cradle to his Grave; of an antient Family and noble Extraction; and inherited a fair and plentiful Fortune, notwithſtanding the Attainder of his Father. He was a Man of a very extraordinary Perſon and Preſence, which drew the Eyes of all Men upon him, which were more fixed by a wonderful graceful Behaviour, a flowing Courteſy and Civility, and ſuch a Volubility of Language, as ſurprized and delighted; and though in another Man it might have appeared to have ſomewhat of Affectation, it was marvellous graceful in him, and ſeemed natural to his Size, and Mould of his Perſon, to the Gravity of his Motion, and the Tune of his Voice and Delivery. He had a fair Reputation in Arms, of which he gave an early Teſtimony in his Youth, in ſome Encounters in Spain, and Italy, and afterwards in an Action in the Mediterranean Sea, where he had the Command of a Squadron of Ships of War, ſet out at his own Charge under the King's Commiſſion; with which, upon an Injury received, or apprehended from the Venetians, He encountered their whole Fleet, killed many of their Men, and ſunk one of their Galeaſſes; which in that drowſy and unactive Time, was looked upon with a general Eſtimation, though the Crown diſavowed it. In a Word, He had all the Advantages that Nature, and Art, and an excellent Education could give him; which, with a great Confidence and Preſentneſs of Mind, buoyed him up againſt all thoſe Prejudices, and Diſadvantages, (as the Attainder, and Execution of his Father, for a Crime of the higheſt Nature; his own Marriage with a Lady, though of an extraordinary Beauty, of as extraordinary a Fame; his changing, and re-changing his Religion; and ſome perſonal Vices, and Licences in his Life) which would have ſuppreſſed and ſunk any other Man, but never clouded or eclipſed him, from appearing in the beſt Places, and the beſt Company, and with the beſt Eſtimation and Satisfaction.

Of Mr. May.

THOMAS MAY was the eldeſt Son of his Father, a Knight, and born to a Fortune, if his Father had not ſpent it; ſo that He had only an Annuity left him, not proportionable to a liberal Education; yet ſince his Fortune could not raiſe his Mind, He brought his Mind down to his Fortune, by a great Modeſty and Humility in his Nature, which was not affected, but very well became an Imperfection in his Speech, which was a great Mortification to him, and kept him from entering upon any Diſcourſe but in the Company of his very Friends. His Parts of Nature, and Art were very good, as appears by his Tranſlation of Lucan (none of the eaſieſt Work of that Kind) and more by his Supplement to Lucan, which being entirely his own, for the Learning, the Wit, and the Language, may be well looked upon as one of the beſt Epic Poems in the Engliſh Language. He writ ſome other commendable Pieces, of the Reign of ſome of our Kings. He was cheriſhed by many Perſons of Honour, and very acceptable in all Places; yet (to ſhew that Pride and Envy have their Influences upon the narroweſt Minds, and which have the greateſt Semblance of Humility) though he had received much Countenance, and a very conſiderable Donative from the King; upon his Majeſty's refuſing to give him a ſmall Penſion, which He had deſigned and promiſed to another very ingenious Perſon, whoſe Qualities He thought inferior to his own; He fell from his Duty, and all his former Friends; and proſtituted himſelf to the vile Office of celebrating the infamous Acts of thoſe who were in Rebellion againſt the King; which He did ſo meanly, that He ſeemed to all Men to have loſt his Wits, when He left his Honeſty; and ſo ſhortly after, died miſerable and neglected; and deſerves to be forgotten.

Of Mr. Carew.

THOMAS CAREW was a younger Brother of a good Family, and of excellent Parts, and had ſpent many Years of his Youth in France and Italy; and returning from Travel, followed the Court, which the Modeſty of that Time diſpoſed Men to do ſome Time, before They pretended to be of it: and He was very much eſteemed by the moſt eminent Perſons in the Court, and well looked upon by the King himſelf, ſome Years before He could obtain to be Sewer to the King; and when the King conferred that Place upon him, it was not without the Regret even of the whole Scotch Nation, which united themſelves in recommending another Gentleman to it; of ſo great Value were thoſe Relations held in that Age, when Majeſty was beheld with the Reverence it ought to be. He was a Perſon of a pleaſant and facetious Wit, and made many Poems (eſpecially in the amorous Way) which for the Sharpneſs of the Fancy and the Elegancy of the Language, in which that Fancy was ſpread, were at leaſt equal, if not ſuperior to any of that Time: But his Glory was, that after fifty Years of his Life, ſpent with leſs Severity or Exactneſs than it ought to have been, He died with the greateſt Remorſe for that Licence, and with the greateſt Manifeſtation of Chriſtianity, that his beſt Friends could deſire.

AMONG theſe Perſons Mr. Hyde's uſual Time of Converſation was ſpent, till He grew more retired to his more ſerious Studies, and never diſcontinued his Acquaintance with any of them, though He ſpent leſs Time in their Company; only upon Mr. Selden He looked with ſo much Affection, and Reverence, that He always thought himſelf beſt, when He was with him: but he had then another Conjunction and Communication, that He took ſo much Delight in, that He embraced it in the Time of his greateſt Buſineſs and Practice, and would ſuffer no other Pretence, or Obligation to withdraw him from that Familiarity and Friendſhip; and took frequent Occaſions to mention their Names with great Pleaſure; being often heard to ſay, "that if He had "any Thing good in him, in his Humour, or in "his Manners, He owed it to the Example, and "the Information He had received in, and from "that Company, with moſt of whom He had an "entire Friendſhip." And They were in Truth, in their Qualifications, Men of more than ordinary Eminence, before They attained the great Preferments many of them lived to enjoy. The Perſons were, Sir Lucius Carey, eldeſt Son to the Lord Viſcount Falkland, Lord Deputy of Ireland; Sir Francis Wenman of Oxfordſhire; Sidney Godolphin of Godolphin in Cornwall; Edmund Waller of Beaconsfield; Dr. Gilbert Sheldon; Dr. George Morley; Dr. John Earles; Mr. John Hales of Eton; and Mr. William Chillingworth.

Of Sir Lucius Carey.

WITH Sir Lucius Carey He had a moſt entire Friendſhip without Reſerve, from his Age of twenty Years, to the Hour of his Death, near twenty Years after; upon which there will be Occaſion to enlarge when We come to ſpeak of that Time, and often before, and therefore we ſhall ſay no more of him in this Place, than to ſhew his Condition, and Qualifications, which were the firſt Ingredients into that Friendſhip, which was afterwards cultivated, and improved by a conſtant Converſation and Familiarity, and by many Accidents which contributed thereto. He had the Advantage of a noble Extraction, and of being born his Father's eldeſt Son, when there was a greater Fortune in Proſpect to be inherited (beſides what he might reaſonably expect by his Mother) than came afterwards to his Poſſeſſion. His Education was equal to his Birth, at leaſt in the Care, if not in the Climate; for his Father being Deputy of Ireland, before He was of Age fit to be ſent abroad, his Breeding was in the Court, and in the Univerſity of Dublin; but under the Care, Vigilance, and Direction of ſuch Governors and Tutors, that He learned all thoſe Exerciſes and Languages, better than moſt Men do in more celebrated Places; inſomuch as when He came into England, which was when He was about the Age of eighteen Years, He was not only Maſter of the Latin Tongue, and had read all the Poets, and other of the beſt Authors with notable Judgment for that Age, but He underſtood, and ſpake, and writ French, as if He had ſpent many Years in France.

HE had another Advantage, which was a great Ornament to the reſt, that was, a good, a plentiful Eſtate, of which He had the early Poſſeſſion. His Mother was the ſole Daughter and Heir of the Lord Chief Baron Tanfield, who having given a fair Portion with his Daughter in Marriage, had kept himſelf free to diſpoſe of his Land, and his other Eſtate, in ſuch Manner as He ſhould think fit; and He ſettled it in ſuch Manner upon his Grandſon Sir Lucius Carey, without taking Notice of his Father, or Mother, that upon his Grandmother's Death, which fell out about the Time that He was nineteen Years of Age, all the Land, with two very good Houſes very well furniſhed (worth above £2000 per Annum) in a moſt pleaſant Country, and the two moſt pleaſant Places in that Country, with a very plentiful perſonal Eſtate, fell into his Hands and Poſſeſſion, and to his entire Diſpoſal.

WITH theſe Advantages, He had one great Diſadvantage (which in the firſt Entrance into the World is attended with too much Prejudice) in his Perſon and Preſence, which was in no Degree attractive or promiſing. His Stature was low, and ſmaller than moſt Men; his Motion not graceful; and his Aſpect ſo far from inviting, that it had ſomewhat in it of Simplicity; and his Voice the worſt of the three, and ſo untuned, that inſtead of reconciling, it offended the Ear, ſo that no Body would have expected Muſick from that Tongue; and ſure no Man was leſs beholden to Nature for it's Recommendation into the World; but then no Man ſooner, or more diſappointed this general and cuſtomary Prejudice; that little Perſon and ſmall Stature was quickly found to contain a great Heart, a Courage ſo keen, and a Nature ſo fearleſs, that no Compoſition of the ſtrongeſt Limbs, and moſt harmonious and proportioned Preſence and Strength, ever more diſpoſed any Man to the greateſt Enterprize; it being his greateſt Weakneſs to be too ſolicitous for ſuch Adventures: and that untuned Tongue and Voice, eaſily diſcovered itſelf to be ſupplied, and governed, by a Mind and Underſtanding ſo excellent, that the Wit and Weight of all He ſaid, carried another Kind of Luſtre, and Admiration in it, and even another Kind of Acceptation from the Perſons preſent, than any Ornament of Delivery could reaſonably promiſe itſelf, or is uſually attended with; and his Diſpoſition and Nature was ſo gentle and obliging, ſo much delighted in Courteſy, Kindneſs, and Generoſity, that all Mankind could not but admire, and love him.

IN a ſhort Time after he had Poſſeſſion of the Eſtate his Grandfather had left him, and before He was of Age, He committed a Fault againſt his Father, in marrying a young Lady, whom He paſſionately loved, without any conſiderable Portion, which exceedingly offended him; and diſappointed all his reaſonable Hopes and Expectation, of redeeming and repairing his own broken Fortune, and deſperate Hopes in Court, by ſome advantageous Mariage of his Son; about which he had then ſome probable Treaty. Sir Lucius Carey was very conſcious to himſelf of his Offence and Tranſgreſſion, and the Conſequence of it, which though He could not repent, having married a Lady of a moſt extraordinary Wit, and Judgment, and of the moſt ſignal Virtue, and exemplary Life, that the Age produced, and who brought him many hopeful Children, in which He took great Delight; yet He confeſſed it, with the moſt ſincere and dutiful Applications to his Father for his Pardon that could be made; and for the Prejudice He had brought upon his Fortune, by bringing no Portion to him. He offered to repair it, by reſigning his whole Eſtate to his Diſpoſal, and to rely wholly upon his Kindneſs for his own Maintenance and Support; and to that Purpoſe, He had cauſed Conveyances to be drawn by Council, which he brought ready engroſſed to his Father, and was willing to ſeal, and execute them, that They might be valid; but his Father's Paſſion and Indignation ſo far tranſported him (though He was a Gentleman of excellent Parts) that He refuſed any Reconciliation, and rejected all the Offers that were made him of the Eſtate; ſo that his Son remained ſtill in the Poſſeſſion of his Eſtate againſt his Will; for which He found great Reaſon afterwards to rejoice; but He was for the preſent, ſo much afflicted with his Father's Diſpleaſure, that He tranſported himſelf and his Wife into Holland, reſolving to buy ſome military Command, and to ſpend the Remainder of his Life in that Profeſſion: but being diſappointed in the Treaty He expected; and finding no Opportunity to accommodate himſelf with ſuch a Command, He returned again into England; reſolving to retire to a Country Life, and to his Books; that ſince He was not like to improve himſelf in Arms, He might advance in Letters.

IN this Reſolution He was ſo ſevere (as He was always naturally very intent upon what He was inclined to) that He declared, He would not ſee London don in many Years, which was the Place He loved of all the World; and that in his Studies, He would firſt apply himſelf to the Greek, and purſue it without Intermiſſion, till He ſhould attain to the full Underſtanding of that Tongue: and it is hardly to be credited, what Induſtry He uſed, and what Succeſs attended that Induſtry: for though his Father's Death, by an unhappy Accident, made his Repair to London abſolutely neceſſary, in fewer Years, than He had propoſed for his Abſence; yet he had firſt made himſelf Maſter of the Greek Tongue (in the Latin He was very well verſed before) and had read not only the Greek Hiſtorians, but Homer likewiſe, and ſuch of the Poets as were worthy to be peruſed.

THOUGH his Father's Death brought no other Convenience to him, but a Title to redeem an Eſtate, mortgaged for as much as it was worth, and for which He was compelled to ſell a finer Seat of his own; yet it impoſed a Burthen upon him, of the Title of a Viſcount, and an Encreaſe of Expence, in which He was not in his Nature too provident, or reſtrained; having naturally ſuch a Generoſity and Bounty in him, that He ſeemed to have his Eſtate in Truſt, for all worthy Perſons, who ſtood in Want of Supplies and Encouragement, as Ben. Johnſon, and many others of that Time, whoſe Fortunes required, and whoſe Spirits made them ſuperior to, ordinary Obligations; which yet They were contented to receive from Him, becauſe his Bounties were ſo generouſly diſtributed, and ſo much without Vanity and Oſtentation, that except from thoſe few Perſons, from whom He ſometimes received the Characters of fit Objects for his Benefits, or whom He intruſted, for the more ſecret deriving them to them, He did all He could, that the Perſons themſelves who received them, ſhould not know from what Fountain They flowed; and when that could not be concealed, He ſuſtained any Acknowledgment from the Perſons obliged, with ſo much Trouble, and Baſhfulneſs, that They might well perceive, that He was even aſhamed of the little He had given, and to receive ſo large a Recompence for it.

As ſoon as He had finiſhed all thoſe Tranſactions, which the Death of his Father had made neceſſary to be done, He retired again to his Country Life, and to his ſevere Courſe of Study, which was very delightful to him, as ſoon as He was engaged in it: but He was wont to ſay, that He never found Reluctancy in any Thing He reſolved to do, but in his quitting London, and departing from the Converſation of thoſe he enjoyed there; which was in ſome Degree preſerved, and continued by frequent Letters, and often Viſits, which were made by his Friends from thence, whilſt he continued wedded to the Country; and which were ſo grateful to him, that during their Stay with him, He looked upon no Book, except their very Converſation made an Appeal to ſome Book; and truly his whole Converſation was one continued Convivium Philoſophicum, or Convivium Theologicum, enlivened, and refreſhed with all the Facetiouſneſs of Wit, and Good-Humour, and Pleaſantneſs of Diſcourſe, which made the Gravity of the Argument itſelf (whatever it was) very delectable. His Houſe where He uſually reſided (Tew, or Burford in Oxfordſhire) being within ten or twelve Miles of the Univerſity, looked like the Univerſity itſelf, by the Company that was always found there. There were Dr. Sheldon, Dr. Morley, Dr. Hammond, Dr. Earles, Mr. Chillingworth and indeed all Men of eminent Parts and Faculties in Oxford, beſides thoſe who reſorted thither from London; who all found their Lodgings there, as ready as in the Colleges, nor did the Lord of the Houſe know of their coming, or going, nor who were in his Houſe, till He came to Dinner, or Supper, where all ſtill met; otherwiſe, there was no troubleſome Ceremony, or Conſtraint to forbid Men to come to the Houſe, or to make them weary of ſtaying there; ſo that many came thither to ſtudy in a better Air, finding all the Books They could deſire, in his Library, and all the Perſons together, whoſe Company They could wiſh, and not find, in any other Society. Here Mr. Chillingworth wrote, and formed, and modelled his excellent Book againſt the learned Jeſuit Mr. Nott, after frequent Debates upon the moſt important Particulars; in many of which, He ſuffered himſelf to be over-ruled by the Judgment of his Friends, though in others He ſtill adhered to his own Fancy, which was ſceptical enough, even in the higheſt Points.

IN this happy and delightful Converſation, and Reſtraint, He remained in the Country many Years; and until He had made ſo prodigious a Progreſs in Learning, that there were very few claſſick Authors in the Greek, or Latin Tongue, that He had not read with great Exactneſs. He had read all the Greek, and Latin Fathers; all the moſt allowed and authentick eccleſiaſtical Writers; and all the Councils, with wonderful Care, and Obſervation; for in Religion He thought too careful, and too curious an Enquiry could not be made, amongſt thoſe, whoſe Purity was not queſtioned, and whoſe Authority was conſtantly, and confidently urged, by Men who were furtheſt from being of one Mind amongſt themſelves; and for the mutual Support of their ſeveral Opinions, in which They moſt contradicted each other; and in all thoſe Controverſies, He had ſo diſpaſſioned a Conſideration, ſuch a Candour in his Nature, and ſo profound a Charity in his Conſcience, that in thoſe Points, in which He was in his own Judgment moſt clear, He never thought the worſe, or in any Degree declined the Familiarity, of thoſe who were of another Mind; which, without Queſtion, is an excellent Temper for the Propagation, and Advancement of Chriſtianity. With theſe great Advantages of Induſtry, He had a Memory retentive of all that He had ever read, and an Underſtanding and Judgment to apply it ſeaſonably and appoſitely, with the moſt Dexterity and Addreſs, and the leaſt Pedantry and Affectation, that ever Man, who knew ſo much, was poſſeſſed with, of what Quality ſoever. It is not a trivial Evidence of his Learning, his Wit and his Candour, that may be found in that Diſcourſe of his, againſt the Infallibity of the Church of Rome, publiſhed ſince his Death, and from a Copy under his own Hand, though not prepared and digeſted by him for the Preſs, and to which He would have given ſome Caſtigations.

BUT all his Parts, Abilities, and Faculties by Art and Induſtry, were not to be valued, or mentioned, in Compariſon of his moſt accompliſhed Mind and Manners: his Gentleneſs, and Affability was ſo tranſcendent, and obliging, that it drew Reverence, and ſome Kind of Complaiſance from the rougheſt, and moſt unpoliſhed, and ſtubborn Conſtitutions; and made them of another Temper in Debate, in his Preſence, than They were in other Places. He was in his Nature ſo ſevere a Lover of Juſtice, and ſo preciſe a Lover of Truth, that He was ſuperior to all poſſible Temptations for the Violation of either; indeed ſo rigid an Exacter of Perfection, in all thoſe Things which ſeemed but to border upon either of them, and by the common Practice of Men were not thought to border upon either, that many who knew him very well, and loved, and admired his Virtue (as all who did know him muſt love, and admire it) did believe, that He was of a Temper and Compoſition, fitter to live in Republicâ Platonis, than in Fæce Remuli, but this Rigidneſs was only exerciſed towards himſelf; towards his Friend's Infirmities no Man was more indulgent. In his Converſation, which was the moſt chearful and pleaſant that can be imagined, though He was young (for all I have yet ſpoken of him doth not exceed his Age of twenty-five or twenty-ſix Years) and of great Gaiety in his Humour, with a flowing Delightfulneſs of Language, He had ſo chaſte a Tongue, and Ear, that there was never known a profane, or looſe Word to fall from him, nor in Truth in his Company; the Integrity, and Cleanlineſs of the Wit of that Time, not exerciſing itſelf in that Licence, before Perſons for whom They had any Eſteem.

Of Sir Francis Wenman.

SIR Francis Wenham would not look upon himſelf under any other Character, than that of a Country Gentleman; though no Man of his Quality in England was more eſteemed in Court. He was of a noble Extraction, and of an ancient Family in Oxfordſhire, where He was poſſeſſed of a competent Eſtate; but his Reputation of Wiſdom, and Integrity, gave him an Intereſt and Credit in that Country, much above his Fortune; and no Man had more Eſteem in it, or Power over it. He was a Neighbour to the Lord Falkland, and in ſo entire Friendſhip and Confidence with him, that He had great Authority in the Society of all his Friends, and Acquaintance. He was a Man of great Sharpneſs of Underſtanding, and of a piercing Judgment; no Man better underſtood the Affections and Temper of the Kingdom, or indeed the Nature of the Nation, or diſcerned farther the Conſequence of Counſels, and with what Succeſs They were like to be attended. He was a very good Latin Scholar, but his Ratiocination was above his Learning; and the Sharpneſs of his Wit incomparable. He was equal to the greateſt Truſt and Employment, if He had been ambitious of it, or ſolicitous for it; but his Want of Health produced a Kind of Lazineſs of Mind, which diſinclined him to Buſineſs, and He died a little before the general Troubles of the Kingdom, which He foreſaw with wonderful Concern, and when many wiſe Men were weary of living ſo long.

Of Mr. Sidney Godolphin.

SIDNEY GODOLPHIN was a younger Brother of Godolphin, but by the Proviſion left by his Father, and by the Death of a younger Brother, liberally ſupplied for a very good Education, and for a chearful Subſiſtence, in any Courſe of Life He propoſed to himſelf. There was never ſo great a Mind and Spirit contained in ſo little Room; ſo large an Underſtanding, and ſo unreſtrained a Fancy, in ſo very ſmall a Body; ſo that the Lord Falkland uſed to ſay merrily, that He thought it was a great Ingredient into his Friendſhip for Mr. Godolphin, that He was pleaſed to be found in his Company, where He was the properer Man; and it may be, the very Remarkableneſs of his little Perſon, made the Sharpneſs of his Wit, and the compoſed Quickneſs of his Judgment and Underſtanding, the more notable. He had ſpent ſome Years in France, and in the low Countries; and accompanied the Earl of Leiceſter in his Ambaſſage into Denmark, before He reſolved to be quiet, and attend ſome Promotion in the Court; where his excellent Diſpoſition and Manners, and extraordinary Qualifications, made him very acceptable. Though every Body loved his Company very well, yet He loved very much to be alone, being in his Conſtitution inclined ſomewhat to Melancholy, and to Retirement amongſt his Books; and was ſo far from being active, that He was contented to be reproached by his Friends with Lazineſs; and was of ſo nice and tender a Compoſition, that a little Rain or Wind would diſorder him, and divert him from any ſhort Journey. He had moſt willingly propoſed to himſelf; inſomuch, as when He rid abroad with thoſe in whoſe Company He moſt delighted, if the Wind chanced to be in his Face, he would (after a little pleaſant murmuring) ſuddenly turn his Horſe, and go Home. Yet the Civil War no ſooner began (the firſt Approaches towards which He diſcoverd as ſoon as any Man, by the Proceedings in Parliament, where He was a Member, and oppoſed with great Indignation) than He put himſelf into the firſt Troops which were raiſed in the Weſt for the King; and bore the Uneaſineſs and Fatigue of Winter Marches, with an exemplar Courage and Alacrity; until by too brave a Purſuit of the Enemy, into an obſcure Village in Devonſhire, He was ſhot with a Muſket; with which (without ſaying any Word more, than, Oh God, I am hurt) He fell dead from his Horſe; to the exceſſive Grief of his Friends, who were all that knew him; and the irreparable Damage of the Publick.

Of Mr. Edmund Waller.

EDMUND WALLER was born to a very fair Eſtate, by the Parſimony, or Frugality, of a wiſe Father and Mother; and He thought it ſo commendable an Advantage, that He reſolved to improve it with his utmoſt Care, upon which in his Nature He was too much intent; and in Order to that, He was ſo much reſerved and retired, that He was ſcarce ever heard of, till by his Addreſs and Dexterity He had gotten a very rich Wife in the City, againſt all the Reccommendation, and Countenance, and Authority of the Court, which was thoroughly engaged on the Behalf of Mr. Crofts; and which uſed to be ſucceſsful in that Age, againſt any Oppoſition. He had the good Fortune to have an Alliance and Friendſhip with Dr. Morley, who had aſſiſted, and inſtructed him in the reading many good Books, to which his natural Parts and Promptitude inclined him; eſpecially the Poets; and at the Age when other Men uſed to give over writing Verſes (for He was near thirty Years of Age, when He firſt engaged himſelf in that Exerciſe, at leaſt, that He was known to do ſo) He ſuprized the Town with two or three Pieces of that Kind; as if a tenth Muſe had been newly born, to cheriſh drooping Poetry. The Doctor at that Time brought him into that Company, which was moſt celebrated for good Converſation; where He was received, and eſteemed, with great Applauſe, and Reſpect. He was a very pleaſant Diſcourſer, in Earneſt, and in Jeſt, and therefore very grateful to all Kind of Company, where He was not the leſs eſteemed for being very rich.

HE had been even nurſed in Parliaments, where He ſate when He was very young; and ſo when They were reſumed again (after a long Intermiſſion) He appeared in thoſe Aſſemblies with great Advantage; having a graceful Way of ſpeaking, and by thinking much upon ſeveral Arguments (which his Temper and Complexion, that had much of Melancholick, inclined him to) He ſeemed often to ſpeak upon the ſudden, when the Occaſion had only adminiſtred the Opportunity of ſaying, what He had thoroughly conſidered, which gave a great Luſtre to all he ſaid; which yet was rather of Delight, than Weight. There needs no more be ſaid to extol the Excellence and Power of his Wit, and Pleaſantneſs of his Converſation, than that it was of Magnitude enough, to cover a World of very great Faults; that is, ſo to cover them, that They were not taken Notice of to his Reproach; viz. a Narrowneſs in his Nature to the loweſt Degree; an Abjectneſs, and Want of Courage to ſupport him in any virtuous Undertaking; an Inſinuation, and ſervile Flattery to the Height, the vaineſt, and moſt imperious Nature could be contented with; that it preſerved and won his Life from thoſe, who were moſt reſolved to take it; and in an Occaſion in which He ought to have been ambitious to have loſt it; and then preſerved him again, from the Reproach and Contempt that was due to him, for ſo preſerving it, and for vindicating it at ſuch a Price; that it had Power to reconcile him to thoſe; whom He had moſt offended and provoked; and continued to his Age with that rare Felicity, that his Company was acceptable, where his Spirit was odious; and He was at leaſt pitied, where He was moſt deteſted.

Of Dr. Sheldon. Of Doctor Sheldon there needs no more be ſaid in this Place, than that his Learning, and Gravity, and Prudence, had in that Time raiſed him to ſuch a Reputation, when He was Chaplain in the Houſe to the Lord Keeper Coventry (who exceedingly eſteemed him, and uſed his Service not only in all Matters relating to the Church, but in many other Buſineſſes of Importance, and in which that great, and good Lord was nearly concerned) and when He was afterwards Warden of All Souls College in Oxford, that He then was looked upon, as very equal to any Preferment the Church could yield, or hath ſince yielded unto him; and Sir Francis Wenman would often ſay, when the Doctor reſorted to the Converſation at the Lord Falkland's Houſe, as He frequently did, that "Dr Sheldon was born, and "bred to be Archbiſhop of Canterbury."

Of Dr. Morley. DOCTOR Morley was a Gentleman of very eminent Parts in all polite Learning; of great Wit, and Readineſs, and Subtilty in Diſputation; and of remarkable Temper, and Prudence in Converſation, which rendered him moſt grateful in all the beſt Company. He was then Chaplain in the Houſe, and to the Family, of the Lord and Lady Carnarvon, which needed a wiſe, and a wary Director. From ſome academick Conteſts He had been engaged in, during his living in Chriſt Church in Oxford, where He was always of the firſt Eminency, He had by the natural Faction and Animoſity of thoſe Diſputes, fallen under the Reproach of holding ſome Opinions, which were not then grateful to thoſe Churchmen, who had the greateſt Power in eccleſiaſtical Promotions; and ſome ſharp Anſwers and Replies, He uſed to make in accidental Diſcourſes, and which in Truth were made for Mirth and Pleaſantneſs ſake (as He was of the higheſt Facetiouſneſs) were reported, and ſpread abroad to his Prejudice; as being once aſked by a grave Country Gentleman (who was deſirous to be inſtructed what their Tenets and Opinions were) "what the Armi- "nians held," He pleaſantly anſwered, that They held all the beſt Biſhopricks and Deaneries in England; which was quickly reported abroad, as Mr. Morley's Definition of the Arminian Tenets.

SUCH, and the like harmleſs and jocular Sayings, upon many accidental occaſions, had wrought upon the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Laud (who lived to change his Mind, and to have a juſt Eſteem of him) to entertain ſome Prejudice towards him; and the Reſpect which was paid him by many eminent Perſons, as John Hampden, Arthur Goodwin and others, who were not thought Friends to the Proſperity the Church was in, made others apprehend that He was not enough zealous for it. But that Diſaffection, and Virulency (which few Men had then owned and diſcovered) no ſooner appeared, in thoſe, and other Men, but Dr. Morley made Haſte as publickly to oppoſe them, both in private, and in publick; which had the more effect to the Benefit of the Church, by his being a Perſon above all poſſible Reproach, and known, and valued by more Perſons of Honour than moſt of the Clergy were; and being not only without the Envy of any Preferment, but under the Advantage of a diſcountenanced Perſon. And as He was afterwards the late King's Chaplain, and much regarded by him, and as long about him, as any of his Chaplains were permitted to attend him; ſo preſently after his Murder, He left the Kingdom, and remained in Baniſhment, till King Charles the Second's happy Return.

Of Dr. Earles. DOCTOR Earles was at that Time Chaplain in the Houſe to the Earl of Pembroke, Lord Chamberlain of his Majeſty's Houſhold, and had a Lodging in the Court under that Relation. He was a Perſon very notable for his Elegance in the Greek and Latin Tongues; and being Fellow of Merton College in Oxford, and having been Proctor of the Univerſity, and ſome very witty, and ſharp Diſcourſes being publiſhed in Print without his Conſent, though known to be his, He grew ſuddenly into a very general Eſteem with all Men; being a Man of great Piety and Devotion; a moſt eloquent and powerful Preacher; and of a Converſation ſo pleaſant and delightful, ſo very innocent, and ſo very facetious, that no Man's Company was more deſired, and more loved. No Man was more negligent in his Dreſs, and Habit, and Mien; no Man more wary, and cultivated, in his Behaviour, and Diſcourſe; inſomuch as He had the greater Advantage when He was known, by promiſing ſo little before He was known. He was an excellent Poet, both in Latin, Greek, and Engliſh, as appears by many Pieces yet abroad; though He ſuppreſſed many more himſelf, eſpecially of Engliſh, incomparably good, out of an Auſterity to thoſe Sallies of his Youth. He was very dear to the Lord Falkland, with whom He ſpent as much Time as He could make his own; and as that Lord would impute the ſpeedy Progreſs He made in the Greek Tongue, to the Information, and Aſſiſtance He had from Mr. Earles, ſo Mr. Earles would frequently profeſs, that He had got more uſeful Learning by his Converſation at Tew (the Lord Falkland's Houſe) than He had at Oxford. In the firſt ſettling of the Prince his Family, He was made one of his Chaplains; and attended on him when He was forced to leave the Kingdom. He was amongſt the few excellent Men who never had, or never could have an Enemy, but ſuch a one, who was an Enemy to all Learning, and Virtue, and therefore would never make himſelf known.

Of Mr. Hales. Mr. JOHN HALES had been Greek Profeſſor in the Univerſity of Oxford; and had born the greateſt Part of the Labour of that Excellent Edition and Impreſſion of St. Chryſoſtom's Works, ſet out by Sir Harry Savile; who was then Warden of Merton College, when the other was Fellow of that Houſe. He was Chaplain in the Houſe with Sir Dudley Carleton, Ambaſſador at the Hague in Holland, at the Time when the Synod of Dort was held, and ſo had Liberty to be preſent at the Conſultations in that Aſſembly; and hath left the beſt Memorial behind him, of the Ignorance, and Paſſion, and Animoſity, and Injuſtice of that Convention; of which He often made very pleaſant Relations; though at that Time it received too much Countenance from England. Being a Perſon of the greateſt Eminency for Learning, and other Abilities, from which He might have promiſed himſelf any Preferment in the Church, He withdrew himſelf from all Purſuits of that Kind, into a private Fellowſhip in the College of Eton, where his Friend Sir Harry Savile was Provoſt: where He lived amongſt his Books, and the moſt ſeparated from the World of any Man then living; though He was not in the leaſt Degree inclined to Melancholy, but on the contrary, of a very open and pleaſant Converſation; and therefore was very well pleaſed with the reſort of his Friends to him, who were ſuch as He had choſen, and in whoſe Company He delighted, and for whoſe Sake He would ſometimes, once in a Year, reſort to London, only to enjoy their chearful Converſation.

HE would never take any Cure of Souls; and was ſo great a Contemner of Money, that He was wont to ſay, that his Fellowſhip, and the Burſar's Place (which for the Good of the College, He held many Years) was worth to him fifty Pounds a Year more than He could ſpend; and yet, beſides his being very charitable to all poor People, even to Liberality; He had made a greater, and better Collection of Books, than were to be found in any other private Library that I have ſeen; as He had ſure read more, and carried more about him, in his excellent Memory, than any Man I ever knew, my Lord Falkland only excepted, who I think ſided him. He had, whether from his natural Temper and Conſtitution, or from his long Retirement from all Crowds, or from his profound Judgment, and diſcerning Spirit, contracted ſome Opinions, which were not received, nor by him publiſhed, except in private Diſcourſes; and then rather upon Occaſion of Diſpute, than of poſitive Opinion; and He would often ſay, his Opinions He was ſure did him no Harm, but He was far from being confident, that They might not do others Harm, who entertained them, and might entertain other Reſults from them, than He did; and therefore He was very reſerved in communicating what He thought Himſelf in thoſe Points, in which He differed from what was received.

NOTHING troubled him more, than the Brawls which were grown from Religion; and He therefore exceedingly deteſted the Tyranny of the Church of Rome; more for their impoſing uncharitably upon the Conſciences of other Men, than for the Errors in their own Opinions; and would often ſay, that He would renounce the Religion of the Church of England to-morrow, if it obliged him to believe that any other Chriſtians ſhould be damned; and that no Body would conclude another Man to be damned, who did not wiſh him ſo. No Man more ſtrict and ſevere to himſelf; to other Men ſo charitable as to their Opinions, that He thought that other Men were more in Fault for their Carriage towards them, than the Men themſelves were, who erred; and He thought that Pride, and Paſſion, more than Conſcience, were the cauſe of all Separation from each others Communion; and He frequently ſaid, that that only kept the World from agreeing upon ſuch a Liturgy, as might bring them into one Communion; all doctrinal Points upon which Men differed in their Opinions, being to have no Place in any Liturgy. Upon an occaſional Diſcourſe with a Friend, of the frequent, and uncharitable Reproaches of Heretick, and Schiſmatick, too lightly thrown at each other, amongſt Men who differ in their Judgment, He writ a little Diſcourſe of Schiſm, contained in leſs than two Sheets of Paper; which being tranſmitted from Friend to Friend in Writing, was at laſt, without any Malice, brought to the View of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Dr. Laud, who was a very rigid Surveyor of all Things which never ſo little bordered upon Schiſm; and thought the Church could not be too vigilant againſt, and jealous of ſuch Incurſions.

HE ſent for Mr. Hales, whom, when They had both lived in the Univerſity of Oxford, He had known well; and told him, that He had in Truth believed him to be long ſince dead; and chid him very kindly for having never come to him, having been of his old Acquaintance; then aſked him whether He had lately writ a ſhort Diſcourſe of Schiſm, and whether He was of that Opinion, which that Diſcourſe implied. He told him, that He had, for the Satisfaction of a private Friend (who was not of his Mind) a Year or two before, writ ſuch a ſmall Tract, without any Imagination that it would be communicated; and that He believed it did not contain any Thing, that was not agreeable to the Judgment of the Primitive Fathers; upon which the Archbiſhop debated with him upon ſome Expreſſions of Irenæus, and the moſt ancient Fathers; and concluded with ſaying, that the Time was very apt to ſet new Doctrines on Foot, of which the Wits of the Age were too ſuſceptible; and that there could not be too much Care taken, to preſerve the Peace and Unity of the Church; and from thence aſked him of his Condition, and whether He wanted any Thing, and the other anſwering, that He had enough, and wanted, or deſired no Addition, ſo diſmiſſed him with great Courteſy; and ſhortly after ſent for him again, when there was a Prebendary of Windſor fallen, and told him, the King had given him the Preferment, becauſe it lay ſo convenient to his Fellowſhip of Eton; which (though indeed the moſt convenient Preferment that could be thought of for him) the Archbiſhop could not without great Difficulty, perſuade him to accept, and He did accept it rather to pleaſe Him, than himſelf; becauſe He really believed He had enough before. He was one of the leaſt Men in the Kingdom; and one of the greateſt Scholars in Europe.

Of Mr. Chillingworth.

Mr. CHILLINGWORTH was of a Stature little ſuperiour to Mr. Hales (and it was an Age, in which there were many great and wonderful Men of that Size) and a Man of ſo great a Subtilty of Underſtanding, and ſo rare a temper in Debate; that as it was impoſſible to provoke him into any Paſſion, ſo it was very difficult to keep a Man's ſelf from being a little diſcompoſed by his Sharpneſs, and Quickneſs of Argument, and Inſtances, in which He had a rare Facility, and a great Advantage over all the Men I ever knew. He had ſpent all his younger Time in Diſputation; and had arrived to ſo great a Maſtery, as He was inferiour to no Man in thoſe Skirmiſhes; but He had, with his notable Perfection in this Exerciſe, contracted ſuch an Irreſolution, and Habit of doubting, that by Degrees He grew confident of Nothing, and a Sceptick at leaſt, in the greateſt Myſteries of Faith.

THIS made him from firſt wavering in Religion, and indulging to Scruples, to reconcile himſelf too ſoon, and too eaſily to the Church of Rome; and carrying ſtill his own Inquiſitiveneſs about him, without any Reſignation to their Authority (which is the only Temper can make that Church ſure of it's Proſelytes) having made a Journey to St. Omers, purely to perfect his Converſion, by the Converſation of thoſe, who had the greateſt Name, He found as little Satisfaction there; and returned with as much Haſte from them; with a Belief that an entire Exemption from Error, was neither inherent in, nor neceſſary to any Church: Which occaſioned that War, which was carried on by the Jeſuits with ſo great Aſperity, and Reproaches againſt him, and in which He defended himſelf, by ſuch an admirable Eloquence of Language, and clear, and incomparable Power of Reaſon, that He not only made them appear unequal Adverſaries, but carried the War into their own Quarters; and made the Pope's Infallibility to be as much ſhaken, and declined by their own Doctors (and as great an Acrimony amongſt themſelves upon that Subject) and to be at leaſt as much doubted, as in the Schools of the Reformed or Proteſtant; and forced them ſince, to defend and maintain thoſe unhappy Controverſies in Religion, with Arms and Weapons of another Nature, than were uſed, or known in the Church of Rome, when Bellarmine died; and which probably will in Time undermine the very Foundation that ſupports it.

SUCH

SUCH a Levity, and Propenſity to change, is commonly attended with great Infirmities in, and no leſs Reproach, and Prejudice to the Perſon; but the Sincerity of his Heart was ſo conſpicuous, and without the leaſt Temptation of any corrupt End; and the Innocence, and Candour in his Nature ſo evident, and without any Perverſeneſs; that all who knew him, clearly diſcerned, that all thoſe reſtleſs Motions and Fluctuations, proceeded only from the Warmth and Jealouſy of his own Thoughts, in a too nice Inquiſition for Truth. Neither the Books of the Adverſary, nor any of their Perſons, though He was acquainted with the beſt of both, had ever made great Impreſſion upon him; all his Doubts grew out of himſelf, when He aſſiſted his Scruples with all the Strength of his own Reaſon, and was then too hard for himſelf; but finding as little Quiet and Repoſe in thoſe Victories, He quickly recovered, by a new Appeal to his own Judgment; ſo that He was in Truth, upon the Matter, in all his Sallies, and Retreats, his own Convert; though He was not ſo totally diveſted of all Thoughts of this World, but that when He was ready for it, He admitted ſome great and conſiderable Churchmen, to be Sharers with him in his publick Converſion.

WHILST He was in Perplexity, or rather ſome paſſionate Diſinclination to the Religion He had been educated in, He had the Misfortune to have much Acquaintance with one Mr. Lugar, a Miniſter of that Church; a Man of a Competency of Learning, in thoſe Points moſt controverted with the Romaniſts, but of no acute Parts of Wit, or Judgment: and wrought ſo far upon him, by weakening, and enervating thoſe Arguments, by which He found He was governed (as He had all the Logick, and all the Rhetorick, that was neceſſary to perſuade very powerfully Men of the greateſt Talents) that the poor Man, not able to live long in Doubt, too haſtily deſerted his own Church, and betook himſelf to the Roman: Nor could all the Arguments, and Reaſons of Mr. Chillingworth make him pauſe in the Expedition He was uſing; or reduce him from that Church after He had given himſelf to it; but he had always a great Animoſity againſt him, for having (as He ſaid) unkindly betrayed him, and carried him into another Religion, and there left him. So unfit are ſome Conſtitutions to be troubled with Doubts, after They are once fixed.

HE did really believe all War to be unlawful; and did not think that the Parliament (whoſe Proceedings He perfectly abhorred) did in Truth intend to involve the Nation in a Civil War, till after the Battle of Edgehill; and then he thought any Expedient, or Stratagem that was like to put a ſpeedy End to it, to be the moſt commendable: And ſo having too mathematically conceived an Engine, that ſhould move ſo lightly, as to be a Breaſtwork in all Encounters, and Aſſaults in the Field; He carried it, to make the Experiment, into that Part of his Majeſty's Army, which was only in that Winter Seaſon in the Field, under the Command of the Lord Hopton, in Hampſhire, upon the Borders of Suſſex; where he was ſhut up in the Caſtle of Arundel; which was forced, after a ſhort, ſharp Siege, to yield for want of Victual; and poor Mr. Chillingworth with it, falling into the Rebels Hands; and being moſt barbarouſly treated by them, eſpecially by that Clergy which followed them; and being broken with Sickneſs, contracted by the ill Accommodation, and Want of Meat, and Fire during the Siege, which was in a terrible Seaſon of Froſt and Snow, He died ſhortly after in Priſon. He was a Man of excellent Parts, and of a chearful Diſpoſition; void of all Kind of Vice, and endued with many notable Virtues; of a very publick Heart, and an indefatigable Deſire to do Good; his only Unhappineſs proceeded from his ſleeping too little, and thinking too much; which ſometimes threw him into violent Fevers.

THIS was Mr. HYDE's Company and Converſation, to which He dedicated his vacant Times, and all that Time which He could make vacant, from the Buſineſs of his Profeſſion; which He indulged with no more Paſſion than was neceſſary to keep up the Reputation of a Man, that had no Purpoſe to be idle; which indeed He perfectly abhorred: And He took always Occaſion to celebrate the Time He had ſpent in that Converſation, with great Satisfaction, and Delight. Nor was He leſs fortunate, in the Acquaintance and Friendſhips which He made with the Perſons in his Profeſſion; who were all eminent Men, or of the moſt hopeful Parts; who being all much ſuperior to him in Age, and Experience, and entirely devoted to their Profeſſion, were yet well pleaſed with the Gaiety of his Humour, and inoffenſive, and winning Behaviour; and this good Inclination of theirs was improved by the Intereſt They ſaw He had in Perſons of the beſt Quality, to whom He was very acceptable, and his Condition of living, which was with more Expenſe than young Lawyers were accuſtomed to.

Mr. Hyde's Friends in his Profeſſion.

THOSE Perſons were, Mr. Lane, who was then Attorney to the Prince of Wales; and afterwards Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer; and laſtly upon the Death of the Lord Littleton, was made Keeper of the Great Seal, who died in Baniſhment with King Charles the Second. Mr. Geoffrey Palmer, afterwards Attorney General. Mr. John Maynard; and Bulſtrode Whitlock; all Men of eminent Parts, and great Learning out of their Profeſſions; and in their Profeſſions, of ſignal Reputation; and though the two laſt did afterwards bow their Knees to Baal, and ſo ſwerved from their Allegiance, it was with the leſs Rancour and Malice than other Men; They never led, but followed; and were rather carried away with the Torrent, than ſwam with the Stream; and failed through thoſe Infirmities, which leſs than a general Defection, and a proſperous Rebellion could never have diſcovered. With theſe, and very few other Perſons of other Societies, and of more than ordinary Parts in the Profeſſion, He converſed. In Buſineſs, and in Practice, with the reſt of the Profeſſion He had at moſt a formal Acquaintance, and little Familiarity; very ſeldom uſing, when his Practice was at higheſt, ſo much as to eat in the Hall, without which, no Man ever got the Reputation of a good Student; but He ever gave his Time of eating to his Friends; and was wont pleaſantly to ſay, "that He repaired "himſelf with very good Company at Dinner, for "the ill Company He had kept in the morning;" and made himſelf amends for the Time He loſt with his Friends, by declining Suppers: and with a Part of that Time which was allowed for Sleep: But He grew every Day more intent on Buſineſs, and more engaged in Practice, ſo that He could not aſſign ſo much Time as He had uſed to do, to his beloved Converſation.

THE Countenance He received from the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who took all Occaſion to mention him as a Perſon He had Kindneſs for; the Favour of the Lord Coventry, manifeſted as often as He came before him; the Reception He found with the Lord Privy Seal, the Earl of Mancheſter, who had raiſed the Court of Requeſts to as much Buſineſs as the Chancery itſelf was poſſeſſed of, and where He was looked upon as a Favourite; the Familiarity uſed towards him by the Lord Pembroke, who was Lord Chamberlain of the King's Houſe, and a greater Man in the Country than the Court;

by

by the Earl of Holland, and many other Lords and Ladies, and other Perſons of Intereſt in the Court, made him looked upon by the Judges in Weſtminſter Hall, with much Condeſcenſion; and They, who before He put on his Gown, looked upon him as one who deſigned ſome other Courſe of Life (for though He had been always very punctual in the Performance of all thoſe publick Exerciſes the Profeſſion obliged him to, both before, and after He was called to the Bar; yet in all other Reſpects He ſeemed not to confine himſelf wholly to that Courſe of Life) now when They no ſooner ſaw him put on his Gown, but that He was ſuddenly in Practice, and taken Notice of Particularly in all Courts of Juſtice with unuſual Countenance, thought He would make what Progreſs He deſired in that Profeſſion.

As He had thoſe many Friends in Court, ſo He was not leſs acceptable to many great Perſons in the Country, who leaſt regarded the Court, and were leaſt eſteemed by it; and He had that rare Felicity, that even They, who did not love many of thoſe, upon whom He moſt depended, were yet very well pleaſed with him, and with his Company. The Earl of Hertford, and the Earl of Eſſex, whoſe Intereſts, and Friendſhips were then the ſame; and who were looked upon with Reverence by all who had not Reverence for the Court; and even by all in the Court, who were not ſatisfied there (which was, and always will be a great People) were very kind to him, and ready to truſt him in any Thing that was moſt ſecret; and though He could not diſpoſe the Archbiſhop, or the Earl of Eſſex to any Correſpondence, or good Intelligence with each other; which He exceedingly laboured to do, and found an equal Averſion in both towards each other; yet He ſucceeded to his Wiſh in bringing the Archbiſhop, and the Earl of Hertford to a very good Acquaintance, and Inclination to each other: which They both often acknowledged kindly to him, and with which the Earl of Eſſex was as much unſatisfied.

Mr. Hyde reconciles the Archbiſhop, and the Earl of Hertford.

THE Perſon whoſe Life this Diſcourſe is to recollect (and who had ſo great an Affection, and Reverence for the Memory of Archbiſhop Laud, that He never ſpake of him without extraordinary Eſteem, and believed him to be a Man of the moſt exemplar Virtue, and Piety of any of that Age) was wont to ſay, the greateſt Want the Archbiſhop had, was of a true Friend, who would ſeaſonably have told him of his Infirmities, and what People ſpake of him; and He ſaid, He knew well, that ſuch a Friend would have been very acceptable to him; and upon that Occaſion He uſed to mention a Story of himſelf; that when He was a young Practiſer of the Law, being in ſome Favour with him (as is mentioned before) He went to viſit him, in the Beginning of a Michaelmas Term, ſhortly after his Return from the Country, where He had ſpent a Month or two of the Summer.

His free Expoſtulation with the Archbiſhop.

HE found the Archbiſhop early walking in the Garden; who received him according to his Cuſtom, very graciouſly, and continuing his Walk, aſked him, "what good News in the Country?" to which He anſwered, "there was none good; the People "were univerſally diſcontented; and (which trou-"bled him moſt) that many People ſpoke extreme "ill of his Grace, as the Cauſe of all that was "amiſs." He replied, "that He was ſorry for it; "He knew He did not deſerve it; and that He "muſt not give over ſerving the King, and the "Church, to pleaſe the People, who otherwiſe "would not ſpeak well of him." Mr. Hyde told him, "He thought He need not leſſen his Zeal for "either: and that it grieved him to find Perſons "of the beſt Condition, and who loved both King, "and Church, exceedingly indevoted to him; com-"plaining of his Manner of treating them, when "They had Occaſion to reſort to him, it may be "for his Directions." And then named him two Perſons of the moſt Intereſt and Credit in Wiltſhire, who had that Summer attended the Council Board, in ſome Affairs which concerned the King, and the Country; that all the Lords preſent uſed them with great Courteſy, knowing well their Quality, and Reputation; but that He alone ſpake very ſharply to them, and without any Thing of Grace, at which They were much troubled; and one of them, ſuppoſing that Somebody had done him ill Offices, went the next Morning to Lambeth, to preſent his Service to him, and to diſcover, if He could, what Miſrepreſentation had been made of him: That after He had attended very long, He was admitted to ſpeak with his Grace, who ſcarce hearing him, ſharply anſwered him, that "He had no Leiſure "for Compliments;" and ſo hurried away; which put the other Gentleman much out of Countenance: And that this Kind of Behaviour of his was the Diſcourſe of all Companies of Perſons of Quality; every Man continuing any ſuch Story with another like it, very much to his Diſadvantage; and to the Trouble of thoſe who were very juſt to him.

The Archbiſhop's Reply.

HE heard the Relation very patiently, and attentvely; and diſcourſed over every Particular with all imaginable Condeſcenſion; and ſaid, with evident Shew of Trouble, that "He was very unfor-"tunate to be ſo ill underſtood; that He meant "very well; that He remembered the Time, when "thoſe two Perſons were with the Council; that "upon any Deliberations, when any Thing was re-"ſolved, or to be ſaid to any Body, the Council "enjoined him to deliver their Reſolutions; which "he did always according to the beſt of his Un-"derſtanding; but by the Imperfection He had by "Nature, which He ſaid often troubled him, He "might deliver it in ſuch a Tune, and with a "Sharpneſs of Voice, that made Men believe He "was angry, when there was no ſuch Thing; that "when thoſe Gentlemen were there, and He had "delivered what He was to ſay, They made ſome "Stay, and ſpake with ſome of the Lords, which "not being according to Order, He thought He "gave them ſome Reprehenſion; They having at "that Time very much other Buſineſs to do: That "He did well remember, that one of them, (who "was a Perſon of Honour) came afterwards to him, "at a Time He was ſhut up about an Affair of "Importance, which required his full Thoughts; "but that as ſoon as He heard of the other's being "without, He ſent for him, himſelf going into the "next Room, and received him very kindly, as He "thought; and ſuppoſing that He came about Bu-"ſineſs, aſked him what his Buſineſs was; and the "other anſwering, that He had no Buſineſs, but "continuing his Addreſs with ſome Ceremony, He "had indeed ſaid, that He had not Time for Com-"pliments; but He did not think that He went "out of the Room in that Manner: And con-"cluded, that it was not poſſible for him in the "many Occupations He had, to ſpend any Time "in unneceſſary Compliments; and that if his In-"tegrity and Uprightneſs, which never ſhould be "liable to Reproach, could not be ſtrong enough "to preſerve him, He muſt ſubmit to God's Plea-"ſure."

HE was well contented to hear Mr. Hyde reply very freely upon the Subject, who ſaid, "He ob-"ſerved by what his Grace himſelf had related, "that the Gentlemen had too much Reaſon for "the Report They made, and He did not won-"der that they had been much troubled at his "Car-

"Carriage towards them; that He did exceedingly "wiſh, that He would more reſerve his Paſſion towards all Perſons, how faulty ſoever; and that "He would treat Perſons of Honour, and Quality, "and Intereſt in their Country, with more Courteſy, and Condeſcenſion; eſpecially when They "came to viſit him, and make Offer of their Service." He ſaid, ſmiling, that "He could only "undertake for his Heart; that he had very good "Meaning; for his Tongue, He could not undertake, that He would not ſometimes ſpeak more "haſtily, and ſharply, than He ſhould do (which "oftentimes He was ſorry, and reprehended himſelf for) and in a Tune which might be liable to "Miſinterpretation, with them, who were not very "well acquainted with him, and ſo knew, that it "was an Infirmity, which his Nature, and Education had ſo rooted in him, that it was in vain to "contend with it." For the State, and Diſtance He kept with Men, He ſaid, "He thought it was "not more than was ſuitable to the Place and Degree He held in the Church, and State; or ſo "much as others had aſſumed to themſelves, who "had ſate in his Place; and thereupon He told him "ſome Behaviour and Carriage of his Predeceſſor "Abbot (who He ſaid was not better born than "himſelf) towards the greateſt Nobility of the Kingdom, which He thought was very inſolent, and "inexcuſable;" and was indeed very ridiculous.

AFTER this free Diſcourſe, Mr Hyde ever found himſelf more graciouſly received by him, and treated with more Familiarity; upon which He always concluded, that if the Archbiſhop had had any true Friend, who would, in proper Seaſons, have dealt frankly with him, in the moſt important Matters, and wherein the Errors were like to be moſt penal, He would not only have received it very well, but have profited himſelf by it. But it is the Misfortune of moſt Perſons of that Education (how worthy ſoever) that They have rarely Friendſhips with Men above their own Condition; and that their Aſcent being commonly ſudden, from low to high, They have afterwards rather Dependants than Friends; and are ſtill deceived, by keeping ſomewhat in Reſerve to themſelves, even from thoſe with whom They ſeem moſt openly to communicate; and which is worſe, receive for the moſt Part, their Informations and Advertiſements from Clergymen, who underſtand the leaſt, and take the worſt Meaſure of human Affairs, of all Mankind, that can write, and read.

UNDER this univerſal Acquaintance, and general Acceptation, Mr. Hyde led, for many Years, as chearful, and pleaſant a Life, as any Man did enjoy, as long as the Kingdom took any Pleaſure in itſelf. His Practice grew every Day as much as He wiſhed; and would have been much more, if He had wiſhed it; by which, He not only ſupported his Expenſe, greater much than Men of his Rank, and Pretences, uſed to make, but encreaſed his Eſtate by ſome convenient Purchaſes of Land, adjoining to his other; and he grew ſo much in Love with Buſineſs and Practice, that he gave up his whole Heart to it; reſolving, by a Courſe of ſevere Study, to recover the Time He had loſt upon leſs profitable Learning; and to attend Nothing elſe, but no reap all thoſe Benefits, to which that Profeſſion could carry him, and to the purſuing whereof, He had ſo many, and ſo unuſual Encouragements; and towards which it was not the leaſt, that God had bleſſed him with an excellent Wife, who perfectly reſigned herſelf to him; and who then had brought him, before any Troubles in the Kingdom, three Sons, and a Daughter, which He then, and ever, looked upon as his greateſt Bleſſing and Conſolation.

Mr. Hyde's Reflections on the younger Part of his Life.

BECAUSE we ſhall have little Cauſe hereafter to mention any other Particulars, in the calm Part of his Life, whilſt He followed the Study, and Practice of the Law, it will not in this Place appear a very impertinent Digreſſion to ſay, that He was, in that very Time, when Fortune ſeemed to ſmile, and to intend well towards him, and often afterwards, throughout the whole Courſe of his Life, wont to ſay, that "when He reflected upon him-"ſelf, and his paſt Actions, even from the Time "of his firſt coming to the Middle-Temple, He had "much more Cauſe to be terrified upon the Re-"flection, than the Man had, who viewed Rocheſ-"ter Bridge in the Morning that it was broken, "and which He had galloped over in the Night; "that He had paſſed over more Precipices than the "other had done, for many Nights, and Days, and "ſome Years together; from which, Nothing but "the immediate Hand of God, could have pre-"ſerved him." For though it is very true, the Perſons before mentioned were the only Men, in whoſe Company, in thoſe Seaſons of his Life, He took Delight; yet He frequently found himſelf in the Converſation of worſe, and indeed of all Manner of Men; and it being in the Time when the War was entered into againſt the two Crowns; and the Expeditions made to, and unproſperous Returns from Cadiz, and the Iſle of Ree, the Town was full of Soldiers, and of young Gentlemen who intended to be Soldiers, or as like them as they could; great Licenſe uſed of all Kinds, in Cloaths, in Diet, in Gaming; and all Kinds of Expenſes equally carried on, by Men who had Fortunes of their own to ſupport it, and by others, who having Nothing of their own, cared not what They ſpent, whilſt They could find Credit; ſo that there was never an Age, in which in ſo ſhort a Time, ſo many young Gentlemen, who had not Experience in the World, or ſome good tutelar Angel to protect them, were inſenſibly, and ſuddenly overwhelmed in that Sea of Wine, and Women, and Quarrels, and Gaming, which almoſt overſpread the whole Kingdom, and the Nobility, and Gentry thereof. And when He had by God's immediate Bleſſing, diſentangled himſelf from theſe Labyrinths (his Nature and Inclination diſpoſing him rather to paſs through thoſe diſſolute Quarters, than to make any Stay in them) and was enough compoſed againſt any extravagant Excurſions; He was ſtill converſant with a Rank of Men (how worthy ſoever) above his Quality; and engaged in an Expenſe above his Fortune, if the extraordinary Accidents of his Life, had not ſupplied him for thoſe Exceſſes; ſo that it brought no Prejudice upon him, except in the Cenſure of ſevere Men, who thought him a Perſon of more Licenſe than in Truth he was; and who in a ſhort Time, were very fully reconciled to him.

And his own Character.

HE had without Doubt, great Infirmities; which by a providential Mercy were ſeaſonably reſtrained from growing into Vices, at leaſt into any that were habitual. He had Ambition enough to keep him from being ſatisfied with his own Condition, and to raiſe his Spirit to great Deſigns of raiſing himſelf; but not to tranſport him to endeavour it by any crooked, and indirect Means. He was never ſuſpected to flatter the greateſt Men; or in the leaſt Degree to diſſemble his own Opinions, or Thoughts, how ingrateful ſoever it often proved; and even an affected Defect in, and Contempt of thoſe two uſeful Qualities coſt him dear afterwards. He indulged his Palate very much, and took even ſome Delight in eating and drinking well: but without any Approach to Luxury: and, in Truth, rather diſcourſed like an Epicure, than was one; having ſpent much Time in the eating Hours, with the Earl of Dorſet, the Lord Conway, and the Lord Lumley, Men who excelled in gratifying their Appetites. He had a Fancy ſharp, and luxuriant; but ſo carefully cultivated, and ſtrictly guarded, that He never was heard to ſpeak a looſe, or a prophane Word; which He imputed to the Chaſtity of the Perſons where his Converſation uſually was; where that rank Sort of Wit was religiouſly deteſted; and a little Diſcountenance would quickly root thoſe unſavoury Weeds out of all Diſcourſes where Perſons of Honour are preſent.

He was in his Nature inclined to Pride and Paſſion; and to a Humour between Wrangling, and Diſputing, very troubleſome; which good Company in a ſhort Time, ſo much reformed, and maſtered, that no Man was more affable and courteous to all Kind of Perſons; and They who knew the great Infirmity of his whole Family, which abounded in Paſſion, uſed to ſay, He had much extinguiſhed the Unrulineſs of that Fire. That which ſupported, and rendered him generally acceptable, was his Generoſity (for He had too much a Contempt of Money) and the Opinion Men had of the Goodneſs, and Juſtice of his Nature, which was tranſcendent in him, in a wonderful Tenderneſs, and Delight in obliging. His Integrity was ever without Blemiſh; and believed to be above Temptation. He was firm and unſhaken in his Friendſhips: And though he had great Candour towards others in the Differences of Religion, He was zealouſly, and deliberately fixed in the Principles both of the Doctrine, and Diſcipline of the Church: Yet He uſed to ſay to his neareſt Friends, in that Time, when He expected another Kind of Calm for the Remainder of his Life, "though He had ſome "glimmering Light of, and Inclination to Virtue "in his Nature, that the whole Progreſs of his Life "had been full of deſperate Hazards; and that "only the merciful Hand of God Almighty had "prevented his being both an unfortunate, and a "vicious Man:" And he ſtill ſaid, that "God had "vouchſafed that ſignal Goodneſs to him, for the "Piety, and exemplar Virtue of his Father, and "Mother;" whoſe Memory He had always in Veneration: And He was pleaſed with what his neareſt Ally, and Boſom Friend Serjeant Hyde (who was afterwards Chief Juſtice of the King's Bench) uſed at that Time to ſay of him, that his Couſin had paſſed his Time very luckily; and with notable Succeſs; and was like to be very happy in the World; but He would never adviſe any of his Friends to walk in the ſame Paths, or to tread in his Steps.

General State of Europe. A. D. 1639

It was about the Year 1639, when He was little more than thirty Years of Age; and when England enjoyed the greateſt Meaſure of Felicity, that it had ever known; the two Crowns of France and Spain worrying each other, by their mutual Incurſions, and Invaſions; whilſt They had both a Civil War in their own Bowels; the former, by frequent Rebellions from their own Factions, and Animoſities; the latter, by the Defection of Portugal; and both laboured more to ranſack, and burn each other's Dominions, than to extiguiſh their own Fire. All Germany weltering in it's own Blood; and contributing to each others Deſtruction, that the poor Crown of Sweden might grow great out of their Ruins, and at their Charge. Denmark, and Poland being Adventurers in the ſame deſtructive Enterprizes. Holland, and the United Provinces wearied, and tired with their long, and chargeable War, how proſperous ſoever They were in it; and beginning to be more afraid of France, their Ally, than of Spain, their Enemy. Italy, every Year infeſted by the Arms of Spain, and France; which divided the Princes thereof into the ſeveral Factions.

Of all the Princes of Europe, the King of England alone ſeemed to be ſeated upon that pleaſant Promontory, that might ſafely view the tragick Sufferings of all his Neighbours about him, without any other Concernment, than what aroſe from his own princely Heart, and chriſtian Compaſſion, to ſee ſuch Deſolation wrought by the Pride, and Paſſion, and Ambition of private Perſons, ſupported by Princes, who knew not what themſelves would have. His three Kingdoms flouriſhing in entire Peace, and univerſal Plenty; in Danger of Nothing but their own Surfeits; and his Dominions every Day enlarged, by ſending out Colonies upon large, and fruitful Plantations; his ſtrong Fleets commanding all Seas; and the numerous Shipping of the Nation bringing the Trade of the World into his Ports; nor could it with unqueſtionable Security be carried any whither elſe; and all theſe Bleſſings enjoyed, under a Prince of the greateſt Clemency, and Juſtice, and of the greateſt Piety, and Devotion, and the moſt indulgent to his Subjects, and moſt ſolicitous for their Happineſs and Proſperity.

O fortunati nimium, bona ſi ſua nôrint!

In this bleſſed Conjuncture, when no other Prince thought he wanted any Thing, to compaſs what He moſt deſired to be poſſeſſed of, but the Affection and Friendſhip of the King of England; a ſmall, ſcarce diſcernable Cloud aroſe in the North; which was ſhortly after attended with ſuch a Storm, that never gave over raging, till it had ſhaken, and even rooted up the greateſt, and talleſt Cedars of the three Nations: blaſted all its Beauty, and Fruitfulneſs; brought its Strength to Decay, and its Glory to Reproach, and almoſt to Deſolation; by ſuch a Career, and Deluge of Wickedneſs, and Rebellion, as by not being enough foreſeen, or, in Truth, ſuſpected, could not be prevented.

Upon the Rebellion in Scotland, in the Year 1640, the King called a Parliament; which met according to Summons, upon the 3d of April. Mr. Hyde was choſen to ſerve for two Places; for the Borough of Wotton-Baſſet in the County of Wilts; and for the Borough of Shafteſbury, in the County of Dorſet; but made Choice to ſerve for his Neighbours of the former Place; and ſo a new Writ iſſued for the Choice of another Burgeſs for Shafteſbury.

Mr. Hyde choſen Member for Wotton-Baſſet.

The next Day after Mr. Pym had recapitulated the whole Series of the Grievances, and Miſcarriages, which had been in the State; Mr. Hyde told the Houſe, that "that worthy Gentleman had o-"mitted one Grievance, more heavy than (as He "thought) many of the others; which was, the "Earl Marſhal's Court: A Court newly erected, "without Colour, or Shadow of Law, which took "upon it to fine, and impriſon the King's Subjects; "and to give great Damages for Matters which the "Law gave no Damages for." He repeated a pleaſant Story of a Citizen, who being rudely treated, for more than his Fare came to, by a Waterman, who preſſing him, ſtill ſhewed his Creſt, or Badge upon his Coat, the Citizen bad him be gone with his Gooſe; whereas it was in Truth, a Swan, the Creſt of an Earl, whoſe Servant the Waterman was; whereupon the Citizen was called into the Marſhal's Court, and after a long, and chargeable Attendance, was, for the opprobrious diſhonouring the Earl's Creſt, by calling the Swan a Gooſe, fined, and impriſoned, till He had paid conſiderable Damages to the Lord, or at leaſt to the Waterman; which really undid the Citizen.

His firſt Speech in the Houſe of Commons.

He told them another Story as ridiculous, of a Gentleman, who owing his Taylor a long Time a good Sum of Money for Cloaths, and his Taylor coming one Day to his Chamber, with more than ordinary ordinary Importunity for his Debt, and not receiving any good Anſwer, threatened to arreſt him; upon which the Gentleman enraged, gave him very ill Words, called him baſe Fellow, and laid his Hands upon him, to thruſt him out of his Chamber; in this Struggle, and under this Provocation, Oppreſſion, and Reproach, the poor Taylor chanced to ſay, that He was as good a Man as the other; for which Words He was called into the Marſhal's Court; and for his Peace, was content to be ſatisfied his Debt, out of his own ill Manners; being compelled to releaſe all his other Demands in Lieu of Damages. The Caſe was known by many, and deteſted by all.

HE told them, that "there was an Appendant "to that Court, which He called the Pageantry of "it, the Heralds, who were as grievous to the Gen- "try, as the Court was to the People. He ſaid, "that ſure the Knights of that Houſe, when They "received that Honour from the King, though "They might think themſelves obliged, to live at "a higher Rate, yet They believed, that They "might die as good cheap as other Men; He told "them They could not, it would coſt them ten "Pounds more; and yet a Gentleman could not "die for Nothing." The Heralds had procured ſuch an Order from the Earl Marſhal, to force all Perſons to pay at their Funerals, ſuch ſeveral Sums, according to their ſeveral Degrees. He concluded with a Deſire, that when the Wiſdom of that Houſe provided Remedies againſt the other Grievances, it would likewiſe ſecure the Subject againſt this Exorbitance. This Repreſentation was very acceptable to the Houſe, both in Reſpect of the Matter, which was odious enough; and in Regard of the Perſon that uſurped that monſtrous Juriſdiction, who was in no Degree grateful to them; upon whom He that made the Motion, had not made the leaſt Reflection: The Modeſty of that Time not permitting the Mention of great Men, with any Reproach, until their Offences were firſt examined, and proved; and this being the firſt Part He had acted upon that Stage, brought him much Applauſe; and He was ever afterwards heard with great Benignity.

He endeavours to prevent the Diſſolution of the Parliament.

UPON the warm Debate in the Houſe of Commons, concerning the giving the King Money, Mr. Hyde obſerved by the ſeveral Diſcourſes of many of the Court, who were of near Admiſſion to the King, and Queen, and like to make probable Gueſſes, that They believed, the King would be ſo much diſpleaſed at the Proceedings of the Houſe, that He would diſſolve them; which He believed would prove the moſt fatal Reſolution could be taken. As ſoon as the Houſe was up, He went over to Lambeth, to the Archbiſhop; whom He found walking in his Garden, having received a full Account of all that had paſſed, from Perſons who had made more Haſte from the Houſe. He appeared ſad, and full of Thoughts; and calling the other to him, ſeemed willing to hear what He would ſay. He told him, "that He would not trouble him with "the Relation of any Thing that had paſſed, of "which He preſumed He had received a good Ac- "count; that his Buſineſs was only to inform him "of his own Fears and Apprehenſions; and the "Obſervations He had made upon the Diſcourſes "of ſome conſiderable Men of the Court; as if the "King might be wrought upon, becauſe there had "not been that Expedition uſed as He expected, "ſpeedily to diſſolve the Parliament. That He "came only to beſeech him to uſe all his Credit, "to prevent ſuch a deſperate Counſel, which would "produce great Miſchief to the King, and to the "Church: That He was confident the Houſe was "as well conſtituted and diſpoſed, as ever Houſe of "Commons was, or would be: That the Number "of the diſaffected to Church, or State, was very "ſmall; and though They might obſtruct for ſome "Time the quick reſolving upon what was fit, They "would never be able to pervert their good Incli- "nations, and Deſires to ſerve the King."

THE Archbiſhop heard him very patiently, and ſaid, He believed the King would be very angry at the Way of their Proceedings; for that in this Conjuncture, the delaying, and denying to do what He deſired, was the ſame Thing; and therefore He believed it probable that He would diſſolve them; without which He could not enter upon other Counſels. That for his own Part, He was reſolved to deliver no Opinion; but as He would not perſuade the Diſſolution, which might be attended by Conſequences He could not foreſee, ſo He had not ſo good an Opinion of their Affections to the King, or the Church, as to perſuade their longer ſitting, if the King were inclined to diſſolve them: As He actually did on the 4th, or 5th of May, not three Weeks after their firſt Meeting.

THE Temper, and Conſtitution of both Houſes of Parliament, which the King was forced to call ſhortly after, and met on the 3d of November 1640, was very different from the laſt: And They diſcovered not more Prejudice againſt any Man, than againſt Mr. Hyde; who was again returned to ſerve there, and whom They were ſorry to find amongſt them; as a Man They knew well to have great Affection for the Archbiſhop; and of unalterable Devotion to the Government of the Church; and therefore They firſt laboured to find ſome Defect in his Election; and then to irreconcile thoſe towards him, who They found had any Eſteem, or Kindneſs for him: But not finding the Succeſs in either, anſwerable to their Expectation, They lived fairly towards him; and endeavoured by ſeveral Applications, to gain Credit with him; who returned them their own Civilities; having had very particular Acquaintance with many of them, whom He as much endeavoured to preſerve from being prevailed upon.

He is again returned to ſerve in Parliament.

He procures the Suppreſſion of the Earl Marſhal's Court.

WITHIN few Days after their Meeting, He renewed the Motion He had made in the laſt Parliament, againſt the Marſhal's Court (though He knew the Earl Marſhal had gotten himſelf much into their Favour, by his Application, and ſome Promiſes He had made them at the Meeting at York; and principally by his declared Averſion, and Prejudice to the Earl of Strafford) and told them what extravagant Proceedings there had been in that Court, ſince the Diſſolution of the laſt Parliament; and that more Damages had been given there, by the ſole Judgment of the Lord Marſhal, for contumelious and reproachful Words, of which the Law took no Notice, in two Days, than had been given by all the Juries, in all the Courts in Weſtminſter Hall, in the whole Term, and the Days for Trial after it was ended. Upon which He got a Committee to be named, of which himſelf ſat in the Chair; and found that the firſt Precedent They had in all their Records, for that Form of Proceeding, which They had uſed, and for giving of Damages for Words, was but in the Year 1633; and the very Entrance upon this Inquiſition, put an End to that upſtart Court, which never preſumed to ſit afterwards; and ſo that Grievance was thoroughly aboliſhed. And to manifeſt how great an Impreſſion the Alarums of this Kind made upon the higheſt, and the proudeſt Natures, the very next Sunday after this Motion was made in the Houſe of Commons, the Earl Marſhal, ſeeing Mr. Hyde in the Cloſet at Whitehall, during the Time of the Sermon, He came with great Courteſy to him, thanked him for having treated his Perſon ſo civilly, when upon ſo juſt Reaſon He had found Fault with ſome of his Actions: Said, He believed He had been in the Wrong; but that He had been miſled by the Advice of Sir Harry Martin, and other Civilians, who were held Men of great Learning, and who aſſured him, that thoſe Proceedings were juſt, and lawful. He ſaid, They had gained well by it, but ſhould miſlead him no more: And concluded with great Profeſſions of Kindneſs, and Eſteem; and offered him all Offices in his Power; when in his Heart, He did him the Honour to deteſt, and hate him perfectly; as He profeſſed to all whom He truſted.

HIS Credit grew every Day in the Houſe, in Spite of all the Endeavours, which were uſed to leſſen it. And it being evident, that He had no Dependance upon the Court; and inſiſted wholly upon maintaining what the Law had eſtabliſhed, very many wiſe Men, and of Eſtate, and Reputation in the Kingdom (who obſerved well the crooked, and ambitious Deſigns of thoſe, who deſired to be thought to care only for the Good of their Country) adhered to him; and were willing to take Advice from him, how to prevent thoſe Miſeries, which were like to be brought upon the Kingdom: So that They who had cut out all the Work from the Beginning, and ſeldom met with any notable Contradiction, found themſelves now frequently diſappointed; and different Reſolutions taken, to what They had propoſed; which They imputed to his Activity.

HE was very much in the Buſineſs of the Houſe; the greateſt Chairmen in the Committees of the greateſt Moment; and very diligent in attending the Service both in the Houſe, and at Committees: For He had from the Beginning of the Parliament, laid aſide his Gown, and Practice, and wholly given himſelf up to the publick Buſineſs; which He ſaw ſo much concerned the Peace, and very Being of the Kingdom. He was in the Chair in that Committee which conſidered of the Illegality of the Court of York: And the other, that examined the Miſcarriages of the Judges, in the Caſe of Ship-Money, and in other Caſes of Judicatory, in their ſeveral Courts; and prepared Charges thereupon againſt them. He was in the Chair againſt the Marſhal's Court. In that Committee which was againſt the Court of York, which was proſecuted with great Paſſion, and took up many Weeks Debate: In that which concerned the Juriſdiction of the Lord Preſident, and Council, of the Marches of Wales; which likewiſe held a long Time, and was proſecuted with great Bitterneſs, and Animoſity: In which the Inhabitants of the four neighbour Counties of Salop, Worceſter, Hereford, and Gloceſter, and conſequently the Knights, and Burgeſſes which ſerved for the ſame, were paſſionately concerned to abſolve themſelves from the Burthen of that Juriſdiction; and all the Officers of that Court, and Council, whereof ſome were very great Men, and held Offices of great Value, laboured with equal Paſſion, and Concernment, to ſupport and maintain what was in Practice, and Poſſeſſion; and their Friends appeared accordingly.

He layt aſide his Gown, and gives himſelf wholly to publick Buſineſs.

HE was in the Chair in many Committees made upon private Complaints: Inſomuch as He was ſeldom in the Afternoon free from that Service in the Committees; as He was never abſent in Mornings from the Houſe: And He was often heard to mention one private Committee, in which He was put accidentally into the Chair, upon an Incloſure which had been made of great Waſtes, belonging to the Queen's Manors, without the Conſent of the Tenants, the Benefit whereof had been given by the Queen to a Servant of near Truſt; who forthwith ſold the Lands incloſed to the Earl of Manchester, Lord Privy Seal; who together with his Son Mandevil, were now moſt concerned to maintain the Incloſure; againſt which, as well the Inhabitants of other Manors, who claimed Common in thoſe Waſtes, as the Queen's Tenants of the ſame, made loud Complaints, as a great Oppreſſion, carried upon them with a very high Hand, and ſupported by Power.

The firſt Cauſe of Oliver Cromwell's Enmity to him.

THE Committee ſat in the Queen's Court; and Oliver Cromwell being one of them, appeared much concerned to countenance the Petitioners, who were numerous, together with their Witneſſes; the Lord Mandevil being likewiſe preſent as a Party, and by the Direction of the Committee, ſitting covered. Cromwell (who had never before been heard to ſpeak in the Houſe of Commons) ordered the Witneſſes, and Petitioners in the Method of the Proceeding; and ſeconded, and enlarged upon what They ſaid with great Paſſion; and the Witneſſes, and Perſons concerned, who were a very rude Kind of People, interrupted the Council, and Witneſſes on the other Side, with great Clamour, when they ſaid any Thing that did not pleaſe them; ſo that Mr. Hyde (whoſe Office it was to oblige Men of all Sorts to keep Order) was compelled to uſe ſome ſharp Reproofs, and ſome Threats, to reduce them to ſuch a Temper, that the Buſineſs might be quietly heard. Cromwell in great Fury reproached the Chairman for being partial, and that He diſcountenanced the Witneſſes by threatning them; the Other appealed to the Committee, which juſtified him, and declared, that He behaved himſelf as He ought to do; which more inflamed him, who was already too much angry. When upon any Mention of Matter of Fact, or the Proceeding before, and at the Incloſure, the Lord Mandevil deſired to be heard, and with great Modeſty related what had been done, or explained what had been ſaid, Mr. Cromwell did anſwer, and reply upon him, with ſo much Indecency, and Rudeneſs, and in Language, ſo contrary and offenſive, that every Man would have thought, that as their Natures, and their Manners were as oppoſite as it is poſſible, ſo their Intereſt could never have been the ſame. In the End, his whole Carriage was ſo tempeſtuous, and his Behaviour ſo inſolent, that the Chairman found himſelf obliged to reprehend him; and to tell him, if He proceeded in the ſame Manner, He would preſently adjourn the Committee; and the next Morning complain to the Houſe of him; which he never forgave; and took all Occaſions afterwards to purſue him with the utmoſt Malice and Revenge, to his Death.

WHEN Mr. Hyde ſat in the Chair, in the grand Committee of the Houſe, for the Extirpation of Epiſcopacy, all that Party made great Court to him; and the Houſe keeping thoſe diſorderly Hours, and ſeldom riſing till after four of the Clock in the Afternoon, They frequently importuned him to dine with them, at Mr. Pym's Lodging, which was at Sir Richard Manly's Houſe, in a little Court behind Weſtminſter Hall; where He, and Mr. Hambden, Sir Arthur Haſlerig, and two or three more, upon a Stock kept a Table, where They tranſacted much Buſineſs; and invited thither thoſe, of whoſe Converſion they had any Hope.

His Converſation with Nat. Fiennes.

ONE Day after Dinner, Nathaniel Fiennes, who that Day likewiſe dined there, aſked Mr. Hyde, whether He would ride into the Fields, and take a little Air, it being a fine Evening; which the other conſenting to, They ſent for their Horſes, and riding together in the Fields, between Weſtminſter and Chelſea, Mr. Fiennes aſked him, what it was that inclined him to adhere ſo paſſionately to the Church, which could not poſſibly be ſupported. He anſwered, that He could have no other Obligation than that of his own Conſcience, and his Rea-

Reaſon, that could move with him; for he had no Relation, or Dependance upon any Churchmen, that could diſpoſe him to it; that He could not conceive, how Religion could be preſerved without Biſhops; nor how the Government of the State could well ſubſiſt, if the Government of the Church were altered; and aſked him what Government They meant to introduce in its Place. To which He anſwered, that there would be Time enough to think of that; but aſſured him, and wiſhed him to remember what He ſaid, that if the King reſolved to defend the Biſhops, it would coſt the Kingdom much Blood; and would be the Occaſion of as ſharp a War, as had ever been in England: For that there was a great Number of good Men, who reſolved to loſe their Lives, before They would ever ſubmit to that Government. Which was the firſt poſitive Declaration He had ever heard from any particular Man of that Party; very few of them having at that Time that Reſolution, much leſs avowing it; and if They had, the Kingdom was in no Degree at that Time infected with that Poiſon, how much ſoever it was ſpread afterwards.

And with Harry Martin.

Who owns himſelf a Republican.

WITHIN two Days after this Diſcourſe from Mr. Fiennes, Mr. Hyde, walking between the Parliament Houſe, and Weſtminſter, in the Church-Yard met with Harry Martin, with whom he lived very familiarly; and ſpeaking together about the Proceedings of the Houſes, Martin told him, that He would undo himſelf by his adhering to the Court; to which He replied, that He had no Relation to the Court, and was only concerned to maintain the Government, and preſerve the Law: And then told him He could not conceive what He propoſed to himſelf, for He did not think him to be of the Opinion, or Nature with thoſe Men, who governed the Houſe; and aſked him, what He thought of ſuch, and ſuch Men; and He very frankly anſwered, that He thought them Knaves; and that when They had done as much as They intended to do, They ſhould be uſed as They had uſed others. The other preſſed him to ſay what he deſired; to which, after a little Pauſe, He very roundly anſwered, I do not think one Man wiſe enough to govern us all: Which was the firſt Word He had ever heard any Man ſpeak to that Purpoſe; and would without Doubt, if it had been then communicated, or attempted, been the moſt abhorred by the whole Nation, of any Deſign that could be mentioned; and yet it appears it had even ſo early entered into the Hearts of ſome deſperate Perſons; that Gentleman being at that Time poſſeſſed of a very great Fortune, and having great Credit in his Country.

Mr. Hyde is ſent for by the King.

WHILST Things were thus depending, one Morning, when there was a Conference with the Lords, and ſo the Houſe adjourned, Mr. Hyde being walking in the Houſe, Mr. Peircy; Brother to the Earl of Northumberland, being a Member of the Houſe, came to him, and told him, that the King would ſpeak with him, and would have him that Afternoon to come to him. He anſwered, He believed it was ſome Miſtake, for that He had not the Honour to be known to the King; and that there was another of the ſame Name, of the Houſe. Mr. Peircy aſſured him, He was the Man; and ſo it was agreed, that at ſuch an Hour in the Evening, He ſhould call on him at his Chamber; which he did, and was by him conducted into the Gallery, and ſo into the ſquare Room; where he ſtaid 'till the other went to the King; who in a very ſhort Time came thither, attended only by Mr. Peircy, who as ſoon as Mr. Hyde had kiſſed his Majeſty's Hand, withdrew.

The King's Diſcourſe with him.

THE King told him, "that He heard from all "Hands, how much He was beholden to him; and "that when all his Servants in the Houſe of Com- "mons either neglected his Service, or could not "appear uſefully in it, He took all Occaſions to do "him Service, for which He thought fit to give "him his own Thanks, and to aſſure him, that He "would remember it to his Advantage." He took Notice of his Affection to the Church, for which, He ſaid, "He thanked him more than for all the "reſt;" which the other acknowledged with the Duty that became him; and ſaid, "He was very "happy, that his Majeſty was pleaſed with what "He did; but if He had commanded him to have "withdrawn his Affection, and Reverence for the "Church, He would not have obeyed him;" which his Majeſty ſaid, made him love him the better. Then he diſcourſed of the Paſſion of the Houſe; and of the Bill then brought in againſt Epiſcopacy; and aſked him, "whether He thought They would "be able to carry it;" to which He anſwered, "He believed They could not, at leaſt, that it "would be very long firſt." "Nay (replied the "King) if you'll look to it, that They do not car- "ry it before I go for Scotland, which will be at "ſuch a Time, when the Armies ſhall be diſbanded, "I will undertake for the Church after that Time; "why then (ſaid the other) by the Grace of God, it "will not be in much Danger:" With which the King was well pleaſed; and diſmiſſed him with very gracious Expreſſions. And this was the firſt Introduction of him to the King's taking Notice of him.

AFTERWARDS in that Summer, during the Time of his Majeſty's Stay in Scotland, Mr. Secretary Nicholas (who then kept the Signet, though He was not ſworn Secretary till the King's Return) being very ſick, ſent to him, to deſire to ſpeak with him; whereupon He went to him to his Houſe in King's-ſtreet; and found him in his Bed: And the Buſineſs was wholly to ſhew him a Letter from the King to him, in which He writ to him, that He underſtood by ſeveral Hands, that he was very much beholden to Mr. Hyde, for the great Zeal he ſhewed to his Service; and therefore commanded him to ſpeak with him, and to let him know the Senſe He had of it; and that when He returned, He would let him know it himſelf.

HAVING now taken a View of him from his Birth; and through his whole Youth, and firſt Entrance into the Buſineſs of the World, in which He had great Succeſs, and Proſperity (and if the Calm, in which he was born, and laſted ſo long, had continued, no Man could with more Probability have promiſed himſelf better Fortune, in the Profeſſion to which he had dedicated himſelf) and having now brought him to be known to the King; and the Tempeſt that from the preſent foul Weather ſhortly after broke out, driving him from farther applying himſelf to, or proſecuting that Profeſſion; and the Parliament making ſome ſhort Receſs, during the King's being in Scotland; we will here conclude the firſt Part of his Life, and enter upon the ſecond; which will contain a more important Part; and in which we will mention no Particulars of that active Time, but ſuch in which He had a ſignal Part; leaving the reſt to the Hiſtory of thoſe great, and monſtrous Actions.

The LIFE of

EDWARD Earl of CLARENDON

From his Birth to the Reſtoration of the ROYAL FAMILY in 1660.

PART the SECOND.

Mr. Hyde draws up an Anſwer to the Parliament's Remonſtrance.

WHEN the Remonſtrance of the State of the Nation, and its particular Grievances, was (by Order of the Houſe of Commons) printed, Mr. Hyde, only to give Vent to his own Indignation, and without the leaſt Purpoſe of communicating it, or that any Uſe ſhould be made of it, had drawn ſuch a full Anſwer to it, as the Subject would have enabled any Man to have done, who had thought of it: and the Lord Digby, who had much Converſation, and Friendſhip with him, coming accidentally and ſuddenly into the Room, where He was alone amongſt his Books and Papers; conferring together of the extravagant Proceedings of the Parliament, He, upon the Familiarity that was between them, and upon the Argument that was then between them, read the Anſwer to him which He had prepared to the Remonſtrance; with which He ſeemed much pleaſed, and deſired him that He would permit it to be made Uſe of by the King, and that He might ſhew it to his Majeſty; who found it abſolutely neceſſary to publiſh ſome Anſwer in his own Name to that Remonſtrance, which had ſo much poiſoned the Hearts of the People; and that his Majeſty was endeavouring to procure ſuch an Anſwer to be drawn. The other expreſly, and poſitively refuſed to give it him; or that any Uſe ſhould be made of it; and reproached him for propoſing a Thing to him, which might prove ruinous to him, if the Houſe ſhould have the leaſt Imagination, that He exerciſed himſelf in ſuch Offices: with which Anſwer He ſeemed ſatisfied, and departed: no other Perſon having ſeen it but the Lord Falkland, from whom Nothing was ever concealed.

WITHIN few Days after, the Lord Digby, with whom the King adviſed in the Buſineſs of the Parliament without Reſerve, came again to him; and after ſome Apologies, told him freely, that very many had been with the King, deſiring him that He would take Care that ſome Anſwer might be publiſhed to that Remonſtrance; which had already done much Harm, and would do much more if it were not anſwered; and that the King had ſpoken to him; upon which He had confeſſed that He had ſeen an Anſwer; that pleaſed him very well; but could not prevail with the Author of it to ſuffer it to be made Uſe of; and told him who it was: whereupon the King ſeemed to wonder very much, that a Perſon who had appeared ſo publickly in Defence of his Service, ſhould be ſo wary of aſſiſting him in private: and after many Expreſſions of Grace towards that Gentleman, his Majeſty had commanded him to come in his Name to him; and to conjure him to ſend that Paper to him; and to give him his Royal Word, that no Perſon living ſhould know that He had the leaſt Hand in it; ſo that no Danger ſhould accrue to him thereby.

MR. HYDE, though He was very unſatisfied with what the Lord Digby had done (whoſe Affection to him He did not in any Degree make Queſtion of, but did not like his over Activity, to which his reſtleſs Fancy always diſpoſed him; and as He doubted not, that himſelf had given the Occaſion to the King to ſend thoſe Commands, ſo he had likewiſe enlarged thoſe Commands, as He believed, in ſuch a Manner as He thought might moſt oblige him) yet upon the real Conſideration, that it might do the King much Service, He did without Delay deliver the Papers: inſiſting upon the Promiſe of Secrecy, and likewiſe, that his Majeſty would not publiſh, without firſt communicating it to his Council, and as done with their Advice. And to that Purpoſe He affixed that Title to it, before He delivered the Papers out of his Hands; believing that as it would be more for the King's Service to carry ſuch an Authority in the Front of it, as The King's Anſwer with the Advice of his Council; ſo it could not be refuſed by them, and yet might engage them in ſome Diſpleaſure with the Houſe of Commons, which probably might be offended at it. The King was very punctual in doing what was deſired; and cauſed it to be read at a full Council; where many of the Lords commended it very much, and none ſpake againſt it; and ſo it was publiſhed and printed: and it was very apparent to all Men, that the King's Service was very much advanced by it: and it was not more evident to any, than to the Houſe of Commons: who knew not how to make any Expoſtulation upon it, it being in the King's own Name, and publiſhed with the Advice of his Privy Council; ſo that all They could do, was to endeavour to diſcover who was the Penner of it; to which Diſcovery They were moſt intent by all their ſecret Friends in Court; who found Means to diſcover moſt other Secrets to them, but in this could do them no Service.

Which by the King's Command is printed.

As ſoon as the Lord Falkland, and Sir John Colepepper were called to the Privy Council, the King ſent for Mr. Hyde to him, who had not ſeen his Majeſty from the Time He had been preſented by Mr. Peircy. He commanded the Lord Digby to bring him when it was Night to the Queen's back Stairs; and as ſoon as He was there, both King and Queen came into the Room; and when He had kiſſed their Hands, and the Lord Digby was withdrawn, the King told him "He was much beholden to him for "many good Services; and that now He had pre"ferred two of his Friends, it was Time to give "him ſome Teſtimony of his Favour; and there"fore he had ſent to him to tell him, that He in"tended to make him Solicitor-General, in the "Place of him who had ſerved him ſo ill." Mr. Hyde ſuddenly anſwered, "God forbid!" With which the King ſeeming ſurprized, ſaid "why God "forbid!" The other replied, "it was in no De"gree fit at this Time that He ſhould remove the "other; and if He were removed, himſelf was in "no Degree fit for it." The Queen ſaid, "He "ought not to ſuffer for his Modeſty: She had "heard Men who could judge well, ſay, that He "was as fit for it as the other." Mr. Hyde ſaid "that was an Argument that Gentleman thought "the other not fit for it, not that He believed him "fit; which in Truth He ſaid He was not. That "it might be, that when the Place was actually "void,

Mr. Hyde declines the Office of Solicitor General.

"void, the King might have filled it better with "another Man, than with Mr. St. John; whoſe Parts "were not above many others; and his Affections "were below moſt Mens: But now that He was "inveſted in that Office, it was not a good Con-"juncture to remove him; and when it ſhould be, "He did humbly adviſe his Majeſty to make Choice "of the ableſt Man of the Profeſſion, whoſe Affec-"tions were clear; by whom He might indeed "have great Benefit; whereas himſelf was young, "and without any of that Learning, or Experience, "which might make him capable of that great "Truſt." The Queen ſaying again this was his Modeſty, He replied, "Madam, when you know "me better, you will not find me ſo modeſt a Man, "but that I hope by your Majeſty's Favour in due "Time to be made a better Man, than I am at "preſent; but if you believe that I know any Thing "of the Diſpoſition of the preſent Time, or of "what may conduce to the King's Service, I pray "believe, that though the Solicitor will never do "much Service, He will be able to do much more "Miſchief if He be removed." The King at the ſame Time reſolved to remove another Officer, who did diſſerve him notoriouſly, and to prefer Mr. Hyde to that Place; with which their gracious Intention both their Majeſties acquainted him; but He poſitively refuſed it; and aſſured both their Majeſties, that He ſhould be able to do much more Service in the Condition He was in.

He is entruſted with the Conduct of the King's Affairs in Parliament.

BEFORE the King left Whitehall He renewed his Commands to the three Perſons mentioned before, the Lord Viſcount Falkland, Sir John Colepepper, and Mr. Hyde, to meet conſtantly together, and conſult upon his Affairs; and conduct them the beſt Way They could in the Parliament; and to give him conſtant Advice what He was to do; without which He declared again very ſolemnly He would make no Step in the Parliament. Two of them were obliged by their Offices and Relations, and the other by his Duty, and Inclination, to give him all Satiſfaction; notwithſtanding the Diſcouragement They had ſo lately received, in the King's going to the Houſe to demand the five Members, without ever communicating his Intention to them; and which had made a deep Impreſſion upon them. And ſo They met every Night late together; and communicated their Obſervation, and Intelligence of the Day; and ſo agreed what was to be done, or attempted the next; there being very many Perſons of Condition and Intereſt in the Houſe, who would follow their Advice, and aſſiſt in any Thing They deſired. And becauſe Mr. Hyde had larger Accommodation, in the Houſe where He lived in Weſtminſter, than either of the other had, the Meetings at Night were for the moſt Part with him; and after their Deliberation together, what was to be put in Writing was always committed to Mr. Hyde; and when the King had left the Town, He writ as freely to the King as either of the other did; and ſometimes when They would be excuſed, He went to him in great Secret.

HE had been from the Beginning very unbeloved by all the governing Party; and though They took ſome Pains at firſt to win him, yet their Hope of that was quickly deſperate; and from the Night of the Proteſtation, He was as much in their Deteſtation as any Man; and the more, that They could take no Advantage againſt him: and though They had a better Opinion of his Diſcretion, than to believe He had any Share in the Advice of the late Proceedings, yet They were very willing that others ſhould believe it; and made all the Infuſions They could to that Purpoſe amongſt thoſe, who took their Opinions from them; towards which his known Friendſhip with the Lord Digby was an Argument very prevalent; and then his oppoſing the Votes upon their Privilege, had inflamed them beyond their Temper; inſomuch as Mr. Hambden told him one Day, that the Trouble that had lately befallen them, had been attended with that Benefit, that They knew who were their Friends: and the other offering to ſpeak upon the Point of Privilege, and how monſtrous a Thing it was to make a Vote ſo contrary to the known Law; He replied very ſnappiſhly, "that He well knew He had a Mind They "ſhould be all in Priſon," and ſo departed without ſtaying for an Anſwer. Then They imputed to him the diſpoſing the Lord Falkland to ſerve the Court; and the Court to receive his Service; and from the Time that He, and Colepepper were called to the Council, They equally were enraged againſt both; and now, when They had diſcovered the Place of the nightly Meetings, that a Secretary of State, and a Chancellor of the Exchequer, every Day went to the Lodging of a private Perſon, who ought to attend them, They believed it a Condeſcenſion that had ſome other Foundation than mere Civility; yet They could not diſcover any Thing againſt them, which they thought fit to offer in Publick.

IT is not amiſs in this Place to ſay ſomewhat of thoſe three Perſons, who had from that Time ſo great a Part in the Buſineſs that was upon the Stage; and did in a ſhort Time raiſe the Reputation of the King, and of his Cauſe, to a very great Degree; and who, though They were well united in the Oppoſition of all the ill Deſigns againſt the Crown; and concurred in the publick Service with neceſſary, and mutual Civilities towards each other; yet their Principles, and Conſtitutions were very different; and the Lord Falkland, and Mr. Hyde (between whom, as is ſaid before, the Friendſhip was moſt entire) had never had the leaſt Acquaintance with Sir John Colepepper, before the Parliament; and finding themſelves often of one Opinion, grew into ſome Converſation; and being after united in the King's Truſt, they rarely conferred but in the Agitation of Buſineſs; their Natures being in nothing like.

Some Account of the Temper and Principles of Lord Falkland.

THE Lord Falkland, though He was a Man of a chearful Converſation, was of a ſevere Nature, and a Lover of Virtue; yet He had great Eſteem for all Men of great Parts, though They applied them to ill Purpoſes. He was ſo great an Enemy to all Diſſimulation, that he choſe ſometimes the other Extreme, when it was not requiſite. He had not the Court in great Reverence; and had a preſaging Spirit that the King would fall into great Misfortune: and often ſaid to his Friend, that He choſe to ſerve the King, becauſe Honeſty obliged him to it; but that He foreſaw his own Ruin by doing it. He had a better Opinion of the Church of England, and the Religion of it, than of any other Church and Religion; and had extraordinary Kindneſs for very many Churchmen: and if He could have helped, or prevented it, there ſhould have been no Attempts againſt it. But He had in his own Judgment ſuch a Latitude in Opinion, that He did not believe any Part of the Order, or Government of it, to be ſo eſſentially neceſſary to Religion, but that it might be parted with, and altered, for a notable publick Benefit, or Convenience: and that the Crown itſelf ought to gratify the People, in yielding to many Things; and to part with ſome Power, rather than to run the Hazards, which would attend the Refuſal. But He was ſwayed in this by a Belief, that the King would in the End be prevailed with to yield to what was preſſed; and this Opinion wrought too much upon too many.

ALBEIT He had the greateſt Compliance with the Weakneſs, and even the Humour of other Men, when there could be no Suſpicion of Flattery; and the greateſt Addreſs to inform, and reform them; yet towards the King, who many Times obſtinately ly adhered to many Concluſions, which did not naturally reſult from good Premiſes, and did love to argue many Things, to which He would not ſo poſitively adhere, He did not practiſe that Condeſcenſion; but contradicted him with more Bluntneſs, and by ſharp Sentences; and in ſome Particulars (as of the Church) to which the King was in Conſcience moſt devoted: and of this his Majeſty often complained; and cared leſs to confer with him in private, and was leſs perſuaded by him, than his Affairs, and the other's great Parts, and Wiſdom would have required: though He had not a better Opinion of any Man's Sincerity, or Fidelity towards him.

Of Sir John Colepepper.

SIR John Colepepper had ſpent ſome Years of his Youth in foreign Parts, and eſpecially in Armies: where He had ſeen good Service, and very well obſerved it; and might have made a very good Officer, if He had intended it. He was of a rough Nature; a hot Head; and of great Courage; which had engaged him in many Quarrels, and Duels; wherein He ſtill behaved himſelf very ſignally. He had in a very good Seaſon, and after a ſmall Waſte of his Fortune, retired from that Courſe of Life, and married, and betook himſelf to a Country Life; and ſtudied the Buſineſs of the Country, and the Concernments of it, in which He was very well verſed; and being a Man of Sharpneſs of Parts, and Volubility of Language, He was frequently made Choice of to appear at the Council-Board, in thoſe Matters which related to the Country: in the managing whereof, his Abilities were well taken Notice of. His Eſtate was very moderate, and his uſual Expenſe exceeded it not; not being delighted with Delicacies of any Nature, or indeed ever acquainted with them. He had Infirmities, which ſometimes made a Noiſe; but his Parts, and Abilities made him very acceptable to his Neighbours, and to thoſe who were moſt conſiderable in their Eſtates, and moſt popular; ſo that with very little Oppoſition, He had been choſen to be Knight of that great County Kent for the Parliament; where He quickly made himſelf to be taken Notice of. He was proud, and ambitious, and very much diſpoſed to improve his Fortune; which He knew well how to do, by Induſtry, and Thrift, without ſtooping to any corrupt Ways, to which He was not inclined.

HE did not love the Perſons of many of thoſe who were the violent Managers; and leſs their Deſigns: and therefore He no ſooner knew that He was well ſpoken of at Court, but He expoſed himſelf to the Invitation, and heartily embraced that Intereſt: and when He came thither, He might very well be thought a Man of no very good Breeding; having never ſacrificed to the Muſes, or converſed in any polite Company. He was warm, and poſitive in Debates; and of preſent Fancy to object, and find Fault with what was propoſed; and indeed would take any Argument in Pieces, and expoſe it excellently to a full View; and leave Nothing to Chance, or Accident, without making it foreſeen; but after that, knew not ſo well what to judge, and determine; and was ſo irreſolute, and had a Fancy ſo perpetually working, that after a Concluſion made, He would the next Day, in the Execution of it, and ſometimes after, raiſe new Doubts, and make new Objections; which always occaſioned Trouble; and ſometimes produced Inconvenience.

IN Matters of Religion, He was in his Judgment very indifferent; but more inclined to what was eſtabliſhed, to avoid the Accidents which commonly attend a Change, without any Motives from his Conſcience; which yet He kept to himſelf; and was well content to have it believed that the Activity proceeded from thence. He had, with all this Uncourtlineſs (for ſure no Man leſs appeared a Courtier) and Ungracefulneſs in his Mein, and Motion, a wonderful Inſinuation and Addreſs into the Acceptation, and Confidence of the King, and Queen; and Flattery being a Weed not ſo natural to the Air, and Soil of the Country, where He had wholly lived, He was believed to ſpeak with all Plainneſs and Sincerity; when no Man more complied with thoſe Infirmities they both had; and by that Compliance prevailed often over them.

HE had a very tragical Way in expreſſing himſelf, to raiſe the Fears and Apprehenſions of thoſe, who were naturally apprehenſive of Dangers: and by this Means He prevailed marvellouſly with the Queen, in thoſe Matters to which She was moſt averſe; by repreſenting Things as diſmally to her as He could well do: and on the other Hand, to the King (who was naturally very Sanguine) He was full of Compliance; cheriſhed all his Hopes, and Imaginations; and raiſed and improved thoſe Hopes very frequently by Expedients very unagreeable to the End propoſed. He was then (as was ſaid before) very poſitive in his Concluſions: as if He did not propoſe a Thing that might come to paſs, but what infallibly muſt be ſo; which was a Temper the King could not contend with; and did ſo much ſuſpect himſelf (which was his greateſt Infirmity, and the chief Ground of all his Sufferings) that He did believe a Man of whom He thought very well, did know every Thing that He confidently inſiſted upon. But his greateſt Advantage was (beſides his Diligence in ſpeaking as often as He could with the King, and Queen, and always with the Queen, upon any important Counſel) that He had an entire Confidence and Friendſhip with Mr. John Aſhburnham, whom the King loved, and truſted very much; and who always imprinted that Advice in the King's Mind, which the other had infuſed; and being a Member of the Houſe, was always ready to report the Service He did his Majeſty there, as advantageouſly as the Buſineſs would bear.

Of Mr. Hyde.

MR. Hyde was in his Nature and Diſpoſition, different from both the other; which never begot the leaſt Diſagreement between the Lord Falkland, and him. He was of a very chearful, and open Nature, without any Diſſimulation; and delivered his Opinion of Things or Perſons, where it was convenient, without Reſerve, or Diſguiſe; and was at leaſt tenacious enough of his Opinion, and never departed from it out of Compliance with any Man. He had a very particular Devotion and Paſſion for the Perſon of the King; and did believe him the moſt, and the beſt Chriſtian in the World. He had a moſt zealous Eſteem and Reverence for the Conſtitution of the Government; and believed it ſo equally poiſed, that if the leaſt Branch of the Prerogative was torn off, or parted with, the Subject ſuffered by it, and that his Right was impaired: and He was as much troubled when the Crown exceeded it's juſt Limits, and thought it's Prerogative hurt by it: and therefore not only never conſented to any Diminution of the King's Authority, but always wiſhed that the King would not conſent to it, with what Importunity or Impetuoſity ſoever it was deſired and preſſed.

HE had taken more Pains than ſuch Men uſe to do, in the Examination of Religion; having always converſed with thoſe of different Opinions with all Freedom, and Affection; and had very much Kindneſs and Eſteem for many, who were in no Degree of his own Judgment; and upon all this, He did really believe the Church of England the moſt exactly formed and framed for the Encouragement and Advancement of Learning, and Piety, and for the Preſervation of Peace, of any Church in the World: That the taking away any of it's Revenue, and applying it to ſecular Uſes, was Robbery, and notorious Sacrilege; and that the diminiſhing the Luſtre it had, and had always had in the Government, by removing the Biſhops out of the Houſe of Peers, was a Violation of Juſtice; the removing a Land-mark; and the ſhaking the very Foundation of Government; and therefore He always oppoſed, upon the Impulſion of Conſcience, all Mutations in the Church; and did always believe, let the Seaſon, or the Circumſtances be what it would, that any Compliance was pernicious: And that a peremptory, and obſtinate Refuſal, that might put Men in Deſpair of what They laboured for, and take away all Hope of obtaining what They deſired, would reconcile more Perſons to the Government, than the gratifying them in Part; which only whetted their Appetite to deſire more, and their Confidence in demanding it.

Luſtre

THOUGH He was of a Complexion and Humour very far from Deſpair; yet He did believe the King would be oppreſſed by that Party which then governed; and that They who followed, and ſerved him would be deſtroyed; ſo that it was not Ambition of Power, or Wealth, that engaged him to embark in ſo very hazardous an Imployment; but abſtractly the Conſideration of his Duty; and He often uſed to apply thoſe Words of Cicero, to himſelf, Mea Ætas incidit in id Bellum, cujus altera Pars Sceleris nimium habuit, altera Felicitatis parum. It is very probable, that if his Acceſs at that Time had been as frequent to the King, as Sir John Colepepper's was, or the Lord Falkland's might have been, ſome Things might have been left undone, the doing whereof brought much Prejudice to the King; for all his Principles were much more agreeable to his Majeſty's own Judgment, than thoſe of either of the other; and what He ſaid was of equal Authority with him; and when any Advice was given by either of the other, the King uſually aſked, "whether Ned Hyde were of that Opinion;" and They always very ingenuouſly confeſſed, that He was not: But his having no Relation of Service, and ſo no Pretence to be ſeen often at Court; and the great Jealouſy that was entertained towards him, made it neceſſary to him to repair only in the Dark to the King upon emergent Occaſions, and leave the Reſt to be imparted by the other two: and the Differences in their Natures, and Opinions never produced any Diſunion between them in thoſe Councils which concerned the Conduct of the King's Service; but They proceeded with great Unanimity; and very manifeſtly much advanced the King's Buſineſs, from the very low State it was in, when They were firſt truſted; the other two having always much Deference to the Lord Falkland, who allayed their Paſſions; to which They were both enough inclined.

WHEN the two Bills were ſent to the King, for the granting the Militia, and the removing the Biſhops out of the Houſe of Peers, moſt Men did believe that the King would never give his Aſſent to either of theſe two; though very many had concurred in them for no other Reaſon, than becauſe They were aſſured He would not refuſe; and others upon Confidence that He would; and therefore would not render themſelves obnoxious by oppoſing them. Upon all which the Queen continued her Reſolution; and haſtened her Journey that She might be out of the Way, and thereby the King might the more reſolutely reject thoſe Bills, which He intended to do; and the Houſes the more importunately preſſed the Diſpatch of the Bills, as ſoon as the Day was appointed for the Queen's beginning her Journey from Windſor towards Dover.

IN this Perplexity, when nothing was ſo neceſſary as the moſt obſtinate Reſolution, Sir John Colepepper, who was naturally inclined to Expedients; and in difficult Caſes, that is, Caſes made difficult by the Perverſeneſs of ſupercilious Contenders, to Compoſition, much deſired, that the King would paſs that againſt the Biſhops, and abſolutely reject the other; which He did in Truth believe would ſatisfy ſo many, that thoſe that remained unſatisfied would not have Credit enough, to give any further Diſturbance; and in his own Judgment, as hath been ſaid before, He thought the Matter of little Importance; but He knew that Argument would make no other Impreſſion upon the King, than to the Diſadvantage of the Arguer; and if He had thought himſelf obliged to have enacted one, He would have choſen to have paſſed that for the Militia, rather than the other; He urged therefore to the King, no other Perſon preſent, the Neceſſity of giving the Parliament Satisfaction in one of thoſe Bills; and that there were more who would be ſatisfied with that concerning the Biſhops, than with the other concerning the Militia; and therefore it would be beſt to gratify the major Part. Then He expoſed the dreadful Conſequences which would attend the yielding in the Point of the Militia; as if it would be the next Day in their Power to depoſe him; and all the tragical Effects of granting that Authority. He ſeemed in no Degree to undervalue the Miſchief of conſenting to the Bill againſt the Biſhops; yet that it would be attended with that preſent Benefit, that the Church would be free from farther Apprehenſion; and that this Degradation would ſecure the Function, and the Revenue; and that when theſe Jealouſies, and Miſunderſtandings ſhould be once compoſed, that Bill would be eaſily repealed, by the Experience how much the Government was hurt by it; and whilſt the Sword remained in the King's own Hand, there would be no Attempt to make farther Alterations. The King aſked him, whether Ned Hyde was of that Mind; to which He anſwered, He was not, nor did wiſh that either of the Bills ſhould be paſſed, which He thought as the Time was, could not be a reaſonable Judgment; the King ſaid, it was his; and that He would run the Hazard.

WHEN He found He could not prevail there, He went to the Queen; and repeated all the Arguments He had uſed to the King, with his uſual Vehemence; and added, that He exceedingly apprehended that by ſome Means or other, upon this Refuſal of the King's, her Majeſty's Journey would be ſtopped; and that She would not be ſuffered to tranſport herſelf out of the Kingdom; and therefore He heartily wiſhed that She would ſo uſe her Credit with the King, that He might paſs that Act concerning the Biſhops, which He ſaid would lay ſuch an Obligation upon both Houſes, as would redound to her Majeſty's Advantage. The Queen was ſo terrified with the Apprehenſion of her being hindered from purſuing her Purpoſe, that She gave not over her Importunity with the King, till She had prevailed with him; and ſo that Bill for removing the Biſhops out of the Houſe of Peers was paſſed by Commiſſion; when both their Majeſties were upon their Way, and in their Journey to Dover.

Who is prevailed on by the Queen to do ſo.

NOTHING that is here ſaid muſt reflect upon the Memory of Sir John Colepepper, as if He were corrupted in his Affections to the Church, or gave this Advice to gratify and pleaſe other Men, or for any particular Advantage to himſelf, of all which He was very innocent. It is ſaid before, that in his Judgment He looked upon the Thing as what might be conſcientiouſly conſented to; and then his real Apprehenſion of Danger, and Miſchief to the King (to whom He bore all poſſible Fidelity) by refuſing it, ſo far wrought upon his warm Conſtitution, that He did really believe it to be his Duty to be ſolicitous to the vehement Degree He was. But He quickly found He had been deceived, at leaſt in the Imagination, that the conſenting to that one Bill would at all allay their Paſſion. They were on the contrary ſo far from being pleaſed with it, that They immediately betook themſelves to enquire, "who the evil Counſellors were, who diſſuaded his "Majeſty from conſenting to the other concerning "the Militia;" which was ſo neceſſary to all their Purpoſes: And forthwith ſent ſome of their Meſſengers to the King, whilſt He ſtaid at Dover, to complain of ſuch evil Counſel; and to uſe all Importunity, that He would paſs it, as a Matter of abſolute Neceſſity for the Peace, and Security of the Kingdom; and for the carrying on the Service for ſuppreſſing the Rebellion in Ireland; with many new Expreſſions "of "the Preſumption of thoſe malignant Perſons, who "gave his Majeſty ſuch Advice," and with Boldneſs enough, that the King ſhould prefer ſuch Advice, before the Wiſdom of the Parliament.

The Effect of this Condeſcenſion on the ſeveral Parties.

THEY who hated the Biſhops moſt, and were glad that They were rid of the Oppoſition They gave them in all their Demands, ſeemed not at all contented; but enlarged exceedingly upon the Miſchief, in not granting the Militia. And no Doubt there were many the leſs pleaſed with the paſſing the other, in Doubt, that They ſhould thereby loſe the Aſſiſtance of very many towards the utter Extirpation of Epiſcopacy, and the Diſpoſal of all Church Lands, upon which their Hearts were ſet; and who would with the more Choler have concurred with them, if that Bill, as well as the other, had been rejected; and therefore They rather wiſhed They had the other, which They knew would bring all their Ends to paſs. They who loved the Church, and were afraid of ſo great an Alteration in the Frame and Conſtitution of Parliament, as the utter taking away of one of the Three Eſtates, of which the Parliament is compounded, were infinitely provoked; and lamented the paſſing that Act, as an Introduction to the entire Deſtruction of the Government of the Church, and to the Alteration of the Religion of the Kingdom: And very many who more conſidered the Policy, than the Juſtice, and Piety of the State, did ever after believe, that being removed out of the Parliament, the preſerving them in the Kingdom, was not worth any notable Contention. Then they looked upon the King's Condeſcenſion in this Particular, in a Subject that all Men knew had a wonderful Influence upon his Conſcience, as He often took Occaſion to profeſs, as a Manifeſtation, that he would not be conſtant in retaining, and denying any Thing that ſhould be impetuouſly, and fiercely demanded; which as it exceedingly confirmed thoſe, who were engaged in that Party; ſo it abated the Courage of too many, who had always oppoſed them, and heartily deteſted their Proceedings; and made them more remiſs in their Attendance at the Houſe; and leſs ſolicitous for any Thing that was done there: Who by Degrees firſt became a neutral Party, believing They ſhould be ſafe, in angering no Body; and When They afterwards found no Security in that Indifferency, They adhered to thoſe, who They ſaw had the beſt Succeſs; and ſo went Sharers with them in their Future Attempts, according to their ſeveral Tempers, and Inclinations.

THE Benefit that would redound to the King from not paſſing the other Bill of the Militia, more than avoiding the Infamy of conſenting to it, was not evident to diſcerning Men; for They foreſaw that They would quickly wreſt it out of his Hands without his Conſent; and that the Reputation of the Parliament was ſo great, that whatſoever the two Houſes (which the People looked upon as the Parliament) ſhould concur in, and enjoin to be done, the People would look upon as Law, and obſerve it accordingly; ſo that when by the Removal of ſo many Voices out of the Houſe of Peers, as the Biſhops made, who were always firm to the Crown, and Government, the Houſe of Commons found a Concurrence from the Lords, in all They propoſed, their joint Determination would find Obedience, for the moſt Part, from the People: Whom there were all Endeavours uſed to corrupt, and poſſeſs, by preſently printing, and cauſing to be read in Churches, all their Meſſages, and Petitions to the King; that they might ſee all their Concernments were for the Good of the Kingdom, and Preſervation of the People.

WHEN the King accompanied the Queen to Dover, where they expected a Wind many Days, He ſent the Prince, under his new Governour, the Marquis of Hertford, to Richmond; that there might be no Room for the Jealouſy, that the Prince ſhould be tranſported beyond the Seas; which had been infuſed into the Minds of many; and would have made a great Noiſe, if He had waited upon his Mother to Dover: But as ſoon as the Wind appeared hopeful for her Majeſty's Embarkation, the King ſent an Expreſs to Richmond, that the Prince ſhould attend his Majeſty at Greenwich, the Saturday following: The Marquis being at that Time very much indiſpoſed by a Defluction upon his Eyes, and a Catarrh. The Parliament being preſently informed, as they had Spies in all Places, of this Direction, and there being yet no Certainty of the Queen's being embarked, was much troubled; and reſolved to ſend to his Majeſty, by Members of both Houſes, to deſire that the Prince might not remove from Richmond, at leaſt till the Marquis recovered Health enough to be able to attend him; and at the ſame Time ſent an expreſs Order to the Marquis, that He ſhould not ſuffer the Prince to go from thence, till He himſelf ſhould be able to go with him.

The King ſends for the Prince to Greenwich.

THEY appointed one Lord, and two Commoners to carry the Meſſage to the King, whom They believed to be ſtill at Dover; and Mr. Hyde coming accidentally into the Houſe, when the Matter was in Debate, they appointed him to be one of the Meſſengers; which no Excuſes could free him from, for They did not intend it as a Favour to him; ſo that They were obliged preſently to begin their Journey; and that Night They went to Graveſend. The next Day They were fully informed of the Queen's being gone to Sea; and that the King would be that Night at Canterbury; whither the Meſſengers made what Haſte they could; and found his Majeſty there, with a very little Court, moſt of his Servants having Leave to go before to London, the better to provide themſelves for a farther Journey. When They read their Meſſage to the King, in the Hearing whereof He ſhewed no Satisfaction, He appointed them to attend him after He had ſupped, and They ſhould receive their Anſwer: And accordingly about nine of the Clock He cauſed it to be read, and delivered it to them; taking no Notice of Mr. Hyde as if he had been known to him. That Meſſenger who was a Member of the Houſe of Peers, received it from his Majeſty, as of Right he ought to do, that it might be firſt reported to that Houſe.

Mr. Hyde is ſent to the King on that Occaſion.

MR. Hyde was very much troubled when He heard the Anſwer read; for it had much Sharpneſs in it, which at that Time could only provoke them: So without taking any Notice of it to his Companions, He pretended to them only to be very weary, and deſirous to go to Bed, and bade them good Night; having the Conveniency offered him by the Lord Grandiſon (his familiar Friend) to lodge with him in a Houſe next the Court: And ſo the other two Meſſengers making Haſte to find ſome Lodging in an Inn; He ſent the Lord Grandiſon to the Duke

Duke of Richmond, to desire the King that He might speak with him before he went into his Bed. The King was half undressed, yet said that He would stay for him, and bade that he should make Haste to the back Stairs; and as soon as He came thither, the Duke went in to the King, who immediately came out in his Night Dress; and the Duke having before sent all other Servants from thence, retired likewise himself.

HE told the King that "He was sorry that his "Majesty had expressed so much Displeasure in his "Answer; which could produce no Good, and "might do Harm; and therefore He desired He "would call for it, and alter some Expressions;" which his Majesty was not inclined to do; enlarging himself with much Sharpness upon the Insolence of the Message, and of the Order They had sent to the Marquis of Hertford: And seemed to apprehend that the Prince would not be suffered to attend him at Greenwich; the Thought whereof had caused that Warmth in him. It was now Friday Night, and his Majesty resolved the next Night to be at Greenwich; and to stay there all Sunday, and then to pursue his former Resolutions: Upon which Mr. Hyde told him, "that he hoped the Prince would "be at Greenwich as soon as He, and then that "Point would be cleared; that They could not re-"port his Message to the Parliament till Monday "Morning; and that They might well attend upon "his Majesty again on Sunday, and receive his Plea-"sure; and at that Time the Lord Falkland, and "Sir John Colepepper would be likewise present; "when his Majesty might take what Resolution "He pleased in that Matter; and therefore He be-"sought his Majesty that he would presently send "a Servant to the other two Messengers, at such an "Inn for the Answer He had delivered to them, "of which He would farther consider when He "came to Greenwich; where He commanded them "to attend him on Sunday, and that He would dis-"patch them soon enough for them to be at London "that Night." All which his Majesty was pleased to consent to, and immediately sent a Gentleman to them for the Paper, with that Injunction; and then sent it by the Lord Grandison the same Night to Mr. Hyde, whom He had commanded to attend him on Sunday Morning, saying He had very much to say to him.

On whom he prevails to alter his Answer to the Parliament.

WHEN his Majesty came to Greenwich, He found the Prince there with his Governour, who though indisposed in his Health, without returning any Answer to the Parliament, brought the Prince very early from Richmond to Greenwich; with which the King was very much pleased, and in very good Humour. And the next Morning when Mr Hyde came to Court (to whom his Companions had told, that the King had sent for his Answer to them again; and appointed them to attend him for it at Greenwich that Afternoon; which They had agreed together to do) the King being come into the Privy Chamber, and seeing him there, asked him aloud, where the others who came in the Message with him were, and said, He would expect them in the Afternoon; and so discoursing somewhat of the Weather, that all Men heard, He came near him, and as it were passing by (which no Body took Notice of, the Room not being full) He bade him dine with Porter, at the back Stairs, that He might be in the Privy Chamber when He rose from Dinner; and after He had dined He found him there; and at that Hour most People looking after their own Dinner, his Majesty did without any Body's taking Notice of it, bid him follow him into the Privy Gallery; where He was no sooner entered, than the King locked the Door with his own Key, saying, "we will not now be disturbed, for there is no "Man in the House now, who hath a Key to this "Door." Then He said, "I will say Nothing of "the Answer, for I am sure Falkland and Colepepper "will be here anon; and then prepare one, and I "will not differ with you; for now I have got-"ten Charles, I care not what Answer I send to "them."

The King's Discourse to him at Greenwich.

THEN He spake of many Particulars of the Parliament with Warmth enough; and lamented his having consented to the Bill concerning the Bishops, which He said, He was prevailed upon to do, for his Wife's Security; but He should now be without any Fear to displease them. He said, He would lay the next Night at Theobalds; where He would stay a Day or two, that his Servants might provide themselves to attend him Northward: That He should not see him any more before He took that Journey; and therefore He required him upon all Occasions to write to him, and advertise him of such Matters as were fit for him to know; and to prepare, and send him Answers to such Declarations, or Messages as the Parliament should send to him. He said, He knew well the Danger He underwent if it were discovered: But his Majesty assured him, and bade him be confident of it, that no Person alive, but himself and his two Friends, should know that He corresponded with his Majesty; and that He would himself transcribe every Paper in his own Hand, before He would shew it to any Man, and before his Secretary should write it out. Mr. Hyde told him, that He writ a very ill Hand, which would give his Majesty too much Trouble to transcribe himself, and that He had so much Friendship with Secretary Nicholas, that He was well contented He should be trusted: To which the King said Nicholas was a very honest Man, and He would trust him in any Thing that concerned himself; but in this Particular, which would be so penal to the other, if it should be known, it was not necessary; for He would quickly learn to read the Hand, if it were writ at first with a little the more Care; and no Body should see it but himself. And his Majesty continued so firm to this Resolution, that though the Declarations from the Houses shortly after grew so voluminous, that the Answers frequently contained five, or six Sheets of Paper, very closely writ; his Majesty always transcribed them with his own Hand; which sometimes took him up two, or three Days, and a good Part of the Night, before He produced them to the Council; where they were first read, and then He burned the Originals. And He gave himself no Ease in this Particular, till Mr. Hyde left the Parliament, and by his Majesty's Command attended upon him at York: Which will be mentioned in it's Time.

WHILST the King held this Discourse with him in the Privy Gallery, many of the Lords were come from London; and not finding him, the Earls of Essex, and Holland, who by their Offices had Keys to the Gallery, opened that Door, and went in; and seeing no Body there, walked to the farther End; where in a turning Walk the King and Mr. Hyde were: And though They presently drew back, the King himself as well as Mr. Hyde was a little discomposed; and said, "I am very sorry for this "Accident, I meant to have said somewhat to you "of those Gentlemen; but we must not stay longer "together; forget not what I have said; and send "me presently the Answer for your Message, and "then attend with your Companions in the Privy "Chamber, and I will come out and deliver it to "them:" and so He withdrew: The two Earls smiling, and saluting Mr. Hyde civilly. He quickly found the Lord Falkland and Colepepper, and They as quickly agreed upon the Answer which the Lord Falkland carried to the King: And his Majesty jeſty approving, and ſigning it, He came out, and delivered it, after He had cauſed it to be read, to the Meſſengers who attended to receive it; and who went that Night to London; and the next Morning at the firſt ſitting of the Houſes, reported, and delivered it.

IT was expected, and believed, that as ſoon as the Queen was gone for Holland, the King would return to Whiteball, and reſide there. And many wiſe Men were of Opinion, that if He had done ſo, He would have been treated with more Duty and Reſpect; and that He would be able to bring his Buſineſs to a fair End, by very moderate Condeſcenſions; for the univerſal Prejudice and Averſion was to the Queen, how unjuſtly and unreaſonably ſoever; and to the King only as it was generally believed, that He governed himſelf entirely by her Dictates; and many of thoſe, whoſe Countenance had moſt ſupported the violent Party, by their Concurrence with them, were grown weary of thoſe Exceſſes; and as They had been ſeduced, and craftily drawn farther than They meant to have gone, ſo They plainly diſcerned that there would be farther Attempts made, than were agreeable to their Wiſhes, or their Intereſts; and therefore reſolved to ſecond them no farther.

THE Earl of Eſſex himſelf was in his Nature an honeſt Man, and a Man of Honour, and though He did not think the King had any gracious Purpoſes towards him, or great Confidence in him, yet He was willing to retire from that angry Company; and did neither deſire the Dignity of the King ſhould be affronted; or the Government receive an Alteration, or Diminution; and did hope nothing more, than to make himſelf the Inſtrument to reconcile the Parliament to the King, by ſome moderate and plauſible Expedient. But it was no ſooner known in the Houſes, that his Majeſty was gone to Theobalds, and had taken the Prince with him, with a Purpoſe of making a Progreſs farther Northward; but They fell into all their uſual Heat, and Debate, of their juſt Cauſes of Jealouſy and Diſtruſt, and the Wickedneſs of thoſe Perſons who miſled him; and the next Morning, being well informed that the King ſtaid all Day at Theobalds, They reſolved to ſend a Committee of four Lords, and eight Commoners to him, to put him in mind of his violating their Privileges, for which They had yet no Reparation or Satisfaction; his Refuſal to ſettle the Militia, whereby He left his Kingdom and People expoſed to the Violence of a Foreign Enemy, or a domeſtick Inſurrection; the great Jealouſies, and Fears which poſſeſſed the Minds of all his Subjects, which would be now exceedingly increaſed by his Removal in this Conjuncture from his Parliament; and thereupon concluded, that He would return to London, or reſide at ſuch a Diſtance, that They might eaſily repair to him.

WHEN the Perſons deſigned for the Meſſage withdrew to prepare themſelves for their Journey, the Meſſage being read, and agreed upon, Mr. Hyde went likewiſe out of the Houſe; and that the King might not be ſurprized with the Sight of the Meſſage before He heard of it, He ſent inſtantly to the Lord Grandiſon (in whom He had entire Confidence) to ſpeak with him; and deſired him to cauſe his Horſe to be made ready, that He might with all poſſible Expedition carry a Letter to the King, which He would prepare by the Time He could be ready for the Journey. He writ to the King, that ſuch Perſons would be preſently with him; and the Subſtance of the Meſſage They would bring to him; which in Reſpect of the Length of it, and of many Particulars in it, would require ſome Time to anſwer, which He ſhould receive ſoon enough; and for the preſent, He might upon the Delivery, make ſome ſhort Reſentment of the Houſes proceeding with him; and conclude, that He would ſend an Anſwer to their Meſſage in due Time. The Lord Grandiſon came to Theobalds when the King had newly dined, ſo that He was alone in his Bedchamber; and as ſoon as He had delivered the Letter, He returned to London, and met the Meſſengers within a Mile, or two of Theobalds.

His Advice to the King upon a Meſſage from the two Houſes.

As ſoon as They had delivered their Meſſage, which one of them read, the King with a diſpleated Countenance, and in a warmer, and more ſprightly Tone than was natural to him, told them, "that "He was amazed at their Meſſage, and could not "conceive what They would have, nor what They "meant to do: That They made a great Noiſe with "their Privileges, but forgot that He had Privileges "too, which They made no Conſcience to violate; "That They talked of their Fears, and Jealouſies, "for which They had not the leaſt Ground; but if "They would well conſider, They would find that "They gave him Cauſe enough for Jealouſy:" and concluded, "that He would think of their Meſſage "and ſend an Anſwer to the Houſes in convenient "Time:" without ſaying any Thing of his Journey, when, or whither He meant to go; nor held any farther Diſcourſe with them. The Manner and the Matter of the King's ſhort Diſcourſe to them, wonderfully ſurprized the Meſſengers, who were all Perſons of the beſt Quality in both Houſes, the Earl of Pembroke being the Chief, and ſome of them were of known Affections to his Majeſty's Service; who were wonderfully delighted with the King's quick and ſharp Treatment, with which the reſt were as much troubled: And ſo They all returned the ſame Night to London.

THE King reſolved to purſue the Courſe agreed upon with the Queen at her Departure; and would no more reſume the Conſideration of ſtaying nearer the Parliament: Very reaſonably apprehending, that He ſhould render himſelf liable every Day to new Affronts. And the Practice both Houſes had gotten, to ſend for Perſons by a Serjeant at Arms, upon any Suggeſtions of light Diſcourſe, or upon general, and ungrounded Suſpicions, by which They were compelled to give long Attendance, if They were not committed to Priſon, had ſo terrified all Conditions of Men, that very few reſorted to the Court. And They who did moſt diligently ſeem to attend their Duty there, did in Truth perform that Service, that They might with the more Eaſe betray their Maſter, and gratify thoſe, who They thought would at laſt bring themſelves into thoſe Places and Offices, upon which They were to depend. So that He thought it moſt abſolutely neceſſary to be at ſuch a Diſtance from Weſtminſter, that People might be leſs apprehenſive of their Power: Reſolving likewiſe, that no Perſon who attended him, or reſorted to the Place where He was, ſhould yield any Obedience to their Summons, upon thoſe general Suggeſtions; or any Applications They ſhould make to his Majeſty. And though it might have met with better Succeſs if He had taken the contrary Reſolution, and ſtaid in, or near Whiteball; yet the Hazards or Inconveniences which might very probably have attended that Counſel, were too much in View, for wiſe Men to engage poſitively in the Advice. Beſides, the Concert that had been made with the Queen, ſhut out all oppoſite Conſultations: And the King with a ſmall Court, after two Days Stay at Theobalds, began his Progreſs towards Newmarket; and ſometimes reſting a Day in a Place, He advanced by eaſy Journies Northward.

The King begins his Progreſs Northward.

HE took the Prince with him, the Marquis likewiſe attending him; but left the Duke of York ſtill at Richmond, till He came to York: And then likewiſe wiſe He ſent for his Highneſs, who came thither to him: And the Morning he left Theobalds, He ſent his Anſwer to the two Houſes, to their Meſſage They had ſent to him thither.

THEY had long deteſted, and ſuſpected Mr. Hyde, from the Time of their firſt Remonſtrance, for framing the King's Meſſages, and Anſwers, which They now every Day received, to their intolerable Vexation; yet knew not how to accuſe him. But now that the Earls of Eſſex, and Holland had diſcovered his being ſhut up with the King at Greenwich; and the Marquis of Hamilton had once before, found him very early in Private with the King at Windſor, at a Time when the King thought all Paſſages had been ſtopped; together with his being of late more Abſent from the Houſe, than He had uſed to be; and the Reſort of the other Two every Night to his Lodging, as is mentioned before, ſatisfied them that He was the Perſon; and They reſolved to diſenable him to manage that Office long. Sir John Colepepper had as many Eyes upon them, as They had upon the other, and an equal Animoſity againſt them; and had Familiarity and Friendſhip with ſome Perſons, who from the ſecond, or third Hand came to know many of the greateſt Deſigns, before they were brought upon the Stage. For though They managed thoſe Councils with the greateſt Secrecy, and by a few Perſons, which amounted to no more than pure Deſigns in Speculation; yet when any thing was to be tranſacted in publick by the Houſe, They were obliged, not only to prepare thoſe, of whom They were themſelves confident, but to allow thoſe Confidents to communicate it to others, in whom They confided: And ſo Men who did not concur with them, came to know ſometimes their Intentions, Time enough to prevent the Succeſs They propoſed to themſelves.

AND by this Means Sir John Colepepper meeting at Night with the Lord Falkland, and Mr. Hyde, aſſured them, that it had been reſolved that Day to have ſeized upon all three, and ſent them to the Tower: Of which He having received Notice as He was going to the Houſe, returned to his Lodging; not being able to give the ſame Information to the other two; but that his own being abſent prevented the Miſchief. For He knew it was reſolved the Night before, that when the Three were together in the Houſe, Somebody ſhould move the Houſe, "that They would apply themſelves to make ſome "ſtrict Enquiry after the Perſons, who were moſt "like to give the King the evil Counſel He had "lately followed; and who prepared thoſe Anſwers, "and Meſſages They received from his Majeſty;" upon which by one, and another, thoſe three Perſons ſhould be named, and particular Reaſons given for their Suſpicion; and that They did not doubt, but if their Friends were well prepared before hand, They ſhould be able to cauſe them to be all ſent to the Tower; and then They doubted not They ſhould be able to keep them there. But it was then likewiſe agreed, that They would not make the Attempt but at a Time when They were all three in the Houſe; upon hearing whereof, and finding that They two were there, He went back to his Lodging; knowing that thereupon there would be nothing done.

A Deſign of ſending Mr. Hyde to the Tower; Defeated.

UPON this Communication, though They were all of Opinion that the Deſign was ſo extravagant, and exceeding all the Rules of common Juſtice, that They would not be able to procure the Conſent of the major Part of the Houſe in it, if there were any conſiderable Number preſent; yet becauſe very many uſually abſented themſelves; and They were not governed by any Rules which had been formerly obſerved; They thought fit to reſolve that one of them would be always preſent in the Houſe, that They might know all that was done; but that They would never be there altogether; and ſeldom two of them; and when They were, They would only hear, and ſpeak no more than was of abſolute Neceſſity. For it was now grown a very difficult Thing for a Man, who was in their Diſfavour, to ſpeak againſt what They propoſed, but that They would find ſome Exception to ſome Word, or Expreſſion; upon which, after He had been called upon to explain, He was obliged to withdraw, and then They had commonly a major Part to ſend him to the Tower, or to expel him the Houſe; or at leaſt to oblige him to receive a Reprehenſion at the Bar upon his Knees. And ſo they had uſed Sir Ralph Hopton at that Time; who excepting to ſome Expreſſion that was uſed in a Declaration prepared by a Committee, and preſented to the Houſe, which He ſaid was diſhonourable to the King, They ſaid, it was a Tax upon the Committee; cauſed him to withdraw; and committed him to the Tower; which terrified many from ſpeaking at all; and cauſed more to abſent themſelves from the Houſe; where too ſmall Numbers appeared any Day. Theſe three Gentlemen kept the Reſolution agreed upon, till They all found it neceſſary to forbear any farther Attendance upon the Houſe.

Mr. Hyde it ſent for by the King to York.

ABOUT the End of April, which was in the Year 1642, Mr. Hyde received a Letter from the King, wherein He required him, that as ſoon as He could be ſpared from his Buſineſs there, He ſhould repair to his Majeſty at York, where He had Occaſion for his Service: Which when He had communicated to his two Friends, They were all of Opinion, that it was neceſſary He ſhould defer that Journey for ſome Time; there being every Day great Occaſion of conſulting together, and of ſending Diſpatches to the King. And it was a wonderful Expedition that was then uſed between York, and London, when Gentlemen undertook the Service, as enough were willing to do: Inſomuch, as when They diſpatched a Letter on Saturday Night, at that Time of the Year, about twelve at Night, They received always the King's Anſwer, Monday by ten of the Clock in the Morning. His Majeſty was content that He ſhould ſtay as long as the Neceſſity required; but that as ſoon as He might be diſpenſed with, He would expect him. And it was happy that He did ſtay, for there was an Occaſion then fell out, in which his Preſence was very uſeful, * towards diſpoſing the Lord Keeper Littleton to ſend the Great Seal to the King at York; and to reſolve upon going thither himſelf as ſoon as poſſible to attend his Majeſty; which Reſolution being taken, it was agreed between him and his two Friends, that it was now Time that He ſhould be gone (the King having ſent for him ſome Time before) after a Day or two; in which Time the Declaration of the 19th of May would be paſſed, which being very long, He might carry with him; and prepare the Anſwer upon the Way, or after He came to York.

Towards which He begins his Journey.

IT was upon a Wedneſday that He reſolved to begin his Journey; having told the Speaker, that it was very neceſſary, by the Advice of his Phyſician, that He ſhould take the Air of the Country for his Health; and his Phyſician certified the ſame; which Caution was neceſſary: For He had a Week or two before made a Journey into the Country to his own Houſe: and his Abſence being taking Notice of, a Meſſenger was immediately ſent to him, to require him immediately to attend the Houſe; upon which He found it neceſſary to return without Delay; and was willing to prevent the like ſudden Enquiry; and ſo prepared the Speaker to anſwer for him. He reſolved with the Lord Falkland, to ſtay at a Friend's Houſe near Oxford, and little out of the Road He meant to take for York, till He ſhould hear of the Keeper's Motion, of which He promiſed to give him timely Notice; not giving in the mean Time any Credit to his Purpoſe of moving; but He was quickly convinced.

* Hiſtory of the Rebellion. Folio. Vol. I. p. 444, &c. — Dub. Edit. Vol. I. p. 333, &c.

MUCH Notice had been taken of Mr. Hyde's frequent Reſort to him; and of his being often ſhut up with him; and when He took his Leave of him, the Night before He left the Town, the Keeper was walking in his Garden with Mr. Hollis, and Mr. Glyn; who had (as They ſaid) then obſerved, that as ſoon as the Keeper's Eyes were upon him, at his Entrance into the Garden, He had ſhewn ſome Impatience to be free from them; and when They were gone, others took Notice (for there were many in the Garden) as They pretended, that after They had walked ſome Time together, They took their Leave of each other in another Manner than was uſual; and which was not true. But He had not ſo good a Name, as that any Thing of that Kind would not eaſily gain Belief: So that Dr. Morley (who is ſince Biſhop of Wincheſter) being in Weſtminſter Hall on the Monday Morning when the News came of the Lord Keeper's Flight, a Perſon of great Authority in the Parliament met him, and, with great Paſſion inveighing againſt the Keeper, told him that They knew well enough that his Friend Mr. Hyde had contrived that Miſchief, and brought it to paſs; for which He would be that Morning, or the next, accuſed of High Treaſon; which the Doctor (who was ever very much his Friend) hearing, went preſently to the Lord Falkland, and told him of it, and deſired to know where He was, that He might give him timely Notice of it; knowing a Gentleman a very near Friend of his, who would immediately ride to him. The Lord Falkland was then writing to him to inform him of the Keeper's having made good his Word, of which He had but then Notice; and to adviſe him to proſecute his northern Journey with all Expedition; and deſired the Doctor that He would ſend for the Gentleman, whom He would preſently direct where He ſhould find Mr. Hyde; who did make ſo good Haſte, that He delivered the Lord Falkland's Letter to him early the ſame Night.

And after a ſhort Stay at Ditchley,

HE was then at Ditchley with the Lady Lee (ſince Counteſs of Rocheſter) and the Perſon who brought the Advertiſement to him was John Ayliffe, whom He dearly loved. He no ſooner received the Advertiſement, but He thought it Time for him to be gone; and as He was utterly unacquainted with the Way, having never been in the northern Parts, and apprehended that there would be Care taken to intercept him if He went in any common Road, there was with him at that Time Mr. Chillingworth, whoſe Company He had deſired from Oxford, purpoſely for that Occaſion; and who was well acquainted with thoſe Ways, which led almoſt as far as Yorkſhire. They ſent their Horſes that Night to a Village near Coventry, where Mr. Chillingworth's Brother had a Farm; and then in the Morning They put themſelves into the Lady's Coach; which with ſix Horſes carried them to that Village, thirty Miles from Ditchley; where after They had a little refreſhed themſelves, They took their Horſes; and that Night, out of all Roads, reached Lutterworth, a Village in Leiceſterſhire, where Mr. Chillingworth had likewiſe a Friend, who was Parſon of the Pariſh, who received them kindly. And ſo by unuſual Ways They got through Derbyſhire, until They came to Yorkſhire; and then reſted at Noſtall, the Houſe of Sir John Worſtenholme; who though He and his Family were at London, had given Order for his very good Reception; it having been before reſolved with his Majeſty's Conſent, that He ſhould ſtay in ſome private Place near York, till his Majeſty was informed of it; and till his Affairs abſolutely required his Preſence there; there being many Reaſons that He ſhould be concealed in thoſe Parts, as long as might be convenient. Noſtall was within twenty Miles of York; and from thence He gave his Majeſty Notice of his being there; and ſent him the Anſwer that was prepared to the Declaration of the nineteenth of May. And the King the next Day ſent Mr. Aſhburnham to him, with the Delaration of the twenty ſixth of May, and which was the higheſt They had yet publiſhed; and to which He wiſhed an Anſwer ſhould be prepared as ſoon as poſſible it might be, that the Poiſon thereof might not work too long upon the Minds of the People.

arrives at Noſtall.

As ſoon as it was taken Notice of in the Parliament that Mr. Hyde was abſent, Enquiry was made, what was become of him, and a Motion made in the Houſe, that He might be ſent for. The Speaker ſaid, that He had acquainted him with his going into the Country to recover his Indiſpoſition which troubled him, by freſh Air; and that Dr. Winſton his Phyſician was with him, and informed him, that He was troubled with the Stone; and that his having ſat ſo much in the Houſe, in that very hot Weather had done him much Harm; and therefore that He had adviſed him to refreſh himſelf in the Country Air; with which Teſtimony They were for the preſent ſatisfied; though Mr. Peard ſaid confidently, "that He was troubled "with no other Stone, than the Stone in his Heart; "and therefore He would have him ſent for where-"ever He was; for He was moſt confident that "He was doing them Miſchief, where-ever He was." But He prevailed not, till their Committee from York ſent them Word, that He was come thither, and almoſt always with the King. It is ſaid before, that He ſtaid at Noſtall at the Houſe of Sir John Worſtenholme, from whence He ſent every Day to the King, and received his Majeſty's Commands; and He intended to have ſtaid longer there, where He could better intend, and diſpatch any Buſineſs He was to do; and He was willing for ſome Time not to be ſeen at York, which He knew would quickly be taken Notice of at Weſtminſter.

WHEN He came firſt thither, He found that the King was not ſatisfied with the Lord Keeper, which gave him much Trouble; his Majeſty having ſent him Word that He did not like his Humours, nor know what to make of him. Mr. Elliot who had brought the Seal to the King, to magnify his own Service, and not imagining that the Keeper intended to follow him, had told many Stories; as if the Keeper had refuſed to deliver the Seal, and that He got it by Force, by having locked the Door upon him, and threatened to kill him, if He would not give it to him, which upon ſuch his Manhood He did for pure Fear conſent unto. And his Tale got ſo much Credit with the King that He hardly diſbelieved it, when He came himſelf; though it was in the Nature of it very improbable, that a ſingle Man, by another Man as ſtrong as himſelf (who was attended by many Servants in the next Room) ſhould be ſuffered to ſhut the Door upon him, and to extort that from him, which He had no Mind to part with; and afterwards to go out of his Houſe, when there were Perſons enough in every Room to have laid Hands upon him, and to have taken that again by Force, which He had raviſhed away. Beſides that his Majeſty knew He expected to be ſent for at that Time; and that if He had repented the Promiſe He had made, and reſolved not to perform it, He could have found ſeveral Ways to have evaded it; and refuſed to have admitted Mr.

Elliot

Elliot to ſpeak with him: But the Prejudice his Majeſty had before contracted againſt him, and the great Confidence Elliot had in the Relation, which was natural in him, had ſhut out all thoſe Reflections. Yet when his Majeſty ſaw him, He received him graciouſly; and cauſed him to be lodged in the Court, in a Room very near his Majeſty; which many believed to be rather out of Jealouſy, and Care that he ſhould not again return, than out of Reſpect to him; his Majeſty keeping ſtill the Seal himſelf, and not reſtoring it to his Cuſtody; which could not but make ſome Impreſſion on him, and more on others, who from thence concluded that He would have no more to do with the Seal; and carried themſelves towards him accordingly.

THE Lords who were come from the Houſe of Peers, and had been offended at his Behaviour there, gave him little Reſpect now; but rather gave Credit to Mr. Elliot's Relation; and were forward to make Relation of his Carriage in the Houſe to his Diſadvantage, to the King himſelf; ſo that it was no Wonder that the poor Gentleman grew very melancholick. And when he was ſent for to attend the King (who was himſelf preſent when the Great Seal was to be uſed; nor did ever ſuffer it to be uſed but in the Preſence of the Keeper, who ſigned all Things, as He ought to do by his Office) when any Proclamation of Treaſon, as that againſt the Earl of Eſſex, or againſt the Proceedings of the Houſes, as in the Buſineſs of the Militia, or the like, was brought to be ſealed, He uſed all Delays; and made many Exceptions; and found Faults in Matters of Form, and otherwiſe, ſometimes very reaſonably; yet in ſuch a Manner, as made it evident He retained many Fears about him, as if He was not without Apprehenſion that He might fall again into their Hands; which was the Cauſe that the King had ſaid, that he knew not what to make of him.

Mr. Hyde writes from Noſtall to the King.

MR. Hyde, as ſoon as He heard this, wrote a Letter to the King; and put him in Mind of all that had formerly paſſed in that Affair; how abſolutely the Keeper had deſtroyed himſelf in the Account of the Parliament, by paying that Obedience which He ought to do to his Majeſty's Commands; and that if he ſhould be deprived of his Majeſty's Favour, He muſt be of all Men the moſt miſerable; and that himſelf ſhould be moſt unfortunate, in having contributed ſo much to his Ruin; which would call his Majeſty's Good Nature, and even his Juſtice into Queſtion; and therefore beſought him to be gracious to him, and to keep up his Spirits with his Countenance. However He made it his own humble Suit to his Majeſty, that He would not take any ſevere Reſolution againſt him, before He gave him Leave to kiſs his Hand, and to offer him ſome farther Conſiderations. Upon the Receipt of this Letter, the King ſent him Word, that He would gratify him in the laſt Part of his Letter, and conclude nothing before he ſpake with him: in the mean Time he wiſhed him to ſend the Keeper ſome good Counſel; and that as ſoon as He ſhould have diſpatched ſome Buſineſs He had then upon his Hands, that he would come to York, where He would find much to do; and that He thought now, there would be leſs Reaſon every Day for his being concealed. And within four, or five Days after, his Majeſty ſent Mr. Aſhburnham to him to let him know, that He had every Day ſo much to do with the Keeper, and found him ſo refractory and obſtinate, that He ſhould not be able to keep the Promiſe He had made to him, if He did not make Haſte to York; and therefore bade him to be with him with all Convenience: Whereupon, within two Days after, for he had ſomewhat to diſpatch that required Haſte, and ſooner than he intended, He waited upon his Majeſty at York.

And goes from thence to York.

WHEN He came to the Court, being about four of the Clock in the Afternoon, the King was at Council; upon the publiſhing his Anſwer to the Declaration of the twenty ſixth of May; which, though it contained eight, or nine Sheets of Paper, He brought to the Board in his own Hand writing; having kept the Promiſe he had made at Greenwich, to that Hour, in writing out all the Papers himſelf, which had been ſent to him; which had been a wonderful Taſk He had impoſed on himſelf: ſo that he always ſpent more than half the Day ſhut up by himſelf in his Chamber, writing; which was moſt of the News the Houſes heard of him at London; and which perplexed them very much.

His Reception there;

MR. Hyde was in the Gallery when the King came from Council; and as ſoon as he ſaw him, He bade him Welcome to York very graciouſly; and aſked ſome Queſtions aloud of him, as if He thought He had then come from London; and then called him into the Garden, where he walked with him above an Hour. He ſaid at the beginning, "that They "needed not now be afraid of being ſeen toge- "ther;" then uſed all the Expreſſions of Kindneſs to him that can be imagined, of the Service He had done him; and of the great Benefit He had received from it; even to the turning the Hearts of the whole Nation towards him again; and of his gracious Reſolutions of rewarding him with the firſt Opportunity; and many Expreſſions of that Kind; which the other received with the Modeſty and Reverence that became him. Then his Majeſty ſpake of his Buſineſs, and the Temper of that Country; and quickly entered upon finding Fault with the Keeper, and proteſted if it were not for his Sake, He would turn him out of his Place that very Hour; and enlarged upon many Particulars of his Obſtinacy, and of his Want of Courage, to ſuch a Degree, as if He did really apprehend, that the Gentleman Uſher of the Black Rod would come and take him out of his Chamber.

and Converſation with the King.

MR. Hyde told him, that he would diſcourage many good Men, who deſired to ſerve him very faithfully, if He were too ſevere for ſuch Faults, as the Infirmities of their Nature, and Defects in their Education, expoſed them to: That if the Keeper, from thoſe Impreſſions, had committed ſome Faults, which might provoke his Majeſty's Diſpleaſure, He had redeemed thoſe Errors by a ſignal Service, which might well wipe out the Memory of the other. The King ſaid with ſome Warmth, "that He "was ſo far from another Opinion, that He would "hate himſelf if He did not believe that He had "made a full Expiation; and though He did think "that He had been wrought upon by him to per- "form that Part; yet He thought the Merit of it "far above any of his Tranſgreſſions; and that He "was diſpoſed from the firſt Minute of his coming "to York, to have renewed his old Kindneſs to him, "and Confidence in him; and would willingly have "given the Seal again into his Hands, if He had "found he had deſired it: but that He found no "Serenity in his Countenance; nor any Inclination "to do what Neceſſity required; and whereas the "Parliament took Advantage, that none of his Ma- "jeſty's Acts which He had cauſed to be publiſhed, "were Authentick, nor ought to be looked upon "as his, becauſe the Great Seal had not been affix- "ed to them, which could not be done whilſt the "Great Seal was at Weſtminſter; now He had the "Seal by him, and ſent Proclamations to be ſealed, "the Keeper was ſtill as unwilling that they ſhould "paſs, as if He was ſtill under their Power; which "made him angry, and nothing that He had done "before."

MR. Hyde replied, that "the poor Gentleman "could not but think himſelf diſobliged to the "higheſt

"highest Extremity, in the Presumption of Mr. El- "liot; and that his extravagant, and insolent Dis"courses should find Credit, without his Majesty's
"Reprehension, and Vindication, who knew the False-
"hood of them." And so put his Majesty in Mind of all that had passed; and of the other Circumstances, which made all the other's Brags impossible to be True. For his Fears and Apprehensions, He besought his Majesty to remember, that "He had "newly escaped out of that Region, where the "Thunder and Lightning is made; and that He "could hardly yet recover the Fright He had been "often in, and seen so many others in; and that "his Majesty need not distrust him, He had passed "the Rubicon, and had no Hope but in his Majes"ty." His Majesty concluded, that He should be sure to receive all necessary Countenance, and Protection from him; of which He bade him to assure him, and presently to visit him; which going to do, He met him in the Garden, and They there walked together.

Whom He reconciles to the Lord Keeper.

HE found him full of Apprehension that He should be put out of his Place: and of the Ruin, and Contempt that He should be then exposed to, which He had brought upon himself; but when the other answered him, that there was no Danger of that; and told him all that had passed between the King and Him; and that if He would, He might have the Seal in his own Custody again within an Hour, He was exceedingly revived, and desired him to intreat the King to keep the Great Seal still himself; that He would by no Means be answerable for the Safety of it; nor would trust any Servant of his own to look to it; which as it was wisely considered, and resolved by him, so it increased the King's Confidence in him; who would have been troubled if the other had accepted the Grace that was offered. And from that Time, when any Thing was to be done, that administered any Argument for Doubt, Mr. Hyde always prepared him by Discourse; so that there was never after any Unkindness from the King towards him: but the Vigour of his Mind grew every Day less, under a great Melancholy that oppressed him, from the Consideration of the Time, and of his own ill Condition in his Fortune; which was much worse than any Body imagined it could be.

BEFORE He went out of the Garden, the Lord Howard, Sir Hugh Cholmely, and Sir Philip Stapleton (who were the Committee from the Parliament) had Intelligence that He was walking in the Garden with the King; whereupon They came presently thither, and after They had saluted him with much Civility, They shewed him an Instruction They had from the Parliament; by which They were required, if any Member of either House came to York, They should let them know, that it was the Pleasure of the House that They should immediately attend the House; and signify to them what Answer They made; and so They desired He would excuse them for doing their Duty. He told them, He was but just then come thither in Obedience to his Majesty's Commands, and knew not yet what Service He was to do; but that as soon as his Majesty would give him Leave, He would return to the Parliament.

He is summoned to attend the Parliament: His Answer.

THERE happened an Accident, at Mr. Hyde's first coming to York, which He used often to speak of, and to be very merry at. One of the King's Servants had provided a Lodging for him, so that when He alighted at the Court, He sent his Servants thither, and staid himself at the Court till after Supper, and till the King went into his Chamber; and then He had a Guide, who went with him, and conducted him to his Chamber; which He liked very well, and began to undress himself. One of his Servants wished that He had any other Lodging, and desired him not to lie there; He asked why, it seemed to him a good Chamber: his Servant answered, that the Chamber was good, but the People of the House the worst He ever saw, and such, as He was confident would do him some Mischief: at which wondering, his Servant told him, that the Persons of the House seemed to be of some Condition by their Habit, that was very good; and that the Servants when They came thither, found the Master, and Mistress in the lower Room, who received them civilly, and shewed them the Chamber where their Master was to lodge; and wished them to call for any Thing They wanted, and so left them: That shortly after, one of them went down, and the Mistress of the House being again in the lower Room, where it seems She usually sat, She asked him, what his Master's Name was, which He told her; what said She, that Hyde that is of the House of Commons; and He answering yes, She gave a great Shriek, and cried out, that He should not lodge in her House; cursing him with many bitter Execrations. Upon the Noise her Husband came in, and when She told him who it was that was to lodge in the Chamber above, He swore a great Oath that He should not; and that He would rather set his House on Fire, than entertain him in it. The Servant stood amazed, knowing that his Master had never been in, or near that City; and desired to know what Offence He had committed against them; He told them He was confident his Master did not know them, nor could be known to them. The Man answered after two or three Curses, that He knew him well enough, and that He had undone him, and his Wife, and his Children; and so after repeating some new bitter Curses, He concluded, that He would set his House on Fire as soon as the Other should set his Foot in it; and so He, and his Wife went away in a great Rage into an inner Room, and clapped the Door to them.

WHEN his Servant had made this Relation to him, He was no less surprized; knew not what to make of it; asked whether the People were drunk, was assured that They were very sober, and appeared before this Passion to be well bred. He sent to desire the Master of the House to come to him, that They might confer together, and that He would immediately depart his House, if He desired it. He received no Answer, but that He and his Wife were gone to Bed: upon which He said no more, but that, if They were gone to Bed, He would go to Bed too, and did accordingly. Though He was not disturbed in the Night, the Morning was not at all calmer; the Master and the Mistress stormed as much as ever; and would not be persuaded to speak with him: but He then understood the Reason; the Man of the House had been an Attorney in the Court of the President and Council of the North, in great Reputation, and Practice there; and thereby got a very good Livelihood, with which He had lived in Splendour; and Mr. Hyde had sat in the Chair of that Committee, and had carried up the Votes of the Commons against that Court, to the House of Peers, upon which it was dissolved: which He confessed was a better Reason for being angry with him, than many others had, who were as angry, and persecuted him more. However, He thought himself obliged to remove the Eye-sore from them, and to quit the Lodging that had been assigned to him; and He was much better accommodated by the Kindness of a good Prebendary of the Church, Dr. Hodshon, who sent to invite him to lodge in his House, as soon as He heard He was come to Town; where He resided as long as the Court staid there.

He resides at York with Dr. Hodshon.

THERE

THERE was now a great Conflux of the Members of both Houſes of Parliament to York; inſomuch as there remained not in the Houſe of Commons above a fifth Part of the whole Number; and of the Houſe of Peers ſo few, that there continued not at Weſtminſter twenty Lords. Yet They proceeded with the ſame Spirit, and Preſumption, as when their Numbers were full; publiſhed new Declarations againſt the King; raiſed Soldiers for their Army apace; and executed their Ordinance for the Militia in all the Counties of England, the northern Parts only excepted: forbad all Perſons to reſort to the King; and intercepted many in their Journey towards York, and committed them to Priſon: notwithſtanding which, many Perſons of Quality every Day flocked thither; and it was no longer ſafe for thoſe Members to ſtay in the Houſes of Parliament, who reſolved not to concur with them in their unwarrantable Deſigns; and therefore the Lord Falkland, and Sir John Colepepper ſhortly after repaired likewiſe to York.

WHEN the King declared that He would go to Beverley, a Place within four Miles of Hull, the Noiſe of the King's Journey thither made a great Impreſſion upon the Parliament. Where, how great a Concurrence ſoever there was, in thoſe unwarrantable Actions which begot the War; yet a ſmall Number of thoſe who voted, both the raiſing the Army, and making the General, did in Truth intend, or believe that there would be a War: and therefore when They looked upon it as begun in this March of the King's to Hull (for They conſidered their own Actions as done only to prevent a War, by making the King unable to make it, who as They thought only deſired it) They moved preſently for ſome Overtures of an Accommodation. Which that angry Party that reſolved againſt it, never durſt abſolutely reject; but conſenting cheerfully to it, got thereby Authority to inſert ſuch Things in the Addreſs, as muſt inevitably render it ineffectual. So, at this Time They ſent the Earl of Holland, a Perſon whom They knew to be moſt unacceptable to the King, with two Members of the Houſe of Commons, who came to Beverley the Day the King arrived there. The Subject of their Meſſage was, after ſeveral ſpecious Expreſſions, and Profeſſions of their Duty, to diſſuade his Majeſty from making War againſt his Parliament, by proceeding in his Enterprize againſt Hull, which the Parliament was obliged to defend. And all the Expedient They propoſed for the avoiding this War was, that He would conſent to the nineteen Propoſitions, which They had formerly made to him at York, and to which He had long ſince returned his Anſwer; and both the one and the other were printed.

THESE nineteen Propoſitions, which contained the Diſinheriſon of the Crown of all its choice Regalities, and left only the Shadow, and empty Name of the King, had been framed by the Houſes after Mr. Hyde left London. And becauſe He had ſo much Work then upon his Hands, as They believed He would not be able to diſpatch ſoon enough, the Lord Falkland, and Sir John Colepepper undertook to prepare an Anſwer to them themſelves; and ſo divided the Propoſitions between them; and in a ſhort Time ſo finiſhed their Anſwer, that They ſent it to the King, and deſired that Mr. Hyde might peruſe it, and then cauſe it to be publiſhed and printed. The Anſwer was full to all Particulars; and writ with very much Wit and Sharpneſs; but there were ſome Expreſſions in it, which He liked not, as prejudicial to the King, and in Truth a Miſtake in Point of Right, in that Part which had been prepared by Sir John Colepepper; who had taken it upon Credit, and without weighing the Conſequence, did really believe that it had been True; which was, that in the Diſcourſe of the Conſtitution of the Kingdom, He had declared, that the King, and the Houſe of Peers, and the Houſe of Commons made the Three Eſtates: And for this Reaſon Mr. Hyde did not advance the Printing it; and told the King, that all the Particulars in thoſe Propoſitions had been enough anſwered in former Anſwers to other Declarations (which was true) and therefore that this needed not be publiſhed: With which his Majeſty was ſatisfied, without knowing the particular true Reaſon; which He thought not fit to communicate, for both Perſons Sakes, of whoſe Affection for the Church (which was principally concerned in that Miſtake, ſince in Truth the Biſhops make the Third Eſtate, the King being the Head, and Sovereign of the Whole) his Majeſty was alway jealous.

Mr. Hyde adviſes the King not to publiſh the Anſwer to the Parliament's nineteen Propoſitions.

BUT They no ſooner came to York, than They appeared much unſatisfied, that that Anſwer was not printed: And the Lord Falkland finding it remained ſtill in Mr. Hyde's Hands, He expoſtulated warmly with him of the Reaſons; and in ſome Paſſion ſaid, "He therefore diſliked it becauſe He "had not writ it himſelf." Upon which, without ſaying more than that, "He never expected ſo un-"kind a Reproach from him," He delivered the written Copy to him, and He immediately procured the King's Conſent, and ſent it to the Preſs that Night, with Order to loſe no Time in the Impreſſion. Of which the King was afterwards very ſenſible; and that excellent Lord, who intended not the leaſt Unkindneſs (nor did it produce the leaſt Interruption in their Friendſhip) was likewiſe much troubled when He knew the Reaſon; and imputed it to his own Inadvertency, and to the Infuſion of ſome Lawyers who had miſled Sir John Colepepper; and to the Declarations which many of the Prelatical Clergy frequently, and ignorantly made, that the Biſhops did not ſit in Parliament, as the Repreſentatives of the Clergy, and ſo could not be the Third Eſtate.

Lord Falkland's Expoſtulation with him thereon.

IT happened that the Day the Earl of Holland came to Beverley, Mr. Hyde had been riding abroad; and returning to Beverley, happened to be in the ſame Road, when the Earl of Holland, and his Company proſecuted their Journey to the King: When meeting together, there paſſed the uſual Salutations which are between Perſons well known to each other. "He hoped (the Earl ſaid) that He ſhould "be welcome to all honeſt Men at the Court, be-"cauſe He came to invite the King to return to his "Parliament; and to aboliſh all Jealouſies between "them." The other anſwered, "He would be very "welcome indeed, if He brought proper Expedients "to produce either of thoſe Effects; But then his "Errand muſt be of another Compoſition, than "what the King underſtood it to be." Upon which They entered upon a warmer Diſcourſe than it may be either of them intended; and as the Earl ſpake in another Style than He had uſed to do, of the Power and Authority of the Parliament, and how much They were ſuperior to any Oppoſition or Contradiction; ſo the other in the Debate was leſs reſerved, and kept a leſs Guard upon himſelf than He uſed to do; ſo that they ſeemed nothing pleaſed with each other: Nor did Mr. Hyde viſit him after his coming to Beverley, becauſe He was informed that the Earl had too many Perſons who reſorted to him, repeated with ſome Liberty and Sharpneſs, what had paſſed between them; and not without ſome Menaces what the Parliament would do. And as ſoon as He did return, there was a new Vote paſſed by Name againſt him, and two, or three more, by which He was exempted from Pardon, in any Accommodation that ſhould be made between the King, and Parliament.

Mr. Hyde's Converſation with the Earl of Holland.

He is exempted from Pardon by a Vote of the Houſes.

MR. Hyde had been abſent four, or five Days from the Court; and came into the Preſence when the King was waſhing his Hands before Dinner; and as ſoon as the King ſaw him, He aſked him aloud, "Ned Hyde when did you play with my Band-"ſtrings laſt?" upon which He was exceedingly out of Countenance, not imagining the Cauſe of the Queſtion, and the Room being full of Gentlemen, who appeared to be merry with what the King had aſked. But his Majeſty obſerving him to be in Diſorder, and to bluſh very much, ſaid pleaſantly, "be not troubled at it, for I have worn "no Bandſtrings theſe twenty Years:" And then aſked him whether He had not ſeen the Diurnal; of which He had not heard till then, but, ſhortly after, ſome of the Standers-by ſhewed him a Diurnal, in which there was a Letter of Intelligence printed, where it was ſaid, that Ned Hyde was grown ſo familiar with the King, that He uſed to play with his Bandſtrings. Which was a Method of calumniating They began then, and ſhortly after proſecuted and exerciſed upon much greater Perſons.

In the Afternoon the Earl of Holland came to deliver his Meſſage with great Formality: Whom the King received with much Coldneſs, and Manifeſtation of Neglect; and when the Earl approached, and kneeled to kiſs his Hand, He turned or withdrew his Hand in ſuch a Manner, that the Earl kiſſed his own. When the Meſſage was read, the King ſaid little more, than that They ſhould not ſtay long for an Anſwer; and ſo went to his Chamber. The Earl was not without many Friends there, and ſome of them moved the King, that He would give him Leave to ſay ſomewhat to him in Private, which They believed would be very much for his Service; but his Majeſty would by no Means yield to it. By this Time his Majeſty had Notice of the Governour's Irreſolution at Hull; and ſo was glad of this Opportunity to have a fair Excuſe for making no Attempt upon that Place. And ſent the next Day for the Earl of Holland to receive his Anſwer; which being read aloud in the King's Preſence, and a full Room, by the Clerk of the Council, was very grateful to the Auditors, who feared ſome Condeſcenſion in the King; though very mortifying to the Earl. For beſides that it was thought very ſharp towards the Houſes, it declared his Brother the Earl of Warwick a Traitor, for poſſeſſing himſelf of the King's Fleet againſt his Conſent; and concluded, that He would forbear any Attempt upon Hull for fourteen Days; in which Time, if the Parliament would enter into a Treaty for a happy Peace, They ſhould find him very well inclined to it; after the Expiration of that Time He ſhould purſue thoſe Ways which He thought fit. In the mean Time, He made a ſhort Progreſs into the adjacent Counties of Nottingham, and Leiceſter, to ſee what Countenance They wore; and to encourage thoſe, who appeared to have good Affections to his Service: And then returning to Beverley within the limited Time, and hearing no more from the Parliament, or any Thing from Hull that He expected, He returned again to York.

Mr. Hyde was wont often to relate a Paſſage in that melancholick Time, when the Standard was ſet up at Nottingham, with which He was much affected. Sir Edmund Varney, Knight-Marſhal, who was mentioned before as Standard Bearer, with whom He had great Familiarity, who was a Man of great Courage, and generally beloved, came one Day to him and told him, "He was very glad to "ſee him in ſo univerſal a Damp, under which the "Spirits of moſt Men were oppreſſed, retain ſtill "his natural Vivacity and Cheerfulneſs; that He "knew that the Condition of the King, and the "Power of the Parliament, was not better known "to any Man than to him; and therefore He hoped "that He was able to adminiſter ſome Comfort to "his Friends, that might raiſe their Spirits, as well "as it ſupported his own." He anſwered, "that "He was in Truth beholden to his Conſtitution, "which did not incline him to Deſpair: otherwiſe, "that He had no pleaſant Proſpect before him, but "thought as ill of Affairs as moſt Men did; that "the other was as far from being melancholick as "He, and was known to be a Man of great Cou-"rage (as indeed He was of a very cheerful, and "a generous Nature, and confeſſedly Valiant) and "that They could not do the King better Service, "than by making it their Buſineſs to raiſe the de-"jected Minds of Men; and root out thoſe Appre-"henſions which diſturbed them, of Fear, and De-"ſpair, which could do no Good, and did really "much Miſchief."

His Converſation with Sir Edmund Varney.

He replied ſmiling, "I will willingly join with "you the beſt I can, but I ſhall act it very ſcur-"vily. My Condition, ſaid He, is much worſe than "your's, and different I believe from any other "Man's, and will very well juſtify the Melancho-"lick that, I confeſs to you, poſſeſſes me. You "have Satisfaction in your Conſcience that you are "in the Right; that the King ought not to grant "what is required of him; and ſo you do your "Duty, and your Buſineſs together: But for my "Part, I do not like the Quarrel, and do heartily "wiſh that the King would yield and conſent to "what They deſire; ſo that my Conſcience is only "concerned in Honour, and in Gratitude to fol-"low my Maſter. I have eaten his Bread, and "ſerved him near thirty Years, and will not do ſo "baſe a Thing, as to forſake him; and chuſe ra-"ther to loſe my Life (which I am ſure I ſhall do) "to preſerve and defend thoſe Things, which are "againſt my Conſcience to preſerve and defend: "For I will deal freely with you, I have no Re-"verence for the Biſhops, for whom this Quarrel "ſubſiſts." It was not a Time to diſpute; and his Affection to the Church had never been ſuſpected. He was as good as his Word; and was killed in the Battle of Edgehill, within two Months after this Diſcourſe. And if thoſe who had the ſame and greater Obligations, had obſerved the ſame Rules of Gratitude, and Generoſity, whatever their other Affections had been, that Battle had never been fought, nor any of that Miſchief been brought to paſs, that ſucceeded it.

After the King came to Oxford with his Army, his Majeſty one Day ſpeaking with the Lord Falkland very graciouſly concerning Mr. Hyde, ſaid He had ſuch a peculiar Stile, that He could know any Thing written by him, if it were brought to him by a Stranger, amongſt a Multitude of Writings by other Men. The Lord Falkland anſwered, He doubted his Majeſty could hardly do that; becauſe He himſelf, who had ſo long Converſation and Friendſhip with him, was often deceived; and often met with Things written by him, of which He could never have ſuſpected him, upon the Variety of Arguments. To which the King replied, He would lay him an Angel, that let the Argument be what it would, He ſhould never bring him a Sheet of Paper (for He would not undertake to Judge of leſs) of his Writing, but He would diſcover it to be his. The Lord Falkland told him it ſhould be a Wager; but neither the one or the other ever mentioned it to Mr. Hyde. Some Days after the Lord Falkland brought ſeveral Packets, which He had then received from London, to the King, before He had opened them, as He uſed to do: And after He had read his ſeveral Letters of Intelligence, He took out the Prints of Diurnals, and Speeches, and the like, which were every Day printed at London, and as conſtantly ſent to Oxford: And amongſt the reſt there were two Speeches, the one made by the Lord Pembroke for an Accommodation; and the other by the Lord Brooke againſt it, and for the carrying on the War with more Vigour, and utterly to root out the Cavaliers, which were the King's Party.

The

THE King was very much pleaſed with reading the Speeches, and ſaid, He did not think that Pembroke could ſpeak ſo long together; though every Word He ſaid was ſo much his own, that no Body elſe could make it. And ſo after He had pleaſed himſelf with reading the Speeches over again, and then paſſed to other Papers, the Lord Falkland whiſpered in his Ear (for there were other Perſons by) deſiring him He would pay him the Angel; which his Majeſty in the Inſtant apprehending, bluſhed, and put his Hand in his Pocket, and gave him an Angel, ſaying, He had never paid a Wager more willingly: And was very merry upon it, and would often call upon Mr. Hyde for a Speech, or a Letter, which he very often prepared upon ſeveral Occaſions; and the King always commanded them to be printed. And He was often wont to ſay many Years after, that He would be very glad He could make a Collection of all thoſe Papers, which He had written occaſionally at that Time; which He could never do, though He got many of them.

He laments the Loſs of many of his occaſional Writings.

THERE was at that Time a pleaſant Story upon thoſe Speeches. The Lord Brooke had met with them in print; and heard that He was much reproached for ſo Unchriſtian a Speech againſt Peace; though the Language was ſuch as He uſed in all Opportunities: Whereupon one Morning in the Houſe of Peers, and before the Houſe ſate, He came to the Earl of Portland (who yet remained there with the King's Approbation, and knew well enough from whence the Speeches came, having himſelf cauſed them to be printed) and ſhewing them to him, deſired He would move the Houſe, that that Speech might, by their Order, be burned by the Hand of the Hangman; by which Means the Kingdom would be informed, that it had never been ſpoken by him. The Earl ſaid He would willingly do him the Service; but He obſerved that the Speeches were printed in that Manner, that where the Earl of Pembroke's Speech ended on the one Side of the Leaf, his (the Lord Brooke's) Speech began on the other Side, ſo that one could not be burned without burning the other too; which He knew not how the Earl of Pembroke would like; and therefore He durſt not move it without his Conſent. Whereupon They both went to the Earl, who was then likewiſe in the Houſe, and Portland told him what the Lord Brooke deſired, and aſked him whether He wiſhed it ſhould be done. He, who heard He was very well ſpoken of, for having ſpoke ſo honeſtly for Peace, ſaid, He did not deſire it. Upon which Brooke in great Anger, aſked if He had ever made that Speech; He was very ſure He had never made the other; and the other with equal Choler replied, that He was always for Peace; and though He could not ſay He had ſpoken all thoſe Things together, He was ſure He had ſpoken them all at ſeveral Times; and that He knew as well, that He had always been againſt Peace, and had often uſed all thoſe Expreſſions which were in the Speech, though it may be not all together. Upon which They entered into a high Combat of reproachful Words againſt each other, to the no ſmall Delight of the Earl, who had brought them together, and of the reſt of the Standers-by.

A Diſpute cauſed by one of them.

THE King was no ſooner ſettled in his Winter Quarters, after his Retreat from Brentford to Oxford, but the Parliament ſent to him for a Safe-Conduct, for Commiſſioners to be ſent from them to treat of Peace; which was ſent to them. And at this Time there was a Change in Mr. Hyde's Fortune, by a Preferment the King conferred upon him. Every Body knew He was truſted by the King in his moſt ſecret Tranſactions; but He was under no Character in his Service. When the Commiſſioners who were ſent for the Safe-Conduct came to Oxford, ſome who came in their Company, amongſt other Matters of Intelligence brought the King a Letter of his own to the Queen, printed, that had been intercepted, and printed by the Licenſe, if not Order, of the Parliament. In this Letter, of the ſafe Conveyance whereof his Majeſty had no Apprehenſion, the King had lamented the Uneaſineſs of his own Condition, in reſpect of the daily Importunity which was made to him by the Lords, and others, for Honours, Offices, and Preferments; and named ſeveral Lords, who were ſolicitous by themſelves, or their Friends, for this, and that Place; in all which He deſired to receive the Queen's Advice, being reſolved to do Nothing with Reference to thoſe Pretences, till He ſhould receive it. But He ſaid there were ſome Places, which He muſt diſpoſe of without ſtaying for her Anſwer, the Neceſſity of his Service requiring it; which were the Maſterſhip of the Wards; Applications being ſtill made to the Lord Say in thoſe Affairs, and ſo that Revenue was diverted from him: And therefore as He had revoked his Patent, ſo He was reſolved to make Secretary Nicholas Maſter of the Wards, and then (theſe were his Majeſty's own Words) I muſt make Ned Hyde Secretary of State, for the Truth is, I can truſt no Body elſe. Which was a very envious Expreſſion, and extended by the ill Intrepretation of ſome Men, to a more general Comprehenſion than could be intended. This was quickly made publick, for there were ſeveral Prints of it in many Hands; and ſome Men had Reaſon to be troubled to find their Names mentioned in that Manner, and others were glad that theirs were there, as having the Pretence to purſue their Importunities the more vehemently, being, as the Phraſe was, brought upon the Stage, and ſhould ſuffer much in their Honour if They ſhould be now rejected; which Kind of Argumentation was very unagreeable and grievous to the King.

ONE Morning, when the King was walking in the Garden, as He uſed to do, Mr. Hyde being then in his View, his Majeſty called him, and diſcourſed of the Trouble He was in at the intercepting that Letter; and finding by his Countenance that He underſtood not the Meaning, He aſked him, "whether He had not heard a Letter of his, "which He writ to the Queen, had been inter-"cepted, and printed." And He anſwering, that "He had not heard of it," as in Truth He had not; the King gave him the printed Letter to read, and then ſaid, that "He wiſhed it were as much "in his Power to make every Body elſe amends, as "He could him; for, He ſaid, He was reſolved "that Afternoon to ſwear him Secretary of State, "in the Place of Nicholas; whom He would likewiſe then make Maſter of the Wards." Mr. Hyde told him, "He was indeed much ſurprized with the "Sight of the Letter; which He wiſhed had not "been communicated in that Manner: But that He "was much more ſurprized to find his own Name "in it, and his Majeſty's Reſolution upon it, which "He beſought him to change; for as He never "had the Ambition to hope, or wiſh for that Place, "ſo He knew He was very unfit for it, and unable "to diſcharge it." To which the King with a little Anger replied, that "He did the greateſt Part of "the Buſineſs now:" And He anſwered, that "what "He did now, would be no Part of the Buſineſs, if "the Rebellion were ended; and that his Unſkil-"fulneſs in Languages, and his not underſtanding "foreign Affairs, rendered him very incapable of "that Truſt." The King ſaid, "He would learn "as much as was neceſſary of that Kind very quick-"ly." He continued his Deſire, that his Majeſty would lay aſide that Thought; and ſaid, "that he "had great Friendſhip for Secretary Nicholas, who "would be undone by the Change; for He would "find that his Majeſty would receive very little, and Mr. Hyde declines the Office of Secretary of State.

"He

" He Nothing, by that Office, till the Troubles " were compoſed." The King ſaid, " Nicholas was " an honeſt Man, and that his Change was by his " Deſire;" and bade him ſpeak with him of it; which He went preſently to do, leaving his Majeſty unſatisfied with the Scruples He had made.

WHEN He came to the Secretary's Lodging, He found him with a chearful Countenance, and embracing him, called him his Son. Mr. Hyde anſwered him, that " it was not the Part of a good " Son to undo his Father, or to become his Son that " He might undo him:" And ſo they entered upon the Diſcourſe; the one telling him what the King had reſolved, and how grateful the Reſolution was to him; and the other informing him of the Conference He had then had with the King, and that for his Sake as well as his own, He would not ſubmit to the King's Pleaſure in it. And ſo He debated the whole Matter with him; and made it evident to him, that he would be diſappointed in any Expectation He ſhould entertain of Profit from the Wards, as the State of Affairs then ſtood: So that He ſhould relinquiſh an honourable Employment, which He was well acquainted with, for an empty Title with which he would have nothing to do: And ſo adviſed him to conſider well of it, and of all the Conſequences of it, before he expoſed himſelf to ſuch an Inconvenience.

WHILST this was in Suſpenſe, Sir Charles Cæſar, who with great Prejudice to the King, and more Reproach to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Laud, had been made Maſter of the Rolls, died: And Sir John Colepepper had long had a Promiſe from the King, of that Place, when it ſhould become void, and now preſſed the Performance of it: Which was violently oppoſed by many, partly out of ill Will to him (for He had not the Faculty of getting himſelf much loved) and as much out of good Huſbandry, and to ſupply the King's Neceſſities with a good Sum of Money, which Dr. Duck was ready to lay down for the Office. And the King was ſo far wrought upon, that he paid down three thouſand Pounds in Part of what He was to give; but his Majeſty cauſed the Money to be repaid, and reſolved to make good his Promiſe to Sir John Colepepper, who would by no means releaſe him. This was no ſooner declared, than the Lord Falkland (who was much more ſolicitous to have Mr. Hyde of the Council, than He was himſelf for the Honour) took an Opportunity to tell the King, that He had now a good Opportunity to prefer Mr. Hyde, by making him Chancellor of the Exchequer, in the Place of Sir John Colepepper; which the King ſaid, he had reſolved to do, and bid him take no Notice of it, until He had told him ſo himſelf. And ſhortly after ſent for him, and ſaid, " that He " had now found an Office for him, which He " hoped He would not refuſe: That the Chancel- " lorſhip of the Exchequer was void by the Promo- " tion of Colepepper; and that He reſolved to confer " it upon him;" with many gracious Expreſſions of the Satisfaction He had in his Service. The other anſwered, " that though it was an Office much " above his Merit, yet he did not deſpair of enabling " himſelf by Induſtry to execute it, which He " would do with all Fidelity."

But accepts that of Chancellor of the Exchequer.

As ſoon as this was known, no Man was ſo much troubled at it as Sir John Colepepper, who had in Truth an Intention to have kept both Places, until He ſhould get into the quiet Poſſeſſion of the Rolls. And though he profeſſed much Friendſhip to the other, He had no Mind He ſhould be upon the ſame Level with him; and believed He would have too much Credit in the Council. And ſo delayed, after his Patent for the Rolls was paſſed, to ſurrender that of the Chancellorſhip of the Exchequer, until the Lord Falkland, and the Lord Digby expoſtulated very warmly with him upon it, and until the King took Notice of it; and then, ſeeming very much troubled that any Body ſhould doubt the Integrity of his Friendſhip to Mr. Hyde, to whom He made all the Profeſſions imaginable, He ſurrendered his Office of Chancellor of the Exchequer. And the next Day Mr. Hyde was ſworn of the Privy-Council, and Knighted, and had his Patents ſealed for that Office. And the King, after He roſe from the Council, and after many Expreſſions, of the Content He took himſelf in the Obligation He had laid upon him, with much Grace, that was not natural in him upon ſuch Occaſions, told him, that " He was very fortunate, becauſe He verily believed " no Body was angry at his Preferment; for beſides " that the Earl of Dorſet and others, who He knew " loved him, had expreſſed much Satisfaction in the " King's Purpoſe; He ſaid, the Lord Maltrevers, " and the Lord Dunſmore, who He did not think " had any Acquaintance with him, ſeemed very " much pleaſed with him; and therefore He thought " no Body would envy him; which was a rare Feli- " city." But his Majeſty was therein miſtaken; for He had great Enviers, of many who thought He had run too faſt; eſpecially of thoſe of his own Profeſſion, who looked upon themſelves as his Superiors in all Reſpects, and did not think that his Age (which was not then above thirty three) or his other Parts, did entitle him to ſuch a Preference before them. And the News of it at Weſtminſter, exceedingly offended thoſe who governed in the Parliament; to ſee the Man whom They moſt hated, and whom They had voted to be incapable of Pardon, to be now preferred to an Office the Chief of them looked for. Beſides, there was another unuſual Circumſtance accompanied his Preferment, that it was without the Interpoſition, or Privity of the Queen, which was not like to make it the more eaſy, and advantageous; and it was not the more unwelcome to him from that Circumſtance.

He is ſworn of the Privy Council and Knighted.

NOTWITHSTANDING all the Diſcourſe of, and Inclination to a Treaty, the Armies were not quiet on either Side. The King's Quarters were enlarged by the taking of Marlborough in Wiltſhire, and of Cirenceſter in Gloceſterſhire; which though untenable by their Situation, and weak Fortifications, were garriſoned by the Parliament with great Numbers of Men, who were all killed, or taken Priſoners. And the Parliament Forces were not without Succeſs too; and after the Loſs of Marlborough, ſurpriſed the Regiment of Horſe, that was commanded by the Lord Grandiſon, a gallant Gentleman, who if not betrayed, was unhappily invited to Winchеſter, with Promiſe of Forces ready to defend the Place; which being in no Degree performed, He was the next Day after He came, encloſed in the Caſtle of Winchеſter, and compelled to become, all, Officers and Soldiers, Priſoners of War: Though He and ſome other of the principal Officers, by the Negligence, or Corruption of their Guard, made their Eſcape in the Night, and returned to Oxford.

THIS was the State of the Kingdom, of the King and of the Parliament, in the Beginning of the Year 1643, at the Time when Mr. Hyde was made of the Privy Council, and Chancellor of the Exchequer: Which was between the Return of the Commiſſioners, who had been ſent to the King to propoſe a Treaty, and the coming of thoſe Commiſſioners to Oxford, who were afterwards ſent from the Parliament to treat with the King; which being about the End of the Year 1642, this Part ſhall be cloſed here.

The LIFE of
EDWARD Earl of CLARENDON
From his Birth to the Reſtoration of the ROYAL FAMILY in 1660.

PART the THIRD.

IT was about the Beginning of March (which by that Account was about the End of the Year 1642, and about the Beginning of the Year 1643) that the Commiſſioners of the Parliament came to Oxford, to treat with his Majeſty; and were received graciouſly by him; and by his Order lodged conveniently and well accommodated in all Reſpects.

THE Parliament had bound up their Commiſſioners to the ſtricteſt Letter of their Propoſitions; nor did their Inſtructions at this Time (which They preſented to the King) admit the leaſt Latitude to them to interpret a Word or Expreſſion, that admitted a doubtful Interpretation. Inſomuch as the King told them, "that He was ſorry that They had "no more Truſt repoſed to them; and that the "Parliament might as well have ſent their Demands "to him by the common Carrier, as by Commiſ- "ſioners ſo reſtrained." They had only twenty Days allowed them to finiſh the whole Treaty: whereof They might employ ſix Days in adjuſting a Ceſſation, if They found it probable to effect it in that Time: otherwiſe They were to decline the Ceſſation, and enter upon the Conditions of the Peace; which if not concluded before the End of the twenty Days, They were to give it over, and to return to the Parliament.

THESE Propoſitions, and Reſtrictions much abated the Hopes of a good Iſſue of the Treaty. Yet every Body believed, and the Commiſſioners themſelves did not doubt, that if ſuch a Progreſs ſhould be made in the Treaty, that a Peace was like to enſue, there would be no Difficulty in the Enlargement of the Time: and therefore the Articles for a Ceſſation were the ſooner declined, that They might proceed in the main Buſineſs. For though what was propoſed by them in Order to it, was agreeable enough to the Nature of ſuch an Affair; yet the Time allowed for it was ſo ſhort, that it was impoſſible to make it practicable: nor could Notice be timely given to all the Quarters on either Side, to obſerve it.

BESIDES that, there were many Particulars in it, which the Officers on the King's Side (who had no Mind to a Ceſſation) formalized much upon: and (I know not from what unhappy Root, but) there was ſprung up a wonderful Averſion in the Town againſt a Ceſſation. Inſomuch as many Perſons of Quality of ſeveral Counties, whereof the Town was full, applied themſelves in a Body to the King, not to conſent to a Ceſſation, till a Peace might be concluded; alledging, that They had ſeveral Agitations in their Countries, for his Majeſty's, and their own Conveniences, which would be interrupted by the Ceſſation; and if a Peace ſhould not afterwards enſue, would be very miſchievous. Which Suggeſtion, if it had been well weighed, would not have been found to be of Importance. But the Truth is, the King himſelf had no Mind to the Ceſſation, for a Reaſon which ſhall be mentioned anon, though it was never owned: and ſo They waved all farther Mention of the Ceſſation, and betook themſelves to the Treaty; it being reaſonable enough to believe, that if both Sides were heartily diſpoſed to it, a Peace might as ſoon have been agreed upon, as a Ceſſation could be. All the Tranſactions of that Treaty having been long ſince publiſhed, and being fit only to be digeſted into the Hiſtory of that Time, are to be omitted here. Only what paſſed in Secret, and was never communicated, nor can otherwiſe be known, ſince at this Time, no Man elſe is living who was privy to that Negotiation, but the Chancellor of the Exchequer, will have a proper Place in this Diſcourſe.

The Secret Tranſactions in the Treaty of Oxford.

THE Propoſitions brought by the Commiſſioners in the Treaty were ſo unreaſonable, that They well knew that the King would never conſent to them: but ſome Perſons amongſt them, who were known to wiſh well to the King, endeavoured underhand to bring it to paſs. And They did therefore, whilſt They publickly purſued their Inſtructions, and delivered, and received Papers upon their Propoſitions, privately uſe all the Means they could, eſpecially in Conferences with the Lord Falkland, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, that the King might be prevailed with, in ſome Degree to comply with their unreaſonable Demands.

IN all Matters which related to the Church, They did not only deſpair of the King's Concurrence, but did not in their own Judgments wiſh it; and believed, that the Strength of the Party which deſired the Continuance of the War, was made up of thoſe, who were very indifferent in that Point; and that, if They might return with Satisfaction in other Particulars, They ſhould have Power enough in the two Houſes, to oblige the more violent People to accept, or ſubmit to the Conditions. They wiſhed therefore that the King would make ſome Condeſcenſions in the Point of the Militia; which They looked upon as the only ſubſtantial Security They could have, not to be called in Queſtion for what They had done amiſs. And when They ſaw Nothing could be digeſted of that Kind, which would not reflect both upon the King's Authority, and his Honour, They gave over inſiſting upon the General; and then Mr. Pierrepoint (who was of the beſt Parts, and moſt intimate with the Earl of Northumberland) rather deſired than propoſed, that the King would offer to grant his Commiſſion to the Earl of Northumberland, to be Lord High Admiral of England. By which Condeſcenſion He would be reſtored to his Office, which He had loſt for their Sakes; and ſo their Honour would be likewiſe repaired, without any ſignal Prejudice to the King; ſince He ſhould hold it only by his Majeſty's Commiſſion, and not by any Ordinance of Parliament; and He ſaid, if the King would be induced to gratify them in this Particular, He could not be confident, that They ſhould be able to prevail with both Houſes to be ſatisfied therewith, ſo that a Peace might ſuddenly be concluded; but as He did not deſpair even of that, He did believe, that ſo many would be ſatisfied with it, that They would from thence take the Occaſion to ſeparate themſelves from them, as Men who would rather deſtroy their Country, than reſtore it to Peace.

Mr. Pierrepoint's Propoſition.

AND the Earl of Northumberland himſelf took ſo much Notice of this Diſcourſe to Secretary Nicholas

(with whom He had as much Freedom, as his reſerved Nature was capable of) as to proteſt to him, that He deſired only to receive that Honour, and Truſt from the King, that He might be able to do him Service; and thereby to recover the Credit He had unhappily loſt with him. In which He uſed very decent Expreſſions towards his Majeſty; not without ſuch Reflections upon his own Behaviour, as implied that He was not proud of it: and concluded, that if his Majeſty would do him that Honour, as to make that Offer to the Houſes, upon the Propoſition of the Militia, He would do all He could that it might be effectual towards a Peace; and if it had not Succeſs, He would paſs his Word and Honour to the King, that as ſoon, or whenſoever, his Majeſty would pleaſe to require it, He would deliver up his Commiſſion again into his Hands; He having no other Ambition, or Deſire, than by this Means to re-deliver up the Royal Navy to his Majeſty's as abſolute Diſpoſal, as it was, when his Majeſty firſt put it into his Hands; and which He doubted would hardly be done by any other Expedient, at leaſt not ſo ſoon.

WHEN this Propoſition (which from the Intereſt, and Perſons who propoſed it, ſeemed to carry with it ſome Probability of Succeſs, if it ſhould be accepted) was communicated with thoſe who were like with moſt Secrecy to conſult it; Secretary Nicholas having already made ſome Approach towards the King upon the Subject, and found his Majeſty without Inclination to hear more of it; it was agreed and reſolved by them, that the Chancellor of the Exchequer ſhould preſume to make the Propoſition plainly to the King; and to perſuade his Majeſty to hear it debated in his Preſence: at leaſt, if that might not be, to enlarge upon it himſelf, as much as the Argument required: and He was not unwilling to embark himſelf in the Affair.

Which the Chancellor of the Exchequer adviſes the King to comply with.

WHEN He found a fit Opportunity for the Repreſentation, and his Majeſty at good Leiſure, in his Morning's Walk, when He was always moſt willing to be entertained, the Chancellor related ingenuouſly to him the whole Diſcourſe, which had been made by Mr. Pierrepoint, and to whom; and what the Earl himſelf had ſaid to Secretary Nicholas; and what Conference They, to whom his Majeſty gave Leave to conſult together upon his Affairs, had between themſelves upon the Argument, and what occurred to them upon it: in which He mentioned the Earl's Demerit towards his Majeſty, with Severity enough, and what Reaſon He had, not to be willing to reſtore a Man to his Favour, who had forfeited it ſo unworthily. Yet He deſired him to conſider his own ill Condition; and how unlike it was, that it ſhould be improved by the Continuance of the War; and whether He could ever imagine a Poſſibility of getting out of it upon more eaſy Conditions, than what was now propoſed; the Offer of which to the Parliament could do him no ſignal Prejudice, and could not but bring him very notable Advantages: for if the Peace did not enſue upon it, ſuch a Rupture infallibly would, as might in a little Time facilitate the other. And then He ſaid as much to leſſen the Malignity of the Earl as He could, by remembring, how dutifully He had reſigned his Commiſſion of Admiral, upon his Majeſty's Demand; and his Refuſal to accept the Commiſſion the Parliament would have given him: and obſerved ſome Vices in his Nature, which would ſtand in the Place of Virtues, towards the Support of his Fidelity to his Majeſty, and his Animoſity againſt the Parliament; if He were once re-ingratiated to his Majeſty's Truſt.

THE King heard him very quietly without the leaſt Interruption, which He uſed not to do upon Subjects which were not grateful to him, for He knew well, that He was not ſwayed by any Affection to the Man; to whom He was more a Stranger, than He was to moſt of that Condition: and He upon Occaſions, had often made ſharp Reflections upon his Ingratitude to the King. His Majeſty ſeemed at the firſt to inſiſt upon the Improbability that any ſuch Conceſſion by him, would be attended with any Succeſs; that not only the Earl had no Intereſt in the Houſes, to lead them into a Reſolution, that was only for his particular Benefit, but that the Parliament itſelf was not able to make a Peace, without ſuch Conditions as the Army would require. And then He ſhould ſuffer exceedingly in his Honour, for having ſhewn an Inclination to a Perſon, who had requited his former Graces ſo unworthily: and this led him into more Warmth than He uſed to be affected with. He ſaid, "indeed He had been very unfortunate in conferring "his Favours upon many very ungrateful Perſons: "but no Man was ſo inexcuſable as the Earl of "Northumberland." He ſaid, "He knew that the "Earl of Holland was generally looked upon as the "Man of the greateſt Ingratitude; but (He ſaid) "He could better excuſe him than the other: that "it was true, He owed all He had to his Father's "and his Bounties; and that himſelf had conferred "great Favours upon him; but that it was as true, "He had frequently given him many Mortifica- "tions, which though He had deſerved, He knew "had troubled him very much; that He had often- "er denied him, than any other Man of his Condi- "tion; and that He had but lately refuſed to gra- "tify him in a Suit He had made to him, of which "He had been very confident; and ſo might have "ſome Excuſe (how ill ſoever) for being out of "Humour, which led him from one Ill to another; "but that He had lived always without Interrup- "ſion, with the Earl of Northumberland as his Friend, "and courted him as his Miſtreſs; that He had "never denied any Thing He had ever aſked, and "therefore his Carriage to him was never to be for- "gotten." The King's Anſwer.

AND this Diſcourſe He continued with more Commotion, and in a more pathetical Stile, than ever He uſed upon any other Argument. And though at that Time it was not fit to preſs the Matter farther, it was afterwards reſumed by the ſame Perſon more than once; but without any other Effect, than that his Majeſty was contented, that the Earl ſhould not deſpair of being reſtored to that Office, when the Peace ſhould be made; or upon any eminent Service performed by him, when the Peace ſhould be deſpaired of. The King was very willing and deſirous that the Treaty ſhould be drawn out in Length; to which Purpoſe a Propoſition was made to the Commiſſioners, for an Addition of Ten Days, which They ſent to the Parliament, without the leaſt Apprehenſion that it would be denied. But They were deceived; and for Anſwer received an Order upon the laſt Day but one of the Time before limited, by which they were expreſly required, to leave Oxford the next Day. From that Time, all Intercourſe, and Commerce between Oxford and London, which had been permitted before, was abſolutely interdicted under the higheſt Penalties by the Parliament.

IF this ſecret underhand Propoſition had ſucceeded, and received that Encouragement from the King, that was deſired; and more Application of the ſame Remedies had been then made to other Perſons (for alone it could never have proved effectual) it is probable, that thoſe violent and abominable Counſels, which were but then in Projection between very few Men of any Intereſt, and which were afterwards miſerably put in Practice, had been prevented. And it was exceedingly wondered at, by thoſe who were then privy to this Overture, and by all who afterwards came to hear of it, that the King ſhould in that Conjuncture decline ſo advantageous a Propoſition; ſince He did already already discern many ill Humours, and Factions, growing, and nourished, both in his Court and Army, which would every Day be uneasy to him; and did with all his Soul desire an End of the War. And there was nothing more suitable and agreeable to his magnanimous Nature, than to forgive those, who had in the highest Degree offended him; Which Temper was notorious throughout his whole Life. It will not be therefore amiss in this Discourse, to enlarge upon this fatal Rejection, and the true Cause and Ground thereof.

The true Cause of the King's rejecting it.

THE King's Affection to the Queen was of a very extraordinary Alloy; a Composition of Conscience, and Love, and Generosity, and Gratitude, and all those noble Affections, which raise the Passion to the greatest Height; insomuch as He saw with her Eyes, and determined by her Judgment. And did not only pay her this Adoration, but desired that all Men should know that He was swayed by her; which was not good for either of them. The Queen was a Lady of great Beauty, excellent Wit and Humour, and made him a just Return of noblest Affections; so that They were the true Idea of conjugal Affection, in the Age in which They lived. When She was admitted to the Knowledge, and Participation of the most secret Affairs (from which She had been carefully restrained by the Duke of Buckingham, whilst He lived) She took Delight in the examining and discussing them, and from thence in making Judgment of them; in which, her Passions were always strong.

SHE had felt so much Pain in knowing Nothing, and medling with Nothing, during the Time of that great Favourite, that now She took Pleasure in Nothing but knowing all Things, and disposing all Things: and thought it but just, that She should dispose of all Favours and Preferments, as He had done; at least, that Nothing of that Kind might be done without her Privity: not considering that the universal Prejudice that great Man had undergone, was not with Reference to his Person, but his Power: and that the same Power would be equally obnoxious to Murmur and Complaint, if it resided in any other Person, than the King himself. And She so far concurred with the King's Inclination, that She did not more desire to be possessed of this unlimited Power, than that all the World should take Notice, that She was the entire Mistress of it: which in Truth (what other unhappy Circumstances soever concurred in the Mischief) was the Foundation upon which, the first, and the utmost Prejudices to the King, and his Government, were raised, and prosecuted. And it was her Majesty's, and the Kingdom's Misfortune, that She had not any Person about her, who had either Ability, or Affection, to inform and advise her, of the Temper of the Kingdom, or Humour of the People; or who thought either worth the caring for.

WHEN the Disturbances grew so rude, as to interrupt this Harmony; and the Queen's Fears, and Indisposition, which proceeded from those Fears, disposed her to leave the Kingdom, which the King to comply with her, consented to (and if that Fear had not been predominant in her, her Jealousy, and Apprehension that the King would, at some Time, be prevailed with to yield to some unreasonable Conditions, would have dissuaded her from that Voyage) to make all things therefore as sure as might be, that her Absence should not be attended with any such Inconvenience, his Majesty made a solemn Promise to her at parting, that He would receive no Person into any Favour, or Trust, who had disserved him, without her Privity and Consent; and that, as She had undergone so many Reproaches and Calumnies at the Entrance into the War, so He would never make any Peace, but by her Interposition, and Mediation, that the Kingdom might receive that Blessing only from Her.

THIS Promise (of which his Majesty was too Religious an Observer) was the Cause of his Majesty's Rejection, or not Entertaining this last Overture. And this was the Reason that He had that Aversion to the Cessation; which he thought would inevitably oblige him to consent to the Peace, as it should be proposed; and therefore He had contenanced an Address, that had been made to him against it, by the Gentlemen of several Counties attending the Court: and in Truth They were put upon that Address by the King's own private Direction. Upon which the Chancellor of the Exchequer told him, when the Business was over, that He had raised a Spirit he would not be able to conjure down: And that those Petitioners had now appeared in a Business that pleased him, but would be as ready to appear at another Time, to cross what He desired; which proved true. For He was afterwards more troubled with Application, and Importunity of that Kind, and the Murmurs that arose from that Liberty, when all Men would be Counsellors, and censure all that the Council did, than with the Power of the Enemy.

ABOUT the Time that the Treaty began, the Queen landed in the North: And she resolved with a good Quantity of Ammunition, and Arms, to make what Haste She could to the King: having at her first landing, expressed by a Letter to his Majesty, her Apprehension of an ill Peace by that Treaty; and declared, that She would never live in England, if She might not have a Guard for the Security of her Person: which Letter came accidentally afterwards into the Hands of the Parliament, of which They made Use to the Queen's Disadvantage. And the Expectation of her Majesty's Arrival at Oxford, was the Reason that the King so much desired the Prolongation of the Treaty. And if it had pleased God that she had come thither Time enough, as She did shortly after, She would have probably condescended to many Propositions for the gratifying particular Persons, as appeared afterwards, if thereby a reasonable Peace might have been obtained.

WHEN the Scotish Commissioners attended the King at Oxford, and desired his Leave, that there might be a Parliament called in Scotland, which his Majesty denied them (well knowing, that They would, against all the Protestations, and Oaths They had made to him, at his being in that Country, join with those at Westminster) They presented a long Paper to the King, containing a bitter Invective against Bishops, and the whole Government of the Church; as being contrary to the Word of God, and to the Advancement of true Religion: and concluded with a very passionate Desire for the Alteration of that Government, as the only Means to settle Peace throughout his Majesty's Dominions. In all their other Demands, concerning the Kingdom of Scotland, and calling a Parliament there, the King had only conferred with two, or three of those He most trusted, whereof the Chancellor of the Exchequer was always one, and drew the Answers He gave: But this last Paper which only concerned England, He brought to the Council Board, and required their Advice, what Answer He should give to it. The King himself was very desirous to take this Occasion, to shew his Affection and Zeal for the Church; and that other Men's Mouths might be hereafter stopped in that Argument, and that no Body might ever make the same Proposition to him again, He had a great Mind to have made an Answer to every Expression in their Paper; and to have set out the Divine Right of Episcopacy; and how impossible it was ever for him in Conscience to consent conſent to any Thing, to the Prejudice of that Order and Function, or to the alienating their Lands: enlarging himſelf more in the Debate, than He uſed to do upon any other Argument; mentioning thoſe Reaſons which the ableſt Prelate could do upon that Occaſion; and wiſhed that all thoſe, and ſuch others as might occur, ſhould be contained in his Anſwer.

MANY of the Lords were of Opinion, that a ſhort Anſwer would be beſt, that ſhould contain nothing but a Rejection of the Propoſition, without giving any Reaſon: no Man ſeeming to concur with his Majeſty, with which He was not ſatisfied; and replied with ſome Sharpneſs upon what had been ſaid. Upon which the Lord Falkland replied, having been before of that Mind, deſiring that no Reaſons might be given; and upon that Occaſion anſwered many of thoſe Reaſons the King had urged, as not valid to ſupport the Subject, with a little Quickneſs of Wit (as his Notions were always ſharp, and expreſſed with notable Vivacity) which made the King warmer than He uſed to be; reproaching all who were of that Mind, with want of Affection for the Church; and declaring that He would have the Subſtance of what He had ſaid, or of the like Nature, digeſted into his Anſwer; with which Reprehenſion All ſat very ſilent, having never undergone the like before. Whereupon the King recollecting himſelf, and obſerving, that the Chancellor of the Exchequer had not yet ſpoke, called upon him to deliver his Opinion, adding, that He was ſure He was of his Majeſty's Mind, with Reference to Religion, and the Church.

The King calls upon the Chancellor of the Exchequer to deliver his Opinion therein.

THE Chancellor ſtood up, and ſaid, that He would have been glad to have ſaid nothing that Day, having obſerved more Warmth, than had ever been at that Board, ſince He had the Honour to ſit there (which was not many Days before) that in Truth He was not of the Opinion of any one who had ſpoken; He did not think that the Anſwer ought to be very ſhort, or without any Reaſons; and He did as little think, that the Reaſons mentioned by his Majeſty, ought to be applied to the Paper, which the Scots had been ſo bold as to preſent to the King. He ſaid, all thoſe Reaſons were fit to be offered in a Synod, or in any other Place, where that Subject could be lawfully ventilated; and He believed them all to be of that Weight, that Mr. Henderſon and all his Aſſembly of Divines could never anſwer; but He ſhould be very ſorry that his Majeſty ſhould ſo far condeſcend to their Preſumption, as to give thoſe Reaſons; as if He admitted the Matter to be diſputed. He aſked his Majeſty, what Anſwer He would give to the King of France, if He ſhould ſend to him, to alter the Government of the City of London, or any other City, and that He would ſubſtitute other Magiſtrates in the Place of thoſe, who are; which, as a King, He might more reaſonably demand, than theſe Gentlemen of Scotland could do, what They propoſe; whether his Majeſty would think it more agreeable to his Honour, to make a reaſonable Diſcourſe, of the Antiquity of the Lord Mayor of London, and of the Dependance the preſent Magiſtrates had upon the Law, and the Frame of the Government; or whether, He would only ſend him Word, that He ſhould meddle with what He had to do. He did think, that it was very fit that his Majeſty's Anſwer to this Paper ſhould contain a very ſevere, and ſharp Reprehenſion for their Preſumption; and take Notice, how ſolicitous They were for the Preſervation of what They called the Right and Privilege of their Country, that his Majeſty might not bring any Thing into Debate at his Council Board here, that concerned the Kingdom of Scotland, though it had often too much Relation to the Affairs and Government of England; yet that They would take upon them to demand from his Majeſty, at leaſt to adviſe him to make, an Alteration in the Government of England, which would quite alter the Frame of it, and make ſuch a Confuſion in the Laws; which They could no more comprehend, than They could any of the ſame Kind, that related to any other foreign Kingdom; and therefore that for the Future They ſhould not practiſe the like Preſumption.

With which the King is well ſatisfied.

THE King diſcovered himſelf to be very well pleaſed, all the Time He was ſpeaking; and when He had done, his Majeſty ſaid again, He was ſure the Chancellor was entirely of his Mind with Reference to the Church; and that He had ſatisfied him, that this was not the Seaſon, nor the Occaſion, in which thoſe Arguments, which He had uſed, were to be inſiſted on; and that He was willing to depart from his own Senſe; and was in Truth ſo well pleaſed, that He vouchſafed to make ſome kind of Excuſe for the Paſſion He had ſpoken with: and all the Lords were very well ſatisfied with the Expedient propoſed; and all commended the Chancellor: and the Anſwer was given to the Scotiſh Commiſſioners accordingly: who had too good Intelligence, not to know all that had paſſed; and upon their long Diſcourſes with the King (who was always forward to enlarge upon that Subject, in which He was ſo well verſed) expected ſuch an Anſwer, as might give them Opportunity to bring the whole Matter of Epiſcopacy upon the Stage, and into publick Diſputation. And ſo They returned to London, with manifeſt Diſſatisfaction, before the Commiſſioners of the Parliament; and with avowed Deteſtation of a Perſon, againſt whom They were known always to have an inveterate, and an implacable Diſpleaſure.

THE King was much troubled at the Diſunion between the Princes Rupert, and Maurice, and the Marquis of Hertford, after the taking of Briſtol: which He knew muſt exceedingly diſorder, and divide that Army: For compoſing whereof, his Majeſty reſolved the next Day after the News, to go himſelf to Briſtol; which was very neceſſary in many Reſpects. The Settlement of the Port, which was of infinite Importance to the King in Point of Trade and his Cuſtoms, and with reference to Ireland; and the applying the Army to ſome new Enterprize, without Loſs of Time, could not be done without his Majeſty's Preſence. But there was Nothing more diſpoſed his Majeſty to that Reſolution, than to be abſent from his Council at Oxford, when He ſhould ſettle the Differences between the Princes, and the Marquis; for as he was always ſwayed by his Affection to his Nephews, which He did not think Partiality; ſo the Lords towards whom the Princes did not live with any Condeſcenſion, were very ſolicitous, that the Marquis might receive no Injuſtice, or Diſobligation. And the King, to avoid all Counſel in this Particular, reſolved to declare no Reſolution, till He ſhould come himſelf to Briſtol; and ſo went from Oxford thither; taking with him, of the Council, the Duke of Richmond, the Lord Falkland, the Maſter of the Rolls, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The King lodging the firſt Night at Malmſbury; and the Lord Falkland, the Maſter of the Rolls, and ſome other Gentlemen lodging that Night with the Chancellor of the Exchequer, at his Houſe at Pirton, which lay in the Way to Briſtol; where They were the next Day within an Hour after the King.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer's Office invaded by Mr. Aſburnham.

THE Chancellor of the Exchequer had undergone ſome Mortification, during the ſhort Abode at Briſtol, which was the only Port of Trade within the King's Quarters; which was like to yield a conſiderable Benefit to the King, if it were well managed: and the Direction thereof belonged entirely to his Office; but when he ſent to the Officers of the Cuſtoms, Cuſtoms, to be informed of the preſent State of Trade, He found that ſome Treaty was made, and Order given in it by Mr. Aſhburnham, a Groom of the Bedchamber; who, with the Aſſiſtance, and Advice of Sir John Colepepper, had prevailed with the King, to aſſign that Province to him, as a Means to raiſe a preſent Sum of Money for the Supply of the Army: which the Chancellor took very heavily, and the Lord Falkland out of his Friendſhip to him, more tenderly; and expoſtulated it with the King with ſome Warmth; and more paſſionately with Sir John Colepepper, and Mr. Aſhburnham, as a Violation of the Friendſhip They profeſſed to the Chancellor, and an Invaſion of his Office; which no Man bears eaſily.

THEY were both aſhamed of it, and made ſome weak Excuſes, of Incogitance and Inadvertence; and the King himſelf, who diſcerned the Miſchief that would enſue, if there ſhould be an apparent Schiſm amongſt thoſe He ſo entirely truſted, was pleaſed to take Notice of it to the Chancellor, with many gracious Expreſſions; and ſaid, "that Mr. "Aſhburnham being Treaſurer and Paymaſter of the "Army, He did believe ſome Money might have "been raiſed for the preſent Occaſion; and only in-"tended it for the Preſent, without conſidering, it "would be an Invaſion of his Right; and therefore "directed, that an Account ſhould be given to him "of all that had been done, and He ſhould do as "He thought fit." But when He underſtood all that had been done, He would make no Alteration in it, that his Majeſty might be convinced, that his Service was not looked after in the Deſign. And it was diſcernable enough, that Mr. Aſhburnham, who uſually looked very far before him, had not ſo much intended to diſoblige the Chancellor, as by introducing himſelf this Way into the Cuſtoms, to continue one of the Farmers of the Cuſtoms, when the War ſhould be at an End: of which He got a Promiſe from the King at the ſame Time; who had great Affection for him, and an extraordinary Opinion of his Managery. If there remained after this any Jealouſy or Coldneſs between the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the other Two, as the Diſparity between their Natures, and Humours, made ſome believe there did, it never brake out or appeared, to the Diſturbance or Prejudice of the King's Service; but all poſſible Concurrence in the carrying it on, was obſerved between them.

The King interpoſes therein.

THE March of the Earl of Eſſex from London to Gloceſter, over as large a Campania as any in England, when the King had an Army of above eight thouſand Horſe, reputed victorious, without being put to ſtrike one Stroke—the Circumſtances of that Siege: and the raiſing it—the Earl's March after he had performed that great Work; and when the King's Army watched only to engage him in a Battle; and paſſing over a large and open Campania, three Days before the King had Notice, that He was come out of Gloceſter—the overtaking the Army; and the Battle by Newbury—and his Retreat afterwards to London; contained ſo many particular Actions of Courage, and Conduct, that They all deſerve a very punctual, and juſt Relation: and are much above the Level of this plain, and foreign Diſcourſe.

IN this Battle of Newbury, the Chancellor of the Exchequer loſt the Joy and Comfort of his Life; which He lamented ſo paſſionately, that He could not in many Days compoſe himſelf to any Thoughts of Buſineſs. His dear Friend the Lord Falkland, hurried by his Fate, in the Morning of the Battle, as He was naturally inquiſitive after Danger, put himſelf into the Head of Sir John Byron's Regiment, which He believed was like to be in the hotteſt Service, and was then appointed to charge a Body of Foot; and in that Charge was ſhot with a Muſket Bullet, ſo that He fell dead from his Horſe. The ſame Day that the News came to Oxford of his Death, which was the next after He was killed, the Chancellor received a Letter from him, written at the Time when the Army roſe from Gloceſter; but the Meſſenger had been employed in other Service, ſo that He came not to Oxford till that Day. The Letter was an Anſwer to one the Chancellor had then ſent to him; in which He had told him, how much He ſuffered in his Reputation with all diſcreet Men, by engaging himſelf unneceſſarily in all Places of Danger: And that it was not the Office of a Privy Councellor, and a Secretary of State, to viſit the Trenches, as He uſually did; and conjured him, out of the Conſcience of his Duty to the King, and to free his Friends from thoſe continual uneaſy Apprehenſions, not to engage his Perſon to thoſe Dangers, which were not incumbent to him. His Anſwer was, that the Trenches were now at an End, there would be no more Danger there: That his Caſe was different from other Men's; that He was ſo much taken Notice of for an impatient Deſire of Peace, that it was neceſſary that He ſhould likewiſe make it appear, that it was not out Fear of the utmoſt Hazard of War: He ſaid ſome melancholick Things of the Time; and concluded, that in few Days They ſhould come to a Battle, the Iſſue whereof, He hoped, would put an End to the Miſery of the Kingdom.

The Death of the Lord Falkland.

MUCH hath been ſaid of this excellent Perſon before; but not ſo much, or ſo well, as his wonderful Parts and Virtues deſerved. He died as much of the Time as of the Bullet: For from the very Beginning of the War, He contracted ſo deep a Sadneſs and Melancholy, that his Life was not pleaſant to him; and ſure He was too weary of it. Thoſe who did not know him very well, imputed, very unjuſtly, much of it to a violent Paſſion He had for a Noble Lady: And it was the more ſpoken of, becauſe She died the ſame Day, and as ſome computed it, in the ſame Hour that He was killed; but They who knew either the Lord, or the Lady, knew well, that neither of them was capable of an ill Imagination. She was of the moſt unſpotted, unblemiſhed Virtue, never married, of an extraordinary Talent of Mind, but of no alluring Beauty, nor of a Conſtitution of tolerable Health, being in a deep Conſumption, and not like to have lived ſo long by many Months. It is very true, the Lord Falkland had an extraordinary Eſteem of her, and exceedingly loved her Converſation, as moſt of the Perſons of eminent Parts of that Time did; for She was in her Underſtanding, and Diſcretion, and Wit, and Modeſty, above moſt Women; the beſt of which had always a Friendſhip with her. But He was withall ſo kind to his Wife, whom He knew to be an excellent Perſon, that, though He loved his Children with more Affection and Fondneſs, than moſt Fathers uſe to do, He left by his Will all He had to his Wife; and committed his three Sons, who were all the Children He had, to her ſole Care and Bounty.

HE was little more than thirty Years of Age when He was killed; in which Time He was very accompliſhed in all thoſe Parts of Learning, and Knowledge, which moſt Men labour to attain, till They are very old; and in Wiſdom, and the Practice of Virtue to a wonderful Perfection. From his Age of twenty Years, He had lived in an entire Friendſhip with the Chancellor, who was about ſix Months elder; and who never ſpake of him afterwards, but with a Love, and a Grief, which ſtill raiſed ſome Commotion in him. And He very often uſed to lament him, in the Words of Cicero concerning Hortenſius, Quod magnâ Sapientium & Ci- vium bonorum Penuriâ, Vir egregius, conjunctissimusque mecum Consiliorum omnium Societate, alienissimo Reipublicæ Tempore extinctus, & Auctoritatis, & Prudentiæ suæ, triste nobis Desiderium reliquerat. And without Doubt, it was in a Conjuncture of Time, when the Death of every honest, and discreet Person was a very sensible, and terrible Loss, in the Judgment of all good Men.

AFTER the unhappy Death of the Lord Falkland, the King much desired that the Chancellor of the Exchequer should be Secretary of State in his Place; which the Queen did not oppose, though She rather wished that the Lord Digby might have it; who had so much Kindness and Friendship for the Chancellor (which was at that Time, and long after, as sincere as could receive Harbour in his Breast) that He professed, He would not have it, if the other would receive it: but the Chancellor gratified his Civility, and refused the Office, the second Time, as He had once before. And He had so much more Reason now, by the coming of a very specious Embassy from France, in the Person of the Count of Harcourt, who was already arrived in London; in which the Chancellor knew his own Want of Ability, to act that Part, the Office of Secretary would have obliged him to; and for which, as far as the Perfection of the French Tongue could qualify him, the Lord Digby was very proper; and so He was made Secretary of State; professing to every Body, that as He had the Office by the Chancellor's Refusal of it, so He would wholly advise with him in all Things pertaining to it, which He always did; and the Confidence and Friendship between them was mutual, and very notorious, until that Lord changed his Religion. And He was no sooner admitted and sworn Secretary of State, and Privy Counsellor, and consequently made of the Junto, which the King at that Time created, consisting of the Duke of Richmond, the Lord Cottington, the two Secretaries of State, and Sir John Colepepper, but the Chancellor of the Exchequer was likewise added; to the Trouble, at least the Surprize, of the Master of the Rolls; who could have been contented, that He should have been excluded from that near Trust, where all Matters were to be consulted, before they should be brought to the Council Board. And this Committee was appointed to treat with the Count of Harcourt; whom the King believed to be sent from France, to demand any Thing from the Parliament in that King's Name, as his Majesty should direct; and therefore They were appointed to consider well, what He should be directed to propose.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer refuses the Office of Secretary of State a second Time.

He is added to the Junto.

BUT the Ambassador no sooner came to the Town in great State and Lustre, but He quickly saved them any farther Labour, by declaring, that He would treat with no Body but the King himself; his Business being only to serve the King, with Reference to the Differences between his Majesty, and the Parliament; and pretended that in his short Stay at London, He had already discovered that his Majesty was betrayed; and that his most secret Counsels were discovered: and so there was never any Communication between him, and the King's Council; but all Matters were transacted with the King himself, and Queen, and Lord Jermyn, who was not of the Council, and the Lord Digby; the Queen promising herself very much from his Negotiation; the Ambassador being then of great Reputation, having been General of the French Army in two, or three great Actions, in which his Success had been very notable; and the Queen looked upon him as a Person particularly devoted to her Service; and being of the House of Lorrain (the younger Son of the Duke d' Elboeuf) He was not without some Alliance to the King; and so He returned to London with such Instructions, and Advice as They thought fit to entrust him with, which were too particular; and with the Privity only of the two other Persons mentioned before.

BUT it quickly appeared after, that He was not sent with any Purpose to do the King Service; but that Cardinal Mazarin (who was newly entered upon the Ministry, after the Death of Cardinal Richelieu) might take such a View of the Affairs of England, as the better to judge what he was to do; and that an Accommodation there might not break his Measures, with Reference to his other Designs; which the Ambassador was easily satisfied it was not like to do. And so, after three, or four Months spent between Oxford, and London, He returned to France; leaving the King's Affairs so much worse than He found them, by having communicated some Instructions, which had been given him at Oxford, with over much Confidence, and which less disposed some Persons to Peace than They had been, at London.

THE King called the Chancellor one Day to him, and told him, "that He thought there was too "much Honour done to those Rebels at Westminster "in all his Declarations, by his mentioning them "as Part of the Parliament; which as long as They "should be thought to be, They would have more "Authority by their continuing their Sitting in the "Place, whither They were first called, than all the "other Members, though so much more numerous, "would have, when They should be convened any "where else (there being a Thought of convening "them to Oxford) therefore He knew no Reason "why He should not positively declare them to be "dissolved; and so forbid them to sit, or meet any "more there. He said, that He knew learned Men "of an Opinion, that that Act for the Continuance "of the Parliament was void from the Beginning; "and that it is not in the Power of the King, to "bar himself from the Power of dissolving it; which "is to be deprived of an essential Part of his Sove"reignty: But if the Act were good and valid in "Law, They had dissolved themselves, by their "Force, in driving so many Members, and even "his Majesty himself, who was their Head, from "the Parliament; and had forfeited their Right of "sitting there, and all that the Act had given "them, by their Treason, and Rebellion; which the "very being a Parliament could not support: And "therefore He wished, that a Proclamation might "be prepared, to declare them actually dissolved; "and expressly forbidding them to meet, or any Bo"dy to own them, or submit to them, as a Parlia"ment."

The King directs the Chancellor of the Exchequer to prepare a Proclamation for dissolving the Parliament at Westminster.

THE Chancellor told him, that "He perceived "by his Majesty's Discourse, that He had very much "considered the Argument, and was well prepared "in it; which for his Part He was not. But He "besought him to think it worth a very strict Re"flection; and to hear the Opinion of learned Men, "before He resolved upon it. That it was of a ve"ry nice and delicate Nature, at which not only "the People in general, but those of his own Par"ty, and even of his Council, would take more "Umbrage, than upon any one Particular, that "had happened since the Beginning of the War. "That He could not imagine that his forbidding "them to meet any more at Westminster, would "make one Man the less to meet there; but He "might forbid them upon such Grounds and Rea"sons, as might bring more to them: And that "They who had severed themselves from them, up"on the Guilt of their Actions; might return, and "be reconciled to them, upon their Unity of Opi"nion. That it had been the first powerful Re"proach They had corrupted the People with, to-

His Advice to the King on that Subject.

"wards

"wards his Majeſty, that He intended to diſſolve "this Parliament, notwithſtanding the Act for con- "tinuance thereof; and if He had Power to do "that, He might likewiſe by the ſame Power, re- "peal all the other Acts made this Parliament; where- "of ſome were very precious to the People: And "as his Majeſty had always diſclaimed any ſuch "Thought, ſo ſuch a Proclamation as he now men- "tioned, would confirm all the Fears and Jealou- "ſies, which had been infuſed into them; and "would trouble many of his own true Subjects.

"THAT for the Invalidity of the Act from the "Beginning, He was in his own Opinion inclined "to hope, that it might be originally void; for the "Reaſons and Grounds his Majeſty had mentioned; "and that the Parliament itſelf, if this Rebellion "was ſuppreſſed, might be of the ſame Judgment, "and declare it accordingly, which would enable "him quickly to diſſolve it. But till then, He "thought all the Judges together, even thoſe who "were in his own Quarters, and of unqueſtionable "Affection to his Majeſty, would not declare any "ſuch Invalidity; and much leſs, that any private "Man, how learned ſoever, would avow that Judg- "ment: in which his Majeſty might eaſily ſatisfy "himſelf, having ſo many of the Judges, and ma- "ny other excellent Men of the Robe then at Ox- "ford. For their having diſſolved themſelves, or "forfeited their Right of ſitting there, by their "Treaſon, and Rebellion, He ſaid, He could leſs "underſtand it, than the other Argument of Inva- "lidity; for that the Treaſon, and Rebellion could "only concern, and be penal to the Perſons who "committed them; it was poſſible many might ſit "there, He was ſure many had a Right to ſit there, "who had always oppoſed every Illegal, and every "Rebellious Act; and therefore the Faults of the "others, could never forfeit any Right of theirs, "who had committed no Fault: And upon the "whole Matter, concluded as He had begun, that "his Majeſty would very throughly conſult it, be- "fore He did ſo much as incline in his own "Wiſhes."

HIS Majeſty ſaid, He had ſpoken more Reaſon againſt it, than He had thought could have been alledged: However, He bade him confer with his Attorney General, who He believed, was of ano- ther Opinion. The Chancellor moved his Majeſty, that ſince the Ground of what ſhould be reſolved on in this Point, muſt be expreſſed in the Proclama- tion, the Attorney might put his own Conceptions in Writing, and then his Majeſty would the better judge of them. The King ſaid, it ſeemed reaſonable to him, and He had propoſed it to him, but He had declined it, and commended the Pen his Majeſty had uſed to employ, as very clear and ſignificant; and ſaid, if He had an Hour's Confe- rence with that Perſon, the Buſineſs would be done. Whereupon the Chancellor went immediately to his Lodging, chuſing rather to uſe that Civility towards him, than to ſend for him; who did not love him ſo well as He had done, before he was his ſuperior Officer.

His Confe- rences with the Attorney General thereon.

AFTER a long Conference together, and many Circumlocutions (which was his natural Way of Diſ- courſe) and aſking Queſtions, why not this? and why not that? without expreſſing his own Opinion; at laſt He confeſſed, that there muſt be no Attempt to diſſolve them, "though it might be even that "might be lawful in many Reſpects," but that it would be ſufficient to declare the Force which had been, and ſtill was upon them, that rendered them not free; and ſo They ought not to be looked up- on as a Parliament; and that They might be re- quired, to adjourn from Time, to Time, till all the Members might with Safety repair to, and ſit with them; in all which the other agreed with him, and ſo They parted; the Chancellor promiſing that, a- gainſt the next Morning, he would prepare a Pro- clamation agreeable to that, which he thought to be their joint Meaning; for He did not obſerve any Difference to be between them. The next Morn- ing the Attorney came to his Lodging, where He found the Draught prepared, which as ſoon as He had read, He ſaid did in no Degree expreſs, or comprehend the Senſe that had been agreed between them: And thereupon, He entered again into the ſame Diſcourſe He had made before, and more per- plexed than before; being moſt offended with the Preamble, wherein it was declared, that the King neither could, or intended, to break the Parlia- ment: which was ſo contrary to what He had infu- ſed into the King; and which the Chancellor thought moſt neceſſary, to contradict that Reproach, which naturally would be caſt upon his Majeſty. In the End, when He had wearied himſelf with the De- bate, They came both again to mean the ſame Thing; which was no other, than was agreed be- fore, though as the Attorney ſaid, it was not ex- preſſed in the Draught before them: whereupon it was agreed between them, that againſt the next Morning, either of them ſhould make a Draught apart; and then, when They came together, it would eaſily be adjuſted.

BUT the next Morning They were as far aſunder as before, and the Attorney had prepared no Paper, and ſaid, it needed not, the Difference being very ſmall, and would be rectified with changing, or leaving out a Word or two; which the Chancellor deſired him to do, and to leave out, or put in, what He pleaſed: which when He went about to do, twenty other Things occurred to him; and ſo He entered upon new Diſcourſes, without concluding any Thing; and every Day entertained the King with an Account, as if all were agreed; but upon Conference with the Chancellor, his Majeſty won- dered at the Delay, and told him, He wondered at it, for the Attorney ſpake ſtill as clearly to him, as it was poſſible for any Man to do, and therefore the putting it in Writing could not be hard. The other anſwered him, that it would never be done any other Way, than that, which He had firſt pro- poſed to him; and therefore beſought his Majeſty, that He would oblige the Attorney to put his own Conceptions, which He made ſo clear to him, into Writing; and then, his Majeſty having likewiſe what the Chancellor prepared in his Hands, He would eaſily conclude which ſhould ſtand; and otherwiſe there would never be any Concluſion.

Whoſe Draught of a Proclama- tion the King ſhews to the Chancellor of the Exche- quer.

ABOUT two Days after, the Chancellor came in- to the Garden where the King was walking; and calling him ſhortly to him, in ſome Diſorder, his Majeſty told him, "He was never in that Amaze- "ment in his Life; that he had at laſt, not with- "out a very poſitive Command, obliged the Attor- "ney to bring him ſuch a Draught in Writing, as "was agreeable to his own Senſe; and that He had "now done it; but in ſuch a Manner, that He no "more underſtood what the Meaning of it was, "than if it were in Welſh, which was the Language "of the Attorney's Country: only, He ſaid, "He "was very ſure it contained nothing of the Senſe "He had ever expreſſed to him;" and ſo bade him follow him into a little Room at the End of the Garden; where as ſoon as he was entered He ſhut the Door, becauſe there were many People in the Garden; and then pulled a Paper out of his Pocket, and bade him read it; which when he had done, it being all in the Attorney's own Hand, He ſaid, "it deſerved Wonder indeed;" and it was ſo rough, perplexed, and inſignificant, that no Man could judge by it, or out of it, what the Writer propoſed to himſelf, and it made ſo great an Impreſſion upon the King (who had before thought him a Man of a Maſter Reaſon, and that no Man had ſo clear Notions) that He never after had any Eſteem of him.

Character of the Attorney General.

THE Truth is, he was a Man very unlike any other Man; of a very good natural Wit, improved by Converſation with learned Men, but not at all by Study, and Induſtry: And then his Converſation was moſt with Men, though much ſuperior to him in Parts, who rather admired, than informed him, of which his Nature (being the proudeſt Man living) made him not capable, becauſe not deſirous. His greateſt Faculty was, and in which He was a Maſter, to make difficult Matters more intricate and perplexed; and very eaſy Things to ſeem more hard than they were. The King conſidered the Matter and Subject of that Proclamation, at the Council; where that Draught the Chancellor had provided, was agreed to; and the Attorney ſeemed to be ſatisfied in it; and was content to have it believed, that it had been conſulted with him; though He never forgave the Chancellor for expoſing him in that Manner; by which He found He had loſt much Ground.

The King's Approbation of the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Behaviour in The Treaty of Uxbridge.

AFTER the Treaty of Uxbridge, moſt of the Commiſſioners had given ſo good a Teſtimony of the Chancellor's Diligence and Induſtry, that the King, ſhortly after his Return, very graciouſly took Notice of it to him; and above all, of his Affection to the Church, of which, He ſaid, Dr. Steward had ſo fully informed him, that he looked upon him as one of the few, who were to be relied upon in that Particular: at which He ſaid, himſelf was not at all ſurprized, having long known his Affection, and Judgment in that Point; but confeſſed he was ſurprized with the Carriage of ſome others, from whom He had expected another Kind of Behaviour, in Matters of the Church; and named Sir Orlando Bridgman, upon whom He ſaid, He had always looked, being the Son of a Biſhop, as ſo firm, that He could not be ſhaken; and therefore He was the more amazed, to hear what Condeſcenſions He had been willing to have made, in what concerned Religion; and preſſed the Chancellor to anſwer ſome Queſtions he aſked him about that Tranſaction: to the Particulars whereof He excuſed himſelf from anſwering, by the Proteſtation, They had all taken before the Treaty, with his Majeſty's Approbation: though indeed himſelf had been very much ſurpriſed with the firſt Diſcovery of that Temper in that Gentleman, which He had never before ſuſpected: and ever after ſaid, that "He was a Man of excellent Parts, and honeſtly inclined; and would chuſe "much rather to do well, than ill; but if it were "not ſafe for him to be ſteady in thoſe Reſolutions, "He was ſo much given to find out Expedients to "ſatisfy unreaſonable Men, that He would at laſt "be drawn to yield to any Thing, He ſhould be "powerfully preſſed to do."

THE King at that Time having reſolved to ſeparate the Prince his Son from himſelf, by ſending him into the Weſt, the Chancellor had a great Deſire to excuſe himſelf from attending upon the Prince in that Journey; and repreſented to his Majeſty, that his Office made it more proper for him to be near his Majeſty's Perſon; and therefore renewed his Suit again to him, that his Service might be ſpared in that Employment; which He was the leſs inclined to, becauſe He had diſcovered, that neither the Duke of Richmond, or the Earl of Southampton did intend to wait upon his Highneſs in that Expedition: But the King told him poſitively, and with ſome Warmth, that if He would not go, He would not ſend his Son: whereupon He ſubmitted to do any Thing which his Majeſty ſhould judge fit for his Service.

THE Chancellor ſpeaking one Day with the Duke of Richmond, who was exceedingly kind to him, of the ill State of the King's Affairs, and of the Prince's Journey into the Weſt, the Duke aſked him, whether He was well reſolved to carry the Prince into France, when He ſhould be required. He anſwered, that there had been no ſuch Thing mentioned to him, nor could He ever be made inſtrumental in it, but in one Caſe, which was, to prevent his falling into the Hands of the Parliament: and in that Caſe, He did believe every honeſt Man would rather adviſe his going any whither, than being taken by them: Yet even in that Caſe, He ſhould prefer many Places before France. The Duke wiſhed He might ſtay till then, implying that He doubted it was the preſent Deſign; but there was never any Thing diſcovered to make it believed, that there was a Deſign at that Time formed to ſuch a Purpoſe: yet the Lord Digby, who had all Familiarity, and Confidence with the Chancellor, ſhortly after gave him Occaſion to apprehend, that there might even then be ſome ſuch Intention.

Lord Digby's Diſcourſe with the Chancellor concerning the Prince's going to France.

AFTER a long Diſcourſe, of the great Satisfaction the King had in his (the Chancellor's) Service; and how much He was pleaſed with his Behaviour in the Treaty at Uxbridge; and that He had not a greater Confidence in any Man's Affection, and Fidelity; He ſaid, his Majeſty had a great Mind to confer with him upon a Point of the laſt Importance; but that He was kept from it, by an Apprehenſion, that He was of a different Judgment from his Majeſty in that Particular. The other anſwered, that He was very ſorry that the King was reſerved for ſuch a Reaſon: for though he knew, the Chancellor did never pretend to think one Thing, when he did think another, and ſo might take the Boldneſs to differ from his Majeſty in his Judgment; yet the King could not believe, that He would diſcover the Secret, or refuſe to do any Thing that became an honeſt Man, upon his Command, though He did not believe it counſellable. Whereupon, He entered upon a very reaſonable Conſideration, of the low Condition of the King; of the Diſcontent and Murmur of the Court, and of the Camp; how very difficult a Thing it was like to be, to raiſe ſuch an Army as would be fit to take the Field; and how much more unfit it would be, for the King to ſuffer himſelf to be encloſed in any Garriſon; which He muſt be, if there were no Army for him to be in. If the firſt Difficulty ſhould be maſtered, and an Army made ready to march, there could be little Doubt, how great ſoever their Diſtractions were at London, but that the Parliament would be able to ſend another more numerous, and much better ſupplied than the King's could be; and then, if the King's Army was beaten, He could have no Hope ever to raiſe another; his Quarters already being very ſtreight; and after a Defeat, the victorious Army would find no Oppoſition; nor was there any Garriſon that could oppoſe them any conſiderable Time; London would pour out more Forces; that all the Weſt would be ſwallowed up in an Inſtant; and in ſuch a Caſe He aſked him, whether He would not think it fit, and aſſiſt to the carrying the Prince out of the Kingdom.

The Chancellor's Reply.

THE Chancellor told him, He would deliver his Opinion freely to him, and was willing He ſhould let the King know it. That ſuch a Proſpect as He had ſuppoſed, might, and ought to be prudently conſidered; but that it muſt be with great Secreſy, for that there were already to his Knowledge, ſome Whiſpers of ſuch a Purpoſe; and that it was the true End of ſending the Prince into the Weſt; which, if it ſhould be believed, it would never be in their Power to execute, though the Occaſion ſhould be moſt preſſing; therefore deſired there might might not be the leaſt Whiſper of any Contingency, that might make it fit. For the Matter itſelf, it muſt never be done, upon any Suppoſition of a Neceſſity; but when the Neceſſity ſhould be real, and in View, it ought to be reſolved, and executed at once; and He would make no Scruple of carrying him rather into Turky, than ſuffering him to be made a Priſoner to the Parliament.

THE Lord Digby replied, that though the King would be very well pleaſed with this Opinion of his, yet He would not be ſurpriſed with it; ſince He knew his Affection, and Wiſdom to be ſuch, that in ſuch an Extremity, He could not but have that Reſolution: therefore that was not the Point that the King doubted He would differ with him in. Then He continued the Diſcourſe, that he hoped there would not ſuch an Occaſion fall out; and that the Diviſions at London would yet open ſome Door for a good Peace to enter at; but if They ſhould unite, and ſhould ſend out a ſtrong Army, and likewiſe appoint the Scots to march towards them; how the King would do between two ſuch Armies, was a terrible Proſpect: and then the leaſt Blow would raiſe ſo general a Conſternation, that the King would be more diſquieted by his Friends, and Servants, than by the Enemy: That his Council was ſo conſtituted, that They would look upon the Prince's leaving the Kingdom, as leſs adviſable, than giving himſelf up to the Parliament; and that many Men were yet ſo weak, as to believe, that the beſt Way the King could take for his Security, and Preſervation of his Poſterity, was, to deliver up both Himſelf, and all his Children, into the Hands of the Parliament; and that They would then give him better Conditions, than They had offered in their Treaties; having it then in their Power to keep all ſuch Perſons from him, as They were diſſatisfied with.

IF this Opinion ſhould once ſpread itſelf, as upon any ſignal Defeat it would undoubtedly do, it muſt be expected, that the Council, and moſt of the Lords, who looked upon themſelves as ruined for their Loyalty, out of their natural Apprehenſion, would imagine, that the Prince being then in the Weſt, and at Liberty to do what ſhould be thought fit, would be directed by the King, to tranſport himſelf into Parts beyond the Sea; and the Queen his Mother being then in France, moſt probably thither; which was a Circumſtance that would likewiſe make his Tranſportation more univerſally odious. So that upon this Reflection, and erroneous Animadverſion, the King would be, in the firſt unfortunate Conjuncture, importuned by all about him, to ſend for the Prince; or at leaſt to ſend ſuch Orders to thoſe to whoſe Care He was entruſted, that they ſhould not preſume to tranſport him beyond the Seas, in what Exigent ſoever. Moſt Men would believe, that They ſhould merit of the Parliament by this Advice, and would proſecute it with the more Earneſtneſs and Importunity; whilſt thoſe Few who diſcerned the Miſchief and Ruin that muſt flow from it, would not have the Courage to deliver their Opinions in Publick, for Fear of being accuſed of the Counſel; and by this Means the King might be ſo wearied and tired with Importunity, that againſt his Judgment, He might be prevailed with, to ſign ſuch a Direction and Order, as is before mentioned; though his Majeſty was clearly ſatisfied in his Underſtanding, that if both himſelf and the Prince were in their Hands together, the beſt that could happen, would be Murdering him, and Crowning his Son; whereas if his Son were at Liberty, and out of their Reach, They would get Nothing by his Death, and conſequently would not attempt it.

THIS, he ſaid, was the fatal Conjuncture the King apprehended; and He then aſked the Chancellor, what He would do. To which He anſwered, without pauſing, that He hoped the King had made up a firm Reſolution never to depart from his own Virtue, upon which his Fate depended: and that if He forſook himſelf, He had no Reaſon to depend upon the Conſtancy of any other Man, who had Nothing to ſupport that Confidence, but the Conſcience of doing what was juſt: that no Man could doubt the Lawfulneſs of obeying him, in carrying the Prince out of the Kingdom, to avoid his being taken by the Rebels; and He was not only ready to obey in that Caſe, but would confidently adviſe it, as a Thing in Policy and Prudence neceſſary to be done. But if the King, being at Liberty, and with his own Counſellors and Servants, ſhould under his Hand forbid the Prince to tranſport himſelf, and forbid all about him, to ſuffer it to be done, He would never be guilty of diſobeying that expreſs Command: though He ſhould be very ſorry to receive it. He wiſhed the King would ſpeak with him of it, that He might take the Boldneſs to conjure him, never to put an honeſt, and a faithful Servant to that unjuſt Streight, to do any Thing expreſly contrary to his plain, and poſitive Command, upon Pretence, of knowing his ſecret Pleaſure; which is expoſing him to publick Juſtice, and Reproach, which can never be wiped out by the Conſcience of the other; and that the Artifice was not worthy the Royal Breaſt of a great Monarch. This, he ſaid, was ſtill upon the Suppoſition of the King's Liberty; but if He were a Priſoner in the Hands of his Enemies (though that ſhould not ſhake his Reſolution, or make him ſay Things He doth not intend, upon Imagination that others will know his Meaning) the Caſe would be different; and honeſt Men would purſue former Reſolutions, though They ſhould be countermanded, according to Circumſtances.

THE Conference ended; and was never after reſumed: nor did the King ever in the leaſt Degree, enter upon the Argument with the Chancellor, though He had many private Conferences with him, upon all that occurred to him with Reference to what the Prince ſhould do in the Weſt; and of all the melancholy Contingencies, which might fall out in his own Fortune. And it was generally believed, that his Majeſty had a much greater Confidence in the Chancellor, than in the other, whoſe Judgment He had no Reverence for; and this made the Chancellor afterwards believe, that all the other Diſcourſe from the Lord Digby, proceeded rather from ſome Communication of Counſels He had with the Queen, than any Directions from the King. And He did upon concurrent Circumſtances ever think, that the Queen did from the firſt Minute of the Separation of the Prince, from the King, intend to draw his Highneſs into France, that He might be near her, and under her Tuition, before any thing in the Declenſion of the King's Fortune required it, or made it counſellable; and therefore had appointed the Lord Digby, her Creature, who She knew had great Friendſhip with the Chancellor, to feel his Pulſe, and diſcover, whether He (in whom She had never Confidence) might be applicable to her Purpoſes. But He often declared, that the King himſelf never intimated the leaſt Thought of the Prince's leaving the Kingdom, till after the Battle of Naſeby; and when Fairfax was marched with his Army into the Weſt; and himſelf was in Deſpair of being able to raiſe another Army; and even then, when He ſignified his Pleaſure to that Purpoſe, He left the Time, and the Manner, and the Place to them, who were eſpecially truſted by him, about the Prince; as will appear by the particular Papers which are preſerved of that Affair; and wherein it will likewiſe appear, that his Majeſty received infinite Satisfaction, and Content in the whole Management of that Affair, and the happy and ſecure Tranſportation of the Prince, in the juſt and proper Seaſon, and when all the Kingdom was right glad that it was done.

As his Majeſty was more particularly gracious to the Chancellor from the Time of the Treaty at Uxbridge; ſo there was no Day paſſed, without his conferring with him in private upon his moſt ſecret Conſiderations, and Apprehenſions, before his Departure with the Prince for the Weſt. One Day He told him, He was very glad of what the Duke of Richmond had done the Day before; and indeed He had done ſomewhat the Day before, which very much ſurpriſed the Chancellor. When his Majeſty aroſe from Council, the Duke of Richmond whiſpered ſomewhat privately to him, upon which the King went into his Bedchamber; and the Duke called the Chancellor, and told him, the King would ſpeak with him, and ſo took him by the Hand, and led him into the Bedchamber; the Privilege, and Dignity of which Room was then ſo punctually preſerved, that the King very rarely called any Privy Counſellor to confer with him there, who was not of the Bedchamber; which maintained a juſt Reverence to the Place, and an Eſteem of thoſe who were admitted to attend there.

The Chancellor with the King's Approbation, forms a Friendſhip with the Duke of Richmond.

As ſoon as He came into the Room, before He ſaid any Thing to the King, who was there alone, the Duke ſpake to the Chancellor, and told him, that He had been brought up from his Childhood by the Crown, and had always paid it the Obedience of a Child; that as He had taken a Wife with the Approbation, and Advice of the Crown; ſo He had never made a Friendſhip, which He took to be a Kind of Marriage, without the King's Privity, and particular Approbation; that He had long had a Kindneſs for him, but had taken Time to know him well, which He thought He now did; and therefore had aſked his Majeſty's Conſent, that He might make a Friendſhip with him: and then ſaid to the King, "Sir, have I not your Approba-" tion to this Conjunction?" to which his Majeſty ſaid, "yes, my Lord, I am very glad of it; and I " will paſs my Word to you for the Chancellor, that " you will not repent it;" with many gracious Expreſſions to them both: And ſo the Duke led him out of the Room again, ſaying, now Mr. Chancellor it is in your Power to deceive me. And to this it was, that his Majeſty's Diſcourſe related the next Day, when He told him, He was glad of what had paſſed, &c. and ſaid, He hoped He would give him good Counſel; for He had not of late lived towards him in the Manner he was uſed to do; that He knew well the Duke was a very honeſt, and worthy Man, and had all the Kindneſs, as well as Duty for his Majeſty; but that He was grown ſullen, or diſcontented, and had not the ſame Countenance He uſed to have; for which He could imagine no other Reaſon, but that his Man Webb gave him ill Counſel: He ſaid, He was well contented that He ſhould take Notice, that his Majeſty was not well ſatisfied; and aſked him ſuddenly, when the Duke was at Oriel College with them; Oriel College was the Lodging of the Lord Treaſurer, where that Committee for ſecret Affairs, of which the Duke was one, uſed to meet. The Chancellor anſwered, that indeed the Duke had not been there lately, which he thought had proceeded from his Attendance upon his Majeſty, or ſome other neceſſary Divertiſement. The King ſaid, it proceeded not from thence; and that He might take Occaſion from his Abſence from thence, to let himſelf into that Diſcourſe; and afterwards proceed as He thought fit.

Character of the Duke of Richmond.

THE Duke was a Perſon of a very good Underſtanding; and of ſo great Perfection, and Punctuality in all Matters of Honeſty, and Honour, that He was infinitely ſuperior to any Kind of Temptation. He had all the Warmth, and Paſſions of a Subject, and a Servant, and a Friend for the King, and for his Perſon; but He was then a Man of a high Spirit; and valued his very Fidelity at the Rate it was worth; and not the leſs, for that it had almoſt ſtood ſingle for ſome Time. The Chancellor was very ſorry for this Diſcovery; and choſe to wait upon the Duke the ſame Day, near the Hour when the Meeting uſed to be at Oriel College: And when He had ſpent a ſhort Time with him, He ſaid, He thought it was Time to go to Oriel College, and aſked his Grace, whether He would pleaſe to go thither; for which He making ſome Excuſe, the other preſſed him with ſome Earneſtneſs, and ſaid, it was obſerved that He had a good Time declined that Meeting, and if He ſhould not now go thither, He ſhould be doubtful there was ſome Reaſon for it.

THE Duke replied, that He had indeed been abſent from thence for ſome Time, and that He would deal clearly with him as his Friend, but deſired it ſhould not be known; that He was reſolved to be there no more. Then complained, that the King was not kind to him; at leaſt had not that Confidence in him, which He had uſed to have: And then ſpake of many Particulars looſely; and eſpecially, that before the Treaty, He had adviſed the King to uſe all the Means He could to draw them to a Treaty, for many Advantages which were like to be gotten by it; and to that Purpoſe, produced a Letter that He had newly received from the Counteſs of Carliſle, and read it to his Majeſty, who then ſeemed not to be moved with the Contents; but afterwards in ſeveral Diſcourſes reflected upon it in ſuch in a Manner, as if He were jealous, that the Duke held too much Correſpondence with that People: Which He looked upon, as ſuch a Point of Diffidence, that it was no longer fit for him to be preſent, when the ſecret Part of his Affairs was tranſacted; and ſo He had, and would forbear to meet in that Place, till his Majeſty ſhould entertain a better Opinion of him: yet He concealed the Trouble of Mind which He ſuſtained; and wiſhed, that no Notice might be taken of it.

Whom He endeavours to reconcile to the King;

THE Chancellor told him, it was too late for that Caution; that the Lords themſelves could not but obſerve his long Abſence who before uſed to be the moſt punctual; and confeſſed to him, that the King himſelf had ſpoken to him of it with a Senſe of Wonder, and Diſlike; which, He ſaid, He was to blame himſelf for; ſince the Honour He had done him to the King, had likewiſe diſpoſed his Majeſty to truſt him ſo far, as to expreſs ſome Diſſatisfaction He had in his Grace's late Carriage and Behaviour. The Duke ſeemed not diſpleaſed with the Communication, but thereupon entered into a fuller, and warmer Diſcourſe than before; how much the King had withdrawn his Confidence from him, and truſted others much more than him. In Sum, it was eaſy to diſcern, that the Thing that troubled him, was the Power and Credit that John Aſhburnham had with the King; which his Vanity made him own to that Degree, that He was not content to enjoy the Benefit of it, except He made it publick; and to be taken Notice of by all Men; which could not but reflect upon his Honour: And when the Chancellor ſeemed to think it impoſſible, that himſelf could believe, that the King could prefer a Man of Mr. Aſhburnham's Talent, before his Grace; He proceeded with many Inſtances, and inſiſted with moſt Indignation upon one.

THAT

THAT about a Year before, Sir John Lucas, who was well known to his Grace, having met him abroad in his Travels, and ever after paid a particular Reſpect to him, had applied himſelf to him, and deſired his Favour, that when there ſhould be any Opportunity offered, He would recommend him to the King, to whom He was not unknown; that his Affection to his Majeſty's Service was notorious enough, and that his Sufferings were ſo likewiſe; his Houſe being the firſt that was plundered in the Beginning of the War; by which, the Loſs He ſuſtained in Furniture, Plate, Money, and Stock, was very conſiderable; ſo that He might modeſtly hope, that when his Majeſty ſcattered his Favours upon others of his own Rank, his poor Service might likewiſe be remembered: But He had ſeen Men raiſed to Dignities, who He was ſure had not the Advantage over him in their Sufferings, whatever They might have in their Actings; and He deſired no more, but (ſince it was too evident that his Majeſty's Wants were great, and that Money would do him ſome Service) that He might receive that Degree of Honour which others had, and He would make ſuch a Preſent to him, as ſhould manifeſt his Gratitude; and He deſired to owe the Obligation to his Grace, and to receive it only by his Mediation.

HE ſaid, He had moved this Matter, with the Relation of all the Circumſtances, to his Majeſty, who ſpake very graciouſly of the Gentleman, as a Perſon of Merit, but ſaid, He was reſolved to make no more Lords; which He received as a very good Anſwer, and looked upon as a good Reſolution, and commended it; deſiring only, that if at any Time his Majeſty found it neceſſary to vary from that Reſolution, He would remember his Propoſition, and gratify that Gentleman; which He promiſed to do; and with all which He acquainted the Perſon concerned; thinking it could not but well ſatisfy him. But He told him, that he was ſorry that he could not receive the Honour, by his Grace's Recommendation; but for the Thing itſelf, He could have it when He would; and ſhortly after it was diſpatched by Mr. Aſhburnham: He aſked, whether this was not preferring Mr. Aſhburnham very much before him. The Chancellor told him, He was preferred as the better Market Man; and that he ought not to believe, that the King's Affection ſwayed him to that Preference, but an Opinion, that the other would make the better Bargain. He replied, his Majeſty was deceived in that, for He had told him what the other meant to give, without the leaſt Thought of reſerving any Thing for himſelf; whereas his Majeſty had now received five hundred Pounds leſs, and his Market Man had gotten ſo much for his Pains.

IN Concluſion, He prevailed ſo far with him, that They went that Afternoon together to the Committee to Oriel College; and the next Day the Chancellor ſpake with the King again, and told him, that the Duke had been in the Afternoon with the Committee, where many Things had been conſulted; and that He found, all his Trouble proceeded from an Apprehenſion, that his Majeſty had withdrawn his Affection from him; at leaſt that He, the Duke, had not the ſame Credit with his Majeſty, which He had formerly had; and that the Senſe, and Fear of that, could not but make an Impreſſion upon a good Servant, who loved his Maſter as well as He did. His Majeſty ſaid, They two ſhould not live as well together, as They had done, as long as the Duke kept his Man Webb; who made him believe, that the King was wholly governed by Aſhburnham, and cared not for any Body elſe. He ſaid, no Body who knew him, could believe He could be governed by Aſhburnham; who, though an honeſt Man, and one that He believed loved him well, no Man thought was of an Underſtanding ſuperior to his Majeſty; and enlarged himſelf upon this Argument ſo much, that he ſeemed as it were glad of the Opportunity, to clear himſelf from that Aſperſion, or Imputation.

And the King to the Duke of Richmond.

IT is a very great Misfortune for any Prince to be ſuſpected to be governed by any Man; for as the Reproach is of all others the moſt grievous, ſo They think the truſting weak Men, who are much ſhort of their own Vigour of Wit, and Underſtanding, is a ſufficient Vindication from that Calumny; and ſo, before They are aware of it, They decline wiſer Men, who are fit to adviſe them, and give themſelves to weaker, upon an Imagination, that no Body will ever ſuſpect, They can be governed by them. In fine, He found the Work too hard for him; the King being ſo much incenſed againſt Webb, that He expected the Duke ſhould turn him away: and the Duke himſelf, looked upon the King's Prejudice, as infuſed into him by Aſhburnham, upon particular Malice; having often deſired, that ſome Accuſer might charge Webb, and He be heard to anſwer for himſelf; which the King not being willing to admit, the other was unwilling to diſmiſs a Servant, his Secretary, who had ſerved him long, and was very uſeful to him; and who indeed was never ſuſpected for any Infidelity, or Want of Affection to his Maſter: and ſo the Chancellor, to his great Trouble, was not able to remove that Cloudineſs that remained in both their Countenances; which never produced the leaſt ill Effect in the View or Obſervation of any; the Duke's Duty being never in any Degree diminiſhed; and the King's Kindneſs to him continuing with many gracious Evidences, to his Death.

But without Succeſs.

The King's laſt Conference with the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

THE laſt Conference his Majeſty had with the Chancellor, was the very Day the Prince began his Journey towards the Weſt, and indeed after He had received his Bleſſing; when his Majeſty ſent for him into his Bedchamber; and repeated ſome Things he had mentioned before. He told him, "there had been many Things which had troubled "him, with Reference to his Son's Abſence from "him; for all which, but one, He had ſatisfied "himſelf: the one was, the Inconvenience which "might ariſe from the Weakneſs and Folly of his "Governour; againſt which He had provided, as "well as He could, by obliging the Prince to fol"low the Advice of his Council in all Things; "which He was well aſſured He would do; and "He had given them as much Authority, as They "could wiſh. Another was, that there was one Ser"vant about the Prince, who He thought, had too "much Credit with him, which was Elliot; who "He did not intend ſhould be with him in the "Journey; and had therefore ſent him into France "to the Queen, with Direction to her Majeſty, to "keep him there, and if He ſhould return whilſt "the Prince remained in the Weſt, that He ſhould "be ſent to his Majeſty; and not ſuffered to ſtay "with his Highneſs; and that was all the Care He "could take in thoſe two Particulars: But there was "a Third, in which he knew not what to do, and "that troubled him much more than the other "two." When the Chancellor ſeemed full of Expectation to know what that might be, the King ſaid, "I have obſerved of late ſome kind of Sharp"neſs, upon many Occaſions, between Colepepper "and you; and though you are joined with other "honeſt Men, yet my great Confidence is upon "you two: I know not that the Fault is in you; "nay, I muſt confeſs, that it is very often in him; "but let it be where it will, any Difference, and

"Unkind-

" Unkindneſs between you two, muſt be at my " Charge; And I muſt tell you the Fear I have of " it, gives me much Trouble: I have ſpoken very " plainly to him my Apprehenſion in this Point, " within this Hour; and He hath made as fair Pro- " miſes to me as I can wiſh; and upon my Con- " ſcience I think He loves you, though He may " ſometimes provoke you to be angry."

THE King here making a Pauſe, the Chancellor, out of Countenance, ſaid, " He was very ſor- " ry, that he had ever given his Majeſty any Oc- " caſion for ſuch an Apprehenſion; but very glad, " that He had vouchſafed to inform him of it; be- " cauſe He believed He ſhould give his Majeſty " ſuch Aſſurance in that Particular, as would fully " ſatisfy him: He aſſured his Majeſty, that He had " a great Eſteem of the Lord Colepepper; and though " He might have at ſome Times Paſſions which " were inconvenient, He was ſo confident of him- " ſelf, that They ſhould not provoke, or diſturb " him, that He was well content, that his Majeſty " ſhould condemn, and think him in the Fault, if " any Thing ſhould fall out, of Prejudice to his " Service, from a Difference between them two." With which his Majeſty appeared abundantly ſatiſfied, and pleaſed; and embracing him, gave him his Hand to kiſs; and He immediately went to Horſe, and followed the Prince: And this was the laſt Time the Chancellor ever ſaw that gracious and excellent King.

The Chancellor attends the Prince into the Weſt; and is there firſt aſſaulted by the Gout.

IT was upon the 4th of March, in the Year 1644, that the Prince parted from the King his Father. He lodged that Night at Farringdon; having made his Journey thither, in one continued Storm of Rain, from the Minute He left Oxford: And from thence went the next Day, to the Garriſon of the Devizes; and the third to the City of Bath; which being a ſafe Place, and within ſeven, or eight Miles of Briſtol; He ſtaid there two, or three Days. And in this Journey the Chancellor was firſt aſſaulted with the Gout; having never had the leaſt Apprehenſion of it before; but from his coming to Bath, He was not able to ſtand; and ſo went by Coach to Briſtol; where in few Days He recovered that firſt Lameneſs; which ever after afflicted him too often. And ſo the Year 1644 ended, which ſhall conclude this Part.

PART the FOURTH.

A Very particular Memorial of all material Affairs in the Weſt, during the ſubſequent Year of 1645, during the Prince's Reſidence in the Weſt—The State and Temper of that Country, after the Defeat of his Majeſty's Army at Naſeby—The ſeveral Plots and Devices of the Lord Goring, to get the Prince into his Power—The Debauchery of that Army, and amongſt the Officers of it; and the Defeats it ſuffered from the Enemy, through that Debauchery—Goring's Departure out of the Kingdom; and the Poſture he left his Army in—The beating up of their Quarters afterwards—The entering of Fairfax into the Weſt with his Army; and his ſudden taking the Towns there—The mutinous Behaviour of Sir Richard Greenvil, and the Quarrels and Conflicts between the Troops under his Command, with thoſe under the Lord Goring—The Prince's Retreat by Degrees backward into Cornwall, as Fairfax advanced—The ſeveral Meſſages, and Orders from the King, for the tranſporting the Prince out of England; and all the Directions, and Reſolutions thereupon; and the ſeveral Meſſages from the Queen, and the Earl of St. Albans; with the Aſſurance of a Supply of ſix thouſand Foot, under the Command of Ruvigni, promiſed confidently to be landed in Cornwall, within one Month; when there was not any ſuch Thing in Nature, nor one Company raiſed, or Ship in Readineſs, or in View for ſuch an Expedition, &c. —The King's obliging the Lord Hopton, to take Charge of thoſe broken and diſſolute Troops—The Commitment of Sir Richard Greenvil, for not ſubmitting to be commanded by him; and for endeavouring to raiſe a Party in the Country, to treat with the Enemy, for the Security, and Neutrality of Cornwall; and the Routing the Lord Hopton's Troops at Torrington—The Prince's Retreat thereupon to Pendennis; and the Factions and Conſpiracies between ſome of his own Servants, and ſome Gentlemen of the Country, to hinder the Prince from going out of the Kingdom; and the Departure of his Highneſs from Pendennis, in the End of that Year 1645, and his Arrival in the Iſland of Scilly, is contained in Papers, orderly and methodically ſet down; which Papers and Relation, are not now at Hand, but are ſafe; and will be eaſily found: Together with his Highneſs's Stay in the Iſland of Scilly: From whence the next Day, the Lord Colepepper was diſpatched with Letters, to the Queen to Paris, to give Notice of his Highneſs's being in that Iſland; and to deſire Money, Arms, and Ammunition for the Defence thereof: And at the ſame Time another Veſſel was ſent into Ireland, to give the Marquis of Ormond likewiſe Information of it; and to deſire that two Companies of Foot might be ſent thither, to encreaſe that Garriſon; and to defend it in caſe the Enemy ſhould attack it —His Highneſs's Stay in Scilly, near ſix Weeks; until the Lords Capel, and Hopton came thither; after They had made Conditions for the diſbanding their Troops, with Fairfax; which Goring's Troops made it neceſſary to do: They not only refuſing to obey all Orders, but mingling every Day with the Troops of the Enemy; and remaining quietly together in the ſame Quarters, drinking and making merry with each other — The Report of a Fleet deſigned from the Parliament for Scilly, and thoſe Lords viewing the Iſland, and not looking upon it as tenable, cauſed a new Conſultation to be held, whether it were fit for his Highneſs to remain there; till the Return of the Lord Colepepper, or to remove ſooner; and whither He ſhould remove; the Frigate which brought the Prince from Pendennis being ſtill kept in Readineſs at Scilly, upon the Foreſight that his Remove might come to be neceſſary — That upon this Conſultation it was reſolved, that it would not be ſafe for his Highneſs to remain there; but that He ſhould tranſport himſelf from thence, into the Iſland of Jerſey; which was done accordingly — And his Highneſs's Arrival there about the Beginning of April, 1645 — The Prince's Reception in Jerſey, by Sir George Carteret; and the univerſal Joy of the Iſland for his Arrival; with the Situation, and Strength of the Iſland—The Lord Digby's Arrival in Jerſey, with two Frigates from Ireland, and with two hundred Soldiers; having been at Scilly, and there heard of his Highneſs's Departure for Jerſey—His earneſt Advice for the Prince his going for Ireland; and, when He could not obtain his Highneſs's Conſent, till the Return of the Lord Colepepper, his going to Paris to perſuade the Queen, and to proteſt againſt the Prince's going for France; againſt which He inveighed with more Paſſion than any Man—The Arrival of Mr. Thomas Jermyn from Paris, with very poſitive Orders for the Prince's Repair thither, from the Queen —And ſhortly after, the Lord Colepepper's Arrival, who had been diſpatched from her Majeſty to return to Scilly, before She knew of his Highneſs's Remove from thence; which Advertiſement overtook the Lord Colepepper at Havre de Grace, after He was embarked; and ſo he bent his Courſe thither, and had the ſame Orders for the Prince his going to Paris, as Mr. Jermyn had likewiſe brought.

THERE was none of the Council inclined that his Highneſs, being in a Place of unqueſtionable Safety, ſhould ſuddenly depart from thence; till the State and Condition in which his Majeſty was, and his Pleaſure, might be known: It was then underſtood, that his Majeſty had left Oxford, and was with the Scotiſh Army before Newark; which He had cauſed to be rendered, that the Army might retire; which it preſently did, and the King in it, to Newcaſtle: The Prince was yet in his Father's Dominions; ſome Places in England ſtill holding out, as Oxford, Worceſter, Pendennis, and other Places; that it would be eaſy, in a ſhort Time, to underſtand the King's Pleaſure; and that there could be no Inconvenience in expecting it; the Prince's Perſon being in no poſſible Danger: But that the Miſchief might be very great, if without the King's Direction it were done; whether his Majeſty ſhould be well, or ill treated by the Scots; and that the Parliament might make it a new Matter of Reproach againſt the King, that He had ſent the Heir Apparent of the Crown out of the Kingdom; which could be no otherwiſe excuſed, at leaſt by thoſe who attended him, than by evident and apparent Neceſſity: Thoſe Reaſons appearing of ſo much Weight to the Prince himſelf (who had not a natural Inclination to go into France) and to all the Council, that the Lord Capel, and the Lord Colepepper, were deſired to go to Paris, to ſatisfy the Queen, why the Prince had deferred yielding a preſent Obedience to her Command.

THE Treatment They received at Paris, and their Return again to Jerſey, together with the Lord Jermyn, and Lord Digby, and ſome other Perſons of Quality: The Lord Digby being to return to Ireland, with eight thouſand Piſtoles; which the Cardinal ſent towards the Supply of the King's Service there; and being by it, and the Cardinal, ſo throughly convinced of the Neceſſity of the Prince's going for France, that He was more poſitive for it, than any of the Reſt; and had promiſed the Queen, that He would convert the Chancellor, and make him conſent to it; with whom he had a great Friendſhip—The Debate at Jerſey upon their coming back—The Lord Capel adhering to his former Opinion, that we might firſt know the King's Opinion; towards the receiving of which, He had offered the Queen, and now offered again, to go himſelf to Newcaſtle, where the King ſtill was; no Body knowing what would be the Iſſue of the Controverſy between the Scots, and the Parliament; and if the King ſhould direct it, every Man would willingly attend his Highneſs; and punctually obſerve whatſoever the King commanded: And becauſe the Objection might be removed, of his being taken Priſoner, by the Parliament, or his being not ſuffered by the Scots to ſpeak with the King; He did offer, and all who were of his Opinion conſented to it, that if He did not return to Jerſey, within one Month, the Prince ſhould purſue the Queen's Orders; and every Man would attend his Highneſs into France; and a Month's Delay could be of no ill Conſequence—The Prince's Reſolution to go preſently for Paris;—and the Reaſons which moved the Lords Capel, and Hopton, and the Chancellor, to excuſe themſelves—and his Highneſs's Permiſſion to remain in Jerſey, from whence They would attend his Commands, when he had any Service for them—And the ſudden Reſervedneſs, and Strangeneſs that grew between thoſe, who adviſed the going, and thoſe who were for ſtaying—and the Prince's embarking himſelf for France, about July, in the Year 1646—

ALL theſe Particulars are ſo exactly remembered, in thoſe Papers, remaining in a Cabinet eaſy to be found; that they will quickly be put into a Method; and contain enough to be inſerted in the Fourth Part of this Relation.

Montpelier, 9th November, 1669.

The

The LIFE of

EDWARD Earl of CLARENDON

From his Birth to the Reſtoration of the ROYAL FAMILY in 1660.

PART the FIFTH.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer's Reſidence at Jerſey.

THE Prince having left Jerſey, about July, in the Year 1646; the Chancellor of the Exchequer remained there about two Years after; where He preſently betook himſelf to his Study; and enjoyed (as He was wont to ſay) the greateſt Tranquillity of Mind imaginable. Whilſt the Lords Capel, and Hopton ſtaid there, They lived, and kept Houſe together in St. Hillary's; which is the chief Town of the Iſland; where having a Chaplain of their own, They had Prayers every Day in the Church, at Eleven of the Clock in the Morning; till which Hour They enjoyed themſelves in their Chambers, according as They thought fit; the Chancellor betaking himſelf to the Continuance of the Hiſtory, which He had begun at Scilly, and ſpending moſt of his Time at that Exerciſe. The other two walked, or rode abroad, or read, as They were diſpoſed; but at the Hour of Prayers They always met; and then dined together at the Lord Hopton's Lodging, which was the beſt Houſe; They being lodged at ſeveral Houſes, with Convenience enough. Their Table was maintained at their joint Expence, only for Dinners; They never uſing to ſup; but met always upon the Sands in the Evening to walk, often going to the Caſtle to Sir George Carteret; who treated them with extraordinary Kindneſs and Civility, and ſpent much Time with them; and in Truth, the whole Iſland ſhewed great Affection to them; and all the Perſons of Quality invited them to their Houſes, to very good Entertainments; and all other Ways expreſſed great Eſteem towards them.

He writes from thence to the King.

AND from hence They writ a joint Letter to the King, which They ſent to him by Mr. Fanſhaw; in which They made great Profeſſion of their Duty to his Majeſty, and their Readineſs to proceed in his Service; and to wait upon the Prince upon the firſt Occaſion; with ſuch Reaſons for their not attending him into France, as They thought could not but be ſatisfactory to his Majeſty; declaring, that They had only deſired that He would ſtay ſo long in a Place of his own, of unqueſtionable Security, as that They might receive the Signification of his Majeſty's Pleaſure for his Remove; upon which They were all reſolved to have waited upon him: Though it was evident enough to them, that their Advice would be no longer hearkened unto, after his Highneſs ſhould arrive with the Queen.

In England, Men's Hopes, and Fears, were raiſed according to their Tempers; for there was Argument for both Affections in the Tranſactions, and Occurrences of every Day; it being no eaſy Matter, to make a Judgment which Party would prevail; nor what They would do if They did. The Lord Capel received Advice from his Friends in England, to remove from Jerſey into ſome Part of the United Provinces; that ſo being in a Place to which there could be no Prejudice, his Friends might the more hopefully ſolicit for Liberty for him to return into his own Country, and that He might live in his own Houſe; which They had Reaſon to hope, would not be denied to a Perſon, who had many Friends, and could not be conceived to have any Enemies; his Perſon being worthily eſteemed by all. Whereupon with the full Concurrence, and Advice of his two Friends from whom He had great Tenderneſs to part; and with whom He renewed his Contract of Friendſhip at parting, in a particular Manner, upon Foreſight of what might happen; He went from thence, and firſt waited upon the Prince at Paris, that He might have his Royal Highneſs's Approbation, for his Return into England, if He might do it upon honourable Conditions: And from thence, with all poſſible Demonſtration of Grace from the Prince, He tranſported himſelf to Middleburgh in Zealand; where He remained till his Friends procured Liberty for him to return, and remain at his own Houſe. The worthy and noble Things He did after, deſerve to be tranſmitted to Poſterity, in ſome more illuſtrious Teſtimony, that may be worthy to be recorded.

THE Lord Capel thus leaving Jerſey, the Lord Hopton and the Chancellor remained ſtill there, in the ſame Conjunction, until, ſome few Months after, the Lord Hopton received the News of the Death of his Wife; and of the Arrival in France of his Unkle, Sir Arthur Hopton; who having been Ambaſſador from the King in Spain, had left that Court, and retired to Paris; from whence He ſhortly after removed to Roüen, with a Purpoſe, as ſoon as He had at large conferred with his Nephew, to go into England, for the Good and Benefit of both their Fortunes: And upon this Occaſion, the Lord Hopton likewiſe left Jerſey, with all poſſible Profeſſions of an entire Friendſhip to the Chancellor, which was never violated in the leaſt Degree to his Death. And the Chancellor being thus left alone; He was with great Civility, and Friendſhip invited by Sir George Carteret, to remove from the Town (where He had lived with his Friends till then) and to live with him in the Caſtle Elizabeth; whither He went, the next Day after the Departure of the Lord Hopton, and remained there to his wonderful Contentment, in the very chearful Society of Sir George Carteret, and his Lady; in whoſe Houſe He received all the Liberty, and Entertainment He could have expected in his own Family; of which He always retained ſo juſt a Memory, that there was never any Intermiſſion, or Decay of that Friendſhip He then made: And He remained there, till He was ſent for again to attend the Prince, which will be mentioned in it's Time.

And removes to Sir George Carteret's.

HE built a Lodging in the Caſtle, of two or three convenient Rooms, to the Wall of the Church; which Sir George Carteret had repaired, and beautified; and over the Door of his Lodging He ſet up his Arms, with this Inſcription, Bene Vixit, qui bene Latuit: And He always took Pleaſure in relating, with what great Tranquillity of Spirit (though deprived of the Joy He took in his Wife, and Children) He ſpent his Time here, amongſt his Books (which He got from Paris) and his Papers; between which He ſeldom ſpent leſs than ten Hours in the Day; and it can hardly be believed how much He read, and writ there; inſomuch as He did uſually compute, that during his whole Stay in Jerſey, which

Where He writes the Hiſtory of the Troubles.

was

was ſome Months above two Years, He writ daily little leſs than one Sheet of large Paper, with his own Hand; moſt of which are ſtill to be ſeen amongſt his Papers.

Towards which the King furniſhes him with the Paſſages of the Years 1645, and 1646.

FROM Hampton Court, his Majeſty writ to the Chancellor of the Exchequer with his own Hand; in which He took Notice that He was writing the Hiſtory of the late Troubles, for which He thanked him, ſaying, that He knew no Man could do it ſo well; and that He would not do it the worſe, by the Helps that He would very ſpeedily ſend him (as his Majeſty ſhortly after did, in two Manuſcripts very fairly written; containing all Matters of Importance, that had paſſed from the Time that the Prince of Wales went from his Majeſty into the Weſt, to the very Time that his Majeſty himſelf went from Oxford, to the Scotiſh Army; which were all the Paſſages in the Years 1645, and 1646) He uſed many gracious Expreſſions in that Letter to him; and ſaid, He looked upon him as one of thoſe, who had ſerved him with moſt Fidelity, and therefore He might be confident of his Kindneſs; and that He would bring him to him with the firſt; though He ſaid, He did not hold him to be infallible, as He might diſcern by what He had commanded Dr. Sheldon, who was then Clerk of his Cloſet, to write to him; and at the ſame Time the Doctor writ him Word, that the King was ſorry that He, the Chancellor, ſtaid at Jerſey, and did not attend the Prince into France; and that if He had been there, He would have been able to have prevented the Vexation his Majeſty had endured at Newcaſtle, by Meſſages from Paris.

THE Doctor likewiſe ſent him Word, that great Pains had been taken from Paris, to incenſe the King againſt him; but that it had ſo little prevailed, that his Majeſty had with ſome Sharpneſs reprehended thoſe, who blamed him, and had juſtified the Chancellor. He made haſte to anſwer his Majeſty's Letter, and gave him ſo much Satisfaction, that his Majeſty ſaid, He was too hard for him. And about the ſame Time the Lord Capel came into England; and though He was under Security to the Parliament for behaving himſelf peaceably, He was not reſtrained from ſeeing the King; and ſo gave him a very particular Information of all that had paſſed at Jerſey; and many other Things, of which his Majeſty had never been informed before; which put it out of any Body's Power to make any ill Impreſſions in him towards the Chancellor.

UPON the King's refuſing to give his Aſſent to the four Acts, ſent to him from the Parliament, when He was in the Iſle of Wight, They voted, that no more Addreſſes ſhould be made to the King; and publiſhed a Declaration to that Effect, which contained ſevere Charges againſt his Majeſty. Vid. Hiſt. Reb. Fol. Vol. 3. P. 67, &c. Dub. Edit. Vol. 3. P. 54, &c.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer writes, and publiſhes an Anſwer to the Parliament's Declaration of the 15th of Feb. 1647.

THE Chancellor of the Exchequer no ſooner received a Copy of it in Jerſey, than He prepared a very large and full Anſwer to it; in which He made the Malice and the Treaſon of that libellous Declaration to appear; and his Majeſty's Innocence in all the Particulars charged upon him, with ſuch pathetical Applications, and Inſinuations, as were moſt like to work upon the Affections of the People: All which was tranſmitted (by the Care of Mr. Secretary Nicholas, who reſided at Caen in Normandy, and held a conſtant Correſpondence with the Chancellor) to a truſty Hand in London; who cauſed it to be well printed, and divulged, and found Means to ſend it to the King: Who, after he had read it, ſaid He durſt ſwear it was writ by the Chancellor, if it were not that there was more Divinity in it, than He expected from him, which made him believe He had conferred with Dr. Steward. But ſome Months after, being informed by Secretary Nicholas, He ſent the Chancellor Thanks for it; and expreſſed upon all Occaſions, that He was much pleaſed with that Vindication.

THE Lord Capel had written to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who remained ſtill in Jerſey, ſignifying the King's Commands, that as ſoon as the Chancellor ſhould be required to wait upon the Prince, He ſhould without Delay obey the Summons. The King had writ to the Queen, that when it ſhould be neceſſary for the Prince to remove out of France, the Chancellor ſhould have Notice of it, and be required to attend him. About the Beginning of April, in the Year 1648, the Lord Capel writ again to the Chancellor, giving him Notice, that He would probably be ſent for ſoon, and deſired him to be ready. About the Middle of May, the Queen ſent to the Chancellor of the Exchequer to Jerſey, commanding, that He would wait upon the Prince at Paris, upon a Day that was paſt before the Letter came to his Hands; but as ſoon as He received the Summons, He immediately tranſported himſelf into Normandy, and went to Caen; from thence He haſtened to Roüen, where He found the Lord Cottington, the Earl of Briſtol, and Secretary Nicholas, who had received the ſame Commands. They were informed that the Prince was paſſed by towards Calais, and Direction was ſent, that the Chancellor, and the reſt ſhould ſtay at Roüen, till They ſhould receive new Orders from Calais. Within few Days They received Advice, that the Prince had put himſelf on board a Ship that He found at Calais bound for Holland, where They were to hear from him; whereupon They removed from Roüen to Dieppe; from whence They might embark for Holland when required. Vid. Hiſt. Reb. Fol. Vol. 3. p. 102, &c. Dub. Edit. Vol. 3. p. 76.

AFTER the Lord Cottington, the Earl of Briſtol, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer had ſtaid at Dieppe ſome Days, and were confirmed by Reports every Day, that the Prince was in Holland; and that the Fleet wanted ſome Proviſions, without which it could not put out to Sea; They reſolved to make Uſe of the firſt Veſſel, of which there were many then in the Harbour, that ſhould be bound for Holland; and to tranſport themſelves thither; and there was one which within two, or three Days would ſet out for Fluſhing. The Earl of Briſtol had no Mind to venture himſelf in ſuch a Veſſel, and ſince the Fleet that had declared for the King was then in Holland, He apprehended that the Parliament might have other Veſſels abroad, that might eaſily ſeize upon that ſmall Bark; and ſo after ſome Debate with the Lord Cottington (They two being ſeldom of one Mind) the Earl reſolved to return to his old Habitation at Caen, and expect another Occaſion.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer embarks for Dunkirk.

THE Chancellor, who knew nothing of the Sea, nor underſtood the Hazards thereof (being always ſo afflicted upon that Element with Sickneſs, that He conſidered nothing about it; and holding himſelf obliged to make what Haſte He could to the Prince) committed himſelf entirely to the Lord Cottington: And when They reſolved to embark themſelves in the Veſſel bound for Fluſhing, a French Man of War, which was called the King's Ship, came into the Road of Dieppe, and offered to carry them the next Day to Dunkirk; which they took to be the ſafer Paſſage: And ſo giving the Captain as much Money as He demanded, They put themſelves upon his miſerable Frigate; where they had no Accommodations, but the open Deck; and were ſafely ſet on Shore at Dunkirk; where Marſhal Rantzaw was then Governor. And They no ſooner landed in the Evening, but Carteret, a Servant of the Prince's, came to them, and informed them, that that the Prince was entered the River of Thames with the Fleet; and that He was ſent by his Highneſs to the Marſhal for a Frigate, which he had offered to lend the Prince; and that He had delivered the Letter, and the Marſhal (who had been out all the Night before upon a Deſign upon the Enemy; and was newly arrived, and gone to Bed) had promiſed him that the Frigate ſhould be ready the next Day. This ſeemed an extraordinary good Fortune to them, that They might now embark directly for the Fleet, without going into Holland, which They were willing to avoid; and ſo reſolved to ſpeak with the Marſhal as ſoon as They could, that They might be confirmed by him, that his Frigate ſhould be ready the next Day; and thereupon ſent a Servant to wait at the Marſhal's Lodging, that They might know when He waked, and was to be ſpoken with.

THE Marſhal had Notice of their Arrival before the Servant came to him, and of their Deſire to go to the Prince; and ſent one of his Officers to welcome them to the Town, and to ſee them well accommodated with Lodging; and to excuſe him, that He did not wait upon them that Night, by Reaſon of the Fatigue He had undergone the Night before, and that Day; and to oblige them to dine with him the next Day, againſt which Time the Veſſel would be made ready to receive them, and tranſport them to the Prince's Fleet; with which They were abundantly ſatisfied: and betook themſelves to their Reſt for that Night: and were early up the next Morning to ſee the Marſhal; but it was late before He roſe.

HE received them with great Civility, being a very proper Man, of a moſt extraordinary Preſence, and Aſpect, and might well be reckoned a very handſome Man, though He had but one Leg, one Hand, one Eye, and one Ear, the other being cut off with that Side of his Face: beſides many other Cuts on the other Cheek, and upon his Head, with many Wounds in the Body; notwithſtanding all which, He ſtood very upright, and had a very graceful Motion, a clear Voice, and a charming Delivery; and if He had not, according to the Cuſtom of his Nation (for He was a German) too much indulged to the Exceſs of Wine, He had been one of the moſt Excellent Captains of that Age. He profeſſed great Affection to the Prince, and much commended the Frigate He intended to ſend to him; which for the Swiftneſs of it was called the Hare; and out ſailed, as He ſaid, all the Veſſels of that Coaſt; and after He had treated them with a very excellent, and a jovial Dinner, about Four of the Clock in the Afternoon, He brought them to their Boat, that put them on board their Frigate; which was but a ſmall Veſſel of twenty Guns, much inferiour to what They expected, by the Deſcription the Marſhal had made of it. However, it was very proper for the Uſe They were to make of it, to be delivered at the Fleet; and ſo, the Moon ſhining very fair, They weighed Anchor about Sun ſet, with a very ſmall Gale of Wind.

And from thence for the Prince's Fleet.

THE Prince being Maſter at Sea, They had no manner of Apprehenſion of an Enemy; not knowing, or conſidering, that They were very near Oſtend, and ſo, in Reſpect of the Veſſel They were in liable to be made a Prize by thoſe Men of War; as it fell out: For about Break of Day, in a dead Calm, They found themſelves purſued by ſix, or ſeven Ships, which, as They drew nearer, were known by the Seamen to be the Frigates of Oſtend. There was no Hope to Eſcape by the Swiftneſs of the Veſſel, for there was not the leaſt Breath of Wind; and it was to no Purpoſe to reſiſt; for beſides that the Veſſel was not half manned, four, or five of the Purſuers were ſtronger Ships; ſo that it was thought beſt to let the Sails fall, That they might ſee there was no Purpoſe of Reſiſtance; and to ſend Carteret in the Boat, to inform the Ships who the Perſons were, that were on Board, and that They had a Paſs from the Arch-Duke; for an authentick Copy of a Paſs the Arch-Duke had ſent to the Prince, had been ſent to them. All the Ships, though They had the King of Spain's Commiſſion, were Freebooters, belonging to private Owners, who obſerved no Rules, or Laws of Nations; but They boarded the Veſſel, with their Swords drawn, and Piſtols cocked, and without any Diſtinction, plundered all the Paſſengers with equal Rudeneſs; ſave that They ſtripped ſome of the Servants to their very Shirts; They uſed not the reſt with that Barbarity, being ſatisfied with taking all They had in their Pockets, and carefully examined all their Valiſes, and Trunks, in which They found good Booty.

But is taken by ſome Frigates of Oſtend;

THE Lord Cottington loſt in Money, and Jewels, above one thouſand Pounds; the Chancellor in Money about two hundred Pounds, and all his Cloaths and Linen; and Sir George Ratcliffe, and Mr. Wansford, who were in the Company, above five hundred Pounds in Money and Jewels. And having pillaged them in this Manner, They carried them all, with the Frigate They had been in, Priſoners to Oſtend; where They arrived about Two of the Clock in the Afternoon; all the Men and Women of the Town being gathered together to behold the Prize that was brought in within ſo few Hours; for Intelligence had been ſent from Dunkirk, the Night before (according to the Cuſtom, and good Intelligence obſerved in thoſe Places) of the going out of this Veſſel, which had ſuch Perſons on Board. When They were on Shore, They were carried, through all the Spectators, to a common Inn; from whence They ſent to the Magiſtrates to inform them of what Condition They were; and of the Injuries They had received, by having been treated as Enemies; and demanded Reſtitution of Ship, and Goods.

and carried to that Port.

The Magiſtrates, who were called the Lords of the Admiralty, came preſently to them, and when They were fully informed of the whole Matter, and had ſeen the Arch-Duke's Paſs, They ſeemed very much troubled: and with much Civility aſſured them, that They ſhould not only receive all that had been taken from them; but that the Men ſhould be ſeverely puniſhed for their Tranſgreſſion. They immediately diſcharged thoſe Guards that kept them as Priſoners; and provided the beſt Lodgings in the Town for them: And becauſe it was growing towards the Evening, and the Frigates were not yet come in, They excuſed themſelves that They could do no more that Night; but promiſed to go themſelves on board the Ships the next Morning early; and deſired that ſome of the Gentlemen of their Company might go with them, to the End that They might diſcover at leaſt ſome of thoſe, who had been moſt rude towards them; who ſhould be ſure to be impriſoned till full Satisfaction were made by the reſt.

He is ſet at Liberty; and promiſed Satisfaction.

AS ſoon as the Lords of the Admiralty were gone, the Governour, an old Spaniard, came to viſit them with all Profeſſions of Civility, and Service; and ſeemed to abhor the Barbarity with which They had been treated; aſked very particularly of the Manner of them, and of every Particular that had been taken from them; and told them, They ſhould be ſure to have it all returned; for that They did not trouble themſelves in ſuch Caſes to find out the Seamen, who were the Plunderers, but reſorted always to the Owners of the Ships, who lived in the Town, and were ſubſtantial Men, and bound to anſwer and ſatisfy for all Miſdemeanours committed by the Company; and ſaid, He would be with them the next Day, and take Care that all ſhould be done that was juſt. Theſe Profeſſions and Aſſurances made them believe, that they ſhould receive full Reparation for the Damages They had received; and the Lord Cottington began to commend the good Order and Diſcipline that was obſerved under the Spaniſh Government, much different from that in other Places; and in how much better Condition They were, after ſuch Uſage, to be brought into Oſtend, than if they had been ſo uſed by the French, and carried into any of their Ports.

THE next Morning two of the Lords of the Admiralty called upon them, in their Way to the Ships; retaining the ſame Profeſſions They had made the Night before; and Sir George Ratcliffe, Mr. Wansford, and ſome of their Servants accompanied them according to their Deſire; and as ſoon as They were on Board the Admiral's Veſſel, that had brought them in, and had taken them out of their own, They knew ſome of thoſe Seamen, who had been moſt buſy about them; which were immediately ſeized on, and ſearched, and about ſome of them ſome Pieces of Chains of Gold, and other Things of Value belonging to the Lord Cottington were found; and ſome Mails, in which were Linen and Cloaths, all which were preſently reſtored and delivered to ſome of the Servants, who were preſent, and brought them to their Maſters. The Chancellor was more ſolicitous for ſome Papers He had loſt, than for his Money; and He was uſed to ſay, that He looked upon it as a ſingular Act of Providence, that thoſe Officers prevailed with a Seaman, who had taken it out of his Pocket, to reſtore a little Letter which He had lately received from the King, whilſt He was in the Hands of the Army; which for the Grace and Kindneſs contained in it, He did ever exceedingly value.

THOSE of the Admiralty, though They had not yet found out either any of the Jewels, or Money, of which They had been robbed, thought They had done enough for the Morning; and ſo returned to Dinner: declaring that They would return in the Afternoon; and directed the Ships to be drawn nearer together, to the End They might viſit them together: and They did return in the Afternoon, accompanied as before, but their Reception by the Seamen was not as in the Morning. The Captains anſwered thoſe Queſtions which were aſked of them negligently, and ſcornfully; and thoſe Seamen who had been ſearched in the Morning, and were appointed to be produced in the Afternoon to be further examined, could not be found; and inſtead of bringing the Ships nearer together, ſome of them were gone more out to Sea; and the reſt declared, that They would go all out to Sea that Night; and when the Magiſtrates ſeemed to threaten them, They ſwore They would throw both them, and all who came with them, over Board; and offered to lay Hands upon them in Order to it: ſo that They were all glad to get off; and returned to the Town talking loud what Vengeance They would take upon the Captains and Seamen when They returned again into Port (for They already ſtood out to Sea in their Sight) and in the mean Time They would proſecute the Owners of the Veſſels, who ſhould ſatisfy for the Damage received; but from this Time, the Governour, nor the Lords of the Admiralty cared to come near them: And They quickly found that the Reaſon of all the Governour's Civility the firſt Night, and the many Queſtions He had aſked concerning all the Particulars They had loſt of any Kind, was only to be the better informed, to demand his Share from the Seamen; and that the Lords of the Admiralty were the Owners of the ſeveral Veſſels, or had Shares in them, and in the victualling, and ſo were to divide the Spoil, which They pretended ſhould be reſtored. So that after They had remained there four, or five Days, They were contented to receive one hundred Piſtoles for diſcharging the Debts They had contracted in the Town (for there was not any Money left amongſt them) and to carry them to the Prince; which thoſe of the Admiralty pretended to have received from ſome of the Owners, and to wait for farther Juſtice, when the Ships ſhould return, which They doubted not ſhould be effectually called for, by the Commands of the Arch-Duke, when He ſhould be informed: and ſo They proſecuted their Journey to the Prince, making their Way by Bruges, and from thence by the Way of Sluys to Fluſhing; and thoſe hundred Piſtoles were the only Recompenſe that They ever received for that Affront, and Damage They had ſuſtained; which in the whole amounted to two thouſand Pounds at the leaſt; though the King's Reſident De-Vic at Bruſſels proſecuted the Pretence with the Arch-Duke, as long as there was any Hope.

But cannot obtain it.

THE Chancellor was often uſed to relate an Obſervation that was generally made, and diſcourſed at Oſtend, at that Time, that never any Man who adventured in ſetting out thoſe Frigates of Rapine, which are called Men of War, or in victualling, or bearing any Share in them, died rich, or poſſeſſed of any valuable Eſtate: and that as He walked one Morning about the Town, and upon the Quay, with an Engliſh Officer, who was a Lieutenant in that Garriſon, They ſaw a poor old Man walk by them, whom the Lieutenant deſired the Chancellor to obſerve; and when He was paſſed by, He told him that He had known that Man the Richeſt of any Man in the Town; that He had been the Owner of above ten Ships of War at one Time, without any Partner or Sharer with him; that He had had in his Warehouſes in the Town, as much Goods, and Merchandize together, as amounted to the Value of one hundred thouſand Pounds, within ſeven Years before the Time He was then ſpeaking; and after the Loſs of two, or three Frigates, He inſenſibly decayed ſo faſt, that having begun to build another Frigate, which He ſhewed him as They walked, and which lay then not half finiſhed, He was not able to go through with it, and that He was at that Time ſo poor, that He had not wherewith to maintain him; but received the Charity of thoſe who had known him in a plentiful Eſtate: And this Relation He made in Confirmation of that Diſcourſe and Obſervation; and it made ſo deep an Impreſſion upon the Chancellor, that afterwards, when the War was between England, and Holland, and France, and when many Gentlemen thought it good Huſbandry to adventure in the ſetting out ſuch Ships of War, He always diſſwaded his Friends from that Traffick, relating to them this Story, of the Truth whereof He had ſuch Evidence; and did in Truth, moreover in his own Judgment believe, that all Engagements of that Kind were contrary to the Rules of Juſtice, and a good Conſcience.

He goes to Fluſhing;

WHEN They came to Fluſhing, They thought it beſt to ſtay there, as the moſt likely Place to have Commerce with the Fleet; and They found there Colonel William Vavaſour, who had by the Prince's Commiſſion, drawn ſome Companies of Foot together, and expected ſome Veſſel to be ſent from the Fleet, for their tranſportation; and Carteret was already diſpatched, to inform the Prince of what had befallen the Treaſurer, and Chancellor, and that They waited his Commands at Fluſhing: And becauſe Middleburgh would be as convenient to receive Intelligence, and more convenient for their Accommodation, They removed thither, and took a private Lodging; where, by having a Cook and other Servants, They might make their own Proviſions. They had been at Middleburgh very few Days, before the Hind Frigate gate was ſent by the Prince to bring them to the Fleet; with Direction that They ſhould make as much Haſte as was poſſible; and They had no Occaſion to delay, but the Wind was ſo directly againſt them for two, or three Days, that They could not put themſelves on Board. It was now about the Middle of July, when the Wind appeared fair, and They preſently embarked, and weighed Anchor, and ſailed all the Night; but in the Morning the Wind changed, and blew ſo hard a Gale, that They were compelled to turn about, and came before Night again to Fluſhing; whence They endeavoured three Times more to get into the Downs; from whence They might eaſily have got to the Fleet; but as often as They put to Sea, ſo often They were driven back; and once with ſo violent a Storm, that their Ship was in Danger; and was driven in under the Ramekins, a Fort near the Mouth of the River that goes to Middleburgh; whither They again repaired: And the Winds were ſo long contrary, that They received Order from the Prince to repair into Holland; for that his Highneſs reſolved within very few Days, it being now towards the End of Auguſt, to carry the Fleet thither; as He ſhortly after did. And by this Means the Lord Cottington, and the Chancellor were not able to attend the Prince whilſt He remained with the Fleet within the River of Thames; but were well informed, when They came to him, of all that had paſſed there.

Embarks to attend the Prince in the River of Thames, but is driven back.

THE Lord Cottington, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, as ſoon as They received Advertiſement at Middleburgh, that the Prince reſolved to return with the Fleet into Holland, made all the Haſte They could to the Hague; it being then about the End of Auguſt, and came thither within one Day after the Prince's Arrival there.

Arrives at the Hague.

THE next Morning after the Lord Cottington, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer came to the Hague, the Prince appointed his Council to meet together, to receive, and deliberate upon a Meſſage, the Lord Lautherdale had brought from the Parliament of Scotland; earneſtly preſſing him to repair forthwith to their Army; which was already entered into England, under the Command of the Duke of Hamilton— The Chancellor reproves the Lord Lautherdale for his Inſolent Behaviour before the Council. Vid. Hiſt. of the Reb. Folio, Vol. 3. P. 129, 130, &c.—Dub. Edit. Vol 3. P. 94.

THE Factions in the Prince's Family, and the great Animoſity which Prince Rupert had againſt the Lord Colepepper, infinitely diſturbed the Counſels; and perplexed the Lord Cottington, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer—Colepepper had Paſſions, and Infirmities which no Friends could reſtrain; and Prince Rupert, though very well inclined to the Chancellor, was abſolutely governed by Herbert the Attorney General, who induſtriouſly cultivated his Prejudice to Colepepper—Hiſt. of the Reb. Folio, Vol. 3. P. 149, &c.—Dub. Edit. Vol. 3. P. 108.

WHILST the Prince was at the Hague, He received the ſhocking Account of the Murder of the King his Father; and ſoon after, the Queen wrote to him from Paris, adviſing him to repair into France, as ſoon as poſſible; and deſiring him not to ſwear any Perſons to be of his Council, till She could ſpeak with him: But before He received her Letter, He had already cauſed thoſe of his Father's Council, who had attended him, to be ſworn of his Privy Council; adding only Mr. Long his Secretary. He had no Mind to go into France; and it was evident that He could not be long able to reſide at the Hague; an Agent from the Parliament being there at that Time; ſo that it was Time to think of ſome other Retreat. Ireland was then thought moſt adviſeable; ſome favourable Accounts having being received from thence, of the Tranſactions of the Marquis of Ormond, and Lord Inchiquin; and of the Arrival of Prince Rupert at Kinſale with the Fleet. Hiſt. of the Reb. Folio, Vol. 3. P. 216.—Dub. Edit. Vol. 3. P. 156.

THE Chancellor of the Exchequer was ſent to confer with the Marquis of Montroſe in a Village near the Hague, upon the State of Affairs in Scotland. The Marquis came now into Holland to offer his Service to his Majeſty; expecting that He would preſently ſend him to Scotland with ſome Forces, to prepare the Way for his Majeſty to follow after. Hiſt. of the Reb. Folio, Vol. 3. P. 223, &c.—Dub. Edit. Vol. 3. P. 162.

THE King declared his Reſolution of going into Ireland, and Preparations were made for that Expedition; which however, from Accidents that afterwards fell out, did not take Effect. The Lord Cottington, wiſhing to avoid the Fatigue of ſuch Expeditions, took that Occaſion to confer with the Chancellor of the Exchequer, upon the Expediency of the King's ſending an Embaſſy into Spain; and propoſed, that himſelf and the Chancellor ſhould be appointed Ambaſſadors to that Court, to which the Chancellor conſented; and upon the Lord Cottington's Repreſentation of the Matter to the King, his Majeſty ſoon after publickly declared his Reſolution to ſend thoſe Two, Ambaſſadors Extraordinary into Spain. Hiſt. of the Reb. Folio, Vol. 3. P. 234, &c.—Dub. Edit. Vol. 3. P. 171.

THIS was no ſooner known, but all kind of People, who agreed in nothing elſe, murmured, and complained of this Counſel; and the more, becauſe it had never been mentioned, or debated in Council. Only the Scots were very glad of it (Montroſe excepted) believing that when the Chancellor was gone, their beloved Covenant would not be ſo irreverently mentioned; and that the King would be wrought upon to withdraw all Countenance and Favour from the Marquis of Montroſe; and the Marquis himſelf looked upon it as a deſerting him, and complying with the other Party; and from that Time, though They lived with Civility towards each other, He withdrew very much of his Confidence, which He had formerly repoſed in him. They who loved him were ſorry for him, and themſelves; They thought he deſerted a Path He had long trod, and was well acquainted with; and was henceforward to move extra Sphæram Activitatis, in an Office He had not been acquainted with; and then They ſhould want his Credit to ſupport, and confirm them in the King's Favour and Grace: And there were many who were very ſorry when They heard it, out of particular Duty to the King; who being young, They thought might be without that Counſel, and Advertiſement, which They knew well He would ſtill adminiſter to him.

The Murmurs of the Court on his being appointed Ambaſſador to Spain.

No Man was more angry, and offended with the Counſel than the Lord Colepepper; who would have been glad to have gone himſelf in the Employment, if He could have perſuaded the Lord Cottington to have accepted his Company; which He would by no Means do: and though He and the Chancellor were not thought to have the greateſt Kindneſs for each other, yet He knew He could agree with no other Man ſo well in Buſineſs; and was very unwilling He ſhould be from the Perſon of the King. But the Chancellor himſelf, from the Time that the King had ſignified his own Pleaſure to him, was exceedingly pleaſed with the Commiſſion; and did believe that He ſhould in ſome Degree improve his Underſtanding, and very very much refresh his Spirits, by what He should learn by the one, and by his Absence from being continually conversant with those Wants, which could never be severed from that Court, and that Company which would be always corrupted by those Wants. And so He sent for his Wife, and Children to meet him at Antwerp, where He intended They should reside whilst He continued in Spain, and where they were like to find some Civilities in respect of his Employment.

THE Ambassadors took Leave of the King before the Middle of May, and went to Antwerp, where the Chancellor's Wife, and Family were arrived, who were to remain there during his Embassy — After staying two, or three Days at Antwerp, They went to Brussels, to deliver their Credentials to the Arch-Duke, and to the Duke of Lorrain, and to visit the Spanish Ministers there, &c. Hist. of the Reb. Folio, Vol. 3. P. 240. — Dub. Edit. Vol. 3. P. 174.

WHEN the Ambassadors had dispatched all their Business at Brussels, They returned to Antwerp, to negotiate the Remittance of their Money to Madrid. Hist. of the Reb. Folio, Vol. 3. P. 242. — Dub. Edit. Vol. 3. P. 175.

THE Queen is much displeased, that the King had taken any Resolutions, before She was consulted, and imputed all that had been done principally to the Chancellor of the Exchequer; suspecting He meant to exclude her from meddling in the Affairs. Hist. of the Reb. Folio. Vol. 3. P. 242. — Dub. Edit. Vol. 3. P. 176.

LORD Cottington, and the Chancellor, hearing that the King was on his Way to France, resolve to defer going to St. Germains, till the King's first Interview with the Queen should be over.

ABOUT a Week after the King left Brussels, the two Ambassadors prosecuted their Journey to Paris; staid only one Day there; and then went to St. Germains; where the King, and the Queen his Mother, with both their Families, and the Duke of York then were — They found that Court full of Jealousy, and Disorder — The Queen much troubled at the King's Behaviour to her, as if He had no Mind that She should interfere in his Affairs — She now attributes this Reservedness of the King towards her, more to the Influence of some Body else, than to the Chancellor of the Exchequer — He had a private Audience of the Queen — She complained of the King's Unkindness to her; and of the great Credit Mr. Elliot (one of his Majesty's Grooms of the Bedchamber) had with the King. Hist. of the Reb. Folio, Vol. 3. P. 243, &c. — Dub. Edit. Vol. 3. P. 177, &c.

ABOUT the Middle of September, the King left St. Germains, and began his Journey towards Jersey, and the Queen removed to Paris — The two Ambassadors attended her Majesty thither, and prepared for their Journey into Spain. Hist. of the Reb. Folio, Vol. 3. P. 252. — Dub. Edit. Vol. 3. P. 183.

The Queen is displeased at his going to Spain.

DURING the Time of their short Stay at Paris, the Queen used the Chancellor very graciously; but still expressed Trouble that He was sent on that Embassy, which She said, would be fruitless, as to any Advantage the King would receive from it; and She said, She must confess, that though She was not confident of his Affection and Kindness towards her, yet She believed that He did wish that the King's Carriage towards her, should be always fair and respectful; and that She did desire that He might be always about his Majesty's Person; not only because She thought He understood the Business of England better than any Body else; but because She knew that He loved the King, and would always give him good Counsel, towards his living virtuously; and that She thought He had more Credit with him, than any other, who would deal plainly and honestly with him.

THERE was a Passage at that Time, of which He used to speak often, and looked upon as a great Honour to him: The Queen one Day amongst some of her Ladies, in whom She had most Confidence, expressed some Sharpness towards a Lord of the King's Council, whom She named not, who She said, always gave her the fairest Words, and promised her every Thing She desired; and had persuaded her to affect somewhat that She had before no Mind to; and yet She was well assured, that when the same was proposed to the King on her Behalf, He was the only Man who dissuaded the King from granting it. Some of the Ladies seemed to have the Curiosity to know who it was; which the Queen would not tell; one of them who was known to have a Friendship for him, said, She hoped it was not the Chancellor; to which her Majesty replied with some Quickness, that She might be sure it was not He, who was so far from making Promises, or giving fair Words, and flattering her, that She did verily believe, that if He thought her to be a Whore, He would tell her of it; which when that Lady told him, He was not displeased with the Testimony.

The Queen's Opinion of his Sincerity.

THE two Ambassadors began their Journey from Paris, on Michaelmas Day; and continued it without one Day's Rest to Bourdeaux — Hist. of the Reb. Folio, Vol. 3. P. 253. — Dub. Edit. Vol. 3. P. 184.

THEY continued their Journey to Bayonne; and from thence to St. Sebastian's; where They were told by the Corregidor, that He had received Directions from the Secretary of State, to persuade them to remain there till the King's farther Pleasure might be known; and They received a Packet from Sir Benjamin Wright at Madrid, inclosing a Pass for them, under the Title of Ambassadors from the Prince of Wales. They immediately sent an Express to the Court, complaining of their Treatment, and desiring to know, whether their Persons were unacceptable to his Catholick Majesty; and if otherwise, They desired They might be treated in the Manner due to the Honour, and Dignity of the King their Master. They received an Answer full of Civility, imputing the Error in the Style of their Pass, to the Negligence, or Ignorance of the Secretary; and new Passes were sent to them in the proper Style; with Assurance, that They should find a very good Welcome from his Majesty — They left St. Sebastian's about the Middle of November — Hist. of the Reb. Folio, Vol. 3. P. 254, 255. — Dub. Edit. Vol. 3. P. 185.

WHEN They came to Alcavendas, within three Leagues of Madrid, Sir Benjamin Wright came to them, and informed them, that all Things were in the State they were, when He writ to them at St. Sebastian's; that no House was yet prepared for their Reception; and that there was an evident Want of Attention for them in the Court; the Spanish Ambassador in England having done them ill Offices, lest their good Reception in Spain might incense the Parliament — After a Week's Stay in that little Town, They accepted of Sir Benjamin Wright's Invitation to his House at Madrid; They went privately thither, to reside incognito — The Court knew of their Arrival, but took no Notice of it — Lord Cottington desired, and obtained a private Audience of Don Lewis De Haro — Don Lewis excused the Omission towards the Ambassadors, on Pretence that the Fiestas for their new Queen's Arrival, had engrossed groſſed the whole Attention of all the Officers about the Court; and promiſed immediate Reparation — Lord Cottington returned Home well ſatisfied — The Ambaſſadors are invited to ſee the Exerciſes of the Fieſtas; and the Chancellor accordingly went to the Place aſſigned. Hiſt. of the Reb. Folio, Vol. 3. P. 256, 257.—Dub. Edit. Vol. 3. P. 186, 187.

Deſcription of the Maſquerade.

The Maſquerade is an Exerciſe They learned from the Moors; performed by Squadrons of Horſe, ſeeming to charge each other with great Fierceneſs; with Bucklers in their left Hands, and a Kind of Cane in their right: which, when They come within little more than a Horſe's Length, They throw with all the Strength They can; and againſt them They defend themſelves with very broad Bucklers; and as ſoon as They have thrown their Darts, They wheel about in a full Gallop, till They can turn to receive the like Aſſault from thoſe whom They had charged; and ſo ſeveral Squadrons of twenty, or five and twenty Horſe, run round, and charge each other. It hath at firſt the Appearance of a martial Exerciſe; the Horſes are very beautiful, and well adorned; the Men richly clad, and muſt be good Horſemen, otherwiſe They could not conduct the quick Motions and Turns of their Horſes; all the reſt is too childiſh; the Darts being nothing elſe but plain Bulruſhes of the biggeſt Growth. After this, They run the Courſe; which is like our running at the Ring; ſave that two run ſtill together, and the ſwifter hath the Prize; a Poſt dividing them at the End: From the Start They run their Horſes full ſpeed about fifty Paces, and the Judges are at that Poſt to determine who is firſt at the End.

Deſcription of the Toros.

THE next Day, and ſo for two, or three Days together, both the Ambaſſadors had a Box prepared for them to ſee the Toros; which is a Spectacle very wonderful. Here the Place was very noble, being the Market-Place, a very large Square, built with handſome Brick Houſes, which had all Balconies, which were adorned with Tapeſtry, and very beautiful Ladies. Scaffolds were built round to the firſt Story; the lower Rooms being Shops, and for ordinary Uſe; and in the Diviſion of thoſe Scaffolds, all the Magiſtrates, and Officers of the Town knew their Places. The Pavement of the Place was all covered with Gravel, which in Summer Time was upon thoſe Occaſions watered by Carts charged with Hogſheads of Water. As ſoon as the King comes, ſome Officers clear the whole Ground from the common People; ſo that there is no Man ſeen upon the Plain, but two, or three Alguazils, Magiſtrates with their ſmall white Wands. Then one of the four Gates which lead into the Streets is opened; at which the Torreadors enter, all Perſons of Quality richly clad, and upon the beſt Horſes in Spain, every one attended by eight, or ten, or more Lackeys, all clinquant with Gold, and Silver Lace; who carry the Spears, which their Maſters are to uſe againſt the Bulls; and with this Entry many of the common People break in, for which ſometimes They pay very dear. The Perſons on Horſe-back have all Cloaks folded up upon their left Shoulder; the leaſt Diſorder of which, much more the letting it fall, is a very great Diſgrace; and in that grave Order, they march to the Place where the King ſits, and after They have made the Reverences, They place themſelves at a good Diſtance from one another, and expect the Bull.

THE Bulls are brought in the Night before from the Mountains, by People uſed to that Work; who drive them into the Town when no Body is in the Streets, into a Pen made for them, which hath a Door that opens into that large Space; the Key whereof is ſent to the King, which the King, when He ſees every Thing ready, throws to an Alguazill, who carries it to the Officer that keeps the Door; and He cauſes it to be opened when a ſingle Bull is ready to come out. When the Bull enters, the common People who ſit over the Door, or near it, ſtrike him, or throw ſhort Darts with ſharp Points of Steel to provoke him to rage: He commonly runs with all his Fury againſt the firſt Man he ſees on Horſeback; who watches him ſo carefully, and avoids him ſo dextrouſly, that when the Spectators believe him to be even between the Horns of the Bull, He avoids him by the quick Turn of his Horſe; and with his Lance ſtrikes the Bull upon a Vein that runs through his Pole, with which in a Moment He falls down dead. But this fatal Stroke can never be ſtruck, but when the Bull comes ſo near upon the Turn of the Horſe, that his Horn even touches the Rider's Leg; and ſo is at ſuch a Diſtance, that He can ſhorten his Lance, and uſe the full Strength of his Arm in the Blow; and They who are the moſt ſkilful in the Exerciſe, do frequently kill the Beaſt with ſuch an exact Stroke; inſomuch as in a Day, two, or three fall in that Manner: But if They miſs the Vein, it only gives a Wound that the more enrages him.

SOMETIMES the Bull runs with ſo much Fierceneſs (for if he eſcapes the firſt Man, he runs upon the reſt as They are in his Way) that He gores the Horſe with his Horns, ſo that his Guts come out, and He falls, before the Rider can get from his Back. Sometimes, by the Strength of his Neck, he raiſes Horſe and Man from the Ground, and throws both down; and then the greateſt Danger is another Gore upon the Ground. In any of theſe Diſgraces, or any other, by which the Rider comes to be diſmounted, He is obliged in Honour to take his Revenge upon the Bull by his Sword, and upon his Head; towards which the Standers by aſſiſt him, by running after the Bull, and hocking him, by which He falls upon his hinder Legs, but before that Execution can be done, a good Bull hath his Revenge upon many poor Fellows. Sometimes he is ſo unruly that no Body dares to attack him; and then the King calls for the Maſtiffs, whereof two are let out at a Time, and if they cannot maſter him, but are themſelves killed, as frequently they are, the King then, as the laſt Refuge, calls for the Engliſh Maſtiffs, of which They ſeldom turn out above one at a Time, and he rarely miſſes taking the Bull, and holding him by the Noſe, till the Men run in; and after they have hocked him, They quickly kill him.

IN one of thoſe Days there were no fewer than ſixteen Horſes, as good as any in Spain, the worſt of which would that very Morning have yielded three hundred Piſtoles, killed, and four, or five Men; beſides many more of both hurt, and ſome Men remained perpetually maimed: for after the Horſemen have done as much as They can, They withdraw themſelves, and then ſome accuſtomed nimble Fellows to whom Money is thrown, when They perform their Feats with Skill, ſtand to receive the Bulls, whereof the worſt are reſerved till the laſt; and it is a wonderful Thing to ſee with what Steadineſs thoſe Fellows will ſtand a full Career of the Bull, and by a little quick Motion upon one Foot, avoid him, and lay a Hand upon his Horn, as if They guided him from them; but then the next Standers by, who have not the ſame Activity, commonly pay for it; and there is no Day without much Miſchief. It is a very barbarous Exerciſe, and Triumph; in which ſo many Mens Lives are loſt, and always ventured; but ſo rooted in the Affections of that Nation, that it is not in the King's Power, They ſay, to ſuppreſs it; though if He diſliked it enough, He might forbear to be preſent at it.

THERE are three Feſtivals in the Year, whereof Midſummer is one, on which the People hold it to be their Right to be treated with theſe Spectacles; not only in great Cities, where they are never disappointed, but in very ordinary Towns, where there are Places provided for it. Besides those ordinary annual Days, upon any extraordinary Accidents of Joy, as at this Time for the Arrival of the Queen, upon the Birth of the King's Children, or any signal Victory, these Triumphs are repeated: which no Ecclesiastical Censures, or Authority can suppress, or discountenance; for Pope Pius the V, in the Time of Philip the II, and very probably with his Approbation, if not upon his Desire, published a Bull against the Toros in Spain, which is still in force; in which He declared, that no Body should be capable of Christian Burial, who lost his Life at those Spectacles; and that every Clergyman who should be present at them, stood excommunicated ipso facto; and yet there is always one of the largest Galleries assigned to the Office of the Inquisition, and the Chief of the Clergy, which is always filled; besides that many religious Men in their Habits get other Places; only the Jesuits out of their Submission to the supreme Authority of the Pope, are never present there; but on those Days, do always appoint some such solemn Exercise to be performed, that obliges their whole Body to be together.

Is visited by the other Ambassadors at Madrid, before his Audience.

THOUGH it is not the Course for the Ambassadors to make their Visits to those who come last, before They receive their first Audience from the King; yet the very Night They came to the Town, the Venetian Ambassador sent to congratulate their Arrival, and to know what Hour They would assign of the next Day to receive a Visit from him: To which They returned their Acknowledgments; and that when They had obtained their Audience of the King, They would be ready to receive that Honour from him. However, the very next Day He came to visit them; and He was no sooner gone, but the German Ambassador, not sending Notice till He was at the Bottom of the Stairs, likewise came to them; and then the other Ambassadors, and public Ministers took their Times to make their Visits, without attending the Audience.

Some Account of the Ambassadors then at Madrid.

THERE was one thing very notable, that all the foreign Ministers residing then in Madrid (the English Ambassadors, and the Resident of Denmark only excepted) were Italians; and all, but the Venetian, Subjects of the Great Duke. Julio Rospiglioси Nuntio for the Pope, was of Pistoja, and so a Subject to the Duke of Florence; a grave Man, and at that Time, save that his Health was not good, like to come to be, what He was afterwards, Pope, as He was Clement the IX. The Emperor's Ambassador, the Marquis of Grana was likewise an Italian, and a Subject of Florence; He had been General of one of the Emperor's Armies, and was sent afterwards Ambassador to Madrid; He was a Man of great Parts; and the removing the Conde-Duke Olivarez from Court, was imputed to his Artifice. He made the Match between the King, and the present Queen, for which He expected to have the Cap of a Cardinal; and had received it, if He had not died before the following Creation; the Cardinal of Hesse being nominated by the Emperor upon his Death. He was a Man of an imperious, and insolent Nature, and capable of any Temptation, and no Body was more glad of his Death than his own Servants, over whom He was a great Tyrant.

Of the Marquis of Grana.

Of the Venetian Ambassador.

THE Ambassador of Venice, Pietro Basadonna, a noble Venetian, was a Man, as all that Nation is, of great Civility, and much Profession; He was the first who told the Ambassadors, that the King their Master had a Resident at Venice; which was Mr. Killigrew, which they did not at first believe, having before they left St. Germains, dissuaded the King from that Purpose; but afterwards his Majesty was prevailed upon, only to gratify him, that in that Capacity, He might borrow Money of English Merchants for his own Subsistance; which He did, and nothing to the Honour of his Master; but was at last compelled to leave the Republick, for his vicious Behaviour; of which the Venetian Ambassador complained to the King, when He came afterwards to Paris.

Of the Polish Ambassador.

THE Ambassador of the King of Poland, was likewise a Florentine; who was much in Favour with the King Uladislaus, from whom He was sent; and continued by King Casimir. He had lived in great Splendour; but by his vicious Course of Life, and some Miscarriages, He fell very low, and was revoked with some Circumstances of Dishonour. He was a Man of a great Wit; if it had not served him to very ill Purposes. The Ambassador of Florence, was a Subject of his Master, and an Abbot, a grave Man; and though He was frequently called Ambassador, He was in Truth but Resident; which was discovered by a Contest He had with the Denmark Resident for Place; who alledged, that the other was no more than Resident; which was true, and made the Discovery that the Florentines send no Ambassadors to Madrid, because They are not suffered to cover, which They use to do in many other Courts.

Of the Ambassador of Florence.

Of the Arch-Duke of Inspruck's Minister.

The Arch-Duke of Inspruck's Minister was likewise a Florentine, and had been bred in Spain, and was a Knight of the Order; and supported that Character upon a small Assignation from his Master, for some Benefit and Advantage it gave him in Negotiations, and Pretences He had in that Court.

Of the Resident of Denmark.

THE Resident of Denmark was Don Henrique Williamson (He was afterwards called Rosewell) who came Secretary to Hannibal Zested; who had been the Year before Ambassador in that Court, and lived in extraordinary Splendour, as all the Northern Ministers do; who have not their Allowance from the King, but from a Revenue that is purposely set aside for that Kind of Service. When He went away, He left this Gentleman to remain there as Resident. He was a grave, and a sober Man, wiser than most of his Nation; and lived with much more Plenty, and with a better Retinue than any other Minister of that Rank in that Court.

THEY had not been many Days in Madrid, when Don Lewis sent them the News of the Imprisonment of the Prince of Condè, Prince of Conti, and the Duke of Longueville; and that Marshal Turenne was fled into Flanders; so much the Cardinal had improved his Condition from the Time that They had left Paris. There was yet no House provided for them, which they took very heavily; and believed that it might advance that Business, if They had once a publick Reception as Ambassadors; and therefore They resolved to demand an Audience. Don Lewis came to be advertised, that the Ambassadors had prepared Mourning for themselves, and all their Train, against their Audience, which was true; for They thought it the most proper Dress to appear in, and to demand Assistance to revenge the Murder of their Master, it being yet within the Year: But Don Lewis sent to them, that He hoped that when the whole Court was in Gala, upon the Joy of the Marriage of the King, and to give the Queen a chearful Reception; They would not dishonour the Festival by appearing in Luto, which the King could not but take unkindly; which He said, He thought fit to advertise them of, out of Friendship, and without any Authority. Whereupon, as well to comply in an Affair which seemed to have somewhat of Reason in it, as out of Apprehension, that from hence They might take Occasion to defer their Audience, They changed their Purpose, and caused new Cloaths to be made; and then sent to demand their Audience.

Lord Cottington, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer demand their Audience.

The

The LIFE of
EDWARD Earl of CLARENDON

From his Birth to the Reſtoration of the ROYAL FAMILY in 1660.

PART the SIXTH.

THE Ambaſſadors were conducted in Form to their Audience of the King of Spain; and afterwards of the Queen and Infanta; and at laſt a Houſe was provided for them. Hiſt. of the Reb. Folio, Vol. 3. P. 259. —Dub. Edit. Vol. 3. P. 188.

THEY perceived that Court was more inclined to cultivate a ſtrict Friendſhip with the new Commonwealth of England, than with the King their Maſter, from an Opinion of his Condition being irrecoverable — After all Ceremonies were over, the Ambaſſadors had a private Audience of the King, to whom They delivered a Memorial containing their Propoſitions, and Demands — They received ſhortly after ſuch an Anſwer, as was Evidence enough to them, how little They were to expect from any avowed Friendſhip of that Crown — They reſted for ſome Time without giving the Court any farther Trouble (Hiſtory of the Rebellion, Folio, Vol. 3. P. 261, 262. — Dub. Edit. Vol. 3. P. 190.) and enjoyed themſelves in no unpleaſant Retreat from Buſineſs, if They could have put off the Thought of the miſerable Condition of their Maſter; and their own particular Concernments in their own Country. The Chancellor betook himſelf to the learning their Language, by reading their Books; of which He made a good Collection; and informing himſelf the beſt He could, of their Government, and the Adminiſtration of their Juſtice: And there began his Devotions upon the Pſalms, which He finiſhed in another Baniſhment.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer applies himſelf to the learning Spaniſh.

PRINCE Rupert came upon the Coaſt of Spain with the Fleet under his Command; and wrote to the Chancellor, acquainting him, that He had brought away all the Fleet from Ireland; and deſiring him to procure Orders from the Court, that He might find a good Reception in all the Spaniſh Ports, if his Occaſions brought him thither — The News of a Fleet of the King of England being on their Coaſt, at a Time when their Galleons were expected Home, occaſioned great Alteration in the Behaviour of that Court; and all that the Ambaſſadors aſked, was eaſily granted; but that ſeeming favourable Diſpoſition was of ſhort Duration; for on the Arrival afterwards of a ſtrong Fleet ſent out by the Parliament, and the Commander thereof writing an inſolent Letter to the King of Spain, the Ambaſſadors found themſelves leſs regarded — Hiſt. of the Reb. Folio, Vol. 3. P. 262, 263. — Dub. Edit. Vol. 3. P. 191.

THE King had now determined to go into Scotland, upon the Invitation of the Council, and Parliament of that Kingdom; and the Ambaſſadors, who in Reality diſapproved of that Meaſure, notified it to the Court of Spain, as a happy Turn in the King's Affairs; ſetting forth, that his Majeſty was now Maſter of that Kingdom; and therefore might reaſonably hope to be reſtored to the Poſſeſſion of the reſt of his Dominions — The Court of Spain then began again to treat the Ambaſſadors with more Regard — Hiſt. of the Reb. Folio, Vol. 3. P. 269. — Dub. Edit. Vol. 3. P. 196.

UPON the News of Cromwell's Victory over the Marquis of Argyle's Army in Scotland, the Ambaſſadors received a Meſſage from the King of Spain, deſiring them to depart, ſince their Preſence in the Court would be prejudicial to his Affairs — They imagined this proceeded from the Expectation of the Arrival of an Ambaſſador from the Commonwealth of England, which was then reported; but They knew afterwards that the true Cauſe of this Impatience to get rid of them, was, that their Miniſter in England, having purchaſed many of the King's Pictures, and rich Furniture, had ſent them to the Groyne; from whence They were expected to arrive about that Time, at Madrid: which They thought could not decently be brought to the Palace, while the Ambaſſadors remained at the Court — Hiſt. of the Reb. Folio, Vol. 3. P. 295. — Dub. Edit. Vol. 3. P. 221.

LORD Cottington reſolves, and obtains Leave to ſtay as a private Man in Spain; but is not permitted to reſide at Madrid. Hiſt. of the Reb. Folio, Vol. 3. P. 297. — Dub. Edit. Vol. 3. P. 222.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer begins his Journey from Madrid.

THE other Ambaſſador made his Journey by Alcala; and ſtaid a Day there, to ſee that Univerſity; where the College, and other Buildings made by the Cardinal Ximenes, are well worth the ſeeing; and went through the Kingdom of Navarre to Pampeluna, where the Vice-King, the Duke of Eſcalona received him; and lodged him two Days in the Palace; and treated him with great Civility. There He was ſeized upon with the Gout; yet He continued his Journey by Mules, there being no Paſſage by Coach or Litter, over the Pirenees, to Bayonne; where He was forced to keep his Bed, and to bleed, for many Days: but was ſo impatient of Delay, that after a Week's Reſt, and before He was fit for the Journey, He put himſelf into a Litter, and reached Bourdeaux; where He was forced to follow the Preſcription of Dr. Lopez, a very learned Jew, and Phyſician; and yet went too ſoon from thence too; ſo that when He came to Paris, He was caſt into his Bed by a new Defluxion of the Gout, more violent than ever.

The Queen's Complaints to him of the Duke of York.

As ſoon as He had recovered any Strength, He waited upon the Queen Mother, who received him very graciouſly; complained very much to him of the Duke of York; who having been left with her by the King when He parted with her Majeſty at Beauvais, had expreſly againſt her Conſent, and Command, tranſported himſelf to Bruſſels, upon Imaginations, which had no Foundation; and upon ſome Treaty with the Duke of Lorrain, which She was ſure could produce no good Effect. Her Majeſty ſeemed moſt offended with Sir Edward Herbert the Attorney General, and Sir George Ratcliffe, as the two Perſons who prevailed with the Duke, and had engaged him in that Journey, and governed him in it, againſt the Advice of the Lord Byron, who was his Governor; and that being diſappointed of what They had unreaſonably looked for at Bruſſels, They had carried his Royal Highneſs into Holland, Holland, to his Sister; who suffered much by his Presence; the States of Holland being resolved not to suffer him to reside within their Province; the Prince of Orange being lately dead of the Small Pox, and his Son, who was born after his Death, being an Infant, and depending so intirely upon the good Will of the States; and therefore the Princess Royal was much troubled that the coming of the Duke her Brother into those Parts, gave the States any Occasion of Offence. The Queen said, that She had writ to the Duke to return into France, but had received no Answer; and therefore She desired the Ambassador, as soon as He should come into those Parts (for He meant to go to Antwerp, where his Wife and Children then were) that He would make a Journey to the Hague, to reduce the Duke, and to prevail with him to return into France; which the Ambassador could not refuse to promise.

He found there the Queen's own Family in some Disorder, upon some Declaration She had made, that the Protestant Chaplain should be no more permitted to perform his Function in the Louvre; where the Queen's Court resided, and where there was a lower Room which had been always used as a Chapel, from the Time of the Prince's first coming thither, to that Time; and where twice a Day, the Common Prayer was read to those who were Protestants, in both Families; and now the Queen had signified to Dr. Cosins (who was the Chaplain assigned by the late King, to attend in her Majesty's Family, for the Protestant Part of it) that He should be no more permitted to have the Use of that Room.

Dr. Cosins forbid to officiate to the Protestants in the Queen's Family.

The Chancellor speaks to the Queen on that Subject.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer took this Occasion to speak with the Queen; and put her in Mind of some Promise She had made him, when He took his Leave of her to go for Spain, that She would not withdraw her Stipend, which She allowed to Dr. Cosins; whereby He must be compelled to withdraw; and so the Protestant Part of her Family would be deprived of their publick Devotions; which Promise She had observed to that Time: But if now the Room should be taken from that Use, it would be the same Thing, as if the Chaplain was turned away. He put her Majesty in Mind of the ill Impression it might make in the Hearts of the Protestants in England, who retained their Respects, and Duty for her Majesty; and of what pernicious Consequence it might prove to the King, who was still in Scotland, in a hopeful Condition; and depended most upon the Affections of his Protestant Subjects of England; and in the last Place, whether it might not prove a better Argument to those, who were suspected by her to mislead the Duke of York, to dissuade him from returning to her, since She would not permit him to have the Exercise of his Religion. The Queen seemed to think that what He said, was not without Reason, and confessed that She was not the Author of this new Resolution, which She did not believe to be seasonable.

The Queen's Answer.

Mr. Walter Montague, who had some Years ago changed his Religion, and was become Catholick, after He had sustained a long Imprisonment in the Tower of London, procured his Release from thence, upon Assurance that He would no more return into England; and so came into France, where He was very well known in the French, as well, as the English Court, and in great Reputation, and Esteem with both Queens. He appeared a Man wholly restrained from all the Vanity, and Levity of his former Life; and perfectly mortified to the Pleasures of the World, which He had enjoyed in a very great Measure, and Excess.

He dedicated himself to his Studies with great Austerity; and seemed to have no Affection, or Ambition for Preferment; but to live within himself upon the very moderate Exhibition He had left to him by his Father; and in this melancholick Retreat He had newly taken the Order of Priesthood; which was in Truth, the most reasonable Way to satisfy his Ambition, if He had any left; for both the Queen Regent, and the Cardinal, could not but liberally provide for his Support, in that Profession; which They did very shortly after: and this devout Profession, and new Function much improved the Interest, and Credit He always had in his old Mistress; who very much hearkened to him in Cases of Conscience: and She confessed to the Chancellor, that He was a little too bigotted in this Affair; and had not only pressed her very passionately to remove the Scandal of having a Protestant Chapel in her House, as inconsistent with a good Conscience; but had likewise inflamed the Queen Regent with the same Zeal; who had very earnestly pressed and importuned her Majesty no longer to permit that Offence to be given to the Catholick Religion. And upon this Occasion She lamented the Death of her late Confessor, Father Philips, who, She said, was a very discreet Man, and would never suffer her to be troubled with such Infusions, and Scruples. In Conclusion, She wished him to confer with Mr. Montague, and to try if He could withdraw him from that Asperity in that Particular; to which Purpose, the Chancellor conferred with him, but without any Effect.

He said, the House was the King of France's; who only permitted the Queen to live there; and that the Queen Regent thought herself bound in Conscience no longer to suffer that Reproach, of which She had never had Information till very lately: That if the Duke of York came thither, there was no Thought, or Purpose to deny him the Exercise of his Religion; He might have his Chaplain say Prayers to him in his own Chamber; or in some Room adjacent, which served likewise to all other Purposes; but that the setting a Room apart, as this was, for that Service, was upon the Matter dedicating it as a Chapel, for the Exercise of a Religion, contrary to what was established in that Kingdom; which the King of France would not suffer to be done in a House of his, though the King should return thither again. He undervalued all the Considerations which were offered of England, or of a Protestant Interest; as if He thought them all, as no Doubt He did, of no Importance to the King's Restoration, which could never be effected but by that Interest, which was quite opposite to it. When He gave the Queen an Account of this Discourse, He prevailed so far with her, that She promised, in Case She should be compelled to take away that Room, as She foresaw She should be, the Family should be permitted to meet in some other Room; and if the Duke of York came, the Place that should be appointed for his Devotions, should serve for all the Rest to resort to.

The Chancellor confers with Mr. Montague thereon, but without Effect.

As soon as the Chancellor had recovered his Strength, He took Leave of the Queen, and pursued his Journey for Flanders. At Brussels He staid till He had an Audience of the Arch-Duke, to whom He had Letters from the King of Spain, and Don Lewis; by which the King signified his Pleasure, that He should reside any where in those Provinces He best liked, until He could conveniently repair to the King his Master; and that in the mean Time He should enjoy all the Privileges due to an Ambassador: And so He had his Audience in that Quality. He spake in Latin, and the Arch-Duke answering in the same, assured him of all the Respects He could pay him, whilst He staid in those Parts; and thereupon He went to his Family at Antwerp, and kept that Character till the King's coming into France, and his Return to him; by Means whereof He enjoyed many Privileges, and Exemptions in the Town; and had the Freedom of his his Chapel, not only for his own Devotions, but for the Reſort of all the Proteſtants, who were then in the Town; whereof the Marquis of Newcaſtle, the Earl of Norwich, and Sir Charles Cavendiſh were the principal; who came always on the Sundays, and frequently on the Week Days, to the Common Prayer, to the Grief of many Engliſh, and Iriſh Roman Catholicks; who uſed all the malicious Artifices They could, to procure that Liberty to be reſtrained; and which could not have been enjoyed under any other Conceſſion, than by the Privilege of an Ambaſſador.

WHILST He was preparing to make a Journey to the Hague to wait upon the Duke of York, according to the Promiſe He had made to the Queen, He received Information from the Hague, that his Royal Highneſs would be at Breda ſuch a Day; whereupon He was glad to ſhorten his Journey, and at the Day, to kiſs his Hands there; where He found his Highneſs newly arrived; and in an Inclination enough to Return to the Queen; ſo that the Chancellor had no great Taſk to confirm him in that Reſolution; nor in Truth did He know what elſe to do: however all about him were very glad of the Chancellor's Preſence, every Body hoping to get him to their Party, that He might be ready to make a fair Report of their Behaviour to the King; whom They knew the Queen would endeavour to incenſe againſt them.

He goes to the Duke of York at Breda, to perſuade him to return to Paris.

NEVER little Family was torn into ſo many Pieces and Factions. The Duke was very young; yet loved Intrigues ſo well, that He was too much inclined to hearken to any Men, who had the Confidence to make bold Propoſitions to him. The King had appointed him to remain with the Queen; and to obey her in all Things, Religion only excepted. The Lord Byron was his Governour, ordained to be ſo by his Father, and very fit for that Province; being a very fine Gentleman; well bred both in France, and Italy; and perfectly verſed in both Languages; of great Courage and Fidelity; and in all Reſpects qualified for the Truſt; but his being abſent in the King's Service, when the Duke made his Eſcape out of England, and Sir John Berkley being then put about him, all Pains had been taken to leſſen his Eſteem of the Lord Byron; and Sir John Berkley knowing that He could no longer remain Governour, when the Lord Byron came thither; and hearing that He was in his Journey, infuſed into the Duke's Mind, that it was a great leſſening of his Dignity at that Age, (when He was not above fourteen Years of Age, and backward enough for that Age) to be under a Governour; and ſo partly by diſeſteeming the Perſon, and partly by reproaching the Office, He grew leſs inclined to the Perſon of that good Lord, than He ſhould have been.

Some Account of the Duke of York's Family.

BUT what Title ſoever any Body had, the whole Authority was in the Queen; not only by the Direction of the King, but by inevitable Neceſſity; for there was no Kind of Fund aſſigned for the Support of the Duke; but He depended entirely upon the Queen his Mother's Bounty, who had no more aſſigned for herſelf, than They, to whom the Management thereof was committed, knew well how to diſpoſe of, nor was it enough to ſerve their Occaſions; ſo that her Majeſty herſelf, certainly ſpent leſs upon her own Perſon, or in any thing relating to herſelf, than ever any Queen, or Lady of a very eminent Degree did. This viſible and total Dependance of the Duke upon his Mother, made her Majeſty the leſs apprehenſive of his doing any Thing contrary to her liking; and there was not that Care for the general Part of his Education; nor that Indulgence to his Perſon, as ought to have been; and the Queen's own Carriage and Behaviour towards him was at leaſt ſevere enough; as it had been before to the King, in the Time that He was Prince; which then, and now gave Opportunity to thoſe, who were not themſelves at Eaſe, to make many Infuſions; which how contrary ſoever to their Duties, were not ſo unreaſonable, as to be eaſily rejected, or to make no Impreſſion.

THE King at his going from Beauvais in his Voyage for Scotland, had given ſome Recommendation to the Duke his Brother, of Sir George Ratcliffe; to whoſe Care his Father had once deſigned to commit him, when He meant to have ſent him into Ireland; and his Majeſty had likewiſe, at the ſame Time at Beauvais, made ſome Promiſe to Sir George Ratcliffe of ſome Place about his Brother, when his Family ſhould be ſettled, of which there was then little Appearance: however it was enough to entitle him to give his frequent Attendance upon the Duke; and the general Reputation He had, of having been the Perſon of the neareſt Truſt with the Earl of Strafford, might well diſpoſe the Duke to think him a wiſe Man; and the better to eſteem any Thing He ſaid to him.

SIR Edward Herbert thought himſelf the wiſeſt Man that followed the King's Fortune; and was always angry that He had no more to do: and now Prince Rupert was abſent, endeavoured all He could to get Credit with the Duke of York; and came very frequently to him, and held him in long Whiſpers, which the Duke eaſily indulged to him, out of a real Belief that He was a Man of great Wiſdom, and Experience. The Queen liked neither of theſe two; which they well enough diſcerning, grew into a Friendſhip, or rather, a Familiarity together, though They were of the moſt different Natures, and Humours imaginable: Ratcliffe being a Man very capable of Buſineſs; and if the Proſperity of his former Fortune, had not raiſed in him ſome Fumes of Vanity, and Self-conceitedneſs, was very fit to be adviſed with; being of a Nature conſtant, and ſincere; which the other was not; yet They agreed well in the Deſign of making the Duke of York diſcontented, and weary of his Condition; which was not pleaſant enough to be much delighted in.

THE News from England, of the State of the King's Affairs in Scotland, made moſt Men believe that his Majeſty was irrecoverably loſt; and there was for ſome Time a Rumour ſcattered abroad, and by many believed, that the King was dead. Theſe two Gentlemen, upon the Fame of this, conſulted together, whether if the News were, or ſhould be true, the Duke of York, who muſt ſucceed, were in a good Place; and both concluded, that in that Caſe, it would not be fit that He ſhould be with his Mother Hereupon They perſuaded the Duke, that it was not fit for him to remain idle in France; but to employ himſelf Abroad, whereby his Experience might be improved; and He might put himſelf into a Poſture to be able to aſſiſt the King his Brother; or if any Misfortunes ſhould befal him, in ſome Degree to provide for himſelf; and propoſed to him, that He would reſolve to make a Journey to Bruſſels, to adviſe and conſult with the Duke of Lorrain, who was a Prince of great Wiſdom, Wealth, and Courage; and being driven out of his own Country, by too powerful and potent a Neighbour, had yet by his own Activity, and Virtue made himſelf ſo conſiderable, that Spain depended upon his Army: and France itſelf would be glad of his Friendſhip; that He was very rich, and would not be only able to give the Duke good Council, but Aſſiſtance to make it effectual.

THE Duke without farther examining the Probability of the Deſign, which He concluded had been thought upon enough by two ſuch wiſe Men, gave his full Conſent to it; and They having likewiſe found Credit for ſo much Money as would defray the Charges of the Journey, and really believing that the King was dead, the Duke one Day told the Queen, that He was reſolved to make a Journey to Bruſſels to ſee the Duke of Lorrain; with which the Queen being ſurpriſed, uſed both her Reaſon, and her Authority to diſſuade him from it, but could not prevail by either; his Highneſs telling her very obſtinately, that He would begin his Journey within two Days. She found that none of his Servants were privy to the Deſign, or were at all acquainted with the Purpoſe; and quickly diſcovered the two Counſellors; who having no Relation to his Service that She knew, were prepared to wait on him, and had drawn Dr. Steward (who was Dean of the Chapel to the King, and left behind, when his Majeſty went for Scotland, with Direction to be with the Duke of York) to be of their Party.

Character of Dr. Steward.

THE Doctor was a very honeſt, and learned Gentleman, and moſt converſant in that Learning, which vindicated the Dignity, and Authority of the Church; upon which his Heart was moſt entirely ſet; not without ſome Prejudice to thoſe, who thought there was any other Object to be more carefully purſued. Sir George Ratcliffe ſeemed to be of his Mind; and ſo was looked upon by him as one of the beſt Friends of the Church, which was Virtue enough to cover many Defects. He told him of the Rumour of the Death of the King; and what Conference had been between him, and the Attorney General upon it, which They both believed; and how neceſſary They thought it was for the Duke to be out of France, when the Certainty of that News ſhould arrive: That They had ſpoken with the Duke of it; who ſeemed very well diſpoſed, yet They knew not how his Mother's Authority might prevail over his Obedience; and therefore wiſhed that He would ſpeak with the Duke, who had great Reverence for him in all Matters of Conſcience, and remove any Scruples which might ariſe. The Doctor did not think himſelf ſo much regarded by the Queen, as He expected to be; and did really believe the Caſe to be ſuch as the other had informed him; and confirmed the Duke in his Reſolution, notwithſtanding any Thing his Mother ſhould ſay to the contrary; and the Queen could neither ſay, or do any Thing to diſſuade him from the Journey.

THE Lord Byron his Governour, and Mr. Bennet his Secretary, both well liked by the Queen, and of great Confidence in each other, thought it their Duty to attend upon him. Sir John Berkley ſtaid behind as well to avoid the being inferior to another, which He always abhorred; as to proſecute an Amour, which He was newly embarked in; and Sir George Ratcliffe, and Sir Edward Herbert, and the good Doctor were ſo to improve their Intereſt, that neither the Queen, or any who depended on her, might have any Credit with the Duke. Moſt of the inferior Servants depended upon them, becauſe They ſaw They had moſt Intereſt with their Maſter; and with theſe Thoughts, and Reſolutions, They all ſet out for Bruſſels; and theſe wild Notions were the true Reaſons, and Foundation of that Journey; which many ſober Men ſo much wondered at then; and ſo much cenſured afterwards.

WHEN his Highneſs came to Bruſſels, He was accommodated in the Houſe of Sir Henry De Vic, the King's Reſident there: and He was no ſooner there, but They began to model his Houſe, and regulate his Family; towards which, Sir George Ratcliffe was deſigned to manage all the Affairs of Money; the Attorney contenting himſelf with having the greateſt Power in governing the Councils; and all looking for other Stations upon the Arrival of the News from Scotland. But in a ſhort Time the Intelligence from thence was quite contrary to what They expected; the King was not only in good Health, but his Affairs in no deſperate Condition: all Factions ſeemed reconciled; and He was at the Head of an Army, that looked Cromwell in the Face.

HEREUPON They were at a great Stand in their Councils. The Duke of Lorrain had been civil to the Duke; and had at his firſt coming lent him ſome Money; but when He found He was without any Deſign; and by what Perſons his Counſels were directed, He grew colder in his Reſpects: and They who had gone thus far, took upon them the Preſumption to propoſe a Marriage between the Duke of York, and a natural Daughter of the Duke of Lorrain; his Marriage with Madame de Cantecroix, the Mother of the ſaid Lady, being declared void in the Court of Rome: but the Duke of Lorrain was ſo wiſe as not to entertain the Motion, except it ſhould be made with the King's Privity. So apt are unexperienced Men, when They are once out of the Way, to wander into Bogs, and Precipices, before They will be ſenſible of their falſe Conduct. When They found there was Nothing to be done at Bruſſels, They perſuaded the Duke to go to the Hague, with as little Deſign; and when They had wearied all People there, They came to Breda, where the Chancellor had met them.

The State of the Duke of York's Family at Breda.

THE Duke himſelf was ſo young, that He was rather delighted with the Journies He had made, than ſenſible that He had not entered upon them with Reaſon enough; and They had fortified him with a firm Reſolution, never to acknowledge that He had committed any Error. But his Counſellors had loſt all the Pleaſure of their Combination; and reproached each other of their Follies, and Preſumptions, with all the Animoſity imaginable. The Lord Byron, and Mr. Bennet, who had comforted each other in their Sufferings, were glad enough to ſee that there was ſome End put to their Peregrinations; and that by returning to the Queen, They were like to find ſome Reſt again: and They entertained the Chancellor with many ridiculous Relations of the Politicks of the Attorney, and Sir George Ratcliffe, and of the pleaſant Diſcourſes the Duke of Lorrain made of the Latin Orations, Sir George Ratcliffe had entertained him with.

ON the other Hand, Sir George was well pleaſed with the Grace He had received from the Duke of Lorrain; and with the Teſtimony He had given of him to ſome Men, who had told him of it again, that He was a very grave, and a wiſe Man; and that He wiſhed He had ſuch another to look after his Affairs. He, and Dr. Steward continued their Affections towards each other; and concurred in moſt bitter Invectives againſt Sir Edward Herbert, as a mad Man, and of that intolerable Pride, that it was not poſſible for any Man to converſe with him; and the Attorney as frankly reproached them all, with being Men of no Parts, of no Underſtanding, no Learning, no Principles, and no Reſolution; and was ſo juſt to them all, as to contemn every Man alike; and in Truth, had rendered himſelf ſo grievous to them all, and behaved himſelf ſo inſolently towards all, that there was not a Man who deſired to be in his Company: yet by the Knack of his Talk, which was the moſt like Reaſon, and not it, He retained ſtill great Credit with the Duke; who being ſtill confounded with his poſitive Diſcourſe, thought him to be wiſer than thoſe who were more eaſy to be underſtood.

THE Duke upon the Receipt of the Queen's Letters, which the Chancellor delivered to him, reſolved upon his Journey to Paris, without farther Delay; and the Chancellor waiting upon his Highneſs as far as Antwerp, He proſecuted his Journey with the ſame Retinue He had carried with him; and was received by his Mother without thoſe Expoſtulations, and Reprehenſions, which He might have expected; though her Severity was the ſame towards all thoſe, who She thought had the Credit, and Power to ſeduce him.

THE

THE Chancellor was now at a little Reſt again with his own Family in Antwerp: and had Time to be vacant to his own Thoughts, and Books; and in the Interval to enjoy the Converſation of many worthy Perſons of his own Nation, who had choſen that Place to ſpend the Time of their Baniſhment in. There was the Marquis of Newcaſtle, who having married a young Lady, confined himſelf moſt to her Company; and lived as retired, as his ruined Condition in England obliged him to; yet with Honour, and Decency, and with much Reſpect paid him by all Men, as well Foreigners as thoſe of his own Country. The Converſation the Chancellor took moſt Delight in, was that of Sir Charles Cavendiſh, Brother to the Marquis; who was one of the moſt extraordinary Perſons of that Age, in all the noble Endowments of the Mind. He had all the Diſadvantages imaginable in his Perſon; which was not only of ſo ſmall a Size, that it drew the Eyes of Men upon him; but with ſuch Deformity in his little Perſon, and an Aſpect in his Countenance, that was apter to raiſe Contempt than Application: But in this unhandſome or homely Habitation, there was a Mind and a Soul lodged that was very lovely, and beautiful; cultivated, and poliſhed by all the Knowledge, and Wiſdom, that Arts, and Sciences could ſupply it with. He was a great Philoſopher, in the Extent of it; and an excellent Mathematician: whoſe Correſpondence was very dear to Gaſſendus, and Deſcartes; the laſt of which dedicated ſome of his Works to him. He had very notable Courage; and the Vigour of his Mind, ſo adorned his Body, that being with his Brother the Marquis in all the War, He uſually went out in all Parties, and was preſent, and charged the Enemy in all Battles, with as keen a Courage, as could dwell in the Heart of Man. But then the Gentleneſs of his Diſpoſition, the Humility and Meekneſs of his Nature, and the Vivacity of his Wit was admirable. He was ſo modeſt, that He could hardly be prevailed with to enlarge himſelf on Subjects, He underſtood better than other Men, except He were preſſed by his very familiar Friends; as if He thought it Preſumption to know more, than handſomer Men uſe to do. Above all, his Virtue, and Piety was ſuch, that no Temptation could work upon him to conſent to any Thing, that ſwerved in the leaſt Degree from the preciſe Rules of Honour; or the moſt ſevere Rules of Conſcience.

The Chancellor's Friendſhip with, and Character of Sir Charles Cavendiſh.

WHEN He was exceedingly importuned by thoſe whom He loved beſt, to go into England, and compound for his Eſtate, which was very good, that thereby He might be enabled to help his Friends, who were reduced into great Streights; He refuſed it, out of Apprehenſion that He might be required to take the Covenant, or Engagement, or to do ſomewhat elſe, which his Conſcience would not permit him to do: and when They endeavoured to undervalue that Conſcience, and to perſuade him not to be governed by it, that would expoſe him to Famine, and reſtrain him from being charitable to his beſt Friends; He was ſo offended with their Argumentation, that He would no more admit any Diſcourſe upon the Subject. Upon which They applied themſelves to the Chancellor; who They thought, had moſt Credit with him: and deſired him to perſuade him to make a Journey into England; the Benefit whereof to him, and themſelves was very intelligible; but informed him not of his Refuſal, and the Arguments They had uſed to convert him.

The Chancellor perſuades Sir Charles Cavendiſh to go into England.

THE next Time They met, which They uſually did once a Day, the Chancellor told him, He heard He had a Purpoſe to make a Journey into England; to which He ſuddenly anſwered, that indeed He was deſired to do ſo, but that He had poſitively refuſed; and thereupon with much Warmth, and Indignation, related what Importunity, and what Argumentes had been uſed to him, and what He had anſwered: and thereupon ſaid, that his preſent Condition was in no Degree pleaſant, or eaſy to him (as in Truth it was not, He being in very viſible Want of ordinary Conveniences) but, He proteſted, that He would rather ſubmit to Nakedneſs, or ſtarving in the Street, than ſubſcribe to the Covenant, or Engagement, or do any Thing elſe that might trench upon his Honour, or his Conſcience. To which the Chancellor replied, that his Reſolution became him, and was worthy of his Wiſdom, and Honeſty; and that if He found him inclined to do any Thing that might trench upon either, He was ſo much his Friend, that He would put him in Mind of his Obligations to both; that indeed the Arguments which had been uſed to him could never prevail upon a virtuous Mind: however, He told him, He thought the Motion from his Friends might be a little more conſidered, before it was rejected; and confeſſed to him, that He was deſired to confer with him about it, and to diſpoſe him to it; without being informed, that any Attempt had been already made: and then aſked him, whether He did in Truth believe, that his Journey thither, might probably produce thoſe Benefits to himſelf, and his Friends, as They imagined; and then it would be fit to conſider whether thoſe Conveniences were to be purchaſed at a dearer Price than they were worth.

HE anſwered, there could be no Doubt, but that if He could go thither with Safety, and be admitted to compound for his Eſtate, as others did, He could then ſell it at ſo good a Price, that He could not only provide for a competent Subſiſtence for himſelf, when He returned, but likewiſe aſſiſt his Friends for their better Support; and that He could otherwiſe, out of Lands that were in Truſt, and not known to be his, and ſo had not been yet ſequeſtered, raiſe other Sums of Money, which would be attended with many Conveniences; and He confeſſed Nothing of all this could be done without his own Preſence. But then that which deprived him of all this, was, in the firſt Place, the Apprehenſion of Impriſonment; which, He ſaid, his Conſtitution would not bear; but eſpecially, becauſe by their own Ordinance, no Body was capable to compound, till He had ſubſcribed to the Covenant, and Engagement; which He would not do to ſave his Life; and that in what Neceſſity ſoever He was, He valued what Benefit He could poſſibly receive by the Journey, only as it might conſiſt with his Innocence, and Liberty to return; and ſince He could not reaſonably preſume of either, He had no Thought of going.

THE Chancellor told him, that They were both of the ſame Mind in all Things which related to Conſcience and Honour; but yet, ſince the Benefits that might reſult from this Journey were great, and very probable, and in ſome Degree certain; and the Miſchiefs He apprehended were not certain, and poſſibly might be avoided, He thought He was not to lay aſide all Thoughts of the Journey, which He was ſo importuned to undertake by thoſe who were ſo dear to him. That He was of the Few who had many Friends, and no Enemies; and therefore had no Reaſon to fear Impriſonment, or any other Rigour extraordinary; which was ſeldom uſed, but to Perſons under ſome notable Prejudice. That after He once came to London, He would not take much Pleaſure in going abroad; but might diſpatch his Buſineſs by others, who would repair to him: and that for the Covenant and Engagement, they were ſo contrary, that both were rarely offered to the ſame Perſon; and They had now ſo much juſtled, and reviled each other, that They were neither in ſo much Credit as They had been; and were not preſſed, but upon ſuch Perſons, againſt whom They had a particular Deſign; however He went well armed as to that Point, with a Reſolution not to ſubmit to either: and the worſt that could happen, was to return without the full Effect of his Journey. Whereas if thoſe Miſchiefs could be avoided, which the ſkilful upon the Place could only inſtruct him in, He would return with great Benefit, and Satisfaction to himſelf, and his Friends: and if He were ſubjected to Impriſonment (which He ought not to apprehend, and could be but ſhort) even in that Caſe, his Journey could not be without Fruit, by the Conference, and Tranſactions with his Friends; though no Compoſition could be made. Upon revolving theſe Conſiderations, He reſolved to undertake the Journey; and performed it ſo happily, without thoſe Obſtructions He feared, that He finiſhed all He propoſed to himſelf; and made a competent Proviſion to ſupport his Brother during his Diſtreſs; though when He had diſpatched it; He lived not to enjoy the Repoſe He deſired; but died before He could return to Antwerp, and the Marquis ever after publickly acknowledged the Benefit He received hereby, to the Chancellor's Advice.

As ſoon as the Chancellor had repoſed himſelf at Antwerp, after ſo much Fatigue; He thought it neceſſary to give ſome Account of himſelf to the King; and though the Prohibition before his going into Scotland, and the ſending away many of the Servants who attended him thither out of the Kingdom, made it unfit for him to repair thither himſelf; He reſolved to ſend his Secretary (a Man of Fidelity, and well known to the King) to inform his Majeſty of all that had paſſed; and to bring back his Commands; but when He was at Amſterdam, ready to embark, upon a Ship bound for Scotland, the News arrived there, of his Majeſty's being upon his March for England; upon which He returned to Antwerp; where He found the Spirits of all the Engliſh exalted with the ſame Advertiſement.

As ſoon as the King came to Paris (after his wonderful Deliverance from the Battle of Worceſter) and knew that the Chancellor of the Exchequer was at Antwerp, his Majeſty ſent to him to repair thither, which He accordingly did; and for the firſt four or five Days after his Arrival, the King ſpent many Hours with him in Private; and informed him of many Particulars of the Treatment He had met with in Scotland; of his March into England; of the Confuſion at Worceſter; and all the Circumſtances of his happy Eſcape and Deliverance. Hiſt. of the Reb. Folio, Vol. 3. P. 332.—Dub. Edit. Vol 3. P. 248.

The Queen endeavours to attach the Chancellor to her Intereſt.

THE Chancellor was yet looked upon with no ungracious Eye by her Majeſty; only the Lord Jermyn knew well He would never reſign himſelf to be diſpoſed of, which was the Temper that could only endear any Man to him: For beſides former Experience, an Attempt had been lately made upon him by Sir John Berkley; who told him, that the Queen had a good Opinion of him; and knew well in how ill a Condition He muſt be, in Reſpect of his Subſiſtence; and that She would aſſign him ſuch a competent Maintenance, that He ſhould be able to draw his Family to him out of Flanders, to Paris, and to live comfortably together, if She might be confident of his Service, and that He would always concur with her in his Advice to the King. To which He anſwered, that He ſhould never fail in performing his Duty to the Queen, whom He acknowledged to be his moſt gracious Miſtreſs, with all poſſible Integrity: But as He was a Servant, and Counſellor to the King, ſo He ſhould always conſider what was good for his Service; and never decline that out of any Compliance whatſoever; and that He did not deſire to be ſupported from any Bounty, but the King's; nor more by his, than in Proportion with what his Majeſty ſhould be able to do for his other Servants. And ſhortly after the Queen herſelf ſpeaking with him, and complaining, that She had no Credit with the King; the Chancellor deſired her not to think ſo; He knew well the King had great Duty for her, which He would ſtill preſerve toward her; but as it would not be fit for her to affect ſuch an Intereſt as to be thought to govern; ſo Nothing could be more diſadvantageous to the King, and to his Intereſt, than that the World ſhould believe that He was abſolutely governed by his Mother; which He found (though She ſeemed to conſent to it) was no acceptable Declaration to her. However She did often employ him to the King, upon ſuch Particulars as troubled, or offended her; as once for the Removal of a young Lady out of the Louvre, who had procured a Lodging there, without her Majeſty's Conſent; and with whom her Majeſty was juſtly offended, for the little Reſpect She ſhewed towards her Majeſty; and when the Chancellor had prevailed ſo far with the King, that He obliged the Lady to remove out of the Louvre, to ſatisfy his Mother; the Queen was well content that the Lady herſelf, and her Friends ſhould believe, that She had undergone that Affront merely by the Malice, and Credit of the Chancellor.

His Anſwer.

THE King remained at Paris till the Year 1654; when in the Month of June, He left France; and paſſing through Flanders, went to Spa; where He propoſed to ſpend two, or three Months with his Siſter, the Princeſs Royal. His Stay at Spa was not ſo long as He intended, the Small Pox breaking out there—His Majeſty, and his Siſter ſuddenly removed to Aix-la-Chapelle. Hiſt. of the Reb. Folio, Vol. 3. P. 417, 418, 419. —Dub. Edit. Vol. 3. P. 310, 311.

† AT this Time there fell out an Accident neceſſary to be inſerted in the particular Relation of the Chancellor's Life; which had afterwards an Influence upon his Fortune; and a very great one upon the Peace and Quiet of his Mind, and of his Family. When the King reſolved, immediately after the Murder of his Father, to ſend the Chancellor his Ambaſſador into Spain; the Chancellor being to begin his Journey from the Hague, ſent for his Wife, and Children, to meet him at Antwerp; and had at that Time only four Children, one Daughter and three Sons; all of ſo tender Years, that their own Diſcretions could contribute little to their Education. Theſe Children, under the ſole Direction of a very diſcreet Mother, He left at Antwerp, competently provided for, for the Space of a Year or more; hoping in that Time, to be able to ſend them ſome farther Supply; and having removed them out of England, to prevent any Inconvenience that might befall them there, upon any Accident that might reſult from his Negotiation in Spain; it being in thoſe Times no unuſual Thing for the Parliament, when it had conceived any notable Diſpleaſure againſt a Man, who was out of their Reach, to ſeize upon his Wife, and Children; and to impriſon them, in what Manner, and for what Time ſeemed reaſonable to them; and from this Hazard He was willing to preſerve his. The King was in Scotland when the Chancellor returned from his Embaſſy to Antwerp, where his Family had ſtill remained; his Children being grown as much as uſually attends the Space of two Years, which was the Time He had been abſent. The fatal Succeſs at Worceſter about this Time had put a Period to all his Majeſty's preſent Deſigns; and He had no ſooner made his wonderful Eſcape into France, than He ſent for the Chancellor; who left his Family, as He had done formerly, and as meanly ſupplied, and made all Haſte to Paris, where He found the King; with whom He remained till his Majeſty was even compelled to remove from thence into Germany; which was above three Years.

They remove to Breda.

DURING that Time the Princeſs Royal had, out of her own Princely Nature, and Inclination, cultivated by the Civility, and Offices of the Lady Stanhope, conferred a very ſeaſonable Obligation upon him, by aſſigning a Houſe, that was in her Diſpoſal at Breda, to his Wife, and Children; who had thereupon left Antwerp; and without the Payment of any Houſe Rent, were more conveniently, becauſe more frugally, ſettled in their new Manſion at Breda; where He got Liberty to viſit them for four, or five Days, whilſt the King continued his Journey to the Spa; and after another Abſence of near four Years; finding his Children grown and improved after that Rate. The gracious Inclination in the Princeſs Royal, towards the Chancellor's Wife, and Children (not without ſome Reprehenſion from Paris) and the Civilities in the Lady Stanhope, had proceeded much from the good Offices of Daniel O Neile of the King's Bed-chamber; who had for many Years lived in very good Correſpondence with the Chancellor; and was very acceptable in the Court of the Princeſs Royal, and to thoſe Perſons who had the greateſt Influence upon her Councils, and Affections.

THE Princeſs met the King her Brother at the Spa, rather for the mutual Comfort They took in each other, than for the Uſe either of them had of the Waters; yet the Princeſs engaged herſelf to that Order, and Diet that the Waters required; and after near a Month's Stay there, They were forced ſuddenly to remove from thence, by the Sickneſs of ſome of the Princeſs's Women of the Small Pox; and reſided at Aix-la-Chapelle, where They had been but one whole Day, when Notice came from the Spa that Mrs. Killigrew, one of the Maids of Honour to the Princeſs, was dead of the Small Pox. O Neile came in the Inſtant to the Chancellor with very much Kindneſs, and told him, that the Princeſs Royal had a very good Opinion of him, and kind Purpoſes towards his Family; which She knew ſuffered much for his Fidelity to the King; and therefore that She was much troubled to find that her Mother the Queen had leſs Kindneſs for him than He deſerved; that by the Death of Mrs. Killigrew there was a Place now fallen, which very many would deſire; and that it would no ſooner be known at Paris, than the Queen would undoubtedly recommend ſome Lady to the Princeſs; but He was confident that, if the Chancellor would move the King to recommend his Daughter, who was known to the Princeſs, her Highneſs would willingly receive her. He thanked him for his particular Kindneſs; but conjured him not to uſe his Intereſt to promote any ſuch Pretence; and told him that "himſelf would not apply the King's Fa- "vour to ſuch a Requeſt; that He had but one "Daughter, who was all the Company, and Com- "fort her Mother had, in her melancholick Retire- "ment; and therefore He was reſolved not to ſe- "parate them; nor to diſpoſe his Daughter to a "Court Life:" which He did in Truth perfectly deteſt. O Neile, much diſappointed with the Anſwer, and believing that the Propoſition would have been very grateful to him, confeſſed that the Princeſs had been already moved in it by the Lady Cheſterfield; and that it was her own Deſire that the King ſhould move it to her; to the End, that She might be thereby ſheltered from the Reproach which She expected from the Queen; but that the Princeſs herſelf had ſo much Kindneſs for his Daughter, that She had long reſolved to have her upon the firſt Vacancy. The Chancellor was exceedingly perplexed; and reſolved nothing more, than that his Daughter ſhould not live from her Mother; and therefore renewed his Conjurations to Mr. O Neile, that He would not farther promote it, ſince it would never be acceptable to him; and concluded, that his making no Application, and the Importunity of others who deſired the Honour, would put an End to the Pretence.

Mr. O Neile propoſes to the Chancellor to aſk for Mrs. Killigrew's Place for his Daughter.

Which the Chancellor declines.

THE King had heard of the Matter, from the Princeſs, and willingly expected when the Chancellor would move him for his Recommendation; which when He ſaw He forbore to do, He ſpake himſelf to him of it; and aſked him, why He did not make ſuch a Suit to him; upon which the Chancellor told him all that had paſſed between O Neile and him; and that for many Reaſons, He declined the receiving that Obligation from the Princeſs; and therefore He had no Uſe of his Majeſty's Favour in it. The King told him plainly, that "his Siſter upon having ſeen his Daughter "ſome Days, liked her ſo well, that She deſired to "have her about her Perſon; and had herſelf ſpo- "ken to him to move it to her, for the Reaſon "aforeſaid, and to prevent any Diſpleaſure from the "Queen; and He knew not how the Chancellor "could, or why He ſhould omit ſuch an Opportu- "nity of providing for his Daughter, in ſo honour- "able a Way." The Chancellor told him, "He "could not diſpute the Reaſons with him: only "that He could not give himſelf Leave to deprive "his Wife of her Daughter's Company; nor be- "lieve that She could be more advantageouſly bred, "than under her Mother." Hereupon he went to the Princeſs, and took Notice of the Honour She was inclined to do him; but, He told Her, the Honour was not fit for him to receive, nor the Conjuncture ſeaſonable for her Royal Highneſs to confer it: That She could not but know his Condition, being deprived of his Eſtate; and if her Highneſs's Bounty had not aſſigned a Houſe at Breda, where his Wife and Family lived Rent free, They had not known how to have ſubſiſted: But by that her Favour, and ſmall Supplies his Friends in England ſecretly ſent over to them, ſuſtained them in that private Retirement in which They lived; ſo that it was not in his Power to make his Daughter ſuch an Allowance, as would enable her to live in her Court, in that Manner as would become her Relation.

The King ſpeaks to him on that Subject.

The Chancellor's Anſwer.

His Diſcourſe with the Princeſs Royal.

THE Princeſs would not permit him to enlarge; but very generouſly told him, that She knew well the Streightneſs of his Condition, and how it came to be ſo low; and had no Thought, that He ſhould be at the Charge to maintain his Daughter in her Service; that He ſhould leave that to Her: and ſo uſed many Expreſſions of Eſteem of him, and of Kindneſs, and Grace to his Daughter. He foreſeeing, and expecting ſuch Generoſity, replied to her, that ſince her Goodneſs diſpoſed her to ſuch an Act of Charity, and Honour; it became his Duty, and Gratitude to provide, that She ſhould bring no Inconvenience upon herſelf: That He had the Miſfortune (with all the Innocence, and Integrity imaginable) to be more in the Queen her Mother's Disfavour, than any Gentleman, who had had the Honour to ſerve the Crown ſo many Years in ſome Truſt; that all the Application He could make, nor the King's own Interpoſition, could prevail with her Majeſty, to receive him into her gracious Opinion; and that He could not but know, that this unſeaſonable Act of Charity, which her Highneſs would vouchſafe to ſo ungracious a Family, would produce ſome Reſentment, and Diſpleaſure from the Queen her Mother, towards her Highneſs; and increaſe the Weight of her ſevere Indignation againſt him, which ſo heavily oppreſſed him already; and therefore He reſolved to prevent that Miſchief, which would undoubtedly befall her Highneſs; and would not ſubmit to the receiving the Fruits of her favourable Condeſcenſion.

To this the Princeſs anſwered with ſome Warmth, that She had always paid that Duty to the Queen her Mother, which was due to her; and would never give her a juſt Cauſe to be offended with her: But that She was Miſtreſs of her own Family, and might receive what Servants She pleaſed; and that She ſhould commit a great Fault againſt the Queen, if She ſhould forbear to do a good, and a juſt Action, to which She was inclined, out of Apprehenſion that her Majeſty would be offended at it. She ſaid, She knew ſome ill Offices had been done him to her Mother, for which She was ſorry; and doubted not, but her Majeſty would in due Time diſcern that She had been miſinformed, and miſtaken; and then She would like and approve of what her Highneſs ſhould now do. In the mean Time She was reſolved to take his Daughter, and would ſend for her as ſoon as She returned into Holland. The Chancellor, not in any Degree converted; but confounded with the gracious and frank Diſcourſe of the Princeſs Royal, knew not what more to ſay; replied only, that He hoped her Highneſs would think better of what She ſeemed to undervalue, and that He left his Daughter to be diſpoſed of by her Mother, who He knew would be very unwilling to part with her; upon which her Highneſs anſwered, "I'll warrant you, my Lady and I will agree upon "the Matter." To conclude this Diſcourſe, which, conſidering what fell out afterwards, is not impertinent to be remembered; He knew his Wife had no Inclination to have her Daughter out of her own Company; and when He had by Letter informed her of all that had paſſed, He endeavoured to confirm her in that Reſolution: but when the Princeſs after her Return into Holland ſent to her, and renewed her gracious Offer; She, upon Conſultation with Dr. Morley (who upon the old Friendſhip between the Chancellor and him, choſe in his Baniſhment, from the Murder of the King, to make his Reſidence for the moſt Part in his Family, and was always perfectly kind to all his Intereſts) believed it might prove for her Daughter's Benefit; and writ to her Huſband her Opinion, and the Doctor concurred in the ſame.

THE Chancellor looked upon the Matter itſelf, and all the Circumſtances thereof, as having ſome Marks of Divine Providence, which He would not reſiſt; and ſo referred it wholly to his Wife; who when She had preſented her Daughter to the Princeſs, came herſelf to reſide with her Huſband, to his great Comfort; and which He could not have enjoyed, if the other Separation had not been made; and poſſibly that Conſideration had the more eaſily diſpoſed her to conſent to the other. We have now ſet down all the Paſſages, and Circumſtances which accompanied, or attended that Lady's firſt Promotion, to the Service of the Princeſs Royal; which the extreme Averſeneſs in her Father, and Mother, from embracing that Opportunity, and the unuſual Grace, and Importunity from them who conferred the Honour, being conſidered, there may appear to many an extraordinary Operation of Providence, in giving the firſt Riſe to what afterwards ſucceeded; though of a Nature ſo tranſcendent, as cannot be thought to have any Relation to it.

AFTER an unſucceſsful Inſurrection of ſome of the King's Friends in England, Cromwell exerciſed the utmoſt Severity, and Cruelty againſt them: putting many to Death; and tranſporting others, as Slaves to Barbadoes; and by his own Authority, and that of his Council, made an Order, that all Perſons who had ever born Arms for, or declared themſelves of, the Royal Party, ſhould be decimated; that is, pay a tenth Part of all the Eſtate They had left, to ſupport the Charge of the Commonwealth; and publiſhed a Declaration to juſtify his Proceedings: Hiſt. of the Reb. Folio, Vol. 3. from P. 429, to 444. — Dub. Edit. Vol. 3. from P. 315, to 327. which confidently ſet down ſuch Maxims, as made it manifeſt to all who had ever ſerved the King, or would not ſubmit to Cromwell's Power, and Government, that They had nothing that They could call their own, but muſt be diſpoſed of at his Pleaſure; which as much concerned all other Parties, as the King's, in the Conſequence.

Cromwell publiſhes a Declaration juſtifying his Order for decimating the King's Party.

THIS Declaration as ſoon as printed, was ſent over to Cologne, where the King then was, and the Chancellor was commanded by the King to write ſome Diſcourſe upon it, to awaken the People, and ſhew them their Concernment in it; which He did by Way of a Letter to a Friend; which was likewiſe ſent into England, and there printed; and when Cromwell called his next Parliament, it was made great Uſe of to inflame the People; and make them ſenſible of the Deſtruction that attended them; and was thought then to produce many good Effects. And ſo we conclude this Part.

To which the Chancellor by the King's Command writes an Anſwer.

Conclufion.

Montpelier, 27*th of May*, 1670.

THE Seventh and laſt Part of the Manuſcript is dated at Montpelier, Auguſt the 1ſt, 1670, and continues the Hiſtory from the King's Reſidence at Cologne, to the Reſtoration of the Royal Family in 1660; containing the Subſtance of what is printed in the two laſt Books of The Hiſtory of the Rebellion. The only remarkable Circumſtance of the Author's Life during that Period is, that in the Year 1657, while the King was at Bruges, his Majeſty appointed the Chancellor of the Exchequer to be Lord High Chancellor of England; and delivered the Great Seal into his Cuſtody, upon the Death of Sir Edward Herbert, the laſt Lord Keeper thereof. Hiſt. of the Reb. Vol. 3. P. 480.—Dub. Edit. THE CONTINUATION, &c.

Molins, 8th Day of June, 1672. Reflections upon the moſt material Paſſages which happened after the King's Reſtoration to the Time of the Chancellor's Baniſhment; out of which his Children, for whoſe Information they are only collected, may add ſome important Paſſages to his Life, as the true Cauſe of his Misfortunes.

The Author's Preface.

THE eaſy and glorious Reception of the King, in the Manner that hath been mentioned, without any other Conditions than what had been frankly offered by himſelf in his Declaration and Letters from Breda; the Parliament's caſting themſelves in a Body at his Feet, in the Minute of his Arrival at Whitehall, with all the Profeſſions of Duty and Submiſſion imaginable; and no Man having Authority there, but They who had either eminently ſerved the late King, or who were ſince grown up out of their Nonage from ſuch Fathers, and had throughly manifeſted their faſt Fidelity to his preſent Majeſty; the reſt who had been enough criminal, ſhewing more Animoſity towards the ſevere Puniſhment of thoſe, who having more Power in the late Times had exceeded them in Miſchief, than Care for their own Indemnity: This Temper ſufficiently evident, and the univerſal Joy of the People, which was equally viſible, for the total Suppreſſion of all thoſe who had ſo many Years exerciſed Tyranny over them, made moſt Men believe both abroad and at home, that God had not only reſtored the King miraculouſly to his Throne, but that He had, as He did in the Time of Hezekiah, prepared the People, for the Thing was done ſuddenly, (2 Chron. xxix. 36.) in ſuch a Manner that his Authority and Greatneſs would have been more illuſtrious, than it had been in any of his Anceſtors. And it is moſt true, and muſt never be denied, that the People were admirably diſpoſed and prepared to pay all the Subjection, Duty and Obedience, that a juſt and prudent King could expect from them, and had a very ſharp Averſion and Deteſtation of all thoſe who had formerly miſled and corrupted them; ſo that, except the General, who ſeemed to be poſſeſſed entirely of the Affection of the Army, and whoſe Fidelity was now above any Miſapprehenſion, there appeared no Man whoſe Power and Intereſt could in any Degree ſhake or endanger the Peace and Security the King was in; the Congratulations for his Return being ſo univerſal, from all the Counties of England, as well as from the Parliament and City; from all thoſe who had moſt ſignally diſſerved and diſclaimed him, as well as from thoſe of his own Party and thoſe who were deſcended from them: Inſomuch as the King was wont merrily to ſay, as hath been mentioned before, "that it could be Nobody's Fault but his own that "He had ſtayed ſo long abroad, when all Mankind "wiſhed him ſo heartily at home." It cannot therefore but be concluded by the Standers by, and the Spectators of this wonderful Change and Exclamation of all Degrees of Men, that there muſt be ſome wonderful Miſcarriages in the State, or ſome unheard of Defect of Underſtanding in thoſe who were truſted by the King in the Adminiſtration of his Affairs, that there could in ſo ſhort a Time be a new Revolution in the general Affections of the People, that They grew even weary of that Happineſs They were poſſeſſed of, and had ſo much valued, and fell into the ſame Diſcontents and Murmurings which had naturally accompanied them in the worſt Times. From what fatal Cauſes theſe miſerable Effects were produced, is the Buſineſs of this preſent Diſquiſition to examine, and in ſome Degree to diſcover; and therefore muſt be of ſuch a Nature, as muſt be as tenderly handled, with Reference to Things and Perſons, as the Diſcovery of the Truth will permit; and cannot be preſumed to be intended ever for a public View, or for more than the Information of his Children, of the true Source and Grounds from whence their Father's Misfortunes proceeded, in which nothing can be found that can make them aſhamed of his Memory.

THE King brought with him from beyond the Seas that Council which had always attended him, and whoſe Advice He had always received in his Tranſactions of greateſt Importance; and his ſmall Family, that conſiſted of Gentlemen who had for the moſt Part been put about him by his Father, and conſtantly waited upon his Perſon in all his Diſtreſs, with as much Submiſſion and Patience undergoing their Part in it, as could reaſonably be expected from ſuch a People; and therefore had the keener Appetites, and the ſtronger Preſumption, to puſh on their Fortunes (as They called it) in the Infancy of their Maſter's Reſtoration, that other Men might not be preferred before them, who had not borne the Heat of the Day, as They had done.

The King's Council at the Reſtoration.

OF the Council were the Chancellor, the Marquis of Ormond, the Lord Colepepper, and Secretary Nicholas, who lived in great Unity and Concurrence in the Communication of the moſt ſecret Counſels. There had been more of his Council abroad with him, who, according to the Motions He made and the Places He had reſided in, were ſome Times with him, but others remained in France, or in ſome Parts of Holland and Flanders, for their Convenience, ready to repair to his Majeſty when They ſhould be called. The four nominated above were They who conſtantly attended, were privy to all Counſels, and waited upon him in his Return.

Lord Chancellor Hyde.

THE Chancellor was the higheſt in Place, and thought to be ſo in Truſt, becauſe He was moſt in private with the King, had managed moſt of the ſecret Correſpondence in England, and all Diſpatches of Importance had paſſed through his Hands; which had hitherto been with the leſs Envy, becauſe the indefatigable Pains he took were very viſible, and it was as viſible that he gained Nothing by it. His Wants and Neceſſities were as great as any Man's, nor was the Allowance aſſigned to him by the King in the leaſt Degree more, or better paid, than every one of the Council received. Beſides, the Friendſhip was ſo entire between the Marquis of Ormond and him, that no Arts that were uſed could diſſolve it; and it was enough known, that as He had an entire and full Confidence from the King and a greater Eſteem than any Man, ſo, that the Chancellor ſo entirely communicated all Particulars with him, that there was not the leaſt Reſolution taken without his Privity and Approbation. The Chancellor had been employed by the laſt King in all the Affairs of the greateſt Truſt and Secrecy; had been made Privy Counſellor and Chancellor of the Exchequer in the very Beginning of the Troubles; and had been ſent by that King into the Weſt with his Son, when He thought their Intereſt would be beſt preſerved and provided for by ſeparating their Perſons. A greater Teſtimony and Recommendation a Servant could not receive from his Maſter, than the King gave of him to the Prince, who from that Time treated him with as much Affection and Confidence as any Man, and which (notwithſtanding very powerful Oppoſition) He continued and improved to this Time of his Reſtoration; and even then rejected ſome Intimations rather than Propoſitions which were ſecretly made to him at the Hague, that the Chancellor was a Man very much in the Prejudice of the Preſbyterian Party, as in Truth He was, and therefore that his Majeſty would do beſt to leave him behind, till He ſhould be himſelf ſettled in England: Which the King received with that Indignation and Diſdain, and anſwered the Perſon, who privately preſumed to give the Advice, in ſuch a Manner, that He was troubled no more with the Importunity, nor did any Man ever own the Advice. Yet the Chancellor had beſought the King, upon ſome Rumours which had been ſpread, that if any Exception or Prejudice to his Perſon ſhould be ſo inſiſted on, as might delay his Return one Hour, He would decline giving him any Protection, till He ſhould find it more in his Power, after his Arrival in England: Which Deſire of his, though it found no Reception with the King, proceeded from ſo much Sincerity, that it is well known, the Chancellor did poſitively reſolve, that if any ſuch Thing had been urged by any Authority, He would render the King's Indulgence and Grace of no Inconvenience to his Majeſty, by his ſecret and voluntary withdrawing himſelf, without his Privity, and without the Reach of his Diſcovery for ſome Time: So far He was from being biaſſed by his own particular Benefit and Advantage.

The Marquis of Ormond. THE Marquis of Ormond was the Perſon of the greateſt Quality, Eſtate, and Reputation, who had frankly engaged his Perſon and his Fortune in the King's Service from the firſt Hour of the Troubles, and purſued it with that Courage and Conſtancy, that when the King was murdered, and He deſerted by the Iriſh, contrary to the Articles of the Peace which they had made with him, and when He could make no longer Defence, He refuſed all the Conditions which Cromwell offered, who would have given him all his vaſt Eſtate, if He would have been contented to have lived quietly in ſome of his own Houſes, without farther concerning himſelf in the Quarrel; and tranſported himſelf without ſo much as accepting a Paſs from his Authority, in a little weak Veſſel into France, where He found the King, from whom He never parted till He returned with him into England. And having thus merited as much as a Subject can do from a Prince, He had much more Credit and Eſteem with the King than any other Man: And the Luſtre the Chancellor was in, was no leſs from the declared Friendſhip the Marquis had for him, than from the great Truſt his Majeſty repoſed in him.

The Lord Colepepper. THE Lord Colepepper was a Man of great Parts, a very ſharp and preſent Wit, and an univerſal Underſtanding; ſo that few Men filled a Place in Council with more Sufficiency, or expreſſed themſelves upon any Subject that occurred with more Weight and Vigour. He had been truſted by the late King (who had a ſingular Opinion of his Courage and other Abilities) to wait upon the Prince when He left his Father, and continued ſtill afterwards with him, or in his Service, and in a good Correſpondence with the Chancellor.

Secretary Nicholas. SECRETARY Nicholas was a Man of general good Reputation with all Men, of unqueſtionable Integrity and long Experience in the Service of the Crown; whom the late King truſted as much as any Man to his Death. He was one of thoſe who were excepted by the Parliament from Pardon or Compoſition, and ſo was compelled to leave the Kingdom ſhortly after Oxford was delivered up, when the King was in the Hands of the Scots. The preſent King continued him in the Office of Secretary of State, which He had ſo long held under his Father. He was a Man of great Gravity, and without any ambitious or private Deſigns; and had ſo faſt a Friendſhip with the Chancellor for many Years, that He was very well content and without any Jealouſy for his making many Diſpatches and other Tranſactions, which more immediately related to his Office, and which indeed were always made with his Privity and Concurrence.

THIS was the State and Conſtitution of the King's Council, and his Family, when he embarked in Holland, and landed at Dover: The Additions and Alterations which were after made will be mentioned in their Place.

IT will be convenient here, before We deſcend to thoſe Particulars which had an Influence upon the Minds of Men, to take a clear View of the Temper and Spirit of that Time; of the Nature and Inclination of the Army; of the Diſpoſition and Intereſt of the ſeveral Factions in Religion, all which appeared in their ſeveral Colours without diſſembling their Principles, and with equal Confidence demanded the Liberty of Conſcience They had enjoyed in and ſince the Time of Cromwell; and the Humour and the preſent Purpoſe and Deſign of the Parliament itſelf, to whoſe Judgment and Determination the whole Settlement of the Kingdom both in Church and State ſtood referred by the King's own Declaration from Breda, which by God's Inſpiration had been the ſole viſible Motive to that wonderful Change that had enſued. And whoſoever takes a Proſpect of all thoſe ſeveral Paſſions and Appetites and Intereſts, together with the divided Affections, Jealouſies and Animoſities, of thoſe who had been always looked upon as the King's Party, which if united would in that Conjuncture have been powerful enough to have balanced all the other: I ſay, whoever truly and ingenuouſly conſiders and reflects upon all this Compoſition of contradictory Wiſhes and Expectations, muſt confeſs that the King was not yet the Maſter of the Kingdom, nor his Authority and Security ſuch as the general Noiſe and Acclamation, the Bells and the Bonfires, proclaimed it to be; and that there was in no Conjuncture more Need, that the Virtue and Wiſdom and Induſtry of a Prince ſhould be evident and made manifeſt in the Preſervation of his Dignity, and in the Application of his Mind to the Government of his Affairs; and that all who were eminently truſted by him, ſhould be Men of unqueſtionable Sincerity, who with Induſtry and Dexterity ſhould firſt endeavour to compoſe the publick Diſorders, and to provide for the Peace and Settlement of the Kingdom, before they applied themſelves to make or improve their own particular Fortunes. And there is little Queſtion, but if this good Method had been purſued, and the Reſolutions of that Kind, which the King had ſeriouſly taken beyond the Seas, when He firſt diſcerned his good Fortune coming towards him, had been executed and improved; the Hearts and Affections of all Degrees of Men were ſo prepared by their own natural Inclinations and Integrity, by what they had ſeen and what They had ſuffered, by their Obſervations and Experience, by their Fears or by their Hopes; that they might have been all kneaded into a firm and conſtant Obedience and Reſignation to the King's Authority, and to a laſting Eſtabliſhment of monarchick Power in all the juſt Extents which the King could expect, or Men of any publick or honeſt Affections could wiſh or ſubmit to.

The Temper and Spirit of that Time.

THE firſt Mortification the King met with was as ſoon as He arrived at Canterbury, which was within three Hours after He landed at Dover; and where He found many of thoſe who were juſtly looked upon, from their own Sufferings or thoſe of their Fathers, and their conſtant adhering to the ſame Principles, as of the King's Party, who with Joy waited to kiſs his Hand, and were received by him with thoſe open Arms and flowing Expreſſions of Grace, calling all thoſe by their Names who were known to him, that They eaſily aſſured themſelves of the Accompliſhment of all their Deſires from ſuch a generous Prince. And ſome of them, that They might not loſe the firſt Opportunity, forced him to give them preſent Audience, in which They reckoned up the inſupportable Loſſes undergone by themſelves or their Fathers, and ſome Importunate Solicitations made to the King at Canterbury by ſome Royaliſts.

Services

Services of their own; and thereupon demanded the preſent Grant or Promiſe of ſuch or ſuch an Office. Some, for the real ſmall Value of one though of the firſt Claſſis, preſſed for two or three with ſuch Confidence and Importunity, and with ſuch tedious Diſcourſes, that the King was extremely nauſeated with their Suits, though his Modeſty knew not how to break from them; that He no ſooner got into his Chamber, which for ſome Hours He was not able to do, than He lamented the Condition to which He found He muſt be ſubject: And did in Truth from that Minute contract ſuch a Prejudice againſt the Perſons of ſome of thoſe, though of the greateſt Quality, for the Indecency and Incongruity of their Pretences, that He never afterwards received their Addreſſes with his uſual Grace or Patience, and rarely granted any Thing They deſired, though the Matter was more reaſonable, and the Manner of aſking much more modeſt.

Monk recommends a Liſt of Privy Counſellors to the King.

BUT there was another Mortification which immediately ſucceeded this, that gave him much more Trouble, and in which He knew not how to comport himſelf. The General, after He had given all neceſſary Orders to his Troops, and ſent a ſhort Diſpatch to the Parliament of the King's being come to Canterbury, and of his Purpoſe to ſtay there two Days till the next Sunday was paſt; He came to the King in his Chamber, and in a ſhort ſecret Audience, and without any Preamble or Apology, as He was not a Man of a graceful Elocution, He told him "that "He could not do him better Service, than by re- "commending to him ſuch Perſons, who were moſt "grateful to the People, and in Reſpect of their Parts "and Intereſts were beſt able to ſerve him:" And thereupon gave him a large Paper full of Names, which the King in Diſorder enough received, and without reading put it into his Pocket, that He might not enter into any particular Debate upon the Perſons, and told him "that He would be always ready to re- "ceive his Advice, and willing to gratify him in any "Thing He ſhould deſire, and which would not be "prejudicial to his Service." The King, as ſoon as He could, took an Opportunity, when there remained no more in his Chamber, to inform the Chancellor of the firſt Aſſaults He had encountred as ſoon as He alighted out of his Coach, and afterwards of what the General had ſaid to him; and thereupon took the Paper out of his Pocket and read it. It contained the Names of at leaſt threeſcore and ten Perſons, who were thought fitteſt to be made Privy Counſellors; in the whole Number whereof, there were only two, who had ever ſerved the King or been looked upon as zealouſly affected to his Service, the Marquis of Hertford, and the Earl of Southampton, who were Both of ſo univerſal Reputation and Intereſt, and ſo well known to have the very particular Eſteem of the King, that They needed no ſuch Recommendation. All the reſt were either thoſe Counſellors who had ſerved the King, and deſerted him by adhering to the Parliament; or of thoſe who had moſt eminently diſſerved him in the Beginning of the Rebellion, and in the carrying it on with all Fierceneſs and Animoſity until the new Model, and diſmiſſing the Earl of Eſſex: Then indeed Cromwell had grown terrible to them, and diſpoſed them to wiſh the King were again poſſeſſed of his regal Power, and which They did but wiſh. There were then the Names of the principal Perſons of the Preſbyterian Party, to which the General was thought to be moſt inclined, at leaſt to ſatisfy the fooliſh and unruly Inclinations of his Wife. There were likewiſe the Names of ſome who were moſt notorious in all the other Factions; and of ſome who in Reſpect of their mean Qualities and meaner Qualifications, no Body could imagine how They could come to be named, except that, by the very odd Mixture, any ſober and wiſe Reſolutions and Concurrence might be prevented.

With which He is diſpleaſed.

THE King was in more than ordinary Confuſion with the reading this Paper, and knew not well what to think of the General, in whoſe abſolute Power He now was. However, He reſolved in the Entrance upon his Government not to conſent to ſuch Impoſitions, which might prove perpetual Fetters and Chains upon him ever after. He gave the Paper therefore to the Chancellor, and bade him, "take the firſt Op- "portunity to diſcourſe the Matter with the General" (whom He had not yet ſaluted) "or rather with Mr. "Morrice his moſt intimate Friend," whom He had newly preſented to the King, and "with Both whom "He preſumed He would ſhortly be acquainted," though for the preſent Both were equally unknown to him. Shortly after, when mutual Viſits had paſſed between them, and ſuch Profeſſions as naturally are made between Perſons who were like to have much to do with each other; and Mr. Morrice being in private with him, the Chancellor told him "how much the "King was ſurpriſed with the Paper He had received "from the General, which at leaſt recommended (and "which would have always great Authority with him) "ſome ſuch Perſons to his Truſt, in whom He could "not yet, till They were better known to him, re- "poſe any Confidence." And thereupon He read many of their Names, and ſaid, "that if ſuch Men "were made Privy Counſellors, it would either be "imputed to the King's own Election, which would "cauſe a very ill Meaſure to be taken of his Majeſty's "Nature and Judgment; or (which more probably "would be the Caſe) to the Inclination and Power of "the General, which would be attended with as ill "Effects." Mr. Morrice ſeemed much troubled at the Apprehenſion, and ſaid, "the Paper was of his "Handwriting, by the General's Order, who He was "aſſured had no ſuch Intention; but that He would "preſently ſpeak with him and return," which He did within leſs than an Hour, and expreſſed "the "Trouble the General was in upon the King's very "juſt Exception; and that the Truth was, He had "been obliged to have much Communication with Men of "all Humours and Inclinations, and ſo had promiſed to "do them good Offices to the King, and could not therefore "avoid inſerting their Names in that Paper, without any "Imaginations that the King would accept them; That "He had done his Part, and all that could be expected "from him, and left the King to do what he had thought "beſt for his own Service, which He would always de- "ſire him to do, whatever Propoſition He ſhould at any "Time preſume to make to his Majeſty, which He would "not promiſe ſhould be always reaſonable. However, "He did ſtill heartily wiſh, that his Majeſty would make "Uſe of ſome of thoſe Perſons," whom he named, and "ſaid, "He knew moſt of them were not his Friends, "and that his Service would be more advanced by admit- "ting them, than by leaving them out."

But ſatisfied by Monk's Explanation.

THE King was abundantly pleaſed with this good Temper of the General, and leſs diſliked thoſe, who He diſcerned would be grateful to him, than any of the reſt: And ſo the next Day, He made the General Knight of the Garter, and admitted him of the Council; and likewiſe at the ſame Time gave the Signet to Mr. Morrice, who was ſworn of the Council and Secretary of State; and Sir Anthony Aſhley Cooper, who had been preſented by the General under a ſpecial Recommendation, was then too ſworn of the Council, and the rather, becauſe having lately married the Niece of the Earl of Southampton (who was then likewiſe preſent, and received the Garter to which He had been elected ſome Years before) it was believed that his ſlippery Humour would be eaſily reſtrained and fixed by the Uncle. All this was tranſacted during his Majeſty's Stay at Canterbury.

The King's triumphant Entry into London.

UPON the 29th of May, which was his Majeſty's Birth-day, and now the Day of his Reſtoration and Triumph, He entered London the Highway from Rochester to Blackheath, being on both Sides ſo full of Acclamations of Joy, and crowded with ſuch a Multitude tude of People that it ſeemed one continued Street wonderfully inhabited. Upon Blackheath the Army was drawn up, conſiſting of above fifty thouſand Men, Horſe and Foot, in excellent Order and Equipage, where the General preſented the chief Officers to kiſs the King's Hands, which Grace they ſeemed to receive with all Humility and Chearfulneſs. Shortly after, the Lord Mayor of London, the Sheriffs, and Body of the Aldermen, with the whole Militia of the City, appeared with great Luſtre; whom the King received with a moſt graceful and obliging Countenance, and knighted the Mayor and all the Aldermen, and Sheriffs, and the principal Officers of the Militia: an Honour the City had been without near eighteen Years, and therefore abundantly welcome to the Huſbands and their Wives. With this Equipage the King was attended through the City of London, where the Streets were railed in on both Sides that the Livery of the Companies of the City might appear with the more Order and Decency, till he came to Whitehall; the Windows all the Way being full of Ladies and Perſons of Quality, who were impatient to fill their Eyes with a beloved Spectacle of which They had been ſo long deprived. The King was no ſooner at Whitehall, but (as hath been ſaid) the Speakers, and both Houſes of Parliament, preſented themſelves with all poſſible Profeſſions of Duty and Obedience at his Royal Feet, and were even raviſhed with the chearful Reception They had from him. The Joy was univerſal; and whoſoever was not pleaſed at Heart, took the more Care to appear as if He was; and no Voice was heard but of the higheſt Congratulation, of extolling the Perſon of the King, admiring his Condeſcenſions and Affability, raiſing his Praiſes to Heaven, and curſing and deteſting the Memory of thoſe Villains who had ſo long excluded ſo meritorious a Prince, and thereby withheld that Happineſs from them, which They ſhould enjoy in the largeſt Meaſure They could deſire or wiſh. The Joy on all Sides was with the greateſt Exceſs, ſo that moſt Men thought, and had Reaſon enough to think, that the King was even already that great and glorious Prince, which the Parliament had wantonly and hypocritically promiſed to raiſe his Father to be.

Exceſſive Joy upon the Reſtoration.

Both Houſes of Parliament meet.

THE Chancellor took his Place in the Houſe of Peers with a general Acceptation and Reſpect; and all thoſe Lords who were alive and had ſerved the King his Father, and the Sons of thoſe who were dead, and were equally excluded from ſitting there by Ordinances of Parliament, together with all thoſe who had been created by this King, took their Seats in Parliament without the leaſt Murmur or Exception. The Houſe of Commons ſeemed equally conſtituted to what could be wiſhed; for though there were many Preſbyterian Members, and ſome of all other Factions in Religion, who did all promiſe themſelves ſome Liberty and Indulgence for their ſeveral Parties, yet They all profeſſed great Zeal for the eſtabliſhing the King in his full Power. And the major Part of the Houſe was of ſober and prudent Men, who had been long known to be very weary of all the late Governments, and heartily to deſire and pray for the King's Return. And there were many, who had either themſelves been actual and active Malignants and Delinquents in the late King's Time, or the Sons of ſuch, who inherited their Fathers Virtues. Both which Claſſes of Men were excluded from being capable of being elected to ſerve in Parliament, not only by former Ordinances, but by expreſs Caution in the very Writs which were ſent out to ſummon this Parliament, and were notwithſtanding made Choice of and returned by the Country, and received without any Heſitation in the Houſe, and treated by all Men with the more Civility and Reſpect for their known Malignity: So that the King, though it was neceſſary to have Patience in the Expectations of their Reſolutions in all important Points, which could not ſuddenly be concluded in ſuch a popular Aſſembly, was very reaſonably aſſured, that He ſhould have nothing preſſed upon him that ſhould be ungrateful, with Reference to the Church or State.

The Character of the Houſe of Commons.

IT is true, the Preſbyterians were very numerous in the Houſe, and many of them Men of good Parts, and had a great Party in the Army, and a greater in the City, and, except with Reference to Epiſcopacy, were deſirous to make themſelves grateful to the King in the ſettling all his Intereſt, and eſpecially in vindicating themſelves from the odious Murder of the King by loud and paſſionate Inveighing againſt that monſtrous Parricide, and with the higheſt Animoſity denouncing the ſevereſt Judgments not only againſt thoſe who were immediately guilty of it, but againſt thoſe principal Perſons who had moſt notoriouſly adhered to Cromwell in the Adminiſtration of his Government, that is, moſt eminently oppoſed them and their Faction. They took all Occaſions to declare, "that the "Power and Intereſt of the Party had been the chief "Means to bring Home the King;" and uſed all poſſible Endeavours that the King might be perſuaded to think ſo too, and that the very Covenant had at laſt done him Good and expedited his Return, by the cauſing it to be hung up in Churches, from whence Cromwell had caſt it out, and their Miniſters preſſing upon the Conſcience of all thoſe who had taken it, "that They were bound by that Clauſe which con- "cerned the Defence of the King's Perſon, to take "up Arms if Need were on his Behalf, and to re- "ſtore him to his rightful Government;" when the very ſame Miniſters had obliged them to take up Arms againſt the King his Father by Virtue of that Covenant, and to fight againſt him till They had taken him Priſoner, which produced his Murder. This Party was much diſpleaſed, that the King declared himſelf ſo poſitively on Behalf of Epiſcopacy, and would hear no other Prayers in his Chapel than thoſe contained in the Book of Common Prayer, and that all thoſe Formalities and Solemnities were now again reſumed and practiſed, which They had cauſed to be aboliſhed for ſo many Years paſt. Yet the King left all Churches to their Liberty, to uſe ſuch Forms of Devotion which They liked beſt; and ſuch of their chief Preachers who deſired it, or were deſired by their Friends, were admitted to preach before him, even without the Surplice, or any other Habit than They made Choice of. But this Connivance would not do their Buſineſs: Their Preaching made no Proſelytes who were not ſo before; and the Reſort of the People to thoſe Churches, where the Common Prayer was again introduced, was Evidence enough of their Inclinations; and They ſaw the King's Chapel always full of thoſe, who had uſed to poſſeſs the chief Benches in their Aſſemblies: So that it was manifeſt that Nothing but the ſupreme Authority would be able to ſettle their Diſcipline; and therefore with their uſual Confidence They were very importunate in the Houſe of Commons, "that "the Eccleſiaſtical Government might be ſettled and "remain according to the Covenant, which had been "practiſed many Years, and ſo the People generally "well devoted to it, whereas the introducing the Com- "mon Prayer (with which very few had ever been "acquainted or heard it read) would very much of- "fend the People, and give great Interruption to the "compoſing the Peace of the Kingdom." This was urged in the Houſe of Commons by eminent Men of the Party, who believed They had the major Part of their Mind. And their Preachers were as ſolicitous and induſtrious to inculcate the ſame Doctrine to the principal Perſons who had returned with the King, and every Day reſorted to the Court as if They preſided there, and had frequent Audiences of the King to perſuade him to be of the ſame Opinion; from whom They received no other Condeſcenſions than They had formerly had at the Hague, with the ſame gracious Affability and Expreſſions to their Perſons.

Particularly of the Preſbyterian Party in it.

Which urge the Settlement of Eccleſiaſtical Government according to the Covenant.

THAT Party in the Houſe that was in Truth devoted to the King, and to the old Principles of Church and and of State, which every Day increaſed, thought not fit ſo to croſs the Preſbyterians as to make them deſperate in their Hopes of Satisfaction, but, with the Concurrence with thoſe who were of contrary Factions, diverted the Argument by propoſing other Subjects of more immediate Relation to the public Peace, as the Act of Indemnity which every Man impatiently longed for, and the raiſing Money towards the Payment of the Army and the Navy, without which that unſupportable Charge could not be leſſened, to be firſt conſidered and diſpatched; and the Model for Religion to be debated and prepared by that Committee, which had been nominated before his Majeſty's Return to that Purpoſe; They not doubting to croſs and puzzle any pernicious Reſolutions there, till Time and their own extravagant Follies ſhould put ſome End to their deſtructive Deſigns.

IN the mean Time there were two Particulars, which the King with much inward Impatience, though with little outward Communication, did moſt deſire, the diſbanding the Army, and the ſettling the Revenue, the Courſe and Receipt whereof had been ſo broken and perverted, and a great Part extinguiſhed by the Sale of all the Crown Lands, that the old Officers of the Exchequer, Auditors or Receivers, knew not how to reſume their Adminiſtrations. Beſides that the great Receipt of Exciſe and Cuſtoms was not yet veſted in the King; nor did the Parliament make any Haſte to aſſign it, finding it neceſſary to reſerve it in the old Way, and not to divert it from thoſe Aſſignments, which had been made for the Payment of the Army and Navy, for which until ſome other Proviſion could be made, it was to no Purpoſe to mention the diſbanding the one or the other, though the Charge of Both was ſo vaſt and unſupportable, that the Kingdom muſt in a ſhort Time ſink under the Burden. For what concerned the Revenue and raiſing Money, the King was leſs ſolicitous, and yet there was not ſo much as any Aſſignation made for the Support of his Houſhold, which cauſed a vaſt Debt to be contracted before taken Notice of, the Miſchief of which is hardly yet removed. He ſaw the Parliament every Day doing ſomewhat in it, and it quickly diſſolved all Bargains, Contracts and Sales, which had been of any of the Crown Lands, ſo that all that Royal Revenue (which had been too much waſted and impaired in thoſe improvident Times which had preceded the Troubles) was entirely remitted to thoſe to whom it belonged, the King and the Queen his Mother; but very little Money was returned out of the ſame into the Exchequer in the Space of the firſt Year; ſo difficult it was to reduce any Payments which had been made for ſo many Years irregularly, into the old Channel and Order. And every Thing elſe of this Kind was done, how ſlowly ſoever, with as much Expedition as from the Nature of the Affair, and the Crowd in which it was neceſſary to be agitated, could reaſonably be expected; and therefore his Majeſty was leſs troubled for thoſe Inconveniencies which He foreſaw muſt inevitably flow from thence.

The Nature and Inclination of the Army.

BUT the Delay in diſbanding the Army, how unavoidable ſoever, did exceedingly afflict him, and the more, becauſe for many Reaſons He could not urge it nor complain of it. He knew well the ill Conſtitution of the Army, the Diſtemper and Murmuring that was in it, and how many Diſeaſes and Convulſions their infant Loyalty was ſubject to; that how united ſoever their Inclinations and Acclamations ſeemed to be at Blackheath, their Affections were not the ſame: And the very Countenances then of many Officers as well as Soldiers did ſufficiently manifeſt, that They were drawn thither to a Service They were not delighted in. The General, before He had formed any Reſolution to himſelf, and only valued himſelf upon the Preſbyterian Intereſt, had caſhiered ſome Regiments and Companies which He knew not to be devoted to his Perſon and Greatneſs; and after He found it neceſſary to fix his own Hopes and Dependance upon the King, He had diſmiſſed many Officers who He thought might be willing and able to croſs his Deſigns and Purpoſes, when He ſhould think fit to diſcover them, and conferred their Charges and Commands upon thoſe who had been diſfavoured by the late Powers; and after the Parliament had declared for and proclaimed the King, He caſhiered others, and gave their Offices to ſome eminent Commanders who had ſerved the King; and gave others of the loyal Nobility Leave to liſt Voluntiers in Companies to appear with them at the Reception of the King, who had all met and joined with the Army upon Blackheath in the Head of their Regiments and Companies: Yet, notwithſtanding all this Providence, the old Soldiers had little Regard for their new Officers, at leaſt had no Reſignation for them; and it quickly appeared, by the ſelect and affected Mixtures of ſullen and melancholick Parties of Officers and Soldiers, that as ill-diſpoſed Men of other Claſſes were left as had been diſbanded; and that much the greater Part ſo much abounded with ill Humours, that it was not ſafe to adminiſter a general Purgation. It is true that Lambert was cloſe Priſoner in the Tower; and as many of thoſe Officers who were taken and had appeared in Arms with him when He was taken, were likewiſe there or in ſome other Priſons, with others of the ſame Complexion, who were well enough known to have the preſent Settlement that was intended in perfect Deteſtation: But this Leproſy was ſpread too far to have the Contagion quickly or eaſily extinguiſhed. How cloſe ſoever Lambert himſelf was ſecured from doing Miſchief, his Faction was at Liberty and very numerous; his diſbanded Officers and Soldiers mingled and converſed with their old Friends and Companions, and found too many of them poſſeſſed with the ſame Spirit; They concurred in the ſame Reproaches and Revilings of the General, as the Man who had treacherouſly betrayed them, and led them into an Ambuſcade, from whence They knew not how to diſentangle themſelves. They looked upon him as the ſole Perſon who ſtill ſupported his own Model, and were well aſſured that if He were removed, the Army would be ſtill the ſame and appear in their old Retrenchments; and therefore They entered into ſeveral Combinations to aſſaſſinate him, which They reſolved to do with the firſt Opportunity. In a Word, They liked neither the Mien nor Garb nor Countenance of the Court, nor were wrought upon by the gracious Aſpect and Benignity of the King himſelf.

ALL this was well enough known to his Majeſty, and to the General, who was well enough acquainted and not at all pleaſed with the Temper and Diſpoſition of his Army, and therefore no leſs deſired it ſhould be diſbanded than the King did. In the mean Time, very diligent Endeavours were uſed to diſcover and apprehend ſome principal Perſons, who took as much Care to conceal themſelves; and every Day many dangerous or ſuſpected Men of all Qualities were impriſoned in all Counties: Spies were employed, who for the moſt Part had the ſame Affections which They were to diſcover in others, and received Money on both Sides to do, and not to do, the Work They were appointed to do. And in this melancholick and perplexed Condition the King and all his Hopes ſtood, when He appeared moſt gay and exalted, and wore a Pleaſantneſs in his Face, that became him and looked like as full an Aſſurance of his Security, as was poſſible to be put on.

Diſunion of the King's Friends.

THERE was yet added to this ſlippery and uneaſy Poſture of Affairs, another Mortification, which made a deeper Impreſſion upon the King's Spirit than all the reſt, and without which the worſt of the other would have been in ſome Degree remediable; that was, the Conſtitution and Diſunion of thoſe who were called and looked upon as his own Party, which without Doubt in the whole Kingdom was numerous enough, and capable of being powerful enough to give the Law to all the reſt; which had been the Ground of many unhappy Attempts in the late Time, that if any preſent Force could be drawn together, and poſſeſſed of any ſuch Place in which They might make a Stand without being overrun in a Moment, the general Concurrence of the Kingdom would in a ſhort Time reduce the Army, and make the King ſuperiour to all his Enemies; which Imagination was enough confuted, though not enough extinguiſhed, by the dear-bought Experience in the woful Enterpriſe at Worceſter. However, it had been now a very juſtifiable Preſumption in the King, to believe as well as hope, that He could not be long in England without ſuch an Apparency of his own Party, that wiſhed all that He himſelf deſired, and ſuch a Manifeſtation of their Authority, Intereſt and Power, that would prevent or be ſufficient to ſubdue any froward Diſpoſition that might grow up in the Parliament, or more extravagant Demands in the Army itſelf. An Apparence there was of that People, great enough, who had all the Wiſhes for the King which He entertained for himſelf. But They were ſo divided and diſunited by private Quarrels, Factions and Animoſities; or ſo unacquainted with each other; or, which was worſe, ſo jealous of each other; the Underſtandings and Faculties of many honeſt Men were ſo weak and ſhallow, that They could not be applied to any great Truſt; and others who wiſhed and meant very well had a Peeviſhneſs, Frowardneſs and Opiniatrety, that They would be engaged only in what pleaſed themſelves, nor would join in any Thing with ſuch and ſuch Men whom They diſliked. The ſevere and tyrannical Government of Cromwell and the Parliament had ſo often baniſhed and impriſoned them upon mere Jealouſies, that They were grown Strangers to one another, without any Communication between them: And there had been ſo frequent Betrayings and Treacheries uſed, ſo many Diſcoveries of Meetings privately contrived, and of Diſcourſes accidentally entered into, and Words and Expreſſions raſhly and unadviſedly uttered without any Deſign, upon which Multitudes were ſtill impriſoned and many put to Death; that the Jealouſy was ſo univerſal, that few Men who had ever ſo good Affections for the King, durſt confer with any Freedom together.

A Review of the Cauſes of this Diſunion previous to the Reſtoration.

Most of thoſe of the Nobility who had with Conſtancy and Fidelity adhered to the laſt King, and had greateſt Authority with all Men who profeſſed the ſame Affections, were dead, as the Duke of Richmond, the Earl of Dorſet, the Lord Capel, the Lord Hopton, and many other excellent Perſons. And of that Claſſis, that is, of a powerful Intereſt and unſuſpected Integrity (for there were ſome very good Men, who were without any Cauſe ſuſpected then, becauſe They were not equally perſecuted upon all Occaſions) there were only two who ſurvived, the Marquis of Hertford and Earl of Southampton; who were Both great and worthy Men, looked upon with great Eſtimation by all the moſt valuable Men who could contribute moſt to the King's Reſtoration, and with Reverence by their greateſt Enemy, and had been courted by Cromwell himſelf till He found it to no Purpoſe. And though the Marquis had been prevailed with once and no more to give him a Viſit, the other, the Earl, could never be perſuaded ſo much as to ſee him; and when Cromwell was in the New Foreſt and reſolved one Day to viſit him, He being informed of it or ſuſpecting it, removed to another Houſe He had at ſuch a Diſtance as exempted him from that Viſitation. But theſe two great Perſons had for ſeveral Years withdrawn themſelves into the Country, lived retired, ſent ſometimes ſuch Money as They could raiſe out of their long-ſequeſtered and exhauſted Fortunes, by Meſſengers of their own Dependance, with Advice to the King, "to ſit ſtill and expect a reaſonable Revolu-" tion, without making any unadviſed Attempt;" and induſtriouſly declined any Converſation or Commerce with any who were known to correſpond with the King: So that now upon his Majeſty's Return, They were totally unacquainted with any of thoſe Perſons, who now looked as Men to be depended upon in any great Action and Attempt. And for themſelves, as the Marquis ſhortly after died, ſo the other with great Abilities ſerved him in his moſt ſecret and important Counſels, but had been never converſant in martial Affairs.

There had been ſix or eight Perſons of general good and confeſſed Reputation, and who of all who were then left alive had had the moſt eminent Charges in the War, and executed them with great Courage and Diſcretion; ſo that few Men could with any reaſonable Pretence refuſe to receive Orders from them, or to ſerve under their Commands. They had great Affection for and Confidence in each other, and had frankly offered by an Expreſs of their own Number, whilſt the King remained in France, "that, if They "were approved and qualified by his Majeſty, They "would by joint Advice intend the Care of his Ma-"jeſty's Service; and as They would not engage in "any abſurd and deſperate Attempt, but uſe all their "Credit and Authority to prevent and diſcountenance "the ſame, ſo They would take the firſt rational Op-"portunity, which They expected from the Diviſions "and Animoſities which daily grew and appeared in "the Army, to draw their Friends and old Soldiers "who were ready to receive their Commands together, "and try the utmoſt that could be done with the Loſs "or Hazard of their Lives:" Some of them having, beſide their Experience in War, very conſiderable Fortunes of their own to loſe, and were Relations to the greateſt Families in England. And therefore They made it their humble Suit, "that this ſecret Correſ-"pondence might be carried on and known to none "but to the Marquis of Ormond and to the Chancel-"lor; and that if any other Counſels were ſet on Foot "in England by the Activity of particular Perſons, who "too frequently with great Zeal and little Animad-"verſion embarked themſelves in impoſſible Under-"takings, his Majeſty upon Advertiſement thereof "would firſt communicate the Motives or Pretences "which would be offered to him, to them; and then "They would find Opportunity to confer with ſome "ſober Man of that Fraternity" (as there was no well-affected Perſon in England, who at that Time would not willingly receive Advice and Direction from moſt of thoſe Perſons) "and thereupon They would "preſent their Opinion to his Majeſty, and if the De-"ſign ſhould appear practicable to his Majeſty, They "would chearfully embark themſelves in it, otherwiſe "uſe their own Dexterity to divert it." Theſe Men had been armed with all neceſſary Commiſſions and Inſtructions according to their own Deſires; the King conſented to all They propoſed; and the Cyphers and Correſpondence were committed to the Chancellor, in whoſe Hands, with the Privity only of the Marquis of Ormond, all the Intelligence with England, of what Kind ſoever, was intruſted.

Under this Conduct for ſome Years all Things ſucceeded well, many unſeaſonable Attempts were prevented, and thereby the Lives of many good Men preſerved: And though (upon the curſory Jealouſy of that Time, and the reſtleſs Apprehenſion of Cromwell, and the almoſt continual Commitments of all who had eminently ſerved the King and were able to do it again) theſe Perſons who were thus truſted, or the major Part of them, were ſeldom out of Priſon, or free from the Obligation of good Sureties for their peaceable Behaviour; yet all the Vigilance of Cromwell and his moſt diligent Inquiſitors could never diſcover this ſecret Intercourſe between thoſe Confidants and the King, which did always paſs and was maintained by Expreſſes made Choice of by them, and ſupported at their Charge out of ſuch Monies as were privately collected for publick Uſes, of which They, who contributed moſt, knew little more than the Integrity of him who was intruſted, who did not always make ſkilful Contributions.

IT fell out unfortunately, that two of theſe principal Perſons fell out, and had a fatal Quarrel, upon a Particular leſs juſtifiable than any Thing that could reſult from or relate to the great Truſt They Both had from the King, which ought to have been of Influence enough to have ſuppreſſed or diverted all Paſſions of that Kind: But the Animoſities grew ſuddenly irreconcilable, and if not divided the Affections of the whole Knot, at leaſt interrupted or ſuſpended their conſtant Intercourſe and Confidence in each other, and ſo the diligent Accounts which the King uſed to receive from them. And the Cauſe growing more publick and notorious, though not known in a long Time after to the King, exceedingly leſſened Both their Reputations with the moſt ſober Men; inſomuch as They withdrew all Confidence in their Conduct, and all Inclination to embark in the Buſineſs which was intruſted in ſuch Hands. And which was worſe than all this, one Perſon amongſt them of as unblemiſhed a Reputation as either of them, and of much better Abilities and Faculties of Mind, either affected with this untoward Accident, or broken with frequent Impriſonments and Deſpair of any Reſurrection of the King's Intereſt, about this Time yielded to a foul Temptation; and for large Supplies of Money, which his Fortune ſtood in Need of, engaged to be a Spy to Cromwell, with a Latitude which He did not allow to others of that ignominious Tribe, undertaking only to impart enough of any Deſign to prevent the Miſchief thereof, without expoſing any Man to the Loſs of his Life, or ever appearing himſelf to make good and juſtify any of his Diſcoveries. The reſt of his Aſſociates neither ſuſpected their Companion, nor leſſened their Affection or utmoſt Zeal for the King; though They remitted ſome of their Diligence in his Service, by the other unhappy Interruption.

THIS falling out during his Majeſty's Abode in Cologne, He was very long without Notice of the Grounds of that Jealouſy, which had obſtructed his uſual Correſpondence; and the Matter of Infidelity being not in the leaſt Degree ſuſpected, He could not avoid receiving Advice and Propoſitions from other honeſt Men, who were of known Affection and Courage, and who converſed much with the Officers of the Army, and were unſkilfully diſpoſed to believe that all They, who They had Reaſon to believe did hate Cromwell, would eaſily be induced to ſerve the King: And many of the Officers in their Behaviour, Diſcourſes and Familiarity, contributed to that Belief; ſome of them, not without the Privity and Allowance of Cromwell, or his Secretary Thurlow. And upon Overtures of this Kind, and wonderful Confidence of Succeſs, even upon the Preparations which were in Readineſs, of and by his own Party, ſeveral Meſſengers were ſent to the King; and by all of them ſharp and paſſionate Complaints againſt thoſe Perſons, who were ſo much and ſtill in the ſame Confidence with him, as Men who were at Eaſe, and uninclined to venture themſelves upon dangerous or doubtful Enterpriſes. They complained, "that when They imparted to them or any one of them" (for They knew not of his Majeſty's Reference to them, but had of themſelves reſorted to them as Men of the greateſt Reputation for their Affections and Experience) "a "Deſign which had been well conſulted and delibe-"rated by thoſe who meant to venture their own Lives "in the Execution of it, They made ſo many Excu-"ſes and Arguments and Objections againſt it, as if "it were wholly unadviſable and unpracticable; and "when They propoſed the meeting and conferring with "ſome of the Officers, who were reſolved to ſerve his "Majeſty, and were willing to adviſe with them, as "Men of more Intereſt and who had managed greater "Commands, upon the Places of Rendezvous, and "what Method ſhould be obſerved in the Enterpriſes, "making no Scruple themſelves to receive Orders "from them, or to do all Things They ſhould re-"quire which might advance his Majeſty's Service, "theſe Gentlemen only wiſhed them to take Heed "They were not deſtroyed, and poſitively refuſed to "meet or confer with any of the Officers of the "Army: And hereupon" They ſaid "all the King's "Party was ſo incenſed againſt them, that They no "more would have Recourſe to them, or make any "Conjunction with them." They informed his Majeſty at large of the Animoſity that was grown between two of the principal Perſons, and the original Cauſe thereof, and therefore deſired "that ſome "Perſon might be ſent, to whom They might repair "for Orders, until the King himſelf diſcerned that all "Preparations were in ſuch a Readineſs, that He "might reaſonably venture his Royal Perſon with "them."

THOUGH He was not at all ſatisfied with the Grounds of their Expectation and Proceedings, and therefore could not blame the Warineſs and Reſervedneſs of the other, and thought their Apprehenſion of being betrayed (which in the Language of that Time was called trepanned) which befel ſome Men every Day, very reaſonable; yet the Confidence of many honeſt Men who were ſure to pay dear for any raſh Undertaking, and their Preſumption in appointing a peremptory Day for a general Rendezvous over the Kingdom, but eſpecially the Diviſion of his Friends, and Sharpneſs againſt thoſe upon whom he principally relied, was the Cauſe of his ſending over the Lord Rocheſter, and of his own Concealment in Zealand; the Succeſs whereof, and the ill Conſequence of thoſe precipitate Reſolutions, in the Slaughter of many worthy and gallant Gentlemen with all the Circumſtances of Inſolence and Barbarity, are mentioned in their proper Places.

BUT theſe unhappy and fatal Miſcarriages, and the ſad Spectacles which enſued, made not thoſe Impreſſions upon the Affections and Spirits of the King's Friends, as they ought to have done; nor rendered the Warineſs and Diſcretion of thoſe who had diſſuaded the Enterpriſe, and who were always impriſoned upon Suſpicion, how innocent ſoever, the more valued and eſteemed: On the contrary it increaſed the Reproaches againſt the Knot, as if their Lacheté and Want of Appearance and engaging had been the ſole Cauſe of the Misfortune. And after ſome ſhort Fits of Dejection and Acquieſcence, upon the ſhedding ſo much Blood of their Friends and Confederates, and the notorious Diſcovery of being betrayed by thoſe, who had been truſted by them, of the Army; They began again to reſume Courage, to meet and enter upon new Counſels and Deſigns, imputing the former Want of Succeſs to the Want of Skill and Conduct in the Undertakers, not to the all-ſeeing Vigilance of Cromwell and his Inſtruments, or to the formed Strength of his Government not to be ſhaken by weak or ill ſeconded Conſpiracies. Young Men were grown up, who inherited their Fathers Malignity, and were too impatient to revenge their Death, or to be even with their Oppreſſors, and ſo entered into new Combinations as unſkilful and therefore as unfortunate as the former; and being diſcovered even before they were formed, Cromwell had Occaſion given him to make himſelf more terrible in new Executions, and to exerciſe greater Tyranny upon the whole Party in Impriſonments, Penalties and Sequeſtrations; making thoſe, who heartily deſired to be quiet, and who abhorred any raſh and deſperate Inſurrection, to pay their full Shares for the Folly of the other, as if all were animated by the ſame Spirit. And this unjuſt and unreaſonable Rigour increaſed the Reproaches and Animoſities in the King's Friends againſt each other: The wiſer and more ſober Part, who had moſt Experience, and knew how impoſſible it was to ſucceed in ſuch Enterpriſes, and had yet preſerved or redeemed enough of their Fortunes to ſit ſtill and expect ſome hopeful Revolution, were unexpreſſibly offended, and bitterly inveighed againſt thoſe, who without Reaſon diſturbed their Peace and Quiet, by provoking the

State

State to freſh Perſecutions of them who had given them no Offence: And the other ſtirring and enraged Party, with more Fierceneſs and publick Diſdain, proteſted againſt and reviled thoſe, who refuſed to join with them, as Men who had ſpent all their Stock of Allegiance, and meant to acquieſce with what They had left under the Tyranny and in the Subjection of Cromwell. And thus, They who did really wiſh the ſame Things, and equally the Overthrow of that Government, which hindered the Reſtoration of the King, grew into more implacable Jealouſies and Virulencies againſt each other, than againſt that Power that oppreſſed them Both, and poured out their Blood like Water. And either Party conveyed their Apologies and Accuſations to the King; One inſiſting upon the Impertinency of all ſuch Attempts; and the other inſiſting that They were ready for a very ſolid and well grounded Enterpriſe, were ſure to be poſſeſſed of good Towns, if, by his Majeſty's poſitive Command, the reſt, who profeſſed ſuch Obedience to him, would join with them.

It was at this Time, and upon theſe Reaſons, that the King ſent the Marquis of Ormond into England, to find out and diſcover whether in Truth there were any ſober Preparations and Readineſs for Action, and then to head and conduct it; or if it was not ripe, to compoſe the ſeveral Diſtempers, and unite, as far as was poſſible, all who wiſhed well, to concur in the ſame Patience for the preſent, and in the ſame Activity when it ſhould be ſeaſonable. And He upon full Conference with the principal Perſons of the moſt contradictory Judgments, quickly found that They who were accuſed to be lazy and unactive, were in Truth diſcreet Men, and as ready vigorouſly to appear as the other, when the Seaſon ſhould be adviſable, which He clearly diſcerned it was not then; and that the Preſumption of the other, upon Perſons as well as Places, was in no Degree to be depended upon. And ſo, after He had done what was poſſible towards making a good Intelligence between Tempers and Underſtandings ſo different, the Marquis had the ſame good Fortune to retire from thence and bring himſelf ſafe to the King; which was the more wonderful Preſervation, in that, during the whole Time of his Abode in London, He had truſted no Man more, nor conferred with any Man ſo much, as with that Perſon of the ſelect Knot, who had been corrupted to give all Intelligence to Cromwell: And as He had now blaſted and diverted ſome ill laid Deſigns, ſo He had diſcovered the Marquis his Arrival to him, but could not be prevailed with to inform him of his Lodging, which was particularly known to him upon every Change, or to contrive any Way for his Apprehenſion; on the contrary, as in all his Conferences with him He appeared a Man of great Judgment and Perſpicacity, and the moſt ready to engage his Perſon in any Action that might be for his Majeſty's Advantage, ſo He ſeemed beſt to underſtand the Temper of the Time, and the Parts, Faculties and Intereſt of all the King's Party; and left the Marquis abundantly ſatisfied with him, and of the general good Reputation He had with all Men: Which had afterwards an ill Effect, for it kept the King, and thoſe who were truſted by him, from giving Credit to the firſt Information He received, from a Perſon who could not be deceived, of his Tergiverſation; his late Fidelity to the Marquis of Ormond weighing down with them all the Intimations, until the Evidence was ſo pregnant, that there was no Room for any Doubt.

After all theſe Endeavours by the King to diſcountenance and ſuppreſs all unſeaſonable Action amongſt his Party, and to infuſe into them a Spirit of Peace and Quiet till He himſelf could appear in the Head of ſome foreign Forces, which he looked upon as the only reaſonable Encouragement that could animate his Friends to declare for him; the generous Diſtemper and Impatience of their Nature was incorrigible. They thought the Expectation of Miracles from God Almighty was too lazy and ſtupid a Confidence, and that God no leſs required their Endeavours and Activity, than They hoped for his Benediction in their Succeſs. New Hopes were entertained, and Counſels ſuitable entered upon. Mr. Mordaunt the younger Son and Brother to the Earls of Peterborough, who was too young in the Time of the late War to act any Part in it, had lately undergone, after Cromwell himſelf had taken great Pains in the Examination of him, a ſevere Trial before the High Court of Juſtice; where by his own ſingular Addreſs and Behaviour, and his Friends having wrought by Money upon ſome of the Witneſſes to abſent themſelves, He was by one ſingle Voice acquitted; and after a longer Detention in Priſon by the Indignation of Cromwell, who well knew his Guilt, and againſt the Rules and Forms of their own Juſtice, He was diſcharged, after moſt of his Aſſociates were publickly and barbarouſly put to ſeveral Kinds of Death. And he no ſooner found himſelf at Liberty, than he engaged in new Intrigues, how He might deſtroy that Government that was ſo near deſtroying him. The State of the Kingdom was indeed altered, and He had Encouragement to hope well, which former Undertakers, and himſelf in his, had been without. Cromwell had entered into a War with Spain; and the King was received and permitted to live in Flanders, with ſome Exhibition from that King for his Support, and Aſſurance of an Army to embark for England, (which made a great Noiſe, and raiſed the broken Hearts of his Friends after ſo many Diſtreſſes) which his Majeſty was contented ſhould be generally reputed to be greater and in more Forwardneſs, than there was Cauſe for. He had likewiſe another Advantage much ſuperiour and of more Importance than the other, by the Death of Cromwell, which fell out without or beyond Expectation, which ſeemed to put an End to all his Stratagems, and to diſſolve the whole Frame of Government in the three Kingdoms, and to open many Doors to the King to enter upon that which every Body knew to be his own. And though this reaſonable Hope was, ſooner than could be imagined, blaſted and extinguiſhed, by an univerſal Submiſſion to the Declaration that Cromwell had made at his Death, "that his Son Richard ſhould "ſucceed him;" upon which He was declared Protector by the Council, Army, Navy, with the Concurrence of the Forces of the three Kingdoms, and the Addreſſes of all the Counties in England, with Vows of their Obedience; inſomuch as He appeared in the Eyes of all Men as formidably ſettled as his Father had been: Yet Mr. Mordaunt proceeded with Alacrity in his Deſign, contrary to the Opinion and Advice of thoſe with whom He was obliged to conſult, who thought the Conjuncture as unfavourable as any that was paſt, and looked upon Mr. Mordaunt as a raſh young Man, of a daring Spirit, without any Experience in military Affairs, and upon themſelves as unkindly treated by thoſe about the King, in being expoſed to the Importunity of a Gentleman who was a Stranger to them, and who was not equally qualified with them for the forming any Reſolution, which They could concur in.

But the Intermiſſion of the ſevere Perſecution, which had been formerly practiſed againſt the Royal Party, in this Nonage of Richard's Government, gave more Liberty to Communication; and the Preſbyterian Party grew more diſcontented and daring, and the Independant leſs concerned to prevent any Inconvenience or Trouble to the weak Son of Oliver, whom they reſolved not to obey. Mr. Mordaunt, who had gained much Reputation by his ſteady Carriage in his late Mortification, and by his ſo briſk Carriage ſo ſoon after, found Credit with many Perſons of great Fortune and Intereſt; as Sir George Booth and Sir Thomas Middleton, the greateſt Men in Cheſhire and North Wales, who were reputed Preſbyterians, and had been Both very active againſt the King, and now reſolved to declare for him; Sir Horatio Townſend, who was newly become of Age, and the moſt powerful Perſon in Norfolk, where there were many gallant Men ready to follow him; and many others the moſt conſiderable Men in moſt of the Counties of England: Who all agreed in ſo many ſeveral Counties of England to appear upon a Day, in ſuch Bodies as They could draw together; many conſiderable Places being prepared for their Reception, or too weak to oppoſe them. And Mr. Mordaunt ſecretly tranſported himſelf and waited upon the King at Bruſſels, with that Warineſs that He was known to none, but to them with whom He was to conſult. The King received by him a full Information of the Engagement of all thoſe Perſons to do him Service with the utmoſt Hazard, and of the Method They meant to proceed in, and the Probability, moſt like Aſſurance, of their being to be poſſeſſed of Gloceſter, Cheſter, Lynn, Yarmouth, all Kent, and the moſt conſiderable Places in the Weſt, where indeed his own Friends were very conſiderable.

UPON the whole Matter the King thought it ſo reaſonable to approve the whole Deſign, that He appointed the Day, with a Promiſe to be himſelf, with his Brother the Duke of York, concealed at Calais or thereabout, that They might divide themſelves to thoſe Parts, which ſhould be thought moſt proper for the Work in Hand. Mr. Mordaunt lamented the Warineſs, and Want of Confidence in thoſe Perſons, upon whom the King depended, and acknowledged them moſt worthy of that Truſt, and of much Reputation in the Nation; and imputed their much Reſervation to the Troubles, and Impriſonments, which They had been ſeldom free from, and their Obſervation how little Ground there had been for former Enterpriſes, without the leaſt Suſpicion of Want of Affection and Reſolution in any one of them, and leſs of Integrity. But the King was by this Time fully convinced where the Treachery was, without any Blemiſh to any one of the reſt, who needed not to be aſhamed of being deceived by a Man, whom all the Kingdom would have truſted. The ridiculous Dethroning of Richard by the Army, and the reaſſembling that Part of the old Parliament, which was called the Rump, and which was more terrible than any ſingle Perſon could be, becauſe They preſently returned into their old Track, and renewed their former Rigour againſt their old, more than their new Enemies, rather advanced than reſtrained this Combination; too much being known to too many to be ſecure any other way than by purſuing it. So the King and Duke, according to their former Reſolution, went to Calais and Boulogne, and prepared as well to make a Deſcent into Kent with ſuch Numbers of Men, as the Condition They were in would permit. How, many of thoſe Deſigns came to be wonderfully and even miraculouſly diſappointed, and Sir George Booth defeated by Lambert, are particularly ſet down by thoſe, who have taken upon them to mention the Tranſactions of thoſe Times. And from thence the Univerſality of all who were, or were ſuſpected to be, of the King's Party, were according to Cuſtom impriſoned, or otherwiſe cruelly entreated; and thereupon a new Fire kindled amongſt themſelves: They who had done Nothing reproaching them who had brought that Storm upon them; and They who had been engaged more loudly and bitterly curſing the others, as Deſerters of the King, and the Cauſe of the Ruin of his Cauſe through their Want of Courage, or what was worſe, of Affection. And ſo all Mens Mouths were opened wider to accuſe and defame each other, than to defend their own Integrity and their Lives.

I HAVE thought myſelf obliged to renew the Memory of all theſe Particulars, that the ſeveral Viciſſitudes and Stages may be known, by which the Jealouſies, Murmurs and Diſaffections, in the Royal Party amongſt themſelves, and againſt each other, had mounted to that Height, which the King found them at when He returned; when in Truth very few Men of active Minds, and upon whom He could depend in any ſudden Occaſion, that might probably preſs him, can be named, who had any Confidence in each other. All Men were full of bitter Reflections upon the Actions, and Behaviour of others, or of Excuſes and Apologies for themſelves for what They thought might be charged upon them. The woful Vice of Drinking, from the Uneaſineſs of their Fortune, or the Neceſſity of frequent Meetings together, for which Taverns were the moſt ſecure Places, had ſpread itſelf very far in that Claſſis of Men, as well as upon other Parts of the Nation, in all Counties; and had exceedingly weakened the Parts, and broken the Underſtandings of many, who had formerly competent Judgments, and had been in all Reſpects fit for any Truſt; and had prevented the Growth of Parts in many young Men, who had good Affections, but had been from their Entering into the World ſo corrupted with that Exceſs, and other Licence of the Time, that They only made much Noiſe, and, by their extravagant and ſcandalous Debauches, brought many Calumnies and Diſeſtimation upon that Cauſe, which They pretended to advance. They who had ſuffered much in their Fortunes, and by frequent Impriſonments, and Sequeſtrations, and Compoſitions, expected large Recompences and Reparations in Honours, which They could not ſupport, or Offices, which They could not diſcharge, or Lands and Money, which the King had not to give; as all diſpaſſioned Men knew the Conditions, which the King was obliged to perform, and that the Act of Indemnity diſcharged all thoſe Forfeitures, which could have been applied to their Benefit: And therefore They, who had been without Compariſon the greateſt Sufferers in their Fortunes, and in all Reſpects had merited moſt, never made any inconvenient Suits to the King, but modeſtly left the Memory and Conſideration of all They had done, or undergone, to his Majeſty's own gracious Reflections. They were obſerved to be moſt importunate, who had deſerved leaſt, and were leaſt capable to perform any notable Service; and none had more Eſteem of themſelves, and believed Preferment to be more due to them, than a Sort of Men, who had moſt loudly began the King's Health in Taverns, eſpecially if for any Diſorders, which had accompanied it, They had ſuffered Impriſonment, without any other Pretence of Merit, or running any other Hazard.

Many of them much addicted to Drinking.

Thoſe who had done leaſt the moſt importunate.

THOUGH it was very evident (humanly ſpeaking) that the late Combination entered into, and the brave Attempt and Engagement of Sir George Booth, how unſucceſsful ſoever in the Inſtant, had contributed very much to the wonderful Change, that had ſince enſued, by the Diſcovery of the general Affections and Diſpoſition of the Kingdom, and their Averſion from any kind of Goverment, that was not founded upon the old Principles; and the publick or private Engagement of very many Perſons, who had never been before ſuſpected, whereof though many of the moſt conſiderable Perſons had been, by the Treachery heretofore mentioned, committed to ſeveral Priſons, yet many others of equal Intereſt remained ſtill in Liberty, and had a great Influence upon the Counſels both in the Parliament and Army: Yet I ſay, notwithſtanding this was notorious, a greater Animoſity had been kindled in the Royal Party, and was ſtill purſued and improved amongſt them from that Combination and Engagement, than from all the other Accidents and Occaſions, and gave the King more Trouble and Perplexity. It had introduced a great Number of Perſons, who had formerly no Pretence of Merit from the King, rather might have been the Objects of his Juſtice, to a juſt Title to the greateſt Favours the King could confer; and which, from that Time, They had continually improved by repeated Offices and Services, which, being of a later Date, might be thought to cloud and eclipſe the Luſtre of thoſe Actions, which had before been performed by the more ancient Cavaliers, eſpecially of thoſe, who had been obſerved to be remiſs on that Occaſion: And therefore They were the more ſolicitous in undervaluing the Undertaking, and the Perſons of the Undertakers, whom They mentioned under ſuch Characters, and to whom They imputed ſuch Weakneſs and Levities, as They had collected from the ſeveral Parts of their Lives, as might render them much Diſadvantage; and would by no Means admit, "that "any of the Good, that afterwards befel the King, "reſulted in any Degree from that raſh Enterpriſe; "but that thereby the King's Friends were ſo weaken-"ed, and more compleatly undone, that They were "diſabled to appear in that Conjuncture, when the "Army was divided, and in which they might other-"wiſe have been conſiderable enough to have given "the Law to all Parties."

And undervalue the more eminent Services of others.

Mr. Mordaunt, whom the King had created a Viſcount before his Return into England, and had been moſt eminent in the other Contrivances, in a Time when a general Conſternation had ſeized upon the Spirits of thoſe, who wiſhed beſt to his Majeſty; for when He reſumed his former Reſolutions, ſo ſoon after his Head was raiſed from the Block, and when the Blood of his Confederates watered ſo many Streets in the City, and the Suburbs, the moſt truſted by the King had totally withdrawn their Correſpondence, and deſired, that for ſome Time no Account or Information might be expected from them; and therefore it muſt not be denied, that his Vivacity, Courage and Induſtry, revived the Hearts, which were ſo near broken, before Cromwell's Death, and afterwards prevailed with many to have more active Spirits, than They had before appeared to have: This Gentleman, I ſay, moſt unjuſtly underwent the heavieſt Weight of all their Cenſures and Reproaches. He was the Butt, at which all their Arrows of Envy, Malice and Jealouſy, were aimed and ſhot; He was the Object and Subject of all their ſcurrilous Jeſts, and depraving Diſcourſes and Relations; and They, who agreed in Nothing elſe, were at Unity and of one Mind, in telling ridiculous Stories to the King himſelf of his Vanity, and Behaviour; and laying thoſe Aſperſions upon him, as were moſt like to leſſen the King's Opinion of him; and to perſuade him, that the Recompences He had already received, were abundantly more than the Services He had performed: Which Kind of Inſinuations from ſeveral Perſons, who ſeemed not to do it by Concert, together with ſome Prejudice the noble Perſon did himſelf by ſome unſeaſonable Importunities, as if He thought He had deſerved very much, did for ſome Time draw a more ungracious Countenance from the King towards him, than his own Nature diſpoſed him to, or than the other's ſingular and uſeful Activity, though liable to ſome Levity or Vanity, did deſerve; and which the ſame Perſons, who procured it, made Uſe of againſt thoſe, who were in moſt Truſt about the King, as Arguments of the little Eſteem They had of thoſe, who had done the King moſt Service, when a Man of ſo eminent Merit, as Mr. Mordaunt, was ſo totally neglected; and did all They could to infuſe the ſame Apprehenſions into him. When the Truth is, moſt Men were affected, and more grieved and diſcontented, for any Honour and Preferment, which They ſaw conferred upon another Man, than for being diſappointed in their own particular Expectations; and looked upon every Obligation beſtowed upon another Man, how meritorious ſoever, as upon a Reproach to them, and an Upbraiding of their Want of Merit.

Particularly of Mr. Mordaunt, who had moſt ſignally ſerved the King

This unhappy Temper and Conſtitution of the Royal Party, with whom He had always intended to have made a firm Conjunction againſt all Accidents and Occurrences, which might happen at home or from abroad, did wonderfully diſpleaſe and trouble the King; and, with the other Perplexities, which are mentioned before, did ſo break his Mind, and had that Operation upon his Spirits, that finding He could not propoſe any ſuch Method to himſelf, by which He might extricate himſelf out of thoſe many Difficulties, and Labyrinths, in which He was involved, nor expedite thoſe important Matters, which depended upon the Good-Will and Diſpatch of the Parliament, which would proceed by its own Rules, and with its accuſtomed Formalities, He grew more diſpoſed to leave all Things to their natural Courſe, and God's Providence; and by Degrees unbent his Mind from the knotty and ungrateful Part of his Buſineſs, grew more remiſs in his Application to it, and indulged to his Youth and Appetite that Licence and Satisfaction, that it deſired, and for which He had Opportunity enough, and could not be without Miniſters abundant for any ſuch Negotiations; the Time itſelf, and the young People thereof of either Sex having been educated in all the Liberty of Vice, without Reprehenſion or Reſtraint. All Relations were confounded by the ſeveral Sects in Religion, which diſcountenanced all Forms of Reverence and Reſpect, as Reliques and Marks of Superſtition. Children aſked not Bleſſing of their Parents; nor did They concern themſelves in the Education of their Children, but were well content that They ſhould take any Courſe to maintain themſelves, that They might be free from that Expence. The young Women converſed without any Circumſpection or Modeſty, and frequently met at Taverns and common Eating-houſes; and They who were ſtricter and more ſevere in their Comportment, became the Wives of the ſeditious Preachers or of Officers of the Army. The Daughters of noble and illuſtrious Families beſtowed themſelves upon the Divines of the Time, or other low and unequal Matches. Parents had no Manner of Authority over their Children, nor Children any Obedience or Submiſſion to their Parents; but every one did that which was good in his own Eyes. This unnatural Antipathy had its firſt Riſe from the Beginning of the Rebellion; when the Fathers and Sons engaged themſelves in the contrary Parties, the one chooſing to ſerve the King, and the other the Parliament; which Diviſion and Contradiction of Affections was afterwards improved to mutual Animoſities, and direct Malice, by the Help of the Preachers, and the ſeveral Factions in Religion, or by the Abſence of all Religion: So that there were never ſuch Examples of Impiety between ſuch Relations in any Age of the World, Chriſtian or Heathen, as in that wicked Time, from the Beginning of the Rebellion to the King's Return; of which the Families of Hotham, and Vane, are ſufficient Inſtances; though other more illuſtrious Houſes may be named, where the ſame accurſed Fruit was too plentifully gathered, and too notorious to the World. The Relation between Maſters and Servants had been long ſince diſſolved by the Parliament, that their Army might be increaſed by the Prentices againſt their Maſters Conſent, and that They might have Intelligence of the ſecret Meetings and Tranſactions in thoſe Houſes and Families, which were not devoted to them; from whence iſſued the fouleſt Treacheries and Perfidiouſneſs that were ever practiſed: And the Blood of the Maſter was frequently the Price of the Servant's Villany.

This perplexing State of the King's Friends much affects his Spirits.

He gives himſelf up to his Pleaſures.

Wickedneſs of all Kinds introduced by the late Anarchy.

Cromwell had been moſt ſtrict and ſevere in the forming the Manners of his Army, and in chaſtiſing all Irregularities; inſomuch that ſure there was never any ſuch Body of Men, ſo without Rapine, Swearing, Drinking, or any other Debauchery, but the Wickedneſs of their Hearts: And all Perſons cheriſhed by him were of the ſame Leaven, and to common Appearance without the Practice of any of thoſe Vices, which were moſt infamous to the People, and which drew the publick Hatred upon thoſe, who were notoriouſly guilty of them. But then He was well pleaſed with the moſt ſcandalous Lives of thoſe, who pretended to be for the King, and wiſhed that all his were ſuch, and took all the Pains He could that They might be generally thought to be ſuch; whereas in Truth the greateſt Part of thoſe, who were guilty of thoſe Diſorders, orders, were young Men, who had never ſeen the King, and had been born and bred in thoſe corrupt Times, when there was no King in Iſrael. He was equally delighted with the Luxury and Voluptuouſneſs of the Preſbyterians, who in Contempt of the Thrift, Sordidneſs, and affected ill Breeding of the Independants, thought it became them to live more generouſly, and were not ſtrict in reſtraining or mortifying the unruly and inordinate Appetite of Fleſh and Blood, but indulged it with too much and too open Scandal, from which He reaped no ſmall Advantage; and wiſhed all thoſe, who were not his Friends, ſhould not only be infected, but given over to the Practice of the moſt odious Vices and Wickedneſs.

IN a Word, the Nation was corrupted from that Integrity, good Nature and Generoſity, that had been peculiar to it, and for which it had been ſignal and celebrated throughout the World; in the Room whereof the vileſt Craft and Diſſembling had ſucceeded. The Tenderneſs of the Bowels, which is the Quinteſſence of Juſtice and Compaſſion, the very Mention of good Nature, was laughed at and looked upon as the Mark and Character of a Fool; and a Roughneſs of Manners, or Hardheartedneſs and Cruelty was affected. In the Place of Generoſity, a vile and ſordid Love of Money was entertained as the trueſt Wiſdom, and any Thing lawful that would contribute towards being rich. There was a total Decay, or rather a final Expiration, of all Friendſhip; and to diſſuade a Man from any Thing He affected, or to reprove him for any Thing He had done amiſs, or to adviſe him to do any Thing He had no Mind to do, was thought an Impertinence unworthy a wiſe Man, and received with Reproach and Contempt. Theſe Dilapidations and Ruins of the ancient Candour, and Diſcipline, were not taken enough to Heart, and repaired with that early Care and Severity that they might have been; for they were not then incorrigible; but by the Remiſſneſs of applying Remedies to ſome, and the Unwarineſs in giving a Kind of Countenance to others, too much of that Poiſon inſinuated itſelf into Minds not well fortified againſt ſuch Infection: So that, much of the Malignity was tranſplanted, inſtead of being extinguiſhed, to the Corruption of many wholſome Bodies, which, being corrupted, ſpread the Diſeaſes more powerfully and more miſchievouſly.

THAT the King might be the more vacant to thoſe Thoughts and Divertiſements, which pleaſed him beſt, He appointed the Chancellor, and ſome others, to have frequent Conſultations with ſuch Members of the Parliament, who were moſt able and willing to ſerve him; and to concert all the Ways and Means, by which the Tranſactions in the Houſes might be carried with the more Expedition, and attended with the beſt Succeſs. Theſe daily Conferences proved very beneficial to his Majeſty's Service; the Members of both Houſes being very willing to receive Advice and Direction, and to purſue what They were directed; and all Things were done there in good Order, and ſucceeded well.

The old Courſe of Juſtice reſtored. All the Courts of Juſtice in Weſtminſter-Hall were preſently filled with grave and learned Judges, who had either deſerted their Practice and Profeſſion during all the rebellious Times, or had given full Evidence of their Affection to the King, and the eſtabliſhed Laws, in many weighty Inſtances: And They were then quickly ſent in their ſeveral Circuits, to adminiſter Juſtice to the People according to the old Forms of Law, which was univerſally received and ſubmitted to with all poſſible Joy and Satisfaction. All Commiſſions of the Peace were renewed, and the Names of thoſe Perſons inſerted therein, who had been moſt eminent Sufferers for the King, and were known to have entire Affections for his Majeſty, and the Laws; though it was not poſſible, but ſome would get and continue in, who were of more doubtful Inclinations, by their not being known to him, whoſe Province it was to depute them. Denied it cannot be, that there appeared, ſooner than was thought poſſible, a general Settlement in the civil Juſtice of the Kingdom; that no Man complained without Remedy, and every Man dwelt again under the Shadow of his own Vine, without any Complaint of Injuſtice and Oppreſſion.

THE King expoſed himſelf with more Condeſcenſion than was neceſſary to Perſons of all Conditions, heard all that they had a Mind to ſay to him, and gave them ſuch Anſwers as for the preſent ſeemed full of Grace. He was too well pleaſed to hear both the Men and the Women of all Factions and Fancies in Religion diſcourſe in their own Method, and enlarged himſelf in Debate with them; which made every one believe that They were more favoured by him than They had Cauſe: Which Kind of Liberty, though at firſt it was accompanied with Acclamations, and Acknowledgment of his being a Prince of rare Parts, and Affability, yet it was attended afterwards with ill Conſequences, and gave many Men Opportunity to declare and publiſh, that the King had ſaid many Things to them, which He had never ſaid; and made many Conceſſions and Promiſes to them, which He had never uttered or thought upon.

THE Chancellor was generally thought to have moſt Credit with his Maſter, and moſt Power in the Counſels, becauſe the King referred all Matters of what Kind ſoever to him. And whoſoever repaired to him for his Direction in any Buſineſs was ſent to the Chancellor, not only becauſe He had a great Confidence in his Integrity, having been with him ſo many Years, and of whoſe indefatigable Induſtry He and all Men had great Experience; but becauſe He ſaw thoſe Men, whom He was as willing to truſt, and who had at leaſt an equal Share in his Affections, more inclined to Eaſe and Pleaſure, and willing that the Weight of the Work ſhould lie on the Chancellor's Shoulders, with whom They had an entire Friendſhip, and knew well that They ſhould with more Eaſe be conſulted by him in all Matters of Importance. Nor was it poſſible for him, at the firſt Coming, to avoid the being engaged in all the Counſels, of how diſtinct a Nature ſoever, becauſe He had been beſt acquainted with all Tranſactions whilſt the King was abroad; and therefore Communication with him in all Things was thought neceſſary by thoſe, who were to have any Part in them. Beſides that, He continued ſtill Chancellor of the Exchequer by Virtue of the Grant formerly made to him by the laſt King, during whoſe Time He executed that Office, but reſolved to ſurrender it into the King's Hand, as ſoon as his Majeſty ſhould reſolve on whom to confer it; He propoſing Nothing to himſelf, but to be left at Liberty to intend only the Diſcharge of his own Office, which He thought himſelf unequal to, and hoped only to improve his Talent that Way by a moſt diligent Application, well knowing the great Abilities of thoſe, who had formerly ſate in that Office, and that They found it required their full Time and all their Faculties. And therefore He did moſt heartily deſire to meddle with Nothing but that Province, which though in itſelf and the conſtant Perquiſites of it is not ſufficient to ſupport the Dignity of it, yet was then, upon the King's Return; and, after it had been ſo many Years without a lawful Officer, would unqueſtionably bring in Money enough to be a Foundation to a future Fortune, competent to his Ambition, and enough to provoke the Envy of many, who believed They deſerved better than He. And that this was the Temper and Reſolution He brought with him into England, and how unwillingly He departed from it, will evidently appear by two or three Inſtances, which ſhall be given in their proper Place. However, He could not expect that Freedom, till the Council ſhould be ſettled (into which the King admitted all, who had been Counſellors to his Father, and had not eminently forfeited that Promotion by their Revolt, and many of thoſe, who had been and ſtill were recommended by the General, amongſt whom there were ſome, who would not not have been received upon any other Title,) and until thoſe Officers could be ſettled, who might take particular Care of their ſeveral Provinces.

THE King had upon great Deliberation whilſt He was beyond the Seas, after that his Return appeared in View, firmly reſolved to reform thoſe Exceſſes, which were known to be in great Offices, eſpecially in thoſe of his Houſhold, whilſt the Places were vacant, and to reform all extravagant Expences there; and firſt himſelf to gratify thoſe, who had followed and ſerved him, in ſettling them in ſuch inferiour Offices and Places, as Cuſtom had put in the Diſpoſal of the great Officers, when they ſhould become vacant after their Admiſſion. And of this Kind He had made many Promiſes, and given many Warrants under his Sign Manual to Perſons, who to his own Knowledge had merited thoſe Obligations. But moſt of thoſe Predeterminations, and many other Reſolutions of that Kind, vaniſhed and expired in the Jollity of the Return, and new Inclinations and Affections ſeemed to be more ſeaſonable. The General, who was the ſole Pillar of the King's Confidence, had by the Parliament been inveſted (before the King's Return) in all the Offices and Commands, which Cromwell had enjoyed. He was Lieutenant of Ireland, and General of all the Armies and Forces raiſed, or to be raiſed, in the three Kingdoms; and it was not fit that He ſhould be degraded from either upon his Majeſty's Arrival: Therefore all Diligence was uſed in diſpatching Grants of all thoſe Commands to him under the Great Seal of England. And that He might be obliged to be always near his Majeſty's Perſon, He was preſently ſworn Gentleman of the Bedchamber; and might chooſe what Office He liked beſt in the Court, whilſt Titles of Honour were preparing by the Attorney, and Particulars of Lands enquired after by the Auditors and Receivers, which in all Reſpects might raiſe him to that Height, which would moſt pleaſe him. He made Choice to be Maſter of the Horſe, and was immediately gratified with it; and thereby all thoſe poor Gentlemen, who had Promiſes and Warrants for ſeveral Places, depending upon that great Officer, were diſappointed, and offered the King's Sign Manual to no Purpoſe for their Admiſſion. The General in his own Nature was an immoderate Lover of Money, and yet would have gratified ſome of the Pretenders upon his Majeſty's Recommendation, if the vile good Huſwifery of his Wife had not engroſſed that Province, and preferred him, who offered moſt Money, before all other Conſiderations or Motives. And hereby, not only many honeſt Men, who had ſeveral Ways ſerved the King, and ſpent the Fortunes They had been Maſters of, were denied the Recompenſes the King had deſigned to them; but ſuch Men, who had been moſt notorious in the Malice againſt the Crown from the Beginning of the Rebellion, or had been employed in all the active Offices to affront and oppreſs his Party, were for Money preferred and admitted into thoſe Offices, and became the King's Servants very much againſt his Will, and with his manifeſt Regret on the Behalf of the honeſt Men, who had been ſo unworthily rejected. And this occaſioned the firſt Murmur and Diſcontent, which appeared after the King's Return, amongſt thoſe, who were not inclined to it, yet found every Day freſh Occaſions to nouriſh and improve it.

The General confirmed in the Offices aſſigned him by the Parliament.

Alſo ſworn Gentleman of the Bedchamber, and Maſter of the Horſe.

THE ſettling this great Officer in the Stables, made it neceſſary to appoint a Lord Steward of the Houſhold, who was a neceſſary Officer for the Parliament, being by the Statute appointed to ſwear all the Members of the Houſe of Commons; and to this Charge the Marquis of Ormond had been long deſigned, and was then ſworn. And They had Both their Tables erected according to their old Models, and all thoſe Exceſſes, which the irregular Precedents of former Times had introduced, and which the King had ſo ſolemnly reſolved to reform, before it could be ſaid to trench upon the Rights of particular Perſons. But the good Humour the King was in, and the Plenty which generally appeared, how much ſoever without a Fund to ſupport it, and eſpecially the natural Deſire his Majeſty had to ſee every Body pleaſed, baniſhed all Thoughts of ſuch Providence; inſtead whereof He reſolved forthwith to ſettle his Houſe according to former Rules, or rather without any Rule, and to appoint the Officers, who impatiently expected their Promotion. He directed his own Table to be more magnificently furniſhed than it had ever been in any Time of his Predeceſſors; which Example was eaſily followed in all Offices.

THAT He might give a lively Inſtance of his Grace to thoſe, who had been of the Party which had been faulty, according to his Declaration from Breda, He made of his own free Inclination and Choice the Earl of Mancheſter (who was looked upon as one of the principal Heads of the Preſbyterian Party) Lord Chamberlain of his Houſe; who, continuing ſtill to perform all good Offices to his old Friends, complied very punctually with all the Obligations and Duties which his Place required, never failed being at Chapel, and at all the King's Devotions with all imaginable Decency; and, by his extraordinary Civilities and Behaviour towards all Men, did not only appear the fitteſt Perſon the King could have choſen for that Office in that Time, but rendered himſelf ſo acceptable to all Degrees of Men, that none, but ſuch, who were implacable towards all, who had ever diſſerved the King, were ſorry to ſee him ſo promoted. And it muſt be confeſſed, that as He had Expreſſed much Penitence for what He had done amiſs, and was mortally hated and perſecuted by Cromwell, even for his Life, and had done many Acts of Merit towards the King; ſo He was of all Men, who had ever borne Arms againſt the King, both in the Gentleneſs and Juſtice of his Nature, in the Sweetneſs and Evenneſs of his Converſation, and in his real Principles for Monarchy, the moſt worthy to be received into the Truſt and Confidence, in which He was placed. With his, the two other white Staves were diſpoſed of to thoſe, to whom they were deſigned, when the King was Prince of Wales, by his Father: And all other inferiour Officers were made, who were to take Care of the Expences of the Houſe, and were a great Part of it.

The Earl of Mancheſter Lord Chamberlain.

AND thus the King's Houſe quickly appeared in its full Luſtre, the Eating and Drinking very grateful to all Men, and the Charge and Expence of it much exceeding the Precedents of the moſt luxurious Times; and all this before there was any Proviſion of ready Money, or any Aſſignation of a future Fund, to diſcharge or ſupport it. All Men were ready to deliver their Goods upon Truſt, the Officers too remiſs in computing the Diſburſements; inſomuch as, the Debts contracted by thoſe Exceſſes in leſs than the firſt Year broke all the Meaſures in that Degree, that they could not ſuddenly be retrenched for the future; and the Debt itſelf was not diſcharged in many Years.

THE King had in his Purpoſe, long before his Return, to make the Earl of Southampton (who was the moſt valued and eſteemed of all the Nobility, and generally thought worthy of any Honour or Office) Lord High Treaſurer of England; but He deſired firſt to ſee ſome Revenue ſettled by the Parliament, and that Part of the old, which had been ſold and diſperſed by extravagant Grants and Sales, reduced into the old Channel, and regularly to be received and paid, and the Cuſtoms to be put in ſuch Order (which were not yet granted, and only continued by Orders as illegal, as the late Times had been accuſtomed to, and to the Authority whereof He had no Mind to adminiſter) before He was willing to receive the Staff. And ſo the Office of the Treaſury was by Commiſſion executed by ſeveral Lords of the Council, whereof the Chancellor, as well by the Dignity of his Place, as by his ſtill being Chancellor of the Exchequer, was one, and ſo engaged in the putting the Cuſtoms likewiſe into into Commiſſioners Hands, and ſettling all the other Branches of the Revenue in ſuch Manner as was thought moſt reaſonable; in all Debates whereof his Majeſty himſelf was ſtill preſent, and approved the Concluſion. But after a Month or two ſpent in this Method, in the Crowd of ſo much Buſineſs of ſeveral Natures, the King found ſo little Expedition that He thought it beſt to determine that Commiſſion, and ſo gave the Staff to the Earl of Southampton, and made him Treaſurer. And the Chancellor at the ſame Time ſurrendering his Office of Chancellor of the Exchequer into the King's Hands, his Majeſty upon the humble Deſire of the Earl, conferred that Office upon Sir Anthony Aſhley Cooper, who had married his Niece, and whoſe Parts well enough qualified him for the Diſcharge thereof; though ſome other Qualities of his, as well known, brought no Advantage to his Majeſty by that Promotion. And from this Time the Chancellor would never intermeddle in the Buſineſs of the Exchequer, nor admit any Applications to him in it: However, the Friendſhip was ſo great between the Treaſurer and him, and ſo notorious from an ancient Date, and from a joint Confidence in each other in the Service of the laſt King, that neither of them concluded any Matter of Importance without conſulting with the other. And ſo, the Treaſurer, the Marquis of Ormond, and the General, with the two Secretaries of State, were of that ſecret Committee with the Chancellor; which, under the Notion of foreign Affairs, were appointed by the King to conſult all his Affairs before they came to a public Debate; and in which there could not be a more united Concurrence of Judgments and Affections.

The Earl of Southampton made Treaſurer.

And Sir Anthony Aſhley Cooper Chancellor of the Exchequer.

YET it was the Chancellor's Misfortune to be thought to have the greateſt Credit with the King, for the Reaſons mentioned before, and which for ſome Time ſeemed to be without Envy, by Reaſon of his many Years Service of the Crown, and conſtant Fidelity to the ſame, and his long Attendance upon the Perſon of his Majeſty, and the Friendſhip He had with the moſt eminent Perſons who had adhered to that Intereſt. Yet He foreſaw, and told many of his Friends, "that "the Credit He was thought to have with the King, "and which He knew was much leſs than it was "thought to be, and his being obliged by the King "to conduct many Affairs, which were foreign to "thoſe which principally concerned and related to his "Office, would in a ſhort Time raiſe ſuch a Storm of "Envy and Malice againſt him, that He ſhould not "be able to ſtand the Shock." All Mens Impatience to get, and Immodeſty in aſking, when the King had Nothing to give, with his Majeſty's Eaſineſs of Acceſs, and that Imbecillitas Frontis which kept him from denying, together with reſcuing himſelf from the moſt troubleſome Importunities by ſending Men to the Chancellor, could not but in a ſhort Time make him be looked upon as the Man that obſtructed all their Pretences; in which They were confirmed by his own Carriage towards them, which though They could not deny to be full of Civility, yet He always diſſuaded them from purſuing the Suits They had made to the King, as unfit or unjuſt for his Majeſty to grant, how inclinable ſoever He had ſeemed to them. And ſo, inſtead of promiſing to aſſiſt them, He poſitively denied ſo much as to endeavour it, when the Matter would not bear it; but where He could do Courteſies, no Man proceeded more chearfully and more unaſked, which very many of all Conditions knew to be true; nor did He ever receive Recompenſe or Reward for any ſuch Offices. Of which Temper of his there will be Occaſion to ſay more hereafter.

The Chancellor foreſees a Storm of Envy ariſing againſt him.

A Diſcovery of the Duke of York's Marriage with the Chancellor's Daughter.

THE firſt Matter of general and publick Importance, and which reſulted not from any Debate in Parliament, was the Diſcovery of a great Affection that the Duke had for the Chancellor's Daughter, who was a Maid of Honour to the King's Siſter the Princeſs Royal of Orange, and of a Contract of Marriage between them: With which Nobody was ſo ſurpriſed and confounded as the Chancellor himſelf, who being of a Nature free from any Jealouſy, and very confident of an entire Affection and Obedience from all his Children, and particularly from that Daughter, whom He had always loved dearly, never had in the leaſt Degree ſuſpected any ſuch Thing; though He knew afterwards, that the Duke's Affection and Kindneſs had been much ſpoken of beyond the Seas, but without the leaſt Suſpicion in any Body that it could ever tend to Marriage. And therefore it was cheriſhed and promoted in the Duke by thoſe, and only by thoſe, who were declared Enemies to the Chancellor, and who hoped from thence, that ſome ſignal Diſgrace and Diſhonour would befall the Chancellor and his Family; in which They were the more reaſonably confirmed by the Manner of the Duke's living towards him, which had never any Thing of Grace in it, but very much of Diſfavour, to which the Lord Berkley, and moſt of his other Servants to pleaſe the Lord Berkley, had contributed all They could; and the Queen's notorious Prejudice to him had made it Part of his Duty to her Majeſty, which had been a very great Diſcomfort to the Chancellor, in his whole Adminiſtration beyond the Seas. But now, upon this Diſcovery and the Conſequence thereof, He looked upon himſelf as a ruined Perſon, and that the King's Indignation ought to fall upon him as the Contriver of that Indignity to the Crown, which as himſelf from his Soul abhorred, and would have had the Preſumption of his Daughter to be puniſhed with the utmoſt Severity, ſo He believed the whole Kingdom would be inflamed to the Puniſhment of it, and to prevent the Diſhonour which might reſult from it. And the leaſt Calamity that He expected upon himſelf and Family, how innocent ſoever, was an everlaſting Baniſhment out of the Kingdom, and to end his Days in foreign Parts in Poverty and Miſery. All which undoubtedly muſt have come to paſs upon that Occaſion, if the King had either had that Indignation, which had been juſt in him; or if He had withdrawn his Grace and Favour from him, and left him to be ſacrificed by the Envy and Rage of others; though at this Time He was not thought to have many Enemies, nor indeed any who were Friends to any other honeſt Men. But the King's own Knowledge of his Innocence, and thereupon his gracious Condeſcenſion and Interpoſition, diverting any rough Proceeding, and ſo, a contrary Effect to what hath been mentioned having been produced from thence; the Chancellor's Greatneſs ſeemed to be thereby confirmed, his Family eſtabliſhed above the Reach of common Envy, and his Fortune to be in a growing and proſperous Condition not like to be ſhaken. Yet after many Years Poſſeſſion of this Proſperity, an unexpected Guſt of Diſpleaſure took again its Riſe from this Original, and overwhelmed him with Variety and Succeſſion of Misfortunes.

THE Chancellor, as ſoon as the King was at Whitehall, had ſent for his Daughter, having a Deſign preſently to marry her; to which Purpoſe He had an Overture from a noble Family, on the Behalf of a well-bred hopeful young Gentleman, who was the Heir of it. His Daughter quickly arrived at her Father's Houſe, to his great Joy, having always had a great Affection for her; and She being his eldeſt Child, He had more Acquaintance with her, than with any of his Children; and being now of an Age fit for Marriage, He was well pleaſed that He had an Opportunity to place her in ſuch a Condition, as with God's Bleſſing was like to yield her much Content. She had not been long in England, when the Duke informed the King "of the Affection and Engagement "that had been long between them; that They had "been long contracted, and that She was with Child:" And therefore with all imaginable Importunity He begged his Majeſty's Leave and Permiſſion upon his Knees, "that He might publickly marry her, in ſuch "a Manner as his Majeſty thought neceſſary for the

The Duke's Declaration of it to the King.

" Conſequence thereof." The King was much troubled with it, and more with his Brother's Paſſion, which was expreſſed in a very wonderful Manner and with many Tears, proteſting " that if his Majeſty " ſhould not give his Conſent, He would immediate- " ly leave the Kingdom, and muſt ſpend his Life in " foreign Parts." His Majeſty was very much perplexed to reſolve what to do: He knew the Chancellor ſo well, that He concluded that He was not privy to it, nor would ever approve it; and yet that it might draw much Prejudice upon him, by the Jealouſy of thoſe who were not well acquainted with his Nature. He preſently ſent for the Marquis of Ormond and the Earl of Southampton, who He well knew were his Boſom-Friends, and informed them at large and of all Particulars which had paſſed from the Duke to him, and commanded them preſently to ſee for the Chancellor to come to his own Chamber at Whitehall, where They would meet him upon a Buſineſs of great Importance, which the King had commended to them for their joint Advice. They no ſooner met, than the Marquis of Ormond told the Chancellor, " that " He had a Matter to inform him of, that He " doubted would give him much Trouble;" and therefore adviſed him to compoſe himſelf to hear it: And then told him, " that the Duke of York had " owned a great Affection for his Daughter to the " King, and that He much doubted that She was " with Child by the Duke, and that the King re- " quired the Advice of them and of him what He " was to do."

The King ſends two of the Chancellor's Boſom-Friends to open the Matter to him.

The Chancellor ſtruck with it to the Heart.

THE Manner of the Chancellor's receiving this Advertiſement made it evident enough, that He was ſtruck with it to the Heart, and had never had the leaſt Jealouſy or Apprehenſion of it. He broke out into a very immoderate Paſſion againſt the Wickedneſs of his Daughter, and ſaid with all imaginable Earneſtneſs, " that as ſoon as He came Home, He " would turn her out of his Houſe as a Strumpet, " to ſhift for herſelf, and would never ſee her again." They told him, " that his Paſſion was too violent to " adminiſter good Counſel to him, that They thought " that the Duke was married to his Daughter, and " that there were other Meaſures to be taken, than " thoſe which the Diſorder He was in had ſuggeſted " to him." Whereupon He fell into new Commotions, and ſaid, " if that were true, He was well pre- " pared to adviſe what was to be done: That He had " much rather his Daughter ſhould be the Duke's " Whore, than his Wife: In the former Caſe No- " body could blame him for the Reſolution He had " taken, for He was not obliged to keep a Whore for " the greateſt Prince alive; and the Indignity to him- " ſelf He would ſubmit to the good Pleaſure of God. " But if there were any Reaſon to ſuſpect the other, " He was ready to give a poſitive Judgment, in which " He hoped their Lordſhips would concur with him; " that the King ſhould immediately cauſe the Woman " to be ſent to the Tower, and to be caſt into a Dun- " geon, under ſo ſtrict a Guard, that no Perſon liv- " ing ſhould be admitted to come to her; and then " that an Act of Parliament ſhould be immediately " paſſed for the cutting off her Head, to which He " would not only give his Conſent, but would very " willingly be the firſt Man that ſhould propoſe it:" And whoever knew the Man, will believe that He ſaid all this very heartily.

And breaks out into a very immoderate Paſſion.

IN this Point of Time the King entered the Room, and ſate down at the Table; and perceiving by his Countenance the Agony the Chancellor was in, and his ſwollen Eyes from whence a Flood of Tears were fallen, He aſked the other Lords, " what They had " done, and whether They had reſolved on any " Thing." The Earl of Southampton ſaid, " his Ma- " jeſty muſt conſult with ſoberer Men; that He" (pointing to the Chancellor) " was mad, and had pro- " poſed ſuch extravagant Things, that He was no " more to be conſulted with." Whereupon his Majeſty looking upon him with a wonderful Benignity, ſaid, " Chancellor, I knew this Buſineſs would trou- " ble you; and therefore I appointed your two Friends " to confer firſt with you upon it, before I would ſpeak " with you myſelf: But You muſt now lay aſide all " Paſſion that diſturbs you, and conſider that this " Buſineſs will not do itſelf; that it will quickly take " Air; and therefore it is fit that I firſt reſolve what " to do, before other Men uncalled preſume to give " the Counſel: Tell me therefore what You would " have me do, and I will follow your Advice." Then his Majeſty enlarged upon the Paſſion of his Brother, and the Expreſſions He had often uſed, " that He " was not capable of having any other Wife, and the " like." Upon which the Chancellor aroſe, and with a little Compoſedneſs ſaid, " Sir, I hope I need make " no Apology to you for myſelf, and of my own in " this Matter, upon which I look with ſo much De- " teſtation, that though I could have wiſhed, that " your Brother had not thought it fit to have put this " Diſgrace upon me, I had much rather ſubmit and " bear it with all Humility, than that it ſhould be re- " paired by making her his Wife; the Thought " whereof I do ſo much abominate, that I had much " rather ſee her dead, with all the Infamy that is due " to her Preſumption." And then He repeated all that He had before ſaid to the Lords, of ſending her preſently to the Tower, and the reſt; and concluded, " Sir, I do upon all my Oaths which I have taken to " you to give you faithful Counſels, and from all the " ſincere Gratitude I ſtand obliged to you for ſo many " Obligations, renew this Counſel to you; and do be- " ſeech you to purſue it, as the only Expedient that " can free you from the Evils that this Buſineſs will " otherwiſe bring upon you." And obſerving by the King's Countenance, that He was not pleaſed with his Advice, He continued and ſaid, " I am the dulleſt " Creature alive, if, having been with your Majeſty " ſo many Years, I do not know your Infirmities bet- " ter than other Men. You are of too eaſy and gen- " tle a Nature to contend with thoſe rough Affronts, " which the Iniquity and Licence of the late Times " is like to put upon you, before it be ſubdued and " reformed. The Preſumption all Kinds of Men have " upon your Temper is too notorious to all Men, and " lamented by all who wiſh you well: And, truſt me, " an Example of the higheſt Severity in a Caſe that ſo " nearly concerns you, and that relates to the Perſon " who is neareſt to you, will be ſo ſeaſonable, that " your Reign, during the remaining Part of your Life, " will be the eaſier to you, and all Men will take " Heed, how They impudently offend you."

HE had ſcarce done ſpeaking, when the Duke of York came in; whereupon the King ſpake of ſome other Buſineſs, and ſhortly after went out of the Room with his Brother, whom (as was ſhortly known) He informed of all that the Chancellor had ſaid, who, as ſoon as He came to his Houſe, ſent his Wife to command his Daughter to keep her Chamber, and not to admit any Viſits; whereas before She had always been at Dinner and Supper, and had much Company reſorting to her: Which was all that He thought fit to do, upon the firſt Aſſault, and till He had ſlept upon it (which He did very unquietly) and reflected upon what was like to be the Effect of ſo extravagant a Cauſe. And this was quickly known to the Duke, who was exceedingly offended at it, and complained to the King, " as of an Indignity offered to him." And the next Morning the King chid the Chancellor for proceeding with ſo much Precipitation, and required him " to take off that Reſtraint, and to leave " her to the Liberty She had been accuſtomed to." To which he replied, " that her having not diſcharg- " ed the Duty of a Daughter ought not to deprive " him of the Authority of a Father; and therefore He " muſt humbly beg his Majeſty not to interpoſe his " Commands, againſt his doing any Thing that his " own Dignity required: That He only expected what

" his

" his Majeſty would do upon the Advice He had " humbly offered to him, and when He ſaw that, He " would himſelf proceed as He was ſure would be- " come him:" Nor did he take off any of the Reſtraint He had impoſed. Yet He diſcovered after, that even in that Time the Duke had found Ways to come to her, and to ſtay whole Nights with her, by the Adminiſtration of thoſe who were not ſuſpected by him, and who had the Excuſe, "that They knew " that They were married."

This Affair produces not thoſe Murmurs and Diſcontents the Chancellor expected.

THIS Subject was quickly the Matter of all Mens Diſcourſe, and did not produce thoſe Murmurs and diſcontented Reflections, which were expected. The Parliament was ſitting, and took not the leaſt Notice of it; nor could it be diſcerned, that many were ſcandalized at it. The Chancellor received the ſame Reſpects from all Men, which He had been accuſtomed to. And the Duke himſelf, in the Houſe of Peers, frequently ſate by him upon the Wool Sack, that He might the more eaſily confer with him upon the Matters which were debated, and receive his Advice how to behave himſelf; which made all Men believe, that there had been a good Underſtanding between them. And yet it is very true, that, in all that Time, the Duke never ſpake one Word to him of that Affair. The King ſpake every Day about it, and told the Chancellor, " that He muſt behave himſelf wiſely, " for that the Thing was remedileſs; and, that his " Majeſty knew that They were married, which would " quickly appear to all Men, who knew that Nothing " could be done upon it." In this Time the Chancellor had conferred with his Daughter, without any Thing of Indulgence, and not only diſcovered, that They were unqueſtionably married, but by whom, and who were preſent at it, who would be ready to avow it; which pleaſed him not, though it diverted him from uſing ſome of that Rigour, which He intended. And He ſaw no other Remedy could be applied, but that, which He had propoſed to the King, who thought of Nothing like it.

AT this Time, there was News of the Princeſs Royal's Embarkation in Holland, which obliged the King and the Duke of York to make a Journey to Dover to receive her, who came for no other Reaſon, but to congratulate with the King, her Brother, and to have her Share in the publick Joy. The Morning that They began their Journey, the King and the Duke came to the Chancellor's Houſe; and the King, after He had ſpoken to him of ſome Buſineſs that was to be done in his Abſence, going out of the Room, the Duke ſtayed behind, and whiſpered the Chancellor in the Ear, becauſe there were others at a little Diſtance, " that He knew that He had heard of the Buſi- " neſs between him and his Daughter, and of which " He confeſſed He ought to have ſpoken with him " before; but that when He returned from Dover, " He would give him full Satisfaction: In the mean " Time," He deſired him, " not to be offended with " his Daughter." To which the Chancellor made no other Anſwer, than " that it was a Matter too great " for him to ſpeak of."

WHEN the Princeſs Royal came to the Town, there grew to be a great Silence in that Affair. The Duke ſaid Nothing to the Chancellor, nor came nor ſent to his Daughter, as He had conſtantly uſed to do. And it was induſtriouſly publiſhed about the Town, that that Buſineſs was broken off, and that the Duke was reſolved never to think more of it. The Queen had before written a very ſharp Letter to the Duke, full of Indignation, that He ſhould have ſo low Thoughts as to marry ſuch a Woman; to whom He ſhewed the Letter, as not moved by it. And now She ſent the King Word, " that She was on the Way " to England, to prevent, with her Authority, ſo great " a Stain and Diſhonour to the Crown;" and uſed many Threats and paſſionate Expreſſions upon the Subject. The Chancellor ſate unconcerned in all the Rumours which were ſpread, " that the Queen was " coming with a Purpoſe to complain to the Parlia- " ment againſt the Chancellor, and to apply the high- " eſt Remedies to prevent ſo great a Miſchief."

IN the mean Time it was reported abroad, that the Duke had diſcovered ſome Diſloyalty in the Lady, which He had never ſuſpected, but had now ſo full Evidence of it, that He was reſolved never more to ſee her; and that He was not married. And all his Family, whereof the Lord Berkley and his Nephew were the chief, who had long hated the Chancellor, ſpake very loudly and ſcandalouſly of it. The King carried himſelf with extraordinary Grace towards the Chancellor, and was with him more, and ſpake upon all Occaſions and before all Perſons more graciouſly of him, than ever. He told him with much Trouble, " that his Brother was abuſed; and that there was a " wicked Conſpiracy ſet on Foot by Villains, which, " in the End, muſt prove of more Diſhonour to the " Duke, than to any Body elſe."

The King carries himſelf with extraordinary Grace towards the Chancellor.

THE Queen was now ready to embark, inflamed and haſtened by this Occaſion; and it was fit for the King and the Duke, to wait on her at the Shore. But before his Majeſty's Going, He reſolved of himſelf to do a Grace to the Chancellor, that ſhould publiſh, how far He was from being ſhaken in his Favour towards him, and to do it with ſuch Circumſtances, as gave it great Luſtre. From the Time of his Coming into England, He had often offered the Chancellor to make him a Baron, and told him, " that He was " aſſured by many of the Lords, that it was moſt " neceſſary for his Service in the Parliament." But He had ſtill refuſed it, and beſought his Majeſty " not to think of it; that it would increaſe the Envy " againſt him, if He ſhould confer that Honour up- " on him ſo ſoon; but that hereafter, when his Ma- " jeſty's Affairs ſhould be ſettled, and He, out of the " extraordinary Perquiſites of his Office, ſhould be " able to make ſome Addition to his ſmall Fortune, " He would, with that Humility that became him, " receive that Honour from him." The King, in few Days after, coming to him, and being alone with him in his Cabinet, at going away gave him a little Billet into his Hand, that contained a Warrant of his own Handwriting to Sir Stephen Fox, to pay to the Chancellor the Sum of twenty thouſand Pounds; which was Part of the Money, which the Parliament had preſented to the King at the Hague, and for which He had been compelled to take Bills of Exchange again from Amſterdam upon London; which was only known to the King, the Chancellor, and Sir Stephen Fox, who was intruſted to receive it, as He had done all the King's Monies for many Years beyond the Seas. This Bounty flowing immediately from the King, at ſuch a melancholick Conjuncture, and of which Nobody could have Notice, could not but much raiſe the Spirits of the Chancellor. Nor did the King's Goodneſs reſt here, but the Night before He began his Journey towards the Queen, He ſent for the Attorney General, whom He knew to be moſt devoted to the Chancellor, and told him, " that He muſt intruſt him in an Affair, " that He muſt not impart to the Chancellor;" and then gave him a Warrant ſigned for the Creation of him a Baron, which He commanded " to be ready to " paſs the Seal, againſt the Hour of his Majeſty's " Return, and He would then ſee it ſealed himſelf: " But if the Chancellor came firſt to know it, He " would uſe great Importunity to ſtop it." The Attorney ſaid, "it would be impoſſible to conceal it from " him, becauſe, without his Privity and Direction, " He knew not what Title to give him for his Ba- " rony." The King replied with Warmth, " that " He ſhould confer with ſome of his Friends of the " Way; but that He would take it ill of him, if " there were any Delay in it, and if it were not ready " for the Seal at the Time of his Return, which " would be in few Days." The Attorney came to the Chancellor and told him, "He would break a

"ſumed, that He would not be ſo unjuſt as to let him

"ing, and the Conjuncture in which this Honour was "given," though He had before refuſed it with Obſtinacy, "made it now very grateful to him:" And ſo without Heſitation He told him what Title He would

THE Queen had expreſſed her Indignation to the King and Duke, with her natural Paſſion, from the Time of their Meeting; and the Duke had aſked her Pardon, "for having placed his Affection ſo unequal-
"ly, of which He was ſure there was now an End;
"that He was not married, and had now ſuch Evi"dence of her Unworthineſs, that He ſhould no more "think of her." And it was now avowedly ſaid, that Sir Charles Berkley, who was Captain of his Guard, and in much more Credit and Favour with the Duke than his Uncle, (though a young Man of a diſſolute Life, and prone to all Wickedneſs in the Judgment of

"was bound in Conſcience to preſerve him from ta"king to Wife a Woman ſo wholly unworthy of him;
"that He himſelf had lain with her; and that for his "Sake he would be content to marry her, though He "knew well the Familiarity the Duke had with her."
This Evidence, with ſo ſolemn Oaths preſented by a Perſon ſo much loved and truſted by him, made a wonderful Impreſſion in the Duke; and now confirmed by the Commands of his Mother, as He had been

And the Queen being ſatisfied with this Reſolution, They came all to London, with a full Hope that They ſhould prevail to the utter Overthrow of the Chancellor; the King having, without any Reply or Debate, heard all They ſaid of the other Affair, and his Mother's Bitterneſs againſt him. But when, the very next Morning after their Arrival at London, They ſaw the Chancellor (who had not ſeen the King) appear in the Parliament in the Robes of a Peer; They thought it to no Purpoſe to proſecute their Deſign againſt him, whom his Majeſty was reſolved to protect from any unjuſt Perſecution. But the other Reſolution was purſued with Noiſe and much Defamation.

THE next Day after the Queen's Arrival, all the Privy Council in a Body waited upon the Queen, to congratulate her Return into England; and the Chancellor was obliged to go in the Head of them, and was received with the ſame Countenance that the reſt were, which was very chearful, and with many gracious Expreſſions. And from this Time He put not himſelf in her Majeſty's Preſence, nor appeared at all concerned at the ſcandalous Diſcourſes againſt his Daughter. The Earl of St. Albans and all who were near the Queen in any Truſt, and the Lord Berkley and his Faction about the Duke, lived in Defiance of the Chancellor; and ſo imprudently that They did him no Harm, but underwent the Reproach of moſt ſober Men. The King continued his Grace towards him without the leaſt Diminution, and not only to him, but to many others who were truſted by him; which made it evident, that He believed Nothing of what Sir Charles Berkley avowed, and looked on him as a Fellow of great Wickedneſs: Which Opinion the King was long known to have of him, before his coming into England, and after.

IN the mean Time, the Seaſon of his Daughter's Delivery was at Hand. And it was the King's Chance, to be at his Houſe with the Committee of Council, when She fell in Labour: Of which being advertiſed by her Father, the King directed him "to ſend for
"the Lady Marchioneſs of Ormond, the Counteſs of "Sunderland, and other Ladies of known Honour and "Fidelity to the Crown, to be preſent with her:" Who all came, and were preſent till She was delivered of a Son. The Biſhop of Winchester, in the Interval of her greateſt Pangs, and ſometimes when they were upon her, was preſent, and aſked her ſuch Queſtions as were thought fit for the Occaſion; "whoſe the "Child was of which She was in Labour," whom She averred, with all Proteſtations to be the Duke's;
"whether She had ever known any other Man," which She renounced with all Vehemence, ſaying,
"that She was confident the Duke did not think She "had;" and being aſked, "whether She were married
"to the Duke," She anſwered, "She was, and that "there were Witneſſes enough, who in due Time,
"She was confident, would avow it." In a Word, her Behaviour was ſuch as abundantly ſatisfied the Ladies who were preſent, of her Innocence from the Reproach; and They were not reſerved in the Declaration of it, even before the Perſons who were leaſt pleaſed with their Teſtimony. And the Lady Marchioneſs of Ormond took an Opportunity to declare it fully to the Duke himſelf, and perceived in him ſuch a Kind of Tenderneſs, that perſuaded her that He did not believe any Thing amiſs. And the King enough publiſhed his Opinion and Judgment of the Scandal.
The Dutcheſs delivered of a Son.

THE Chancellor's own Carriage, that is, his doing Nothing, nor ſaying any Thing from whence They might take Advantage, exceedingly vexed them. Yet They undertook to know, and informed the Duke confidently, "that the Chancellor had a great Party "in the Parliament; and that He was reſolved within "few Days to complain there, and to produce the "Witneſſes, who were preſent at the Marriage, to be "examined, that their Teſtimony might remain
"there; which would be a great Affront to him;"
with many other Particulars, which might incenſe his Highneſs. Whereupon the Duke, who had been obſerved never to have ſpoken to him in the Houſe of Peers, or any where elſe, ſince the Time of his going to meet his Siſter, finding the Chancellor one Day in the Privy Lodgings, whiſpered him in the Ear, "that "He would be glad to confer with him in his Lodg"ing," whither He was then going. The other immediately followed; and being come thither, the Duke ſent all his Servants out of Diſtance; and then told him with much Warmth, "what He had been "informed of his Purpoſe to complain to the Parlia"ment againſt him, which He did not value or care
"for: However, if He ſhould proſecute any ſuch
"Courſe, it ſhould be the worſe for him;" implying ſome Threats, "what He would do, before He would "bear ſuch an Affront;" adding then, "that for his "Daughter, She had behaved herſelf ſo foully (of "which He had ſuch Evidence as was as convinc"ing as his own Eyes, and of which He could make "no Doubt) that Nobody could blame him for his "Behaviour towards her;" concluding with ſome other Threats, "that He ſhould repent it, if He pur-
"ſued his Intention of appealing to the Parliament."

As ſoon as the Duke diſcontinued his Diſcourſe, the Chancellor told him, "that He hoped He would "diſcover the Untruth of other Reports which had "been made to him by the Falſehood of this, which "had been raiſed without the leaſt Ground or Shadow
"of Truth. That though he did not pretend to "much Wiſdom, yet no Man took him to be ſuch a "Fool, as He muſt be, if He intended to do ſuch
"an Act as He was informed. That if his Highneſs
"had done any Thing towards or againſt him which "He ought not to have done, there was One who is
"as much above him, as his Highneſs was above
"him, and who could both cenſure and puniſh it.
"For his own Part, He knew too well whoſe Son He "was, and whoſe Brother he is, to behave himſelf
"towards him with leſs Duty and Submiſſion than was "due to him, and ſhould be always paid by him."
He ſaid, "He was not concerned to vindicate his "Daughter from any the moſt improbable Scandals

"and

" and Aſperſions; She had diſobliged and deceived " him too much, for him to be over-confident, that " She might not deceive any other man: And there- " fore He would leave that likewiſe to God Almighty, " upon whoſe Bleſſing He would always depend, " whilſt himſelf remained innocent, and no longer." The Duke replied not, nor from that Time mention- ed the Chancellor with any Diſpleaſure; and related to the King, and ſome other Perſons, the Diſcourſe that had paſſed, very exactly.

THERE did not after all this appear, in the Diſ- courſes of Men, any of that Humour and Indignation which was expected. On the contrary, Men of the greateſt Name and Reputation ſpake of the Foulneſs of the Proceeding with great Freedom, and with all the Deteſtation imaginable againſt Sir Charles Berkley, whoſe Teſtimony Nobody believed; not without ſome Cenſure of the Chancellor, for not enough appearing and proſecuting the Indignity: But He was not to be moved by any Inſtances, which He never afterwards repented. The Queen's implacable Diſpleaſure con- tinued in the full Height, doing all She could to keep the Duke firm to his Reſolution, and to give all Coun- tenance to the Calumny. As before the Diſcovery of this Engagement of the Duke's Affection, the Duke of Gloceſter had died of the Smallpox, to the extraor- dinary Grief of the King and the whole Kingdom; ſo, at this Time, it pleaſed God to viſit the Princeſs Royal with the ſame Diſeaſe, and of which She died within few Days; having in her laſt Agonies expreſſed a Diſlike of the Proceedings in that Affair, to which She had contributed too much. The Duke himſelf grew melancholick and diſpirited, and cared not for Company, nor thoſe Divertiſements in which He for- merly delighted: Which was obſerved by every Body, and which in the End wrought ſo far upon the Con- ſcience of the lewd Informer, that He, Sir Charles Berkley, came to the Duke, and clearly declared to him; " That the general Diſcourſe of Men, of what " Inconvenience and Miſchief, if not abſolute Ruin, " ſuch a Marriage would be to his Royal Highneſs, " had prevailed with him to uſe all the Power He " had to diſſuade him from it; and when He found " He could not prevail with him, He had formed " that Accuſation, which He preſumed could not but " produce the Effect He wiſhed; which He now con- " feſſed to be falſe, and without the leaſt Ground; " and that He was very confident of her Virtue:" And therefore beſought his Highneſs " To pardon a " Fault, that was committed out of pure Devotion to " him; and that He would not ſuffer him to be ruin- " ed by the Power of thoſe, whom He had ſo unwor- " thily provoked; and of which He had ſo much " Shame, that He had not Confidence to look upon " them." The Duke found himſelf ſo much relieved in that Part that moſt afflicted him, that He em- braced him, and made a ſolemn Promiſe, " that He " ſhould not ſuffer in the leaſt Degree in his own Af- " fection, for what had proceeded ſo abſolutely from " his Good Will to him; and that He would take ſo " much Care of him, that in the compounding that " Affair He ſhould be ſo comprehended, that He " ſhould receive no Diſadvantage."

The Duke grows melancholick.

AND now the Duke appeared with another Coun- tenance, writ to her whom He had injured " That He " would ſpeedily viſit her," and gave her Charge " to have a Care of his Son." He gave the King a full Account of all, without concealing his Joy; and took moſt Pleaſure in conferring with them, who had ſeemed leaſt of his Mind when He had been moſt tran- ſported, and who had always argued againſt the Pro- bability of the Teſtimony which had wrought upon him. The Queen was not pleaſed with this Change, though the Duke did not yet own to her, that He had altered his Reſolution. She was always very angry at the King's Coldneſs, who had been ſo far from that Averſion which She expected, that He found Excuſes for the Duke, and endeavoured to di- vert her Paſſions; and now preſſed the Diſcovery of the Truth by Sir Charles Berkley's Confeſſion, as a Thing that pleaſed him. They about her and who had moſt inflamed and provoked her to the ſharpeſt Reſentment, appeared more calm in their Diſcourſes, and either kept Silence, or ſpake to another Tune than They had done formerly, and wiſhed that the Buſineſs was well compoſed; all which mightily in- creaſed the Queen's Paſſion. And having come to know, that the Duke had made a Viſit at the Place She moſt abhorred, She brake into great Paſſion, and publickly declared, " That whenever that Woman " ſhould be brought into Whiteball by one Door, her " Majeſty would go out of it by another Door, and " never come into it again." And for ſeveral Days her Majeſty would not ſuffer the Duke to be in her Preſence; at leaſt, if He came with the King, She for- bore to ſpeak to him, or to take any Notice of him. Nor could They, who had uſed to have moſt Credit with her, ſpeak to her with any Acceptation; though They were all weary of the Diſtances They had kept, and diſcerned well enough where the Matter muſt end. And many deſired to find ſome Expedient, how the Work might be facilitated, by ſome Application and Addreſs from the Chancellor to the Queen: But He abſolutely refuſed to make the leaſt Advance to- wards it, or to contribute to her Indignation by putting himſelf into her Majeſty's Preſence. He declared, " That the Queen had great Reaſon for the Paſſion " She expreſſed for the Indignity that had been done " to her, and which He would never endeavour to " excuſe; and that as far as his low Quality was ca- " pable of receiving an Injury from ſo great a Prince, " He had himſelf to complain of a Tranſgreſſion, " that exceeded all Juſtice, divine and human."

The Queen highly offend- ed at this Change in the Duke.

THE Queen had made this Journey out of France into England much ſooner than She intended, and only upon this Occaſion, to prevent a Miſchief She had great Reaſon to deprecate. And ſo, upon her Arri- val, She had declared, " That She would ſtay a very " ſhort Time, being obliged to return into France for " her Health, and to uſe the Waters of Bourbon, " which had already done her much Good, that the " enſuing Seaſon would with God's Bleſſing make " perfect." And the Time was now come, that Or- ders were ſent for the Ships to attend her Embarkation at Portſmouth; and the Day was appointed, for the beginning her Journey from Whiteball: So that the Duke's Affair, which He now took to Heart, was (as every Body thought) to be left in the State it was, at leaſt under the Renunciation and Interdiction of a Mother. When on a ſudden, of which Nobody then knew the Reaſon, her Majeſty's Countenance and Diſ- courſe was changed; She treated the Duke with her uſual Kindneſs, and confeſſed to him, " that the Bu- " ſineſs that had offended her ſo much She perceived " was proceeded ſo far, that no Remedy could be ap- " plied to it; and therefore that She would trouble " herſelf no farther in it, but pray to God to bleſs " him, and that He might be happy:" So that the Duke had now Nothing to wiſh, but that the Queen would be reconciled to his Wife, who remained ſtill at her Father's, where the King had viſited her often; to which the Queen was not averſe, and ſpake graci- ouſly of the Chancellor, and ſaid, " She would be " good Friends with him." But Both theſe required ſome Formalities; and They who had behaved them- ſelves the moſt diſobligingly, expected to be compre- hended in any Atonement that ſhould be made. And it was exceedingly laboured, that the Chancellor would make the firſt Approach, by viſiting the Earl of St. Albans; which He abſolutely refuſed to do: And very well acquainted with the Arts of that Court, whereof Diſſimulation was the Soul, did not believe that thoſe Changes, for which He ſaw no reaſonable Motive, could be real; until Abbot Mountague (who had ſo far complied with the Faction of that Court, as not to converſe with an Enemy) viſited him with all Openneſs, and told him, " That this Change in the Queen " had proceeded from a Letter She had newly receiv- " ed from the Cardinal, in which He had plainly told " her, that She would not receive a good Welcome in " France, if She left her Sons in her Diſpleaſure, and pro- " feſſed an Animoſity againſt thoſe Miniſters, who were " moſt truſted by the King. He extolled the Services done " by the Chancellor, and adviſed her to comply with what " could not be avoided, and to be perfectly reconciled to her " Children, and to thoſe who were nearly related to them " or were intruſted by them: And that He did this in " ſo powerful a Style, and with ſuch powerful Reaſons, " that her Majeſty's Paſſions were totally ſubdued. " And this," He ſaid, " Was the Reaſon of the ſud- " den Change, that every Body had obſerved; and " therefore that He ought to believe the Sincerity of " it, and to perform that Part which might be ex- " pected from him, in Compliance to the Queen's In- " clinations to have a good intelligence with him."

The Cauſe of this Change in the Queen.

The Chancellor had never looked upon the Abbot as his Enemy, and gave Credit to all He ſaid, though He did little underſtand from what Fountain that Good-Will of the Cardinal had proceeded, who had never been propitious to him. He made all thoſe Profeſſions of Duty to the Queen that became him, and " How happy He ſhould think himſelf in her " Protection, which He had Need of, and did with " all Humility implore: and that He would gladly " caſt himſelf at her Majeſty's Feet, when She would " vouchſafe to admit it." But for the adjuſting this, there was to be more Formality; for it was neceſſary that the Earl of St. Albans (between whom and the Chancellor there had never been any Friendſhip) ſhould have ſome Part in this Compoſition, and do many good Offices towards it, which were to precede the final Concluſion. The Duke had brought Sir Charles Berkley to the Dutcheſs, at whoſe Feet He had caſt Himſelf, with all the Acknowledgment and Penitence He could expreſs; and She, according to the Command of the Duke, accepted his Submiſſion, and promiſed to forget the Offence. He came likewiſe to the Chancellor with thoſe Profeſſions which He could eaſily make: and the other was obliged to receive him civilly. And then his Uncle, the Lord Berkley, waited upon the Dutcheſs; and afterwards viſited her Father, like a Man (which He could not avoid) who had done very much towards the bringing ſo difficult a Matter to ſo good an End, and expected Thanks from all; having that Talent in ſome Perfection, that after He had croſſed and puzzled any Buſineſs as much as was in his Power, He would be thought the only Man, who had untied all Knots, and made the Way ſmooth, and removed all Obſtructions.

The King and Duke greatly pleaſed with this Change in the Queen.

The Satisfaction the King and the Duke had in this Diſpoſition of the Queen, was viſible to all Men. And They Both thought the Chancellor too reſerved in contributing his Part towards, or in meeting, the Queen's Favour, which He could not but diſcern was approaching towards him; and that He did not entertain any Diſcourſes, which had been by many entered upon to him upon that Subject, with that Chearfulneſs and Serenity of Mind, that might juſtly be expected. And of this the Duke made an Obſervation, and a Kind of Complaint, to the King, who thereupon came one Day to the Chancellor's Houſe; and being alone with him, his Majeſty told him many Particulars which had paſſed between him and the Queen, and the good Humour her Majeſty was in: " That the next Day the Earl of St. Albans would viſit " him, and offer him his Service in accompanying " him to the Queen, which He conjured him to re- " ceive with all Civility, and Expreſſions of the Joy " He took in it; in which," He told him, " He " was obſerved to be too ſullen, and that when all " other Mens Minds appeared to be chearful, his " alone appeared to be more cloudy than it had been, " when that Affair ſeemed moſt deſperate; which was " the more taken Notice of, becauſe it was not natu- " ral to him."

The Chancellor anſwered, " that He did not know, " that He had failed in any Thing, that in good Man- " ners or Decency could be required from him: But " He confeſſed, that lately his Thoughts were more " perplexed, and troubleſome to himſelf, than they " had ever been before; and therefore it was no Won- " der, if his Looks were not the ſame they had uſed " to be. That though He had been ſurpriſed to A- " mazement, upon the firſt Notice of that Buſineſs; " yet He had been ſhortly able to recollect himſelf, " and, upon the Teſtimony of his own Conſcience, " to compoſe his Mind and Spirits, and without any " Reluctancy to abandon any Thought of his Daugh- " ter, and to leave her to that Miſery She had de- " ſerved and brought upon herſelf. Nor did the Vi- " ciſſitudes which occurred after in that Tranſaction, " or the Diſpleaſure and Menaces of the Duke, make " any other Impreſſion upon him, than to know how " unable He was to enter into any Conteſt in that Mat- " ter (which in all Reſpects was too difficult and ſu- " periour to his Underſtanding and Faculties,) and to " leave it entirely to the Direction and Diſpoſal of " God Almighty: And in this Acquieſcence He had " enjoyed a Repoſe of much Tranquillity of Mind, " being prepared to undergo any Misfortune that " might befall him from thence. But that now He " was awakened by other Thoughts and Reflections, " which He could leſs range and govern. He ſaw " thoſe Difficulties removed, which He had thought " inſuperable; that his own Condition muſt be thought " exalted above what He thought poſſible; and that " He was far leſs able to bear the Envy that was un- " avoidable, than the Indignation and Contempt, that " alone had threatened him. That his Daughter was " now received in the Royal Family, the Wife of the " King's only Brother and the Heir Apparent of the " Crown, whilſt his Majeſty himſelf remained unmar- " ried. The great Truſt his Majeſty repoſed in him, " infinitely above and contrary to his Deſire, was in " itſelf liable to Envy; and how unſupportable that " Envy muſt be, upon this new Relation, He could " not but foreſee; together with the Jealouſies, which " artificial Men would be able to inſinuate into his " Majeſty, even when They ſeemed to have all poſſi- " ble Confidence in the Integrity of the Chancellor, " and when They extolled him moſt; and that how " firm and conſtant ſoever his Majeſty's Grace and " Favour was to him at preſent (of which He had " lately given ſuch lively Teſtimony,) and how re- " ſolved ſoever He was to continue it, his Majeſty " himſelf could not know how far ſome Jealouſies, " cunningly ſuggeſted by ſome Men, might by De- " grees be entertained by him. And therefore that, " upon all the Revolvings He had with himſelf, He " could not think of any Thing, that could contri- " bute equally to his Majeſty's Service and his Quiet, " and to the Happineſs and Security of himſelf, as for " him to retire from the active Station He was in, to " an abſolute Solitude and viſible Inactivity in all Mat- " ters relating to the State: And which He thought " could not be ſo well, under any Retirement into " the Country or any Part of the Kingdom, as by " his leaving the Kingdom, and fixing himſelf in " ſome Place beyond the Seas remote from any Court." And having ſaid all this, or Words to the ſame Effect, He fell on his Knees; and with all poſſible Earneſtneſs deſired the King, " that He would conſent to his " Retirement as a Thing moſt neceſſary for his Ser- " vice, and give his Paſs to go and reſide in any ſuch " Place, beyond the Seas, as his Majeſty would make " Choice of."

The King heard him patiently, yet with Evidence enough that He was not pleaſed with what He ſaid; and when He kneeled, took him up with ſome Paſſion; " He did not expect this from him, and that " He

" He had ſo little Kindneſs for him, as to leave him " in a Time, when He could not but know that He " was very neceſſary for his Service. That He had " Reaſon to be very well aſſured, that it could never " be in any Man's Power, to leſſen his Kindneſs to- " wards him; and if any ſhould preſume to attempt " it, They would find Cauſe to repent their Preſump- " tion." He ſaid, "there were many Reaſons, why " He could never have deſigned or adviſed his Bro- " ther to this Marriage; yet ſince it was paſt and all " Things ſo well reconciled, He would not deny that " He was glad of it, and promiſed himſelf much Be- " nefit from it." He told him, " his Daughter was " a Woman of a great Wit and excellent Parts, and " would have a great Power with his Brother; and " that He knew that She had an entire Obedience for " him, her Father, who He knew would always give " her good Counſel, by which," He ſaid, " He was " confident, that naughty People which had too much " Credit with his Brother, and which had ſo often " miſled him, would be no more able to corrupt him; " but that She would prevent all ill and unreaſonable " Attempts: And therefore He again confeſſed that " He was glad of it;" and ſo concluded with many gracious Expreſſions, and conjured the Chancellor, " never more to think of thoſe unreaſonable Things, " but to attend and proſecute his Buſineſs with his " uſual Alacrity, ſince his Kindneſs could never fail " him."

THE next Morning, which was of the laſt Day that the Queen was to ſtay, the Earl of St. Albans viſited the Chancellor with all thoſe Compliments, Profeſſions and Proteſtations, which were natural, and which He did really believe every Body elſe thought to be very ſincere; for He had that Kindneſs for him- ſelf, that He thought every Body did believe him. He expreſſed " a wonderful Joy, that the Queen " would now leave the Court united, and all the " King's Affairs in a hopeful Condition, in which the " Queen confeſſed that the Chancellor's Counſels had " been very proſperous, and that She was reſolved to " part with great and a ſincere Kindneſs towards him; " and that He had Authority from her to aſſure him " ſo much, which She would do herſelf when She ſaw " him:" And ſo offered " to go with him to her Ma- " jeſty, at ſuch an Hour in the Afternoon as She " ſhould appoint." The other made ſuch Returns to all the Particulars as were fit, and " that He would " be ready to attend the Queen, at the Time She " ſhould pleaſe to aſſign:" And in the Afternoon the Earl of St. Albans came again to him; and They went together to Whiteball, where They found the Queen in her Bedchamber, where many Ladies were preſent, who came then to take their Leave of her Majeſty, before She began her Journey.

The Queen reconciled to the Dutcheſs of York.

THE Duke of York had before preſented his Wife to his Mother, who received her without the leaſt Shew of Regret, or rather with the ſame Grace as if She had liked it from the Beginning, and made her ſit down by her. When the Chancellor came in, the Queen roſe from her Chair, and received him with a Countenance very ſerene. The Ladies, and others who were near, withdrawing, her Majeſty told him, " that He could not wonder, much leſs take it ill, " that She had been much offended with the Duke, " and had no Inclination to give her Conſent to his " Marriage; and if She had, in the Paſſion that could " not be condemned in her, ſpake any Thing of him " that He had taken ill, He ought to impute it to " the Provocation She had received, though not from " him. She was now informed by the King, and " well aſſured, that He had no Hand in contriving " that Friendſhip, but was offended with that Paſſion " that really was worthy of him. That She could " not but confeſs, that his Fidelity to the King her " Huſband was very eminent, and that He had ſerved " the King her Son with equal Fidelity and extraor- " dinary Succeſs. And therefore as She had received " his Daughter as her Daughter, and heartily forgave " the Duke and her, and was reſolved ever after to " live with all the Affection of a Mother towards " them; ſo She reſolved to make a Friendſhip with And to the Chancellor. " him, and hereafter to expect all the Offices from " him, which her Kindneſs ſhould deſerve." And when the Chancellor had made all thoſe Acknowledg- ments which He ought to do, and commended her Wiſdom and Indignation in a Buſineſs, " in which " She could not ſhew too much Anger and Averſion, " and had too much forgotten her own Honour and " Dignity if She had been leſs offended," and magni- fied her Mercy and Generoſity " in departing ſo ſoon " from her neceſſary Severity, and pardoning a Crime " in itſelf ſo unpardonable;" He made thoſe Profeſſi- ons of Duty to her which were due to her, and " that " He ſhould always depend upon her Protection as " his moſt gracious Miſtreſs, and pay all Obedience " to her Commands." The Queen appeared well pleaſed, and ſaid " She ſhould remain very confident " of his Affection," and ſo diſcourſed of ſome Particu- lars; and then opening a Paper that She had in her Hand, She recommended the Diſpatch of ſome Things to him, which immediately related to her own Service and Intereſt, and then ſome Perſons, who had either ſome Suits to the King, or ſome Controverſies depend- ing in Chancery. And the Evening drawing on, and very many Ladies and others waiting without to kiſs her Majeſty's Hand, He thought it Time to take his Leave, and after having repeated ſome ſhort Profeſ- ſions of his Duty, He kiſſed her Majeſty's Hand: And from that Time there did never appear any Want of Kindneſs in the Queen towards him, whilſt He ſtood in no Need of it, nor until it might have done him Good.

THUS an Intrigue, that without Doubt had been entered into and induſtriouſly contrived by thoſe, who deſigned to affront and bring Diſhonour upon the Chancellor and his Family, was, by God's Pleaſure, turned to their Shame and Reproach, and to the In- creaſe of the Chancellor's Greatneſs and Proſperity. And ſo We return to the Time from whence this Di- greſſion led us, and ſhall take a particular View of all thoſe Accidents, which had an Influence upon the Quiet of the Kingdom, or which were the Cauſe of all the Chancellor's Misfortunes; which, though the Effect of them did not appear in many Years, were diſcerned by himſelf as coming and unavoidable, and foretold by him to his two Boſom-Friends, the Mar- quis of Ormond and the Earl of Southampton, who con- ſtantly adhered to him with all the Integrity of true Friendſhip.

The Chancel- lor not elated with this Marriage of his Daughter.

THE Greatneſs and Power of the Chancellor, by this Marriage of his Daughter with all the Circum- ſtances which had accompanied and attended it, ſeemed to all Men to have eſtabliſhed his Fortune, and that of his Family: I ſay, to all Men but to himſelf, who was not in the leaſt Degree exalted by it. He knew well upon how ſlippery Ground He ſtood, and how naturally averſe the Nation was from approving an ex- orbitant Power in any Subject. He ſaw that the King grew every Day more inclined to his Pleaſures, which involved him in Expence, and Company that did not deſire that He ſhould intend his Buſineſs or be conver- ſant with ſober Men. He knew well, that the Servants who were about the Duke were as much his Enemies as ever, and intended their own Profit only, by what Means ſoever, without conſidering his Honour; that They formed his Houſhold, Officers and Equipage, by the Model of France, and againſt all the Rules and Precedents of England for a Brother of the Crown; and every Day put into his Head, " that if He were " not ſupplied for all thoſe Expences, it was the Chan- " cellor's Fault, who could effect it if He would." Nor was He able to prevent thoſe Infuſions, nor the Effects of them, becauſe they were ſo artificially ad- miniſtered, as if their End was to raiſe a Confidence in him of the Chancellor, not to weaken it; though He knew well, that their Deſign was to create by Degrees in him a Jealouſy of his Power and Credit with the King, as if it eclipſed his. But this was only their own dark Purpoſes, which had been all blaſted, if they had been apparent; for the Duke did not only profeſs a very great Affection for the Chancellor, but gave all the Demonſtration of it that was poſſible, and deſired Nothing more, than that it ſhould be manifeſt to all Men, that He had an entire Truſt from the King in all his Affairs, and that He would employ all his Intereſt to ſupport that Truſt: Whilſt the Chancellor himſelf declined all the Occaſions, which were offered for the Advancement of his Fortune, and deſired wholly to be left to the Diſcharge of his Office, and that all other Officers might diligently look to their own Provinces, and be accountable for them; and deteſted Nothing more than that Title and Appellation, which He ſaw He ſhould not always be able to avoid, of principal Miniſter or Favourite, and which was never caſt on him by any Deſignation of the King, (who abhorred to be thought to be governed by any ſingle Perſon) but by his preferring his Pleaſures before his Buſineſs, and ſo ſending all Men to the Chancellor to receive Advice. And hereby the Secretaries of State, not finding a preſent Acceſs to him when the Occaſions preſſed, reſorted to the Chancellor, with whom his Majeſty ſpent moſt Time, to be reſolved by him; which Method exceedingly grieved him, and to which He endeavoured to apply a Remedy, by putting all Things in their proper Channel, and by prevailing with the King, when He ſhould be a little ſatiated with the Divertiſements He affected, to be vacant to ſo much of his Buſineſs, as could not be managed and conducted by any Body elſe.

Some Inſtances of his Diſintereſtedneſs.

AND here it may be ſeaſonable to inſert at large ſome Inſtances, which I promiſed before, and by which it will be manifeſt; how far the Chancellor was from an immoderate Appetite to be rich, and to raiſe his Fortune, which He propoſed only to do by the Perquiſites of his Office which were conſiderable at the firſt, and by ſuch Bounty of the King as might hereafter, without Noiſe or Scandal, be conferred on him in proper Seaſons and Occurrences; and that He was as far from affecting ſuch an unlimited Power as He was believed afterwards to be poſſeſſed of (and of which no Footſteps could ever be diſcovered in any of his Actions, or in any one Particular that was the Effect of ſuch Power,) or from deſiring any other Extent of Power, than was agreeable to the great Office He held, and which had been enjoyed by moſt of thoſe, who had been his Predeceſſors in that Truſt.

He refuſed a conſiderable Offer of Crown Lands.

THE King had not been many Weeks in England, when the Marquis of Ormond came to him with his uſual Friendſhip, and aſked him, "whether it would "not be now Time to think of making a Fortune, "that He might be able to leave to his Wife and "Children, if He ſhould die." And when He found that He was leſs ſenſible of what He propoſed than He expected, and that He only anſwered, "that He "knew not which Way to go about it;" the Marquis told him, "that He thought He could commend a "proper Suit for him to make to the King; and if "his Modeſty would not permit him to move the "King for himſelf, He would undertake to move it "for him, and was confident that the King would "willingly grant it:" And thereupon ſhewed him a Paper, which contained the King's juſt Title to ten thouſand Acres of Land in the Great Level of the Fens, which would be of a good yearly Value; or They, who were unjuſtly poſſeſſed of it, would be glad to purchaſe the King's Title with a very conſiderable Sum of Money. And, in the End, He frankly told him, "that He made this Overture to him with the "King's Approbation, who had been moved in it, "and thought at the firſt Sight, out of his own Good-"neſs, that it might be fit for him, and wiſhed the "Marquis to propoſe it to him."

WHEN the Chancellor had extolled the King's Generoſity, that He could, in ſo great Neceſſities of his own, think of diſpenſing ſo great a Bounty upon a poor Servant, who was already recompenſed beyond what He could be ever able to deſerve; He ſaid, that He "knew very well the King's Title to that Land, of "which He was in Poſſeſſion before the Rebellion "began, which the old and new Adventurers now "claimed by a new Contract, confirmed by an "Ordinance of Parliament, which could not deprive "the Crown of its Right; which all the Adventurers "(who for the greateſt Part were worthy Men) well "knew, and would for their own Sakes not diſpute, "ſince it would inevitably produce a new Inundation, "which all their Unity and Conſent in maintaining "the Banks would and could with Difficulty enough "but prevent. That He would adviſe his Majeſty "to give all the Countenance He could, to the carry-"ing on and perfecting that great Work, which was "of great Benefit as well as Honour to the Publick, "at the Charge of private Gentlemen, who had paid "dear for the Land They had recovered; but that "He would never adviſe him, to begin his Reign "with the Alienation of ſuch a Parcel of Land from "the Crown to any one particular Subject, who could "never bear the Envy of it. That his Majeſty ought "to reſerve that Revenue to himſelf, which was great "though leſs than it was generally reputed to be; at "leaſt, till the Value thereof ſhould be clearly under-"ſtood (and the detaining it in his own Hands for "ſome Time, would be the beſt Expedient towards "the finiſhing all the Banks, when the Seaſon ſhould "be fit, which elſe would be neglected by the Diſ-"cord among the Adventurers) and the King knew "what He gave. He muſt remember, that He had "two Brothers," (for the Duke of Glocester was yet alive) "who were without any Revenue, and towards "whom his Bounty was to be firſt extended; and that "this Land would be a good Ingredient towards an "Appanage for them Both. And that till They were "reaſonably provided for, no private Man in his Wits "would be the Object of any extraordinary Bounty "from the King, which would unavoidably make "him the Object of an univerſal Envy and Hatred. "That, for his own Part, He held by the King's "Favour the greateſt Office of the Kingdom in Place; "and though it was not near the Value it was eſteem-"ed to be, and that many other Offices were more "profitable, yet it was enough for him, and would "be a good Foundation to improve his Fortune: So "that," He ſaid, "He had made a Reſolution to "himſelf, which He thought He ſhould not alter, not "to make Haſte to be rich. That it was the principal "Part or Obligation of his Office, to diſſuade the King "from making any Grants of ſuch a Nature (except "where the Neceſſity or Convenience was very noto-"rious) and even to ſtop thoſe which ſhould be made "of that Kind, and not to ſuffer them to paſs the Seal, "till He had again waited upon the King, and in-"formed him of the evil Conſequence of thoſe Grants; "which Diſcharge of his Duty could not but raiſe him "many Enemies, who ſhould not have that Advan-"tage, to ſay that He obſtructed the King's Bounty "towards other Men, when He made it very profuſe "towards himſelf. And therefore, that He would "never receive any Crown Lands from the King's "Gift, and did not wiſh to have any other Honour "or any Advantage, but what his Office brought "him, till ſeven Years ſhould paſs; in which all the "Diſtractions of the Kingdom might be compoſed, "and the Neceſſities thereof ſo provided for, that the "King might be able, without hurting himſelf, to "exerciſe ſome Liberality towards his Servants who "had ſerved him well." How He ſeemed to part from this Reſolution in ſome Particulars afterwards, and why He did ſo, may be collected out of what hath been truly ſet down before.

WHEN

WHEN the Marquis of Ormond had given the King a large Account of the Conference between him and the Chancellor, and "that He abſolutely refuſed to "receive that Grant;" his Majeſty ſaid, "He was a "Fool for his Labour, and that He would be much "better in being envied than in being pitied." And though the Inheritance of thoſe Lands was afterwards given to the Duke, yet there were ſuch Eſtates granted for Years to many particular Perſons, moſt whereof had never merited by any Service, that Half the Value thereof never came to his Highneſs.

He declined being made Knight of the Garter.

As ſoon as the King and Duke returned from Portſmouth, where They had ſeen the Queen embarked for France, the King had appointed a Chapter, for the electing ſome Knights of the Garter into the Places vacant. Upon which the Duke deſired him "to no-"minate the Chancellor," which his Majeſty ſaid "He "would willingly do, but He knew not whether it "would be grateful to him; for He had refuſed ſo "many Things, that He knew not what He would "take;" and therefore wiſhed him "to take a Boat "to Worceſter-Houſe, and propoſe it to him, and He "would not go to the Chapter till his Highneſs re-"turned." The Duke told the Chancellor what had paſſed between the King and him, and "that He was "come only to know his Mind, and could not ima-"gine but that ſuch an Honour would pleaſe him." The Chancellor, after a Million of humble Acknowledgments of the Duke's Grace and the King's Condeſcenſion, ſaid, "that the Honour was indeed too "great by much for him to ſuſtain; that there were "very many worthy Men, who well remembered him "of their own Condition, when He firſt entered into "his Father's Service, and believed that He was ad-"vanced too much before them." He beſought his Highneſs, "that his Favours and Protection might "not expoſe him to Envy that would break him to "Pieces." He aſked "what Knights the King "meant to make;" the Duke named them, all Perſons very eminent: The Chancellor ſaid, "no Man "could except againſt the King's Choice; many would "juſtly, if He were added to the Number." He deſired his Highneſs "to put the King in Mind of the Earl "of Lindſey, Lord High Chamberlain of England," (with whom He was known to have no Friendſhip, on the contrary, that there had been Diſguſts between them in the laſt King's Time), "that his Father had "loſt his Life with the Garter about his Neck, when "this Gentleman his Son, endeavouring to relieve "him, was taken Priſoner; that He had ſerved the "King to the End of the War with Courage and Fi-"delity, being an excellent Officer: For all which, the "King his Father had admitted him a Gentleman of "his Bedchamber, which Office He was now without: "And not to have the Garter now upon his Majeſty's "Return, would in all Mens Eyes look like a Degra-"dation, and an Inſtance of his Majeſty's Diſeſteem; "eſpecially if the Chancellor ſhould ſupply the Place, "who was not thought his Friend:" And, upon the whole Matter, entreated the Duke "to reſerve his "Favour towards him for ſome other Occaſion, and "excuſe him to the King for the declining this Ho-"nour, which He could not ſupport." The Duke replied with an offended Countenance, "that He ſaw "He would not accept any Honour from the King, "that proceeded by his Mediation;" and ſo left him in apparent Diſpleaſure. However, at that Chapter the Earl of Lindſey was created Knight of the Garter, with the reſt; and coming afterwards to hear by what Chance it was, He ever lived with great Civility towards the Chancellor to his Death.

AND when the Chancellor afterwards complained to his Majeſty "of his Want of Care of him, in his "ſo eaſily gratifying his Brother in a Particular that "would be of ſo much Prejudice to him," and ſo enlarged upon the Subject, and put his Majeſty in Mind of Solomon's Interrogation, "who can ſtand againſt Envy?" the King ſaid no more, than "that He did really believe when He ſent his Brother, that He would "refuſe it;" and added, "I tell you, Chancellor, that "You are too ſtrict and apprehenſive in thoſe Things, "and truſt me, it is better to be envied than pitied." The Duke did not diſſemble his Reſentment, and told his Wife, "that He took it very ill; that He deſired "that the World might take Notice of his Friendſhip "to her Father, and that, after former Unkindneſs, "He was heartily reconciled to him; but that her "Father cared not to have that believed, nor would "have it believed that his Intereſt in the King was "not enough, to have no Need of good Offices from "the Duke:" Which Diſcourſe He uſed likewiſe to the Marquis of Ormond and others, who He thought would inform the Chancellor of it. And the Dutcheſs was much troubled at it, and took it unkindly of her Father, who thought himſelf obliged to wait upon his Royal Highneſs, and to vindicate himſelf from that Folly He was charged with; in which He proteſted to him, "that He ſo abſolutely and entirely "depended upon his Protection, that He would never "receive any Favour from the King, but by his Me-"diation and Interpoſition:" To which the Duke anſwered, "that He ſhould ſee whether He would have "that Deference to him ſhortly."

He refuſed to be made an Earl.

AND it was not long before the Day for the Coronation was appointed, when the King had appointed to make ſome Barons, and to raiſe ſome who were Barons to higher Degrees of Honour; moſt of whom were Men not very grateful, becauſe They had been faulty, though They had afterwards redeemed what was paſt, by having performed very ſignal Services to his Majeſty, and were able to do him more: Upon which the King had reſolved to confer thoſe Honours upon them, and in Truth had promiſed it to them, or to ſome of their Friends, before He came from beyond the Seas. At this Time the Duke came to the Chancellor, and ſaid, "He ſhould now diſcover whether "He would be as good as his Word;" and ſo gave him a Paper, which was a Warrant under the King's Sign Manual to the Attorney General, to prepare a Grant, by which the Chancellor ſhould be created an Earl. To which, upon the Reading, He began to make Objections; when the Duke ſaid, "my Lord, "I have thought fit to give you this Earneſt of my "Friendſhip, You may reject it if You think fit," and departed. And the Chancellor, upon Recollection, and Conference with his two Friends, the Treaſurer and the Marquis of Ormond, found He could not prudently refuſe it. And ſo, the Day or two before the Coronation, He was with the others created an Earl by the King in the Banqueting-Houſe; and, in the very Minute of his Creation, had an Earneſt of the Envy that would enſue, in the Murmurs of ſome, who were ancienter Barons, at the Precedence given to him before them, of which He was totally ignorant, it being reſolved by the King upon the Place, and the View of the Precedents of all Times, when any Officers of State were created with others. Yet one of the Lords concerned ſwore in the Ears of two or three of his Friends, at the ſame Time, "that He "would be revenged for that Affront;" which related not to the Chancellor's Precedence, for the other was no Baron, but for the Precedence given to another, whom He thought his Inferiour, and imputed the Partiality to his Power, who had not the leaſt Hand in it, nor knew it before it was determined. Yet the other was as good as his Word, and took the very firſt Opportunity that was offered for his Revenge.

But at length unwillingly conſented.

I WILL add one Inſtance more, ſufficient, if the other were away, to convince all Men, how far He was from being tranſported with that Ambition, of which He was accuſed, and for which He was condemned. After the firm Conjunction in the Royal Family was notorious, and all the neighbour Princes had ſent their ſplendid Embaſſies of Congratulation to the King, and deſired to renew all Treaties with this Crown, and the Parliament proceeded, how ſlowly ſoever, with great great Duty and Reverence towards the King; the Marquis of Ormond (whom the King had by this Time made Duke of Ormond) came one Day to him, and being in private, ſaid, "He came to ſpeak to "him of himſelf, and to let him know not only his "own Opinion, but the Opinion of his beſt Friends, "with whom He had often conferred upon the Argu- "ment: And that They all wondered, that He ſo "much affected the Poſt He was in, as to continue "in the Office of Chancellor, which took up moſt of "his Time, eſpecially all the Mornings, in Buſineſs "that many other Men could diſcharge as well as "He. Whereas He ought to leave that to ſuch a "Man as He thought fit for it, and to betake himſelf "to that Province, which Nobody knew ſo well how "to diſcharge. That the Credit He had with the "King was known to all Men, and that He did in "Truth remit that Province to him, which He would "not own, and could not diſcharge by the Multiplicity "of the Buſineſs of his Office, which was not of that "Moment. That the King every Day took leſs Care "of his Affairs, and affected thoſe Pleaſures moſt, "which made him averſe from the other. That He "ſpent moſt of his Time with confident young Men, "who abhorred all Diſcourſe that was ſerious, and, "in the Liberty They aſſumed in Drollery and Rail- "lery, preſerved no Reverence towards God or Man, "but laughed at all ſober Men, and even at Religion "itſelf; and that the Cuſtom of this Licenſe, that "did yet only make the King merry for the preſent, "by Degrees would grow acceptable to him; and "that theſe Men would by Degrees have the Pre- "ſumption (which yet They had not, nor would He "in Truth then ſuffer it) to enter into his Buſineſs, "and by adminiſtering to thoſe Exceſſes, to which "his Nature and Conſtitution moſt inclined him, "would not only powerfully foment thoſe Inclinations, "but intermeddle and obſtruct his moſt weighty "Counſels. That, for the Prevention of all this "Miſchief, and the preſerving the excellent Nature "and Underſtanding of the King from being cor- "rupted by ſuch lewd Inſtruments, who had only a "ſcurrilous Kind of Wit to procure Laughter, but "had no Senſe of Religion, or Reverence for the "Laws; there was no Remedy in View, but his giving "up his Office, and betaking himſelf wholly to wait "upon the Perſon of the King, and to be with him in "thoſe Seaſons, when that looſe People would either "abſtain from coming, or, if They were preſent, "would not have the Confidence to ſay or do thoſe "Things which They had been accuſtomed to do be- "fore the King. By this Means, He would find fre- "quent Opportunities to inform the King of the true "State of his Affairs, and the Danger He incurred, "by not thoroughly underſtanding them, and by "being thought to be negligent in the Duties of Re- "ligion and ſettling the Diſtractions in the Church; "at leaſt, He would do ſome Good in all theſe Par- "ticulars, or keep the Licenſe from ſpreading farther, "which in Time it would do, to the robbing him of "the Hearts of his People. That the King, from "the long Knowledge of his Fidelity, and the Eſteem "He had of his Virtue, received any Advertiſements "and Animadverſions, and even ſuffered Reprehen- "ſions, from him, better than from any other Man; "therefore He would be able to do much Good, and "to deſerve more than ever He had done from the "whole Kingdom. And He did verily believe, that "this would be acceptable to the King himſelf, who "knew He could not enough attend to the many "Things, which, being left undone, muſt much "diſorder the whole Machine of his Government, "or, being ill done, would in Time diſſolve it; and "that his Majeſty would aſſign ſuch a liberal Allow- "ance for this Service, that He ſhould find himſelf "well rewarded, and a great Gainer by accepting it "and putting off his Office."

He was ſtrongly urged to reſign his Office of Chancellor.

And to aſſume the Character of Prime Miniſter.

Which would be more beneficial to him.

He concluded, "That was the Deſire and Advice "of all his Friends, and that the Duke was ſo far of "the ſame Judgment, that He reſolved to be very "inſtant with him upon it, and only wiſhed, that He "ſhould firſt break the Matter to him, that He might "not be ſurpriſed when his Royal Highneſs entered "upon the Diſcourſe." And He added, "that this "Province muſt inevitably at laſt be committed to "ſome one Man, who probably would be without that "Affection to the King's Perſon, that Experience in "Affairs, and that Knowledge of the Laws and Con- "ſtitution of the Kingdom, as all Men knew to be "in the Chancellor."

When the Marquis had ended, with the Warmth of Friendſhip which was ſuperiour to any Temptation, and in which no Man ever excelled him, nor delivered what He had a Mind to ſay more clearly, or with a greater Weight of Words; the Chancellor ſaid, "that "He did not much wonder that many of his Friends, "who had not the Opportunity to know him enough, "and who might propoſe to themſelves ſome Benefit "from his unlimited Greatneſs, might in Truth out "of their Partiality to him, and by their not knowing "the King's Nature, believe, that his Warineſs and "Integrity, and his Knowledge of the Conſtitution of "the Government and the Nature of the People, "would conduct the King's Counſels in ſuch a Way, "as would lead beſt to his Power and Greatneſs, and "to the Good and Happineſs of the Nation, which "would be the only ſecure Support of his Power and "Authority. But that He, who knew both the King "and him ſo well, that no Man living knew either of "them ſo well, ſhould be of that Opinion He had "expreſſed, was Matter of Admiration and Surpriſal "to him." He appealed to him, "how often He had "heard him ſay to the King in France, Germany, and "Flanders, when They two took all the Pains They "could to fix the King's Mind to a lively Senſe of his "Condition; That He muſt not think now to recover his "three Kingdoms by the dead title of his Deſcent and Right, "which had been ſo notoriouſly baffled and diſhonoured, but "by the Reputation of his Virtue, Courage, Piety, and "Induſtry; that all theſe Virtues muſt center in himſelf, "for that his Fate depended upon his Perſon; and that the Engliſh Nation would ſooner ſubmit to the Government of Cromwell, than to any other Subject who ſhould be "thought to govern the King. That England would not "bear a Favourite, nor any one Man, who ſhould out of "his Ambition engroſs to himſelf the Diſpoſal of the pub- "lick Affairs."

He ſaid, "He was more now of the ſame Mind, "and was confident that no honeſt Man, of a compe- "tent Underſtanding, would undertake that Province; "and that for his own Part, if a Gallows were erected, "and if He had only the Choice to be hanged or to "execute that Office, He would rather ſubmit to the "firſt than the laſt. In the one, He ſhould end his "Life with the Reputation of an honeſt Man; in the "other, He ſhould die with Diſgrace and Infamy, "let his Innocence be what it would." He put the Marquis in Mind, "how far the King was from ob- "ſerving the Rules He had preſcribed to himſelf be- "fore He came from beyond the Seas, and was ſo to- "tally unbent from his Buſineſs and addicted to Plea- "ſures, that the People generally began to take No- "tice of it; that there was little Care taken to regu- "late Expences, even when He was abſolutely with- "out Supply; that He would on a ſudden be over- "whelmed with ſuch Debts, as would diſquiet him, "and diſhonour his Counſels;" of which the Lord Treaſurer was ſo ſenſible, that He was already weary of his Staff, before it had been in his Hands three Months. "That the Confidence the King had in him, "beſides the Aſſurance He had of his Integrity and "Induſtry, proceeded more from his Averſion to be "troubled with the Intricacies of his Affairs, than "from any Violence of Affection, which was not ſo "fixed in his Nature as to be like to tranſport him to "any

But this He abſolutely refuſed.

" any one Perſon: And that as He could not, in ſo " ſhort a Time, be acquainted with many Men, " whom in his Judgment He could prefer before the " Chancellor for the Managery of his Buſineſs, who " had been ſo long acquainted with it; ſo He would, " in a ſhort Time, be acquainted with many, who " would by finding Fault with all that was done be " thought much wiſer Men; it being one of his Ma- " jeſty's greateſt Infirmities, that He was apt to think " too well of Men at the firſt or ſecond Sight."

HE ſaid, " whilſt He kept the Office He had " (which could better bear the Envy of the Bulk of " the Affairs, than any other Qualification could) and " that it ſupported him in the Execution of it, the " King felt not the Burden of it; becauſe little of the " Profit of it proceeded out of his own Purſe, and, if " He were dead to morrow, the Place ſtill muſt be " conferred upon another. Whereas, if He gave over " that Adminiſtration, and had Nothing to rely upon " for the Support of himſelf and Family, but an ex- " traordinary Penſion out of the Exchequer, under no " other Title or Pretence but of being Firſt Miniſter " (a Title ſo newly tranſlated out of French into Engliſh, " that it was not enough underſtood to be liked, and " every Man would deteſt it for the Burden it was " attended with); the King himſelf, who was not by " Nature immoderately inclined to give, would be " quickly weary of ſo chargeable an Officer, and be " very willing to be freed from the Reproach of being " governed by any (the very Suſpicion whereof He " doth exceedingly abhor) at the Price and Charge of " the Man, who had been raiſed by him to that in- " convenient Height above other Men. That whilſt " He had that Seal, He could have Admiſſion to his " Majeſty as often as He deſired, becauſe it was more " Eaſe to receive an Account of his Buſineſs from him, " than to be preſent at the whole Debate of it; and " He well knew, the Chancellor had too much Buſineſs " to deſire Audiences from his Majeſty without neceſ- " ſary Reaſon. But if the Office were in another " Hand, and He ſhould haunt his Preſence with the " ſame Importunity as a Spy upon his Pleaſures, and " a Diſturber of the Jollities of his Meetings; his " Majeſty would quickly be nauſeated with his Com- " pany, which for the preſent He liked in ſome Sea- " ſons; and They, who for the preſent had ſubmitted to " ſome Conſtraint by the Gravity of his Countenance, " would quickly diſcover that their Talents were more " acceptable, and by Degrees make him appear grie- " vous to his Majeſty, and ſoon after ridiculous. " That all his Hope was, that the King would ſhortly " find ſome Lady fit to be his Wife, which all honeſt " Men ought to perſuade him to, and that being mar- " ried, He made no Doubt, He would decline many " of thoſe Delights to which He was yet expoſed, and " which expoſed him too much; and till that Time " He could not think that his beſt Servants could en- " joy any pleaſant Lives. That He preſumed the " Parliament would, after They had raiſed Money " enough to diſband the Armies, and to pay off the " Seamen" (towards Both which ſomewhat was every Day done, and Both which amounted to an incredible and inſupportable Charge) " ſettle ſuch a Revenue " upon the Crown, as the King might conform his " Expence to; and that it ſhould not be in any Body's " Power, to make that Revenue be eſteemed by him " to be greater, than in Truth it would be. That " when theſe two Things ſhould be brought to paſs, " He did hope, that the King would take Pleaſure in " making himſelf Maſter of every Part of his Buſineſs, " and not charge any one Man with a greater Share of " it than He can diſcharge, or than will agree with his " own Dignity and Honour. In the mean Time," He beſought the Marquis, " that He would convert " the Duke of York and all other Perſons from that " Opinion, which could not but appear erroneous to " himſelf by the Reaſons He had heard; and that if " He could be brought to conſent to what had been " propoſed to him (and which rather than He would " do, He would ſuffer a thouſand Deaths), as it would " inevitably prove his own Ruin and Deſtruction, ſo " it would bring an irreparable Damage to the King." And therefore He conjured him, " to invite the King " by his own Example, and by aſſuming his own " Share of the Work," which for ſome Time He had declined ſince the Return into England; and by being " himſelf conſtantly with his Majeſty, to whom He " was acceptable at all Hours, He would obſtruct the " Operation of that ill Company, which neither knew " how to behave themſelves, nor could reaſonably " propoſe ſo much Benefit to themſelves, as by the " Propagation of their Follies and Villanies, and by " Degrees induce his Majeſty more proportionably to " mingle his Buſineſs with his Pleaſures, which He " could not yet totally abandon."

THE Marquis could not deny, but that many of the Reaſons alledged by the Chancellor were of that Weight as ought to prevail with him; and therefore forbore ever after to preſs him upon the ſame Particular. And the Duke of York ſhortly undertook a Conference with him upon the ſame Argument, upon which the other durſt not enlarge with the ſame Freedom as He had done to the Marquis; both becauſe his Eyes could not bear the Proſpect of ſo many Things at once, as likewiſe that He knew He communicated with ſome Perſons, who, whatever They pretended, had Nothing like good Affection for him: So that He rather pacified his Royal Highneſs upon that Subject, and diverted him from urging it, than ſatisfied him with his Grounds. And others who wiſhed well to him, and better to the Publick, acquieſced with his peremptory Reſolution, without believing that He reſolved well either for his own Particular, or the King's Affairs; and did always think that He might have prevented his own Fate, if He had at that Time ſubmitted to the Judgment of his beſt Friends; though himſelf remained ſo poſitive to the contrary, that He often ſaid, " that He would not " have redeemed himſelf by that Expedient, and that " He could never have borne that Fate with that Tran- " quillity of Mind, which God enabled him to do, if " He had paſſed to it through that Province."

Commiſſioners ſent to the King from Scotland and Ireland.

WHILST the general Affairs of England, by the long Debates in Parliament, remained thus unſettled, the King was no leſs troubled and perplexed how to compoſe his two other Kingdoms of Scotland and Ireland; from Both which there were ſeveral Perſons of the beſt Condition of either Kingdom ſent, with the Tender and Preſentation of their Allegiance to his Majeſty, and expected his immediate Direction to free them from the Diſtractions they were in; and by taking the Government upon himſelf into his own Hands, to be freed from thoſe extraordinary Commiſſions, under which they had been Both governed with a Rod of Iron by the late Powers; the ſhifting of which from one Faction to another had adminiſtered no Kind of Variety to them, but they had remained ſtill under the ſame full Extent of Tyranny.

The State of Scotland at that Time.

THE whole Frame of the ancient Government of Scotland had been ſo entirely confounded by Cromwell, and new modelled by the Laws and Cuſtoms of England, that is, thoſe Laws and Cuſtoms which the Common-wealth had eſtabliſhed; that He had hardly left Footſteps by which the old might be traced out again. The Power of the Nobility was ſo totally ſuppreſſed and extinguiſhed, that their Perſons found no more Reſpect or Diſtinction from the common People, than the Acceptation They found from Cromwell, and the Credit He gave them by ſome particular Truſt, drew to them. Their beloved Preſbytery was become a Term of Reproach, and ridiculous; the Pride and Activity of their Preachers ſubdued, and reduced to the loweſt Contempt; and the Standard of their Religion remitted to the ſole Order and Direction of their Commander in chief. All criminal Caſes (except where the General thought it more expedient to proceed ceed by martial Law) were tried and puniſhed before Judges ſent from England; and by the Laws of England; and Matters of civil Intereſt before itinerant Judges, who went twice a Year in Circuits through the Kingdom, and determined all Matters of Right by the Rules and Cuſtoms which were obſerved in England. They had Liberty to ſend a particular Number that was aſſigned to them to ſit in the Parliament of England, and to vote there with all Liberty; which They had done. And in Recompenſe thereof, all ſuch Monies were levied in Scotland, as were given by the Parliament of England, by which ſuch Contributions were raiſed, as were proportionable to the Expence, which the Army and Garriſons which ſubdued them put the Kingdom of England to. Nor was there any other Authority to raiſe Money in Scotland, but what was derived from the Parliament or General of England.

And all this prodigious Mutation and Transformation had been ſubmitted to with the ſame Reſignation and Obedience, as if the ſame had been tranſmitted by an uninterrupted Succeſſion from King Fergus: And it might well be a Queſtion, whether the Generality of the Nation was not better contented with it, than to return into the old Road of Subjection. But the King would not build according to Cromwell's Models, and had many Reaſons to continue Scotland within its own Limits and Bounds, and ſole Dependance upon himſelf, rather than unite it to England with ſo many Hazards and Dangers as would inevitably have accompanied it, under any Government leſs tyrannical than that of Cromwell. And the reſettling that Kingdom was to be done with much leſs Difficulty, than the other of Ireland, by Reaſon that all who appeared concerned in it or for it, as a Committee for that Kingdom, were united between themſelves, and did, or did pretend to deſire the ſame Things. They all appeared under the Protection and Recommendation of the General; and their Dependance was the more upon him, becauſe He ſtill commanded thoſe Garriſons and Forces in Scotland, which kept them to their Obedience. And He was the more willing to give them a Teſtimony of their Affection to the King, and that without their Help He could not have been able to have marched into England againſt Lambert, that They might ſpeak the more confidently, "that "They gave him that Aſſiſtance, becauſe They were "well aſſured that his Intention was to ſerve the King:" Whereas They did indeed give him only what They could not keep from him, nor did They know any of his Intentions, or himſelf at that Time intend any Thing for the King. But it is very true, They were all either Men who had merited beſt from the King, or had ſuffered moſt for him, or at leaſt had acted leaſt againſt him, and (which They looked upon as the moſt valuable Qualification) They were all, or pretended to be, the moſt implacable Enemies to the Marquis of Argyle, which was the Shibboleth by which the Affections of that whole Nation were beſt diſtinguiſhed.

Some Account of the Scotch Commiſſioners. Of the Earl of Selkirk.

The Chief of the Commiſſioners was the Lord Selkirk, a younger Son of the Marquis of Douglaſs, who had been known to the King in France, where He had been bred a Roman Catholick, which was the Religion of his Family, but had returned into Scotland after it had been ſubdued by Cromwell; and being a very handſome young Man, was eaſily converted from the Religion of his Father, in which He had been bred, to that of his elder Brother the Earl of Angus, that He might marry the Daughter and Heir of James Duke Hamilton, who from the Battle of Worceſter, where her Uncle Duke William was killed, had inherited the Title of Dutcheſs, with the fair Seat of Hamilton, and all the Lands which belonged to her Father. And her Huſband now, according to the Cuſtom of Scotland, aſſumed the ſame Title with her, and appeared in the Head of the Commiſſioners under the Style of Duke Hamilton, with the Merit of having never diſſerved the King, and with the Advantage of whatſoever his Wife could claim by the Death of her Father, which deſerved to wipe out the Memory of whatever had been done amiſs in his Life.

Of the Earl of Glencarne.

The Earl of Glencarne was another of the Commiſſioners, a Man very well born and bred, and of very good Parts. As He had rendered himſelf very acceptable to the King, during his being in Scotland, by his very good Behaviour towards him, ſo even after that fatal Blow at Worceſter He did not diſſemble his Affection to his Majeſty, but withdrawing himſelf into the Highlands, during the Time that Cromwell remained in Scotland, He ſent over an Expreſs to aſſure the King of his Fidelity, and that He would take the firſt Opportunity to ſerve him. And when upon his Deſire Middleton was deſigned to command there, He firſt retired into the Highlands, and drew a Body of Men together to receive him. He was a Man of Honour, and good Principles as well with Reference to the Church as to the State, which few others, even of thoſe which now appeared moſt devoted to the King, avowed to be; for the Preſbytery was yet their Idol. From the Time that He had received a Protection and Safeguard from General Monk, after there was little Hope of doing Good by Force, He lived quietly at his Houſe, and was more favoured by the General than any of thoſe who ſpoke moſt loudly againſt the King, and was moſt truſted by him when He was at Berwick upon his March into England; and was now preſented by him to the King, as a Man worthy of his Truſt in an eminent Poſt of that Kingdom.

Of the Earl of Lauther-dale.

With theſe there were others of leſs Name, but of good Affections and Abilities, who came together from Scotland as Commiſſioners; but They found others in London as well qualified to do their Country Service, and whoſe Names were wiſely inſerted in their Commiſſion by thoſe who aſſumed the Authority to ſend the other. The Earl of Lautherdale, who had been very eminent in contriving and carrying on the King's Service, when his Majeſty was crowned in Scotland, and thereby had wrought himſelf into a very particular Eſteem with the King, had marched with him into England, and behaved himſelf well at Worceſter, where He was taken Priſoner; had, beſides that Merit, the ſuffering an Impriſonment from that very Time with ſome Circumſtances of extreme Rigour, being a Man againſt whom Cromwell had always profeſſed a more than ordinary Animoſity. And though the Scene of his Impriſonment had been altered according to the Alteration of the Governments which ſucceeded, yet He never found himſelf in complete Liberty till the King was proclaimed by the Parliament, and then He thought it not neceſſary to repair into Scotland for Authority or Recommendation; but ſending his Advice thither to his Friends, He made Haſte to tranſport himſelf with the Parliament Commiſſioners to the Hague, where He was very well received by the King, and left nothing undone on his Part that might cultivate thoſe old Inclinations, being a Man of as much Addreſs and Inſinuation, in which that Nation excels, as was then amongſt them. He applied himſelf to thoſe who were moſt truſted by the King with a marvellous Importunity, and eſpecially to the Chancellor, with whom, as often as They had ever been together, He had had a perpetual War. He now magnified his Conſtancy with loud Elogiums, as well to his Face as behind his Back, remembered "many ſharp Expreſſions formerly uſed by the Chan-"cellor, which He confeſſed had then made him mad, "though upon Recollection afterwards He had found "them to be very reaſonable." He was very polite in all his Diſcourſes, called himſelf and his Nation "a thouſand Traitors and Rebels," and in his Diſcourſes frequently ſaid, "when I was a Traitor," or "when I was in Rebellion," and ſeemed not equally delighted with any Argument, as when He ſcornfully ſpake of the Covenant, upon which He brake a hundred Jeſts. In Sum, all his Diſcourſes were ſuch as pleased all the Company, who commonly believed all He said, and concurred with him. He renewed his old Acquaintance and Familiarity with Middleton by all the Protestations of Friendship, assured him "of "the unanimous Desire of Scotland to be under his "Command," and declared to the King, "that He "could not send any Man into Scotland, who would "be able to do him so much Service in the Place of "Commissioner as Middleton, and that it was in his "Majesty's Power to unite that whole Kingdom to "his Service as one Man." All which pleased the King well: So that, by the Time that the Commissioners appeared at London, upon some old Promise in Scotland, or new Inclination upon his long Sufferings, which He magnified enough, the King gave him the Signet, and declared him to be Secretary of State to that Kingdom; and at the same Time declared that Middleton should be his Commissioner; the Earl of Glencarne his Chancellor; the Earl of Rothes, who was likewise one of the Commissioners, and his Person very agreeable to the King, President of the Council; and conferred all other inferiour Offices upon Men most notable for their Affection to the old Government of Church and State.

Many of the great Offices of that Kingdom disposed of.

AND the first Proposition that the Commissioners made after their Meeting together, and before They entered upon Debate of the Publick, was, "that his "Majesty would add to the Council of Scotland, which "should reside near his Person, the Chancellor and "Treasurer of England, the General, the Marquis of "Ormond, and Secretary Nicholas, who should be al-"ways present when any Thing should be debated and "resolved concerning that Kingdom:" Which Desire, so different from any that had been in Times past, persuaded the King that their Intentions were very sincere. Whatever Appearance there was of Unity amongst them, for there was Nothing like Contradiction, there was a general Dislike by them all of the Power Lautherdale had with the King, who They knew pressed many Things without Communication with them, as He had prevailed that the Earl of Crawford Lindsey should continue in the Office He formerly had of being High Treasurer of that Kingdom, though He was known to be a Man incorrigible in his Zeal for the Presbytery, and all the Madnesses of Kirk, and not firm to other Principles upon which the Authority of the Crown must be established; so that They could not so much as consult in his Presence of many Particulars of the highest Moment and Importance to the publick Settlement. Yet his having behaved himself well towards the King, whilst He was in that Kingdom, and his having undergone great Persecution under Cromwell, and professing now all Obedience to his Majesty, prevailed that He should not be displaced upon his Majesty's first Entrance upon his Government, but that a new Occasion should be attended to, which was in View, and when the King resolved, without communicating his Purpose to Lautherdale, to confer that Office upon Middleton, when He should have proceeded the first Stage in his Commission; and of this his Resolution He was graciously pleased to inform him.

Of the Earl of Crawford Lindsey.

THE Marquis of Argyle (without mentioning of whom there can hardly be any Mention of Scotland) though He was not of this Fraternity, yet thought He could tell as fair a Story for himself as any of the rest, and contribute as much to the King's absolute Power in Scotland. And therefore He had no sooner unquestionable Notice of the King's being in London, but He made Haste thither with as much Confidence as the rest. But the Commissioners who were before him wrought so far with the King, that in the very Minute of his Arrival He was arrested by a Warrant under the King's Hand, and carried to the Tower, upon a Charge of High Treason.

The Marquis of Argyle sent to the Tower.

HE was a Man like Drances in Virgil,

Largus Opum, et Linguâ melior, sed frigida Bello Dextera, Consiliis habitus non futilis Auctor, Seditione potens.

His Character.

Without Doubt He was a Person of extraordinary Cunning, well bred, and though by the Ill-Placing of his Eyes, He did not appear with any great Advantage at first Sight, yet He reconciled even those who had Aversion to him very strangely by a little Conversation: Insomuch as after so many repeated Indignities (to say no worse) which He had put upon the late King, and when He had continued the same Affronts to the present King, by hindering the Scots from inviting him, and as long as was possible kept him from being received by them; when there was no Remedy, and that He was actually landed, no Man paid him so much Reverence and outward Respect, and gave so good an Example to all others, with what Veneration their King ought to be treated, as the Marquis of Argyle did, and in a very short Time made himself agreeable and acceptable to him. His Wit was pregnant, and his Humour gay and pleasant, except when He liked not the Company or the Argument. And though He never consented to any one Thing of Moment, which the King asked of him, and even in those Seasons in which He was used with most Rudeness by the Clergy, and with some Barbarity by his Son the Lord Lorne, whom He had made Captain of his Majesty's Guard, to guard him from his Friends and from all who He desired should have Access to him; the Marquis still had that Address, that He persuaded him all was for the best. When the other Faction prevailed, in which there were likewise crafty Managers, and that his Counsels were commonly rejected, He carried himself so, that They who hated him most were willing to compound with him, and that his Majesty should not withdraw his Countenance from him. But He continued in all his Charges, and had a very great Party in that Parliament that was most devoted to serve the King; so that his Majesty was often put to desire his Help to compass what He desired. He did heartily oppose the King's marching with his Army into England, the ill Success whereof made many Men believe afterwards, that He had more Reasons for the Counsels He gave, than They had who were of another Opinion. And the King was so far from thinking him his Enemy, that when it was privately proposed to him by those He trusted most, that He might be secured from doing Hurt when the King was marched into England, since He was so much against it, his Majesty would by no Means consent to it, but parted with him very graciously, as with One He expected good Service from. All which the Commissioners well remembered, and were very unwilling that He should be again admitted into his Presence, to make his own Excuses for any Thing He could be charged with. And his Behaviour afterwards, and the good Correspondence He had kept with Cromwell, but especially some confident Averments of some particular Words or Actions which related to the Murder of his Father, prevailed with his Majesty not to speak with him, which He laboured by many Addresses, in Petitions to the King and Letters to some of those who were trusted by him, which were often presented by his Wife and his Son, and in which He only desired "to speak with the King or with some of "those Lords," pretending "that He should inform "and communicate somewhat that would highly con-"cern his Majesty's Service." But the King not vouchsafing to admit him to his Presence, the English Lords had no Mind to have any Conference with a Man who had so dark a Character, or to meddle in an Affair that must be examined and judged by the Laws of Scotland: And so it was resolved, that the Marquis of Argyle should be sent by Sea into Scotland, to be tried before the Parliament there when the Commissioner should arrive, who was dispatched thither with the reſt of the Lords, as ſoon as the Seals and other Badges of their ſeveral Offices could be prepared. And what afterwards became of the Marquis is known to all Men; as it grew quickly to appear, that what Bitterneſs ſoever the Earl of Lautherdale had expreſſed towards him in his general Diſcourſes, He had in Truth a great Mind to have preſerved him, and ſo kept ſuch a Pillar of Preſbytery againſt a good Occaſion, which was not then ſuſpected by the reſt of the Commiſſioners.

THE Lords of the Engliſh Council, who were appointed to ſit with the Scots, met with them to conſult upon the Inſtructions which were to be given to the King's Commiſſioner, who was now created Earl of Middleton. The Scots ſeemed all reſolute and impatient to vindicate their Country from the Infamy of delivering up the laſt King (for all Things relating to the former Rebellion had been put in Oblivion by his late Majeſty's Act of Indemnity at his laſt being in Scotland) and ſtrictly to examine who of that Nation had contributed to his Murder, of which They were confident Argyle would be found very guilty. Middleton was very earneſt, "that He might, for the Humiliation of the "Preachers, and to prevent any unruly Proceeding of "theirs in their Aſſembly, begin with reſcinding the "Act of the Covenant, and all other Acts which had "invaded the King's Power Eccleſiaſtical, and then "proceed to the erecting of Biſhops in that Kingdom, "according to the ancient Inſtitution:" And with him Glencarne, Rothes, and all the reſt (Lautherdale only excepted) concurred; and averred, "that it would be "very eaſily brought to paſs, becauſe the tyrannical "Proceedings of the Aſſemblies and their ſeveral "Preſbyteries had ſo far incenſed Perſons of all De"grees, that not only the Nobility, Gentry, and com"mon People would be glad to be freed from them, "but that the moſt learned and beſt Part of the Mi"niſters deſired the ſame, and to be ſubject again to "the Biſhops; and that there would be enough found "of the Scots Clergy, very worthy and very willing to "ſupply thoſe Charges."

The Earl of Middleton propoſes the Reeſtabliſhment of Epiſcopacy in Scotland.

In which all the Commiſſioners concur except Lautherdale.

LAUTHERDALE, with a Paſſion ſuperiour to the reſt, inveighed againſt the Covenant, called "it a wicked, "traiterous Combination of Rebels againſt their law"ful Sovereign, and expreſsly againſt the Laws of their "own Country; proteſted his own hearty Repentance "for the Part He had acted in the Promotion thereof, "and that He was confident that God, who was "Witneſs of his Repentance, had forgiven him that "foul Sin: That no Man there had a greater Reve"rence for the Government by Biſhops than He him"ſelf had; and that He was moſt confident, that the "Kingdom of Scotland could never be happy in itſelf, "nor ever be reduced to a perfect Submiſſion and "Obedience to the King, till the Epiſcopal Govern"ment was again eſtabliſhed there. The Scruple that "only remained with him, and which made him differ "with his Brethren, was, of the Manner how it "ſhould be attempted, and of the Time when it "ſhould be endeavoured to be brought to paſs." And then with his uſual Warmth when He thought it neceſſary to be warm (for at other Times He could be as calm as any Man, though not ſo naturally) He deſired "that the Commiſſioner might have no Inſtruc"tion for the preſent to make any Approach towards "either; on the contrary, that He might be reſtrained "from it by his Majeſty's ſpecial Direction: For "though his own Prudence, upon the Obſervation "He ſhould quickly make when He came thither, "would reſtrain him from doing any Thing which "might be inconvenient to his Majeſty's Service; yet "without that He would hardly be able to reſtrain "others, who for Want of Underſtanding, or out of "Ill-Will to particular Men, might be too forward to "ſet ſuch a Deſign on Foot."

Who artfully attempts to get it delay-

HE deſired "that in the firſt Seſſion of Parliament "no farther Attempt might be made, than in Purſu"ance of what had been firſt mentioned, the vindi"cating their Country from all Things which related "to the Murder of the late King, which would com"prehend the Delivery up of his Perſon, the aſſerting "the King's Royal Power, by which all future At"tempts towards Rebellion would be prevented, and "the Trial of the Marquis of Argyle; all which would "take up more Time than Parliaments in that King"dom, till the late ill Times, had uſed to continue "together. That after the Expiration of the firſt "Seſſion, in which a good Judgment might be made "of the Temper of that Kingdom, and the Commiſ"ſioner's Prudence might have an Influence upon "many leading Men to change their preſent Tem"per, ſuch farther Advance might be made for the "Reformation of the Kirk as his Majeſty ſhould judge "beſt; and then He made no Doubt, but all would "by Degrees be compaſſed in that Particular which "could be deſired, and which was the more reſolutely "to be deſired, becauſe He ſtill confeſſed that the "King could not be ſecure nor the Kingdom happy, "till the Epiſcopal Government could be reſtored. "But He undertook to know ſo well the Nature of "that People" (though He had not been in that Kingdom ſince his Majeſty left it) "that if it were "undertaken preſently, or without due Circumſtances "in preparing more Men than could in a ſhort Time "be done, it would not only miſcarry, but with it "his Majeſty be diſappointed of many of the other "Particulars, which He would otherwiſe be ſure to "obtain."

He named many of the Nobility and leading Men, who He ſaid "were ſtill ſo infatuated with the Cove"nant, that They would with equal Patience hear of "the Rejection of the four Evangeliſts, who yet, by "Converſation and other Information and Applica"tion, might in Time be wrought upon." He frequently appealed to the King's own Memory, and Obſervation when He was in that Kingdom, "how ſu"perſtitious They, who were moſt devoted to do him "Service, and were at his Diſpoſal in all Things, "were towards the Covenant: That all They did for "him, which was all that He deſired them to do, was "looked upon as the Effects of thoſe Obligations "which the Covenant had laid upon them." He appealed to the General, ("who," He ſaid, "knew "Scotland better than any one Man of that Nation "could pretend to do) whether He thought this a "proper Seaſon to attempt ſo great a Change in that "Kingdom, before other more preſſing Acts were "compaſſed; and whether He did not know, that "the very preſſing the Obligations in the Covenant "lately in England had not contributed very much to "the Reſtoration of the King, which the London Mi"niſters confidently urged at preſent as an Argument "for his Indulgence towards them. And," He ſaid, "though He well knew, that his Majeſty was fully "reſolved to maintain the Government of the Church "of England in its full Luſtre, (which He thanked God "for, being in his Judgment the beſt Government "Eccleſiaſtical in the World) yet He could not but "obſerve, that the King's Prudence had yet forborne "to make any new Biſhops, and had upon the Mat"ter ſuſpended the Engliſh Liturgy by not enjoining it, "out of Indulgence to Diſſenters, and to allow them "Time to conſider and to be well informed and in"ſtructed in thoſe Forms, which had been for ſo "many Years rejected or diſcontinued, that the Peo"ple in general and many Miniſters had never ſeen or "heard it uſed: So that the Preſbyterians here remain"ed ſtill in Hope of his Majeſty's Favour and Con"deſcenſion, that They ſhould be permitted to con"tinue their own Forms, or no Forms, in their De"votions and publick Worſhip of God. In Conſide"ration of all which, He thought it very incongru"ous, and ſomewhat againſt his Majeſty's Dignity, "ſuddenly and with Precipitation to begin and at"tempt ſuch an Alteration in Scotland, againſt a Go"vernment that had more Antiquity there, and was

" more generally ſubmitted to and accepted, than it " had been in England, before He himſelf had de- " clared his own Judgment againſt it in this King- " dom; which He preſumed He would ſhortly do, " and which would be the beſt Introduction to the " ſame in Scotland, where all the King's Actions and " Determinations would be looked upon with the high- " eſt Veneration."

He concluded, " that if the other more vigorous " Courſe ſhould be reſolved upon, the Marquis of " Argyle would be very glad of it; for though He " was generally odious to all Degrees of Men, yet He " was not ſo much hated as the Covenant was beloved " and worſhipped: And that when They ſhould diſ- " cern that They muſt be deprived of that, They " would rather deſire to preſerve Both. And there- " fore," He ſaid, " his Advice ſtill was, that He " ſhould be firſt out of the Way, who was looked " upon as the Upholder of the Covenant and the chief " Pillar of the Kirk, before any viſible Attempt " ſhould be made againſt the other, which would " aſſuredly be done by Degrees."

MANY Particulars in this Diſcourſe confidently urged, and with more Advantage of Elocution than the Fatneſs of his Tongue, that ever filled his Mouth, uſually was attended with, ſeemed reaſonable to many, and worthy to be anſwered; and his frequent Appeals to the King, in which there were always ſome ridicu- lous Inſtances of the Uſe made of the Covenant, with Reference to the Power of the Preachers in the do- meſtick Affairs of other Men, and the like, (which though it made it the more odious, was ſtill an Argu- ment of the Reverence that was generally paid to it, all which Inſtances were well remembered by the King, who commonly added others of the ſame Standard from his own Memory) made his Majeſty in Suſpenſe, or rather inclined that Nothing ſhould be attempted that concerned the Kirk till the next Seſſion of Parliament, when Lautherdale himſelf confeſſed it might be ſecurely effected. To this the General ſeemed to incline, not a little moved by what had been ſaid of Argyle, to whom He was no Friend, but much more by the Diſadvantage which might ariſe, by a precipitate Pro- ceeding in Scotland, to the Preſbyterian Party here, and eſpecially to the Preachers, to whom He wiſhed well for his Wife's Sake, or rather for his own Peace with his Wife, who was deeply engaged to that Peo- ple for their ſeaſonable Determination of ſome nice Caſes of Conſcience, whereby He had been induced to repair a Treſpaſs He had committed, by marrying her; which was an Obligation never to be forgotten.

His Diſcourſe makes ſome Impreſſion on the King.

MIDDLETON, and moſt of the Scots Lords, were highly offended by the Preſumption of Lautherdale, in undertaking to know the Spirit and Diſpoſition of a Kingdom which He had not ſeen in Ten Years; and eaſily diſcerned that his affected Raillery and Railing againſt the Covenant, and his magnifying Epiſcopal Government, were but Varniſh to cover the Rotten- neſs of his Intentions, till He might more ſecurely and efficacioufly manifeſt his Affection to the one, and his Malignity to the other. They contradicted poſitively all that He had ſaid of the Temper and Affections of Scotland, and named many of thoſe Lords, who had been mentioned by him as the moſt zealous Aſſerters of the Covenant, " who" They undertook " ſhould up- " on the firſt Opportunity declare their Abomination " of it to the World; whereof They knew there were " ſome who had written againſt it, and were reſolved " to publiſh it as ſoon as They might do it with Safe- " ty." They adviſed his Majeſty, " that He would " not chooſe to do his Buſineſs by Halves, when He " might with more Security do it all together, and " the dividing it would make Both the more difficult. " However," They beſought him, " to put no ſuch " Reſtraint, as had been ſo much preſſed, upon his " Commiſſioner, that though He ſhould find the Par- " liament moſt inclined to do that now, which every " Body confeſſed neceſſary to be done at ſome Time, " He ſhould not accept their Good-Will, but hinder " them from purſuing it, as very ungrateful to the " King; which," They ſaid, " would be a greater " Countenance to and Confirmation of the Covenant " than it had ever yet received, and a greater Wound " to Epiſcopacy." And that indeed was conſented to by all. And thereupon the King reſolved to put No- thing like Reſtraint upon his Commiſſioner from effect- ing that He wiſhed might be done to morrow if it could be, but to leave it entirely to his Prudence to judge of the Conjuncture, with Caution " not to per- " mit it to be attempted, if He ſaw it would be at- " tended with any ill Conſequence or Hazard to his " Service." And ſo the Commiſſioner, with the other Officers for Scotland, were diſmiſſed to their full Con- tent; and therewith the King was at preſent eaſed, by having ſeparated one very important Affair from the Crowd of the reſt, which remained to perplex him.

And prevent it.

Middleton and the other Lords diſcover Lauther- dale's Deſign.

THAT in Ireland was much more intricate, and the Intricacy in many Reſpects ſo involved, that Nobody had a Mind to meddle with it. The Chancellor had made it his humble Suit to the King, " that no Part " of it might ever be referred to him;" and the Duke of Ormond (who was moſt concerned in his own In- tereſt that all Mens Intereſts in that Kingdom might be adjuſted, that He might enjoy his, which was the greateſt of all the reſt) could not ſee any Light in ſo much Darkneſs, that might lead him to any Begin- ning. The King's Intereſt had been ſo totally extin- guiſhed in that Kingdom for many Years paſt, that there was no Perſon of any Conſideration there, who pretended to wiſh that it were revived. At Cromwell's Death, and at the Depoſition of Richard, his younger Son Harry was inveſted in the full Authority, by be- ing Lieutenant of Ireland. The two Preſidents of the two Provinces, were the Lord Broghill in that of Mun- ſter, and Sir Charles Coote in that of Conaught; Both equally depending upon the Lieutenant: And They more depended upon him and courted his Protection, by their not loving one another, and being of ſeveral Complexions and Conſtitutions, and Both of a long Averſion to the King by Multiplications of Guilt. When Richard was thrown out, the ſupreme Power of the Militia was veſted in Ludlow, and all the civil Ju- riſdiction in Perſons who had been Judges of the King, and poſſeſſed ample Fortunes, which They could no longer hold than their Authority ſhould be maintain- ed. But the two Preſidents remained in their ſeveral Provinces with their full Power, either becauſe They had not deſerved to be ſuſpected, or becauſe They could not eaſily be removed, being ſtill ſubject to the Commiſſioners at Dublin. The next Change of Go- vernment removed Ludlow and the reſt of that deſpe- rate Crew, and committed the Government to others of more moderate Principles, yet far enough from wiſhing well to the King. In thoſe Revolutions Sir Charles Coote took an Opportunity to ſend an Expreſs to the King, who was then at Bruſſels, with the Ten- der of his Obedience, with great Cautions as to the Time of appearing; only deſired " to have ſuch Com- " miſſions in his Hands as might be applied to his " Majeſty's Service in a proper Conjuncture," which were ſent to him, and never made Uſe of by him. He expreſſed great Jealouſy of Broghill, and an Un- willingneſs that He ſhould know of his Engagement. And the Alterations ſucceeded ſo faſt one upon ano- ther, that They Both choſe rather to depend upon General Monk than upon the King, imagining, as They ſaid afterwards, " that He intended Nothing " but the King's Reſtoration, and beſt knew how to " effect it." And by ſome private Letter, for there was no Order ſent, to Coote and ſome other Officers there, " that They would adhere to his Army for the " Service of the Parliament againſt Lambert," Coote found Aſſiſtance to ſeize upon the Caſtle of Dublin, and the Perſons of thoſe who were in Authority, who were impriſoned by them, and the Government ſettled in that Manner as They thought moſt agreeable to the

the Presbyterian Humour, until the General was declared Lieutenant of Ireland, who then sent Commissioners to the same Persons, who as soon as the King was proclaimed, sent their Commissioners to the King, who were called Commissioners from the State, and brought a Present of Money to the King from the same, with all Professions of Duty which could be expected from the best Subjects.

Commissioners from the different Parties in Ireland.

1. Commissioners from the State.

THESE were the Lord Broghill, Sir Audly Mervin, Sir John Clotworthy, and several other Persons of Quality, much the greater Number whereof had been always notorious for the Disservice They had done the King; but upon the Advantage of having been discountenanced, and suffered long Imprisonment and other Damages, under Cromwell, They called themselves the King's Party, and brought Expectations with them to be looked upon and treated as such. Amongst them was a Brother, and other Friends, made Choice of and more immediately trusted by Sir Charles Coote, who remained in the Castle of Dublin, and presided in that Council that supplied the Government, and was thought to have the best Interest in the Army as well as in his own Province. "And "these Men," He said, "had been privy to the Ser- "vice He meant to have done the King, and expected "the Performance of several Promises He had then "made them by Virtue of some Authority had been "sent to him to assure those, who should join with "him to do his Majesty Service." All these Commissioners from the State had Instructions, to which They were to conform in desiring Nothing from the King, but "the settling his own Authority amongst "them, the ordering the Army, the reviving the "Execution of the Laws, and settling the Courts of "Justice" (all which had been dissolved in the late Usurpation) "and such other Particulars as purely "related to the Publick." And their publick Addresses were to this and no other Purpose. But then to their private Friends, and such as They desired to make their Friends, most of them had many Pretences of Merit, and many Expedients by which the King might reward them, and out of which They would be able liberally to gratify their Patrons. And by this Means all who served the King were furnished with Suits enough to make their Fortunes, in which They presently engaged themselves with very troublesome Importunity to the King himself, and to all others who They thought had Credit or Power to advance their Desires. Nor was there any other Art so much used by the Commissioners in their secret Conferences, as to deprave one another, and to discover the ill Actions They had been guilty of, and how little They deserved to be trusted, or had Interest to accomplish. The Lord Broghill was the Man of the best Parts, and had most Friends by his great Alliance to promise for him. And He appeared very generous, and to be without the least Pretence to any Advantage for himself, and to be so wholly devoted to the King's Interest and to the establishing of the Government of the Church, that He quickly got himself believed. And having free Access to the King, by mingling Apologies for what He had done with Promises of what He would do, and utterly renouncing all those Principles as to the Church or State (as He might with a good Conscience do) which made Men unfit for Trust, He made himself so acceptable to his Majesty, that He heard him willingly, because He made all Things easy to be done and compassed; and gave such Assurances to the Bedchamber Men, to help them to good Fortunes in Ireland, which They had Reason to despair of in England, that he wanted not their Testimony upon all Occasions, nor their Defence and Vindication, when any Thing was reflected upon to his Disadvantage or Reproach.

2. Deputies from the Bishops and Clergy.

2. THERE were many other Deputies of several Classes in Ireland, who thought their Pretences to be as well grounded, as theirs who came from the State. There were yet some Bishops alive of that Kingdom, and other grave Divines, all stript of their Dignities and Estates, which had been disposed of by the usurping Power to their Creatures. And all They (some whereof had spent Time in Banishment near the King, and others more miserably in their own Country and in England, under the Charity of those who for the most Part lived by the Charity of others) expected, as They well might, to be restored to what in Right belonged to them; and besought his Majesty "to use "all possible Expedition to establish the Government "of that Church as it had always been, by supply- "ing the empty Sees with new Prelates in the Place "of those who were dead, that all the Schisms and "wild Factions in Religion, which were spread over "that whole Kingdom, might be extirpated and "rooted out." All which Desires were grateful to the King, and according to his Royal Intentions, and were not opposed by the Commissioners from the State, who all pretended to be Wellwishers to the old Government of the Church, and the more by the Experience They had of the Distractions which were introduced by that which had succeeded it, and by the Confusion They were now in without any. Only Sir John Clotworthy (who, by the Exercise of very ordinary Faculties in several Employments, whilst the Parliament retained the supreme Power in their Hands, had exceedingly improved himself in Understanding and Ability of Negotiation) dissembled not his old Animosity against the Bishops, the Cross, and the Surplice, and wished that all might be abolished; though He knew well that his Vote would signify Nothing towards it. And that Spirit of his had been so long known, that it was now imputed to Sincerity and Plaindealing, and that He would not dissemble (which many others were known to do, who had the same Malignity with him;) and was the less ill thought of, because in all other Respects He was of a generous and a jovial Nature, and complied in all Designs which might advance the King's Interest or Service.

3. A Committee deputed by the Adventurers.

3. THERE appeared likewise a Committee deputed by the Adventurers to solicit their Right, which was the more numerous by the Company of many Aldermen and Citizens of the best Quality, and many honest Gentlemen of the Country; who all desired "that their "Right might not be disturbed, which had been set- "tled by an Act of Parliament ratified by the last "King before the Troubles; and that if it should be "thought just, and any of the Lands of which They "stood possessed should be taken from them, upon "what Title soever, They might first be put into the "Possession of other Lands of equal Value, before "They should be dispossessed of what They had al- "ready." All that They made Claim to seemed to be confirmed by an Act of Parliament. The Case was this: When the Rebellion first brake out in Ireland, the Parliament then sitting, and there being so much Money to be raised and already raised for the Payment of and disbanding two Armies, and for the composing or compounding the Rebellion of Scotland, where the King was at that Time; it had been propounded, "that the War of Ireland might be carried on at the "Charges of particular Men, and so all Imposition "upon the People might be prevented, if an Act of "Parliament were passed for the Satisfaction of all "those who would advance Monies for the War, out "of the Lands which should become forfeited."

An Account of these Adventurers.

AND this Proposition being embraced, an Act was prepared to that Purpose; in which it was provided, that "the forfeited Lands in Leinster, Munster, Conaught, "and Ulster, should be valued at such several Rates by "the Acre, and how many Acres in either should be "assigned for the Satisfaction of one hundred Pounds, "and so proportionally for greater Sums. That for "all Monies which should be subscribed within so "many Days (beyond which Time there should be no "more Subscriptions) for that Service, one Moiety "thereof should be paid to the Treasurer appointed, "within few Days, for the present Preparations; and

"the

"the other Moiety be paid within six Months, upon "the Penalty of losing all Benefit from the first Pay- "ment. That when God should so bless their Armies "(which They doubted not of) that the Rebels should "be so near reduced, that They should be without "any Army or visible Power to support their Rebel- "lion; there should a Commission issue out, under "the Great Seal of England, to such Persons as should "be nominated by the Parliament, who should take "the best Way They could in their Discretion think "fit, to be informed, whether the Rebels were totally "subdued and so the Rebellion at an End. And up- "on their Declaration, that the Work was fully done "and the War finished, other Commissions should like- "wise issue out, in the same Manner, for the con- "victing and attainting all those who were guilty of "the Treason and Rebellion by which their Estates "were become forfeited; and then other Commissi- "ons, for the Distribution of the forfeited Lands to "the several Adventurers, according to the Sums of "Money advanced by them. The King was to be "restrained from making any Peace with the Irish Re- "bels, or Cessation, or from granting Pardon to any "of them; but such Peace, Cessation, or Pardon "should be looked upon as void and null."

THIS Act the King had consented to and confirm- ed in the Year 1641, and in the Agony of many Troubles which that Rebellion had brought upon him, thinking it the only Means to put a speedy End to that accursed Rebellion, the Suppression whereof would free him from many Difficulties. And upon the Se- curity of this Act, very many Persons of all Qualities and Affections subscribed and brought in the first Moiety of their Money, and were very properly styled Adventurers. Great Sums of Money were daily brought in, and Preparations and Provisions and new Levies of Men were made for Ireland. But the Rebellion in England being shortly after fomented by the Parlia- ment, They applied very much of that Money brought in by the Adventurers, and many of the Troops which had been raised for that Service, immediately against the King: Which being notoriously known, and his Majesty complaining of it, many honest Gentlemen who had subscribed and paid one Moiety, refused to pay in the other Moiety at the Time, and so were liable to lose the Benefit of their Adventure; which They preferred before suffering their Money to be ap- plied to the carrying on the Rebellion against the King, which They abhorred. And by this Means Ireland was unsupplied; and the Rebellion spread and prospered with little Opposition for some Time. And the Parliament, though the Time for subscribing was expired, enlarged it by Ordinances of their own to a longer Day, and easily prevailed with many of their own Party, principally Officers and Citizens, to sub- scribe and bring in their Money; to which it was no small Encouragement, that so many had lost the Be- nefit of their whole Adventure by not paying in the second Payment, which would make the Conditions of the new Adventurers the less hazardous.

WHEN the Success of the Parliament had totally subdued the King's Arms, and himself was so inhu- manly murdered, neither the Forces in Ireland under the King's Authority, nor the Irish, who had too late promised to submit to it, could make any long Re- sistance; so that Cromwell quickly dispersed them by his own Expedition thither: And by licensing as ma- ny as desired it to transport as many from thence, for the Service of the two Crowns of France and Spain, as They would contract for, quickly made a Disappear- ance of any Army in that Kingdom to oppose his Con- quests. And after the Defeat of the King at Worcester, He seemed to all Men to be in as quiet a Possession of Ireland as of England, and to be as much without Enemies in the one as the other Kingdom; as in a short Time He had reduced Scotland to the same Exi- gent.

SHORTLY after that Time, when Cromwell was invested with the Office of Protector, all those Com- missions were issued out, and all the Formality was used that was prescribed by that Act for the Adven- turers. Not only all the Irish Nation (very few ex- cepted) were found guilty of the Rebellion, and so to have forfeited all their Estates; but the Marquis of Ormond, the Lord Inchiquin, and all the English Catho- licks, and whosoever had served the King, were declar- ed to be under the same Guilt; and the Lands seized upon for the Benefit of the State. There were very vast Arrears of Pay due to the Army, a great Part of which (now the War was ended) must be disbanded; for the doing whereof no Money was to be expected out of England, but They must be satisfied out of the Forfeitures of the other Kingdoms. The whole King- dom was admeasured; the Accounts of the Money paid by the Adventurers within the Time limited, and what was due to the Army for their Pay, were stated; and such Proportions of Acres in the several Provinces were assigned to the Adventurers and Officers and Sol- diers, as were agreeable to the Act of Parliament, by Admeasurement. Where an Officer of Name had been likewise an Adventurer, his Adventure and his Pay amounted to the more. And sometimes the whole Company and Regiment contracted for Money with their Captains or Colonels, and assigned their Interest in Land to them; and Possession was accord- ingly delivered without any Respect to any Titles by Law to former Settlements, or Descents of any Per- sons soever, Wives or Children; except in some very few Cases, where the Wives had been great Heirs and could not be charged with any Crime, such Proporti- ons were assigned as were rather agreeable to their own Conveniencies, than to Justice and the Right of the Claimers.

AND that every Body might with the more Secu- rity enjoy that which was assigned to him, They had found a Way to have the Consent of many to their own Undoing. They found the utter Extirpation of the Nation (which They had intended) to be in itself very difficult, and to carry in it somewhat of Horrour, that made some Impression upon the Stone-Hardness of their own Hearts. After so many Thousands de- stroyed by the Plague which raged over the Kingdom, by Fire, Sword, and Famine; and after so many Thousands transported into foreign Parts; there re- mained still such a numerous People, that They knew not how to dispose of: And though They were de- clared to be all forfeited, and so to have no Title to any Thing, yet They must remain somewhere. They therefore found this Expedient, which they called an Act of Grace. There was a large Tract of Land, even to the Half of the Province of Conaught, that was se- parated from the rest by a long and a large River, and which by the Plague and many Massacres remained almost desolate. Into this Space and Circuit of Land They required all the Irish to retire by such a Day, under the Penalty of Death; and all who should after that Time be found in any other Part of the Kingdom, Man, Woman, or Child, should be killed by any Body who saw or met them. The Land within this Circuit, the most barren in the Kingdom, was out of the Grace and Mercy of the Conquerors assigned to those of the Nation who were enclosed, in such Pro- portions as might with great Industry preserve their Lives. And to those Persons, from whom They had taken great Quantities of Land in other Provinces, They assigned the greater Proportions within this Pre- cinct; so that it fell to some Mens Lot, especially when they were accommodated with Houses, to have a competent Livelihood, though never to the fifth Part of what had been taken from them in a much better Province. And that They might not be exalted with this merciful Donative, it was a Condition that ac- companied this their Accommodation, that They should all give Releases of their former Rights and Titles to the Land that was taken from them, in Consideration of what was now assigned to them; and so they should for ever bar themselves and their Heirs from ever laying Claim to their old Inheritance. What should They do? They could not be permitted to go out of this Precinct to shift for themselves elsewhere; and without this Assignation They must starve here, as many did die every Day of Famine. In this deplorable Condition, and under this Consternation, They found themselves obliged to accept or submit to the hardest Conditions of their Conquerors, and so signed such Conveyances and Releases as were prepared for them, that They might enjoy those Lands which belonged to other Men.

And by this Means the Plantation (as They called it) of Conaught was finished, and all the Irish Nation enclosed within that Circuit; the rest of Ireland being left to the English; some to the old Lords and just Proprietors, who being all Protestants (for no Roman Catholick was admitted) had either never offended them, or had served them, or had made Composition for their Delinquences by the Benefit of some Articles; and some to the Adventurers and Soldiers. And a good and great Part (as I remember, the whole Province of Tipperary) Cromwell had reserved to himself, as a Demesne (as He called it) for the State, and in which no Adventurer or Soldier should demand his Lot to be assigned, and no Doubt intended both the State and it for the making great his own Family. It cannot be imagined in how easy a Method, and with what peaceable Formality, this whole great Kingdom was taken from the just Lords and Proprietors, and divided and given amongst those, who had no other Right to it but that They had Power to keep it; no Men having so great Shares as They who had been Instruments to murder the King, and were not like willingly to part with it to his Successor. Where any great Sums of Money for Arms, Ammunition, or any Merchandise, had been so long due that they were looked upon as desperate, the Creditors subscribed all those Sums as lent upon Adventure, and had their Satisfaction assigned to them as Adventurers. Ireland was the great Capital, out of which all Debts were paid, all Services rewarded, and all Acts of Bounty performed. And which is more wonderful, all this was done and settled, within little more than two Years, to that Degree of Perfection, that there were many Buildings raised for Beauty as well as Use, orderly and regular Plantations of Trees, and Fences and Enclosures raised throughout the Kingdom, Purchases made by one from the other at very valuable Rates, and Jointures made upon Marriages, and all other Conveyances and Settlements executed, as in a Kingdom at Peace within itself, and where no Doubt could be made of the Validity of Titles. And yet in all this Quiet, there were very few Persons pleased or contented.

And these Deputies for the Adventurers, and for those who called themselves Adventurers, came not only to ask the King's Consent and Approbation of what had been done (which They thought in Justice He could not deny, because all had been done upon the Warrant of a legal Act of Parliament) but to complain "that Justice had not been equally done in the "Distributions; that this Man had received much less "than was his Due, and others as much more than "was their Due; that one had had great Quantities "of Bogs and waste Land assigned to him as tenantable, "and another as much allowed as Bogs and Waste, "which in Truth were very tenantable Lands." And upon the whole Matter, They all desired "a Review "might be made, that Justice might be done to all," every Man expecting an Addition to what He had already, not suspecting that any Thing would be taken from him to be restored to the true Owner.

And this Agitation raised another Party of Adventurers, who thought They had at least as good a Right as any of the other; and that was, They, or the Heirs and Executors of them, who upon the first making of the Act of Parliament, had subscribed several good Sums of Money, and paid in their first Moieties; but the Rebellion coming on, and the Monies already paid in being notoriously and visibly employed contrary to the Act, and against the Person of the King himself, They had out of Conscience forborne to pay the second Moiety, lest it might also be so employed; whereby, according to the Rigour of the Law, They lost the Benefit of the first Payment. And They had hitherto sustained that Loss, with many other, without having ever applied themselves for Relief. "But "now when it had pleased God to restore the King, "and so many who had not deserved very well desired "Help from the King upon the Equity of that Act of "Parliament, where the Letter of the Law would do "them no Good, They presumed to think, that by "the Equity of the Law They ought to be satisfied "for the Money They did really pay; and that They "should not undergo any Damage for not paying the "other Moiety, which out of Conscience and for his "Majesty's Service They had forborne to do." No Man will doubt but that the King was very well inclined to gratify this Classis of Adventurers, when He should find it in his Power. But it is Time to return to the Committee and Deputies of the other Parties in that distracted Kingdom.

4. A Committee from the Army.

4. There was a Committee sent from the Army that was in present Pay in Ireland "for the Arrears "due to them," which was for above a Year's Pay; most of those who had received Satisfaction in Land for what was then due to them, as well Officers as Soldiers, being then disbanded, that They might attend their Plantations and Husbandry, but in Truth because They were for the most Part of the Presbyterian Faction, and so suspected by Cromwell not to be enough inclined to him. The Army now on Foot, and to whom so great Arrears were due, consisted for the greatest Part of Independents, Anabaptists, and Levellers, who had corresponded with and been directed by the General, when He marched from Scotland against Lambert: And therefore He had advised the King to declare, "that He would pay all Arrears due to the "Army in Ireland, and ratify the Satisfaction that had "been given to Adventurers, Officers and Soldiers "there;" which his Majesty had accordingly signified by his Declaration from Breda. And whoever considers the Temper and Constitution of that Army then on Foot in that Kingdom, and the Body of Presbyterians that had been disbanded, and remained still there in their Habitations together with the Body of Adventurers, all Presbyterians or Anabaptists; and at the same Time remembers the Disposition and general Affection of the Army in England, severed from their Obedience to the General and the good Affection of some few superiour Officers; will not wonder that the King endeavoured if it had been possible rather to please all, than by any unseasonable Discovery of a Resolution, how just soever, to make any Party desperate; there being none so inconsiderable, as not to have been able to do much Mischief.

5. A Committee from the Officers who had served the King.

5. The Satisfaction that the Officers and Soldiers had received in Land, and the Demand of the present Army, had caused another Committee to be sent and employed by those reformed Officers, who had served the King under the Command of the Marquis of Ormond, from the Beginning of the Rebellion to the End thereof, with Courage and Fidelity; and had since shifted beyond the Seas, and some of them in his Majesty's Service, or suffered patiently in that Kingdom under the Insolence of their Oppressors; who, because They had always fought against the Irish, were by Articles, upon their laying down their Arms when They could no longer hold them in their Hands, permitted to remain in their own Houses, or such as They could get within that Kingdom. These Gentlemen thought it a very incongruous Thing, "that "They who had constantly fought against the King's "Father and himself, should receive their Pay and "Reward by his Majesty's Care, Bounty and Assigna-

"tion;

" tion; and that They who had as conſtantly fought " for Both, ſhould be left to undergo all Want and " Miſery now his Majeſty was reſtored to his own." And They believed their Suit to be the more reaſonable, at leaſt the eaſier to be granted, by having brought an Expedient with them to facilitate their Satisfaction. There had been ſome old Order or Ordinance that was looked upon as a Law, whereby it was provided, that all Houſes within Cities or Corporate Towns, which were forfeited, ſhould be reſerved to be ſpecially diſpoſed of by the State, or in ſuch a Manner as it ſhould direct, to the End that all Care might be taken what Manner of Men ſhould be the Inhabitants of ſuch important Places: And therefore ſuch Houſes had not been nor were to be promiſcuouſly aſſigned to Adventurers, Officers, or Soldiers, and ſo remained hitherto undiſpoſed of. And theſe reformed Officers of the King made it their Suit, that thoſe Houſes might be aſſigned to them in Proportions, according to what might appear to be due to their ſeveral Conditions and Degrees in Command. And to this Petition, which might ſeem equitable in itſelf, the Commiſſioners from the State gave their full Approbation and Conſent, being ready to take all the Opportunities to ingratiate themſelves towards thoſe whom They had oppreſſed as long as They were able, and to be reputed to love the King's Party.

6. A Committee for the Roman Catholicks.

6. LASTLY, there was a Committee for or rather the whole Body of the Iriſh Catholicks, who, with leſs Modeſty than was ſuitable to their Condition, demanded in Juſtice to be reſtored to all the Lands that had been taken from them; alledging " that They were " all at leaſt as innocent as any of them were, to " whom their Lands had been aſſigned." They urged " their early Submiſſion to the King, and the Peace " They had firſt made with the Marquis of Ormond, " by which an Act of Indemnity had been granted " for what Offences ſoever had been committed, ex- " cept ſuch in which none of them were concerned." They urged, " the Peace They had made with the " Marquis of Ormond upon this King's firſt coming to " the Crown, wherein a Grant of Indemnity was a- " gain renewed to them;" and confidently, though very unſkilfully, preſſed " that the Benefit of all thoſe " Articles which were contained in that Peace, might " ſtill be granted and obſerved to them, ſince They " had done Nothing to infringe or forfeit them, but " had been oppreſſed and broken as all his Majeſty's " other Forces had been." They urged, " the Ser- " vice They had done to the King beyond the Seas, " having been always ready to obey his Commands, " and ſtayed in or left France or Spain as his Majeſty " had commanded them, and were for the laſt two " Years received and liſted as his own Troops, and " in his own actual Service, under the Duke of York." They preſſed " the intolerable Tyranny They had " ſuffered under, now almoſt twenty Years; the " Maſſacres and Servitude They had undergone, ſuch " Devaſtation and laying waſte their Country, ſuch " bloody Cruelty and Executions inflicted on them, " as had never been known nor could be paralleled " amongſt Chriſtians: That their Nation almoſt was " become deſolated, and their Sufferings of all Kinds " had been to ſuch an Extent, that They hoped had " ſatiated their moſt implacable Enemies." And therefore They humbly beſought his Majeſty, " that " in this general Joy for his Majeſty's bleſſed Reſto- " ration, and in which Nobody could rejoice more " than They, when all his Majeſty's Subjects of his " two other Kingdoms (whereof many were not more " innocent than themſelves) had their Mouths filled " with Laughter, and had all their Hearts could deſire, " the poor Iriſh alone might not be condemned to " perpetual Weeping and Miſery by his Majeſty's " own immediate Act." Amongſt theſe, with the ſame Confidence, They who had been tranſplanted into Conaught appeared, related the Circumſtances of the Perſecution They had undergone, and " how " impoſſible it had been for them to refuſe their Sub- " miſſion to that They had no Power to reſiſt; and " therefore that it would be againſt all Conſcience to " alledge their own Conſent, and their Releaſes and " other Grants, which had They not conſented to in " that Point of Time, They, their Wives and Chil- " dren, could not have lived four and twenty Hours." All theſe Particulars were great Motives to Compaſſion, and diſpoſed his Majeſty's Heart to wiſh that any Expedient might be found, which might conſiſt with Juſtice and neceſſary Policy, that though it might not make them very happy, yet might preſerve them from Miſery, until He ſhould hereafter find ſome Opportunity to repair their Condition according to their ſeveral Degrees and Merit.

The King greatly perplexed with theſe contradictory Addreſſes.

THESE ſeveral Addreſſes being preſented to his Majeſty together, before any Thing was yet ſettled in England, and every Party of them finding ſome Friends, who filled the King's Ears with ſpecious Diſcourſes on their Behalf for whom They ſpake, and with bitter Invectives againſt all the reſt; He was almoſt confounded how to begin, and in what Method to put the Examination of all their Pretences, that He might be able to take ſuch a View of them, as to be able to apply ſome Remedy, that might keep the Diſeaſe from increaſing and growing worſe, until He could find ſome Cure. He had no Mind the Parliament ſhould interpoſe and meddle in it, which would have been grateful to no Party; and by good Fortune They were ſo full of Buſineſs that They thought concerned them nearer, that They had no Mind to examine or take Cognizance of this of Ireland, which They well knew properly depended upon the King's own Royal Pleaſure and Commands. But theſe Addreſſes were all of ſo contradictory a Nature, ſo inconſiſtent with each other, and ſo impoſſible to be reconciled, that if all Ireland could be ſold at its full Value (that is, if Kingdoms could be valued at a juſt Rate) and find a fit Chapman or Purchaſer to diſburſe the Sum, it could not yield Half enough to ſatisfy Half their Demands; and yet the King was not in a Condition poſitively to deny any one Party that which They deſired.

THE Commiſſioners from the State, in Reſpect of their Quality, Parts and Intereſt, and in Regard of their Miſſion and Authority, ſeemed the moſt proper Perſons to be treated with, and the moſt like to be prevailed upon not to inſiſt upon any Thing that was moſt profoundly unreaſonable. They had all their own juſt Fears, if the King ſhould be ſevere; and there would have been a general Concurrence in all the reſt, that He ſhould have taken a full Vengeance upon them: But then They who had moſt Cauſe to fear, thought They might raiſe their Hopes higheſt from that Power that ſent them, and which had yet Intereſt enough to do Good and Hurt; and They thought themſelves ſecure in the King's Declaration from Breda and his Offer of Indemnity, which comprehended them. Then They were all deſirous to merit from the King; and their not loving one another, diſpoſed them the more to do any Thing that might be grateful to his Majeſty. But They were all united and agreed in one unhappy Extreme, that made all their other Devotion leſs applicable to the publick Peace, that is, their implacable Malice to the Iriſh: Inſomuch as They concurred in their Deſire, that They might gain Nothing by the King's Return, but be kept with the ſame Rigour, and under the ſame Incapacity to do Hurt, which They were till then. For which Inſtance They were not totally without Reaſon, from their barbarous Behaviour in the firſt Beginning of the Rebellion, which could not be denied, and from their having been compelled to ſubmit to and undergo the moſt barbarous Servitude, that could not be forgotten. And though Eradication was too foul a Word to be uttered in the Ears of a Chriſtian Prince, yet it was little leſs or better that They propoſed in other Words, and hoped to obtain: Whereas the King thought that miſerable People to be as worthy of his Favour, as moſt of the other Parties; and that his Honour, Juſtice and Policy, as far as they were unreſtrained by Laws and Contracts, obliged him more to preſerve them, at leaſt as much as He could. And yet it can hardly be believed, how few Men, in all other Points very reaſonable, and who were far from Cruelty in their Nature, cheriſhed that Inclination in the King; but thought it in him, and more in his Brother, to proceed from other Reaſons than They publiſhed: Whilſt others, who pretended to be only moved by Chriſtian Charity and Compaſſion, were more cruel towards them, and made them more miſerable, by extorting great Engagements from them for their Protection and Interceſſion, which being performed would leave them in as forlorn a Condition as They were found.

King

In this Intricacy and Perplexity, the King thought it neceſſary to begin with ſettling his own Authority in one Perſon over that Kingdom, who ſhould make Haſte thither, and eſtabliſh ſuch a Council there, and all Courts of Juſtice, and other civil Officers, as might beſt contribute towards bringing the reſt in Order. And to this Purpoſe He made Choice of ſeveral Perſons of the Robe, who had been known by or recommended to the Marquis of Ormond, but of more by the Advice and Promotion of Daniel O Neile of his Bedchamber, who preferred a Friend of his and an Iriſhman to the Office of Attorney General, (a Place in that Conjuncture of vaſt Importance to the Settlement) and many other to be Judges. And all this Liſt was made and ſettled without the leaſt Communication with the Chancellor, who might have been preſumed to be eaſily informed of that Rank of Men. But to find a Perſon fit to ſend thither in the ſupreme Authority, was long deliberated by the King, and with Difficulty to be reſolved. The General continued Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, which He had no Mind to quit, for He had a great Eſtate there, having for ſome Time been General of that Army, and received for the Arrears of his Pay, and by Cromwell's Bounty, and by ſome Purchaſes He made of the Soldiers, an Eſtate of at leaſt four thouſand Pounds per Annum, which He thought He could beſt preſerve in the ſupreme Government; though He was willing to have it believed in the City and the Army, that He retained it only for the Good of the Adventurers, and that the Soldiers might be juſtly dealt with for their Arrears. Whatſoever his Reaſon was, as Profit was the higheſt Reaſon always with him, whoever was to be Deputy muſt be ſubordinate to him, which no Man of the greateſt Quality would be, though He was to have his Commiſſion from the King, and the ſame Juriſdiction in the Abſence of the Lieutenant. There were ſome few fit for the Employment, who were not willing to undertake it; and many who were willing to undertake it, but were not fit.

The General continues Lord Lieutenant.

Upon the View of thoſe of all Sorts, the King moſt inclined to the Lord Roberts, who was a Man of more than ordinary Parts, well verſed in the Knowledge of the Laws, and eſteemed of Integrity not to be corrupted by Money. But then He was a ſullen moroſe Man, intolerably proud, and had ſome Humours as inconvenient as ſmall Vices, which made him hard to live with, and which were afterwards more diſcovered than at that Time foreſeen. He had been in the Beginning of the Rebellion a leading Man in their Councils, and a great Officer in their Army, wherein He expreſſed no Want of Courage. But after the Defeat of the Earl of Eſſex his Army in Cornwall, which was imputed to his Poſitiveneſs and Undertaking for his County, the Friendſhip between him and that Earl was broken. And from that Time He did not only quit his Command in the Army, but declined their Councils, and remained for the moſt Part in the Country; where He cenſured their Proceedings, and had his Converſation moſt with thoſe who were known to wiſh well to the King, and who gave him a great Teſtimony, as if He would be glad to ſerve his Majeſty upon the firſt Opportunity. The Truth is, the Wickedneſs of the ſucceeding Time was ſo much ſuperiour and overſhadowed all that had been done before, that They who had only been in Rebellion with the Earl of Eſſex, looked upon themſelves as innocent, and juſtified their own Allegiance, by loading the Memory of Cromwell with all the Reproaches and Maledictions imaginable. The greateſt Exception that the King had to the Lord Roberts, who was already of the Privy Council by the Recommendation and Inſtance of the General, was, that He was generally eſteemed a Preſbyterian, which would make him unfit for that Truſt for many Reaſons; beſides that He would not chearfully act the King's Part in reſtoring and advancing the Government of the Church, which the King was reſolved to ſettle with all the Advantages which He could contribute towards it. Nor did the Lord Roberts profeſs to be an Enemy to Epiſcopacy.

Before the King would make any publick Declaration of his Purpoſe, He ſent the Lord Treaſurer and the Chancellor, who were moſt acquainted with him, to confer freely with him, and to let him know the good Eſteem his Majeſty had of him, and of his Abilities to ſerve him. "That the Government of Ireland "would require a very ſteady and a prudent Man: "That the General did not intend to go into that "Kingdom, and yet would remain Lieutenant thereof, "from which Office his Majeſty knew not how nor "thought it ſeaſonable to remove him, and therefore "that the Place muſt be ſupplied by a Deputy; for "which Office the King thought him the moſt fit, if it "were not for one Objection, which He had given "them Leave to inform him of particularly, there be-"ing but one Perſon more privy to his Majeſty's Pur-"poſe, who was the Marquis of Ormond; and that He "might conclude, that the King was deſirous to re-"ceive Satisfaction to his Objection, by the Way He "took to communicate it to him." And then They told him, "that He had the Reputation of being a "Preſbyterian, and that his Majeſty would take his "own Word, whether He was or was not one."

He anſwered without any Kind of Ceremony, to which He was not devoted, or ſo much as acknowledging the King's Favour in his Enquiry, "That no "Preſbyterian thought him to be a Preſbyterian, or "that He loved their Party. He knew them too "well. That there could be no Reaſon to ſuſpect "him to be ſuch, but that which might rather induce "Men to believe him to be a good Proteſtant, that He "went conſtantly to Church as well in the Afternoons "as Forenoons on the Sundays, and on thoſe Days for-"bore to uſe thoſe Exerciſes and Recreations, which "He uſed to do all the Week beſides." He deſired them "to aſſure the King, that He was ſo far from a "Preſbyterian, that He believed Epiſcopacy to be the "beſt Government the Church could be ſubject to." They aſked him then, "whether He would be wil-"ling to receive that Government of Deputy of Ire-"land, if the King were willing to confer it upon "him." There He let himſelf to fall to an Acknowledgment of the King's Goodneſs, "that He thought "him worthy of ſo great an Honour:" But He could not conceal the Diſdain He had of the General's Perſon, nor how unwilling He was to receive Orders from him, or to be an Officer under his Command. They told him, "that there would be a Neceſſity of "a good Correſpondence between them, both whilſt "They ſtayed together in England, and when He "ſhould be in Ireland; but beyond that there would "be no Obligation upon him, for that He was to re-"ceive his Commiſſion immediately from the King, "containing as ample Powers as were in the Lieute-"nant's own Commiſſion: That He was not the Lieu-"tenant's Deputy, but the King's; only that his Com-"miſſion ceaſed when the Lieutenant ſhould be upon "the Place, which He was never like to be." Upon the whole Matter, though it appeared that the Superiority riority was a great Mortification to him, He ſaid, "that He referred himſelf wholly to the King to be "diſpoſed of as He thought beſt for his Service, and "that He would behave himſelf with all poſſible Fi-"delity to him."

Lord Roberts made Deputy of Ireland.

UPON this Report made to the King, ſhortly after his Majeſty in Council declared, "that He had made "the Lord Roberts Deputy of Ireland," and then charged him, "that He would prepare as ſoon as "was poſſible for his Journey thither, when thoſe "Officers, who were deſigned by him for the civil "Juſtice of the Kingdom, ſhould be ready to attend "upon him; and in the mean Time that He would "ſend the Commiſſioners, and all others who ſolicited "any Thing that had reference to Ireland, to wait "upon him, to the End, that He being well informed "of the Nature and Conſiſtency of the ſeveral Pre-"tences, and of the general State of the Kingdom, "might be the better able to adviſe his Majeſty upon "the whole Matter, and to preſcribe, for the enter-"ing upon it by Parts, ſuch a Method, that his Ma-"jeſty might with leſs Perplexity give his own De-"termination in thoſe Particulars, which muſt chiefly "depend upon himſelf and his Direction." Thus the King gave himſelf a little Eaſe, by referring the Groſs to the Lord Deputy, in whoſe Hands we ſhall for the preſent leave it, that We may take a View of the other Particulars that more immediately related to England; though We ſhall be ſhortly called back again to Ireland, which enjoyed little Repoſe in the Hands in which it was put.

Tranſactions in Parliament concerning the Act of Indemnity.

THE Parliament ſpent moſt of the Time upon the Act of Indemnity, in which private Paſſions and Animoſities prevailed very far; one Man contending to preſerve this Man, who though amongſt the fouleſt Offenders, had done him ſome Courteſy in the Time of his Power; and another with as much Paſſion and Bitterneſs endeavouring to have another condemned, who could not be diſtinguiſhed from the whole Herd by any infamous Guilt, and who had diſobliged him, or refuſed to oblige him, when it was in his Power to have done it. The King had poſitively excepted none from Pardon, becauſe He was to refer the Whole to them; but had clearly enough expreſſed, that He preſumed that They would not ſuffer any of thoſe who had ſate as Judges upon his Father, and condemned him to be murdered, to remain alive. And the guilty Perſons themſelves made ſo little Doubt of it, that They made what Shift They could to make their Eſcape into the Parts beyond the Seas, and many of them had tranſported themſelves; whilſt others lay concealed for other Opportunities; and ſome were apprehended when They endeavoured to fly, and ſo were impriſoned.

THE Parliament publiſhed a Proclamation, "that "all who did not render themſelves by a Day named, "ſhould be judged as guilty, and attainted of Trea-"ſon;" which many conſented to, conceiving it to amount to no more than a common Proceſs at Law to bring Men to Juſtice. But it was no ſooner out, than all They who had concealed themſelves in Order to be tranſported, rendered themſelves to the Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, and were by him committed to the Tower. And the Houſe conceived itſelf engaged to ſave thoſe Mens Lives, who had put themſelves into their Power upon that Preſumption. The Houſe of Peers inſiſted upon it in many Conferences, that the Proclamation could bear no ſuch Interpretation; but as it condemned all who by flying declined the Juſtice of the Kingdom, ſo it admitted as many as would appear to plead their own Innocence, which if They could prove They would be ſafe. But the guilty, and with them the Houſe of Commons, declared, "that They "could not but underſtand, that They who rendered "themſelves ſhould be in a better Condition than "They who fled beyond the Seas, which They were "not in any Degree, if They were put upon their "Trial; for to be tried and to be condemned was "the ſame Thing, ſince the Guilt of all was equally "notorious and manifeſt." And this Kind of Reaſoning prevailed upon the Judgments and Underſtandings of many, who had all Manner of Deteſtation for the Perſons of the Men. In the End, the Houſe of Peers after long Conteſts was obliged to conſent, "that "all the Perſons who were fled, and thoſe who had "not rendered themſelves, ſhould be brought to a "Trial and attainted according to Law, together with "thoſe who were or ſhould be taken;" whereby They would forfeit all their Eſtates to the King: "But for thoſe who had rendered themſelves upon the "Faith of the Parliament," as They called it, "They "ſhould remain in ſuch Priſons as his Majeſty thought "fit during their Lives, and neither of them be put "to Death without Conſent of Parliament."

BUT then as by this Means too many of thoſe impious Perſons remained alive, and ſome others who were as bad as any, were upon ſome Teſtimony of the General, and by other Interpoſitions of Friends upon the Allegation of Merit and Services, preſerved, with the King's Conſent too eaſily obtained, ſo much as from Attainder; ſo to make ſome Kind of Amends for this unhappy Lenity, They reſolved to except a Multitude of thoſe They were moſt angry with from Pardon as to their Eſtates, and to fine others in great Sums of Money; when worſe Men, at leaſt as bad, of either Claſſis were exempted, as included, by the Power of their Friends who were preſent in the Debate. And this Contradiction and Faction brought ſuch a Spirit into the Houſe, as diſturbed all other Counſels; whilſt Men, who wiſhed well enough to the Matter propoſed, oppoſed the paſſing it, to croſs other Men who had refuſed to agree with them in the pardoning or not pardoning of Perſons: Which Diſſention divided the Houſe into great Animoſities. And without Doubt, the King's Credit and Authority was at that Time ſo great in the Houſe of Commons, that He could have taken full Vengeance upon many of thoſe with whom He had Reaſon to be offended, by cauſing them to be exempted from Pardon, or expoſed to ſome Damage of Eſtate. And there wanted not many, who uſed all the Credit They had, to inflame the King to that Retaliation and Revenge.

AND it was then and more afterwards imputed to the Chancellor, that there were no more Exceptions in the Act of Indemnity, and that He laboured for Expedition of paſſing it, and for excluding any extraordinary Exceptions; which Reproach He neither then nor ever after was ſolicitous to throw off. But his Authority and Credit, though He at that Time was generally eſteemed, could not have prevailed in that Particular (wherein there were few Men without ſome Temptation to Anger and Indignation, and none more than He, who had undergone Injuries and Indignities from many Men then alive) but that it was very evident to the King himſelf, and to all diſpaſſioned Men, that no Perſon was ſo much concerned, though all were enough, that there ſhould be no longer Delay in paſſing the Act of Indemnity, as the King himſelf was; there being no Progreſs made in any other Buſineſs, by the Diſorder and ill Humour that grew out of that. There was no Attempt to be made towards diſbanding the Army, until the Act of Indemnity ſhould be firſt paſſed; nor could They begin to pay off the Navy, till They were ready to pay off the Arrears of the Army. This was the Remora in all the Counſels; whilſt there wanted not thoſe, who infuſed Jealouſies into the Minds of the Soldiers, and into the City, "that the King had no Purpoſe ever to conſent to the "Act of Indemnity," which was looked upon as the only univerſal Security for the Peace of the Nation: And till that was done, no Man could ſay that He dwelt at Home, nor the King think himſelf in any good Poſture of Security. And therefore no Man was more impatient, and more inſtant in Council and Parliament, to remove all Cauſes which obſtructed that Work, than the Chancellor. And He put the King in Mind, " how much He had oppoſed ſome Clauſes " and Expreſſions which were in the Declaration and " Letters from Breda," which notwithſtanding were inſerted, as moſt agreeable to the General's Advice; and that He then ſaid to his Majeſty, in the Preſence of thoſe who were conſulted with, " that it would " come to his Turn to inſiſt upon the Performance " of thoſe Conceſſions, which He was againſt the " making of, when many others would oppoſe them, " which may-be at that preſent would adviſe much " larger:" Which his Majeſty acknowledged to be true, and confeſſed upon many Occaſions. And the Chancellor did in Truth conceive, that the King's taking Advantage of the good Inclinations of the Houſe to him, to diſpoſe them to fall upon many Perſons, who were Men of another Claſſis to thoſe He deſired might be excepted (and of which Proſpect there could be no End, every Man having Cauſe to fear his own Security by what He ſaw his Neighbour ſuffer who was as innocent) was directly contrary to the Senſe and Integrity of his Declaration, and therefore to be avoided; and that all Things were to be done by him that might facilitate and advance the diſbanding, that ſo the Peace of the Kingdom might again depend upon the civil Juſtice and Magiſtrates thereof. And all Men who underſtood in how tickliſh a Condition it then ſtood, concurred in that Advice.

He interpoſes with the Parliament.

And this was the Reaſon that the King uſed his Authority, and They who were truſted by him their Credit and Intereſt, for the ſuppreſſing thoſe Animoſities, which had irreconciled many Perſons between themſelves who were of publick Affections, by the Nomination of particular Perſons whoſe Eſtates ſhould be made liable to Penalties, the impoſing of which muſt again depend upon the Parliament; which, beſides the Conſumption of Time which was very precious, would renew and continue the ſame Spirit of Diviſion, which already had done too much Miſchief, and would inevitably have done much more. But by this Temper and Compoſition the Act of Indemnity was finiſhed, paſſed the Houſe of Peers, and received the Royal Aſſent, to the wonderful Joy of the People. And preſent Orders were given for the diſbanding the Army and Payment of the Navy, as faſt as Money came in, for which ſeveral Acts of Parliament were formerly paſſed. And by the former Delays, the intolerable Burden both of Army and Navy lay upon the Kingdom near ſix Months after the King's Return, and amounted not to ſo little as one hundred thouſand Pounds by the Month; which raiſed a vaſt Debt that was called the King's, who had inceſſantly deſired to have it prevented from the firſt Hour of his Arrival.

After the Bill of Indemnity was paſſed, with ſome other as important Acts for the publick Peace, (as the preſerving thoſe Proceedings, which had been in Courts of Juſtice for near twenty Years, from being ravelled into again as void or invalid, becauſe they had been before Judges not legally qualified, which would have brought an intolerable Burden upon the Subject; and ſome other Acts) the Parliament was willing to adjourn for ſome Time; that their Members, who were appointed to attend the diſbanding the Army in ſeveral Places, and the Payment of the Navy, might be abſent with leſs Inconvenience: And the King was as willing to have ſome Eaſe. And ſo it was adjourned for a Month or ſix Weeks; in which Time, and even in the Middle of the diſbanding, there happened a very ſtrange Accident, that was Evidence enough of the Temper or Diſtemper of the Time.

The Trial of thoſe infamous Perſons who were in Priſon for the Murder of the King (and who were appointed by the Act of Indemnity to be proceeded againſt with Rigour, and who could not be tried till that Vote was paſſed) was no ſooner over; and the Perſons executed with ſome of the ſame Crew, who being in Holland and Flanders were, by the Permiſſion and Connivance of the Magiſtrates, taken by the King's Miniſters there, and brought into England, and put to Death with their Companions; but the People of that Claſſis who were called Fanaticks, diſcovered a wonderful Malignity in their Diſcourſes, and Vows of Revenge for their innocent Friends. They cauſed the Speeches They had made at their Deaths to be printed, in which there was Nothing of Repentance or Sorrow for their Wickedneſs, but a Juſtification of what They had done for the Cauſe of God; and had ſeveral Meetings to conſult of the beſt Way to attempt their Revenge, and of bringing themſelves into the ſame Poſture of Authority and Power, which They formerly had. The diſbanding the Army ſeemed a good Expedient to contribute to their Ends: And They doubted not, but as faſt as They diſbanded They would repair to them, which They could not ſo well do till then, becauſe of the many new Officers who had been lately put over them; and to that Purpoſe They had their Agents in ſeveral Regiments to appoint Rendezvouſes. They had Conference of aſſaſſinating the General, " who" They ſaid, " had betrayed them, and " was the only Perſon who kept the Army together."

Vennor raiſes an Inſurrection of the Fanaticks in London.

Matters being in this State, and ſome of their Companions every Day taken and impriſoned upon Diſcovery of their Purpoſes, the King being gone to Portſmouth, and the Parliament adjourned, They appointed a Rendezvous in ſeveral Places of London at twelve of the Clock in the Night; the ſame being aſſigned to their Friends in the Country. They had not Patience to make Uſe of the Silence of the Night, till They could draw their ſeveral Bodies together. But their ſeveral Rendezvouſes no ſooner met, than They fell into Noiſe and Exclamations, " that all " Men ſhould take Arms to aſſiſt the Lord Jesus " Christ;" and when the Watch came towards them, They reſolutely defended themſelves, and killed many of thoſe who came to aſſault them: So that the Alarum was in a ſhort Time ſpread over the City, and from thence was carried to Whitehall, where the Duke of York was and the General, with a Regiment of Guards and ſome Horſe, which were quickly drawn together.

Sir Richard Browne was then Lord Mayor of London, a very ſtout and vigilant Magiſtrate, who was equally feared and hated by all the ſeditious Party, for his extraordinary Zeal and Reſolution in the King's Service. Nor was there any Man in England, who did raze out the Memory of what He had formerly done amiſs, with a more ſignal Acknowledgment, or a more frank and generous Engagement againſt all Manner of Factions, which oppoſed or obſtructed his Majeſty's Service; which made him terrible and odious to all, and to none more than to the Preſbyterians, who had formerly ſeduced him. Upon the Alarum, which of itſelf had ſcattered many of the Conſpirators as They were going to or were upon the Places to which They were aſſigned, He was quickly upon his Horſe, accompanied with as many Soldiers, Officers and Friends as He could ſpeedily draw together; and with thoſe marched towards that Place where the moſt Noiſe was made, and in his Way met many who ran from the Fury of thoſe, " who," They ſaid, " were " in Arms," and reported " their Number to be very " great, and that They killed all who oppoſed them." And true it was They had killed ſome, and charged a Body of the Trainbands with ſo much Courage, that it retired with Diſorder. Yet when the Mayor came, He found the Number ſo ſmall, not above thirty Men, that He commanded them to lay down their Arms; which when They refuſed to do, He charged them briſkly. And They defended themſelves with that Courage and Deſpair, that They killed and wounded many of his Men; and very few of them yielded or would receive Quarter, till They were overborne with Numbers or fainted with Wounds, and ſo were taken and laid Hands on.

Their

THEIR Captain, who was to command the whole Party in London, and had for his Device in his Enſign theſe Words, THE LORD GOD AND GIDEON, was a Wine-Cooper of a competent Eſtate, a very ſtrong Man, who defended himſelf with his Sword, and killed ſome of thoſe who aſſaulted him, till He fell with his Wounds, as ſome others about him did; all whom He had perſuaded, that They ſhould be able to do as much upon their Enemies, as Jonathan and his Armour Bearer did upon the Philiſtians, or any others in the Old Teſtament had upon thoſe whom the Lord delivered into their Hands. Nor could it be found upon all his Examinations, that there was any other formed Deſign, than what muſt probably attend the Declaration of the Army, of which He was aſſured. He and the other hurt Men were committed to the Gaol, and to the ſpecial Charge of the Surgeons, that They might be preſerved for a Trial.

THE next Morning the Council met early, and having received an Account of all that had paſſed, They could not but conclude, that this ſo extravagant an Attempt could not be founded upon the Raſhneſs of one Man, who had been always looked upon as a Man of Senſe and Reaſon. And thereupon They thought it neceſſary to ſuſpend the diſbanding the General's Regiment of Foot, which had the Guard of Whitehall, and was by the Order of Parliament to have been diſbanded the next Day; and writ to the King "to approve of what They had done, and to appoint "it to be continued till farther Order," which his Majeſty conſented to. And this was the true Ground and Occaſion of the continuing and increaſing the Guard for his Majeſty's Perſon, which no Man at that Time thought to be more than was neceſſary. Order was given for the ſpeedy Trial of Venner and his Accomplices; many whereof with himſelf would have died of their Wounds, if their Trial had been deferred for many Days: But the Surgeons Skill preſerved them till then, where They made no other Defence for themſelves than what is before mentioned; nor did then, or at their Deaths (there being ten or a dozen executed) make the leaſt Show of Sorrow for what They had attempted.

For which He, and ſeveral of his Aſſociates are executed.

THERE is no Occaſion for mentioning more of the particular Proceedings of this Parliament, which though it met afterwards at the Time appointed, and proceeded with all Duty to the King, in raiſing great Sums of Money for the Army and the Navy, and for the Payment of other great Debts, which They thought themſelves concerned to diſcharge, and which had never been incurred by the King; and likewiſe paſſed many good Acts for the ſettling a future Revenue for the Crown, and a Vote that They would raiſe that Revenue to twelve hundred thouſand Pounds yearly: Yet They gave not any Thing to the King himſelf (all the reſt was received and paid by thoſe who were deputed by them to that Purpoſe) but ſeventy thouſand Pounds towards the Diſcharge of his Coronation, which He had appointed to be in the Beginning of May following. And this ſeventy thouſand Pounds was all the Money the King received or could diſpoſe of, in a full Year after his Coming to London; ſo that there could not but be a very great Debt contracted in that Time, for the Payment whereof He muſt afterwards provide as well as He could. I ſay, I ſhall not mention more of the Particulars of that Parliament, becauſe it was foreſeen by all, that though their Meeting had produced all thoſe good Effects, in the reſtoring the King, diſbanding the Army, and many other Things, which could be wiſhed; yet that the laſting Validity of all They had done, would depend upon another Parliament to be legally ſummoned by the King with all thoſe Formalities which this wanted; and the Confirmation of that Parliament would be neceſſary for the People's Security, that They ſhould enjoy all that this had granted: So that when I ſhall ſpeak again of the Proceedings of Parliament, it will be of that Parliament which will be called by his Majeſty's Writ.

ONLY before We diſſolve this, and becauſe there hath been ſo little ſaid of the Licenſe and Diſtemper in Religion, which his Majeſty exceedingly apprehended would have received ſome Countenance from the Parliament; We ſhall remember that the King having by his Declaration from Breda referred the compoſing and ſettling all that related to the Government of the Church to the Parliament. He could do nothing towards it himſelf: But by his gracious Reception of the old Biſhops who were ſtill alive, and his own Practice in his Devotions and the Government of his Royal Chapel, He declared ſufficiently what ſhould be done in other Places. The Party of the Preſbyterians was very numerous in the Houſe of Commons, and had before the King's Return made a Committee to deviſe ſuch a Government for the Church, as might either totally exclude Biſhops, or make them little ſuperiour to the reſt of the Clergy. But the Spirit of the Time had of itſelf elected many Members, notwithſtanding the Injunctions ſent out with the Writs, and expreſly contrary to ſuch Injunctions, of a very different Allay; who together with ſuch as were choſen after his Majeſty's Return, were numerous enough to obſtruct and check any Prevalence of that Party, though not of Power enough to compel them to conſent to ſober Counſels. And ſo the Buſineſs was kept ſtill at the Committee, now and then getting Ground, and then caſt back again, as the ſober Members attended; ſo that no Report was brought to the Houſe from thence, which might have given the King ſome Trouble. And by Degrees the Heads of that Party grew weary of the Warmth of their Proſecution, which They ſaw not like to produce any notable Fruit that They cared for. The King deſired no more than that They ſhould do Nothing, being ſure that in a little Time He ſhould himſelf do the Work beſt. And ſo in September when He adjourned them, He took Notice "that "They had offered him no Advice towards the com- "poſing the Diſſentions in Religion, and therefore He "would try in that ſhort Adjournment of the Par- "liament, what He could do towards it himſelf."

AND thereupon he was himſelf preſent many Days, and for many Hours each Day, at a Conference between many of the London Miniſters, who were the Heads of the Preſbyterian Party, with an equal Number of the Orthodox Clergy, who had been for ſo many Years deprived of all that They had: Which Conference was held at Worceſter-houſe in the Chancellor's Lodgings, to conſider what Ceremonies ſhould be retained in the Church, and what Alterations ſhould be made in the Liturgy that had been formerly uſed; and the Subſtance of this Conference was afterwards publiſhed in Print. The King upon this publiſhed a Declaration concerning Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, whereIn He took Notice "of the Conference that had been "in his own Preſence, and that He had commanded the "Clergy of Both Sides to meet together at the Savoy in "the Maſter's Lodgings, and if it were poſſible, to agree "upon ſuch an Act of Uniformity, that might be con- "firmed in Parliament." And in the mean Time "He ſignified his Pleaſure, that Nobody ſhould be "puniſhed for not uſing The Book of Common Prayer "which had been formerly eſtabliſhed, or for diſcon- "tinuing the Surplice, and the Sign of the Croſs; "and that all who deſired to conform to the old "Practice in the uſing them all, ſhould be at the ſame "Liberty:" Which Declaration was read to, and put into the Hands of the Divines of Both Sides for ſome Days; and then They were again heard before his Majeſty at Worceſter-Houſe. And though it cannot be denied, that either Party did deſire that ſomewhat might be put in, and ſomewhat left out, in neither of which they were gratified; yet it is moſt true, They were Both well content with it, or ſeemed ſo. And the Declaration was publiſhed in his Majeſty's Name before the Return of the Parliament.

Two instances of the Disingenuity of the Presbyterian Ministers.

HERE I cannot but instance two Acts of the Presbyterians, by which, if their Humour and Spirit were not enough discovered and known, their Want of Ingenuity and Integrity would be manifest, and how impossible it is for Men who would not be deceived to depend on either. When the Declaration had been delivered to the Ministers, there was a Clause in it, in which the King declared "his own constant Practice of The Common Prayer, and that He would take "it well from those who used it in their Churches, "that the common People might be again acquainted "with the Piety, Gravity and Devotion of it, and "which He thought would facilitate their living in "a good Neighbourhood together;" or Words to that Effect. When They had considered the Whole some Days, Mr. Calamy and some other Ministers deputed by the rest, came to the Chancellor to redeliver it to his Hands. They acknowledged "the King had been "very gracious to them in his Concessions; though "He had not granted all that some of their Brethren "wished, yet They were contented:" Only desired him, "that He would prevail with the King, that "the Clause mentioned before might be left out; "which" They protested "was moved by them "for the King's own End, and that They might show "their Obedience to him, and Resolution to do him "Service. For They were resolved themselves to do "what the King wished, and first to reconcile the "People, who for near twenty Years had not been "acquainted with that Form, by informing them "that it contained much Piety and Devotion, and "might be lawfully used; and then that They would "begin to use it themselves, and by Degrees accustom "the People to it: Which" they said "would have a "better Effect, than if the Clause were in the Declaration; for They should be thought in their Persuasions to comply only with the King's Recommendation, and to merit from his Majesty, and not "to be moved from the Conscience of the Duty; and "so they should take that Occasion to manifest their "Zeal to please the King. And They feared there "would be other ill Consequences from it, by the "Waywardness of the common People, who were to "be treated with Skill, and would not be prevailed "upon all at once." The King was to be present the next Morning, to hear the Declaration read the last Time before Both Parties; and then the Chancellor told him, in the Presence of all the rest, what the Ministers had desired; which They again enlarged upon with the same Protestations of their Resolutions, in such a Manner, that his Majesty believed They meant honestly; and the Clause was left out. But the Declaration was no sooner published, than observing that the People were generally satisfied with it, They sent their Emissaries abroad: And many of their Letters were intercepted, and particularly a Letter from Mr. Calamy to a leading Minister in Somersetshire, whereby He advised and entreated him, "that "He and his Friends would continue and persist in "the Use of The Directory, and by no Means admit "The Common Prayer in their Churches; for that He "made no Question but that They should prevail "farther with the King, than he had yet consented "to in his Declaration."

THE other Instance was, that as soon as the Declaration was printed, the King received a Petition in the Name of the Ministers of London and many others of the same Opinion with them, who had subscribed that Petition; amongst whom none of those who had attended the King in those Conferences had their Names. They gave his Majesty humble Thanks "for the Grace He had vouchsafed to shew in his Declaration, which They received as an Earnest of his "future Goodness and Condescension in granting all "those other Concessions, which were absolutely necessary for the Liberty of their Conscience;" and desired with much Importunity and ill Manners, "that the wearing the Surplice, and the using the "Cross in Baptism, might be absolutely abolished out "of the Church, as being scandalous to all Men of "tender Consciences." From those two Instances all Men may conclude, that Nothing but a severe Execution of the Law can ever prevail upon that Classis of Men to conform to Government.

The Parliament meets again, and is dissolved.

WHEN the Parliament came together again after their Adjournment, They gave the King publick Thanks for his Declaration, and never proceeded farther in the Matter of Religion, of which the King was very glad: Only some of the Leaders brought a Bill into the House "for the making that Declaration a "Law," which was suitable to their other Acts of Ingenuity, to keep the Church for ever under the same Indulgence and without any Settlement; which being quickly perceived, there was no farther Progress in it. And the King upon the nine and twentieth of December, after having given them an ample Testimony of their Kindness towards him, which He magnified with many gracious Expressions, and his Royal Thanks for the settling his Revenue and Payment of the publick Debts, promised "to send out Writs for the calling another "Parliament, which He doubted not would confirm "all that They had done, and in which He hoped "many of them would be elected again to serve:" And so dissolved the present Parliament with as general an Applause as hath been known; though it was quickly known, that the Revenue They had settled was not in Value equal to what They had computed. Nor did the Monies They granted in any Degree arise to enough to pay either the Arrears to the Army, or the Debts to the Navy; Both which must be the Work of the ensuing Parliament, which was directed to meet upon the eighth of May following: Before which Time, the King made Choice of worthy and learned Men to supply the vacant Sees of Bishops, which had been void so many Years, and who were consecrated accordingly before the Parliament met. And before We come to that Time, some particular Occurences of Moment must be first inserted.

A new Parliament summoned to meet.

WHEN the King arrived in England, Monsieur Bordeaux was there Ambassador from the King of France, and had resided Ambassador there about three Years in Cromwell's Time, and lived in marvellous Lustre, very acceptable and dear to Cromwell, having treated all the secret Alliance between the Cardinal and him; and was even trusted by the Protector in many of his Counsels, especially to discover any Conspiracy against him; for He lived jovially, made great Entertainments to Lords and Ladies without Distinction, and amongst them would frequently let fall some Expressions of Compassion and Respect towards the King. After Cromwell's Death his Credentials were quickly renewed to Richard his Successor, with whom all the former Treaties were again established. And when He was put down, He was not long without fresh Credit to the Commonwealth that succeeded: And so upon all Vicissitudes was supplied with Authority to endear his Master's Affection to the present Powers, and to let them know, "how well the Cardinal was "disposed to join the Power of France to their Interest." And his Dexterity had been such towards all, that the Cardinal thought fit to send him new Credentials against the Time of the King's Coming to London. And within few Days after, when He had provided a new Equipage to appear in more Glory than He had ever yet done, He sent to desire an Audience from the King.

THE Earl of St. Albans was newly come from France; and to him Bordeaux had applied himself, who was always very ready to promote any Thing that might be grateful to that Crown. But the King would not resolve any Thing in the Point, till he had conferred upon it with the Council: Where it being debated, there was an unanimous Consent (the Earl of St. Albans only excepted, who exceedingly laboured the contrary), "that it could not stand with his Majesty's " jesty's Honour to receive him as Ambassadour, who " had transacted so many Things to his Disadvan- " tage, and shifted his Face so often, always in Con- " junction with his greatest Enemies; and that it was " a great Disrespect in the Crown of France towards " his Majesty in sending such a Person, who They " could not believe (without great undervaluing the " King) could be acceptable to him." The King him- self was of that Opinion; and instead of assigning him a Day for his Audience, as was desired, He sent him an express Command to depart the Kingdom. And when He afterwards, with much Importunity, desired only to be admitted as a Stranger to see his Majesty, and to speak to him; his Majesty as positively refused to admit him to his Presence. All which was imputed principally to the Chancellor, who had with some Warmth opposed his being received as Ambassadour; and when He sent by a Person well enough esteemed by the Chancellor, " that He would receive a Visit " from him," He expresly refused to see him. Whoever gave the Advice, the King had great Honour by it in France itself, which declared no Kind of Resentment of it, and gave poor Bordeaux such a Reception, after having served them five Years with notable Success, and spent his whole Estate in the Service, that in a short Time He died heart-broken in Misery and uninquired after. And forthwith that King sent the Count of Soissons, the most illustrious Person in France, very nobly accompanied and bravely attended, as his Ambassadour, to congratulate his Majesty's happy Restoration, with all the Compliments of Friendship and Esteem that can be imagined.

The Ambassadour from France to the late Powers commanded to quit the Kingdom.

THERE was another Ambassadour at the same Time in London, who might be thought to stand in the same Predicament with Bordeaux, though in Truth their Cases were very different, and who received a very different Treatment. That was the Ambassadour of Portugal, who had been sent by that Crown to finish a Treaty that had been begun by another Ambassadour with Cromwell; who had been so ill used, that They had put his Brother publickly to Death for a rash Action in which a Gentleman had been killed; upon which He had got Leave from his Master to quit the Kingdom. And this other Ambassadour had been sent in his Room; and was forced to consent and submit to very hard Conditions, as a Ransom for that King's Generosity in assisting the King in his lowest Condition, by receiving Prince Rupert with his Majesty's Fleet in Lisbon, and so preserving them from a Fleet much superiour in Number and Goodness of the Ships, that pursued him by Commission from Cromwell: Who took that Action so to Heart, that He made War upon that Kingdom, took their Ships, obstructed their Trade, and blocked up all their Ports; whilst the Spanish Army invaded them at Land, and took their Towns in the very Heart of the Kingdom. And to redeem that poor King from that terrible Persecution, that Treaty had been submitted to; in which, besides the yearly Payment of a great Sum of Money from Portugal, which was to continue for many Years, other great Advantages in Trade had been granted to England. The King made no Scruple of receiving this Ambassadour with a very good Countenance; and as soon as He got his Credentials, gave him a publick Audience, with all the Formality and Ceremony that in those Cases are usual and necessary.

An Account of the Treaty and Marriage with Portugal.

AND because in some Time after a Negotiation was set on Foot of the highest Importance, and had its Effect in the King's Marriage with the Queen; and because, how acceptable soever both that Treaty and Conclusion of it was then to the whole Kingdom, that Affair was afterwards imputed to the Chancellor, and in the Opinion of many proved to be the Cause and Ground of all his Misfortunes: I shall here set down all the Particulars that introduced and attended that Negotiation and Treaty, with all the Circumstances, some whereof may appear too light, and yet are not without Weight, to make it appear to all the World, how far the Chancellor was from being the Author of that Counsel (and if He had been, there was no Reason to be ashamed of it) and that He did nothing before, in, or after that Treaty, but what was necessary for a Man in his Condition, and what very well became a Person of that Trust and Confidence He was in with his Master.

It hath been remembered before, that upon the Publication of the Duke's Marriage, and the Reconciliation upon that Affair, the Chancellor was very solicitous that the King himself would marry; that He desired the Marquis of Ormond very earnestly to advise him to it; And himself often put his Majesty in Mind of what He had said to him in France, when the Duke was persuaded to treat about a Marriage with Mademoiselle de Longueville, " that his Majesty " was by no Means to consent, that his Heir Appa- " rent should marry before himself were married," for which He had given some Reasons; for which at that Time He underwent great Displeasures. And this Discourse He had held often with the King: And sure no Man in England more impatiently desired to see him married than He did. Indeed it was no easy Matter to find a Person in all Respects so fit, that a Man would take upon him to propose in particular; nor did He think himself in many Respects, and with Reference to the Accidents which might probably or possibly fall out, fit, if He could have thought of One, or be the Author of the Proposition.

The Portuguese Ambassadour proposes the Marriage.

ONE Day the King came to the Chancellor's House in the Afternoon; and being alone with him, his Majesty told him, " that He was come to confer with " him upon an Argument that He would well like, " which was about his own Marriage," He said, the " Lord Chamberlain" (who was then Earl of Manchester) " had held a Discourse with him some Days " past, that seemed to have somewhat in it that was " worth the thinking of. That He had told him, " the Portugal Ambassadour had made him a Visit, and " having some Conference with him concerning the King, " towards whose Person He professed a profound Respect, " He said it was Time for his Majesty to think of Mar- " riage; which Nothing could keep him from, but the " Difficulty of finding a fit Consort for him. That there " was in Portugal a Princess in her Beauty, Person and " Age, very fit for him, and who would have a Portion " suitable to her Birth and Quality. That it is true She " was a Catholick, and would never depart from her " Religion; but was totally without that Meddling and " Activity in her Nature, which many Times made those " of that Religion troublesome and restless, when They came " into a Country where another Religion was practised. " That She had been bred under a wise Mother, who was " still Regent in that Kingdom, who had carefully infused " another Spirit into her, and kept her from affecting to " have any Hand in Business, and which She had never " been acquainted with; so that She would look only to " enjoy her own Religion, and not at all concern herself " in what others professed. That He had Authority to " make the Proposition to the King, with such Particulari- " ties as included many Advantages above any, He thought, " which could accompany any Overture of that Kind from " another Prince. To which the Chamberlain had " added, that there could be no Question, but that a Pro- " testant Queen would in all Respects be looked upon as the " greatest Blessing to the Kingdom: But if such a one " could not be found, He did really believe, that a Prin- " cess of this Temper and Spirit would be the best of all " Catholicks. That the Trade of Portugal was great " here, and that England had a more beneficial Commerce " with that Crown than with any other: Which had in- " duced Cromwell to make that Peace, when He had " upon the Matter forsworn it; and the making it had " been the most popular Action He had ever performed."

His Majesty said, " that He had only answered " the Chamberlain, that He would think of it. But " that the very Morning of this Day, the Ambassa- " dour of Portugal had been with him, and without " any Formality had entered into the ſame Diſcourſe, " and ſaid all that the Lord Chamberlain had men- " tioned: To which He added, that He had Authority " to offer to his Majeſty five hundred thouſand Pounds " Sterling in ready Money, as a Portion with the Infanta; " and likewiſe to aſſign over, and for ever to annex to " the Crown of England, the Poſſeſſion of Tangier upon " the African Shore in the Mediterranean Sea, a Place " of that Strength and Importance, as would be of infi- " nite Benefit and Security to the Trade of England; and " likewiſe to grant to the Engliſh Nation a free Trade in " Braſil and in the Eaſt-Indies, which They had hitherto " denied to all Nations but themſelves. And for their " Security to enjoy that Privilege, They would put into his " Majeſty's Hands and Poſſeſſion, and for ever annex to " the Crown of England, the Iſland of Bombayne (with " the Towns and Caſtles therein, which are within a very " little Diſtance from Bombayne*)*; which hath within " itſelf a very good and ſpacious Harbour, and would be " a vaſt Improvement to the Eaſt India Trade. And " thoſe two Places, He ſaid, of Tangier and Bombayne, " might reaſonably be valued above the Portion in Money."

The King approves the Propoſal.

The King mentioned all the Diſcourſe as a Matter that pleaſed him, and might prove of notable Advantage to the Kingdom; and ſaid " that He had wiſhed " the Ambaſſadour to confer with him (the Chan- " cellor) upon it;" and then aſked him " what " He thought of it:" To which He anſwered, " that " He had not heard of it enough to think of it" (for He had never heard or thought of it before that Moment); " and therefore He ſhould not be able to do " more when the Ambaſſadour came to him, than to " hear what He ſaid, and report it to his Majeſty for " the preſent." He only aſked, " whether his Ma- " jeſty had given over all Thoughts of a Proteſtant " Wife:" To which He anſwered, " He could find " none ſuch, except amongſt his own Subjects; and " amongſt them He had ſeen none that pleaſed him " enough to that End." And obſerving the Chancellor to look fixedly upon him, He ſaid, " that he " would never think more of the Princeſs of Orange's " Daughter, her Mother having uſed him ſo ill when " He propoſed it; and if He ſhould now think of it, " He knew his Mother would never conſent to it, and " that it would break his Siſter's Heart: Therefore " He had reſolved never to entertain that Thought " again. And that he ſaw no Objection againſt this " Overture from Portugal, that would not occur in " any other, where the Advantages would not be ſo " many or ſo great."

What could the Chancellor ſay? What Objection could He make, why this Overture ſhould not be hearkened to? And what would the King have thought, or what might He not have thought, if He had adviſed him to reject this Motion? He gave him no other Anſwer for the preſent, than " that He deſired Nothing " more in this World, than to ſee his Majeſty well " married; and He was very confident that all his " good Subjects were of the ſame Mind: And there- " fore there muſt be ſome very viſible Inconvenience " in it, when He ſhould diſſuade him not to embrace " ſuch an Opportunity. That He would be ready to " confer with the Portugal Ambaſſadour when He " came, and then He ſhould entertain his Majeſty " farther upon that Subject." The Ambaſſadour came to him, repeated what he ſaid and propoſed to the King, with little other Enlargement, than concerning the Benefit England would receive by the two Places of Tangier and Bombayne, and the Deſcription of their Situation and Strength; of all which the Chancellor gave his Majeſty a faithful Account, without preſuming to mingle with it a Word of his own Advice. The King appeared abundantly pleaſed, and willing to proceed farther; and aſked " what was next " to be done:" To which He anſwered, " that it was " a Matter of too great Importance for him to deliver " any Opinion upon; indeed too great for his Majeſty " himſelf to reſolve, upon the private Advice of any " one Man, how agreeable ſoever it ſhould be to his " own Inclination and Judgment." And therefore He deſired him " that He would call to him four or " five Perſons, whom He thought to be the moſt " competent Conſiderers of ſuch an Affair, and con- " ſult it very maturely with them, before he enter- " tained any more Conference with the Ambaſſadour. " For whatſoever he ſhould reſolve upon it, it ought " yet to be kept in all poſſible Secrecy: If it ſhould " be thought fit to be rejected, it ought to be with- " out the leaſt Noiſe, and the leaſt Reflection upon " the Overture, which had been made with all the " poſſible Demonſtration of Eſteem: If it ſhould ap- " pear worthy of Entertainment and Acceptation, it " would ſtill require the ſame Secrecy; till the Value " and Conſequence of all the Particulars propoſed by " the Ambaſſadour might be fully examined and " weighed, and a more particular and ſubſtantial Aſ- " ſurance given for the Accompliſhment, than the " bare Word of the Ambaſſadour."

He appoints a Committee to enter into a Treaty with the Ambaſſadour.

The King appointed that the Lord Treaſurer, the Marquis of Ormond, the Lord Chamberlain, and Secretary Nicholas, ſhould be together at the Chancellor's Houſe, where his Majeſty would likewiſe be and propoſe the Buſineſs to them. And accordingly He did relate to them the whole Series of what had paſſed, and required them " with all poſſible Freedom to deliver " their Opinions, and to conſider whether there was " any other Princeſs or Lady in their View, with whom " he might marry more advantageouſly." He added, " that He had ſpoken both with the Earl of Sandwich " and Sir John Lawſon occaſionally and merely as " looſe Diſcourſe, what Place Tangier was, which He " pointed to in the Map, and whether it was well " known to them: and They Both ſaid They knew it well " from Sea. But that Sir John Lawſon had been in it, " and ſaid, it was a Place of that Importance, that if it " were in the Hands of the Hollanders, They would quickly " make a Mole, which They might eaſily do; that now Ships " could not ride there in ſuch a Wind," which his Majeſty named; " but if there were a Mole, they would ride " ſecurely in all Weather; and They would keep the Place " againſt all the World, and give the Law to all the Trade " of the Mediterranean:" With which Diſcourſe his Majeſty ſeemed very much affected. After many Queſtions and much Debate, and ſome of the Lords wiſhing that it were poſſible to get a Queen that was a Proteſtant, and One of them naming the Daughter of Harry Prince of Orange, of whom They had heard ſome Mention when his Majeſty was beyond the Seas, and of whoſe eldeſt Siſter (then married to the Elector of Brandenburgh) there had been ſome Diſcourſe in the Life of the late King; (but his Majeſty quickly declared, " that He had very unanſwerable " Reaſons why he could not entertain that Alli- " ance"); All the Lords unanimouſly agreed, " that " there was no Catholick Princeſs in Europe, whom his " Majeſty could with ſo much Reaſon and Advantage " marry, as the Infanta of Portugal. That the Por- " tion propoſed in Money, ſetting aſide the Places, " was much greater, almoſt double to what any King " had ever received in Money by any Marriage. And " the Places ſeemed to be ſituated very uſefully for " Trade, the Increaſe whereof his Majeſty was to " endeavour with all poſſible Solicitude; which could " only make this Nation flouriſh, and recover the In- " tereſt They had loſt, eſpecially in the Indies and in " the Mediterranean, by the late Troubles and Diſ- " tractions, and the Advantage the Dutch had thereby " gotten over the Engliſh in thoſe Trades, as well as in " other." The King approved all that had been ſaid, and thereupon appointed all thoſe Lords with the ſame Secrecy to enter into a Treaty with the Ambaſſadour; which was begun between them accordingly.

The Treaty neither was nor could be a Secret; nor was there any Thing more generally deſired, than that a Treaty of Alliance and Commerce ſhould be made with Portugal, that the Trade might continue with with Security: And it was very grateful to every Body to know, that there was a Committee appointed to that Purpoſe. But the Propoſition towards a Marriage was ſtill a Secret, not communicated to any, nor ſo much as ſuſpected by the Spaniſh Ambaſſadour, who did all He could to obſtruct the very Treaty of Alliance; of whoſe Proceedings there will be Occaſion to make Mention anon by itſelf. The Ambaſſadour offered "to renew the Treaty (if that of the Marriage was "conſented to) in Terminis, that had been made with "Cromwell, without being ſo much as exempted from "that yearly Payment, which had been impoſed upon "them for aſſiſting Prince Rupert," and had been aſſigned to the Merchants to ſatisfy the Damages they had ſuſtained by Prince Rupert; and the Releaſe whereof muſt have obliged the King to pay it himſelf: And therefore that Offer was looked upon as a generous Thing. And the whole Treaty, which They had not yet peruſed, was generally looked upon and believed to be the moſt advantageous to England, that had been ever entered into with any Crown.

IT had been foreſeen from the firſt Motion towards this Marriage, that it would be a very hard Matter with ſuch Alliance, to avoid ſuch a Conjunction with Portugal as would produce a War with Spain; which the King had no Mind to be engaged in. For beſides that He had received ſome Civilities from that King; after a World of Diſobligations, his Reſident at Madrid Sir Harry Bennet, had conſented in his Majeſty's Name, that the old Treaty which had been made between the two Crowns in the Year 1630, ſhould be again obſerved; of which more anon. But his Majeſty's firm Reſolution at that Time was, wholly to intend the compoſing or ſubduing the Diſtempers and ill Humours in his three Kingdoms and all his other Dominions; and till that ſhould be fully done, He would have no Difference with any of his Neighbours, nor be engaged in any War which He could avoid: A Reſolution very prudently made; and if it had been adhered to, much Evil which ſucceeded the Departure from it, might have been prevented.

BUT the Lords found, upon Peruſal of the Treaty, one Article (which was indeed the only Article that made any Show of Benefit and Advantage to Portugal) by which Cromwell was obliged to aſſiſt Portugal when They ſhould require it, with ſix thouſand Foot, to be levied in England at their Charge. And now the Ambaſſadour urged, "that in Conſideration of the "Marriage, the Portion, the Delivery of thoſe Places, "and his Majeſty's own Intereſt by that Marriage in "Portugal, which upon the Death of the King and his "Brother muſt devolve to his Majeſty; He would "take upon him the Protection of that Kingdom, "and denounce War with Spain:" To which his Majeſty warmly and poſitively anſwered, "that He would "admit no ſuch Engagement; that He was not in a "Condition to make a War till He could not avoid "it. He would do what was lawful for him to do; "He would chooſe a Wife for himſelf, and he could "help a Brother and Ally with a Levy of Men at "their Charge, without entering into a War with any "other Prince. And if Spain ſhould, either upon his "Marriage or ſuch Supply, declare a War againſt him, "He would defend himſelf as well as He could, and "do as much Damage as He could to Spain; and then "that He would apply ſuch Aſſiſtance to Portugal, "as ſhould be moſt advantageous to it: And that He "ſhould not be willing to ſee it reduced under the "Obedience of Spain for many Reaſons. That in the "mean Time he would aſſiſt them with the ſame "Number as Cromwell had promiſed, and tranſport "them at his own Charge thither; provided that as "ſoon as They were landed, They ſhould be received "in the King of Portugal's Pay:" Which Offer the King made upon a Reaſon not then communicated, and which will be mentioned hereafter; beſides that He had ſuch a Body of Men ready for ſuch a Service, and which could with much more Security and little more Charge be tranſported to Portugal, than be diſbanded in the Place where They were.

WHEN the Ambaſſadour found that the King would not be perſuaded to enter directly into a War with Spain, though He offered "to put Barcelona into "his Hands, of which Don Joſeph Margarita" (a Perſon who had conducted the Revolt of that City, and all the Rebellion which had been lately in Catalonia) "then in Paris ſhould come over and give unqueſtion-"able Aſſurance," (all which, with many other Propoſitions of the ſame Nature, his Majeſty totally rejected); He concluded, that the Alliance and Marriage would give a preſent Reputation to Portugal, and make Impreſſion upon the Spirits of Spain, and that a War would hereafter fall out unavoidably: And ſo accepted what the King had offered. And then there remained Nothing to be done, but to give unqueſtionable Security to the King, for the Performance of all the Particulars which had been promiſed; and for which there appeared yet no other Warrant, than Letters and Inſtructions to the Ambaſſadour from the Queen Regent. And for farther Satisfaction therein, the Ambaſſadour offered "preſently to paſs "into Portugal, and doubted not, in as ſhort a Time "as could be expected, to return with ſuch Power and "Authority, and ſuch a full Conceſſion of what had "been propoſed, as ſhould be very ſatisfactory." Which his Majeſty well liked; and writ himſelf to the Queen Regent and to the King ſuch Letters, as ſignified "his full Reſolution for the Marriage, if all "the Particulars promiſed by the Ambaſſadour in "Writing ſhould be made good;" and writ likewiſe "a Letter with his own Hand to the Infanta, as to a "Lady whom He looked upon as his Wife; and aſ-"ſigned two Ships to attend the Ambaſſadour, who "immediately, and with ſome Appearance or Pre-"tence of Diſcontent or Diſſatisfacton (that the Se-"cret might be the leſs diſcovered,) embarked with all his Family for the River of Liſbon. And to this Time the Chancellor had never mentioned any particular Advice of his own to the King, more than his Concurrence with the reſt of the Lords; nor in Truth had any of them ſhowed more Inclination towards it, than the King himſelf had done, who ſeemed marvellouſly pleaſed, and had ſpoken much more in private with the Ambaſſadour upon it, than any of the Lords had done, and of ſome Particulars which They were never acquainted with.

The Treaty of Commerce with Portugal ſettled.

The Ambaſſadour goes into Portugal for farther Powers.

THAT I may not break off the Thread of this Diſcourſe till I bring it to a Concluſion, nor leave out any important Particular that related to that Subject; I ſhall in this Place make Mention of a little Cloud or Eclipſe, raiſed by the Activity and Reſtleſſneſs of the Earl of Briſtol, that ſeemed to interpoſe and darken the Splendour of this Treaty, and to threaten the Life thereof, by extinguiſhing it in the Bud: Upon which Occaſion the Chancellor thought himſelf obliged to appear more for it, than He had hitherto done; and which afterwards (how unjuſtly ſoever) was turned to his Reproach. This Earl (who throughout the whole Courſe of his Life frequently adminiſtered Variety of Diſcourſe, that could not be applied to any other Man) upon the Defeat of Sir George Booth, when all the King's Hopes in England ſeemed deſperate, had not the Patience to expect another Change that preſently ſucceeded; but preſently changed his Religion, and declared himſelf a Roman Catholick, that He might with undoubted Succeſs apply himſelf to the Service of Spain, to which the preſent good Acceptation He had with Don Juan was the greater Encouragement. He gave Account by a particular Letter to the Pope of this his Converſion, which was delivered by the General of the Jeſuits; in Return of which He received a cuſtomary Brief from his Sanctity, with the old Piece of Scripture never left out in thoſe Occaſions, Tu converſus converte Fratres tuos.

An Account of the Earl of Briſtol's Behaviour abroad.

THE Noiſe and Scandal of this Defection and Apoſtaſy in a ſworn Counſellor of the King and one of his Secretaries of State, made it neceſſary for the King to remove him from both thoſe Truſts, which He had made himſelf incapable to execute by the Laws of England, and which He propoſed to himſelf to enjoy with the more Advantage by his Change; and believed that the King, who ſeemed to have no other Hopes towards his Reſtoration than in Catholick Princes, would not think this a Seaſon in ordinary Policy to diſgrace a Servant of his Eminency and Relation, for no other Reaſon than his becoming Catholick, by which He ſhould have ſo many Opportunities to ſerve his Maſter. And this He had the Confidence to urge to the King, before He was obliged to deliver the Signet, and to forbear the being preſent any more in Council. And this Diſplacing and Remove He imputed entirely to his old Friend the Chancellor (with whom till that Minute He had for many Years held a very firm Friendſhip), and the more, becauſe He received from his Majeſty the ſame Countenance He had before, without any Reprehenſion for what He had done; the King not being at all ſurpriſed with his Declaration, becauſe He had long known that He was very indifferent in all Matters of Religion, and looked upon the outward Profeſſion of any, as depending wholly upon the Convenience or Diſcommodity that might be enjoyed by it. And with ſuch Diſcourſes He had too much entertained the King, who never would ſpeak ſeriouſly with him upon that Subject. And truly his own Relation of the Manner of his Converſion, with all the Circumſtances, and the Diſcourſe of an ignorant old Jeſuit whom He perfectly contemned, and of a ſimple good Woman, the Abbeſs of a Convent, which contributed to it; was ſo ridiculous, and adminiſtered ſuch Occaſion of Mirth, that his Majeſty thought Laughing at him to be the beſt Reproof. And the Earl bore that ſo well and gratefully from the King, and from his other familiar Friends too (for He diſſembled his taking any Thing ill of the Chancellor), and contributed ſo much himſelf to the Mirth, that He was never better Company than upon that Argument: And any Man would have believed, that He had not a worſe Opinion of the Religion he had forſaken, or of any other, by his becoming Roman Catholick.

When the King made his Journey to Fuentarabia to the Treaty between the two Crowns, the Earl of Briſtol's irreſiſtable Importunity prevailed with him to permit him to go likewiſe, though his Majeſty had received Advertiſement from Sir Harry Bennet, that Don Lewis de Haro deſired that He might not come with his Majeſty thither. The leaſt Part of the Miſchief He did in that Journey was, that He prevailed with the King to make ſo many Diverſions and Delays in it, that the Treaty was concluded before He came thither, and He was very near being diſappointed of all the Fruit He had propoſed to himſelf to receive from it. However it was finiſhed ſo much the better, that He left the Earl behind him, who in the ſhort Time of his Stay there, had ſo far inſinuated himſelf into the Grace and good Opinion of Don Lewis de Haro, who came with all the Prejudice and Deteſtation imaginable towards him, (as He had to his extraordinary Parts a marvellous Faculty of getting himſelf believed); that He was well content that He ſhould go with him to Madrid, where the King upon the Memory of his Father (who had deſerved well from that Crown, or rather had ſuffered much for not having deſerved ill) received him graciouſly. And therefore He reſided in the Reſident's Houſe, who had been his Servant, in ſuch a Repoſe as was agreeable to his Fancy, that He might project his own Fortune; which was the only Thing his Heart was ſet upon, and of which He deſpaired in his own Country.

The News of the King's miraculous Reſtoration quickly arrived at Madrid, and put an End to the Earl's farther Deſigns, believing He could not do better abroad than He might do in his own Country; and ſo He undertook his Journey through France laden with many Obligations from that Court, and arrived at London about the Time that the Ambaſſadour was embarked for Portugal. The King of Spain had, ſoon after the King's Arrival in England, ſent the Prince of Lygnes with a very ſplendid Ambaſſage to congratulate with his Majeſty, about the Time that the Count of Soiſſons came from France on the ſame Errand. And after his Return, the Baron of Batteville was ſent from Spain as Ordinary Ambaſſadour, a Man born in Burgundy in the Spaniſh Quarters, and bred a Soldier; in which Profeſſion He was an Officer of Note, and at that Time was Governour of St. Sebaſtian's and of that Province. He ſeemed a rough Man, and to have more of the Camp, but in Truth knew the Intrigues of a Court better than moſt Spaniards; and except when his Paſſion ſurpriſed him, was wary and cunning in his Negotiation. He lived with leſs Reſervation and more Jollity than the Miniſters of that Crown uſed to do; and drew ſuch of the Court to his Table and Converſation, who He obſerved were loud Talkers, and confident enough in the King's Preſence. An Account of the Spaniſh Ambaſſadour.

In the firſt private Audience He had, He delivered a Memorial to his Majeſty; in which He required "the Delivery of the Iſland of Jamaica to his Maſter, "it having been taken by his rebel Subjects contrary "to the Treaty of Peace between the two Crowns; "and likewiſe that his Majeſty would cauſe Dunkirk "and Mardike to be reſtored to his Catholick Majeſty, "they having not only been taken contrary to that "Treaty, but when his Majeſty was entertained in "that King's Dominions with all Courteſy and Re-"ſpect." And He likewiſe required in the King his Maſter's Name, "that the King would not give any "Aſſiſtance, nor enter into any Treaty of Alliance "with Portugal: For that the ſame, as the reſt, was "directly contrary to the laſt Treaty, which was now "again revived and ſtood in Force by the Declaration "of his Majeſty's Reſident at Madrid;" which was the firſt Notice any of his Majeſty's Miniſters had of any ſuch Declaration. But when He had delivered thoſe Memorials to the King, He never called for an Anſwer, nor willingly entered upon the Diſcourſe of either of the Subjects; but put it off merely as a Thing He was to do of Form once, that his Maſter's juſt Title might be remembered, but not to be preſſed till a fitter Conjuncture. For He eaſily diſcovered what Anſwer He ſhould receive: And ſo took the Advantage of the Licenſe of the Court, where no Rules or Formalities were yet eſtabliſhed (and to which the King himſelf was not enough inclined), but all Doors open to all Perſons. Which the Ambaſſadour finding, He made himſelf a Domeſtick, came to the King at all Hours, and ſpake to him when and as long as He would, without any Ceremony, or deſiring an Audience according to the old Cuſtom; but came into the Bedchamber whilſt the King was dreſſing himſelf, and mingled in all Diſcourſes with the ſame Freedom He would uſe in his own. And from this never heard of Licenſe, introduced by the French and the Spaniard at this Time without any Diſlike in the King, though not permitted in any other Court in Chriſtendom, many Inconveniences and Miſchiefs broke in, which could never after be ſhut out.

As ſoon as the Earl of Briſtol came to the Court, He was very willing to be looked upon as wholly devoted to the Spaniſh Intereſt; and ſo made a particular Friendſhip with the Spaniſh Ambaſſadour, with whom He had a former Acquaintance whilſt the King had been at Fuentarabia, that He might give a Teſtimony of his Gratitude for the Favours He had received ſo lately at Madrid. The King received him with his accuſtomed good Countenance; and He had an excellent Talent in ſpreading that Leaf Gold very thin, that it might look much more than it was: And took Pains by being always in his Preſence, and often whiſpering in his Ear, and talking upon ſome Subject with a Liberty not ingrateful, to have it believed that He was more than ordinarily acceptable to his Majesty. And the King, not wary enough against those Invasions, did communicate more to him of the Treaty with Portugal, than He had done to any other Person, except those who were immediately trusted in it.

THE Earl had always promised himself (though He knew He could not be of the Council, nor in any Ministry of State, by Reason of his Religion) that He was in so good Esteem with his Majesty and with most of those who were trusted by him, that He should have a great Share in all foreign Affairs, and should be consulted with in all Matters of that Kind, in Regard of the long Experience He had in foreign Parts; which indeed amounted to no more, than a great Exactness in the Languages of those Parts. And therefore He was surprised with the Notice of this Affair, and presently expressed his Dislike of it, and told his Majesty "that He would be exceedingly deceived in "it; that Portugal was poor, and not able to pay the "Portion They had promised. That now it was forsaken by France, Spain would overrun and reduce it "in one Year;" enlarging upon the great Preparations which were made for that Expedition, "of which "Don Lewis de Haro himself would be General, and "was sure of a great Party in Portugal itself, that "was weary of that Government: So that that miserable Family had no Hope, but by transporting "themselves and their poor Party in their Ships to "Brasil, and their large Territories in the East-"Indies, which were possessed only by Portuguese, who "might possibly be willing to be subject to them. "And that this was so much in the View of all Men, "that it was all the Care Spain had to prevent it." The King did not inform him, that He had concluded any Thing, and that the Ambassadour was gone for more ample Powers to satisfy his Majesty, that all that was promised should be performed.

The Earl of Bristol and the Spanish Ambassadour obstruct the Marriage.

THE Earl, who valued himself upon his great Faculty in obstructing and puzzling any Thing that was agreed upon, and in contriving whereof He had no Hand, repaired to the Spanish Ambassadour, and informed him, under Obligation of Secrecy, of what Treaty the King was entered upon with Portugal by the Advice of the Chancellor; which He hoped "that "They two should find some Means to break." But the Ambassadour's Breast was not large enough to contain that Secret. He talked of it in all Places with great Passion, and then took it up as from common Report, and spake to the King of it, and said, "the "Portugal Ambassadour had in his Vanity bragged of "it to some Catholicks, and promised them great "Things upon it; none of which He was confident "could be true, and that his Majesty could never be "prevailed with to consent to such a Treaty, which "would prove ruinous to himself and his Kingdom; "for the King of Spain could not but resent it to such "a Degree, as would bring great Inconvenience to his "Affairs." And his Majesty forbearing to give him any Answer, at least not such a one as pleased him, his Rage transported him to undervalue the Person of the Infanta. He said, "She was deformed, and had many "Diseases; and that it was very well known in Portu-"gal and in Spain, that She was incapable to bear "Children;" and many Particulars of that Nature.

WHEN He had said the same Things several Days to the King, the Earl of Bristol took his Turn again, and told the King other Things which the Ambassadour had communicated to him in Trust, and which He durst not presume to say to his Majesty, and which in Truth He had said himself, being concerning the Person of the Infanta, and her Incapacity to have Children; upon which He enlarged very pathetically, and said, "He would speak freely with the Chancellor of "it, upon whom the ill Consequences of this Counsel "would fall." He told him, "there were many "beautiful Ladies in Italy, of the greatest Houses; "and that his Majesty might take his Choice of them, "and the King of Spain would give a Portion with "her, as if She were a Daughter of Spain; and the "King should marry her as such." And the Ambassadour shortly after proposed the same Thing, and enlarged much upon it. And both the Earl and the Ambassadour conferred with the Chancellor (concealing the Propositions They had made concerning the Italian Ladies) "as of a Matter the Town talked of "and exceedingly disliked, the more because it was "generally known, that that Princess could not have "any Children." The King himself had informed the Chancellor of all that passed from the Ambassadour, and of his Rudeness towards the Infanta, and his declaring that She could have no Children; and told him, "that the Earl of Bristol resolved to confer with him, "and doubted not to convert him;" without seeming himself to have been moved with any Thing that the Ambassadour or the Earl had said to him: So that when They Both came afterwards to him, not together but severally, and He perceived that his Majesty had not to either of them imparted how far He had proceeded (but had heard them talk as of somewhat They had taken up from publick Rumour, and had himself discoursed of it as sprung from such a Fountain), the Chancellor did not take himself to be at Liberty to enter into a serious Debate of the Matter with them; but permitted them to enjoy the Pleasure of their own Opinion, and to believe that either there had been no Inclination to such a Treaty, or that the Weight of their Reasons would quickly enervate it.

The King appears much colder towards the Treaty.

WHETHER the King grew less inclined to marry, and liked the Liberty He enjoyed too well to be willing to be restrained; or whether what had been said to him of the Infanta's Person and her Unaptness for Children, had made some Impression in him; or whether the Earl of Bristol's describing the Persons of the Italian Ladies, and magnifying their Conversations (in which Arguments He had naturally a very luxurious Style, unlimited by any Rules of Truth or Modesty); it is not to be denied, that his Majesty appeared much colder, and less delighted to speak of Portugal, than He had been, and would sometimes wish, "that "the Ambassadour had not gone, and that He would "quickly return without Commission to give his Ma-"jesty Satisfaction." He seemed to reflect upon a War with Spain, "which," He said, "could not possi-"bly be avoided in that Alliance," with more Apprehension than He had formerly done, when that Contingency had been debated. All which Discourses troubled the Lords who had been trusted, very much, not conceiving that the Ambassadour's frantick Discourse could have any Weight in it, or that the Earl of Bristol (whose Levity and Vanity was enough known to the King) could make that Impression in him. However it appeared, that the Earl was much more in private with him than He had used to be, many Hours shut up together; and when the King came from him, that He seemed to be perplexed and full of Thoughts.

ONE Morning the Earl came to the Chancellor, and after some Compliments and many Protestations of his inviolable Friendship, He told him, "He was come "to take his Leave of him for some Months, being "to begin a long Journey as soon as He should part "with him; for He had already kissed the King's "Hand: And his Friendship would not permit him "to be reserved towards him, and to keep a Secret of "that vast Importance from his Knowledge." He said, "that the King had heard such unanswerable "Reasons against this Marriage with Portugal, that "He was firmly resolved never more to entertain a "Thought of it, That the Spanish Ambassadour had "recommended two Princesses to him, whereof He "might take his Choice, of incomparable Beauty and "all excellent Parts of Mind, who should be endowed "as a Daughter of Spain by that King, to whom They "were allied;" and so named the Ladies. He said, "this Discourse had prevailed very far upon the King, "as a Thing that could raise no Jealousies in France, "with whom He desired so to live, that He might be

" ſure to have Peace in his own Dominions. There " was only one Thing in which He deſired to be " better ſatisfied, which was the Perſons, Beauties " and good Humours of the Princeſſes; and that He " had ſo good an Opinion of his Judgment, that He " was confident if He ſaw them, He would eaſily " know whether either of them were like to pleaſe his " Majeſty; and would ſo far truſt him, that if He " did believe, knowing his Majeſty ſo well as He " did, that one of them would be grateful, He ſhould " carry Power with him to propound and conclude, " a Treaty; which," He ſaid, " He carried with " him, and likewiſe other Letters, upon which He " ſhould firſt find ſuch Acceſs and Admiſſion, as " would enable him to judge of their Nature and " Humour as well as of their Beauty." He ſeemed much tranſported with the great Truſt repoſed in him, and with the Aſſurance that He ſhould make the King and Kingdom happy. And He ſaid, " one " Reaſon, beſides his Friendſhip, that had made him " impart this great Secret, was a Preſumption, that " now He knew how far his Majeſty was diſpoſed " and in Truth engaged in this Particular, He would " not do any Thing to croſs or interrupt the Deſign." The Chancellor, enough amazed, by ſome Queſtions found He was utterly uninformed, how far the King ſtood engaged in Portugal; and knowing the incredible Power the Earl had over himſelf, to make him believe any Thing He had a Mind ſhould be true, He uſed little more Diſcourſe with him than " to wiſh " him a good Journey."

Upon the firſt Opportunity He told the King all that the Earl had ſaid to him; with which his Majeſty ſeemed not pleaſed, as expecting that the Secret ſhould have been kept better. He did not diſſemble his not wiſhing that the Treaty with Portugal might ſucceed; and confeſſed " that He had ſent the Earl of " Briſtol to ſee ſome Ladies in Italy, who were highly " extolled by the Spaniſh Ambaſſadour," but denied that He had given him ſuch Powers as He bragged of. The Chancellor thereupon aſked him, " whether " He well remembered his Engagement, which He " had voluntarily made, and without any Body's Per- " ſuaſion, to the King and Queen Regent;" and deſired him " to impart his new Reſolution to the Lords " who were formerly truſted by him. That probably " He might find good Reaſon and juſt Arguments to " break off the Treaty with Portugal; which ought " to be firſt done, before He embarked himſelf in " another: Otherwiſe that He would ſo far expoſe his " Honour to Reproach, that all Princes would be " afraid of entering into any Treaty with him." This was every Word of Perſuaſion, that He then or ever after uſed to him upon this Affair; nor did it at that Time ſeem to make any Impreſſion in him. However He ſent for the Lord Treaſurer, and conferred at large with him and the Lord Marquis of Ormond. And finding them exceedingly ſurpriſed with what He had done, and that They gave the ſame and other ſtronger Arguments againſt it than the other had done, his Majeſty ſeemed to recollect himſelf, and to think, that whatever Reſolution He ſhould think fit to take in the End, that He had not choſen the beſt Way and Method of proceeding towards it; and reſolved to call the Earl back, " which," He ſaid, " He could in- " fallibly do by Sir Kenelm Digby, who knew how to " ſend a Letter to him, before He had proceeded far- " ther in his Journey, it having been before agreed, " that He ſhould make a Halt in ſuch and ſuch Places, " to the End that He might be advertiſed of any new " Occurrences." And his Majeſty did write the ſame Night to him " to return, becauſe it was neceſſary to " have ſome more Conference with him." And the Letter was ſent by Sir Kenelm Digby, and probably received by the Earl in Time. But He continued his Journey into Italy; and after his Return pretended not to have received that Letter, or any other Order to return, till it was too late, being at that Time entered upon the Borders or Confines of Italy; in which He had not the good Fortune to be believed.

The Portugueſe Ambaſſadour returns, and is coldly received.

The Ambaſſadour of Portugal diſpatched his Voyage with more Expedition than could have been expected, and returned, as He believed, with at leaſt as full Satisfaction to all Particulars as could be expected; but found his Reception with ſuch a Coldneſs, that ſtruck the poor Gentleman (who was naturally hypochondriack) to the Heart; nor could He be informed from whence this Diſtemper proceeded. And therefore He forbore to deliver his Letters, which He thought might more expoſe the Honour of his Maſter and Miſtreſs to Contempt, and remained quietly in his Houſe, without demanding a ſecond Audience; until He could by ſome Way or other be informed what had fallen out ſince his Departure, that could raiſe thoſe Clouds which appeared in every Man's Looks. He ſaw the Spaniſh Ambaſſadour exceeding exalted with the Pride of having put an inſolent Affront upon the Ambaſſadour from France, which coſt his Maſter dear, and heard that He had bragged loudly of his having broken the Treaty of Portugal. And it is very true, that He did every Day ſomewhat either vainly or inſolently, that gave the King Offence, or leſſened the Opinion He had of his Diſcretion, and made him withdraw much of that Countenance from him, which He had formerly given him. This, and the Return of the Portugal Ambaſſadour with a new Title of Marquis de Sande (an Evidence according to the Cuſtom of that Court, that He had well ſerved his Maſter in his Employment), put him into new Fury; ſo that He came to the King with new Expoſtulations, and gave him a Memorial, in which He ſaid " that He had Order " from his Maſter to let his Majeſty know, that if " his Majeſty ſhould proceed towards a Marriage with " the Daughter of the Duke of Braganza, his Ma- " ſter's Rebel, He had Order to take his Leave pre- " ſently, and to declare War againſt him." The King returned ſome ſharp Anſwer preſently to him, and told him " He might be gone as ſoon as He " would, and that He would not receive Orders from " the Catholick King, how to diſpoſe himſelf in Mar- " riage." Upon which the Ambaſſadour ſeemed to think He had gone too far; and the next Day deſired another Audience, wherein He ſaid, " He had re- " ceived new Orders: And that his Catholick Majeſty " had ſo great an Affection for his Majeſty and the " Good of his Affairs, that having underſtood that, " in Reſpect of the preſent Diſtempers in Religion, " Nothing could be more miſchievous to him than to " marry a Catholick, therefore," He declared, " that " if there were any Proteſtant Lady, who would be " acceptable to his Majeſty," (and named the Daughter of the Princeſs Dowager of Orange) " the King " of Spain would give a Portion with her, as with a " Daughter of Spain; by which his Majeſty's Affairs " and Occaſions would be ſupplied."

The multiplying theſe and many other Extravagancies made the King reflect upon all the Ambaſſadour's Proceedings and Behaviour, and revolve the Diſcourſes He had held with him; and to conſider, whether they had not made greater Impreſſions upon him, than the Weight of them would bear. He had himſelf ſpoken with ſome who had ſeen the Infanta, and deſcribed her to be a Perſon very different from what the Ambaſſadour had delivered. He had ſeen a Picture that was reported to be very like her; and upon the View of it his Majeſty ſaid, " that Perſon " could not be unhandſome." And by Degrees conſidering the many Things alledged by the Ambaſſadour, which could not be known by him, and could reſult from Nothing but his own Malice, his Majeſty returned to his old Reſolution; and ſpake at large with the Portugal Ambaſſadour with his uſual Freedom, and received both the Letters and Information He brought with him, and declared " that He was " fully ſatisfied in all the Particulars."

Now

Extravagant Behaviour of the Spanish Ambassadour.

NOR did the Carriage of the Spanish Ambassadour contribute a little towards his Majesty's Resolution: For He, without any other Ground than from his own Fancy (for the King had not declared his Purpose to any, nor was the Thing spoken of abroad), and from what He collected from his Majesty's sharp Replies to his insolent Expressions, took upon him to do an Act of the highest Extravagancy, that hath been done in Europe by the Minister of any State in this Age. He caused to be printed in English the Copies of the Memorials which He had presented to the King, and of the Discourses He had made against the Match with Portugal, with the Offers the King of Spain had made to prevent so great a Mischief to the Kingdom, and other seditious Papers to the same Purpose; and caused those Papers to be spread abroad in the Army and amongst the Populace: Some whereof were cast out of his own Windows amongst the Soldiers, as They passed to and from the Guard. Upon which unheard of Misdemeanor, the King was so much incensed, that He sent the Secretary of State "to require him "forthwith to depart the Kingdom, without seeing his "Majesty's Face," which He would not admit him to do; and to let him know, "that He would send a "Complaint of his Misbehaviour to the King his "Master, from whom He would expect that Justice "should be done upon him." The Ambassadour received this Message with exceeding Trouble and Grief, even to Tears, and desired, "to be admitted to see "the King, and to make his humble Submission, and "to beg his Pardon; which He was ready to do:" But that being denied, within few Days He departed the Kingdom, carrying with him the Character of a very bold rash Man.

For which He is required to leave the Kingdom.

An Incident that promises the Treaty of Marriage.

THERE was an Accident about this Time, that it is probable did confirm the King in his Resolution concerning Portugal. At this Time Cardinal Mazarin was dead, and had never been observed to be merry and to enjoy his natural pleasant Humour, from the Time of the King's Restoration, which had deceived all his Calculations, and broken all his Measures. Upon his Death the Ministry was committed to three Persons (the King himself being still present at all their Consultations), Monsieur de Tellier and Monsieur de Lionne, the two Secretaries of State, and Monsieur Fouquet, Surintendant of the Finances and Procureur General du Roy, who was a Man of extraordinary Parts, and being not forty Years of Age, enjoyed his full Vigour of Body and Mind, and in Respect of his sole Power over the Finances was looked upon as the Premier Ministre. This Man, as soon as He was in the Business, sent an Express into England with a Letter to the Chancellor. The Messenger was La Basteede, who having been Secretary during the Time of his being in England to Bordeaux whilst He was Ambassadour, spake English very well. He, as soon as He arrived, went to the Chancellor's House, and desired one of his Servants to let his Lord know, "that He "was newly come from France, and that He desired "to be admitted to a private Audience with him, "where Nobody else might be present:" And so He was brought into a Backroom, whither the Chancellor came to him; to whom He presented a Letter directed to him from Monsieur Fouquet. The Letter after general Compliments took Notice "of the great "Trust He had with his Master, and that He being "now admitted to a Part of his Master's most secret "Affairs, and knowing well the Affection that was "between the two Kings, much desired to hold a "close and secret Correspondence together, which "He presumed would be for the Benefit of Both "their Masters." The rest contained only a Credential, "that He should give Credit to all that the "Bearer should say, who was a Person entirely trusted "by him." And then He entered upon his Discourse, consisting of these Parts:

(1.) "THAT the King of France was troubled to "hear, that there was some Obstruction fallen out in "the Treaty with Portugal; and that it would be a "very generous Thing in his Majesty to undertake "the Protection of that Crown, which if it should fall "into the Possession of Spain, would be a great Damage and a great Shame to all the Kings in Europe. "That himself had heretofore thought of marrying "the Infanta of that Kingdom, who is a Lady of great "Beauty and admirable Endowments; but that his "Mother and his then Minister, and indeed all other "Princes, so much desired the Peace between the "Crowns, that He was diverted from that Design. "And that for the perfecting that Peace and his Marriage with Spain, He had been compelled to desert "Portugal for the present; and was obliged to send no "Kind of Assistance thither, nor to receive any Ambassadour from thence, nor to have any there: All "which He could not but observe for some Time. "But that Portugal was well assured of the Continuance of his Affection, and that He would find "some Opportunity by one Way or other to preserve "it. That He foresaw that his Majesty might not be "provided so soon after his Return, in Regard of his "other great Expences, to disburse such a Sum of "Money, as the sending a vigorous Assistance, which "was necessary, would require. But for that He "would take Care, and for the present cause to be "paid to his Majesty three hundred thousand Pistoles, "which would defray the Charge of that Summer's "Expedition; and for the future, Provision should "be made proportionable to the Charge:" And concluded, "that He believed the King could not bestow "himself better in Marriage, than with the Infanta of "Portugal."

Some particular Overtures from the Court of France.

(2.) A SECOND Part was, "That there were now "in France Ambassadours from the States of the United "Provinces, and the like in England, to renew the "Alliance with Both Crowns; which They hoped to "do upon the disadvantageous Terms They had used "to obtain it. That those People were grown too "proud and insolent towards all their Neighbours, and "treated all Kings as if They were at least their Equals: "That France had been ill used by them, and was sen"sible of it; and that the King had not been much "beholden to them." And therefore He proposed, "that Both Kings upon this Occasion would so communicate their Counsels, that They might reduce "that People to live like good Neighbours, and "with more good Manners; and that They would "treat solely and advance together, and that the One "should promise not to conclude any Thing without communicating it to the other: So that Both "Treaties might be concluded together."

(3.) "THAT those Particulars, and whatsoever passed "between M. Fouquet and the Chancellor, might be "retained with wonderful Secrecy; which it would not "be, if it were communicated to the Queen or the "Earl of St. Albans" (who were at that Time in "France); "And therefore his Christian Majesty desired, that neither of them should know of this Correspondence, or any Particular that passed by it."

WHEN the Gentleman had finished his Discourse, the Chancellor told him, "that He knew M. Fouquet "to be so wise a Man, that He would not invite or "enter into such a Correspondence without the Privity and Approbation of his Master: And He presumed that He had likewise so good an Opinion of "him, as to believe, that He would first inform his "Majesty of all that He received from him, before "He would return any Answer himself. That He "would take the first Opportunity to acquaint the "King his Master; and if He would come the next "Day at the same Hour" (which was about Four in the Afternoon) "to the same Place, He would return "his Answer."

THE King came the next Day before the Hour assigned to the Chancellor's House. And when He heard the Gentleman was come, his Majesty vouchsafed himself to go into that Backroom; and (the Chancellor telling telling the other, " that He ſhould be Witneſs to his " Majeſty's Approbation of his Correſpondence"), took Notice of the Letter He had brought, and aſked many kind Queſtions concerning M. Fouquet, who was known to him, and told him, " that He was very " well pleaſed with the Correſpondence propoſed; and " that the Chancellor ſhould perform his Part very " punctually, and with the Secrecy that was deſired; " and that He would give his own Word, that the " Queen and the Earl of St. Albans ſhould know No- " thing that ſhould paſs in this Correſpondence:" Which the Chancellor obſerving with the Fidelity he ought to do, and this coming after to be known, it kindled a new Jealouſy and Diſpleaſure in the Queen, that was never afterwards extinguiſhed. The King told him " He would upon the Encouragement and " Promiſe of the French King, of the Performance " whereof He could make no Doubt, proceed in the " Treaty with Portugal; and give that Kingdom the " beſt Aſſiſtance He could, without beginning a War " with Spain. That for the Treaty with Holland, which " was but newly begun" (for the States who had made Choice of and nominated their Ambaſſadours before the King left the Hague, did not ſend them in near ſix Months after; which his Majeſty looked upon as a great Diſreſpect), " He would comply with what the " King deſired; and that his Chriſtian Majeſty ſhould " from Time to Time receive an Account how it " ſhould advance, and that He would not conclude " any Thing without his Privity." How ill Both theſe Engagements which related to Portugal and Holland were afterwards obſerved by France, is fit for another Diſcourſe by itſelf. The Gentleman, much ſatisfied with what the King had ſaid, propoſed " that He " would make a Cipher againſt the next Day to be left " in the Chancellor's Hand; becauſe M. Fouquet de- " ſired for Preſervation of the Secret, that the Chan- " cellor would always write with his own Hand in " Engliſh, directed in ſuch a Manner as He ſhould " propoſe, which would always bring the Letters ſafe " to the Hands of him, La Baſteede, who was ap- " pointed by the King to keep that Cipher, and to " maintain that Correſpondence."

Which the King readily embraces.

An Inſtance of the Chancellor's uncorrupt Integrity.

THERE was another Circumſtance that attended this private Negotiation, that may not be unfitly inſerted here, and is a ſufficient Manifeſtation of the Integrity of the Chancellor, and how far He was from being that corrupt Perſon, which his moſt corrupt Enemies would have him thought to be. The next Morning after He had ſeen the King, La Baſteede came again, and deſired an Audience with the Chancellor. He ſaid " He had ſomewhat elſe in his Inſtructions to " ſay, which He had not yet thought fit to offer." And from thence He entered in a confuſed Manner to enlarge " upon the great Power, Credit and Genero- " ſity of M. Fouquet, the Extent of his Power and Of- " fice, that He could diſburſe and iſſue great Sums of " Money without any Account ſo much as to the " King himſelf; without which Liberty, the King " knew many ſecret Services of the higheſt Impor- " tance could not be performed." He ſaid, " He " knew the Streights and Neceſſities, in which the " Chancellor and others about the King had lived for " many Years: And though He was now returned " with much Honour, and in great Truſt with his " Maſter; yet He did ſuppoſe He might be ſome " Time without thoſe Furnitures of Houſholdſtuff " and Plate, which the Grandeur of his Office and " Place required. And therefore that He had ſent " him a Preſent, which in itſelf was but ſmall, and " was only the Earneſt of as much every Year, which " ſhould be conſtantly paid, and more, if He had " Occaſion to uſe it; for M. Fouquet did not look upon " it as of Moment to himſelf. But He knew well the " Faction in all Courts, and that He muſt have many " Enemies; and if He did not make himſelf Friends " by Acts of Generoſity and Bounty, He muſt be op- " preſſed; and that he had deſigned this Supply only " to that Purpoſe." He ſhewed him then Bills of Exchange and Credit for the Sum of ten thouſand Pounds Sterling, to be paid at Sight: And ſaid, " that He had " been with the Merchant, who would be ready to " pay it that Afternoon; ſo that whoever He would " pleaſe to appoint ſhould receive it." The Chancellor had heard him with much Indignation; and anſwered him warmly, " that if this Correſpondence muſt " expoſe him to ſuch a Reproach, He ſhould unwil- " lingly enter into it; and wiſhed him to tell M. Fou- " quet, that He would only receive Wages from his " own Maſter." The Gentleman ſo little looked for a Refuſal, that He would not underſtand it; but perſiſted to know " who ſhould receive the Money, " which " He ſaid " ſhould be paid in ſuch a Man- " ner, that the Perſon who paid it ſhould never know " to whom it was paid; and that it ſhould always re- " main a Secret;" ſtill preſſing it with Importunity, till the other went with manifeſt Anger out of the Room.

THAT Afternoon the King and Duke (who was likewiſe informed of the Correſpondence) came to the Chancellor, and found him out of Humour. He told him, " that Fouquet could not be an honeſt Man, " and that He had no Mind to hold that Correſpond- " ence with him;" and thereupon repeated what had paſſed in the Morning with much Choler: Which made them Both laugh at him, ſaying, " the French " did all their Buſineſs that Way:" and the King told him " He was a Fool," implying " that He ſhould " take his Money." Whereupon the Chancellor beſought him " not to appear to his Servants ſo un- " concerned in Matters of that Nature, which might " produce ill Effects;" and deſired him to conſider, " what the Conſequence of his receiving that Money, " with what Secrecy ſoever, muſt be. That the French " King muſt either believe that He had received it " without his Majeſty's Privity, and ſo look upon him " as a Knave fit to be depended upon in any Treachery " againſt his Maſter; or that it was with his Majeſty's " Approbation, which muſt needs leſſen his Eſteem " of him, that He ſhould permit his Servants of the " neareſt Truſt to grow rich at the Charge of another " Prince, who might the next Day become his Ene- " my." To which the King ſmiling made no other Reply, " than that few Men were ſo ſcrupulous;" and commanded him " to return a civil Anſwer to " M. Fouquet's Letter, and to cheriſh that Correſpond- " ence, which" He ſaid " might be uſeful to him, " and could produce no Inconveniency." And ſo, when La Baſteede (who could not forbear to uſe new Importunity with him to receive the Money, till He found He was much offended) brought him the Cipher, He delivered him his Letter for M. Fouquet. And the next Week after his Return, the King of France writ to him in his own Hand, " that the Correſpondence " M. Fouquet had invited him to, was with his Ma- " jeſty's Privity; and that He was well pleaſed with " it." And ſo the Correſpondence continued till that great Man's Fall: And then the King ſent all the Letters which had paſſed, and the Cipher, to the Chancellor; and writ to him, " from that Time to com- " municate with all Freedom with his Ambaſſadour," which He was before reſtrained from.

AFTER the King had himſelf conferred at large with the Portugal Ambaſſadour, He referred him again to give the Lords, with whom he had formerly treated an Account how all Particulars were adjuſted in Portugal; which were" He ſaid " in this Manner. For " the Portion, the Queen Regent, having reſolved " not to diſpoſe of any of the Money that was provided " for the War, had ſold her own Jewels, and much " of her own Plate, and had borrowed both Plate and " Jewels from the Churches and Monaſteries. By " which Means She had the whole Portion ready, " which was all ſealed up in Bags, and depoſited where " Nobody could take it to apply to any other Uſe. " For the Delivery of Tangier, that the old Governour

" (who had lived there long, and was humourous) on " whom the Queen could not confidently depend, " was removed; and another ſent, before He left " Liſbon, to take that Charge, who was a Creature of " the Queen's, who could not deceive her, and was " ſo far truſted, that He knew for what End he was " ſent thither, and chearfully undertook to perform " it: And that the Fleet which ſhould be ſent for the " Queen ſhould firſt go to Tangier, and take Poſ- " ſeſſion thereof; and till that ſhould be delivered " into his Majeſty's Hands, the Queen ſhould not " embark upon the Fleet, nor till all the Money ſhould " be put on Board. That for the Delivery of Bom- " bayne, it was reſolved likewiſe, that the Vice-King " and Governour of Goa, under whom that Iſland like- " wiſe is, ſhould be forthwith recalled; and that " another" (whom He named,) " of whom the Queen " had all Aſſurance, ſhould be ſent to that high " Charge, and ſhould be tranſported thither in the " Fleet which the King would ſend to receive the " Iſland, and would deliver the ſame to the Perſon " deſigned to receive it." He added, " that there " would be another Security given, greater than any " of the reſt, and ſuch an one as had never been given " before in ſuch a Caſe. That the Queen ſhould be " delivered on Board the Fleet, and tranſported into " England, before She was married: Which was ſuch " a Truſt that had never been repoſed in any Prince, " who, if He would break his Word, might put an " everlaſting Reproach upon their Nation."

THE Cauſe of this extraordinary Circumſtance was truly this. The Power of Spain was ſo great in the Court of Rome, notwithſtanding the Interpoſition and threatening Mediation of France, (whoſe Ambaſſadour declared that Portugal ſhould chuſe a Patriarch, and have no longer Dependance upon the Pope); that neither Urban, in whoſe Reign that Kingdom ſevered itſelf from Spain, nor Innocent nor Alexander, would acknowledge the Duke of Braganza for King, nor receive an Ambaſſadour or other Miniſter from him: So that They now foreſaw, that if They ſhould in what Manner ſoever demand a Diſpenſation at Rome (without which the Marriage could not be celebrated in Portugal), the Intereſt of Spain would cauſe it to be denied, or granted in ſuch a Manner as ſhould be worſe for them; for the Queen would have been mentioned only as the Daughter and Siſter of the Duke of Braganza. And before They would receive that Affront, the moſt jealous and moſt apprehenſive Nation in the World choſe rather to ſend the Daughter of the Kingdom to be married in England, and not to be married till She came thither.

The King refers the Whole to a full Privy Council.

UPON the whole Matter, the King thought not fit to make any farther Exceptions, but reſolved to aſſemble his whole Privy Council, and to communicate the Matter to them; for it did remain a Secret yet, no Man knowing or ſpeaking of it. The Council was ſo full, that there was only one Counſellor that was abſent. The King informed them of all that had paſſed in that Affair, " how it was firſt propoſed to him, and " the Objections which occurred to him againſt it, for " the better clearing whereof the Ambaſſadour had " made a Voyage into Portugal, and was returned with " ſuch Satisfaction to all Particulars, that He thought " it now Time to communicate the Whole to them, " that He might receive their Advice." He commanded then the particular Propoſitions, which were offered by the Ambaſſadour, to be reported. And thereupon He commanded and conjured all the Lords ſeverally to give him their Advice; for He ſaid, " He " had not yet ſo firmly reſolved, but that He might " change his Mind, if He heard Reaſons to move " him: And therefore They would not deal faithfully " with him, if They did not with all Freedom declare " their Judgment to him." In ſhort, every Man delivered his Opinion, and every One agreed in the Opinion, " that it was very fit for his Majeſty to em- " brace the Propoſitions, which were of great Advantage to himſelf and the Kingdom; and that " their Advice was, that He ſhould ſpeedily and with- " out more Delay conclude the Treaty." And thereupon his Majeſty ſaid, " that He looked upon ſo una- " nimous a Concurrence as a good Omen, and that " He would follow their Advice."

Which unanimouſly adviſes him to conclude the Treaty.

ALL this was done between the Diſſolution of the Parliament in December, and the aſſembling the other in May following. And upon the firſt Day of its coming together, which was upon the eighth of May, the very Day that his Majeſty had been proclaimed the Year before, He told them " that he had deferred " it a Week, That They might meet upon that Day, " for the Memory of the former Day." The King, after ſome gracious Expreſſions of his Confidence in them, told them, " that They would find what Me- " thod He thought beſt for their Proceeding, by two " Bills which he had cauſed to be provided for them, " which were for Confirmation of all that had been " enacted in the laſt Meeting;" and repeated what He had ſaid to them when He was laſt there; " That next " to the miraculous Bleſſing of God Almighty, and indeed " as an immediate Effect of that Bleſſing, He did impute " the good Diſpoſition and Security They were all in, to " the happy Act of Indemnity and Oblivion: That," his Majeſty ſaid, " was the principal Corner-Stone that " ſupported that excellent Building, that created Kindneſs " in them to each other; and Confidence was their joint " and common Security." He told them, " He was ſtill " of the ſame Opinion, and more if it were poſſible of " that Opinion than He had been, by the Experience " He had of the Benefit of it, and from the Unrea- " ſonableneſs of what ſome Men ſaid againſt it." He deſired them " to provide full Remedies for " future Miſchiefs; to be as ſevere as They would " againſt new Offenders, eſpecially if They were ſo " upon old Principles; and that They would pull up " thoſe Principles by the Roots. But," his Majeſty ſaid, " He ſhould never think him a wiſe Man, that " would endeavour to undermine and ſhake that " Foundation of the publick Peace, by infringing that " Act in the leaſt Degree; or that He could be his " Friend, or wiſh him well, who would perſuade him " ever to conſent to the Breach of a Promiſe He had " ſo ſolemnly made when He was abroad, and had " performed with that Solemnity after, and becauſe " He had promiſed it: And that He could not ſuſ- " pect any Attempts of that Kind by any Men of " Merit and Virtue."

The new Parliament meets.

The King's Speech.

He preſſes them to confirm the Act of Indemnity.

AND this Warmth of his Majeſty upon this Subject was not then more than needed: For the Armies being now diſbanded, there were great Combinations entered into, not to confirm the Act of Oblivion; which They knew without Confirmation would ſignify Nothing. Men were well enough contented, that the King ſhould grant Indemnity to all Men that had rebelled againſt him; that He ſhould grant their Lives and Fortunes to them, who had forfeited them to him: But They thought it very unreaſonable and unjuſt, that the King ſhould releaſe thoſe Debts which were immediately due to them, and forgive thoſe Treſpaſſes which had been committed to their particular Damage. They could not endure to meet the ſame Men in the King's Highway, now it was the King's Highway again, who had heretofore affronted them in thoſe Ways, becauſe they were not the King's, and only becauſe They knew They could obtain no Juſtice againſt them. They could not with any Patience ſee thoſe Men, who not only during the War had oppreſſed them, plundered their Houſes, and had their own adorned with the Furniture They had robbed them of, ride upon the ſame Horſes which They had then taken from them upon no other Pretence, but becauſe they were better than their own; but after the War was ended, had committed many inſolent Treſpaſſes upon them wantonly, and to ſhew their Power of Juſtice of Peace or Committee Men, and had from the loweſt Beggary raiſed great Eſtates, out of which They were well able to satisfy, at least in some Degree, the Damages the other had sustained. And those and other Passions of this Kind, which must have invalidated the whole Act of Indemnity, could not have been extinguished without the King's Influence, and indeed his immediate Interposition and Industry.

He acquaints them with the intended Marriage.

When his Majesty had spoken all He thought fit upon that Subject, He told them, "He could not conclude without telling them some News, News that "He thought would be very acceptable to them; and "therefore He should think himself unkind and ill-"natured, if He should not impart it to them. That "He had been often put in Mind by his Friends, that "it was high Time to marry; and He had thought so "himself, ever since He came into England: But there "appeared Difficulties enough in the Choice, though "many Overtures had been made to him. And if "He should never marry till He could make such a "Choice, against which there could be no Foresight "of any Inconvenience that might ensue, They would "live to see him an old Bachelor, which He thought "They did not desire to do." He said, "He could "now tell them, not only that He was resolved to "marry, but whom He resolved to marry, if it pleas-"ed God. That towards his Resolution, He had "used that Deliberation, and taken that Advice, that "He ought to do in a Case of that Importance, and "with a full Consideration of the Good of his Subjects "in general, as of himself. It was with the Daughter "of Portugal. That when He had, as well as He "could, weighed all that occurred to himself, the first "Resolution He took, was to state the whole Over-"tures which had been made to him, and in Truth "all that had been said against it, to his Privy "Council; without hearing whose Advice, He never "did nor ever would resolve any Thing of publick "Importance. And," He said, "He told them with "great Satisfaction and Comfort to himself, that after "many Hours Debate in full Council (for He thought "there was not above One absent), and He believed "upon weighing all that could be said upon that "Subject, for or against it; the Lords, without one "dissenting Voice, advised him with all imaginable "Chearfulness to this Marriage: Which He looked "upon as very wonderful, and even as some Instance "of the Approbation of God himself. That He had "thereupon taken his own Resolution, and concluded "with the Ambassadour of Portugal, who was depart-"ing with the whole Treaty signed, which They "would find to contain many great Advantages to "the Kingdom; and that He would make all the "Haste He could, to fetch them a Queen hither, "who He doubted not would bring great Blessings "with her, to him and them."

The next Day the two Houses of Parliament, after They had expressed all the Joy imaginable amongst them, sent to the King, "that He would appoint a "Time when He would admit them to his Presence:" Which when He had done, Both Houses of Parliament, in a Body, presented by the Speaker of the House of Peers their humble Thanks to his Majesty, "for that He had vouchsafed to acquaint them with "his Resolution to marry, which had exceedingly "rejoiced their Hearts, and would, They doubted "not, draw down God's Blessing upon his Majesty "and the Kingdom." Shortly after, the Fleet was made ready, and the Earl of Sandwich Admiral thereof was likewise made Ambassadour to Portugal, and appointed to receive the Queen, and to conduct her into England.

The two Houses express their Approbation of it.

This was the whole Proceeding, from the Beginning to the End of that Treaty about the Marriage of the King; by the whole Circumstances whereof it is apparent enough, that no particular Corruption in any single Person could have brought it to pass in that Manner, and that the Chancellor never proposed it, nor heard of it but from the King himself, nor advanced it afterwards more than every One of the other Lords did; and if He had done less, He could neither have been thought a prudent or an honest Man: To which no more shall be added, than that neither before or in the Treaty, or after the Marriage, He ever received the least Reward or the least Present from Portugal.

New Bishops appointed.

During the Interval of Parliament, the King had made Choice of many very eminent and learned Men, who were consecrated to some of the Sees of Bishops which were void; that the Preservation of the Succession might not depend upon the Lives of the few Bishops who remained, and who were all very aged: Which could not have been done sooner, nor till the other Parliament, to whom the Settlement of the Church had been referred, was dissolved. Nor could He yet give any Remedy to the License in the Practice of Religion, which in all Places was full of Scandal and Disorder, because the Liturgy was not yet finished; till when, the Indulgence by his Declaration was not to be restrained. But at the same Time that He issued out his Writs for convening the Parliament, He had likewise sent Summons to the Bishops, for the Meeting of the Clergy in Convocation, which is the legal Synod in England; against the Coming together whereof the Liturgy would be finished, which his Majesty intended to send thither to be examined, debated and confirmed. And then He hoped to provide, with the Assistance of the Parliament, such a Settlement in Religion, as would prevent any Disorder in the State upon those Pretences. And it was very necessary to lose no Time in the Prosecution of that Cure; for the Malignity against the Church appeared to increase, and to be greater than it was upon the Coming in of the King.

A Convocation summoned.

The old Bishops who remained alive, and such Deans and Chapters as were numerous enough for the Corporation, who had been long kept fasting, had now Appetites proportionable. Most of them were very poor, and had undergone great Extremities; some of the Bishops having supported themselves and their Families by teaching Schools, and submitting to the like low Condescensions. And others saw, that if They died before They were enabled to make some Provision for them, their Wives and Children must unavoidably starve: And therefore They made Haste to enter upon their own. And now an Ordinance of Parliament had not Strength enough to batter an Act of Parliament. They called their old Tenants to Account for Rent, and to renew their Estates if They had a Mind to it; for most old Leases were expired in the long Continuance of the War, and the old Tenants had been compelled either to purchase a new Right and Title from the State (when the Ordinance was passed for taking away all Bishops, Deans and Chapters, and for selling all the Lands which belonged to them), or to sell their present Estates to those, who had purchased the Reversion and the Inheritance thereof: So that both the one and the other, the old Tenants and the new Purchasers, repaired to the true Owners as soon as the King was restored; the former expecting to be restored again to the Possession of what They had sold, under an unreasonable Pretence of a Tenant Right (as They called it), because there remained yet (as in many Cases there did) a Year or some other Term of their old Leases unexpired, and because They had out of Conscience forborne to buy the Inheritance of the Church, which was first offered to them. And for the Refusal thereof and such a reasonable Fine as was usual, They hoped to have a new Lease, and to be readmitted to be Tenants to the Church. The other, the Purchasers (amongst which there were some very infamous Persons), appeared as confident, and did not think, that according to the Clemency that was practised towards all Sorts of Men, it could be thought Justice, that They should lose the entire Sum They had disbursed upon the Faith of that Government, which the whole Kingdom submitted to; but that They should, instead of the Inheritance They had had an ill Title to, have a good Leaſe for Lives or Years granted to them by them who had now the Right; at leaſt, that upon the old Rent and moderate Fines They ſhould be continued Tenants to the Church, without any Regard to thoſe who had ſold both their Poſſeſſion, and with that all the Right or Title that They might pretend to, for a valuable Conſideration. And They had the more Hope of this, becauſe the King had granted a Commiſſion, under the Great Seal of England, to ſome Lords of the Council and to other eminent Perſons, to interpoſe and mediate with the Biſhops and Clergy in ſuch Caſes, as ought not to be proſecuted with Rigour.

A Clamour raiſed againſt the Biſhops and Clergy by their Tenants.

BUT the Biſhops and Clergy concerned had not the good Fortune to pleaſe their old or their new Tenants. They had been very barbarouſly uſed themſelves; and that had too much quenched all Tenderneſs towards others. They did not enough diſtinguiſh between Perſons: Nor did the Suffering any Man had undergone for Fidelity to the King, or his Affection to the Church eminently expreſſed, often prevail for the Mitigation of his Fine; or if it did ſometimes, three or four Stories of the contrary, and in which there had been ſome unreaſonable Hardneſs uſed, made a greater Noiſe and ſpread farther, than their Examples of Charity and Moderation. And as honeſt Men did not uſually fare the better for any Merit, ſo the Purchaſers who offered moſt Money, did not fare the worſe for all the Villanies They had committed. And two or three unhappy Inſtances of this Kind brought Scandal upon the whole Church, as if They had been all guilty of the ſame Exceſſes, which They were far from. And by this Means the new Biſhops, who did not all follow the Precedents made by the old, underwent the ſame Reproaches: And many of them who had moſt adhered to their Order, and for ſo doing had undergone for twenty Years together ſundry Perſecutions and Oppreſſions, were not in their preſent Paſſion ſo much pleaſed with the renewing it, as They expected to have been. Yet upon a very ſtrict Examination of the true Grounds of all thoſe Miſpriſions (except ſome few Inſtances which cannot be defended), there will be found more Paſſion than Juſtice in them; and that there was even a Neceſſity to raiſe as much Money as could be juſtly done, for the repairing the Cathedrals, which were all miſerably ruinated or defaced, and for the entirely building up many Houſes of the Prebends, which had been pulled down or let fall to the Ground. And thoſe Ways much more of thoſe Monies which were raiſed by Fines were iſſued and expended, than what went into the private Purſes of them, who had a Right to them, and had Need enough of them. But the Time began to be froward again, and all Degrees of Men were hard to be pleaſed; eſpecially when They ſaw one Claſſis of Men reſtored to more than They had ever loſt, and preferred to a Plenty They had never been acquainted with, whilſt themſelves remained remedileſs after ſo many Sufferings, and without any other Teſtimony of their Courage and Fidelity, than in the Ruin of their Fortunes, and the Sale of their Inheritance.

The King's Coronation.

ANOTHER great Work was performed, between the Diſſolution of the laſt and the Beginning of the next Parliament, which was the Ceremony of the King's Coronation; and was done with the greateſt Solemnity and Glory, that ever any had been ſeen in that Kingdom. That the Novelties and new Inventions, with which the Kingdom had been ſo much intoxicated for ſo many Years together, might be diſcountenanced and diſcredited in the Eyes of the People, for the Folly and Want of State thereof; his Majeſty had directed the Records and old Formularies ſhould be examined, and thereupon all Things ſhould be prepared, and all Forms accuſtomed be uſed, that might add Luſtre and Splendour to the Solemnity. A Court of Claims was erected, where before the Lords Commiſſioners for that Service, all Perſons made Claim to thoſe Privileges and Precedency, which They conceived to be due to their Perſons, or the Offices of which They were poſſeſſed, in the Ceremony of the Coronation; which were allowed or rejected as their Right appeared.

THE King went early in the Morning to the Tower of London in his Coach, moſt of the Lords being there before. And about ten of the Clock They ſet forward towards Whiteball, ranged in that Order as the Heralds had appointed; thoſe of the Long Robe, the King's Council at Law, the Maſters of the Chancery, and Judges, going firſt, and ſo the Lords in their Order, very ſplendidly habited, on rich Footcloths; the Number of their Footmen being limited, to the Dukes ten, to the Earls eight, and to the Viſcounts ſix, and the Barons four, all richly clad, as their other Servants were. The whole Show was the moſt glorious in the Order and Expence, that had been ever ſeen in England; They who rode firſt being in Fleet-ſtreet when the King iſſued out of the Tower, as was known by the Diſcharge of the Ordnance: And it was near three of the Clock in the Afternoon, when the King alighted at Whiteball. The next Morning the King rode in the ſame State in his Robes and with his Crown on his Head, and all the Lords in their Robes, to Weſtminſter-Hall; where all the Enſigns for the Coronation were delivered to thoſe who were appointed to carry them, the Earl of Northumberland being made High Conſtable, and the Earl of Suffolk Earl Marſhal, for the Day. And then all the Lords in their Order, and the King himſelf, walked on Foot upon blue Cloth from Weſtminſter-Hall to the Abbey Church, where after a Sermon preached by Dr. Morley (then Biſhop of Worceſter) in Henry the Seventh's Chapel, the King was ſworn, crowned and anointed, by Dr. Juxon Archbiſhop of Canterbury, with all the Solemnity that in thoſe Caſes had been uſed. All which being done, the King returned in the ſame Manner on Foot to Weſtminſter-Hall, which was adorned with rich Hangings and Statues; and there the King dined, and the Lords on either Side at Tables provided for them: And all other Ceremonies were performed with great Order and Magnificence.

Two unlucky Accidents which attended it.

I SHOULD not have enlarged thus much upon the Ceremony of the Coronation, it may be not mentioned it (a perfect Narration having been then made and publiſhed of it, with all the Grandeur and Magnificence of the City of London) but that there were two Accidents in it, the one abſolutely new, the other that produced ſome Inconveniences which were not then diſcerned. The firſt was, that it being the Cuſtom in thoſe great Ceremonies or Triumphs of State, that the Maſter of the King's Horſe, (who was always a great Man, and was now the Duke of Albermarle, the General) rides next after the King with a led Horſe in his Hand: In this Occaſion the Duke of York privately prevailed with the King, who had not enough Reverence for old Cuſtoms, without any Conſultation, that his Maſter of his Horſe (ſo He was called), Mr. Jermyn, a younger Brother of a very private Gentleman's Family, ſhould ride as near his Perſon, as the General did to his Majeſty, and lead a Horſe likewiſe in his Hand; a Thing never heard of before. Neither in Truth hath the younger Brother of the King ſuch an Officer as Maſter of his Horſe, which is a Term reſtrained within the Family of the King, Queen, and Prince of Wales; and the two Maſters of the Horſe to the Queen and Prince are ſubordinate to the King's Maſter of his Horſe, who hath the Juriſdiction over the other. The Lords were exceedingly ſurprized and troubled at this, of which They heard Nothing till They ſaw it; and They liked it the worſe, becauſe They diſcerned that it iſſued from a Fountain, from whence many bitter Waters were like to flow, the Cuſtoms of the Court of France, whereof the King and the Duke had too much the Image in their Heads, and than which there could not be a Copy more univerſally ingrateful and odious to the Engliſh Nation.

THE

The other was: In the Morning of the Coronation, whilſt They ſate at the Table in Weſtminſter-Hall, to ſee the many Enſigns of the Coronation delivered to thoſe Lords who were appointed to carry them, the Earl of Northumberland, who was that Day High-Conſtable, came to the King and told him, "that "amongſt the young Noblemen who were appointed "to carry the ſeveral Parts of the King's Mantle, the "Lord Oſſory, who was the eldeſt Son to the Duke "of Ormond, challenged the Place before the Lord "Percy, who was his eldeſt Son; whereas" He ſaid, "the Duke of Ormond had no Place in the Ceremony "of that Day, as Duke, but only as Earl of Breck-"nock, and ſo the eldeſt Sons of all ancienter Earls "ought to take Place of his eldeſt Son;" which was ſo known a Rule, and of ſo general a Concernment, that the King could not chuſe but declare it, and ſend a Meſſage to the Lord Oſſory by the Lord Chamberlain, "that He ſhould deniſt from his Pretence." This, and the public Manner of aſking and determining it, produced two ill Effects. The firſt, a Jealouſy and ill Underſtanding between the two great Families: The One naturally undervaluing and contemning his Equals, without paying much Regard to his Superiors; and the other not being uſed to be contemned by any, and well knowing that all the Advantages the Earl had in England, either in Antiquity or Fortune, He had the ſame in Ireland, and that He had merited and received an Increaſe of Title, when the other had deſerved to loſe that which He was born to. The other, was a Jealouſy and Prejudice that it raiſed in the Nobility of England, as if the Duke of Ormond (who in Truth knew Nothing of it) had entered upon that Conteſt, in Hope that by his Intereſt in the King, He ſhould be able to put this eternal Affront upon the Peers of England, to bring them upon the ſame Level with thoſe of Ireland, who had no ſuch Eſteem. And it did not a little add to their Envy, that He had behaved himſelf ſo worthily throughout the ill Times, that He was the Object of an univerſal Reverence at home and abroad; which was a Reproach to moſt of them, whoſe Actions would not bear the Light. But as the Duke was not in the leaſt Degree privy to the particular Conteſt, nor raiſed the Value of himſelf from any Merit in his Services, nor undervalued others upon the Advantage of their having done amiſs; ſo He was abundantly ſatisfied in the Teſtimony of his own Conſcience, and in his unqueſtionable Innocence, and from thence too much deſpiſed the Prejudice and the Envy the others had towards him, the Marks whereof He was compelled afterwards to bear, which He did with the ſame Magnanimity.

Before We proceed farther in the Relation of what was afterwards done, it will not be unſeaſonable in this Place to give an Account of ſomewhat that was not done, and which was generally expected to have been done, and as generally cenſured becauſe it was not; the Reaſon whereof is known to very few.

A ſolemn Interment of the late King intended.

The King had reſolved before his Coming into England, that as ſoon as He ſhould be ſettled in any Condition of Security, and no juſt Apprehenſion of future Troubles, He would take up and remove the Body of his Father, the laſt King, from Windſor, and inter it with all Solemnity at Weſtminſter; and that the Court ſhould continue in Mourning till the Coronation. And many good People thought this ſo neceſſary, that They were much troubled that it was not done, and liked not the Reaſons which were given, which made it appear that it had been conſidered. The Reaſons which were given in public Diſcourſes from Hand to Hand, were two. The firſt; that now ten Years were paſt ſince that woful Tragedy, and the Joy and the Triumph for the King's Return had compoſed the Minds of the People, it would not be prudent to renew the Memory of that Parricide, by the Spectacle of a ſolemn Funeral; leſt it might cauſe ſuch Commotions of the Vulgar in all Places, as might produce great Diſorders and Inſurrections amongſt thoſe who had formerly ſerved the Kingdom, as if it were a good Seaſon and a new Provocation to take Revenge upon their Neighbours who had formerly tyranniſed over them; which might likewiſe have cauſed the Soldiers, who were newly diſbanded, to draw themſelves together for their own Security: And ſo the Peace would be at leaſt diſturbed. The other was; that to perform this Interment in any private Manner, would be liable to very juſt Cenſure, when all Things relating to the King himſelf had ſhowed ſo magnificently; and if it were done with the uſual Pomp of a ſolemn Interment of a King, the Expence would be ſo vaſt, that there would be neither Money found nor Credit for the Charge thereof.

But upon Search the Body could not be found.

These were the Reaſons alledged and ſpread abroad; nor was either of them in itſelf without Weight to thinking Men. But the true Reaſon was: At the Time of that horrid Murder, Windſor was a Garriſon under the Command of a Citizen, who was an Anabaptiſt, with all his Officers and Soldiers. The Men had broken down all the Wainſcot, Rails and Partitions, which divided the Church, defaced all the Monuments and other Marks, and reduced the Whole into the Form of a Stable or Barn, and ſcarce fit for any other Uſe; when Cromwell had declared that the Royal Body ſhould be privately interred in the Church of the Caſtle at Windſor, and the Marquis of Hertford, the Duke of Richmond, the Earls of Southampton and Lindſey, had obtained Leave to be preſent (only to be preſent, for they had no Power to prepare or do any Thing in it) at their Maſter's Burial. Thoſe great Men were not ſuffered to have above three Servants each, to enter into the Caſtle with them; and it may eaſily be concluded, that their own noble Hearts were too full of Sorrow, to ſend their Eyes abroad to take Notice of the Places by which They paſſed. They found the Church ſo wild a Place, that They knew not where They were; and as ſoon as the Royal Body was put into the Ground, They were conducted out of the Caſtle to their Lodging in the Town, and the next Morning returned to their ſeveral Houſes. Shortly after the King returned from beyond the Seas, He ſettled the Dean and Chapter of Windſor, with Direction to put his Royal Chapel there into the Order it uſed to be, and to repair the Ruins thereof, which was a long and a difficult Work. His Majeſty commanded the Dean carefully to inform himſelf of the Place, in which the King's Body had been interred, and to give him Notice of it. Upon Enquiry He could not find one Perſon in the Caſtle or in the Town, who had been preſent at the Burial. When the Parliament firſt ſeized upon the Caſtle and put a Garriſon into it, ſhortly after, They not only ejected all the Prebends and Singingmen of the Royal Chapel, but turned out all the Officers and Servants who had any Relation to the King or to the Church, except only thoſe who were notorious for their Infidelity towards the King or the Church: And of thoſe, or of the Officers or Soldiers of the Garriſon, there could not now one Man be found, who was in the Church when the King was buried. The Duke of Richmond and the Marquis of Hertford were Both dead: And the King ſent (after He had received that Account from the Dean) the two ſurviving Lords, the Earl of Southampton and of Lindſey, to Windſor; who taking with them as many of thoſe three Servants who had been admitted to attend them, as were now living, They could not recollect their Memories, nor find any one Mark by which They could make any Judgment, near what Place the King's Body lay. They made ſome Gueſs, by the Information of the Workmen who had been now employed in the new Pavement of the Church, and upon their Obſervation of any Place where the Earth had ſeemed to lye lighter, that it might be in or near that Place: But when They had cauſed it to be digged, and ſearched in and about it, They found Nothing. And upon their Return, the

King

King gave over all farther Thought of Enquiry: And those other Reasons were cast abroad upon any occasional Enquiry or Discourse of that Subject.

The Affairs of Ireland resumed.

THAT which gave the King most Trouble, and deprived him of that Ease and Quiet which He had promised to himself during the Vacation between the two Parliaments, was the Business of Ireland; which We shall now take up again, and continue the Relation without Interruption, as long as We shall think fit to make any Mention of that Affair. We left it in the Hands of the Lord Roberts, whom the King had declared Deputy of Ireland, presuming that He would upon Conference with the several Parties, who were all appointed to attend him, so shape and model the whole Bulk, that it might be more capable of some farther Debate before his Majesty in Council: But that Hand did not hold it many Days.

Character of Lord Roberts the Deputy.

THAT noble Lord, though of a good Understanding, was of so morose a Nature, that it was no easy Matter to treat with him. He had some pedantick Parts of Learning, which made his other Parts of Judgment the worse, for He had some Parts of good Knowledge in the Law, and in Antiquity, in the Precedents of former Times; all which were rendered the less useful, by the other Pedantry contracted out of some Books, and out of the ill Conversation He had with some Clergymen and People in Quality much below him, by whose weak Faculties He raised the Value of his own, which were very capable of being improved in better Company. He was naturally proud and imperious: Which Humour was increased by an ill Education; for excepting some Years spent in the Inns of Court amongst the Books of the Law, He might be very justly said to have been born and bred in Cornwall. There were many Days passed after the King's Declaration of him to be Deputy, before He could be persuaded to visit the General, who He knew was to continue Lieutenant; and when He did visit him, it was with so ill a Grace, that the other received no Satisfaction in it, and the less, because He plainly discerned that it proceeded from Pride, which He bore the more uneasily, because as He was now the greater Man, so He knew himself to be of a much better Family. He made so many Doubts and Criticisms upon the Draught of his Patent, that the Attorney General was weary of attending him; and when all Things were agreed on at Night, the next Morning produced new Dilemmas. But that which was worse than all this, He received those of the Irish Nation of the best Quality, and who were of the Privy Council and chief Command in that Kingdom, so superciliously; received their Information so negligently, and gave his Answers so scornfully; that after They had waited upon him four or five Days, They besought the King that They might not be obliged to attend him any more. And it was evident, that his Carriage towards them was not to be submitted to by Persons of his own Quality, or of any liberal Education: Nor did He make any Advance towards the Business.

THIS gave the King very great Trouble, and them as much Pleasure who had never liked the Designation. He knew not what to do with his Deputy, nor what to do for Ireland. The Lord Roberts was not a Man that was to be disgraced and thrown off, without much Inconvenience and Hazard. He had Parts which in Council and Parliament (which were the two Scenes where all the King's Business lay) were very troublesome; for of all Men alive who had so few Friends, He had the most Followers. They who conversed most with him, knew him to have many Humours which were very intolerable; They who were but a little acquainted with him, took him to be a Man of much Knowledge, and called his Morosity Gravity, and thought the Severity of his Manners made him less grateful to the Courtiers. He had no such advantageous Faculties in his Delivery, as could impose upon his Auditors; but He was never tedious, and his Words made Impressions. In a Word, He was such a Man, as the King thought worthy to be compounded with. And therefore his Majesty appointed the Lord Chancellor and the Lord Treasurer to confer with him, and to dispose him to accept the Office of Privy Seal, which gave him a great Precedence that would gratify that Passion which was strongest in him; for in his Nature He preferred Place before Money, which his Fortune stood more in Need of. And the King thought, it would be no ill Argument to incline him to give over the Thought of Ireland, that it was impossible for the King, to supply him for the present with near any such Sum of Money as He had very reasonably demanded, for the Satisfaction of the Army there (which was upon the Matter to be new modelled, and some Part of it disbanded) with the Reduction of many Officers, and for his own Equipage.

The King makes Lord Roberts an Offer of the Privy Seal.

THEY began their Approach to him, by asking him "when He would be ready for his Journey to Ireland;" to which He answered with some Quickness, "that "He was confident there was no Purpose to send "him thither, for that He saw there was no Prepa-"ration of those Things, without which the King "knew well that it was not possible for him to go; "nor had his Majesty lately spoken to him of it. "Besides He had observed, that the Chancellor had "for many Days past called him at the Council, and "in all other Places where They met, by the Name "of Lord Roberts; whereas, for some Months before, "He had upon all Occasions and in all Places treated "him with the Style of Lord Deputy: Which gave "him first Cause to believe, that there was some Al-"teration in the Purpose of sending him thither." They Both assured him, "that the King had no other "Person in his View but himself for that Service, if "He were disposed to undertake it vigorously; but "that the King had forborne lately to speak with him "of it, because He found it impossible for him to "provide the Money He proposed; and it could not "be denied, that He had proposed it very reasonably "in all Respects. However, it being impossible to "procure it, and that He could not go without it, for "which He could not be blamed, his Majesty must "find some other Expedient to send his Authority "thither, the Government there being yet so loose, "that He could not but every Day expect to receive "News of some great Disorder there, the ill Conse-"quence whereof would be imputed to his Majesty's "Want of Care and Providence. That his Majesty "had yet forborne to think of that Expedient, till "He might do it with his Consent and Advice, and "until He could resolve upon another Post, where "He might serve his Majesty with equal Honour, "and by which the World might see the Esteem "He had of him. And therefore since it would be "both unreasonable and unjust, to press him to go "for Ireland without those Supplies, and it was "equally impossible to prepare and send those Sup-"plies;" They said, "the King had commanded "them to propose to him, that He would make him "Lord Privy Seal, an Office He well understood. "And if He accepted that and were possessed of it "(as He should immediately be), his Majesty would "enter upon new Considerations how to settle the "tottering Condition of Ireland." The Lord's dark Countenance presently cleared up, having no Doubt expected to be deprived of his Title to Ireland, without being assigned any other any where else: And now being offered the third Place of Precedence in the Nobility, the Privy Seal going next to the Treasurer, upon a very short Recollection, He declared, "that He received it as a great Honour, that the "King would make Use of his Service in any Place, "and that He submitted wholly to his good Pleasure, "and would serve him with great Fidelity." The next Day the King gave him the Privy Seal at the Council-Board, where He was sworn and took his Place;

Lord Roberts accepts the Privy Seal, and quits the Place of Deputy.

Place; and to ſhew his extraordinary Talent, found a Way more to obſtruct and puzzle Buſineſs, at leaſt the Diſpatch of it, than any Man in that Office had ever done before: Inſomuch as the King found himſelf compelled in a ſhort Time after, to give Order that moſt Grants and Patents, which required Haſte, ſhould paſs by immediate Warrant to the Great Seal, without viſiting the Privy Seal; which Preterition was not uſual, and brought ſome Inconvenience and Prejudice to the Chancellor.

The King bears all Parties.

THOUGH the King had within himſelf a Proſpect of the Expedient, that would be fitteſt for him to make Uſe of for the preſent, towards the Settlement of Ireland; yet it was abſolutely neceſſary for him, even before He could make Uſe of that Expedient, to put the ſeveral Claims and Petitions of Right which were depending before him, and which were attended with ſuch an unruly Number of Suitors, into ſome ſuch Method of examining and determining, that they might not be left in the Confuſion they were then in. And this could not be done, without his impoſing upon himſelf the Trouble of hearing once at large, all that every Party of the Pretenders could alledge for the Support of their ſeveral Pretences: And this He did with incredible Patience for very many Days together. We ſhall firſt mention thoſe Intereſts, which gave the King leaſt Trouble, becauſe they admitted leaſt Debate.

The King's Friends reſtored by Act of Parliament.

IT was looked upon as very ſcandalous, that the Marquis of Ormond ſhould remain ſo long without the Poſſeſſion of any Part of his Eſtate; which had been taken from him upon no other Pretence, but his adhering to the King. And therefore there was an Act of Parliament paſſed with the Conſent of all Parties, that He ſhould be preſently reſtored to all his Eſtate; which was done with the more Eaſe, becauſe the greateſt Part of it (for his Wife's Land had been before aſſigned to her in Cromwell's Time, or rather in his Son Harry's) lay within that Province, which Cromwell out of his Huſbandry had reſerved for himſelf, exempt from all Title or Pretence of Adventurer or Soldier: What other Part of his Eſtate either the one or the other were poſſeſſed of, in their own Judgments it was ſo impoſſible for them to enjoy, that They very willingly yielded it up to the Marquis, in Hope of having Recompenſe made to them out of other Lands. There could as little be ſaid againſt the Reſtoration of the Earl of Inchiquin to his Eſtate, which had been taken from him and diſtributed amongſt the Adventurers and Soldiers, for no other Cauſe but his ſerving the King. There were likewiſe ſome others of the ſame Claſſis, who had Nothing objected to them but their Loyalty, who were put into the Poſſeſſion of their own Eſtates. And all this gave no Occaſion of Murmur; every Man of what Intereſt ſoever believing or pretending to believe, that the King was obliged in Honour, Juſtice and Conſcience, to cauſe that Right to be done to thoſe who had ſerved him faithfully.

Church Lands reſtored, and new Biſhops appointed.

THERE could be as little Doubt, and there was as little Oppoſition viſible, in the Claim of the Church: So that the King made Choice of many grave Divines, to whom He aſſigned Biſhopricks in Ireland, and ſent them thither, to be conſecrated by the Biſhops who remained alive there according to the Laws of that Kingdom; and conferred the other Dignities and Church-Preferments upon worthy Men, who were all authorized to enter upon thoſe Lands, which belonged to their ſeveral Churches. And in this general Zeal for the Church, ſome new Grants were made of Lands and Impropriations, which were not enough deliberated, and gave afterwards great Interruption to the Settlement of the Kingdom, and brought Envy upon the Church and Churchmen, when the Reſtoration to what was their own was generally well approved.

THE Pretences of the Adventurers and Soldiers were very much involved and perplexed: Yet they gave the King little other Trouble, than the general Care and Solicitude, that by an unſeaſonable Diſturbance of their Poſſeſſions there, the Soldiers who had been diſbanded, and thoſe of the ſtanding Army (who for the moſt Part had the ſame ill Affections,) might not unite together, and ſeize upon ſome Places of Defence, before his Affairs in that Kingdom ſhould be put in ſuch an Order as to oppoſe them. And next that Apprehenſion, his Majeſty had no Mind that any of thoſe Soldiers; either who had been diſbanded, and put into Poſſeſſion of Lands for the Arrears of their Pay, and upon which They now lived; or of the other, the ſtanding Army, many whereof were likewiſe in Poſſeſſion of Lands aſſigned to them: I ſay, the King was not without Apprehenſion, that the Reſort of either of theſe into England might find too many of their old Friends and Aſſociates, ready to concord with them in any deſperate Meaſures, and for controling of which He was not enough provided even in this Kingdom. But for their private and particular Intereſt, the King cared not much how it was compounded, nor conſidered the Danger if it were not compounded. For beſides the Factions, Diviſions, and Animoſities, which were between themſelves, and very great; They could have no Cauſe of Complaint againſt the King, who would take Nothing from them to which They had the leaſt Pretence of Law or Right. And for their other Demands, He would leave them to litigate between themſelves; it being evident to all Men, that there muſt be ſome Judicatory erected by Act of Parliament, that only could examine and put an End to all thoſe Pretences: The Peruſal and Examination of which Act of Parliament, when the ſame ſhould be prepared, his Majeſty reſolved that all Parties ſhould have, and that He would hear their particular Exceptions to it, before He would tranſmit it into Ireland to be paſſed.

THAT which gave the King the only Trouble and Solicitude, was the miſerable Condition of the Iriſh Nation, that was ſo near an Extirpation; the Thought whereof his Majeſty's Heart abhorred. Nor can it be denied, that either from the Indignation He had againſt thoſe, in whoſe Favour the other poor People were miſerably deſtroyed, or from his own natural Compaſſion and Tenderneſs, and the juſt Regard of the Merit of many of them who had ſerved him with Fidelity, He had a very ſtrong and princely Inclination to do the beſt He could, without doing apparent Injuſtice, to preſerve them in a tolerable Condition of Subjects. This made him give them, who were moſt concerned and ſolicitous on their Behalf, Liberty to reſort to his Preſence; and hear all They could alledge for themſelves, in private or in publick. And this Indulgence proved to their Diſadvantage, and exalted them ſo much, that when They were heard in publick at the Board, They behaved themſelves with leſs Modeſty towards their Adverſaries, who ſtood upon the Advantage-Ground, and with leſs Reverence in the Preſence of the King, than the Truth of their Condition and any ordinary Diſcretion would have required. And their Diſadvantage was the greater, becauſe They who ſpake publickly on their Behalf, and were very well qualified to ſpeak, and left Nothing for the Matter unſaid that was for their Purpoſe, were Men, who from the Beginning to the End of the Rebellion, had behaved themſelves eminently ill towards the King. And They of their Adverſaries who ſpake againſt them, had great Knowledge and Experience of all that had paſſed on either Side, and knew how to preſs it home when it was ſeaſonable.

The Plea of the Iriſh Catholicks.

THEY of the Iriſh, who were all united under the Name of The confederate Catholicks of Ireland, made their firſt Approach wiſely for Compaſſion; and urged "their great and long Sufferings; the Loſs of their "Eſtates for five or ſix and twenty Years; the waſting and ſpending of the whole Nation in Battles, "and Tranſportation of vaſt Multitudes of Men into "the Parts beyond the Seas, whereof many had the "Honour

" Honour to teſtify their Fidelity to the King by real " Services, and many of them returned into England " with him, and were ſtill in his Service; the great " Numbers of Men, Women and Children, that had " been maſſacred and executed in cold Blood, after " the King's Government had been driven from " thence; the Multitudes that had been deſtroyed by " Famine and the Plague, thoſe two heavy Judg- " ments having raged over the Kingdom for two or " three Years; and at laſt, as a Perſecution unheard " of, the tranſplanting the ſmall Remainder of the " Nation into one Corner of the Province of Conaught, " where yet much of the Lands was taken from them, " which had been aſſigned with all thoſe Formalities " of Law, which were in Uſe, and practiſed under " that Government."

(2.) THEY demanded " the Benefit of two " Treaties of Peace, the one in the late King's Time " and confirmed by him, the other confirmed by his " Majeſty who was preſent; by Both which," They ſaid, " They ſtood indemnified for all Acts done by " them in the Rebellion; and inſiſted upon their In- " nocence ſince that Time, and that they had paid ſo " entire an Obedience to his Majeſty's Commands " whilſt He was beyond the Seas, that They betook " themſelves to, and withdrew themſelves from, the " Service of France or Spain, in ſuch Manner as his " Majeſty ſignified his Pleaſure was they ſhould do." And if They had ended here, They would have done wiſely. But whether it was the Obſervation They made, that what They had ſaid made Impreſſion upon his Majeſty and many of the Lords; or whether it was their evil Genius that naturally tranſported them to Actions of ſtrange Sottiſhneſs and Indiſcretion: They urged and enforced with more Liberty than be- came them in that Conjuncture, " the Unworthineſs " and Incapacity of thoſe, who for ſo many Years " had poſſeſſed themſelves of their Eſtates, and ſought " now a Confirmation of their rebellious Title from " his Majeſty."

(3.) " THAT their Rebellion had been more in- " famous and of a greater Magnitude than that of " the Iriſh, who had riſen in Arms to free themſelves " from the Rigour and Severity that was exerciſed " upon them by ſome of the King's Miniſters, and " for the Liberty of their Conſcience and Practice of " their Religion, without having the leaſt Intention or " Thought of withdrawing themſelves from his Ma- " jeſty's Obedience, or declining his Government: " Whereas the others had carried on an odious Re- " bellion againſt the King's ſacred Perſon, whom " They had horridly murdered in the Sight of the " Sun, with all imaginable Circumſtances of Con- " tempt and Defiance, and as much as in them lay " had rooted out Monarchy itſelf, and overturned and " deſtroyed the whole Government of Church and " State: And therefore that whatever Puniſhment the " poor Iriſh had deſerved for their former Tranſ- " greſſions, which They had ſo long repented of, " and departed from the Rebellion when They had " Armies and ſtrong Towns in their Hands, which " They, together with themſelves, had put again un- " der his Majeſty's Protection; this Part of the Eng- " liſh, who were poſſeſſed of their Eſtates, had broken " all their Obligations to God and the King, and ſo " could not merit to be gratified with their Ruin and " total Deſtruction. That it was too evident and no- " torious to the World, that his Majeſty's three King- " doms had been very faulty to him, and withdrawn " themſelves from his Government; by which He had " been compelled to live in Exile ſo many Years: " And yet, that upon their Return to their Duty and " Obedience, He had been graciouſly pleaſed to grant " a free and general Pardon and Act of Indemnity in " which many were comprehended, who in Truth " had been the Contrivers and Fomenters of all the " Miſery and Deſolation, which had involved the " three Nations for ſo many Years. And therefore " that They hoped, that when all his Majeſty's other " Subjects (as criminal at leaſt as They were) were, " by his Majeſty's Clemency, reſtored to their own " Eſtates which They had forfeited, and were in full " Peace, Mirth, and Joy; the poor Iriſh alone ſhould " not be totally exempt from all his Majeſty's Grace, " and left in Tears and Mourning and Lamentation, " and be ſacrificed without Redemption to the Ava- " rice and Cruelty of thoſe, who had not only ſpoiled " and oppreſſed them, but had done all that was in " their Power, and with all the Inſolence imaginable, " to deſtroy the King himſelf and his Poſterity, and " who now returned to their Obedience, and ſub- " mitted to his Government, when They were no " longer able to oppoſe it. Nor did They yet return " to it with that Alacrity and Joy and Reſignation as " the Iriſh did, but inſiſted obſtinately upon Demands " unreaſonable, and which They hoped could not con- " ſiſt with his Majeſty's Honour to grant:" And ſo concluded with thoſe pathetical Applications and Ap- peals to the King, as Men well verſed in Diſcourſes of that Nature are accuſtomed to.

THIS Diſcourſe carried on and urged with more Paſſion, Vehemence and Indiſcretion, than was ſuitable to the Condition They were in, and in which, by the Exceſſes of their Rhetorick They had let fall many Expreſſions very indecent and unwarrantable, and in ſome of them confidently excuſed if not juſtified their firſt Entrance into Rebellion (the moſt barbarous cer- tainly and inexcuſable, that any Chriſtians have been engaged in any Age), irreconciled many to them who had Compaſſion enough for them, and made it impoſſible for the King to reſtrain their Adverſaries, who were prepared to anſwer all They had ſaid, from uſing the ſame Licenſe, They enlarged " upon all " the odious Circumſtances of the firſt Year's Rebel- " lion, the murdering of above a hundred thouſand " Perſons in cold Blood, and with all the Barbarity " imaginable; which Murders and Barbarities had " been always excepted from Pardon. And they told them, " that if there were not ſome amongſt them- " ſelves who then appeared before his Majeſty, They " were ſure there would be found many amongſt " thoſe for whom They appeared, who would be " found guilty of thoſe odious Crimes, which were " excluded from any Benefit by thoſe Treaties." They took Notice, " how confidently they had ex- " tolled their own Innocence from the Time that " thoſe two Acts of Pacification had paſſed, and their " great Affection for his Majeſty's Service." And thereupon They declared, " that whatſoever legal " Title the Adventurers had to the Lands of which " They were poſſeſſed, many of whom had conſtantly " ſerved the King; yet They would be contented, " that all thoſe, who in Truth had preſerved their " Integrity towards his Majeſty from the Time of " either if not of Both the Pacifications, and not " ſwerved afterwards from their Allegiance, ſhould " partake of his Royal Bounty, in ſuch a Manner " and to ſuch a Degree, as his Majeſty thought " fit to exerciſe towards them. But" They ſaid, " They would make it appear, that their Pretences " to that Grace and Favour were not founded " upon any reaſonable Title; that They had never " conſented to any one Act of Pacification, to which " the Promiſe of Indemnity had been annexed, which " They had not violated and broken within ten Days " after, and then returned to all the Acts of Diſloyalty " and Rebellion."

The Anſwer of the Ad- venturers.

" THAT after the firſt Act of Pacification ratified " by the laſt King, in very few Days, They treated " the Herald, his Majeſty's Officer, who came to pro- " claim that Peace, with all Manner of Indignity, " tearing his Coat of Arms (the King's Arms) from " his Back; and beat and wounded him ſo, that He " was hardly reſcued from the Loſs of his Life. " That about the ſame Time They endeavoured to

" ſurpriſe

" ſurpriſe and murder the Lord Lieutenant, and pur-
" ſued him to Dublin, which They forthwith beſieg-
" ed with their Army, under the Command of that " General who had ſigned the Peace. They impri" ſoned their Commiſſioners who were authorized by " them, for conſenting to thoſe Articles which them-
" ſelves had confirmed, and ſo proſecuted the War
" with as much Aſperity as ever; and refuſed to give " that Aid and Aſſiſtance They were obliged to, for
" the Recovery and Reſtoration of his late Majeſty;
" the Promiſe and Expectation of which Supply and " Aſſiſtance, was the ſole Ground and Conſideration
" of that Treaty, and of the Conceſſions therein
" made to them. That They thereupon more for" mally renounced their Obedience to the King, and " put themſelves under the Protection and Diſpoſal
" of Rinuccini the Pope's Nuncio, whom They made " their Generaliſſimo of all their Armies, their Ad" miral at Sea, and to preſide in all their Councils.
" After their Diviſions amongſt themſelves, and the " Burden of the Tyranny They ſuffered under, had " diſpoſed them to petition his Majeſty that now is,
" who was then in France, to receive them into his " Protection, and to ſend the Marquis of Ormond
" over again into Ireland to command them, his Ma-" jeſty was ſo far prevailed with, that he ſent the " Marquis of Ormond into Munſter, with ſuch a Sup" ply of Arms and Ammunition as He could get;
" where the Lord Inchiquin, Lord Preſident of that " Province, received him with the Proteſtant Army
" and joined with him: And ſhortly after, the Confe- " derate Iriſh made that ſecond Treaty of Pacification, " of which They now demanded the Benefit. But " it was notoriouſly known, that They no ſooner
" made that Treaty than They brake it, in not " bringing in thoſe Supplies of Men and Money,
" which They ought and were obliged to do; the " Want whereof expoſed the Lord Lieutenant to " many Difficulties, and was in Truth the Cauſe of
" the Misfortune before Dublin: Which He had no
" ſooner undergone, than they withdrew from taking " any further Care of the Kingdom, and raiſed Scan" dals upon and Jealouſies of the whole Body of the " Engliſh, who, being ſo provoked, could no longer
" venture themſelves in any Action or Conjunction " with the Iriſh, without more Apprehenſion of them
" than of the common Enemy."

" Instead of endeavouring to compoſe theſe Jea-
" louſies and ill Humours, They cauſed an Aſſembly " or Convention of their Clergy to meet without the " Lieutenant's Authority, and put the Government
" of all Things into their Hands: Who, in a ſhort
" Time, improved the Jealouſies in the Mind of the " People towards the few Proteſtants who yet remain" ed in the Army, and who had ſerved the King with " all imaginable Courage and Fidelity from the very " firſt Hour of their Rebellion, to that Degree, that
" the Marquis was even compelled to diſcharge his " own Troop of Guards of Horſe, conſiſting of ſuch
" Officers and Gentlemen as are mentioned before,
" and to truſt himſelf and all the remaining Towns
" and Garriſons to the Fidelity of the Iriſh; They " proteſting with much Solemnity, that upon ſuch a " Confidence, the whole Nation would be united as " one Man to his Majeſty's Service, under his Com" mand. But They had no ſooner received Satiſ" faction in that Particular (which was not in the " Marquis his Power to refuſe to give them), but " They raiſed ſeveral Calumnies againſt his Perſon, " declaimed againſt his Religion, and inhibited the " People, upon Pain of Excommunication, to ſubmit
" to this and that Order that was iſſued out by the " Marquis, without obeying whereof the Army could " not ſtay together; and upon the Matter forbad the " People to pay any Obedience to him. Inſtead of " raiſing new Forces according to their laſt Promiſe
" and Engagement, thoſe that were raiſed ran from " their Colours and diſperſed themſelves; They who " were truſted with the keeping of Towns and Forts,
" either gave them up by Treachery to Cromwell, or
" loſt them through Cowardice to him upon very " feeble Attacks: And their General, Owen O Neile,
" made a formal Contract and Stipulation with the " Parliament. And in the End, when They had di-
" veſted the Lord Lieutenant of all Power to oppoſe
" the Enemy, and given him great Cauſe to believe " that his Perſon was in Danger to be betrayed, and " delivered up to the Enemy, They vouchſafed to " petition him that He would depart out of the King" dom (to the Neceſſity whereof They had already " compelled him); and that He would leave his Ma-
" jeſty's Authority in the Hands of one of his Catho-
" lick Subjects, to whom They promiſed to ſubmit
" with the moſt punctual Obedience."

" Hereupon the Marquis, when He found that " He could not unite them in any one Action worthy
" the Duty of good Subjects, or of prudent Men, to" wards their own Preſervation; and ſo, that his Re-
" ſidence amongſt them longer could in no Degree
" contribute to his Majeſty's Service or Honour; and " That They would make it to be believed, that if " He would have committed the Command into the " Hands of a Roman Catholick, They would have been " able to preſerve thoſe Towns which ſtill remained
" in their Poſſeſſion, which were Limerick and Galkway,
" and ſome other Places of Importance enough,
" though of leſs than thoſe Cities; and that They " would likewiſe by Degrees recover from the Enemy
" what had been loſt, which indeed was very poſſible
" for them to have done, ſince they had great Bodies
" of Men to perform any Enterpriſe, and ſome good " Officers to lead them, if They would have been " obedient to any Command: Hereupon the Marquis
" reſolved to gratify them, and to place the Command
" in the Hands of ſuch a Perſon, whoſe Zeal for the " Catholick Religion was unqueſtionable, and whoſe
" Fidelity to the King was unblemiſhed. And ſo
" He made Choice of the Marquis of Clanrickard,
" a Gentleman, though originally of Engliſh Extrac" tion, whoſe Family had for ſo many hundred " Years reſided in that Kingdom, that He was look" ed upon as being of the beſt Family of the Iriſh;
" and whoſe Family had, in all former Rebellions,
" as well as in this laſt, preſerved its Loyalty to the " Crown not only unſpotted, but eminently conſpi-
" cuous.

" The Roman Catholicks of all Kinds pretended at
" leaſt a wonderful Satisfaction and Joy in this Elec" tion; acknowledged it as a great Obligation upon " them and their Poſterity to the Lord Lieutenant,
" for making ſo worthy a Choice; and applied them-
" ſelves to the Marquis of Clanrickard with all the " Proteſtations of Duty and Submiſſion, to induce " him to accept the Charge and Command over them;
" who indeed knew them too well to be willing to
" truſt them, or to have any Thing to do with them.
" Yet upon the Marquis of Ormond's earneſt and ſo" lemn Intreaty, as the laſt and only Remedy to keep
" and retain ſome Remainder of Hope, from whence " future Hopes might grow; whereas all other " Thoughts were deſperate, and the Kingdom would
" preſently fall into the Hands and Poſſeſſion of the " Engliſh, who would extirpate the whole Nation:
" This Importunity, and his great Zeal for the Ser" vice of the Crown, and to ſupport the Government
" there until his Majeſty could procure other Sup" plies, which the Marquis of Ormond promiſed to " ſolicit in France, or till his Majeſty ſhould ſend better
" Orders to preſerve his Authority in that Kingdom
" (the Hope of which ſeemed the leſs deſperate, be-
" cauſe They had Notice at the ſame Time of his " Majeſty's March into England, with an Army from " Scotland), prevailed with him ſo, that He was con" tented to receive ſuch Commiſſions from the Lord
" Lieutenant, as were neceſſary for the Execution of " the preſent Command. Upon which the Lord

" Lieutenant

" Lieutenant embarked himſelf, with ſome few Friends " and Servants, upon a little rotten Pink that was " bound for France, and very ill accommodated for " ſuch a Voyage; being not to be perſuaded to ſend " to the Commander in Chief of the Engliſh for a Paſs, " though He was aſſured that it would very readily " have been granted: But it pleaſed God that He " arrived ſafely in France, a little before or about the " Time that the King tranſported himſelf thither, " after his miraculous Eſcape from Worceſter."

" THE Marquis of Ormond was no ſooner gone out " of Ireland, but the Lord Marquis of Clanrickard, " then Lord Deputy, found himſelf no better treated " than the Lord of Ormond had been. That Part of " the Clergy, which had continually oppoſed the Lord " Lieutenant for being a Proteſtant, were now as little " ſatisfied with the Deputy's Religion, and as violently " contradicted all his Commands and Deſires, and " violated all their own Promiſes, and quickly made " it evident, that his Affection and Loyalty to the " King was that which They diſliked, and a Crime " that could not be ballanced by the undoubted Sin- " cerity of his Religion. They entered into ſecret " Correſpondence with the Enemy, and Conſpiracies " between themſelves: And though there were ſome " Perſons of Honour and Quality with the Deputy, " who were very faithful to him and to the King; " yet there were ſo many of another Allay, that all " his Counſels, Reſolutions and Deſigns, were diſco- " vered to the Enemy ſoon enough to be prevented. " And though ſome of the Letters were intercepted, " and the Perſons diſcovered who gave the Intelli- " gence, He had not Power to bring them to Juſtice; " but being commonly Friars and Clergymen, the " Privilege of the Church was inſiſted upon, and ſo " They were reſcued from the ſecular Proſecution till " their Eſcape was contrived. That perfidious and " treacherous Party had ſo great an Intereſt in all the " Towns, Forts and Garriſons, which yet pretended " to be ſubject to the Deputy, that all his Orders " were ſtill contradicted or neglected: And the " Enemy no ſooner appeared before any Place, but " ſome Faction in the Town cauſed it to be given up " and rendered."

" NOR could this fatal Sottiſhneſs be reformed, even " by the Severity and Rigour which the Engliſh exer- " ciſed upon them, who, by the wonderful Judgment " of God Almighty, always put thoſe Men to Death, " who put themſelves and thoſe Towns into their " Hands; finding ſtill that They had ſome barbarous " Part in the foul Murders, which had been com- " mitted in the Beginning of the Rebellion, and who " had been, by all the Acts of Grace granted by the " ſeveral Powers, ſtill reſerved for Juſtice. And of this " Kind there would be ſo many Inſtances in and " about Limerick and Gallway, that they deſerve to " be collected and mentioned in a Diſcourſe by itſelf, " to obſerve and magnify the wonderful Providence " of God Almighty, in bringing heinous Crimes to " Light and Puniſhment in this World, by Means " unapprehended by the guilty: Inſomuch as it can " hardly be believed, how many of the Clergy and " the Laity, who had a ſignal Hand in the contriving " and fomenting the firſt Rebellion, and in the Pre- " petration of thoſe horrible Murders; and who had " obſtructed all Overtures toward Peace, and princi- " pally cauſed any Peace that was made, to be pre- " ſently broken; who had with moſt Paſſion adhered " to the Nuncio, and endeavoured moſt maliciouſly " to exclude the King and his Poſterity from the " Dominion of Ireland: I ſay, it can hardly be be- " lieved, how many of theſe moſt notorious Tranſ- " greſſors did by ſome Act of Treachery endea- " vour to merit from the Engliſh Rebels, and ſo put " themſelves into their Hands, and were by them " publickly and reproachfully executed and put to " Death."

" THIS being the ſad Condition the Deputy was in; " and the Iriſh having, without his Leave and againſt " his expreſs Command, taken upon them to ſend " Meſſengers into Flanders, to deſire the Duke of " Lorraine to take them into his Protection, and of- " fered to deliver ſeveral important Places and Sea- " Towns into his Poſſeſſion, and to become his Sub- " jects, (upon which the Duke ſent over an Ambaſſa- " dour, and a good Sum of Money for their preſent " Relief), the Deputy was in a ſhort Time reduced " to thoſe Streights, that He durſt not remain in any " Town nor even in his own Houſe three Days toge- " ther, but was forced for his Safety to ſhift from " Place to Place, and ſometimes to lodge in the " Woods and Fields in cold and wet Nights; by " which He contracted thoſe Infirmities and Diſeaſes, " which ſhortly after brought him to his Grave. And " in the End, He was compelled to accept a Paſs " from the Engliſh, who had a Reverence for his Per- " ſon and his unſpotted Reputation, to tranſport him- " ſelf into England, where his Wife and Family were; " and where He died before He could procure Means " to carry himſelf to the King, which He always in- " tended to do."

WHEN the Commiſſioners had enlarged with ſome Commotion in this Narration and Diſcourſe, They a- gain provoked the Iriſh Commiſſioners to nominate " one Perſon amongſt themſelves, or of thoſe for " whom They appeared, who They believed could " in Juſtice demand his Majeſty's Favour; and if " They did not make it evidently appear, that He " had forfeited all his Title to Pardon after the Trea- " ties, and that He had been again as faulty to the " King as before, They were very willing He ſhould " be reſtored to his Eſtate." And then applying themſelves to his Majeſty with great Duty and Sub- miſſion, They concluded; " that if any Perſons had, " by their ſubſequent Loyalty or Service, or by their " Attendance upon his Majeſty beyond the Seas, ren- " dered themſelves grateful to him, and worthy of " his Royal Favour, They were very willing that his " Majeſty ſhould reſtore all or any of them to their " Honours or Eſtates, in ſuch Manner as his Majeſty " thought fit, and againſt all Impediments what- " ſoever." And upon this frank Offer of theirs, which his Majeſty took very well, ſeveral Acts of Parliament were preſently paſſed, for the Indemnity and the reſtoring many Perſons of Honour and In- tereſt to their Eſtates; who could either in Juſtice re- quire it, as having been faithful always to the King, and ſuffered with him or for him; or who had ſo far manifeſted their Affection and Duty for his Majeſty, that He thought fit, in that Conſideration, to wipe out the Memory of whatſoever had been formerly done amiſs. And by this Means, many were put into a full Poſſeſſion of their Eſtates, to which They could make any good Pretence at the Time when the Re- bellion began.

Many Catholicks who had ſerved the King immediately reſtored.

THIS Conſideration and Debate upon the Settle- ment of this unhappy Kingdom took up many Days, the King being always preſent, in which there aroſe every Day new Difficulties. And it appeared plainly enough, that the Guilt was ſo general, that if the Letter of the Act of Parliament of the ſeventeenth Year of the late King were ſtrictly purſued, as poſſibly it might have been, if the Reduction had fallen out likewiſe during the whole Reign of that King, even an utter Extirpation of the Nation would have fol- lowed.

Three Particulars in this Affair which diſtreſt the King.

THERE were three Particulars, which, upon the firſt Mention and View of them, ſeemed in moſt Mens Eyes worthy of his Majeſty's extraordinary Compaſ- ſion and Interpoſition; and yet upon a ſtricter Exa- mination were found as remedileſs as any of the reſt. One was; " the Condition of that miſerable People, " which was likewiſe very numerous, that was tranſ- " planted into Conaught; who had been removed from " their own Poſſeſſions in other Provinces, with ſuch

1. The Tranſplantation of the Iriſh into Conaught.

" Circumſtances of Tyranny and Cruelty, that their " own Conſents obtained afterwards with that Force,
" could not reaſonably be thought any Confirmation
" of their unjuſt Title, who were in Poſſeſſion of " their Lands."

The Adventurers Defence of this Meaſure.

To this it was anſwered, " that though it was acted
" in an irregular Manner, and without lawful Autho" rity, it being in a Time of Uſurpation; yet that " the Act itſelf was very prudent and neceſſary, and " an Act of Mercy, without which an utter Extir" pation of the Nation muſt have followed, if the " Kingdom were to be preſerved in Peace. That it " cannot be denied to be an Act of Mercy, ſince
" there was not one Man tranſplanted, who had not
" by the Law forfeited all the Eſtate He had; and " his Life might have been as legally taken from " him: So that both his Life, and whatever Eſtate
" He had granted to him in Conaught, was from the " pure Bounty of the State, which might and did by " the Act of Parliament ſeize upon the ſame. That,
" beſide the unſteady Humour of that People, and " their natural Inclination to rebel, it was notorious,
" that whilſt They were diſperſed over the Kingdom,
" though all their Forces had been ſo totally ſubdued,
" that there was not throughout the whole Kingdom
" a viſible Number of twenty Men together, who " pretended to be in Arms; yet there were daily ſuch
" Diſorders committed by Thefts and Robberies and " Murders, that They could not be ſaid to be in " Peace. Nor could the Engliſh, Man, Woman or " Child, go one Mile from their Habitations upon " their neceſſary Employment, but They were found " murdered and ſtripped by the Iriſh, who lay in Wait
" for thoſe Purpoſes; ſo that the People were very " hardly reſtrained from committing a Maſſacre upon " them wherever They were met: So that there ap" peared no other Way to prevent an utter Extirpa" tion of them, but to confine and reſtrain them with-
" in ſuch Limits and Bounds, that might keep them
" from doing Miſchief, and thereby make them ſafe.
" That thereupon this Expedient was laid Hold of.
" And whereas They had Nothing to enable them to " live upon in the Places where They were diſperſed,
" They had now by this Tranſplantation into Conaught
" Lands given them, ſufficient with their Induſtry to " live well upon; of which there was good Evidence,
" by their having lived well there ſince that Time,
" and many of them much better than They had " ever done before. And the State, which had done
" this Grace for them, had great Reaſon, when it " gave them good Titles to the Land aſſigned to " them, which They might plead in any Court of " Juſtice, to require from them Releaſes of what " They had forfeited; which, though to the Publick
" of no Uſe or Validity, were of Benefit and behoove-
" ful to many particular Perſons, for the quieting
" their Poſſeſſions againſt frivolous Suits and Claims
" which might ſtart up. That this Tranſplantation
" had been acted, finiſhed, and ſubmitted to by all " Parties, who had enjoyed the Benefit thereof,
" quietly and without Diſturbance, many Years before
" the King's Return: And the Soldiers and Adven-
" turers had been likewiſe ſo many Years in the Poſſeſ-
" ſion of their Lots, in Purſuance of the Act of Par" liament, and had laid out ſo much Money in build" ing and planting; that the Conſequence of ſuch an " Alteration, as was now propoſed would be the high-
" eſt Confuſion imaginable."

And it cannot be denied, that if the King could have thought it ſafe and ſeaſonable to have reviewed all that had been done, and taken thoſe Advantages upon former Miſcarriages and Miſapplications, as according to the Strictneſs of that very Law He might have done; the whole Foundation, upon which all the Hopes reſted of preſerving that Kingdom within the Obedience to the Crown of England, muſt have been ſhaken and even diſſolved; with no ſmall Influence and Impreſſion upon the Peace and Quiet of England itſelf. For the Memory of the Beginning of the Rebellion in Ireland (how many other Rebellions ſoever had followed as bad, or worſe in Reſpect of the Conſequences that attended them) was as freſh and as odious to the whole People of England, as it had been the firſt Year. And though no Man durſt avow ſo unchriſtian a Wiſh, as an Extirpation of them (which They would have been very well contented with); yet no Man diſſembled his Opinion, that it was the only Security the Engliſh could have in that Kingdom, that the Iriſh ſhould be kept ſo low, that They ſhould have no Power to hurt them.

The Caſe of Entails and Settlements at Law.

Another Particular, that ſeemed more againſt the Foundation of Juſtice, was; " that the Soldiers and " Adventurers expected and promiſed themſelves, that " in this new Settlement that was under Debate, all " Entails and Settlements at Law ſhould be deſtroyed,
" whether upon Conſideration of Marriage, or any " other Contracts which had been made before the " Rebellion. Nor had there been in the whole for" mer Proceedings in the Time of the Uſurpation,
" any Conſideration taken of Mortgages or Debts due
" by Statute or Recogniſance, or upon any other Se" curity; ſo that all ſuch Debts muſt be either loſt to
" the Proprietors, or remain ſtill with the Intereſt upon
" the Land, whoever had enjoyed the Benefit or Pro" fits thereof." All which ſeemed to his Majeſty very unreaſonable and unjuſt; and that ſuch Eſtates ſhould remain forfeited by the Treaſon of the Father, who had been only Tenant for Life, againſt all Deſcents and legal Titles of innocent Children; and of which, in all legal Attainders, the Crown never had or could receive any Benefit.

The Adventurers Anſwer.

Yet, how unreaſonable ſoever theſe Pretences ſeemed to be, it was no eaſy Matter to give Rules and Directions for the Remedy of the Miſchief, without introducing another Miſchief equally unjuſt and unreaſonable. For the Commiſſioners declared, " that if
" ſuch Titles, as are mentioned, were preſerved and " allowed to be good, there would not in that univer-
" ſal Guilt, which upon the Matter comprehended
" and covered the whole Iriſh Nation, be one Eſtate
" forfeited by Treaſon, but ſuch Conveyances and Set" tlements would be produced to ſecure and defend
" the ſame: And though they would be forged, there " would not be Witneſſes wanting to prove and juſtify
" whatſoever the Evidence could be applied to. And " if thoſe Trials were to be by the known Rules and
" Cuſtoms of the Law in Caſes of the like Nature,
" there was too much Reaſon to ſuſpect and fear that " there would be little Juſtice done: Since a Jury
" of Iriſh would infallibly find againſt the Engliſh, let
" the Evidence be what it could be; and there was " too much Reaſon to apprehend that the Engliſh,
" whoſe Animoſity was not leſs, would be as unjuſt
" in bringing in their Verdict againſt the Iriſh right " or wrong." And there was Experience afterwards, in the Proſecution of this Affair, of ſuch Forgeries and Perjuries, as have not been heard of amongſt Chriſtians; and in which, to our Shame, the Engliſh were not behindhand with the Iriſh. The King however thought it not reaſonable or juſt for him, upon what probable Suggeſtions ſoever, to countenance ſuch a barefaced Violation of the Law, by any Declaration of his; but commanded his Council at Law, to make ſuch Alterations in the Expreſſions as might be fit for him to conſent to.

The great Miſery of the Iriſh.

The third Particular, and which much affected the King, was; " that in this univerſal Joy for his Reſto-
" ration without Blood, and with the Indemnity of ſo
" many hundred Thouſands who had deſerved to " ſuffer the utmoſt Puniſhments, the poor Iriſh, after " ſo long Sufferings in the greateſt Extremity of " Miſery, ſhould be the only Perſons who ſhould
" find no Benefit or Eaſe by his Majeſty's Reſtora-
" tion, but remain robbed and ſpoiled of all They " had, and be as it were again ſacrificed to the " Avarice and Cruelty of them, who had not deſerved
" better

"better of his Majesty than the other poor People "had done."

Answer to this Plea. To which there can be no other Answer made, which is very sufficient in Point of Justice, but that, "as their Rebellion and other Crimes had been long "before his Majesty's Time, so full Vengeance had "been executed upon them; and They had paid the "Penalties of their Crimes and Transgressions before "his Majesty's Return: So that He could not restore "that which They called their own, without taking "it from them, who were become the just Owners by "an Act of Parliament; which his Majesty could not "violate without Injustice, and Breach of the Faith "He had given."

And that which was their greatest Misery and Reproach, and which distinguished them from the Subjects of the other two Kingdoms, who were otherwise bad enough, was; that Both the other Nations had made noble Attempts for redeeming their Liberty, and for the Restoration of his Majesty (for Scotland itself had done much towards it); and his present Restoration was, with God's Blessing and only with his Blessing, by the sole Effects of the Courage and Affection of his own Subjects: So that England and Scotland had in a great Degree redeemed, and even undone what had been before done amiss by them; and his Majesty had improved and secured those Affections to him by those Promises and Concessions, which he was in Justice obliged to perform. But the miserable Irish alone had no Part in contributing to his Majesty's Happiness; nor had God suffered them to be the least Instruments in bringing his good Pleasure to pass, or to give any Testimony of their Repentance for the Wickedness They had wrought, or of their Resolution to be better Subjects for the future: So that They seemed as a People left out by Providence, and exempted from any Benefit from that blessed Conjuncture in his Majesty's Restitution.

And this Disadvantage was improved towards them, by their frequent Manifestation of an inveterate Animosity against the English Nation, and English Government; which again was returned to them in an irreconcilable Jealousy of all the English towards them. And to this their present Behaviour and Imprudence contributed very much: For it appeared evidently, that They expected the same Concessions (which the Necessity of that Time had made fit to be granted to them) in Respect of their Religion should be now likewise confirmed. And this Temper made it very necessary for the King to be very wary in dispensing extraordinary Favours (which his natural merciful Inclination prompted him to) to the Irish; and to prefer the general Interest of his three Kingdoms, before the particular Interest of a Company of unhappy Men, who had foolishly forfeited their own; though He pitied them, and hoped in the Conclusion to be able, without exposing the publick Peace to manifest Hazard, in some Degree to improve their Condition.

The first Act of Settlement passed. Upon the whole Matter, the King found, that if He deferred to settle the Government of Ireland till a perfect Settlement of all particular Interests could be made, it would be very long. He saw it could not be done at once; and that there must be some Examinations taken there, and some Matters more clearly stated and adjusted, before his Majesty could make his Determination upon those Particulars, which purely depended upon his own Judgment; and that some Difficulties would be removed or lessened by Time: And so He passed that which is called The first Act of Settlement; and was perswaded to commit the Execution thereof, to a great Number of Commissioners, recommended to his Majesty by those who were most conversant in the Affairs of Ireland, none or very few of which were known to his Majesty, or to any of those who had been so many Years from their Country, in their constant Attendance upon his Majesty's Person beyond the Seas.

Three Lords Justices appointed. And for the better Countenance of this Commission, and likewise to restrain the Commissioners from any Excess, if their very large Jurisdiction should prove a Temptation to them, the King thought fit to commit the Sword to three Justices, which He had resolved, when the sending the Lord Roberts was declined. Those three were, Sir Morrice Eustace, whom He newly made Lord Chancellor of Ireland, the Lord Broghill, whom He now made Earl of Orrery, and Sir Charles Coote, whom He likewise made Earl of Montrath. The first had been his Serjeant at Law long in that Kingdom, and had been eminent in the Profession of the Law, and the more esteemed for being always a Protestant though an Irishman, and of approved Fidelity to the King during this whole Rebellion. But He was now old, and made so little Shew of any Parts extraordinary, that, but for the Testimony that was given of him, it might have been doubted whether He ever had any. The other two had been Both eminently against the King, but upon this Turn, when all other Powers were down, eminently for him; the one, very able and generous; the other, proud, dull and very avaricious. But the King had not then Power to choose any, against whom some as material Objections might not be made, and who had been able to do as much Good. With them, there were too many others upon whom Honours were conferred; upon some, that They might do no Harm, who were thereby enabled to do the more: and upon others, that They might not murmur, who murmured the more for having Nothing given them but Honour: And so They were all dispatched for Ireland; by which the King had some Ease, his Service little Advancement.

After a Year was spent in the Execution of this Commission, (for I shall, without discontinuing the Relation, say all that I intend upon this Subject of Ireland), there was very little done towards the settling the Kingdom, or towards preparing any Thing that might settle it; but on the contrary, the Breaches were made wider, and so much Passion and Injustice shewed, that Complaints were brought to his Majesty from all Parts of the Kingdom, and from all Persons in Authority there. The Number of the Commissioners was so great, and their Interests so different, that They made no Dispatch. Very many of them were in Possession of those Lands, which others sued for before them; and They themselves bought broken Titles and Pretences of other Men, for inconsiderable Sums of Money, which They supported and made good by their own Authority. Such of the Commissioners, who had their own particular Interest and Concernment depending, attended the Service very diligently: The few who were more equal and just, because They had no Interest of their own at Stake, were weary of their Attendance and Expence (there being no Allowance for their Pains); and offended at the Partiality and Injustice which They saw practised, withdrew themselves, and would be no longer present at those Transactions which They could not regulate or reform.

Partiality of the Commissioners appointed by the First Act.

All Interests were equally offended and incensed; and the Soldiers and Adventurers complained no less of the Corruption and Injustice than the Irish did: So that the Lords Justices and Council thought it necessary to transmit another Bill to his Majesty, which, as I remember, They called an explanatory Bill of the former; and in that They provided, "that "no Person who lived in Ireland, or had any Pre-"tence to an Estate there, should be employed as a "Commissioner; but that his Majesty should be de-"sired to send over a competent Number of well "qualified Persons out of England to attend that Ser-"vice, upon whom a fit Salary should be settled by "the Bill; and such Rules set down as might direct "and govern the Manner of their Proceeding; and "that an Oath might be prescribed by the Bill, which "the Commissioners should take, for the impartial Second Act of Settlement transmitted to the King.

"Ad-

"Adminiſtration of Juſtice, and for the Proſecution "and Execution of this Bill," which was tranſmitted as an Act by the King. His Majeſty made Choice of ſeven Gentlemen of very clear Reputations; one of them being an eminent Serjeant at Law, whom He made a Judge upon his Return from thence; two others, Lawyers of very much Eſteem; and the other four, Gentlemen of very good Extractions, excellent Underſtandings, and above all Suſpicion for their Integrity, and generally reputed to be ſuperiour to any baſe Temptation.

New Commiſſioners appointed to execute it.

But this ſecond Bill, before it could be tranſmitted, took up as much Time as the former. The ſame numerous Retinue of all Intereſts from Ireland attended the King; and all that had been ſaid in the former Debates was again repeated, and almoſt with the ſame Paſſion and Impertinence. The Iriſh made large Obſervations upon the Proceedings of the late Commiſſioners, to juſtify thoſe Fears and Apprehenſions which They had formerly urged: And there appeared too much Reaſon to believe, that their greateſt Deſign now was, rather to keep off any Settlement, than that They hoped to procure ſuch a one as They deſired; relying more to find their Account from a general Diſſatisfaction, and the Diſtraction and Confuſion that was like to attend it, than from any Determination that was like to be in their Favour. Yet They had Friends in the Court, who made them great Promiſes; which They could not be without, ſince They made as great Promiſes to thoſe who were to protect them. There were indeed many particular Men both of the Soldiers and Adventurers, who in Reſpect of their many notorious and opprobrious Actions againſt the Crown throughout their whole Employment (and who even ſince his Majeſty's Return had enough expreſſed how little They were ſatisfied with the Revolution) were ſo univerſally odious both in England and Ireland, that if their particular Caſes could have been ſevered from the reſt, without Violation of the Rule of Juſtice that ſecured all the reſt, any Thing that could have been done to their Detriment would have been grateful enough to every Body.

The different Parties again heard by the King.

After many very tedious Debates, in which his Majeſty endeavoured by all the Ways He could think of to find ſome Expedient, that would enable him to preſerve the miſerable Iriſh from the Extremity of Miſery; He found it neceſſary at laſt, to acquieſce with a very poſitive Aſſurance from the Earl of Orrery and others, who were believed to underſtand Ireland very exactly, and who, upon the Surveys that had been taken with great Punctuality, undertook, "that "there was Land enough to ſatisfy all the Soldiers "and Adventurers, and that there would be a very "great Proportion left for the Accommodation of "the Iriſh very liberally." And for the better Improvement of that Proportion, the King preſcribed ſome Rules and Limitations to the immoderate Pretences and Demands of the Soldiers and Adventurers upon the doubling Ordinance and imperfect Admeaſurement, and ſome other Irregularities, in which his Majeſty was not in Honour or Juſtice obliged to comply with them: And ſo He tranſmitted this ſecond Bill.

Second Act of Settlement paſſed.

Whilst this ſecond Bill was under Deliberation, there fell out an Accident in Ireland, which produced great Alterations with Reference to the Affairs of that Kingdom. The Differences which had every Day ariſen between the three Juſtices, and their different Humours and Affections, had little advanced the ſettling that Government; ſo that there would have been a Neceſſity of making ſome Mutation in it: So that the Death of the Earl of Montrath, which happened at this Time, fell out conveniently enough to the King; for by it the Government was again looſe. For the Earl of Orrery was in England; and the Power reſided not in leſs than two: So that the Chancellor, who remained ſingle there, was without any Authority to act. And They who took the moſt diſpaſſioned Survey of all that had been done, and of what remained to be done, did conclude that Nothing could reaſonably produce a Settlement there, but the deputing one ſingle Perſon to exerciſe that Government. And the Duke of Albemarle himſelf, who had a great Eſtate in that Kingdom, which made him the more long for a Settlement, and who had before the King's Return and ever ſince diſſuaded the King from thinking of employing the Duke of Ormond there, who had himſelf Averſion enough from that Command, of which He had ſufficient Experience: I ſay, the General had now ſo totally changed his Mind, that He plainly told the King, "that "there was no Way to extricate that Kingdom out "of thoſe Intricacies in which it was involved, but "by ſending over a Lord Lieutenant thither. That "He thought it not fit for his Majeſty's Service, "that himſelf, who had that Commiſſion of Lord "Lieutenant, ſhould be abſent from his Perſon; and "therefore that He was very ready and deſirous to "give up his Commiſſion: And that in his Judg-"ment Nobody would be able to ſettle and compoſe "the ſeveral Factions in that Kingdom, but the Duke "of Ormond, who He believed would be grateful to "all Sorts of People." And therefore He adviſed his Majeſty very poſitively, "that He would imme-"diately give him the Commiſſion, and as ſoon as "ſhould be poſſible ſend him away into Ireland."

The Duke of Albemarle reſigns the Office of Lord Lieutenant.

And both the King and the General ſpake with the Duke of Ormond, and prevailed with him to accept it, before either of them communicated it to the Chancellor, who the King well knew would for many Reaſons, and out of his great Friendſhip to the Duke, diſſuade him from undertaking it; which was very true.

And the Duke of Ormond accepts it.

And the King and the Duke of Ormond came one Day to the Chancellor, to adviſe what was to be done for Ireland; and (concealing the Reſolution) the King told him what the General's Advice was, and aſked him "what He thought of ſending the Duke "of Ormond his Lieutenant into Ireland." To which the Chancellor anſwered preſently, "that the King "would do very ill in ſending him, and that the Duke "would do much worſe, if He deſired to go." Upon which They both ſmiled, and told him, "that "the General had prevailed with the King, and the "King with the Duke; ſo that the Matter was re-"ſolved, and there remained Nothing to be done "but preparing the Inſtructions, which He muſt "think upon."

The Chancellor expreſſes his Concern at this.

The Chancellor could not refrain from ſaying very warmly, "that He was ſorry for it; and that "it would be good for neither of them, that the "Duke ſhould be from the King, or that He ſhould "be in Ireland, where He would be able to do no "Good. Beſides that He had given himſelf ſo much "to his Eaſe and Pleaſure ſince He came into Eng-"land, that He would never be able to take the "Pains, which that moſt laborious Province would "require." He ſaid, "if this Counſel had been "taken when the King came firſt over, it might "have had good Succeſs, when the Duke was full of "Reputation, and of unqueſtionable Intereſt in his "Majeſty, and the King himſelf was more feared and "reverenced than preſumed upon: So that the Duke "would have had full Authority to have reſtrained "the exorbitant Deſires and Expectations of all the "ſeveral Parties, who had all Guilt enough upon "their Hearts to fear ſome Rigour from the King, "or to receive moderate Grace with infinite Sub-"miſſion and Acknowledgment. But now the Duke, "beſides his withdrawing himſelf from all Buſineſs "as much as He could, had let himſelf fall to Fa-"miliarities with all Degrees of Men; and upon "their Averments had undertaken to protect or at "leaſt to ſolicit Mens Intereſts, which it may be "might not appear upon Examination to be founded "upon Juſtice. And the King himſelf had been ex-

"poſed

" poſed to all Manner of Importunities, received all " Mens Addreſſes, and heard all They would ſay, " made many Promiſes without Deliberation, and ap- " peared ſo deſirous to ſatisfy all Men, that He was " irreſolute in all Things. And therefore till He had " taken ſome firm and fixed Reſolutions himſelf, from " which neither Prejudice towards one Man, nor Pity " and Compaſſion on the Behalf of another, ſhould " remove him; the Lieutenant of Ireland would be " able to do him little Service, and would be himſelf " continually expoſed to Scorn and Affronts."

AND afterwards the Chancellor expoſtulated warmly with the Duke of Ormond (who well knew, that all his Commotion proceeded from the Integrity of his unqueſtionable Friendſhip), and told him " that He would " repent this raſh Reſolution; and that He would have " been able to have contributed more to the Settle- " ment of Ireland, by being near the Perſon of the " King, than by being at Dublin, from whence in a " ſhort Time there would be as many Aſperſions and " Reproaches ſent hither, as had been againſt other " Men; and that He had no Reaſon to be confident, " that they would not make as deep Impreſſion by the " Arts and Induſtry of his Enemies, of which He had " Store, and would have more by being abſent, for " the Court naturally had little Regard for any Man " who was abſent. And that He carried with him " the ſame Infirmity into Ireland with that of the King, " which kept it from being ſettled here; which was " an Unwillingneſs to deny any Man what He could " not but ſee was impoſſible to grant, and a Deſire to " pleaſe every Body, which whoſoever affected ſhould " pleaſe Nobody."

The Duke acquaints the Chancellor with his Reaſons for accepting it.

THE Duke, who never took any Thing ill He ſaid to him, told him, " that Nobody knew better than " He the Averſion He had to that Command, when " it may be He might have undertaken it with more " Advantage." He confeſſed, " He ſaw many Dan- " gers with Reference to himſelf, which He knew " not how to avoid, and many Difficulties with Re- " ference to the Publick, which He had little Hope " to overcome; yet Ireland muſt not be given over: " And ſince there ſeemed to be a general Opinion, " with which the King concurred, that He could be " able to contribute to the compoſing the Diſtempers, " and the ſettling the Government; He would not " ſuſpect himſelf, but believe that He might be able " to do ſomewhat towards it." And He gave his Word to him, " that Nothing ſhould be defective on " his Part in Point of Induſtry; for He was reſolved " to take indefatigable Pains for a Year or two, in " which He hoped the Settlement would be com- " pleated, that He might have Eaſe and Recreation " for the other Part of his Life." And He confeſſed, " that He did the more willingly enter upon that " Province, that He might have the Opportunity to " ſettle his own Fortune, which how great ſoever in " Extent of Lands did not yet, by Reaſon of the ge- " neral Unſettlement, yield him a Quarter of the Re- " venue it ought to do. That for what concerned " himſelf, and the Diſadvantages He might undergo " by his Abſence, He referred it to Providence and " the King's good Nature, who," He ſaid, " knew " him better than any of his Enemies did; and there- " fore, He hoped, He would believe himſelf before " them." However, the Truth is, He was the more diſpoſed to that Journey, by the Diſlike He had of the Court, and the neceſſary Exerciſes which Men there were to excel in, for which He was ſuperannuated: And if He did not already diſcern any Leſſening of the King's Grace towards him, He ſaw enough to make him believe, that the contrary ought not to be depended upon. And within few Years after, He had Cauſe to remember what the Chancellor had foretold him of Both their Fortunes.

The Duke and the Commiſſioners ſet out for Ireland.

The Duke (with the ſeven Commiſſioners who were appointed for that Act of Settlement, and all other Perſons who attended that Intereſt) entered upon his Journey from London about the End of July, in the Year one thouſand ſix hundred ſixty and four, full four Years and more after the King's happy Return into England.

IT was ſome Months after the Commiſſioners Arrival in Ireland, before They could ſettle thoſe Orders and Rules for their Proceedings, which were neceſſary to be done, before the People ſhould be appointed to attend. And it was neceſſary, that They ſhould in the Order of their Judicatory firſt proceed upon the Demands and Pretences of the Iriſh; both becauſe there could be no Settlement of Soldiers or Adventurers in Poſſeſſion of any Lands, before the Titles of the Iriſh to thoſe Lands were determined; and becauſe there was a Clauſe in the laſt Act of Parliament, that all the Iriſh ſhould put in their Claims by a Day appointed, and that they ſhould be determined before another Day, which was likewiſe aſſigned; which Days might be prolonged for once by the Lord Lieutenant, upon ſuch Reaſons as ſatisfied him: So that the Delay for ſo many Months before the Commiſſioners ſate, gave great Argument of Complaint to the Iriſh, though it could not be avoided, in Regard that the Commiſſioners themſelves had not been nominated by the King above twenty Days before They began their Journey into Ireland; ſo that They could never ſo much as read over the Acts of Parliament together, before They came to Dublin. And then They found ſo many difficult Clauſes in Both Acts of Parliament, and ſo contrary to each other, that it was no eaſy Matter to determine how to govern themſelves in Point of Right, and to reduce themſelves to any Method in their Proceedings.

The Commiſſioners publiſh their intended Method of proceeding.

BUT after They had adjuſted all Things as well as They could, They publiſhed their Orders in what Method They meant to proceed, and appointed the Iriſh to put in their Claims by ſuch a Day, and to attend the Proſecution of them accordingly. And They had no ſooner entered upon their Work, but the Engliſh thought They had began it ſoon enough. For They heard every Day many of the Iriſh, who had been known to have been the moſt forward in the firſt Beginning of the Rebellion, and the moſt malicious in the carrying it on, declared innocent; and Deeds of Settlement and Entails which had been never heard of before, and which would have been produced (as might reaſonably be believed) before the former Commiſſioners, if They had had them to produce, now declared to be good and valid; by which the Iriſh were immediately put into the Poſſeſſion of a very great Quantity of Land taken from the Engliſh: So that in a ſhort Time the Commiſſioners had rendered themſelves as generally odious as the Iriſh, and were looked upon as Perſons corrupted for that Intereſt, which had every Day Succeſs almoſt in whatſoever They pretended. And their Determinations happened to have the more of Prejudice upon them, becauſe the Commiſſioners were always divided in their Judgments. And it is no Wonder, that They who ſeemed moſt to adhere to the Engliſh Intereſt were moſt eſteemed by them.

THE Parliament in Ireland was then ſitting: And the Houſe of Commons, conſiſting of many Members who were either Soldiers or Adventurers, or had the like Intereſt, was very much offended at the Proceedings of the Commiſſioners, made many Votes againſt them, and threatened them with their Authority and Juriſdiction. But the Commiſſioners, who knew their own Power, and that there was no Appeal againſt their Judgments, proceeded ſtill in their own Method, and continued to receive the Claims of the Iriſh, beyond the Time that the Act of Parliament or the Act of State limited to them, as was generally underſtood. And during the laſt eight or ten Days Sitting upon thoſe Claims, They paſſed more Judgments and Determinations than in near a Year before, indeed with very wonderful Expedition; when the Engliſh who were diſpoſſeſſed by thoſe Judgments had not their Witneſſes ready, upon a Preſumption, that in Point of Time it was not poſſible for thoſe Cauſes to come to be heard. By theſe Sentences and Decrees, many hundred Thouſands of Acres were adjudged to the Iriſh, which had been looked upon as unqueſtionably forfeited, and of which the Engliſh had been long in Poſſeſſion accordingly.

Their Decrees much in Favour of the Iriſh.

This raiſed ſo great a Clamour, that the Engliſh refuſed to yield Poſſeſſion upon the Decrees of the Commiſſioners, who, by an Omiſſion in the Act of Parliament, were not qualified with Power enough to provide for the Execution of their own Sentences. The Courts of Law eſtabliſhed in that Kingdom would not, nor indeed could, give any Aſſiſtance to the Commiſſioners. And the Lord Lieutenant and Council, who had in the Beginning, by their Authority, put many into the Poſſeſſion of the Lands which had been decreed to them by the Commiſſioners, were now more tender and reſerved in that Multitude of Decrees that had lately paſſed: So that the Iriſh were uſing their utmoſt Endeavours, by Force to recover the Poſſeſſion of thoſe Lands which the Commiſſioners had decreed to them; whilſt the Engliſh were likewiſe reſolved by Force to defend what They had been ſo long poſſeſſed of, notwithſtanding the Commiſſioners Determination. And the Commiſſioners were ſo far troubled and diſſatisfied with theſe Proceedings, and with ſome intricate Clauſes in the Act of Parliament concerning the future Proceedings; that, though They had not yet made any Entrance upon the Deciſion of the Claims of the Engliſh or of the Iriſh Proteſtants, They declared "that They would "proceed no farther in the Execution of their Com-"miſſion, until They could receive his Majeſty's "farther Pleaſure." And that They might the more effectually receive it, They deſired Leave from the King that They might attend his Royal Perſon; and there being at the ſame Time ſeveral Complaints made againſt them to his Majeſty, and Appeals to him from their Decrees, He gave the Commiſſioners Leave to return. And at the ſame Time all the other Intereſts ſent their Deputies to ſolicit their Rights; in the Proſecution whereof, after much Time ſpent, the King thought fit likewiſe to receive the Advice and Aſſiſtance of his Lieutenant: And ſo the Duke of Ormond returned again to the Court. And the Settlement of Ireland was the third Time brought before the King and Council; there being then likewiſe tranſmitted a third Bill, as additional and ſupplemental to the other two, and to reverſe many of the Decrees made by the Commiſſioners, They bearing the Reproach of all that had been done or had ſucceeded amiſs, and from all Perſons who were grieved in what Kind ſoever.

The different Parties heard a Third Time by the King.

The King was very tender of the Reputation of his Commiſſioners, who had been always eſteemed Men of great Probity and unqueſtionable Reputation: And though He could not refuſe to receive Complaints, yet He gave thoſe who complained no farther Countenance, than to give the others Opportunity to vindicate themſelves. Nor did there appear the leaſt Evidence to queſtion the Sincerity of their Proceeding, or to make them liable to any reaſonable Suſpicion of Corruption: And the Complaints were ſtill proſecuted by thoſe, who had that taken from them which They deſired to keep for themſelves.

The Author's Reflections on the Proceedings of the Commiſſioners.

The Truth is; there is Reaſon enough to believe, that upon the firſt Arrival of the Commiſſioners in Ireland, and ſome Converſation They had, and the Obſervation They made of the great Bitterneſs and Animoſities from the Engliſh, both Soldiers and Adventurers, towards the whole Iriſh Nation of what Kind ſoever; the ſcandalous Proceeding of the late Commiſſioners upon the firſt Act, when They had not been guided by any Rules of Juſtice, but rejected all Evidence, which might operate to the taking away any Thing from them which They reſolved to keep, the Judges themſelves being both Parties and Witneſſes in all the Cauſes brought before them; together with the very ill Reputation very many of the Soldiers and Adventurers had for extraordinary Malice to the Crown, and to the Royal Family; and the notable Barbarity They had exerciſed towards the Iriſh, who without Doubt for many Years had undergone the moſt cruel Oppreſſions of all Kind that can be imagined, many Thouſands of them having been forced, without being covered under any Houſe, to periſh in the open Fields for Hunger; the infamous Purchaſes which had been made by many Perſons, who had compelled the Iriſh to ſell their Remainders and lawful Pretences for very inconſiderable Sums of Money: I ſay, theſe and many other Particulars of this Kind, together with ſome Attempt that had been made upon their firſt Arrival, to corrupt them againſt all Pretences which ſhould be made by the Iriſh, might probably diſpoſe the Commiſſioners themſelves to ſuch a Prejudice againſt many of the Engliſh, and to ſuch a Compaſſion towards the Iriſh, that They might be much inclined to favour their Pretences and Claims; and to believe that the Peace of the Kingdom and his Majeſty's Government might be better provided for, by their being ſettled in the Lands of which They had been formerly poſſeſſed, than by ſupporting the ill gotten Titles of thoſe, who had manifeſted all imaginable Infidelity and Malice againſt his Majeſty whilſt They had any Power to oppoſe him, and had not given any Teſtimony of their Converſion, or of their Reſolution to yield him for the future a perfect and entire Obedience after They could oppoſe him no longer; as if They deſired only to retain thoſe Lands which They had gotten by Rebellion, together with the Principles by which They had gotten them, until They ſhould have an Opportunity to juſtify Both by ſome new Power, or a Concurrence amongſt themſelves. Whenceſoever it proceeded, it was plain enough the Iriſh had received more Favour than was expected or imagined.

And in the very Entrance into the Work, to avoid the Partiality which was too apparent in the Engliſh towards each other, and their Animoſity againſt the Iriſh as evident, very ſtrict Rules had been ſet down by the Commiſſioners, what Kind of Evidence They would admit to be good, and receive accordingly. And it was provided, "that the Evidence of no "Soldier or Adventurer ſhould be received in any "Caſe, to which himſelf was never ſo much a "Stranger;" as, if his own Lot had fallen in Munſter, and He had no Pretence to any Thing out of that Province, his Evidence ſhould not be received, as to any Thing that He had ſeen done in Leinſter or Conaught or Ulſter, wherein He was not at all concerned: Which was generally thought to be a very unjuſt Rule, after ſo many Years expired, and ſo many Perſons dead, who had likewiſe been preſent at thoſe Actions. And by this Means many Men were declared not to have been in Rebellion, when there might have been full Evidence, that They had been preſent in ſuch and ſuch a Battle, and in ſuch and ſuch a Siege, if the Witneſſes might have been received who were then preſent at thoſe Actions, and ready to give Teſtimony of it, and of ſuch Circumſtances as could not have been feigned, if their Evidence might have been received.

Too many of the Iriſh had both reſtored to their Eſtate.

That which raiſed the greateſt Umbrage againſt the Commiſſioners was, that a great Number of the moſt infamous Perſons of the Iriſh Nation, who were looked upon by thoſe of their own Country with the greateſt Deteſtation, as Men who had been the moſt violent Fomentors and Proſecutors of the Rebellion, and the greateſt Oppoſers of all moderate Counſels, and of all Expedients which might have contributed towards a Peace in the late King's Time (whereby the Nation might have been redeemed), and who had not had the Confidence ſo much as to offer any Claim before the late Commiſſioners, were now adjudged and declared innocent, and ſo reſtored to their Eſtates:

And

Many who had ſerved the King very hardly treated.

And that many others, who in Truth had never been in Rebellion, but notoriouſly ſerved the King againſt the Rebels both in England and Ireland, and had never been put out of their Eſtates, now upon ſome ſlight Evidence, by the Interception of Letters, or Confeſſion of Meſſengers that They had had Correſpondence with the Rebels (though it was evident that even that Correſpondence had been perfunctory, and only to ſecure them that They might purſue his Majeſty's Service), were condemned and had their Eſtates taken from them, by the Judgment of the Commiſſioners.

An Inſtance of this in the Caſe of the Earl of Tyrconnell.

AND of this I cannot forbear to give an Inſtance, and the rather, that it may appear how much a perſonal Prejudice, upon what Account ſoever, weighs and prevails againſt Juſtice itſelf, even with Men who are not in their Natures Friends to Injuſtice. It was the Caſe of the Earl of Tyrconnell, and it was this. He was the younger Son of the Lord Fitzwilliams a Catholick Lord in Ireland, but of ancient Engliſh Extraction, of a fair Eſtate, and never ſuſpected to be inclined to the Rebels; as very few of the Engliſh were. Oliver Fitzwilliams (who was the Perſon We are now ſpeaking of, and the younger Son of that Lord Fitzwilliams) had been ſent by his Father into France, to be there educated, many Years before the Rebellion. He was a proper and a handſome Man, and by his Courage had gotten a very good Reputation in the French Army; where, after He had ſpent ſome Years in the Campagna, He obtained the Command of a Regiment in which He had been firſt a Captain, and was looked upon generally as an excellent Officer.

WHEN the Army was ſent into Winter-Quarters, He went to Paris to kiſs the Hands of the Queen of England, who was come thither the Summer before, it being in the Year 1644. Having often waited upon her Majeſty, He made many Profeſſions of Duty and Obedience to the King, and much condemned the Rebellion of the Iriſh, and ſaid, "He "knew many of them were cozened and deceived by "Tales and Lies, and had no Purpoſe to withdraw "themſelves from his Majeſty's Obedience." He made Offer of his Service to the Queen, "and that, "if She thought He might be able to do the King "any Service, He would immediately go into Eng- "land, and with his Majeſty's Approbation into Ire- "land, where if He could do no other Service, He "was confident He could draw off many of the Iriſh "from the Service of the Rebels." The Queen, upon the good Reputation He had there, accepted his Offer, and writ a Letter by him to the King, with a very good Character of his Perſon, and as very fit to be truſted in Ireland.

IT was his Fortune to come to the King very few Days before the Battle of Naſeby, where as a Volunteer in the Troop of Prince Rupert, He behaved himſelf with very ſignal Courage in the View of the King himſelf; who ſhortly after gave him a Letter full of Recommendation and Teſtimony to the Marquis of Ormond his Lieutenant of Ireland, who received him kindly, and having conferred with him at large, and underſtood all He intended to do, gave him Leave to go into the Iriſh Quarters and to return again, as He thought fit. And in a ſhort Time after, both his Father and his elder Brother died; whereby both the Title and the Eſtate devolved to him, and He was poſſeſſed accordingly.

Too many of the Iriſh had been reſtored to their Eſtate.

THE Man was before in his Nature elate and proud enough, had a greater Value of himſelf than other Men had, and a leſs of other Men than They deſerved, whereby He got himſelf not beloved by many; but Nobody who loved him worſt ever ſuſpected him to incline to the Rebels, though They knew that He was often in their Quarters, and had often Conferences with them: And a good Part of his Eſtate lay in their Quarters. He attended upon the Lord Lieutenant in all his Expeditions: And when the Iriſh ſo infamouſly broke the firſt Peace, and beſieged the Lieutenant in Dublin (upon which He was compelled to deliver it into the Hands of the Parliament with the King's Conſent), the Lord Fitzwilliams returned with him or about the ſame Time into England, and from thence again into France; where He married the Daughter of the Widow Counteſs of Clare, and Siſter to that Earl, a Lady of a Religion the moſt oppoſite to the Roman Catholick, which He ſuffered her to enjoy without any Contradiction. When the War was at an End in England, and the King a Priſoner, He with his Wife and Family tranſported himſelf into England, and after ſome Time into Ireland; where Cromwell had a jealous Eye upon him, but not being able to diſcover any Thing againſt him, could not hinder him from poſſeſſing the Eſtate that had deſcended to him from his Father and his elder Brother. And the War being there ended, and the Settlement made by the Act of Parliament upon the Statute, as hath been mentioned before, there was not the leaſt Trouble given to him; but He quietly enjoyed the Poſſeſſion of his whole Eſtate till the King's Return, when He came into England to kiſs his Majeſty's Hand, and was by him made Earl of Tyrconnell.

WHEN the Commiſſioners ſate upon the firſt Act, who obſerved no Rules of Juſtice, Law or Equity, when they contradicted any Intereſt or Appetite of their own, He received no Diſturbance; but when theſe new Commiſſioners came over, all Men, as well Proteſtants as others, whoſe Eſtates had never been queſtioned, thought it ſafeſt for them to put in their Claims before the Commiſſioners, to prevent any Trouble that might ariſe hereafter. This Gentleman followed that Advice and Example, put in his Claim, and preſſed the Commiſſioners for a ſhort Day to be heard. The Day was appointed. Neither Adventurer, Soldier, or any other Perſon, made any Title to the Land: But ſome envious Perſon, unqualified for any Proſecution, offered a Letter to the Commiſſioners which had many Years before, and before his Coming into Ireland, been written by Colonel Fitzwilliams in Paris to a Jeſuit, one Hartogan, then in Ireland; in which He gave him Notice "of his Purpoſe of com- "ing into Ireland, where He hoped to do their Friends "ſome Service."

THIS Letter was writ when the Queen firſt deſigned to ſend him to the King, that the Iriſh, who were the moſt jealous People of the World, might know of his Purpoſe to come thither, before They ſhould hear of his being in Dublin; and now being produced before the Commiſſioners, without conſidering how long ſince it was writ or the Reaſon of writing it, that He had ſerved the King, and never in the leaſt Degree againſt him, upon one of their Rules, "that "a Correſpondence with the Rebels was a good Evi- "dence," They without any Pauſe declared him nocent, and preſently aſſigned his Eſtate to ſome Perſons to whom Repriſals were to be made: Whilſt They who thought the Judgment very unjuſt, laughed at the ill Luck of a Man whom They did not love; and all Men were well enough pleaſed with the Sentence, who were diſpleaſed with the Perſon. And this Party purſued him ſo ſeverely into England, that the King's Interpoſition to redeem him from ſo unjuſt a Decree, was looked upon as over-favouring the Iriſh; when none were ſo glad of the Decree as the Iriſh, who univerſally hated him. Nor was He at laſt reſtored to the Poſſeſſion of his Eſtate, without making ſome Compoſition with thoſe to whom the Commiſſioners had aſſigned it.

Many Decrees made upon Settlements notoriouſly forged.

MANY, who had formerly made their Claims without inſiſting upon any Deeds of Settlement or other Conveyances in Law, now produced former Settlements in Conſideration of Marriage, or other like good Conſiderations in Law, made before the Beginning of the Rebellion: Which being now proved by Witneſſes enough, Decrees were every Day obtained for for the Reſtitution of great Quantities of Land upon thoſe Deeds and Conveyances; though the Forgeries of thoſe Deeds and Perjury of thoſe Witneſſes were very notorious. And ſome Inſtances were given of the Manifeſtation and direct Proof that was made of the Forgery of Deeds, upon which Decrees had been made, to the Satisfaction of the Commiſſioners themſelves, within a very ſhort Time after the pronouncing thoſe Decrees: And yet no Reparation was given, but the Decrees proceeded and were executed with all Rigour, as if no ſuch Thing had appeared.

The Commiſſioners Defence.

THE Commiſſioners anſwered, "that They had "made no Decrees but according to their Conſciences, "and ſuch as They were obliged to make by the "Courſe and Rule of Juſtice. That They did doubt "and in Truth believe, that there had been evil "Practices uſed both in the forging of Deeds and "corrupting of Witneſſes, and that the ſame was "equally practiſed by the Engliſh as the Iriſh: And "therefore that They had been obliged to make that "Order, which had been ſo much excepted againſt, "not to admit the Teſtimony of any Engliſh Adventurer "or Soldier in the Caſe of another Adventurer or Soldier; "for that it was very notorious, They looked upon "the Whole as one joint Intereſt, and ſo gratified "each other in their Teſtimonies." And of this They gave many ſad Inſtances, by which it was too evident that the Perjuries were mutual, and too much practiſed by the one and the other Side.

"THAT They had uſed all the Providence and "Vigilance They could, by the careful Examination "of Witneſſes (which were produced apart, and ne-"ver in the Preſence of each other), and by aſking "them all ſuch material Queſtions as occurred to "their Underſtandings, and which They could not "expect to be aſked, to diſcover the Truth, and to "prevent and manifeſt all Perjuries. That They had "likewiſe uſed their utmoſt Diligence and Care, to "prevent their being impoſed upon with falſe and "forged Deeds and Conveyances, by taking a preciſe "and ſtrict View themſelves of all Deeds produced; "and interrogated the Witneſſes with all the Cunning "They could, upon the Matter and Conſideration "upon which ſuch Deeds had been entered into, and "upon the Manner and Circumſtances in the Execu-"tion thereof: Which was all the Providence They "could uſe. And though They met with many Rea-"ſons oftentimes to doubt the Integrity of the Pro-"ceedings, and in their own private Conſciences to "apprehend there might be great Corruption; yet "that They were obliged judicially to determine ac-"cording to the Teſtimony of the Witneſſes, and the "Evidence of thoſe Deeds in Law againſt which no "Proofs were made. That They had conſtantly "heard all that the adverſe Party had thought fit to "object, both againſt the Credit of any Witneſſes, "and the Truth and Validity of any Conveyances "which were produced; upon which They had re-"jected many Witneſſes, and diſallowed ſome Con-"veyances: But when the Objections were only "founded upon Preſumptions and Probabilities, as "moſt uſually they were, they could not weigh down "the full and categorical Evidence that was given."

"THAT if They had yielded to the Importunities "of the Perſons concerned, who often preſſed to have "farther Time given to them to prove ſuch a Per-"jury, or to diſprove ſuch a Conveyance; it muſt "have made their Work endleſs, and ſtopped all "Manner of Proceedings, for which it appeared They "were ſtreightened too much in Time: And that in-"deed would have but opened the Door wider for "Perjuries and other Corruptions; ſince it was very "plain to them, that either Side could bring as many "Witneſſes as They pleaſed, to prove what They "pleaſed, and that They would bring as many as "They believed neceſſary for the Work in Hand. "And therefore the Commiſſioners having before pre-"ſcribed a Method and Rule to themſelves for their "Proceedings, and that no Man could have a Cauſe, "in which He was concerned, brought to Hearing "without his knowing when it was to be heard, and "ſo it was to be preſumed, that He was well pro-"vided to ſupport his own Title; They had thought "fit, upon mature Deliberation amongſt themſelves, "to adhere to the Order They had preſcribed to "themſelves and others, and to conclude that They "would not be able to prove that another Day, "which They were not able to prove at the Time "when They ought to have been ready."

"FOR the Diſcovery of any Forgery after the De-"crees had been paſſed, and upon which They had "given no Reparation," They confeſſed, "that ſome "few ſuch Diſcoveries had been made to them, by "which the Forgery appeared very clearly: But as "They had no Power by the Act of Parliament to "puniſh either Forgery or Perjury, but muſt leave "the Examination and Puniſhment thereof to the "Law and to the Judges of the Law; ſo, that They "had only Authority to make Decrees upon ſuch "Grounds as ſatisfied their Conſciences, but had not "any Authority to reverſe thoſe Decrees, after they "were once made and publiſhed, upon any Evidence "whatſoever." They concluded with their humble Deſire to the King, "that the moſt ſtrict Examina-"tions might be made of their Corruptions, in "which," They ſaid, "They were ſure to be found "very innocent, againſt all the Malice that was diſ-"covered againſt them: That They had proceeded "in all Things according to the Integrity of their "Hearts, and the beſt of their Underſtandings; and "if through the Defect of that They had erred in "any Part of their Determinations and Judgments, "They hoped their Want of Wiſdom ſhould not be "imputed to them as a Crime."

Their Defence not perfectly ſatisfactory.

MANY, who had a very good Opinion of the Perſons and Abilities of the Commiſſioners, were not yet ſatisfied with their Defence; nor did They believe, that They were ſo ſtrictly bound to judge upon the Teſtimony of ſuſpected Witneſſes; but that They were therefore truſted with an arbitrary Power, becauſe it was foreſeen that Juries were not like to be entire; So that They were, upon weighing all Circumſtances, to declare what in their Conſciences They believed to be true and juſt. That if They had bound themſelves up by too ſtrict and unreaſonable Rules, They ſhould rather in Time have reformed thoſe Rules, than think to ſupport what was done amiſs, by the Obſervation of what They had preſcribed to themſelves. And it was believed, that the entire Excluſion of the Engliſh from being Witneſſes for the proving of what could not in Nature be otherwiſe proved, was not juſt or reaſonable. That their Want of Power to reverſe or alter their own Decrees, upon any emergent Reaſons which could afterwards occur, was a juſt Ground for their more ſerious Deliberation in and before They paſſed any ſuch Decrees. And their Excuſe for not granting longer Time when it was preſſed for, was founded upon Reaſons which were viſibly not to be juſtified; it not being poſſible for any Man to defend himſelf againſt the Claims of the Iriſh, without knowing what Deeds or Witneſſes They could produce for making good their Suggeſtions; and therefore it was as impoſſible for them to have all their Evidence upon the Place. Beſides that it was very evident, that in the laſt ten Days of their Sitting (which was likewiſe thought to be when their Power as to thoſe Particulars was determined, and in which They had made more Decrees than in all the Time before), They had made ſo many in a Day, contrary to their former Rule and Method, that Men were plainly ſurpriſed, and could not produce thoſe Proofs which in a ſhort Time They might have been ſupplied with; and the refuſing to allow them that Time, was upon the Matter to determine their Intereſt, and to take away their Eſtates without being once heard, and upon the bare Allegations of their Adver-

Adverſaries. And in theſe laſt Decrees many Inſtances were given of that Nature, wherein the Evidence appeared to be very full, if Time had been given to produce it.

A Decree in Favour of the Marquis of Antrim univerſally complained of.

THERE was one very notable Caſe decreed by the Commiſſioners extremely complained of, and cried out againſt by all Parties, as well Iriſh as Engliſh; and for which the Commiſſioners themſelves made no other Excuſe or Defence, but the Receipt of a Letter from the King, which was not thought a good Plea for ſworn Judges, as the Commiſſioners were. It was the Caſe of the Marquis of Antrim. Which Caſe having been ſo much upon the Stage, and ſo much enlarged upon to the Reproach of the King, and even to the traducing of the Memory of his bleſſed Father; and thoſe Men, who artificially contrived the doing of all that was done amiſs, having done all They could to wound the Reputation of the Chancellor, and to get it to be believed, "that He had by "ſome ſiniſter Information miſled the King to oblige "the Marquis:" It is a Debt due to Truth, and to the Honour of Both their Majeſties, to ſet down a very particular Narration of that whole Affair; by which it will appear, how far the King was from ſo much as wiſhing that any Thing ſhould be done for the Benefit of the Marquis, which ſhould be contrary to the Rules of Juſtice.

A very particular Relation of the Marquis of Antrim's Caſe.

WHILST his Majeſty was in foreign Parts, He received frequent Advertiſements from England and from Ireland, "that the Marquis of Antrim behaved "himſelf very undutifully towards him, and that "He had made himſelf very grateful to the Rebels, "by calumniating the late King: And that He had "given it under his Hand to Ireton, or ſome other "principal Perſon employed under Cromwell, that his "late Majeſty had ſent him into Ireland to join with "the Rebels, and that his Majeſty was not offended with "the Iriſh for entering into that Rebellion:" Which was a Calumny ſo falſe and ſo odious, and reflected ſo much upon the Honour of his Majeſty, that the King was reſolved, as ſoon as God ſhould put it into his Power, to cauſe the ſtricteſt Examination to be made concerning it; the Report having gained much Credit with his Majeſty, by the Notoriety that the Marquis had procured great Recommendations from thoſe who governed in Ireland, to thoſe who governed in England; and that upon the Preſumption of that He had come into England, and as far as St. Albans towards London, from whence He had been forced ſuddenly to return into Ireland by the Activity of his many Creditors, who upon the News of his Coming had provided for his Reception, and would unavoidably have caſt him into Priſon. And no Recommendation could have inclined thoſe who were in Authority, to do any Thing extraordinary for the Protection of a Perſon, who from the Beginning of the Iriſh Rebellion lay under ſo ill a Character with them, and had ſo ill a Name throughout the Kingdom.

THE King had been very few Days in London, after his Arrival from the Parts beyond the Seas, when He was informed that the Marquis of Antrim was upon his Way from Ireland towards the Court: And the Commiſſioners from Ireland, who have been mentioned before, were the firſt who gave his Majeſty that Information, and at the ſame Time told him all that his Majeſty had heard before concerning the Marquis, and of the bold Calumnies with which He had traduced his Royal Father, with many other Particulars; "all which," They affirmed, "would "be proved by unqueſtionable Evidence, and by "Letters and Certificates under his own Hand." Upon this full Information (of the Truth whereof his Majeſty entertained no Doubt), as ſoon as the Marquis came to the Town, He was by the King's ſpecial Order committed to the Tower; nor could any Petition from him, or Intreaty of his Friends, of which He had ſome very powerful, prevail with his Majeſty to admit him into his Preſence. But by the firſt Opportunity He was ſent Priſoner to Dublin, where He was committed to the Caſtle; the King having given his Direction, that He ſhould be proceeded againſt with all Strictneſs according to Law: And to that Purpoſe, the Lords Juſtices were required to give all Orders and Directions neceſſary. The Marquis ſtill profeſſed and avowed his Innocence, and uſed all the Means He could to procure that He might be ſpeedily brought to his Trial; which the King likewiſe expected. But after a Year's Detention in Priſon, and Nothing brought againſt him, He was ſet at Liberty, and had a Paſs given him from the Council there to go into England. He then applied himſelf to his Majeſty, demanding Nothing of Favour, but ſaid, "He expected Juſtice; and that after "ſo many Years being deprived of his Eſtate, He "might at laſt be reſtored to it, if Nothing could be "objected againſt him wherein He had diſſerved his "Majeſty."

HE was a Gentleman who had been bred up in the Court of England, and having married the Dutcheſs of Buckingham (though againſt the King's Will) He had been afterwards very well received by Both their Majeſties, and was frequently in their Preſence. He had ſpent a very vaſt Eſtate in the Court, without having ever received the leaſt Benefit from it. He had retired into Ireland, and lived upon his own Eſtate in that Country, ſome Years before the Rebellion brake out; in the Beginning whereof He had undergone ſome Suſpicion, having held ſome Correſpondence with the Rebels, and poſſibly made ſome Undertakings to them: But He went ſpeedily to Dublin, was well received by the Juſtices there, and from thence tranſported himſelf with their Licenſe to Oxford, where the King was; to whom He gave ſo good an Account of all that had paſſed, that his Majeſty made no Doubt of his Affection to his Service, though He had very little Confidence in his Judgment and Underſtanding, which were never remarkable. Beſides that it was well known, that he had a very unreaſonable Envy towards the Marquis of Ormond, and would fain have it believed that his Intereſt in Ireland was ſo great, that He could reclaim that whole Nation to his Majeſty's Obedience; but that Vanity and Preſumption never gained the leaſt Credit with his Majeſty: Yet it may reaſonably be believed that He thought ſo himſelf, and that it was the Source from which all the bitter Waters of his own Misfortune iſſued.

UPON the Scots ſecond Entering into England with their Army upon the Obligation of the Covenant, and all his Majeſty's Endeavours to prevent it being diſappointed, the Marquis of Mountroſe had propoſed to the King, "to make a Journey privately into Scot-"land, and to get into the Highlands, where, with "his Majeſty's Authority, He hoped He ſhould be "able to draw together ſuch a Body of Men, as "might give his Countrymen Cauſe to call for their "own Army out of England, to ſecure themſelves." And with this Overture or upon Debate thereof, He wiſhed "that the Earl of Antrim" (for He was then no more) "might be likewiſe ſent into Ulſter, where "his Intereſt lay, and from whence He would be able "to tranſport a Body of Men into the Highlands, "where He had likewiſe the Clan of Macdonnels, who "acknowledged him to be their Chief, and would be "conſequently at his Devotion; by which Means, "the Marquis of Mountroſe would be enabled the "more powerfully to proceed in his Undertaking." The Earl of Antrim entered upon this Undertaking with great Alacrity, and undertook to the King to perform great Matters in Scotland; to which his own Intereſt and Animoſity enough diſpoſed him, having an old and a ſharp Controverſy and Conteſtation with the Marquis of Argyle, who had diſpoſſeſſed him of a large Territory there. All Things being adjuſted for this Undertaking, and his Majeſty being well pleaſed with the Earl's Alacrity, He created him at that Time a Marquis, gave him Letters to the Marquis of Ormond his Lieutenant there, as well to ſatisfy him of the good Opinion He had of the Marquis of Antrim, and of the Truſt He had repoſed in him, as to wiſh him to give him all the Aſſiſtance He could with Convenience, for the carrying on the Expedition for Scotland.

And for the better preventing of any Inconvenience, that might fall out by the Raſhneſs and Inadvertency of the Marquis of Antrim towards the Lord Lieutenant, his Majeſty ſent Daniel O Neile of his Bedchamber into Ireland with him, who had great Power over him, and very much Credit with the Marquis of Ormond; and was a Man of that Dexterity and Addreſs, that no Man could ſo well prevent the Inconveniences and Prejudice, which the natural Levity and Indiſcretion of the other might tempt him to, or more diſpoſe and incline the Lord Lieutenant to take little Notice of thoſe Vanities and Indiſcretions. And the King, who had no Deſire that the Marquis ſhould ſtay long in Dublin, upon his Promiſe that He would uſe all poſſible Expedition in tranſporting himſelf into Scotland, gave him Leave to hold that Correſpondence with the Iriſh Rebels (who had the Command of all the Northern Parts, and without whoſe Connivance at leaſt, He could very hardly be able to make his Levies and tranſport his Men) as was neceſſary to his Purpoſes: Within the Limits of which, it is probable enough that He did not contain himſelf: for the Education and Converſation He had in the World, had not extirpated that natural Craft in which that Nation excels, and by which They only deceive themſelves; and might ſay many Things, which He had not Authority or Warrant to ſay.

Upon his Coming to Dublin, the Lord Lieutenant gave him all the Countenance He could wiſh, and aſſiſted him in all the Ways He could propoſe, to proſecute his Deſign; but the Men were to be raiſed in or near the Rebels Quarters. And it cannot be denied, but that the Levies He made, and ſent over into Scotland under the Command of Calkito, were the Foundation of all thoſe wonderful Acts, which were performed afterwards by the Marquis of Mountroſe (They were fifteen hundred Men, very good, and with very good Officers, all ſo hardy, that neither the ill Fare nor the ill Lodging in the Highlands gave them any Diſcouragement), and gave the firſt Opportunity to the Marquis of Mountroſe of being in the Head of an Army; under which He drew together ſuch of the Highlanders and others of his Friends, who were willing to repair to him. But upon any military Action, and Defeat given to the Enemy, which happened as often as They encountered the Scots, the Highlanders went always home with their Booty, and the Iriſh only ſtaid together with their General. And from this Beginning the Marquis of Mountroſe grew to that Power, that after many Battles won by him with notable Slaughter of the Enemy, He marched victoriouſly with his Army till He made himſelf Maſter of Edinburgh, and redeemed out of the Priſon there the Earl of Crawford, Lord Ogilby, and many other noble Perſons, who had been taken and ſent thither, with Reſolution that They ſhould all loſe their Heads. And the Marquis of Mountroſe did always acknowledge, that the Riſe and Beginning of his good Succeſs was due and to be imputed to that Body of Iriſh, which had in the Beginning been ſent over by the Marquis of Antrim; to whom the King had acknowledged the Service by ſeveral Letters, all of his own Handwriting; in which were very gracious Expreſſions of the Senſe his Majeſty had of his great Services, and his Reſolution to reward him.

It is true, that the Marquis of Antrim had not gone over himſelf with his Men, as he had promiſed to do, but ſtayed in Ulſter under Pretence of raiſing a greater Body of Men, with which He would adventure his own Perſon; but either out of Jealouſy or Diſpleaſure againſt the Marquis of Mountroſe, or having in Truth no Mind to that Service of Scotland, He proſecuted not that Purpoſe, but remained ſtill in Ulſter, where all his own Eſtate lay, and ſo was in the Rebels Quarters, and no Doubt was often in their Councils; by which He gave great Advantages againſt himſelf, and might in Strictneſs of Law have been as ſeverely puniſhed by the King, as the worſt of the Rebels. At laſt, in his moving from Place to Place (for He was not in any Expedition with the Rebels) He was taken Priſoner by the Scots, who intended to have put him to Death for having ſent Men into Scotland; but He made his Eſcape out of their Hands, and tranſported himſelf into Flanders, and from thence having Aſſurance that the Prince (his Majeſty that now is) was then in the Weſt, He came with two good Frigates into the Port of Falmouth, and offered his Service to his Royal Highneſs; and having in his Frigates a Quantity of Arms and ſome Ammunition, which He had procured in Flanders for the Service of Ireland, moſt of the Arms and Ammunition were employed, with his Conſent, for the Supply of the Troops and Garriſons in Cornwall: And the Prince made Uſe of one of the Frigates to tranſport his Perſon into Scilly, and from thence to Jerſey; without which Convenience, his Highneſs had been expoſed to great Difficulties, and could hardly have eſcaped the Hands of his Enemies. After all which, when Dublin was given up to the Parliament, and the King's Authority was withdrawn out of that Kingdom, He again (not having wherewithal to live any where elſe) tranſported himſelf into Ireland, made himſelf gracious with the Iriſh, and was by them ſent into France, to deſire the Queen Mother and the Prince of Wales "to ſend the Marquis of Ormond to reaſſume "his Majeſty's Government in that Kingdom;" which was done accordingly, in the Manner that is mentioned elſewhere.

The Marquis of Antrim alledged all the Particulars, and produced many original Letters from the late King (beſides thoſe which are mentioned), the Queen Mother, and the Prince, in all which his Services had been acknowledged, and many Promiſes made to him; and concluded with a full Proteſtation, "that He de- "ſired no Pardon for any Thing that He had ever "done againſt the King; and if there were the leaſt "Proof that He had failed in his Fidelity to him, or "had not according to the beſt of his Underſtanding "advanced his Service, He looked for no Favour. "But if his being in the Iriſh Quarters and conſulting "with them, without which He could not have made "his Levies for Scotland, nor tranſported them if He "had levied them, and if his living amongſt them af- "terwards, when his Majeſty's Authority was drawn "from thence, and when He could live no where "elſe, do by the ſtrict Letter of the Law expoſe him "to Ruin without his Majeſty's Grace and Favour, "He did hope his Majeſty would redeem him from "that Miſery, and that the Forfeiture of his Eſtate "ſhould not be taken, as if He were a Traitor and "a Rebel to the King." And it appeared that if He were reſtored to all He could pretend to, or of which He had ever been poſſeſſed, his Debts were ſo great, and his Creditors had thoſe legal Incumbrances upon his Eſtate, that his Condition at beſt would not be liable to much Envy.

Though the King had been never taken Notice of to have any great Inclinations to the Marquis, who was very little known to him; yet this Repreſentation and clear View of what He had done and what He had ſuffered, raiſed great Compaſſion towards him in the Royal Breaſt of his Majeſty. And He thought it would in ſome Degree reflect upon his own Honour and Juſtice, and upon the Memory of his bleſſed Father, if in a Time when He paſſed by ſo many Tranſgreſſions very heinous, He ſhould leave the Marquis expoſed to the Fury of his Enemies (who were only only his Enemies becauſe They were poſſeſſed of his Eſtate, and becauſe He deſired to have his own from them) for no other Crime upon the Matter, than for not having that Prudence and that Providence in his Endeavours to ſerve the King, as He ought to have had; that is, He ought to have been wiſer. And the Rigour exerciſed towards him upon his firſt Arrival, in ſending him to the Tower and afterwards into Ireland, by thoſe who enough wiſhed his Deſtruction, and that They had not been able to make the leaſt Proof againſt him, improved his Majeſty's good Diſpoſition towards him. Yet He refuſed poſitively to write a Letter to the Commiſſioners on his Behalf; which the Marquis moſt importunately deſired, as the only Thing that could do him Good. But his Majeſty directed a Letter to be prepared to the Lord Lieutenant, in which all his Allegations and Suggeſtions ſhould be ſet down, and the Truth thereof examined by him; and that if He ſhould be found to have committed no greater Faults againſt the King, than thoſe which He confeſſed, then that Letter ſhould be ſent to the Commiſſioners, that They might ſee Both their Majeſties Teſtimonies in ſuch Particulars as were known to themſelves. And this Letter was very warily drawn, and being approved by his Majeſty, was ſent accordingly to the Lord Lieutenant. And ſhortly after a Copy of it ſigned by the King (who conceived it only to be a Duplicate, leſt the other ſhould miſcarry) was, contrary to his Majeſty's Reſolution, and contrary to the Advice of the Chancellor and without his Knowledge, likewiſe ſent to the Commiſſioners; who had thereupon made ſuch a Decree as is before mentioned, and declared, "that They had made it only upon that "Ground; which gave his Majeſty ſome Trouble," and obliged him to inſert a Clauſe in the next Bill concerning that Affair.

AND this was the whole Proceeding that related to the Marquis of Antrim: And it is yet very hard to comprehend, wherein there was more Favour ſhewed towards him by his Majeſty, than He might in Truth very reaſonably pretend to, what Noiſe ſoever was raiſed, and what Gloſſes ſoever made; which proceeded only from the general Diſlike of the Man, who had much more Weakneſs than Wickedneſs in him, and was an Object rather of Pity than of Malice or Envy.

WHEN his Majeſty entered upon the Debate of the third Bill, which was tranſmitted to him for a Supplement and Addition to the other two, He quickly found the Settlement propoſed, and which was the End of the three Bills, was now grown more difficult than ever. All the Meaſures, which had formerly been taken from the great Proportion of Land which would remain to be diſpoſed of, were no more to be relied upon, but appeared to have been a wrong Foundation from the Beginning; which was now made more deſperate, by the vaſt Proportions which had been aſſigned to the Iriſh by the Commiſſioners Decrees: And ſomewhat had intervened by ſome Acts of Bounty from his Majeſty, which had not been carefully enough watched and repreſented to him.

Difficulty of a Settlement inſeſed.

ſome imvident ts of nty in the g.

THE King had, upon paſſing the former Bills, and upon diſcerning how much the Iriſh were like to ſuffer, reſolved to retain, all that ſhould by Forfeiture or otherwiſe come to his Majeſty, in his own Power; to the End, that when the Settlement ſhould be made, He might be able to gratify thoſe of the Iriſh Nation, who had any Thing of Merit towards him, or had been leaſt faulty. And if He had obſerved that Reſolution, very much of the Trouble He underwent afterwards had been prevented: For He would then, beſides that which Cromwell had reſerved to himſelf (which was a vaſt Tract of Ground), have had all thoſe Forfeitures which the Regicides had been poſſeſſed of, and other criminal Perſons; which amounted to a huge Quantity of the beſt Land. And though the King had before deſigned all thoſe forfeited Lands to his Brother the Duke, yet his Highneſs was ſo pleaſed with the Reſolution his Majeſty had taken, to retain them to that Purpoſe, that He forbore to proſecute that Grant, till He heard of great Quantities of Land every Day granted away by his Majeſty to his Servants and others; whereby He ſaw the main End would be diſappointed. And then He reſolved to be no longer a Loſer for the Benefit of thoſe, who had no Pretence to what They got; and ſo proceeded in getting that Grant from the King to himſelf of thoſe Lands deſigned to him.

THE King had ſwerved from that Rule, before it was ſcarce diſcerned: And the Error of it may be very juſtly imputed to the Earl of Orrery, and to none but him; who believing that He could never be well enough at Court, except He had Courtiers of all Sorts obliged to him, who would therefore ſpeak well of him in all places and Companies (and thoſe Arts of his put the King to much Trouble and Loſs both in England and Ireland), He commended to many of ſuch Friends (though He had adviſed the King to the former Reſolution) many Suits of that Kind, and ſent Certificates to them, oftentimes under his own Hand, of the Value thoſe Suits might be to them if obtained, and of the little Importance the granting of them would be to his Majeſty; which, having been ſhewed to the King, diſpoſed him to thoſe Conceſſions, which otherwiſe He would not ſo eaſily have made. Then He directed them a Way (being then one of the Lords Juſtices) for the more immediate paſſing thoſe Grants They could obtain, without meeting thoſe Obſtructions which They had been ſubject to; for when any of thoſe Grants had been brought to the Great Seal of England, the Chancellor always ſtopped them, and put his Majeſty in Mind of his former Reſolution: But this new Way (in itſelf lawful enough) kept him from knowing any of thoſe Tranſactions, which were made by Letters from the King to the Lords Juſtices; and thereupon the Grants were prepared there, and paſſed under the Great Seal of Ireland.

This Improvidence owing to the Earl of Orrery.

This done without the Chancellor's Knowledge.

THERE was then likewiſe a new Clauſe introduced into thoſe Grants, of a very new Nature; for being grounded always upon Letters out of England, and paſſed under the Seal of Ireland, the Letters were prepared and formed there, and tranſmitted hither only for his Majeſty's Sign Manual: So that neither the King's learned Council at Law, nor any other his Miniſters (the Secretaries only excepted), had any Notice or the Peruſal of any of thoſe Grants. The Clauſe was, "that if any of thoſe Lands ſo granted "by his Majeſty ſhould be otherwiſe decreed, his Ma-"jeſty's Grantee ſhould be repriſed with other "Lands:" So that in many Caſes, the greateſt Inducement to his Majeſty's Bounty being the Incertainty of his own Right, which the Perſon to whom it was granted was obliged to vindicate at his own Charge, the King was now bound to make it good, if his Grant was not valid. And ſo that which was but a contingent Bounty, which commonly was the ſole Argument for the paſſing it, was now turned into a real and ſubſtantial Benefit, as a Debt; which created another Difficulty in the Settlement: Which was yet the more hard, becauſe there were many Claims of the Iriſh themſelves yet unheard, all the falſe Admeaſurements to be examined, and many other Uncertainties to be determined by the Commiſſioners; which left thoſe who were in quiet Poſſeſſion, as well as thoſe who were out of it, in the higheſt Inſecurity and Apprehenſion.

And with an extraordinary Clauſe inſerted in the Grants.

THIS Intricacy and even Deſpair, which poſſeſſed all Kind of People, of any Settlement, made all of them willing to contribute to any that could be propoſed. They found his Majeſty very unwilling to conſent to the Repeal of the Decrees made by the Commiſſioners; which muſt have taken away the Confidence and Aſſurance of whatſoever was to be done hereafter, by making Men ſee, that what was ſettled

ſettled by one Act of Parliament might immediately be unſettled by another: So that there was no Hope by that Expedient to increaſe the Number of Acres, which being left might in any Degree comply with the ſeveral Pretences. The Iriſh found, That They might only be able to obſtruct any Settlement, but ſhould never be able to get ſuch a one as would turn to their own Satisfaction. The Soldiers and Adventurers agreed leſs amongſt themſelves: And the Clamour was as great againſt thoſe, who by falſe Admeaſurements had gotten more than they ſhould have, as from thoſe who had received leſs than was their Due; and they who had leaſt feared any new Examination could not yet have any ſecure Title, before all the reſt were ſettled. In a Word, all Men found that any Settlement would be better than none; and that more Profit would ariſe from a ſmaller Proportion of Land quietly poſſeſſed and huſbanded accordingly, than from a much greater Proportion under a doubtful Title and an Incertainty, which muſt diſhearten any Induſtry and Improvement.

Upon theſe Conſiderations and Motives, They met amongſt themſelves, and debated together by what Expedient They might draw Light out of this Darkneſs. There appeared only one Way which adminiſtered any reaſonable Hope; which was, by increaſing the Stock for Repriſals to ſuch a Degree, that all Mens Pretences might in ſome Meaſure be provided for: And there was no other Way to arrive to this, but by every Man's parting with ſomewhat which He thought to be his own. And to this They had one Encouragement, that was of the higheſt Prevalence with them, which was, that this Way an End would be put to the illimited Juriſdiction of the Commiſſioners (which was very terrible to all of them), who from henceforth could have little other Power, than to execute what ſhould here be agreed upon.

In Concluſion, They brought a Propoſition to the King, raiſed and digeſted between themſelves, "that "all Perſons, who were to receive any Benefit by this "Act, ſhould abate and give a fourth Part of what "They had, towards the Stock for Repriſals; all "which the Commiſſioners ſhould diſtribute amongſt "thoſe Iriſh, who ſhould appear moſt fit for his Ma"jeſty's Bounty." And this Agreement was ſo unanimous, that though it met with ſome obſtinate Oppoſition after it was brought before the King, yet the Number of the Oppoſers was ſo ſmall in Reſpect of the others who agreed to it, that They grew weary and aſhamed of farther Contention. And thereupon that Third Act of Settlement, as ſupplemental to the other two, was conſented to by the King; who, to publiſh to the World that Nothing ſtuck with him which ſeemed to reflect upon the Commiſſioners, reſolved to make no Change: And ſo though two of them, who had Offices here to diſcharge, prevailed with his Majeſty that They might not return again into Ireland; the other five were continued, to execute what was more to be done by this Act, and ſo to perfect the Settlement. And no Doubt it will be here ſaid, that this Expedient might have been ſooner found, and ſo prevented many of thoſe Diſorders and Inconveniences which intervened. But They who knew that Time, and the Perverſeneſs and Obſtinacy that poſſeſſed all Pretenders, muſt confeſs that the Seaſon was never ripe before: Nor could their Conſent and Agreement, upon which this Act was founded, ever be obtained before.

The different Parties at laſt agree upon an Expedient for a Settlement.

Hereupon the King paſſes the Third Act of Settlement.

Theſe were all the Tranſactions which paſſed with Reference to Ireland, whilſt the Chancellor remained at that Board; in which He acted no more than any other of the Lords who were preſent did: Except when any Difficulties occurred in their private Meetings and Debates, They ſometimes reſorted to him for Advice, which He was ready to give; being always willing to take any Pains, which might make that very difficult Work more eaſy to be brought to a good End. But as He never thought He deſerved any Reward for ſo doing, ſo He never expected the Benefit of one Shilling in Money or in Money's Worth, for any Thing He ever did in that Affair; and was ſo far from entertaining any Overture to that Purpoſe, that it is notoriouſly known to many Perſons of Honour, who I preſume will be ready to teſtify the ſame, that when, upon his Majeſty's firſt Return into England, ſome Propoſitions were made to him of receiving the Grant of ſome forfeited Lands, and for the buying other Lands there upon the Deſire of the Owners thereof, and at ſo low a Price that the very Profit of the Land would in a ſhort Time have paid for the Purchaſe, and other Overtures of immediate Benefit in Money (which others did and lawfully might accept); He rejected all Propoſitions of that Kind or relating to it, and declared publickly and privately, "that He would neither have Lands in "Ireland nor the leaſt Benefit from thence, till all "Differences and Pretences in that Kingdom ſhould "be ſo fully ſettled and agreed, that there could be "no more Appeal to the King, or repairing to the "King's Council for Juſtice; in which," He ſaid, "He ſhould never be thought ſo competent an Ad"viſer, if He had any Title of his own in that King"dom to bias his Inclinations." And He was often heard to ſay, "that He never took a firmer Reſolu"tion in any Particular in his Life, than to adhere "to that Concluſion." Yet becauſe it was notorious afterwards, that He did receive ſome Money out of Ireland, and had a lawful Title to receive more (with which He was reproached when He could not anſwer for himſelf); it may not be amiſs in this Place, for his Vindication, to ſet down particularly how that came to paſs, and to mention all the Circumſtances which preceded, accompanied or attended, that Affair.

A Vindication of the Chancellor with Regard to the Irish Affairs.

In the Bills which were firſt tranſmitted from Ireland after his Majeſty's happy Return, there was an Impoſition of a certain Sum of Money upon ſome ſpecified Lands in ſeveral Provinces, "which was to "be paid to his Majeſty within a limited Time, and "to be diſpoſed of by his Majeſty to ſuch Perſons who "had ſerved him faithfully, and ſuffered in ſo doing," or Words to that Effect; for He often proteſted that He never ſaw the Act of Parliament, and was moſt confident that He never heard of it at the Time when it paſſed, He being often abſent from the Council, by Reaſon of the Gout or other Accidents, when ſuch Matters were tranſacted. But two Years after the King's Return or thereabout, He received a Letter from the Earl of Orrery, "that there would be in his "Hands, and in the Earl of Angleſey's and the Lord "Maſſarens" (who it ſeems were appointed Treaſurers to receive the Money to be raiſed by that Act of Parliament,) "a good Sum of Money for him; which "He gave him Notice of, to the End that He might "give Direction for the Diſpoſal thereof, whether He "would have it returned into England, or laid out in Land "in Ireland;" and He wiſhed "that He would ſpeedily "ſend his Direction, becauſe He was confident that "the Money would be paid in, at leaſt by the Time that his Letter could arrive there. No Man can be more ſurpriſed, than the Chancellor was at the Receipt of this Letter, believing that there was ſome Miſtake in it, and that his Name might have been uſed in Truſt by Somebody who had given him no Notice of it. And without returning any Anſwer to the Earl of Orrery, He writ by that Poſt to the Lord Lieutenant, to inform him of what the Earl of Orrery had writ to him, and deſired him to "inform him by "his own Enquiry, what the Meaning of it was."

Before He had an Anſwer from the Lord Lieutenant, or indeed before his Letter could come to the Lord Lieutenant's Hands, He received a ſecond Letter from the Earl of Orrery; in which He informed him, "that there was now paid in to his Uſe, the "Sum of twelve thouſand ſix hundred and odd Pounds, "and that there would be the like Sum again received

"for

" for him at the End of ſix Months;" and ſent him a particular Direction, " to what Perſon and in what " Form He was to ſend his Order for the Payment of " the Money." The Chancellor ſtill forbore to anſwer this Letter, till He had received an Anſwer to what He had written to the Lord Lieutenant, who then informed him at large, what Title He had to that Money, and how He came to have it: " That " ſhortly after the paſſing that Act of Parliament, " which had given his Majeſty the Diſpoſal of the " Money before mentioned, the Earl of Orrery had " come to him, the Lord Lieutenant, and putting " him in Mind, how the Chancellor had rejected all " Overtures which had been made to him of Benefit " out of that Kingdom" (which Refuſal, and many others that ſhew how unſolicitous He had always been in the Ways of getting, is not more known to any Man living than to the Lord Lieutenant), " wiſhed " that He would move the King to confer ſome Part " of that Money upon the Chancellor; which the " Lord Lieutenant very willingly did, and his Ma- " jeſty as chearfully granted: That a Letter was ac- " cordingly prepared, and his Majeſty's Royal Sig- " nature procured by Mr. Secretary Nicholas, who was " at the ſame Time commanded by the King not to " let him know of it; to which Purpoſe there was " likewiſe a Clauſe in the Letter, whereby it was pro- " vided that He ſhould have no Notice of it; which," the Lord Lieutenant ſaid, " was by his Majeſty's " Direction or with his Approbation, becauſe it was " ſaid, that if He had Notice of it, He would be " ſo fooliſh as to obſtruct it himſelf. And there was " a Clauſe likewiſe in the ſaid Letter, which directed " the Payment of the ſaid Monies to his Heirs, Exe- " cutors or Aſſigns, if He ſhould die before the Re- " ceipt thereof."

THE Chancellor being ſo fully advertiſed of all this by the Lord Lieutenant, and of which till that Time He had not the leaſt Notice or Imagination, He deſired Secretary Nicholas to give him a Copy of that Letter (which had been ſince paſſed as a Grant to him under the Great Seal of Ireland; according to the Form then uſed); which the Secretary gave him, with a large Account of many gracious Circumſtances in the King's granting it, and the Obligation laid upon him of Secrecy, and the great Caution that was uſed that He might have no Notice of it. After He was informed of all this, He did not think that there was any Thing left for him to do, but to make his humble Acknowledgment to his Majeſty for his Royal Bounty, and to take Care for the receiving and tranſmitting the Money; and doubted not but that He might receive it very honeſtly. He did therefore wait upon his Majeſty with that Duty that became him: And his Majeſty was graciouſly pleaſed to enlarge his Bounty with thoſe Expreſſions of Favour, and of the Satisfaction he had vouchſafed to take himſelf in conferring his Donative, that his Joy was much greater from that Grace, than in the Greatneſs of the Gift.

AT the very ſame Time, and the very Day that the Chancellor received the Letter from the Lord Lieutenant, the Earl of Portland came to him, and informed him of a Difference that was fallen out between the Lord Lovelace and Sir Bulſtrode Whitlock, upon a Defect in the Title to certain Lands purchaſed heretofore by Sir Bulſtrode Whitlock from the Lord Lovelace, and enjoyed by him ever ſince; but being by the Neceſſity of that Time, the Delinquency of Lovelace and the Power of Whitlock, bought and ſold at an Undervalue, and the Time being now more equal, Lovelace reſolved to have more Money, or not to perform a Covenant He had entered into; the Not-performance whereof would leave the other's Title very defective. The Earl deſired to reconcile thoſe two, which could not be done without Sale of the Land: And ſo He propoſed to the Chancellor the buying this Land, which lay next to ſome Land He had in Wiltſhire. This Propoſition was made upon the very Day, as is ſaid before, that He had received the Letter from the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; by which it appeared that there was near as much Money already received for him, as would pay for that Purchaſe, beſides what was more to be received within ſix Months after. The Land was well known to the Chancellor; ſo that upon a ſhort Conference with the Parties, They all agreed upon the Purchaſe: And He was eaſily prevailed with to undertake the Payment of the greateſt Part of the Money upon ſealing the Writings, not making the leaſt Doubt, but that He ſhould by that Time receive the Money from Ireland; which was the ſole Ground and Motive to his making that Purchaſe.

BUT the next Letters He received from Ireland informed him, " that the Neceſſities of that Kingdom " had been ſuch, that They could only return ſix " thouſand Pounds of that Money; and that They " had been compelled to make Uſe of the reſt for the " Publick, which would take Care to repay it to him " in a ſhort Time:" And ſo He found himſelf engaged in a Purchaſe which He could not retract, upon Preſumption of Money which He could not receive. And He did not only never after receive one Penny of what was due upon the ſecond Payment (which He ſo little ſuſpected could fail, there being an Act of Parliament for the Security, that He aſſigned it upon the Marriage of his ſecond Son to him, as the beſt Part of his Portion); but the Remainder of the firſt Sum, which was ſo borrowed or taken from him, or any Part of it, was never after paid to him or to his Uſe: By which, and the Inconveniences and Damages which enſued to him from thence, He might reaſonably ſay that He was a Loſer, and involved in a great Debt, by that ſignal Bounty of his Majeſty; and which was afterwards made Matter of Reproach to him, and as an Argument of his Corruption. But this is a very true Account of that Buſineſs, and of all the Money that He ever received from Ireland, with all the Circumſtances thereof; which, in the Judgment of all impartial Men, cannot reflect to the Prejudice of his Integrity and Honour.

AND ſo We ſhall no further purſue or again reſume any Mention of the Affairs of Ireland, though they will afford a large Field of Matter; but ſhall return to the Beginning of the Parliament, from whence We departed.

Tranſactions in Parliament.

IT cannot be expreſſed, hardly imagined, with what Alacrity the Parliament entered upon all particular Affairs which might refer to the King's Honour, Safety or Profit. They pulled up all thoſe Principles of Sedition and Rebellion by the Roots, which in their own Obſervation had been the Ground of or contributed to the odious and infamous Rebellion in the long Parliament. They declared " that " ſottiſh Diſtinction between the King's Perſon and " his Office to be Treaſon; that his Negative Voice " could not be taken from him, and was ſo eſſential " to the making a Law, that no Order or Ordinance " of either Houſe could be binding to the Subject " without it; that the Militia was inſeparably veſted " in his Majeſty, and that it was High Treaſon to " raiſe or levy Soldiers without the King's Com- " miſſion." And becauſe the Licence of ſpeaking ſeditiouſly, and of laying ſcandalous Imputations and Aſperſions upon the Perſon of the King, as ſaying that He was a Papiſt, and ſuch like Terms, to alienate the Affections of the People from his Majeſty, had been the Prologue and principal Ingredient to that Rebellion, and corrupted the Hearts of his loving Subjects; They declared, " that the raiſing any Ca- " lumnies of that Kind upon the King, as ſaying " that He is a Papiſt, or popiſhly affected, or the like, " ſhould be Felony." In a Word, They vindicated all his Regalities and Royal Prerogatives, and provided for the Safety of his Perſon in as loving and ample a Manner as He could wiſh: And towards raiſing and ſettling a Revenue proportionable to his Dignity and neceſſary Expence, over and above the Confirmation of all that had been done or granted in the laſt Convention, They entered upon all the Expedients which could occur to them, and were willing to receive Propoſitions or Advice from any Body that might contribute thereunto. In all theſe publick Matters, no Man could wiſh a more active Spirit to be in them, than They were in Truth poſſeſſed with.

The King's Prerogative aſſerted.

The Parliament unwilling to confirm the Act of Indemnity.

But in that which the King had principally recommended to them, the Confirmation of the Act of Oblivion and Indemnity, They proceeded very ſlowly, coldly and unwillingly, notwithſtanding the King's frequent Meſſages to them "to diſpatch it, though "with the Delay of thoſe other Things which They "thought did more immediately concern him." They had many Agents and Solicitors in the Court, who thought that all that was releaſed by that Act might lawfully be diſtributed amongſt them; and ſince the King had referred that whole Affair to the Parliament, He might well leave it to their Judgments, without his own Interpoſition. But his Majeſty looked upon himſelf as under another Obligation both of Honour and Conſcience, and upon the Thing itſelf as more for the publick Peace and Security, than any Thing the Parliament could provide inſtead thereof; and therefore was very much troubled and offended at the apparent Unwillingneſs to paſs it. And thereupon He went himſelf to the Houſe of Peers, and ſent for the Commons, and told them, "that it was "abſolutely neceſſary to diſpatch that Bill, which He "himſelf had ſent to them near two Months before:" For it was now the eighth of July. His Majeſty told them, "that it was to put himſelf in Mind as well as "them, that He ſo often, as often as He came to them, "mentioned to them his Declaration from Breda." And He ſaid, "He ſhould put them in Mind of "another Declaration publiſhed by themſelves about "that Time, and which He was perſuaded made his "the more effectual, an honeſt, generous and Chriſtian "Declaration, ſigned by the moſt eminent Perſons, "who had been the moſt eminent Sufferers; in which "They renounced all former Animoſities, all Me-"mory of former Unkindneſſes, vowed all imagina-"ble Good-Will and all Confidence in each other." All which being preſſed with ſo much Inſtance by his Majeſty prevailed with them: And They then forthwith diſpatched that Bill; and the King as ſoon confirmed it, and would not ſtay a few Days, till other important Bills ſhould be likewiſe ready to be preſented to him.

The King ſtrenuouſly urges them to confirm it.

Whereupon They confirm it.

And there cannot be a greater Inſtance of their Deſire to pleaſe his Majeſty from thenceforth, than that before that Seſſion was concluded, notwithſtanding the Prejudice the Clergy had brought upon themſelves (as I ſaid before) upon their too much good Huſbandry in granting Leaſes, and though the Preſbyterian Party was not without an Intereſt in Both Houſes of Parliament; They paſſed a Bill for the Repeal of that Act of Parliament, by which the Biſhops were excluded from ſitting there. It was firſt propoſed in the Houſe of Commons by a Gentleman, who had been always taken to be of a Preſbyterian Family: And in that Houſe it found leſs Oppoſition than was looked for; all Men knowing, that beſides the Juſtice of it, and the Prudence to wipe out the Memory of ſo infamous an Act, as the Excluſion of them with all the Circumſtances was known to be, it would be grateful to the King.

The Commons paſs a Bill for reſtoring Biſhops to their Seats in Parliament.

But when it came into the Houſe of Peers, where all Men expected it would find a general Concurrence, it met with ſome Obſtruction; which made a Diſcovery of an Intrigue, that had not been ſuſpected. For though there were many Lords preſent, who had induſtriouſly laboured the paſſing the former Bill for the Excluſion, yet They had likewiſe been guilty of ſo many other ill Things, of which They were aſhamed, that it was believed that They would not willingly revive the Memory of the Whole, by perſevering in ſuch an odious Particular. Nor in Truth did They. But when They ſaw that it would unavoidably paſs (for the Number of that Party was not conſiderable), They either gave their Conſents, as many of them did, or gave their Negative without Noiſe. The Obſtruction came not from thence. The Catholicks leſs owned the Contradiction, nor were guilty of it, though They ſuffered in it. But the Truth is, it proceeded from the mercurial Brain of the Earl of Briſtol, who much affected to be looked upon as the Head of the Catholicks; which They did ſo little deſire that He ſhould be thought, that They very rarely concurred with him. He well knew that the King deſired (which his Majeſty never diſſembled) to give the Roman Catholicks Eaſe from all the ſanguinary Laws; and that He did not deſire that They ſhould be liable to the other Penalties which the Law had made them ſubject to, whilſt They ſhould in all other Reſpects behave themſelves like good Subjects. Nor had They ſince his Majeſty's Return ſuſtained the leaſt Prejudice by their Religion, but enjoyed as much Liberty at Court and in the Country, as any other Men; and with which the wiſeſt of them were abundantly ſatisfied, and did abhor the Activity of thoſe of their own Party, whom They did believe more like to deprive them of the Liberty They enjoyed, than to enlarge it to them.

Which is obſtructed in the Houſe of Lords by the Earl of Briſtol.

When the Earl of Briſtol ſaw this Bill brought into the Houſe for reſtoring the Biſhops to their Seats, He went to the King, and informed his Majeſty, "that if this Bill ſhould ſpeedily paſs, it would ab-"ſolutely deprive the Catholicks of all thoſe Graces "and Indulgence which He intended to them; for "that the Biſhops, when They ſhould ſit in the "Houſe, whatever their own Opinions or Inclinations "were, would find themſelves obliged, that They "might preſerve their Reputation with the People, "to contradict and oppoſe whatſoever ſhould look "like Favour or Connivance towards the Catholicks: "And therefore, if his Majeſty continued his former "gracious Inclination towards the Roman Catholicks, "He muſt put ſome Stop (even for the Biſhops own "Sakes) to the paſſing that Bill, till the other ſhould "be more advanced, which He ſuppoſed might ſhortly "be done;" there having been already ſome Overtures made to that Purpoſe, and a Committee appointed in the Houſe of Lords to take a View of all the ſanguinary Laws in Matters of Religion, and to preſent them to the Houſe that it might conſider farther of them. The King ſurpriſed with the Diſcourſe from a Man who had often told him the Neceſſity of the reſtoring the Biſhops, and that it could not be a perfect Parliament without their Preſence, thought his Reaſon for the Delay to have Weight in it, and that the Delay for a few Days could be attended with no Prejudice to the Matter itſelf; and thereupon was willing the Bill ſhould not be called for, and that when it ſhould be under Commitment, it ſhould be detained there for ſome Time; and that He might, the better to produce this Delay, tell ſome of his Friends, "that "the King would be well pleaſed, that there ſhould "not be overmuch Haſte in the preſenting that Bill "for his Royal Aſſent."

This grew quickly to be taken Notice of in the Houſe, that after the firſt Reading of that Bill, it had been put off for a ſecond Reading longer than was uſual, when the Houſe was at ſo much Leiſure; and that now it was under Commitment, it was obſtructed there, notwithſtanding all the Endeavours ſome Lords of the Committee could uſe for the Diſpatch; the Bill containing very few Words, being only for the Repeal of a former Act, and the Expreſſions admitting, that is, giving little Cauſe for any Debate. The Chancellor deſired to know how this came to paſs, and was informed by one of the Lords of the Committee, "that They were aſſured

" that the King would have a Stop put to it, till " another Bill ſhould be provided which his Majeſty " looked for." Hereupon the Chancellor ſpake with his Majeſty, who told him all the Conference which the Earl of Briſtol had held with him, and what He had conſented ſhould be done. To which the other replied, " that He was ſorry that his Majeſty had been " prevailed with to give any Obſtruction to a Bill, " which every Body knew his Majeſty's Heart was ſo " much ſet upon for Diſpatch; and that if the Reaſon " were known, it would quickly put an End to all the " Pretences of the Catholicks; to which his Majeſty " knew He was no Enemy." The King preſently concluded that the Reaſon was not ſufficient, and wiſhed, " that the Bill might be diſpatched as ſoon as was " poſſible, that He might paſs it that Seſſion;" which He had appointed to make an End of within few Days: And ſo the next Day the Report was called for and made, and the Bill ordered to be engroſſed againſt the next Morning; the Earl not being at that Time in the Houſe. But the next Morning, when the Chancellor had the Bill engroſſed in his Hand to preſent to the Houſe to be read the third Time, the Earl came to him to the Woolſack, and with great Diſpleaſure and Wrath in his Countenance told him, " that if that Bill were read that Day, He would ſpeak " againſt it;" to which the Chancellor gave him an Anſwer that did not pleaſe him: And the Bill was paſſed that Day. And from that Time the Earl of Briſtol was a more avowed and declared Enemy to him, than He had before profeſſed to be; though the Friendſhip that had been between them had been diſcontinued or broken, from the Time the Earl had changed his Religion.

t is at laſt ſſed.

THE King within few Days came to the Parliament, to give his Royal Aſſent to thoſe Bills which were prepared for him; and then told them, " that He " did thank them with all his Heart, indeed as much " as He could for any Thing, for the Repeal of that " Act which excluded the Biſhops from ſitting in " Parliament." He ſaid, " it was an unhappy Act " in an unhappy Time, paſſed with many unhappy " Circumſtances, and attended with miſerable Events; " and therefore He did again thank them for repealing it: And that They had thereby reſtored Parliaments to their primitive Inſtitutions." This was upon the thirtieth of July 1661, when the Parliament was adjourned to the twentieth of November following.

e Parliat adued.

BECAUSE We have mentioned the gracious Purpoſes the King had to his Roman Catholick Subjects, of which afterwards much Uſe was made to his Diſſervice, to which the Vanity and Preſumption of many of that Profeſſion contributed very much; it may not be unſeaſonable in this Place to mention the Ground of that his Majeſty's Goodneſs, and the Reaſons why that Purpoſe of his was not proſecuted to the Purpoſe it was intended, after ſo fair a Riſe towards it, by the Appointment of that Committee in the Houſe of Peers, which is remembered above.

e true und of the g's Fa- r to the man Ca- licks.

IT is not to be wondered at, that the King, at the Age He was of when the Troubles began in England, and when He came out of England, knew very little of the Laws which had been long ſince made and were ſtill in Force againſt Roman Catholicks, and leſs of the Grounds and Motives which had introduced thoſe Laws. And from the Time that He was firſt beyond the Seas, He could not be without hearing very much ſpoken againſt the Proteſtant Religion, and more for extolling and magnifying the Religion of the Church of Rome; neither of which Diſcourſes made any Impreſſion upon him. After the Defeat at Worceſter, and his Eſcape from thence into France, the Queen his Mother (who had very punctually complied with the King her Huſband's Injunctions, in not ſuffering any Body to endeavour to pervert the Prince her Son in his Religion, and when He came afterwards into France after He was King, continued the ſame Reſervation) uſed much more Sharpneſs in her Diſcourſe againſt the Proteſtants, than She had been accuſtomed to. The Liberty that his Majeſty formerly had in the Louvre, to have a Place ſet aſide for the Exerciſe of his Religion, was taken away: And continual Diſcourſes were made by the Queen in his Preſence, " that He had now " no Hope ever to be reſtored to his Dominions, " but by the Help of the Catholicks; and therefore " that He muſt apply himſelf to them in ſuch a " Way, as might induce them to help him."

ABOUT this Time there was a ſhort Collection and Abridgment made of all the penal Laws, which had been made and which were ſtill in Force in England againſt the Roman Catholicks; " that all Prieſts for " ſaying Maſs were to be put to Death;" the great Penalties which They were to undergo, who entertained or harboured a Prieſt in their Houſe, or were preſent at Maſs, and the like; with all other envious Clauſes, which were in any Acts of Parliament, that had been enacted upon ſeveral Treaſons and Conſpiracies of the Roman Catholicks, in the Reigns of Queen Elizabeth and King James. And this Collection They cauſed to be tranſlated into French and into Latin, and ſcattered it abroad in all Places; after They had cauſed Copies of it to be preſented to the Queen Mother of France, and to the Cardinal: So that the King came into no Place where thoſe Papers were not ſhewed to him, and where he was not ſeriouſly aſked, " whether it was a true Collection of the " Laws of England," and " whether it was poſſible, " that any Chriſtian Kingdom could exerciſe ſo much " Tyranny againſt the Catholick Religion." The King, who had never heard of theſe Particulars, did really believe that the Paper was forged, and anſwered, " He did not believe that there were ſuch Laws:" And when He came to his Lodgings, He gave the Chancellor the Paper, and bade him read it, and tell him, " whether ſuch Laws were in Force in Eng- " land." He had heard before of the ſcattering of thoſe Papers, and knew well who had made the Collection; who had been a Lawyer, and was a Proteſtant, but had too good an Opinion of the Roman Catholicks, and deſired too much to be grateful to them.

THE Chancellor found an Opportunity the next Day to enlarge upon the Paper to his Majeſty, and informed him of " the Seaſons in which, and the Oc- " caſions and Provocations upon which, thoſe Laws " had been made; of the frequent Treaſons and Con- " ſpiracies which had been entered into by ſome Ro- " man Catholicks, always with the Privity and Appro- " bation of their Prieſts and Confeſſors, againſt the " Perſon and Life of Queen Elizabeth; and after her " Death, of the infamous and deteſtable Gunpowder " Treaſon to have deſtroyed King James and his " Poſterity, with the whole Nobility of the King- " dom: So that in thoſe Times, the Pope having " excommunicated the whole Kingdom, and abſolved " the Subjects from all their Oaths of Fidelity, there " ſeemed no Expedient to preſerve the Crown, but " the uſing theſe Severities againſt thoſe who were " profeſſed Enemies to it. But that ſince thoſe Times, " that the Roman Catholicks had lived quietly, that " Rigour had not been uſed: And that the King his " Father's Clemency towards thoſe of that Profeſſion " (which Clemency extended no farther than the diſ- " penſing with the utmoſt Rigour of the Laws), was " the Ground of the Scandal of his being popiſhly " affected, that contributed as much to his Ruin, as " any particular Malice in the worſt of his Ene- " mies."

THE King hearkened attentively to all that was ſaid, and then anſwered, " that He could not doubt " but there was ſome very extraordinary Reaſon for " the making ſuch ſtrange Laws: But whatever the " Reaſon then was, that it was at preſent and for " many Years paſt very evident, that there was no " ſuch Malignity in the Roman Catholicks, that ſhould

" con-

" continue that heavy Yoke upon their Necks. That " He knew well enough, that if He were in England, " He had not in himſelf the Power to repeal any " Act of Parliament, without the Conſent of Par- " liament: But that He knew no Reaſon why He " might not profeſs, that He did not like thoſe Laws " which cauſed Men to be put to Death for their " Religion; and that He would do his beſt, if ever " God reſtored him to his Kingdom, that thoſe " bloody Laws might be repealed. And that if " there were no other Reaſon of State than He " could yet comprehend, againſt the taking away " the other Penalties, He ſhould be glad that all " thoſe Diſtinctions between his Subjects might be " removed; and that whilſt They were all equally " good Subjects, They might equally enjoy his Pro- " tection." And his Majeſty did frequently, when He was in the Courts of Catholick Princes, and when He was ſure to hear the Sharpneſs of the Laws in England inveighed againſt, enlarge upon the ſame Diſcourſe: And it had been a very unſeaſonable Preſumption in any Man, who would have endeavoured to have diſſuaded him from entertaining that Candour in his Heart.

WITH this gracious Diſpoſition his Majeſty returned into England; and received his Catholick Subjects with the ſame Grace and Frankneſs, that He did his other: And They took all Opportunities to extol their own Sufferings, which They would have underſtood to have been for him. And ſome very noble Perſons there were, who had ſerved his Father very worthily in the War, and ſuffered as largely afterwards for having done ſo: But the Number of thoſe was not great, but much greater than of thoſe who ſhewed any Affection to him or for him, during the Time of his Abſence, and the Government of the Uſurper. Yet ſome few there were, even of thoſe who had ſuffered moſt for his Father, who did ſend him Supply when He was abroad, though They were hardly able to provide Neceſſaries for themſelves: And in his Eſcape from Worceſter, He received extraordinary Benefit, by the Fidelity of many poor People of that Religion; which his Majeſty was never reſerved in the Remembrance of. And this gracious Diſpoſition in him did not then appear ingrateful to any. And then, upon an Addreſs made to the Houſe of Peers in the Name of the Roman Catholicks, for ſome Relaxation of thoſe Laws which were ſtill in Force againſt them, the Houſe of Peers appointed that Committee which is mentioned before, to examine and report all thoſe penal Statutes, which reached to the taking away the Life of any Roman Catholick, Prieſt or Layman, for his Religion; there not appearing one Lord in the Houſe, who ſeemed to be unwilling that thoſe Laws ſhould be repealed. And after that Committee was appointed, the Roman Catholick Lords and their Friends for ſome Days diligently attended it, and made their Obſervations upon ſeveral Acts of Parliament, in which They deſired Eaſe. But on a ſudden this Committee was diſcontinued, and never after revived; the Roman Catholicks never afterwards being ſolicitous for it.

A Committee of the Lords for relaxing the penal Laws againſt the Roman Catholicks.

THE Argument was now to be debated amongſt themſelves, that They might agree what would pleaſe them: And then there quickly appeared that Diſcord and Animoſity between them, that never was nor ever will be extinguiſhed; and of which the State might make much other Uſe than it hath done. The Lords and Men of Eſtates were not ſatisfied, in that They obſerved the Good-Nature of the Houſe did not appear to extend farther, than the aboliſhing thoſe Laws which concerned the Lives of the Prieſts, which did not much affect them: For beſides that thoſe Spectacles were no longer grateful to the People, They were confident that They ſhould not be without Men to diſcharge thoſe Functions; and the Number of ſuch was more grievous to them than the Scarcity. That which They deſired was, the Removal of thoſe Laws, which being let looſe would deprive them of ſo much of their Eſtates, that the Remainder would not preſerve them from Poverty. This Indulgence would indeed be grateful to them; for the other They cared not. Nor were the Eccleſiaſticks at all pleaſed with what was propoſed for their Advantage, but looked upon themſelves as deprived of the Honour of Martyrdom by this Remiſſion, that They might undergo Reſtraints, which would be more grievous than Death itſelf: And They were very apprehenſive, that there would remain ſome Order of them excluded, as there was even a moſt univerſal Prejudice againſt the Jeſuits; or that there would be ſome Limitation of their Numbers, which They well knew the Catholicks in general would be very glad of, though They could not appear to deſire it.

The Roman Catholicks diſagree amongſt themſelves.

THERE was a Committee choſen amongſt them of the Superiours of all Orders, and of the ſecular Clergy, that ſate at Arundel-Houſe, and conſulted together with ſome of the principal Lords and others of the prime Quality of that Religion, what They ſhould ſay or do in ſuch and ſuch Caſes which probably might fall out. They all concluded, at leaſt apprehended, that They ſhould never be diſpenſed with in Reſpect of the Oaths, which were enjoined to be taken by all Men, without their ſubmitting to take ſome other Oath, that might be an equal Security of and for their Fidelity to the King, and the Preſervation of the Peace of the Kingdom. And there had been lately ſcattered abroad ſome printed Papers, written by ſome Regular and Secular Clergy, with ſober Propoſitions to that Purpoſe, and even the Form of an Oath and Subſcription to be taken or made by all Catholicks; in which there was an abſolute Renunciation or Declaration againſt the temporal Authority of the Pope, which, in all common Diſcourſes amongſt the Proteſtants, all Roman Catholicks made no Scruple to renounce and diſclaim: But it coming now to be the Subject-Matter of the Debate in this Committee, the Jeſuits declared with much Warmth, " that They " ought not, nor could They with a good Conſcience " as Catholicks, deprive the Pope of his temporal Au- " thority, which He hath in all Kingdoms granted to " him by God himſelf," with very much to that Purpoſe; with which moſt of the temporal Lords, and very many of the Seculars and Regulars, were ſo much ſcandalized, that the Committee being broken up for that Time, they never attended it again; the wiſer and the more conſcientious Men diſcerning, that there was a Spirit in the reſt that was raiſed and governed by a Paſſion, of which They could not comprehend the Ground. And the Truth is, the Jeſuits, and They who adhered to them, had entertained great Hopes from the King's too much Grace to them, and from the great Liberty They enjoyed; and promiſed themſelves and their Friends another Kind of Indulgence, than They ſaw was intended to them by the Houſe of Peers. And this was the Reaſon that that Committee was no more looked after, nor any publick Addreſs was any farther proſecuted.

AND from this Time there every Day appeared ſo much Inſolence and Indiſcretion amongſt the imprudent Catholicks, that They brought ſo many Scandals upon his Majeſty, and kindled ſo much Jealouſy in the Parliament, that there grew a general Averſion towards them. And the King's Party remembered, with what Warineſs and Diſregard the Roman Catholicks had lived towards them in the whole Time of the Uſurpation; and how little Sorrow They made Show of upon the horrid Murder of the King (which was then exceedingly taken Notice of): And They who had been abroad with the King remembered that his Majeſty had received leſs Regard and Reſpect from his Catholick Subjects, wherever He found them abroad, than from any foreign Catholicks; who always received him with all imaginable Duty, whilſt his own looked as if They had no Dependance upon him.

him. And ſo We return to the Parliament after its Adjournment.

Parliament meets again. THE Parliament, that had been adjourned upon the thirtieth of July, met again upon the twentieth of November, with the ſame Zeal and Affection to advance the King's Service. And the King himſelf came to them upon the ſame Day They met, and told them, King's Speech. " that He knew that Viſit was not of Courſe; yet if " there were no more in it, it would not be ſtrange, " that He came to ſee what He and They had ſo long " deſired to ſee, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, " and the Commons of England, met together to " conſult for the Peace and Safety of the Church and " State, by which Parliaments were reſtored to their " primitive Luſtre and Integrity:" His Majeſty ſaid, " He did heartily congratulate with them for that " Day." But He told them withal, " that He came " thither upon another Occaſion; which was to ſay " ſomewhat to them on his own Behalf, to aſk ſome- " what of them for himſelf, which was more than " He had done of them, or of thoſe who met before " them, ſince his Coming into England. Nor did He " think, that what He had to ſay to them did alone, " or did moſt concern himſelf: If the uneaſy Con- " dition He was in, if the Streights and Neceſſities " He was to ſtruggle with, did not manifeſtly re- " late to the publick Peace and Safety, more than " to his own Particular, otherwiſe than as He was " concerned in the Publick, He would not give them " that Trouble that Day; He could bear his Neceſ- " ſities which merely related to himſelf, with Patience " enough."

HE told them, " that He did not importune them " to make more Haſte in the ſettling the conſtant " Revenue of the Crown, than was agreeable to the " Method They had propoſed to themſelves, nor to " conſider the inſupportable Weight that lay upon it, " the Obligations it lay under to provide for the In- " tereſt, Honour and Security of the Nation, in ano- " ther Proportion than in any former Times it had " been obliged to: His Majeſty well knew, that They " had very affectionately and worthily taken all that " into their Thoughts, and would proceed in it with " Expedition: But that He came to put them in Mind " of the crying Debts which did every Day call upon " him, of ſome neceſſary Proviſions, which were to " be made without Delay for the very Safety of the " Kingdom, of the great Sum of Money that ſhould " be ready to diſcharge the ſeveral Fleets when they " came Home, and for the neceſſary Preparations " that were to be made for the ſetting out new Fleets " to Sea againſt the next Spring. Theſe were the " preſſing Occaſions which He was forced to recom- " mend to them with all poſſible Earneſtneſs, and He " did conjure them to provide for as ſpeedily as was " poſſible, and in ſuch a Manner as might give them " Security at Home, and ſome Reputation abroad." His Majeſty ſaid, " that He made this Diſcourſe to " them with ſome Confidence, becauſe He was very " willing and deſirous that They ſhould thoroughly " examine, whether thoſe Neceſſities which He men- " tioned were real or imaginary, or whether they were " fallen upon him by his own Fault, his own ill Ma- " nagery, or Exceſſes, and provide for them accor- " dingly. He was very willing that They ſhould " make a full Inſpection into his Revenue, as well the " Diſburſements as Receipts; and if They ſhould find " that it had been ill managed by any Corruptions in " the Officers He truſted, or by his own Unthriftineſs, " He ſhould take the Advice and Information They " ſhould give him very kindly.

HE told them, " that He was very ſorry that the " general Temper and Affections of the Nation were " not ſo well compoſed, as He hoped they would have " been, after ſo ſignal Bleſſings from God Almighty " upon them all, and after ſo great Indulgence and " Condeſcenſions from him towards all Intereſts. But " that there were many wicked Inſtruments ſtill as " active as ever, who laboured Night and Day to " diſturb the publick Peace, and to make all People " jealous of each other: It would be worthy their " Care and Vigilance to provide proper Remedies for " the Diſeaſes of that Kind; and if They ſhould find " new Diſeaſes, They muſt ſtudy new Remedies. For " thoſe Difficulties which concerned Matters in Reli- " gion," his Majeſty confeſſed to them, " that They " were too hard for him; and therefore He did re- " commend them to their Care and Diſcretion, which " could beſt provide for them."

THE two Houſes were abundantly pleaſed with all that his Majeſty had ſaid to them, and immediately betook them to the Conſideration of thoſe Particulars, which He had principally recommended to them. And though for the preſent They looked upon that Clauſe of his Majeſty's Speech, wherein He referred to them to make an Inſpection into his Revenue and his Expences, but as a generous and princely Condeſcenſion, which would not become them to make Uſe of (nor indeed had They at that Time the leaſt Prejudice to or Jealouſy of any, who were of the neareſt Truſt about his Majeſty); yet four Years after, when the Expences had grown to be much greater, and it may be all Diſburſements not ſo warrantable, and when the Factions in Court and Parliament were at a great Height, and Men made Uſe of publick Pretences to ſatisfy their private Animoſities and Malice, They made Uſe of that frank Offer of his Majeſty, to entitle themſelves to make Inquiſition into publick and private Receipts and Diſburſements, in a very extraordinary Manner never practiſed before.

The Reaſon why the King's Debts were ſo great. LET no Man wonder, that within ſo little Time as a Year and a Half or very little more after the King's Return, that is, from May to November in the next Year, and after ſo great Sums of Money raiſed by Acts of Parliament upon the People, his Majeſty's Debts could be ſo crying and importunate, as to diſturb him to that Degree as He expreſſed. It was never enough underſtood, that in all that Time He never received from the Parliament more than the ſeventy thouſand Pounds towards his Coronation; nor were the Debts which were now ſo grievous to him contracted by himſelf (though it cannot be ſuppoſed but that He had contracted Debts himſelf in that Time): All the Money that had been given and raiſed had been applied to the Payment of the Land and Sea Forces, and had done neither. Parliaments do ſeldom make their Computations right, but reckon what They give to be much more than is ever received, and what They are to pay to be as much leſs than in Truth They owe; ſo that when all the Money that was collected was paid, there remained ſtill very much due to the Soldiers, and much more to the Seamen: And the Clamour from Both reached the King's Ears, as if They had been levied by his Warrant and for his Service. And his Majeſty underſtood too well, by the Experience of the ill Huſbandry of the laſt Year, when both the Army and the Ships were ſo long continued in Pay, for Want of Money to diſband and pay them off, what the Trouble and Charge would be, if the ſeveral Fleets ſhould return before Money was provided to diſcharge the Seamen; and for that the Clamour would be only upon him.

BUT there was an Expence that He had been engaged in from the Time of his Return, and by which He had contracted a great Debt, of which very few Men could take Notice; nor could the King think fit to diſcover it, till He had firſt provided againſt the Miſchief which might have attended the Diſcovery. It will hardly be believed, that in ſo warlike an Age, and when the Armies and Fleets of England had made more Noiſe in the World for twenty Years, had fought more Battles at Land and Sea, than all the World had done beſides, or any one People had done in any Age before; and when at his Majeſty's Return there remained a hundred Ships at Sea, and an Army of near threeſcore thouſand Men at Land; there ſhould not be in the Tower of London, and in all the Stores belonging to the Crown, Fire-Arms enough, nor indeed of any other Kind, to arm three thouſand Men; nor Powder and naval Proviſions enough to ſet out five Ships of War.

FROM the Death of Cromwell, no Care had been taken for Supplies of any of the Stores. And the Changes which enſued in the Government, and putting out and in new Officers; the Expeditions of Lambert againſt Sir George Booth, and afterwards into the North; and other Preparations for thoſe Factions and Parties which ſucceeded each other; and the continual Opportunities which the Officers had for Embezzlement; and laſtly, the ſetting out that Fleet which was ſent to attend upon the King for his Return; had ſo totally drained the Stores of all Kinds, that the Magazines were no better repleniſhed than is mentioned before: Which as ſoon as his Majeſty knew, as He could not be long ignorant of it, the firſt Care He took was to conceal it, that it might not be known abroad or at Home, in how ill a Poſture He was to defend himſelf againſt an Enemy. And then He committed the Care of that Province to a noble Perſon, whom He knew He could not truſt too much, and made Sir William Compton Maſter of the Ordnance, and made all the Shifts He could deviſe for Monies, that the Work might be begun. And hereby inſenſibly He had contracted a great Debt: And theſe were Part of the crying Debts, and the neceſſary Proviſions which were to be made without Delay for the very Safety of the Kingdom, which He told the Parliament. And in this He had laboured ſo effectually, that at the Time when the firſt Dutch War was entered into, all the Stores were more completely ſupplied and provided for, and the Ships and all naval Proviſions in greater Strength and Plenty, than they had ever been in the Reign of any former King, or in the Time of the Uſurper himſelf.

THAT Part of the King's Speech, of the Diſtempers in the Nation by the Differences in Religion, which He confeſſed were too hard for him, and recommended the compoſing them to their Care and Deliberation, gives me a ſeaſonable Opportunity to enter upon the Relation, how that Affair ſtood at that Time, and how far the Diſtractions of thoſe ſeveral Factions were from being reconciled, though Epiſcopacy ſeemed to be fully reſtored, and the Biſhops to their Votes in Parliament; which had been looked upon as the moſt ſovereign Remedy, to cure, reform or extinguiſh all thoſe Maladies. The Biſhops had ſpent the Vacation in making ſuch Alterations in the Book of Common Prayer, as They thought would make it more grateful to the diſſenting Brethren, for ſo the ſchiſmatical Party called themſelves; and ſuch Additions, as in their Judgments the Temper of the preſent Time and the paſt Miſcarriages required. It was neceſſarily to be preſented to the Convocation, which is the national Synod of the Church; and that did not ſit during the Receſs of the Parliament, and ſo came not together till the End of November: Where the Conſideration of it took up much Time; all Men offering ſuch Alterations and Additions, as were ſuitable to their own Fancies, and the Obſervations which They had made in the Time of Confuſion.

An Account of the Reviſal of the Liturgy.

THE Biſhops were not all of one Mind. Some of them, who had greateſt Experience and were in Truth wiſe Men, thought it beſt "to reſtore and confirm "the old Book of Common Prayer, without any Alterations and Additions; and that it would be the beſt "Vindication the Liturgy and Government of the "Church could receive, that after ſo many Scandals "and Reproaches caſt upon Both, and after a bloody "Rebellion and a War of twenty Years raiſed, as "was pretended, principally againſt Both, and which "had prevailed and triumphed in the total Suppreſſion "and Deſtruction of Both, they ſhould now be re-"ſtored to be in all Reſpects the ſame they had been "before. Whereas any Alterations and Additions "(beſides the Advantage it might give to the com-"mon Adverſary, the Papiſt, who would be apt to "ſay that We had reformed and changed our Reli-"gion again), would raiſe new Scruples in the "factious and ſchiſmatical Party, that was aſhamed "of all the old Arguments, which had ſo often been "anſwered, and ſtood at preſent exploded in the "Judgment of all ſober Men; but would recover "new Spirits to make new Objections, and complain "that the Alterations and Additions are more griev-"ous and burdenſome to the Liberty of their Conſci-"ence, than thoſe of which They had formerly com-"plained."

Some of the Biſhops are againſt all Alterations in the Liturgy.

OTHERS, equally grave, of great Learning and unblemiſhed Reputation, preſſed earneſtly both for the Alterations and Additions; ſaid, "that it was a "common Reproach upon the Government of the "Church, that it would not depart from the leaſt "unneceſſary Expreſſion or Word, nor explain the "moſt inſignificant Ceremony; which would quiet "or remove the Doubts and Jealouſies of many con-"ſcientious Men, that they did in Truth ſignify "ſomewhat that was not intended: And therefore "ſince ſome powerful Men of that troubleſome "Party had made it their earneſt Requeſt, that ſome "ſuch Alterations and Additions might be made, "and profeſſed that it would give great Satisfaction "to many very good Men; it would be great Pity, "now there was a fit Opportunity for it, which had "not been in former Times of Clamour, not to "gratify them in thoſe ſmall Particulars, which did "not make any important Difference from what was "before." It may be there were ſome, who believed that the Victory and Triumph of the Church would be with the more Luſtre, if ſomewhat were inſerted, that might be underſtood to reflect upon the rude and rebellious Behaviour of the late Times, which had been regulated and conducted by that Clergy: And ſo both Additions and Alterations were made.

Others of them preſs earneſtly for ſome.

The former Opinion the more prudent.

BUT the Truth is, what Show of Reaſon ſoever and Appearance of Charity the latter Opinion ſeemed to carry with it, the former Advice was the more prudent, and would have prevented many Inconveniences which enſued. Whatever had been pretended or deſired, the Alterations which were made to pleaſe them did not reduce one of them to the Obedience of the Church; and the Additions raiſed the Clamour higher than it had been. And when it was evident that They ſhould not be left longer without a Liturgy, They cried aloud for the ſame They had before, though They had inveighed againſt it for near a hundred Years together.

The unhappy Policy of making Conceſſions to the Diſſenters.

IT is an unhappy Policy, and always unhappily applied, to imagine that that Claſſis of Men can be recovered and reconciled by partial Conceſſions, or granting leſs than They demand. And if all were granted, They would have more to aſk, ſomewhat as a Security for the Enjoyment of what is granted, that ſhall preſerve their Power, and ſhake the whole Frame of the Government. Their Faction is their Religion: Nor are thoſe Combinations ever entered into upon real and ſubſtantial Motives of Conſcience how erroneous ſoever, but conſiſt of many glutinous Materials, of Will, and Humour, and Folly, and Knavery, and Ambition, and Malice, which make Men cling inſeparably together, till They have Satisfaction in all their Pretences, or till They are abſolutely broken and ſubdued, which may always be more eaſily done than the other. And if ſome few, how ſignal ſoever (which often deceives us), are ſeparated and divided from the Herd upon reaſonable Overtures, and ſecret Rewards which make the Overtures look the more reaſonable; They are but ſo many ſingle Men, and have no more Credit and Authority (whatever They

They have had) with their Companions, than if They had never known them, rather leſs; being leſs mad than They were makes them thought to be leſs fit to be believed. And They, whom You think You have recovered, carry always a Chagrin about them, which makes them good for Nothing, but for Inſtances to divert you from any more of that Kind of Traffick.

AND it is very ſtrange, that the Clergy did not at this Time remember what had ſo lately befallen the poor Church of Scotland, upon the Tranſmiſſion of their Liturgy, which had been compoſed with this very Proſpect that now dazzled their Eyes. "To re- "ceive a Liturgy from England was below the Dignity "of that Nation, which were governed by their own "Laws, without Dependance upon any other. Be- "ſides there were many Errors in that Liturgy that "They could never ſubmit to, and ſome Defects "which ought to be ſupplied; and if ſuch a one "ſhould be compiled, in which all thoſe Exceptions, "which were well enough known, might be provi- "ded for, They would gladly receive it." All this was carefully performed; and what Reception it had afterwards is too well known, and will ever be remembered by the Scars which ſtill remain from thoſe Wounds. And then the great Objection that was moſt impudently urged was, "that it differed from "the Liturgy of the Church of England, which They "were ready to have received, and would have de- "clared to the World, that the two Nations had but "one Religion; whereas the Book ſent to them would "have manifeſted the contrary, and was the Product "of a few particular Men, to whoſe Spirit and Hu- "mour They would not ſacrifice their native Liberty "of Conſcience."

None of the Diſſenters gained by the Conceſſions now made.

THEY of the ſame Fraternity in England at this preſent governed themſelves by the ſame Method, though, God be thanked, not yet with the ſame Succeſs. And there is great Reaſon to believe, that the very Men, who laboured ſo much for the Alterations, which were made, and profeſſed to receive ſo much Satisfaction in them, did it for no other End, but to procure more Opportunity to continue and enlarge the Contentions; and to gain Excuſe and Credit to the ill Things They had done, by the Redreſs and Reparation that was given them in the Amendment of many Particulars, againſt which They had always complained. There was not one of them who had uſed that Importunity and made that Profeſſion, who afterwards was conformable to the Government of the Church, or frequented thoſe Churches where or when the Liturgy was uſed.

The factious Preachers aſſume much Licenſe.

WHILST the Clergy was buſy and ſolicitous to prepare this Remedy for the preſent Diſtempers, the People of all the ſeveral Factions in Religion aſſumed more Licenſe than ever They had done. The Preſbyterians in all their Pulpits inveighed againſt the Book of Common Prayer that They expected, and took the ſame Liberty to inveigh againſt the Government of the Church, as They had been accuſtomed to before the Return of the King; with Reflections upon the Perſons of the Biſhops, as if They aſſumed a Juriſdiction that was yet at leaſt ſuſpended. And the other Factions in Religion, as if by Concert, took the ſame Liberty in their ſeveral Congregations. The Anabaptiſts and the Quakers made more Noiſe than ever, and aſſembled together in greater Numbers, and talked what Reformations They expected in all Particulars. Theſe Inſolencies offended the Parliament very much: And the Houſe of Commons expreſſed much Impatience, that the Liturgy was ſo long in Preparation, that the Act of Uniformity might without Delay be paſſed and publiſhed; not without ſome Inſinuations and Reflections, that his Majeſty's Candour, and Admiſſion of all Perſons to reſort to his Preſence, and his Condeſcenſion to confer with them, had raiſed their Spirits to an Inſolence inſupportable; and that Nothing could reduce them to the Temper of good Subjects, but the higheſt Severity.

IT is very true, from the Time of his Majeſty's Coming into England, He had not been reſerved in the Admiſſion of thoſe who had been his greateſt Enemies, to his Preſence. The Preſbyterian Miniſters He received with Grace; and did believe that He ſhould work upon them by Perſuaſions, having been well acquainted with their common Arguments by the Converſation He had had in Scotland, and was very able to confute them. The Independents had as free Acceſs, both that He might hinder any Conjunction between the other Factions, and becauſe They ſeemed wholly to depend upon his Majeſty's Will and Pleaſure, without reſorting to the Parliament, in which They had no Confidence; and had rather that Epiſcopacy ſhould flouriſh again, than that the Preſbyterians ſhould govern. The King had always admitted the Quakers for his Diverſiſement and Mirth, becauſe He thought, that of all the Factions They were the moſt innocent, and had leaſt of Malice in their Natures againſt his Perſon and his Government: And it was now too late, though He had a worſe Opinion of them all, to reſtrain them from coming to him, till there ſhould be ſome Law made to puniſh them; and therefore He ſtill called upon the Biſhops, to cauſe the Liturgy to be expedited in the Convocation. And finding that thoſe Diſtempers had that Influence upon the Houſe of Commons, that the Diſpleaſure and Jealouſy which They conceived from thence did retard their Counſels, and made them leſs ſolicitous to advance his Service in the ſettling his Revenue, They having ſate near three Months after their coming together again upon their Adjournment, without making any conſiderable Progreſs in it; He ſent for the Speaker and the Houſe of Commons to attend him at Whitehall, where He ſpake unto them, though very graciouſly, in a Style that ſeemed to have more of Expoſtulation and Reprehenſion than They had been accuſtomed to.

The King ſends for the Houſe of Commons to attend him at Whitehall.

HE ſaid, "He ſpake his Heart to them when "He told them, that He did believe, that from the "firſt Inſtitution of Parliaments to that Hour, there "had never been a Houſe of Commons fuller of "Affection and Duty to their King, than They were "to him; never any that was more deſirous and ſoli- "citous to gratify their King, than They were to "oblige him; never a Houſe of Commons, in which "there were fewer Perſons without a full Meaſure of "Zeal for the Honour and Welfare of the King and "Country, than there are in this: In a Word," He ſaid, "He knew moſt of their Perſons and Names, "and could never hope to find better Men in their "Places. Yet after all this He could not but lament "and even complain, that He and They and the "Kingdom were yet without that preſent Fruit and "Advantage, which They might reaſonably promiſe "themſelves from ſuch a Harmony of Affections, "and Unity in Reſolutions to advance the publick "Service, and to provide for the Peace and Security "of the Kingdom; that They did not expedite thoſe "good Counſels, which were moſt neceſſary for Both. "He knew not how it came to paſs, but for many "Weeks paſt, even ſince their laſt Adjournment, "private and particular Buſineſs had almoſt thruſt "the Conſideration of the publick out of Doors; "and He did not know that They were nearer the "ſettling his Revenue, than They had been at Chriſt- "mas. He was ſure He had communicated his Con- "dition to them without Reſerve; what He had "coming in, and what his neceſſary Diſburſements "were. And" He ſaid "He was exceedingly de- "ceived, if whatever They gave him were any other- "wiſe given to him, than to be iſſued out for their "own Uſe and Benefit; and if They conſidered it "well, They would find that They were the richer

His Speech to them.

"by

" by what They gave, ſince it was all to be laid out " that They might enjoy the reſt in Peace and Se- " curity."

He ſaid, " He need not put them in Mind of the " miſerable Effects, that had attended the Wants and " Neceſſities of the Crown; that He needed not to tell " them, that there was a Republican Party ſtill in the " Kingdom, which had the Courage ſtill to promiſe " themſelves another Revolution: And He thought " He had as little Need to tell them, that the only " Way, with God's Bleſſing, to diſappoint their Hopes, " and indeed to reduce them from thoſe extravagant " Hopes and Deſires, was, to let them ſee that They " had ſo provided for the Crown, that it had where- " withal to ſupport itſelf, and to ſecure his People; " which He was ſure was all He deſired, and deſired " only for their Preſervation. Therefore He conjured " them by all the Profeſſions of Affection which They " had made to him, by all the Kindneſs which He " knew They had for him, that They would, after all " their Deliberations, betake themſelves to ſome " ſpeedy Reſolutions, and ſettle ſuch a real and ſub- " ſtantial Revenue upon him, as might hold ſome Pro- " portion with the neceſſary Expences He was at for " the Peace and Benefit and Honour of the Kingdom; " that They who looked for Troubles at Home might " deſpair of their Wiſhes; and that our Neighbours " abroad, by ſeeing that all is well at Home, might " have that Eſteem and Value of his Majeſty, as " might ſecure the Honour and Intereſt of the Nation, " and make the Happineſs of the Kingdom and of " that City once more the Admiration and Envy of " the World."

He told them, " that He heard that They were very " zealous for the Church, and very ſolicitous and even " jealous that there was not Expedition enough uſed " in that Affair: He thanked them for it, ſince He " preſumed that it proceeded from a good Root of " Piety and Devotion. But," He ſaid, " that He muſt " tell them, that He had the worſt Luck in the " World, if after all the Reproaches of being a Papiſt " while He was abroad, He was ſuſpected to be a " Preſbyterian now He was come Home. He knew " They would not take it unkindly, if He told them, " that He was as zealous for the Church of England " as any of them could be, and was enough acquaint- " ed with the Enemies of it on all Sides; that He was " as much in Love with the Book of Common Prayer " as They could wiſh, and had Prejudice enough to " thoſe who did not love it, who He hoped in Time " would be better informed, and ſo change their " Minds; and They might be confident, He did as " much deſire to have an Uniformity ſettled, as any " Man amongſt them. He prayed them to truſt him " in that Affair, and promiſed them to haſten the Diſ- " patch of it with all convenient Speed; They might " rely upon him in it." He ſaid, " He had tranſmit- " ted the Book of Common Prayer, with thoſe Alterati- " ons and Additions which had been preſented to " him by the Convocation, to the Houſe of Peers " with his Approbation, that the Act of Uniformity " might relate to it; ſo that He preſumed that it " would ſhortly be diſpatched there: And that when " They had done all They could," He ſaid, " the " well ſettling that Affair would require great Pru- " dence and Diſcretion, and the Abſence of all Paſſion " and Precipitation."

His Majeſty concluded with aſſuring them, " that " He did promiſe himſelf great Fruits from that Con- " verſation He had with them, and that They would " juſtify the Confidence He had in their Affections, by " letting the World ſee, that They took his Concern- " ments to Heart, and were ready to do whatſoever " He deſired for the Peace and Welfare of the King- " dom."

The Liturgy preſented to the Houſe of Lords with the King's Confirmation.

When the Book of Common Prayer was, by the King's Command, preſented to the Houſe of Lords by the two Archbiſhops (for it had been approved by the Convocation of the Province of York, as well as by that of Canterbury) confirmed by his Majeſty under the Great Seal of England; the Book itſelf took up no Debate: Only the Earl of Northumberland propoſed, " that the " old Book of Common Prayer might be confirmed " without any Alteration or Addition, and then the " ſame Act of Uniformity, that had been in the Time " of Queen Elizabeth, would be likewiſe applied to it; " whereas a new Act of Uniformity might take up " much Time and raiſe much Debate, all which " would be avoided by adhering to the old."

Whatever that Lord's Opinion was, He was known to be of the Preſbyterian Party. And it was anſwered, " that if that Propoſition had been hear- " tily made when the King came into England, it " would have met with a general Approbation, and " prevented much Sharpneſs and Animoſity, which " had ſince ariſen by thoſe who oppoſed that excellent " Form. But after the Clergy had ſo bitterly in- " veighed againſt many Parts thereof, and prevailed " with his Majeſty to ſuſpend the Uſe of it till it " might be reviſed, as by his Declaration of the five " and twentieth of October He had done, and there- " upon had granted his Commiſſion under the Great " Seal of England to ſeveral Biſhops and other Di- " vines, to review the Book of Common Prayer, and to " prepare ſuch Alterations and Additions as They " thought fit to offer; and that afterwards his Majeſty " had been pleaſed to authorize the Convocations of " Both the Provinces of Canterbury and York, called " and aſſembled by his Majeſty's Authority, to review " the ſaid Book of Prayer, and the Book of the Form and " Manner of the making and conſecrating of Biſhops, " Prieſts and Deacons; and that now after the Biſhops " and Clergy of Both Provinces had, upon great De- " liberation and upon reviewing thoſe Books, prepared " and conſented to ſome Alterations, and to the Ad- " dition of ſeveral Prayers to be uſed upon emergent " Occaſions, all which his Majeſty had already rati- " fied and confirmed: It could not but be under- " ſtood Matter of great Levity and Offence, to re- " ject this Book, that was now with all this Ceremony " and Solemnity preſented, for no other Reaſon but " becauſe They liked better the old Book, which had " been for twenty Years diſcontinued and rejected." And therefore it was moved, " that there might not " be ſuch an Affront put upon the Convocation, and " upon the King himſelf." And ſo with little more publick Conteſt the Book itſelf was conſented and ſubmitted to.

And conſented to by them.

But then the Act of Uniformity depended long, and took up much Debate in Both Houſes. In the Houſe of Peers, where the Act firſt began, there were many Things inſerted, which had not been contained in the former Act of Uniformity, and ſo ſeemed to carry ſomewhat of Novelty in them. It admitted " no Perſon " to have any Cure of Souls or any Eccleſiaſtical " Dignity in the Church of England, but ſuch who " had been or ſhould be ordained Prieſt or Deacon " by ſome Biſhop, that is, who had not Epiſcopal " Ordination; excepting only the Miniſters or Paſtors " of the French and Dutch Churches in London and " other Places, allowed by the King, who ſhould en- " joy the Privileges They had."

Debates there upon the Act of Uniformity.

This was new; for there had been many and at preſent there were ſome, who poſſeſſed Benefices with Cure of Souls, and other Eccleſiaſtical Promotions, who had never received Orders but in France or in Holland; and theſe Men muſt now receive new Ordination, which had been always held unlawful in the Church, or by this Act of Parliament muſt be deprived of their Livelihood, which They enjoyed in the moſt flouriſhing and peaceable Times of the Church. And therefore it was ſaid, " that this had " not been the Opinion of the Church of England; " and that it would lay a great Reproach upon all " other Proteſtant Churches who had no Biſhops, as " if They had no Miniſters, and conſequently were " no

Upon the Clauſe requiring Epiſcopal Ordination.

" no Churches: For that it was well known the " Church of England did not allow Reordination, as " the ancient Church never admitted it; inſomuch as " if any Prieſt of the Church of Rome renounces the " Communion thereof, his Ordination is not queſtion- " ed, but He is as capable of any Preferment in this " Church, as if He had been ordained in it. And " therefore the not admitting the Miniſters of other " Proteſtants to have the ſame Privilege, can proceed " from no other Ground, than that They looked not " upon them as Miniſters, having no Ordination; " which is a Judgment the Church of England had " not ever owned; and that it would be very im- " prudent to do it now."

To this it was anſwered, " that the Church of " England judged none but her own Children, nor " did determine that other Proteſtant Churches were " without Ordination. It is a Thing without her " Cognizance: And moſt of the learned Men of " thoſe Churches had made Neceſſity the chief Pillar " to ſupport that Ordination of theirs. That Ne- " ceſſity cannot be pleaded here, where Ordination " is given according to the unqueſtionable Practice of " the Church of Chriſt: If They who pretend foreign " Ordination are his Majeſty's Subjects, They have " no Excuſe of Neceſſity, for they might in all Times " have received Epiſcopal Ordination, and ſo They " did upon the Matter renounce their own Church; " if they are Strangers, and pretend to Preferment in " this Church, They ought to conform and to be ſub- " ject to the Laws of the Kingdom, which concern " only thoſe who deſire to live under the Protection " thereof. For the Argument of Reordination, there " is no ſuch Thing required. Rebaptization is not " allowed in or by any Church: Yet in all Churches " where it is doubted, as it may be often with very " good Reaſon, whether the Perſon hath been bap- " tized or no, or if it hath been baptized by a Mid- " wife or lay Perſon; without determining the Vali- " dity or Invalidity of ſuch Baptiſm, there is an hy- " pothetical Form, If thou haſt not been already baptized, " I do baptize, &c. So in this Caſe of Ordination, " the Form may be the ſame, If Thou haſt not been " already ordained, then I do ordain, &c. If his for- " mer Ordination were good, this is void; if the " other was invalid or defective, He hath Reaſon to " be glad that it be thus ſupplied." After much Debate, that Clauſe remained ſtill in the Act: And very many, who had received Preſbyterian Orders in the late Times, came very willingly to be ordained in the Manner aforeſaid by a Biſhop; and very few choſe to quit or loſe a Parſonage or Vicarage of any Value upon that Scruple.

A Clamour afterwards raiſed about the Clauſe of Aſſent and Conſent.

THERE was another Clauſe in the Bill, that made very much more Noiſe afterwards, though for the preſent it took not up ſo much Time, and in Truth was little taken Notice of: That is, a Form of Subſcription that every Man was to make, who had received, or before He received, any Benefice or Preferment in the Church; which comprehended all the Governours, Superiours and Fellows, in all the Colleges and Halls of either Univerſity, and all Schoolmaſters and the like, who are ſubſervient towards Learning. Every ſuch Perſon was to declare " his " unfeigned Aſſent and Conſent to all and every " Thing contained and preſcribed in and by the Book, " entitled The Book of Common Prayer, &c." The Subſcription was generally thought ſo reaſonable, that it ſcarce met with any Oppoſition in either Houſe. But when it came abroad, and was to be ſubmitted to, all the diſſenting Brethren cried out, " that it was a Snare to catch them, to ſay that which " could not conſiſt with their Conſciences. They took great Pains to diſtinguiſh and to make great Difference between Aſſent and Conſent: " They could " be content to read the Book in the Manner They " were obliged to do, which ſhewed their Conſent; " but declaring their unfeigned Aſſent to every Thing " contained and preſcribed therein would imply, that " They were ſo fully convinced in their Judgments, " as to think that it was ſo perfect, that Nothing " therein could be amended, which for their Part " They thought there might. That there were many " Expreſſions in the Rubrick, which They were not " bound to read; yet by this Aſſent They declared " their Approbation thereof." But after many tedious Diſcourſes of this tyrannical Impoſition, They grew by Degrees aſhamed of it; and were perſuaded to think, that Aſſent and Conſent had ſo near the ſame Signification, that They could hardly conſent to do what They did not aſſent to: So that the chiefeſt amongſt them, to avoid a very little Inconvenience, ſubſcribed the ſame.

The Bill paſſed by the Lords.

BUT there was ſhortly after another Clauſe added, that gave them Trouble indeed. When the Bill had paſſed the Lords Houſe, it was ſent of Courſe to the Commons; where though all the Factions in Religion had too many Friends, for the moſt contrary and oppoſite one to another always were united and reconciled againſt the Church, yet They who were zealous for the Government, and who hated all the other Factions at leaſt enough, were very much ſuperiour in Number and in Reputation. And the Bill was no ſooner read there, than every Man according to his Paſſion thought of adding ſomewhat to it, that might make it more grievous to Somebody whom He did not love; which made the Diſcourſes tedious and vehement and full of Animoſity. And at laſt They agreed upon a Clauſe, which contained another Subſcription and Declaration, which every Man was to make before He could be admitted into any Benefice or Eccleſiaſtical Promotion, or to be a Governour or Fellow in either of the Univerſities. He muſt firſt declare, " that it is not lawful, upon any Pretence " whatſoever, to take Arms againſt the King; and " that He doth abhor that traiterous Poſition of taking " Arms by his Authority againſt his Perſon, or againſt " thoſe that are commiſſioned by him: and that He " will conform to the Liturgy of the Church of Eng- " land, as it is now by Law eſtabliſhed." And He doth declare, " that He doth hold there lies no Ob- " ligation upon him, or on any other Perſon, from " the Oath commonly called The ſolemn League and " Covenant, to endeavour any Change or Alteration " of Government, either in Church or State; and " that the ſame was in itſelf an unlawful Oath, and " impoſed upon the Subjects of this Realm, againſt " the known Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom;" with ſome other Clauſes, which need not be mentioned becauſe they were afterwards left out. And with this Addition, and ſome other Alterations, They returned the Bill again to the Lords for their Approbation.

Amendments made by the Houſe of Commons.

The Bill returned to the Lords.

THE framing and forming this Clauſe had taken up very much Time, and raiſed no leſs Paſſion in the Houſe of Commons: and now it came among the Lords, it was not leſs troubleſome. It added to the Diſpleaſure and Jealouſy againſt the Biſhops, by whom it was thought to be prepared, and commended to their Party in the lower Houſe. Many Lords, who had taken the Covenant, were not ſo much concerned that the Clergy (for whom only this Act was prepared) ſhould be obliged to make this Declaration; but apprehended more, that when ſuch a Clauſe ſhould be once paſſed in one Act of Parliament, it could not after be diſputed, and ſo would be inſerted into all other Acts which related to the Function of any other Offices, and ſo would in a ſhort Time be required of themſelves. And therefore They oppoſed it warmly " as a Thing unneceſſary, and which would widen " the Breach, inſtead of cloſing up the Wounds that " had been made; which the King had made it his " Buſineſs to do, and the Parliament had hitherto " concurred with his Majeſty in that Endeavour. " That many Men would believe or fear (which in " ſuch a Caſe is the ſame), that this Clauſe might " prove a Breach of the Act of Indemnity, which had Debates upon the Amendments made by the Commons.

" not only provided againſt Indictments and Suits at " Law and Penalties, but againſt Reproaches for " what was paſt, which this Clauſe would be under- " ſtood to give new Life to. For what concerned the " Conformity to the Liturgy of the Church as it is " now eſtabliſhed, it is provided for as fully in the " former Subſcription in this Act, and therefore is " impertinent in this Place. That the Covenant con- " tained many good Things in it, as defending the " King's Perſon, and maintaining the Proteſtant Re- " ligion: And therefore to ſay that there lies no Ob- " ligation from it, would never be for the Service of " the King or the Intereſt of the Church; eſpecially " ſince it was well known, that it had wrought upon " the Conſcience of many to ſerve the King in the late " Revolution, from which his Majeſty had received " great Advantage. However it was now dead, all " Men were abſolved from taking it, nor could it be " impoſed or offered to any Man without Puniſhment; " and They, who had in the ill Times been forced to " take it, did now inviolably and chearfully perform " all the Duties of Allegiance and Fidelity to his " Majeſty. If it had at any Time produced any " Good, that was an Excuſe for the Irregularity of " it: It could do no Miſchief for the future; and " therefore that it was Time to bury it in Obli- " vion."

Many Men believed, that though They inſiſted principally on that Part which related to the Covenant, They were in Truth more afflicted with the firſt Part; in which it was declared, " that it was not " lawful, upon any Pretence whatſoever, to take Arms " againſt the King; and that He doth abhor that " traiterous Poſition of taking Arms by his Autho- " rity againſt his Perſon:" Which Concluſions had been the Principles which ſupported their Rebellion, and by which They had impoſed upon the People, and got their Concurrence. They durſt not oppoſe this, becauſe the Parliament had already by a former Act declared the Law to be ſo in thoſe Particulars: Yet this went much nearer to them, that by their own particular Declaration (for They looked upon it as that which in a ſhort Time muſt be their own), They ſhould upon the Matter confeſs themſelves to have been Traitors, which They had not yet been declared to have been; and no Man could now juſtify the calling them ſo.

They who were moſt ſolicitous that the Houſe ſhould concur with the Commons in this Addition, had Fieldroom enough to expatiate upon the groſs Iniquity of the Covenant. They made themſelves very merry with the Allegation, " that the King's Safety " and the Intereſt of the Church were provided for " by the Covenant, when it had been therefore entered " into, to fight againſt the King and to deſtroy the " Church. That there was no one lawful or honeſt " Clauſe in the Covenant, that was not deſtroyed or " made of no Signification by the next that ſucceed- " ed; and if it were not, the ſame Obligation was " better provided for by ſome other Oaths, which " the ſame Men had or ought to have taken, and " which ought to have reſtrained them from taking " the Covenant: And therefore it may juſtly be pro- " nounced, that there is no Obligation upon any " Man from thence. That there was no Breach of " the Act of Indemnity, nor any Reproach upon any " Man for having taken it, except what would reſult " from his own Conſcience. But that it was moſt " abſolutely neceſſary for the Safety of the King's " Perſon, and the Peace of the Kingdom, that They " who had taken it ſhould declare, that They do not " believe themſelves to be bound by it: Otherwiſe " They may ſtill think, that They may fight againſt " the King, and muſt conſpire the Deſtruction of the " Church. And They cannot take too much Care, " or uſe too much Diligence, to diſcover who are of " that Opinion; that They may be ſtrictly looked " unto, and reſtrained from doing that which They " take themſelves obliged to do. That the Covenant " is not dead, as was alledged, but ſtill retains great " Vigour; was ſtill the Idol to which the Preſbyterians " ſacrificed: And that there muſt and would always " be a general Jealouſy of all thoſe who had taken it, " untill They had declared that it did not bind them; " eſpecially of the Clergy, who had ſo often enlarged " in their Pulpits, how abſolutely and indiſpenſably " all Men were obliged to proſecute the End of it, " which is to deſtroy the Church, whatever Danger " it brings the King's Perſon to. And therefore " They of all Men ought to be glad of this Oppor- " tunity, that was offered, to vindicate their Loyalty " and Obedience; and if They were not ready to do " ſo, They were not fit to be truſted with the Charge " and Care of the Souls of the King's Subjects."

The Lords conſent to moſt of the Amendments.

And in Truth there were not any more importunate for the enjoining this Declaration, than many who had taken the Covenant. Many who had never taken it, and had always deteſted it, and paid ſoundly for being known to do ſo, were yet very ſorry that it was inſerted at this Time and in this Place; for They foreſaw it would make Diviſions, and keep up the ſeveral Factions, which would have been much weakened, and in a ſhort Time brought to Nothing, if the Preſbyterians had been ſeparated from the reſt, who did perfectly hate, and were as perfectly hated by all the reſt. But ſince it was brought upon the Stage, and it had been the Subject of ſo much Debate, They believed the Houſe of Lords would not now refuſe to concur with the Commons, without undergoing ſome Reproach and Scandal of not having an ill Opinion enough of the Covenant; of which as They were in no Degree guilty, ſo They thought it to be of miſchievous Conſequence to be ſuſpected to be ſo. And therefore, after They had expunged ſome other Parts of that Subſcription which had been annexed to it, and mended ſome other Expreſſions in other Places, which might rather irritate than compoſe thoſe Humours which already boiled too much, They returned the Bill to the Houſe of Commons; which ſubmitted to all that They had done: And ſo it was preſented to the King, who could not well refuſe his Royal Aſſent, nor did in his own Judgment or Inclination diſlike what was offered to him.

The Commons agree with the Lords.

The King confirms the Bill.

By this Act of Uniformity there was an End put to all the Liberty and Licenſe, which had been practiſed in all Churches from the Time of his Majeſty's Return, and by his Declaration that He had emitted afterwards. The Common Prayer muſt now be conſtantly read in all Churches, and no other Form admitted: And what Clergyman ſoever did not fully conform to whatſoever was contained in that Book, or enjoined by the Act of Uniformity, by or before St. Bartholomew-Day, which was about three Months after the Act was publiſhed; He was ipſo facto deprived of his Benefice, or any other ſpiritual Promotion of which He ſtood poſſeſſed, and the Patron was to preſent another in his Place, as if He were dead: So that it was not in the King's Power to give any Diſpenſation to any Man, that could preſerve him againſt the Penalty in the Act of Uniformity.

This Act was no ſooner publiſhed (for I am willing to continue this Relation to the Execution of it, becauſe there were ſome intervening Accidents that were not underſtood), than all the Preſbyterian Miniſters expreſſed their Diſapprobation of it with all the Paſſion imaginable. They complained " that the King had " violated his Promiſe made to them in his Declara- " tion from Breda," which was urged with great Uningenuity, and without any Shadow of Right; for his Majeſty had thereby referred the whole Settlement of all Things relating to Religion, to the Wiſdom of Parliament; and declared, " in the mean Time that " Nobody ſhould be puniſhed or queſtioned, for con- " tinuing the Exerciſe of his Religion in the Way He " had been accuſtomed to in the late Confuſions." And his Majeſty had continued this Indulgence by his Decla-

Declaration after his Return, and thereby fully complied with his Promiſe from Breda; which He ſhould indeed have violated, if He had now refuſed to concur in the Settlement the Parliament had agreed upon, being in Truth no leſs obliged to concur with the Parliament in the Settlement that the Parliament ſhould propoſe to him, than He was not to cauſe any Man to be puniſhed for not obeying the former Laws, till a new Settlement ſhould be made. But how evident ſoever this Truth is, They would not acknowledge it; but armed their Proſelytes with confident Aſſertions, and unnatural Interpretations of the Words in the King's Declaration, as if the King were bound to grant Liberty of Conſcience, whatever the Parliament ſhould or ſhould not deſire, that is, to leave all Men to live according to their own Humours and Appetites, let what Laws ſoever be made to the contrary. They declared "that They could not with a good "Conſcience either ſubſcribe the one or the other De- "claration: They could not ſay that They did aſſent "~~or~~ conſent in the firſt, nor declare in the ſecond that "there remained no Obligation from the Covenant; "and therefore that They were all reſolved to quit "their Livings, and to depend upon Providence for "their Subſiſtence."

The Act in general well received.

THERE cannot be a better Evidence of the general Affection of the Kingdom, than that this Act of Parliament had ſo concurrent an Approbation of the two Houſes of Parliament, after a Suppreſſion of that Form of Devotion for near twenty Years, and the higheſt Diſcountenance and Oppreſſion of all thoſe who were known to be devoted or affected to it. And from the Time of the King's Return, when it was lawful to uſe it though it was not enjoined, Perſons of all Conditions flocked to thoſe Churches where it was uſed. And it was by very many ſober Men believed, that if the Preſbyterians and the other Factions in Religion had been only permitted to exerciſe their own Ways, without any Countenance from the Court; the Heart of all the Factions againſt the Church would have been broken, before the Parliament did ſo fully declare itſelf.

Reflections on the Behaviour of the Preſbyterian Miniſters.

AND there cannot be a greater Manifeſtation of the Diſtemper and Licenſe of the Time, than the Preſumption of thoſe Preſbyterian Miniſters, in the oppoſing and contradicting an Act of Parliament; when there was ſcarce a Man in that Number, who had not been ſo great a Promoter of the Rebellion, or contributed ſo much to it, that They had no other Title to their Lives but by the King's Mercy; and there were very few amongſt them, who had not come into the Poſſeſſion of the Churches They now held, by the Expulſion of the Orthodox Miniſters who were lawfully poſſeſſed of them, and who being by their Impriſonment, Poverty, and other Kinds of Oppreſſion and Contempt during ſo many Years, departed this Life, the Uſurpers remained undiſturbed in their Livings, and thought it now the higheſt Tyranny to be removed from them, though for offending the Law, and Diſobedience to the Government. That thoſe Men ſhould give themſelves an Act of Oblivion of all their Tranſgreſſions and Wickedneſs, and take upon them again to pretend a Liberty of Conſcience againſt the Government, which They had once overthrown upon their Pretences; was ſuch an Impudence, as could not have fallen into the Hearts even of thoſe Men from the Stock of their own Malice, without ſome great Defect in the Government, and Encouragement or Countenance from the higheſt Powers. The King's too gracious Diſpoſition and Eaſineſs of Acceſs, as hath been ſaid before, had from the Beginning raiſed their Hopes and diſpelled their Fears; whilſt his Majeſty promiſed himſelf a great Harveſt in their Converſion, by his Gentleneſs and Affability. And They inſinuated themſelves by a Profeſſion, "that "it was more the Regard of his Service, than any "Obſtinacy in themſelves, which kept them from "Conformity to what the Law had enjoined; that "They might ſtill preſerve their Credit with their "Pariſhioners, and by Degrees bring them to a perfect "Obedience:" Whereas indeed all the Corruption was in the Clergy; and where a prudent and Orthodox Man was in the Pulpit, the People very willingly heard the Common Prayer.

They have the free Acceſs to the King.

NOR did this Confidence leave them, after the paſſing and publiſhing this Act of Uniformity: But the London Miniſters, who had the Government of thoſe in the Country, prevailed with the General (who without any violent Inclinations of his own was always ready for his Wife's Sake) to bring them to the King, who always received them with too much Clemency, and diſmiſſed them with too much Hope. They lamented "the Sadneſs of their Condition, "which (after having done ſo much Service to his "Majeſty, and been ſo graciouſly promiſed by him "his Protection) muſt now be expoſed to all Miſery "and Famine." They told him "what a vaſt "Number of Churches," (five Times more than was true) "would become void by this Act, which would "not prove for his Service; and that They much "feared, the People would not continue as quiet and "peaceable as They had been under their Over- "ſight." They uſed all the Arguments They thought might work upon him: And He ſeemed to be the more moved, becauſe He knew that it was not in his Power to help them. He told them, "He had great "Compaſſion for them; and was heartily ſorry that "the Parliament had been ſo ſevere towards them "which He would remit, if it were in his Power; "and therefore that They ſhould adviſe with their "Friends, and that if They found that it would be "in his Power to give them any Eaſe, They ſhould "find him inclined to gratify them in whatſoever "They deſired:" Which gracious Expreſſions raiſed their Spirits as high as ever; and They reported to their Friends much more than in Truth the King had ſaid to them (which was no new Artifice with them), and adviſed their Friends in all Parts "to be firm to "their Principles," and aſſured them, "that the Ri- "gour of the Act of Parliament ſhould not be preſſed "againſt them."

IT cannot be denied, that the King was too irreſolute, and apt to be ſhaken in thoſe Counſels which with the greateſt Deliberation He had concluded, by too eaſily permitting or at leaſt not reſtraining any Men who waited upon him, or were preſent with him in his Receſſes, to examine and cenſure what was reſolved; an Infirmity that brought him many Troubles, and expoſed his Miniſters to Ruin: Though in his Nature, Judgment and Inclinations He did deteſt the Preſbyterians; and by the Experience He had of their Faculties, Pride and Inſolence in Scotland, had brought from thence ſuch an Abhorrence of them, that for their Sakes He thought better of any of the other Factions. Nor had He any Kindneſs for any Perſon whom He ſuſpected to adhere to them: For the Lord Lautherdale took all Pains to be thought no Preſbyterian; and pleaſed himſelf better with no Humour, than laughing at that People, and telling ridiculous Stories of their Folly and foul Corruptions. Yet the King, from the Opinion He had of their great Power to do him Good or Harm, which was oftentimes unſkillfully inſinuated to him by Men who He knew were not of their Party, but were really deceived themſelves by a wrong Computation and Eſtimate of their Intereſt, was not willing to be thought an Enemy to them. And there were too many bold Speakers about the Court too often admitted into his Preſence, who being without any Senſe of Religion, thought all rather ought to be permitted, than to undergo any Trouble and Diſturbance on the Behalf of any one.

THE continued Addreſs and Importunity of theſe Miniſters, as St. Bartholomew's Day approached nearer, more diſquieted the King. They enlarged with many Words "on the great Joy that They and all their "Friends

" Friends had received, from the Compaſſion his Ma-
" jeſty ſo graciouſly had expreſſed on their Behalf,
" which They would never forget, or forfeit by any " undutiful Carriage." They confeſſed " that They " found, upon Conference with their Friends who " wiſhed them well, and upon Peruſal of the Act of " Parliament, that it was not in his Majeſty's Power
" to give them ſo much Protection againſt the Penalty
" of the Act of Parliament, as They had hoped, and as " his great Goodneſs was inclined to give them. But " that it would be an unſpeakable Comfort to them,
" if his Majeſty's Grace towards them were ſo mani-
" feſted, that the People might diſcern that this ex" treme Rigour was not grateful to him, but that He " could be well content if it were for ſome Time ſuſ-
" pended; and therefore They were humble Suitors
" to him, that He would by his Letters to the Biſhops,
" or by a Proclamation, or an Act of Council, or any " other Way his Majeſty ſhould think fit, publiſh his " Deſire that the Execution of the Act of Uniformity, as " to all but the Reading of the Liturgy, which They " would conform to, might be ſuſpended for three " Months; and that He would take it well from the " Biſhops or any of the Patrons, who would ſo far " comply with his Deſire, as not to take any Advan" tage of thoſe Clauſes in the Statute, which gave " them Authority to preſent as in a Vacancy. They " doubted not there would be many, who would wil" lingly ſubmit to his Majeſty's Pleaſure: But whatever
" the Effect ſhould be, They would pay the ſame
" humble Acknowledgments to his Majeſty, as if it
" had produced all that They deſired."

WHETHER his Majeſty thought it would do them no Good, and therefore that it was no Matter if He granted it; or that He thought it no Prejudice to the Church, if the Act were ſuſpended for three Months; or that He was willing to redeem himſelf from the preſent Importunity (an Infirmity He was too often guilty of): True it is, He did make them a poſitive Promiſe, " that He would do what They
" deſired;" with which They were abundantly ſatiſ-
" fied, and renewed their Encouragement to their " Friends to perſevere to the End." And this Promiſe was ſolemnly given to them in the Preſence of the General, who was to ſolicit the King's Diſpatch, that his Pleaſure might be known in due Time. It was now the long Vacation, and few of the Council were then in Town, or of the Biſhops, with whom his Majeſty too late thought it neceſſary to confer, that ſuch an Inſtrument might be prepared as was fit for the Affair. Hereupon the King told the Chancellor (who was not thought Friend enough to the Preſbyterians to be ſooner communicated with) all that had paſſed, what the Miniſters had deſired, and what He had promiſed; and bade him " to think of the beſt Way " of doing it."

The King promiſes to ſuſpend the Execution of the Act.

THE Chancellor was one of thoſe, who would have been glad that the Act had not been clogged with many of thoſe Clauſes, which He foreſaw might produce ſome Inconveniences; but when it was paſſed, He thought it abſolutely neceſſary to ſee Obedience paid to it without any Connivance: And therefore, as He had always diſſuaded the King from giving ſo much Countenance to thoſe Applications, which He always knew publiſhed more to be ſaid than in Truth was ever ſpoken, and was the more troubled for this Progreſs They had made with the King; He told his Majeſty, " that it was not in his Power to pre-
" ſerve thoſe Men, who did not ſubmit to do all that " was to be done by the Act, from Deprivation."
He gave many Reaſons which occurred, why " ſuch
" a Declaration as was deſired would prove ineffectual
" to the End for which it was deſired, and what In" conveniences would reſult from attempting it."
His Majeſty alledged many Reaſons for the doing it, which He had received from thoſe who deſired it, and ſeemed ſorry that they were no better; however concluded, " that He had engaged his Word, and " that He would perform what He had promiſed;"
and required him not to oppoſe it. The Chancellor had always been very tender of his Honour; and adviſed him " to be very wary in making any Promiſe,
" but when He had made it, to perform it though to
" his Diſadvantage:" And it was no new Thing to him, to be reproached for oppoſing the reſolving to do ſuch or ſuch a Thing, and then to be reproached again for purſuing the Reſolution.

THE King was at Hampton-Court, and ſent for the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhops of London and of Winchester, to attend him, with the Chief Juſtice Bridgman, and the Attorney General: There were likewiſe the Chancellor, the General, the Duke of Ormond, and the Secretaries. His Majeſty acquainted them with " the Importunities uſed by the London
" Miniſters, and the Reaſons They had offered why
" a further Time ſhould be given to them to conſider
" of what was ſo new to them; and what Anſwer He " had given to them; and how They had renewed
" their Importunity with a Deſire of ſuch a Declara" tion from him as is mentioned before, in which He " thought there was no Inconvenience, and therefore " had promiſed to do it, and called them now to" gether to adviſe of the beſt Way of doing it." The Biſhops were very much troubled, that thoſe Fellows ſhould ſtill preſume to give his Majeſty ſo much Vexation, and that They ſhould have ſuch Acceſs to him. They gave ſuch Arguments againſt the doing what was deſired, as could not be anſwered; and for themſelves, They deſired " to be excuſed for not conniv-
" ing in any Degree at the Breach of the Act of " Parliament, either by not preſenting a Clerk where " themſelves were Patrons, or deferring to give In" ſtitution upon the Preſentation of others: And that " his Majeſty's giving ſuch a Declaration or Recom" mendation would be the greateſt Wound to the " Church, and to the Government thereof, that it " could receive."

He endeavours to fulfil his Promiſe.

THE Chancellor, who did really believe that the King and his Service would ſuffer more by the Breach of his Word and Promiſe, than either could do from doing the Thing deſired, confeſſed " that He believed
" it would do them little Good, which would not be " imputed to his Majeſty, when He had done all He " could do; and that it would be a greater Confor" mity, if the Miniſters generally performed what " They offered to do, in reading all the Service of " the Church, that had been theſe many Years; and " that once having done what was known to be ſo
" contrary to their Inclinations, would be an Engage" ment upon them in a ſhort Time to comply with the
" reſt of their Obligations: And therefore," He ſaid,
" He ſhould not diſſuade his Majeſty from doing
" what He had promiſed;" which indeed He had good Reaſon to think He was reſolved to do, whatever He was adviſed to the contrary. The King demanded the Judgment of the Lawyers, " whether He could " legally diſpenſe with the Obſervation of the Act for " three Months;" who anſwered, " that notwith-
" ſtanding any Thing He could do in their Favour,
" the Patrons might preſent their Clerks as if the In" cumbents were dead, upon their Not-performance
" of what They were enjoined." Upon the whole Matter the King was converted; and with great Bitterneſs againſt that People in general, and againſt the particular Perſons whom He had always received too graciouſly, concluded that He would not do what was deſired, and that the Connivance ſhould not be given to any of them.

But finds it not in his Power.

THE Biſhops departed full of Satisfaction with the King's Reſolution, and as unſatisfied with their Friend the Chancellor's Inclination to gratify that People, not knowing the Engagement that was upon him. And this Jealouſy produced a greater Coldneſs from ſome of them towards him, and a greater Reſentment from him, who thought He had deſerved better from their Function and their Perſons, than was in a long Time,

Time, if ever, perfectly reconciled. Yet He never declined in the leaſt Degree his Zeal for the Government of the Church, or the Intereſt of thoſe Perſons; nor thought They could be blamed for their Severity againſt thoſe Miniſters, who were ſurely the proudeſt Malefactors, and the moſt incapable of being gently treated, of any Men living. For if any of the Biſhops uſed them kindly, and endeavoured to perſuade them to Conformity, They reported "that They had been "careſſed and flattered by the Biſhops, and offered "great Preferments, which They had bravely refuſed "to accept for the Preſervation of a good Con-"ſcience:" And in Reports of this Kind, few of them ever obſerved any Rules of Ingenuity or Sincerity.

The great Diſingenuity of the Preſbyterian Miniſters.

WHEN They ſaw that They were to expect and undergo the worſt, They agreed upon a Method to be obſerved by them in the leaving and parting with their Pulpits: And the laſt Sunday They were to preach, They endeavoured to infuſe Murmur, Jealouſy and Sedition into the Hearts of their ſeveral Auditories; and to prepare them "to expect and bear "with Patience and Courage all the Perſecutions "which were like to follow, now the Light of the "Goſpel was ſo near being extinguiſhed." And all thoſe Sermons They called their Farewel Sermons, and cauſed them to be printed together, with every one of the Preachers Pictures before their Sermons; which in Truth contained all the Vanity and Oſtentation with Reference to themſelves, and all the Inſinuations to Mutiny and Rebellion, that could be warily couched in Words which could not be brought within Penalty of Law, though their Meaning was well underſtood.

They endeavour to raiſe Diſcontents in the People.

WHEN the Time was expired, better Men were put into their Churches, though with much murmuring of ſome of their Pariſhes for a Time, increaſed by their loud Clamour, "that They had been "betrayed by the King's Promiſe that They ſhould "have three Months longer Time," Which drew the like Clamour upon them by thoſe, who had hearkened to their Advice in continuing their Obſtinacy in Confidence of a Diſpenſation; whereas otherwiſe They would have conformed, as very many of their Party did. And many of the other who were cozened by them, and ſo loſt the Livings They had, made all the Haſte They could to make themſelves capable of getting others, by as full Subſcriptions and Conformity as the Act of Uniformity required. And the greateſt of them, after ſome Time, and after They found that the private Bounty and Donatives, which at firſt flowed in upon them in Compaſſion of their Sufferings and to keep up their Courages, every Day begun to ſlacken, and would in the End expire, ſubſcribed to thoſe very Declarations, which They had urged as the greateſt Motives to their Nonconformity. And the Number was very ſmall, and of very weak and inconſiderable Men, that continued refractory, and received no Charge in the Church: Though it may without Breach of Charity be believed, that many who did ſubſcribe had the ſame Malignity to the Church, and to the Government of it; and it may be did more Harm, than if They had continued in their Inconformity.

At length moſt of them conform.

THE long Time ſpent in Both Houſes upon the Act of Uniformity had made the Progreſs of all other publick Buſineſs much the ſlower; or rather, the Multitude of private Bills which depended there (and with which former Parliaments had been very rarely troubled), and the Bitterneſs and Animoſities which aroſe from thence, exceedingly diſquieted and diſcompoſed the Houſe; every Man being ſo much concerned for the Intereſt of his Friends or Allies, that He was more ſolicitous for the Diſpatch of thoſe, than of any which related to the King and the Publick, which He knew would by a general Concurrence be all paſſed before the Seſſion ſhould be made; whereas if the other ſhould be deferred, the Seſſion would quickly follow (which the King by frequent Meſſages deſired to haſten, having received News already of the Queen's having been at Sea many Days), and the Benefit of thoſe Pretences would be loſt, and with greater Difficulty be recovered in a ſucceeding Seſſion. Then as thoſe private Bills were for the particular Benefit and Advantage of ſome Perſons, which engaged all their Friends to be very ſolicitous for their Diſpatch; ſo for the moſt Part they were to the Loſs and Damage of other Perſons, who likewiſe called in Aid of all their Friends to prevent the Houſes conſent: And by this Means ſo many Factions were kindled in Both Houſes, between thoſe who drove on the Intereſt of their own or of their Relations, who mutually looked upon one another as Enemies, and againſt thoſe who for Juſtice and the Dignity of Parliament would have rejected all or moſt of the Addreſſes of that Kind; that in moſt Debates which related to neither, the Cuſtom of Contradiction, and the Averſion to Perſons, very much diſturbed and prolonged all Diſpatch.

Great Animoſities in Parliament about private Bills.

IT cannot be denied, that after a civil War of ſo many Years, proſecuted with that Height of Malice and Revenge, ſo many Houſes plundered and ſo many burned, in which the Evidences of many Eſtates were totally deſtroyed, and as many by the unſkilful Providence of others, who in Order to preſerve them had buried their Writings ſo unwarily under Ground, that they were taken up ſo defaced or rotted, that they could not be pleaded in any Court of Juſtice; many who had followed the King in the War, and ſo made themſelves liable to thoſe Penalties which the Parliament had prepared for them and ſubjected them to, had made many feigned Conveyances, with ſuch Limitations and ſo abſolutely (that no Truſt might be diſcovered by thoſe who had Power to avoid it) that they were indeed too abſolute to be avoided by themſelves, and their Eſtates become ſo much out of their own Diſpoſal, that They could neither apply them to the Payment of their juſt Debts, or to the Proviſion for their Children: I ſay, there were many ſuch Caſes, which could be no other Way provided for but by an Act of Parliament, and to which an Act of Parliament without too much Severity and Rigour could not be denied. And againſt any of thoſe there appeared none or very little Oppoſition to be made.

BUT the Example and Precedent of ſuch drew with them a World of unreaſonable Pretences; and They, who were not in a Condition to receive Relief in any Court of Juſtice, thought They had a Ground to appeal to Parliament. They who had been compelled, for raiſing the Money They were forced to pay for their Delinquency, to ſell Land, and could not ſell it but at a very low Value (for it was one Species of the Oppreſſion of that Time, that when a powerful Man had an Aſpect upon the Land of any Man who was to compound, and ſo in View like to ſell it, no other Man would offer any Money for it, ſo that He was ſure at laſt to have it upon his own Price); now all that monſtrous Power was vaniſhed, They who had made thoſe unthrifty Bargains and Sales, though with all the Formalities of Law, by Fines and Recoveries and the like (which is all the Security that can be given upon a Purchaſe,) eſpecially if the Purchaſer was of an ill Name, came with all imaginable Confidence to the Parliament, to have their Land reſtored to them. Every Man had raiſed an Equity in his own Imagination, that He thought ought to prevail againſt any Deſcent, Teſtament or Act of Law; and that whatever any Man had been brought to do, which common Reaſon would make manifeſt that He would never have done if He could have choſen, was Argument ſufficient of ſuch a Force, and ought to find Relief in Parliament, from the unbounded Equity They were Maſters of and could diſpenſe, whatever Formalities of Law had preceded or accompanied the Tranſaction. And whoever oppoſed thoſe extravagant Notions, which ſometimes deprived Men of the Benefit of the Act of Oblivion, was thought to be without Juſtice, or which to them was worſe, to be without any Kindneſs to the King's Party. And without Queſtion, upon thoſe Motives or others as unreaſonable, many Acts were paſſed of very ill Example, and which many Men were ſcandalized at in the preſent, and Poſterity will more cenſure hereafter, when Infants who were then unborn ſhall find themſelves diſinherited of thoſe Eſtates, which their Anceſtors had carefully provided ſhould deſcend to them; upon which Irregularities the King made Reflection when He made the Seſſion.

The Parliament proceeds with great Duty towards the King.

But notwithſtanding all theſe Incongruities, and the Indiſpoſitions which attended them, They performed all thoſe Reſpects towards the King, which He did or could expect from them; there being ſcarce a Man, who oppoſed the granting any Thing that was propoſed for the Benefit of his Majeſty, or the Greatneſs of the Crown: And though ſome of the Particulars mentioned before did ſometimes intervene, to hinder and defer the preſent Reſolutions and Concluſions in thoſe Counſels, the Reſolutions and Concluſions in a ſhort Time after ſucceeded according to the King's Wiſh. The Militia and many other Regalities were declared and ſettled according to the original Senſe of the Law, and the Authority of the Crown vindicated to the Height it had been at upon the Heads of the greateſt Kings who had ever reigned in the Nation. Monies were raiſed by ſeveral Bills, ſufficient as They conceived to have paid all the Debts the King or the Kingdom owed; for in their Computations They comprehended the Debts that were owing before his Majeſty's Return, and for which the publick Faith had been engaged; And if as much had been paid as They conceived They had given, probably it might have been enough to have diſcharged all thoſe. They ſettled a conſtant Revenue upon the Crown, which according to the Eſtimate They made would amount to the yearly Revenue of twelve hundred thouſand Pounds, a Proportion double to what it was in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, and it may be of any King preceding; and declared "that if it did not amount to that full Value, "They would ſupply it at another Meeting." And though it hath not in Truth amounted to that Sum in his Majeſty's Receipts, the Parliament hath imputed it rather to ill Managery, and letting Farms at too eaſy Rates, than to an Error in their Computation. For the preſent, it was looked upon by the King and by his Miniſters as anſwerable to his Expectation. And ſo, upon Notice of the Queen's being upon the Coaſt, and afterwards of her Arrival at Portſmouth, the King appointed the Houſes to preſent all their Bills to him upon the nineteenth of May for his Royal Aſſent, it being few Days above a Year from the Time of their being firſt convened.

The King's Speech to the Parliament.

When the King came to the Parliament, and They had preſented the great Number of Bills which They had prepared, and after He had given his Royal Aſſent to moſt of them, his Majeſty told them, "that He thought there had been very few Seſſions "of Parliament, in which there had been ſo many "Bills, as He had paſſed that Day; He was con-"fident, never ſo many private Bills, which He "hoped They would not draw into Example. It "was true," He ſaid, "the late ill Times had driven "Men into great Streights, and might have obliged "them to make Conveyances colourably, to avoid "Inconveniences, and yet not afterwards to be avoid-"ed; and Men had gotten Eſtates by new and greater "Frauds than had been heretofore practiſed; and "therefore in this Conjuncture extraordinary Reme-"dies might be neceſſary, which had induced him to "comply with their Advice in paſſing thoſe Bills; "but He prayed them that this ſhould be rarely done "hereafter: That the good old Rules of the Law "are the beſt Security;" and He wiſhed "that Men "might not have too much Cauſe to fear, that the "Settlements which They make of their Eſtates ſhall "be too eaſily unſettled when They are dead by the "Power of Parliament."

He ſaid, "They had too much obliged him, not "only in the Matter of thoſe Bills which concerned "his Revenue, but in the Manner of paſſing them, "with ſo great Affection and Kindneſs, that He knew "not how to thank them enough. He did aſſure "them, and prayed them to aſſure their Friends in "the Country, that He would apply all that They "had given to him, to the utmoſt Improvement of "the Peace and Happineſs of the Kingdom; and "that He would, with the beſt Advice and good "Huſbandry He could, bring his own Expences "within a narrower Compaſs." And He ſaid, "now "He was ſpeaking to them of his own good Huſ-"bandry, He muſt tell them, that would not be "enough; He could not but obſerve, that the whole "Nation ſeemed to him a little corrupted in their "Exceſs of Living. All Men ſpend much more in "their Cloaths, in their Diet, in all their Expences, "than They had uſed to do. He hoped it had only "been the Exceſs of Joy after ſo long Sufferings, "that had tranſported him and them to thoſe other "Exceſſes; but," He deſired them, "that They "might all take Heed that the Continuance of them "did not indeed corrupt their Natures. He did be-"lieve that He had been that Way very faulty him-"ſelf: He promiſed that He would reform, and that "if They would join with him in their ſeveral Ca-"pacities, They would by their Examples do more "Good both in City and Country, than any new "Laws would do." He ſaid many other good Things that pleaſed them, and no Doubt He intended all He ſaid: but the Ways and Expedients towards good Huſbandry were no where purſued.

The Chancellor's Speech.

The Chancellor, by the King's Command, enlarged upon "the general Murmurs upon the Ex-"pence, and that it ſhould ſo much exceed all for-"mer Times." He put them in Mind, "how the "Crown had been uſed ſince thoſe Times, how the "King had found it at his bleſſed Return: That as "ſoon as He came hither, beſides the infinite Sums "that He forgave, He gave more Money to the "People than He had ſince received from them." (He meant I ſuppoſe the Releaſe of all the Rents, Debts and Receipts which were due to him); "that at leaſt "two Parts of three that They had ſince given him "had iſſued for the diſbanding of Armies never raiſed "by him, and for Payment of Fleets never ſent out "by him, and of Debts never incurred by him." He put them in Mind "of the vaſt Diſparity between "the former Times and theſe in which They now "lived, and conſequently of the Diſproportion in the "Expence the Crown was now at, for the Protection "and Benefit of the Subject, to what it formerly un-"derwent. How great a Difference there was in the "preſent Greatneſs and Power of the two Crowns, "and what they had been then poſſeſſed of, was evident "to all Men; and if the Greatneſs and Power of the "Crown of England ſhould not be in ſome Proportion "improved too, it might be liable to Inconveniences "it would not undergo alone. How our Neighbours "and our Rivals, who court one and the ſame Miſtreſs, "Trade and Commerce, with all the World, are ad-"vanced in Shipping, Power, and an immoderate "Deſire to engroſs the whole Traffick of the Uni-"verſe, was notorious enough; and that this unruly "Appetite would not be reſtrained or diſappointed, "nor the Trade of the Nation be ſupported and main-"tained, with the ſame Fleets and Forces which had "been maintained in the happy Times of Queen Eli-"zabeth. He needed not ſpeak of the naval Power "of the Turks, who inſtead of ſculking abroad in "poor

" poor ſingle Ships as They were wont to do, domi-
" neer now on the Ocean in ſtrong Fleets, make naval " Fights, and had brought ſome Chriſtians to a better
" Correſpondence, and another Kind of Commerce " and Traffick with them, than was expected" (for at " that Time the Dutch had made a low and diſho-nourable Peace with the Pirates of Algiers and Tunis):
" Inſomuch as They apprehend no Enemy upon the " Sea, but what They find in the King of England's
" Ships, which had indeed brought no ſmall Damage
" upon them, with no ſmall Charge to the King, but
" a great Reputation to the Nation."

" He did aſſure them, that the Charge the Crown
" was then at, by Sea and Land, for the Peace and " Security and Wealth and Honour of the Nation,
" amounted to no leſs than eight hundred thouſand
" Pounds in the Year; all which did not coſt the " Crown before the late Troubles fourſcore thouſand " Pounds the Year: And therefore that Nobody " could blame them for any Supply They had given,
" or Addition They had made to the Revenue of the " Crown." He told them, " that the new Acquiſi-" tions of Dunkirk, Mardike, Tangier, Jamaica, and " Bombayne, ought to be looked upon as Jewels of an " immenſe Magnitude in the Royal Diadem; and " though they were of preſent Expence, they were " like in a ſhort Time, with God's Bleſſing, to bring
" vaſt Advantages to the Trade, Navigation, Wealth
" and Honour of the King and Kingdom. His Ma-
" jeſty had enough expreſſed his Deſire to live in a " perfect Peace and Amity with all his Neighbours;
" nor was it an ill Ingredient towards the Firmneſs
" and Stability of that Peace and Amity which his " Royal Anceſtors had held with them, that He hath " ſome Advantages in Caſe of a War, which They " were without." The ſame Day the Parliament was prorogued to the eighteenth Day of February following.

The Parliament prorogued.

It was about the End of May, when the Queen came to Hampton-Court. The Earl of Sandwich, after He had reduced thoſe of Algiers and Tunis to good Conditions, went to Tangier, which was to be delivered to him before He was to go to Liſbon for the Reception of the Queen: And delivered to him it was, though by an Accident that might have cauſed it to be delivered into another Hand. There was never the leaſt Doubt, but that the Queen Regent did reſolve religiouſly to perform all the Conditions on the Part of Portugal; and the Government was yet in her Hands. But the King growing towards his Majority, and of a Nature not like to comply long with his Mother's Advice; Factions began likewiſe to grow in that Court. The Delivery of Tangier, and into the Hands of Hereticks, was much murmured at; as like more to irritate the Pope, who did already carry himſelf towards them very unlike a common Father, notwithſtanding the powerful Interpoſition of France, which, upon the Peace lately made between the two Crowns, was already ceaſed: So that They now apprehended, that this new Provocation would give ſome Excuſe to the Court of Rome, to comply more ſeverely with the Importunities from Spain, which likewiſe upon this Occaſion They were ſure would be renewed with all poſſible Inſtance. And though the Queen had lately ſent a Governour to Tangier, whom She therefore made Choice of, as a Man devoted to her, and who would obey her Commands in the Delivery of this Place; yet it is certain, He went thither with a contrary Reſolution.

The Earl of Sandwich takes Poſſeſſion of Tangier.

A Deſign of not giving it up to him.

Very few Days before the Earl of Sandwich came thither, the Governour marched out with all the Horſe and above Half the Foot of the Garriſon into the Country, and fell into an Ambuſh of the Moors, who being much more numerous cut off the whole Party: And ſo the Governour with ſo many of the chief Officers and Soldiers being killed, the Town was left ſo weak, that if the Moors had purſued their Advantage with ſuch Numbers as They might, and did intend within few Days to bring with them, They would have been able to have made little Reſiſtance. And the Earl of Sandwich coming happily thither in that Conjuncture, it was delivered into his Hands, who convoyed the Remainder of the Garriſon into Portugal, where They were like to be ſtoned by the People; and then, having put a good Garriſon of Horſe and Foot which were ſent from England into it, He delivered it up to the Earl of Peterborough, who had a Commiſſion from the King to be Governour thereof; and himſelf with the Fleet ſailed to Liſbon, where He had been long expected, and found his Houſe and Equipage ready, He being then to appear in the Quality of Extraordinary Ambaſſadour to demand the Queen.

He comes to Liſbon in a critical Conjuncture.

His Arrival there happened likewiſe in a very happy Conjuncture; for the Spaniſh Army, ſtronger than it had been before, was upon its March to beſiege a Seaport Town, which lay ſo near Liſbon, that being in the Enemies Hands it would very much have infeſted their whole Trade, and was not ſtrong enough long to have reſiſted ſo powerful an Enemy. But upon the Fame of the Engliſh Fleet's Arrival, the Spaniard gave over that Deſign, and retired: Since as it was impoſſible that They ſhould be able to take that Place, which the Fleet was ſo ready to relieve; ſo They knew not but that the Engliſh might make a Deſcent into their own Quarters, which kept them from engaging before any other Town. But the Alarum the March of that Army had given had ſo much diſturbed Portugal, which never keep their whole Forces on Foot, but draw them together upon ſuch emergent Occaſions; that They were compelled to make Uſe of moſt of that Money, which They ſaid had been laid up and ſhould be kept for the Payment of the Queen's Portion, which was to be tranſported with her into England.

Whereupon, after the Ambaſſadour had been received with all poſſible Demonſtration of Reſpect and publick Joy, and had had his ſolemn Audience from the King and from the Queen Regent and the Queen his Miſtreſs; and ſome Engliſh Gentlemen of Quality, who were ſent by the King, were admitted to thoſe Places of Attendance about the Queen, to which his Majeſty had aſſigned them: The Queen Mother with infinite Apologies told the Ambaſſadour, " that the
" Streights and Poverty of the Kingdom were ſo
" great upon the late Advance of the Spaniſh Army,
" that there could at this preſent be only paid one

The Portugueſe not able to pay the Queen's Portion.

The Earl of Sandwich was much perplexed, nor did eaſily reſolve what He was to do. His Inſtructions were to receive the whole Portion, which He knew the King expected, and which They were not able to pay. He had already received Tangier, and left a ſtrong Garriſon in it, and had neither Authority to reſtore it, nor wherewithal to carry back the Men. And at laſt, after He had uſed all the Means to have the Whole paid, and was ſo fully informed, that He did in Truth believe that They could do no more, He reſolved that He would receive the Queen aboard the Fleet. That which They were ready to deliver for Half the Portion, was not in Money, but to be made up by Jewels, Sugar and other Commodities, which ſhould not be overvalued. The Ambaſſadour was contented to give his Receipt for the ſeveral Species of the Money They would deliver, leaving the Value to be computed in England; but expreſſly refuſed to accept the Jewels, Sugar and Merchandiſes at any Rates or Prices, but was contented to receive them on Board the Ships, and to deliver them in Specie at London to any Perſon who ſhould be appointed by them to receive them, who ſhould be obliged to pay the Money they were valued at, and to make up the whole Sum that ſhould be paid to the King for the Moiety. In Concluſion, all Things were delivered on Board the Ships; and Diego Silvas, a Jew of great Wealth and full Credit at Amſterdam, was ſent with it, and obliged to make even the Account with the King's Miniſters at London, and to pay what ſhould remain due. And a new Obligation was entered into by the Crown of Portugal, for the Payment of the other Moiety within the Space of a Year. And the Queen with all her Court and Retinue were embarked on Board the Fleet; and without any ill Accidents her Majeſty arrived ſafely at Portſmouth: And having reſted only three or four Days there, to recover the Indiſpoſition contracted in ſo long a Voyage at Sea, her Majeſty together with the King came to Hampton-Court at the Time mentioned before, the twenty ninth of May, the King's Birthday, full two Years after his Majeſty's Return and entering London.

The Queen arrives in England.

Endeavours uſed to alienate the King's Affections from the Queen.

However the publick Joy of the Kingdom was very manifeſt upon this Conjunction, yet in a ſhort Time there appeared not that Serenity in the Court that was expected. They who had formerly endeavoured to prevent it, uſed ever after all the ill Arts They could to make it diſagreeable, and to alienate the King's Affection from the Queen to ſuch a Degree, that it might never be in her Power to prevail with him to their Diſadvantage; an Effect They had Reaſon to expect from any notable Intereſt She might gain in his Affections, ſince She could not be uninformed by the Ambaſſadour of the Diſſervice They had formerly endeavoured to do her.

Some Circumſtances that contribute towards a Miſunderſtanding between them.

There was a Lady of Youth and Beauty, with whom the King had lived in great and notorious Familiarity from the Time of his Coming into England, and who, at the Time of the Queen's Coming or a little before, had been delivered of a Son whom the King owned. And as that Amour had been generally taken Notice of, to the leſſening of the good Reputation the King had with the People; ſo it underwent the leſs Reproach from the King's being young, vigorous, and in his full Strength; and upon a full Preſumption that when He ſhould be married, He would contain himſelf within the ſtrict Bounds of Virtue and Conſcience. And that his Majeſty himſelf had that firm Reſolution, there want not many Arguments, as well from the excellent Temper and Juſtice of his own Nature, as from the Profeſſions He had made with ſome Solemnity to Perſons who were believed to have much Credit, and who had not failed to do their Duty, in putting him in Mind "of the in-" finite Obligations He had to God Almighty, and " that He expected another Kind of Return from him, " in the Purity of Mind and Integrity of Life:" Of which his Majeſty was piouſly ſenſible, albeit there were all poſſible Pains taken by that Company which were admitted to his Hours of Pleaſure, to divert and corrupt all thoſe Impreſſions and Principles, which his own Conſcience and reverent Eſteem of Providence did ſuggeſt to him; turning all Diſcourſe and Mention of Religion into Ridicule, as if it were only an Invention of Divines to impoſe upon Men of Parts, and to reſtrain them from the Liberty and Uſe of thoſe Faculties which God and Nature had given them, that They might be ſubject to their Reproofs and Determinations; which Kind of Licenſe was not grateful to the King, and therefore warily and accidentally uſed by thoſe who had pleaſant Wit, and in whoſe Company He took too much Delight.

The Queen had Beauty and Wit enough to make herſelf very agreeable to him; and it is very certain, that at their firſt Meeting and for ſome Time after the King had very good Satisfaction in her, and without Doubt made very good Reſolutions within himſelf, and promiſed himſelf a happy and an innocent Life in her Company, without any ſuch Uxorioufneſs, as might draw the Reputation upon him of being governed by his Wife, of which He had obſerved or been too largely informed of ſome inconvenient Effects in the Fortune of ſome of his neareſt Friends, and had long proteſted againſt ſuch a Reſignation; though They who knew him well, did not think him ſo much ſuperiour to ſuch a Condeſcenſion, but that if the Queen had had that Craft and Addreſs and Dexterity that ſome former Queens had, She might have prevailed as far by Degrees as They had done. But the Truth is, though She was of Years enough to have had more Experience of the World, and of as much Wit as could be wiſhed, and of a Humour very agreeable at ſome Seaſons; yet She had been bred, according to the Mode and Diſcipline of her Country, in a Monaſtery, where She had only ſeen the Women who attended her, and converſed with the Religious who reſided there, and without Doubt in her Inclinations was enough diſpoſed to have been one of that Number. And from this Reſtraint She was called out to be a great Queen, and to a free Converſation in a Court that was to be upon the Matter new formed, and reduced from the Manners of a licentious Age to the old Rules and Limits which had been obſerved in better Times; and to which regular and decent Conformity the preſent Diſpoſition of Men or Women was not enough inclined to ſubmit, nor the King enough diſpoſed to exact.

There was a numerous Family of Men and Women that were ſent from Portugal, the moſt improper to promote that Conformity in the Queen that was neceſſary for her Condition and future Happineſs, that could be choſen: The Women for the moſt Part old and ugly and proud, incapable of any Converſation with Perſons of Quality and a liberal Education. And They deſired and indeed had conſpired ſo far to poſſeſs the Queen themſelves, that She ſhould neither learn the Engliſh Language, nor uſe their Habit, nor depart from the Manners and Faſhions of her own Country in any Particulars; " which Reſolution," They told her, " would be for the Dignity of Portu- " gal, and would quickly induce the Engliſh Ladies " to conform to her Majeſty's Practice:" And this Imagination had made that Impreſſion, that the Taylor who had been ſent into Portugal to make her Cloaths, could never be admitted to ſee her or receive any Employment. Nor when She came to Portſmouth, and found there ſeveral Ladies of Honour and prime Quality to attend her in the Places to which They were aſſigned by the King, did She receive any of them, till the King himſelf came; nor then with any Grace, or the Liberty that belonged to their Places and Offices. She could not be perſuaded to be dreſſed out of the Wardrobe that the King had ſent to her, but would wear the Cloaths which She had brought, until She found that the King was diſpleaſed, and would be obeyed: Whereupon She conformed againſt the Advice of her Women, who continued their Opiniatrety, without any one of them receding from their own Mode, which expoſed them the more to Reproach.

When the Queen came to Hampton-Court, She brought with her a formed Reſolution, that She would never ſuffer the Lady who was ſo much ſpoken of to be in her Preſence: And afterwards to thoſe She would truſt She ſaid, " her Mother had enjoined " her ſo to do." On the other Hand, the King thought that He had ſo well prepared her to give her a civil Reception, that within a Day or two after her Majeſty's being there, himſelf led her into her Chamber, and preſented her to the Queen, who received her with the ſame Grace as She had done the reſt; there being many Lords and other Ladies at the ſame

Time

Time there. But whether her Majeſty in the Inſtant knew who She was, or upon Recollection found it afterwards, She was no ſooner ſate in her Chair, but her Colour changed, and Tears guſhed out of her Eyes, and her Noſe bled, and She fainted; ſo that She was forthwith removed into another Room, and all the Company retired out of that where She was before. And this falling out ſo notoriouſly when ſo many Perſons were preſent, the King looked upon it with wonderful Indignation, and as an Earneſt of Defiance for the Deciſion of the Supremacy and who ſhould govern, upon which Point He was the moſt jealous and the moſt reſolute of any Man; and the Anſwer He received from the Queen, which kept up the Obſtinacy, diſpleaſed him more. Now the Breach of the Conditions grew Matter of Reproach; the Payment of but Half the Portion was objected to the Ambaſſadour, who would have been very glad that the Quarrel had been upon no other Point. He knew not what to ſay or do; the King being offended with him for having ſaid ſo much in Portugal to provoke the Queen, and not inſtructing her enough to make her unconcerned in what had been before her Time, and in which She could not reaſonably be concerned; and the Queen with more Indignation reproaching him with the Character He had given of the King, of his Virtue and good Nature: Whilſt the poor Man, not able to endure the Tempeſt of ſo much Injuſtice from Both, thought it beſt to ſatisfy Both by dying; and from the extreme Affliction of Mind which He underwent, He ſuſtained ſuch a Fever as brought him to the Brink of his Grave, till ſome Grace from Both their Majeſties contributed much to the Recovery of his Spirits.

IN the mean Time the King forbore her Majeſty's Company, and ſought Eaſe and Refreſhment in that jolly Company, to which in the Evenings He grew every Day more indulgent, and in which there were ſome, who deſired rather to inflame than pacify his Diſcontent. And They found an Expedient to vindicate his Royal Juriſdiction, and to make it manifeſt to the World, that He would not be governed; which could never without much Artifice have got Entrance into his Princely Breaſt, which always entertained the moſt tender Affections; nor was ever any Man's Nature more remote from Thoughts of Roughneſs or Hardheartedneſs. They magnified the Temper and Conſtitution of his Grandfather, who indeed to all other Purpoſes was a glorious Example: "That when He was enamoured, and found a Re"turn anſwerable to his Merit, He did not diſſemble
"his Paſſion, nor ſuffered it to be Matter of Reproach
"to the Perſons whom He loved; but made all "others pay them that Reſpect which He thought "them worthy of; brought them to the Court, and "obliged his own Wife the Queen to treat them with "Grace and Favour; gave them the higheſt Titles
"of Honour, to draw Reverence and Application to "them from all the Court and all the Kingdom;
"raiſed the Children He had by them to the Repu"tation, State and Degree of Princes of the Blood,
"and conferred Fortunes and Offices upon them ac"cordingly. That his Majeſty, who inherited the "ſame Paſſions, was without the Gratitude and noble
"Inclination to make Returns proportionable to the "Obligations He received. That He had, by the "Charms of his Perſon and of his Profeſſions, pre"vailed upon the Affections and Heart of a young
"and beautiful Lady of a noble Extraction, whoſe
"Father had loſt his Life in the Service of the Crown.
"That She had provoked the Jealouſy and Rage of "her Huſband to that Degree, that He had ſeparated
"himſelf from her: And now the Queen's Indigna"tion had made the Matter ſo notorious to the World,
"that the diſconſolate Lady had no Place of Retreat
"left, but muſt be made an Object of Infamy and "Contempt to all her Sex, and to the whole "World."

THOSE Diſcourſes, together with a little Book newly printed at Paris, according to the Licenſe of that Nation, of the Amours of Henry IV. which was by them preſented to him, and too concernedly read by him, made that Impreſſion upon his Mind, that He reſolved to raiſe the Quality and Degree of that Lady, who was married to a private Gentleman of a competent Fortune, that had not the Ambition to be a better Man than He was born. And that He might do ſo, He made her Huſband an Earl of Ireland, who knew too well the Conſideration that He paid for it, and abhorred the Brand of ſuch a Nobility, and did not in a long Time aſſume the Title. The Lady thus qualified was now made fit for higher Preferment: And the King reſolved, for the Vindication of her Honour and Innocence, that She ſhould be admitted of the Bedchamber of the Queen, as the only Means to convince the World, that all Aſperſions upon her had been without Ground. The King uſed all the Ways He could, by treating the Queen with all Careſſes, to diſpoſe her to gratify him in this Particular, as a Matter in which his Honour was concerned and engaged; and proteſted unto her, which at that Time He did intend to obſerve, "that He had not
"had the leaſt Familiarity with her ſince her Majeſty's
"Arrival, nor would ever after be guilty of it again,
"but would live always with her Majeſty in all Fide-
"lity for Conſcience Sake." The Queen, who was naturally more tranſported with Choler than her Countenance declared her to be, had not the Temper to entertain him with thoſe Diſcourſes, which the Vivacity of her Wit could very plentifully have ſuggeſted to her; but brake out into a Torrent of Rage, which increaſed the former Prejudice, confirmed the King in the Reſolution He had taken, gave ill People more Credit to mention her diſreſpectfully, and more increaſed his Averſion from her Company, and which was worſe, his Delight in thoſe, who meant that He ſhould neither love his Wife or his Buſineſs, or any Thing but their Converſation.

THESE domeſtic Indiſpoſitions and Diſtempers, and the Impreſſion they made of ſeveral Kinds upon the King's Spirit and his Humour, exceedingly diſcompoſed the Minds of the graveſt and moſt ſerious Men; gave the People generally Occaſion of ſpeaking loudly, and with a Licenſe that the Magiſtrates knew not how to puniſh, for the Publication of the Scandal: And the wiſeſt Men deſpaired of finding Remedies to apply to the Diſſoluteneſs and Debauchery of the Time, which viſibly increaſed. No Man appeared to ſuffer or likely to ſuffer more than the Chancellor, againſt whom though no particular Perſon owned a Malignity, the Congregation of the witty Men for the Evening Converſation were enough united againſt his Intereſt; and thought his Influence upon the King's Actions and Counſels would be too much augmented, if the Queen came to have any Power, who had a very good Opinion of him: And it is very probable, that even that Apprehenſion increaſed the Combination againſt her Majeſty.

THE Lady had Reaſon to hate him mortally, well knowing that there had been an inviolable Friendſhip between her Father and him to his Death, which had been notorious to all Men; and that He was an implacable Enemy to the Power and Intereſt She had with the King, and had uſed all the Endeavours He could to deſtroy it. Yet neither She nor any of the other adventured to ſpeak ill of him to the King, who at that Time would not have borne it; except for Wit's Sake They ſometimes reflected upon ſomewhat He had ſaid, or acted ſome of his Poſtures and Manner of ſpeaking (the Skill in Mimickry being the beſt Faculty in Wit many of them had); which Licenſe They practiſed often towards the King himſelf, and therefore his Majeſty thought it to be more free from Malice. But by theſe Liberties, which at firſt only raiſed Laughter, They by Degrees got the Hardineſs to cenſure both the Perſons, Counſels and Actions, of thoſe who were neareſt his Majeſty's Truſt, with the higheſt Malice and Preſumption; and too often ſuſpended or totally diſappointed ſome Reſolutions, which had been taken upon very mature Deliberation, and which ought to have been purſued. But (as hath been ſaid before) this Preſumption had not yet come to this Length.

The Chancellor endeavours to reconcile their Majeſties.

The King imparted the Trouble and Unquietneſs of his Mind to Nobody with equal Freedom, as He did to the Chancellor: To him He complained of all the Queen's Perverſeneſs and ill Humours, and informed him of all that paſſed between them, and obliged him to confer and adviſe the Queen, who, He knew, looked upon him as a Man devoted to her Service, and that He would ſpeak very confidently to her whatſoever He thought; and therefore gave him Leave to take Notice to her of any Thing He had told him. It was too delicate a Province for ſo plain-dealing a Man as He was to undertake: And yet He knew not how to refuſe it, nor indeed did deſpair totally of being able to do ſome Good, ſince the Queen was not yet more acquainted with any Man than with him, nor ſpake ſo much with any Man as with him; and He believed, that He might hereby have Opportunity to ſpeak ſometimes to the King of ſome Particulars with more Freedom, than otherwiſe He could well do, at leaſt more effectually.

He had never heard before of the Honour the King had done that Lady, nor of the Purpoſe He had to make her of his Wife's Bedchamber. He ſpake with great Boldneſs to him upon Both; and did not believe that the firſt was proceeded in beyond Revocation, becauſe it had not come to the Great Seal, and gave him many Arguments againſt it, which He thought of Weight. But upon the other Point He took more Liberty, and ſpake "of the "Hardheartedneſs and Cruelty in laying ſuch a Com-"mand upon the Queen, which Fleſh and Blood "could not comply with." He put him in Mind of what He heard his Majeſty himſelf ſay, upon the like Exceſs which a neighbour King had lately uſed, in making his Miſtreſs to live in the Court, and in the Preſence of the Queen: That his Majeſty had then ſaid, "that it was ſuch a Piece of Illnature, that He "could never be guilty of; and if ever He ſhould be guilty "of having a Miſtreſs after He had a Wife, which He "hoped He ſhould never be, She ſhould never come where "his Wife was: He would never add that to the Vexation, "of which She would have enough without it." And yet He told him, "that ſuch Friendſhips were not new in "that other Court, nor ſcandalous in that Kingdom; "whereas in this it was ſo unheard of and ſo odious, "that a Woman who proſtituted herſelf to the King "was equally infamous to all Women of Honour, and "muſt expect the ſame Contempt from them, as if "She were common to Mankind: And that no "Enemy He had could adviſe him a more ſure Way "to loſe the Hearts and Affections of the People, of "which He was now ſo abundantly poſſeſſed, than "the indulging to himſelf that Liberty, now it had "pleaſed God to give him a Wife worthy of him. "That the Exceſs He had already uſed in that and "other Ways had loſt him ſome Ground; but that "the Continuance in them would break the Hearts "of all his Friends, and be only grateful to thoſe "who wiſhed the Deſtruction of Monarchy:" And "concluded with "aſking his Pardon for ſpeaking "ſo plainly," and beſought his Majeſty to remember "the wonderful Things which God had done for him, "and for which He expected other Returns than He "had yet received."

The King heard him with Patience enough, yet with thoſe little Interruptions which were natural to him, eſpecially to that Part where He had levelled the Miſtreſſes of Kings and Princes with other lewd Women, at which He expreſſed ſome Indignation, being an Argument often debated before him by thoſe, who would have them looked upon above any other Mens Wives. He did not appear diſpleaſed with the Liberty He had taken, but ſaid, "He knew it pro-"ceeded from the Affection He had for him;" and then proceeded upon the ſeveral Parts of what He had ſaid, more volubly than He uſed to do, as upon Points in which He was converſant, and had heard well debated.

To the firſt, He began with the Story of an Accident that had fallen out the Day before; He ſaid, "the Lady had then told him, that She did hope that "the Chancellor was not ſo much her Enemy, as He was "generally reported to be, for She was ſure He was not "guilty of one Diſcourteſy of which He had been accuſed "to her, and therefore might be as innocent in others; and "then told his Majeſty, that the Day before, the Earl "of Briſtol" (who was never without ſome Reaſon to engage himſelf in ſuch Intrigues, and had been a principal Promoter of all thoſe late Reſolutions) "came "to her, and aſked her whether the Patent was not yet "paſſed; She anſwered, No; He aſked if She knew the "Reaſon, which She ſeeming not to do, He told her that "He came in Confidence to tell her, and that if She did "not quickly curb and overrule ſuch Preſumption, She "would often meet it to her Prejudice; then told her a "long Relation, how the Patent had been carried to the "Chancellor prepared for the Seal, and that He according "to his Cuſtom had ſuperciliouſly ſaid, that He would firſt "ſpeak with the King of it, and that in the mean Time "it ſhould not paſs; and that if She did not make the "King very ſenſible of this his Inſolence, his Majeſty "ſhould never be Judge of his own Bounty. And then "the Lady laughed, and made ſharp Reflections upon "the Principles of the Earl of Briſtol" (who had throughout his Life the rare good Fortune of being exceedingly beloved and exceedingly hated by the ſame Perſons, in the Space of one Month; and now finding that there was a Stop of the Patent, made a very natural Gueſs where it muſt be, and gratified his own Appetite in the Concluſion), "and pulled the "Warrant out of her Pocket, where She ſaid it had "remained ever ſince it was ſigned, and She believed the "Chancellor had never heard of it: She was ſure there "was no Patent prepared, and therefore He could not ſtop "it at the Seal."

The Truth is: Though according to the Cuſtom She had aſſumed the Title as ſoon as She had the Warrant, that the other Pretence might be proſecuted, She made not Haſte to paſs the Patent, leſt her Huſband might ſtop it; and after long Deliberation was not ſo confident of the Chancellor, as to tranſmit it to the Seal that was in his Cuſtody, but, the Honour being Iriſh, ſent it into that Kingdom to paſs the Great Seal there, where She was ſure it could meet no Interruption.

When the King had made this Relation, and added ſome ſharp Remarks upon the Earl of Briſtol, as a Man very particularly known and underſtood by him; He ſaid, "that He had undone this Lady, and ruined "her Reputation, which had been fair and untainted "till her Friendſhip for him; and that He was oblig-"ed in Conſcience and Honour to repair her to the "utmoſt of his Power. That He would always avow "to have a great Friendſhip for her, which He owed "as well to the Memory of her Father as to her own "Perſon; and that He would look upon it as the "higheſt Diſreſpect to him, in any Body who ſhould "treat her otherwiſe than was due to her own Birth, "and the Dignity to which He had raiſed her. That "He liked her Company and Converſation, from "which He would not be reſtrained, becauſe He "knew there was and ſhould be all Innocence in it: "And that his Wife ſhould never have Cauſe to "complain that He brake his Vows to her, if She "would live towards him as a good Wife ought to "do

" do, in rendering herſelf grateful and acceptable to " him, which it was in her Power to do; but if She " would continue uneaſy to him, He could not anſwer " for himſelf, that He ſhould not endeavour to ſeek " Content in other Company. That He had proceed- " ed ſo far in the Buſineſs that concerned the Lady, " and was ſo deeply engaged in it, that She would " not only be expoſed to all imaginable Contempt, if " it ſucceeded not; but his own Honour would ſuffer " ſo much, that He ſhould become ridiculous to the " World, and be thought too in Pupilage under a " Governour; and therefore He would expect and " exact a Conformity from his Wife herein, which " ſhould be the only hard Thing He would ever re- " quire from her, and which She herſelf might make " very eaſy, for the Lady would behave herſelf with " all poſſible Duty and Humility unto her, which if " She ſhould fail to do in the leaſt Degree, She ſhould " never ſee the King's Face again: And that He " would never be engaged to put any other Servant " about her, without firſt conſulting with her, and " receiving her Conſent and Approbation. Upon the " Whole," He ſaid, " He would never recede from " any Part of the Reſolution He had taken and ex- " preſſed to him: And therefore He required him to " uſe all thoſe Arguments to the Queen, which were " neceſſary to induce her to a full Compliance with " what the King deſired."

THE Chancellor addreſſed himſelf to the Queen with as full Liberty and Plainneſs as He had preſumed to uſe to his Majeſty, but could not proceed ſo far at a Time, nor hold ſo long Conferences at once. When He firſt lamented the Miſintelligence He obſerved to be between their Majeſties, and She perceived the King had told him ſome Particulars, She proteſted her own Innocence, but with ſo much Paſſion and ſuch a Torrent of Tears, that there was Nothing left for him to do, but to retire, and tell her, " that He would " wait upon her in a fitter Seaſon, and when She " ſhould be more capable of receiving humble Advice " from her Servants, who wiſhed her well;" and ſo departed.

THE next Day He waited upon her again at the Hour aſſigned by her, and found her much better compoſed than He had left her. She vouchſafed to excuſe the Paſſion She had been in, and confeſſed " She looked upon him as one of the few Friends She " had, and from whom She would moſt willingly at " all Times receive Counſel: But that She hoped He " would not wonder or blame her, if having greater " Misfortunes upon her, and being to ſtruggle with " more Difficulties, than any Woman had ever been " put to of her Condition, She ſometimes gave Vent " to that Paſſion that was ready to break her Heart." He told her, " He was deſirous indeed to ſerve her, of " which He would not make great or many Proteſta- " tions, ſince She could not but believe it, except She " thought him to be a Fool or mad, ſince Nothing " could contribute ſo much to his Happineſs, as an " eminent Sympathy between the King and her in " all Things: And He could not give her a greater " Evidence of his Devotion, than in always ſaying " that to her which was fit for her to hear, though it " did not pleaſe her; and He would obſerve no other " Rule towards her, though it ſhould render him un- " gracious to her."

SHE ſeemed well ſatisfied with what He ſaid, and told him " He ſhould never be more welcome to her, " than when He told her of her Faults:" To which He replied, " that it was the Province He was accuſed " of uſurping with Reference to all his Friends." He told Her, " that He doubted She was little be- " holden to her Education, that had given her no " better Information of the Follies and Iniquities of " Mankind, of which He preſumed the Climate from " whence She came could have given more Inſtances, " than this cold Region would afford;" though at that Time it was indeed very hot. He ſaid, " if " her Majeſty had been fairly dealt with in that " Particular, She could never have thought herſelf " ſo miſerable, and her Condition ſo inſupportable as " She ſeemed to think it to be; the Ground of " which heavy Complaint He could not compre- " hend." Whereupon with ſome bluſhing and Con- fuſion and ſome Tears She ſaid, " She did not think " that She ſhould have found the King engaged in " his Affections to another Lady;" and then was able to ſay no more: Which gave the Chancellor Oppor- tunity to ſay, " that He knew well, that She had been " very little acquainted with or informed of the " World; yet He could not believe that She was ſo " utterly ignorant, as to expect that the King her " Huſband, in the full Strength and Vigour of his " Youth, was of ſo innocent a Conſtitution, as to be " reſerved for her whom He had never ſeen, and to " have had no Acquaintance or Familiarity with the " Sex;" and aſked, " whether She believed, when it " ſhould pleaſe God to ſend a Queen to Portugal, She " ſhould find that Court ſo full of chaſte Affections." Upon which her Majeſty ſmiled, and ſpake pleaſantly enough, but as if She thought it did not concern her Caſe, and as if the King's Affection had not wandered, but remained fixed.

UPON which the Chancellor replied with ſome Warmth, " that He came to her with a Meſſage " from the King, which if She received as She ought " to do and as He hoped She would, She would be " the happieſt Queen in the World. That whatever " Correſpondencies the King had entertained with " any other Ladies, before He ſaw her Majeſty, con- " cerned not her; nor ought She to enquire more " into them or after them, than into what other " Exceſſes He had uſed in his Youth in France, Hol- " land or Germany. That He had Authority to aſſure " her, that all former Appetites were expired, and " that He dedicated himſelf entirely and without " Reſerve to her; and that if She met his Affection " with what Warmth and Spirit and good Humour, " which She well knew how to expreſs, She would " live a Life of the greateſt Delight imaginable. " That her good Fortune, and all the Joy She could " have in this World, was in her own Power, and " that She only ſtrove to drive it from her," She heard all this with apparent Pleaſure, and infinite Expreſſions of her Acknowledgments of the King's Bounty; thanked the Chancellor more than enough, and deſired him " to help in returning her Thanks " to his Majeſty, and in obtaining his Pardon for " any Paſſion or Peeviſhneſs She might have been " guilty of, and in aſſuring him of all future Obedi- " ence and Duty."

UPON this good Temper He approached to the other Part of his Meſſage, " how neceſſary it would " be that her Majeſty ſhould gratify this good Reſo- " lution and Juſtice and Tenderneſs in the King, by " meeting it with a proportionable Submiſſion and Re- " ſignation on her Part to whatſoever his Majeſty " ſhould deſire of her;" and then inſinuated what would be acceptable with Reference to the Lady. But this was no ſooner mentioned, than it raiſed all the Rage and Fury of Yeſterday, with fewer Tears, the Fire appearing in her Eyes, where the Water was. She ſaid, " that the King's inſiſting upon that Parti- " cular could proceed from no other Ground but his " Hatred of her Perſon, and to expoſe her to the " Contempt of the World, who would think her " worthy of ſuch an Affront, if She ſubmitted to it; " which before She would do, She would put herſelf " on Board any little Veſſel, and ſo be tranſported to " Liſbon:" With many other extravagant Expreſſions, which her Paſſion ſuggeſted in Spite of her Under- ſtanding; and which He interrupted with a very ill Countenance, and told her " that She had not the " Diſpoſal of her own Perſon, nor could go out of the

" Houſe

" Houſe where She was without the King's Leave;" and therefore adviſed her " not to ſpeak any more of " Portugal, where there were enough who would wiſh " her to be." He told her, " that He would find " ſome fitter Time to ſpeak with her, and till then " only deſired that She would make Shew of no ſuch " Paſſion to the King; and that whatever She thought " fit to deny that the King propoſed to her, She ſhould " deny in ſuch a Manner, as ſhould look rather like " a Deferring than an utter Refuſal, that his Majeſty " might not be provoked to enter into the ſame Paſ- " ſion, which would be ſuperiour to hers."

The Chancellor made the more Haſte to inform the King of all that had paſſed, that He might prevail with him to ſuſpend for ſome little Time the proſecuting that Argument farther with the Queen. He gave him an Account of all the good and kind Things She had ſaid with Reference to his Majeſty, of the Profeſſions She had made of all Duty and Obedience to him throughout the whole Courſe of her Life; " that her Unwillingneſs to obey him in this one " Particular proceeded only from the great Paſſion " of Love which She had for him, that tranſported " her beyond the Limits of her Reaſon." He confeſſed, " He had not diſcourſed it ſo fully with her " Majeſty as He reſolved to have done, becauſe a " ſudden Paſſion had ſeized upon her, which She muſt " have ſome Time to overrule;" and therefore He entreated his Majeſty " for a Day or two to forbear " preſſing the Queen in that Matter, till He had once " more waited upon her, by which He hoped He " might in ſome Degree diſpoſe her Majeſty to give " him Satisfaction." And though He was in no Degree pleaſed with the Account, yet the other did think, that He would for a little have reſpited the farther Diſcourſe of it.

But the King quickly found other Counſellors, who told him, " that the Thing He contended for " was not of ſo much Importance as the Manner of " obtaining it; that the Contention now was, who " ſhould govern; and if He ſuffered himſelf to be " diſputed with, He muſt reſolve hereafter to do all " Things precariò." And as this Advice was more ſuitable to his preſent Paſſion and Purpoſe, ſo it was embraced greedily and reſolutely. The Fire flamed that Night higher than ever: The King reproached the Queen with Stubbornneſs and Want of Duty, and She him with Tyranny and Want of Affection; He uſed Threats and Menaces, which He never intended to put in Execution, and She talked loudly " how ill She was treated, and that She would return " again to Portugal." He replied, " that She ſhould " do well firſt to know whether her Mother would " receive her: And He would give her a fit Oppor- " tunity to know that, by ſending to their Home " all her Portugueſe Servants; and that He would " forthwith give Order for the Diſcharge of them " all, ſince They behaved themſelves ſo ill, for to " them and their Counſels He imputed all her Per- " verſeneſs."

The Paſſion and Noiſe of the Night reached too many Ears to be a Secret the next Day; and the whole Court was full of that, which ought to have been known to Nobody. And the mutual Carriage and Behaviour between their Majeſties confirmed all that They had heard or could imagine: They ſpake not, hardly looked on one another. Every Body was glad that They were ſo far from the Town (for They were ſtill at Hampton-Court), and that there were ſo few Witneſſes of all that paſſed. The Queen ſate melancholick in her Chamber in Tears, except when She drove them away by a more violent Paſſion in cholerick Diſcourſe: And the King ſought his Divertiſements in that Company that ſaid and did all Things to pleaſe him; and there He ſpent all the Nights, and in the Morning came to the Queen's Chamber, for He never ſlept in any other Place. Nobody knew how to interpoſe, or indeed how to behave themſelves, the Court being far from one Mind; with this Difference, that the young and frolick People of either Sex talked loudly all that They thought the King would like and be pleaſed with, whilſt the other more grave and ſerious People did in their Souls pity the Queen, and thought that She was put to bear more than her Strength could ſuſtain.

The Chancellor came not to the Court in two or three Days; and when He did come thither, He forbore to ſee the Queen, till the King ſent him again to her. His Majeſty informed him at large, and with more than his natural Paſſion, of all that had paſſed; and " of the fooliſh Extravagancy" (as He called it) " of returning to Portugal; and of the poſi- " tive Reſolution He had taken, and the Orders He " had given, for the preſent ſending away all the Por- " tugueſes, to whom He did impute all his Wife's " Frowardneſs." He renewed his former Declaration, " that He would gain his Point, and never depart " from that Reſolution;" yet was content to be blamed by the Chancellor, for having proceeded with ſo much Choler and Precipitation, and ſeemed to think that He had done better, if He had followed his former Advice. But then He added, " that beſides the " Uneaſineſs and Pain within himſelf, the Thing was " more ſpoken of in all Places, and more to his Diſ- " advantage, whilſt it was in this Suſpenſe, than it " would be when it was once executed; which would " put a final End to all Debates, and all would be for- " gotten."

The Chancellor deſired his Majeſty to believe, " that " He would endeavour, by all the Ways he could " deviſe, to perſuade the Queen to ſubmit to his " Pleaſure, becauſe it is his Pleaſure; and that He " would urge ſome Arguments to her, which He " could not himſelf anſwer; and therefore He was " not without Hope that they might prevail. But " He deſired him likewiſe to believe, that He had " much rather ſpend his Pains in endeavouring to " convert his Majeſty from purſuing his Reſolution, " which He did in his Conſcience believe to be un- " juſt, than in perſuading her Majeſty to comply with " it, which yet He would very heartily do." He deſired him " to give him Leave to put him in Mind " of a Diſcourſe his Majeſty had held with him many " Years ago, upon an Occaſion that He had admi- " niſtered by telling him what his Father, the late " King, had ſaid to him: That He had great Reaſon " to acknowledge it due to God's immediate Bleſſing, and in " Truth to his Inſpiration, that He continued firm in his " Religion: For though his Father had always taken Pains " himſelf to inform and inſtruct him, yet He had been ſo " much deceived by others that He put about him when " He was young, a Company of the arranteſt Knaves and " Puritans" (they were his own Words) " that could " be found in the two Kingdoms; whereof He named " two or three, who were Enemies to the Church, " and uſed to deride all Religion. That when He " had related this Diſcourſe accidentally of his late " Majeſty, the King replied, that if it ſhould pleaſe " God ever to give him a Wife and Children, He would " make Choice of ſuch People to be about Both in all " Places of near Truſt, who in their Natures and Man- " ners, and if it were poſſible in their very Humours, " were ſuch as He wiſhed his Wife and Children ſhould " be; for He did believe that moſt young People (and it " may be elder) were upon the Matter formed by thoſe, " whom They ſaw continually and could not but obſerve." The King anſwered with ſome Quickneſs, " that He " remembered the Diſcourſe very well, and ſhould " think of it; but that the Buſineſs which He had " commended to him muſt be done, and without " Delay."

When the Chancellor was admitted to the Queen, He preſumed with all Plainneſs to blame her " for " the illimited Paſſion with which She had treated

" the

" the King, and thereby provoked him to greater " Indignation than She could imagine or in Truth " ſuſtain;" and begged, " that for her own Sake " She would decline and ſuppreſs ſuch Diſtempers, " which could have no other Effect, than in making " the Wound incurable; which it would do, in a " very little Time more, inevitably, and reduce all " her faithful Servants to an Incapacity of ſerving " her." She acknowledged with Tears, " that She " had been in too much Paſſion, and ſaid ſomewhat " She ought not to have ſaid, and for which She " would willingly aſk the King's Pardon upon her " Knees; though his Manner of treating her had " wonderfully ſurpriſed her, and might be ſome Ex- " cuſe for more than ordinary Commotion. That She " prayed to God to give her Patience, and hoped She " ſhould be no more tranſported with the like Paſſion " upon what Provocation ſoever."

THEN He entreated, " that He might find ſome " Effect of that her good Reſolution, in permitting " him to enlarge upon the Argument He was obliged " to diſcourſe to her; and that if He offered any " humble Advice, it ſhould be ſuch as He was moſt " confident would prove for her Benefit, and ſuch as " He would himſelf ſubmit to if He were in her " Condition." He told her, " He came not to " juſtify and defend the Propoſition that had been " made to her concerning the Lady, as a juſt or a " reaſonable Propoſition; He had not diſſembled his " own Opinion as to either, and when He ſhould " now inſiſt upon it again, which He muſt do, He " could not but confeſs that it was a very hard In- " junction, not to be yielded to without ſome Reluc- " tancy:" But He beſought her to tell him, " whe- " ther She thought it in her Power to divert it; or " that it was not in the King's Power to impoſe it " upon her."

SHE anſwered, " She knew it was in her own Power " to conſent or not to conſent to it; and that She " could not deſpair, but that the King's Juſtice and " Goodneſs might divert him from the Proſecution of " a Command ſo unreaſonable in him, and ſo diſho- " nourable to her. She would not diſpute the King's " Power, what it might impoſe, being ſure that She " could not reſcue herſelf from it: But," She ſaid, " Nobody knew better than He, whether the King " was obliged to leave the Choice of her own Servants " to herſelf; and if it were otherwiſe, She had been " deceived."

HE told her, " that She had and would always " enjoy that Privilege: But that it was always under- " ſtood in Conditions of that Nature, that as the " Huſband would not impoſe a Servant, againſt whom " juſt Exceptions could be made; ſo it was preſumed, " that no Wife would refuſe to receive a Servant, that " was eſteemed and commended by her Huſband. " That He did aſſure her, upon as much Knowledge " as He was capable to have in Affairs of ſuch a Na- " ture, that the King would exact an entire Confor- " mity to his Pleaſure in this Particular; and then the " Queſtion would only be, whether it would be better " that She conform herſelf with Alacrity to an Obe- " dience, with thoſe Circumſtances which might be " obliging and meritorious on her Part; or that it " ſhould be done without her Conſent, and with all " the Repugnancy She could expreſs, which could " only be in angry Words and ungracious Circum- " ſtances, which would have a more bitter Operation " in her own Breaſt and Thoughts, than any where " elſe; And therefore He did very importunately " adviſe her to ſubmit to that chearfully, that She " could not reſiſt; which if She ſhould not do, and " do out of Hand, She would too late repent."

To which She replied with great Calmneſs, " that " it may be worſe could not fall out than She ex- " pected; but why She ſhould repent the not giving " her Conſent, She could not apprehend, ſince her " Conſcience would not give her Leave to conſent:" Which when She ſaw him receive with a Face of Trouble and Wonder, which it was his Misfortune and Weakneſs never to be able to conceal or diſſem- ble, She continued her Diſcourſe and ſaid, " She " could not conceive how any Body could, with a " good Conſcience, conſent to what She could not " but ſuppoſe would be an Occaſion and Opportunity " of Sin." To which He ſuddenly replied, " that " He now underſtood her; and that She ought to " have no ſuch Apprehenſion, but to believe the Pro- " feſſions the King made, of the Sincerity whereof " She would hereby become a Witneſs; and if there " ſhould be any Tergiverſation, the Opportunity, " which She fancied, would be more frequent at a " Diſtance than by ſuch a Relation, which Nothing " but a reſolved Innocence could make deſirable by " either Party." To which He added, " that He " thought her Majeſty had too mean and low an Opi- " nion of her Perſon and her Parts, if She thought it " could be in the Power of any other Lady to deprive " her of the Intereſt She had a Right to, if She did all " that became her to retain it; and which in that Caſe " She could not loſe but by the higheſt Fraud and " Perjury, which She could not juſtly entertain the " Suſpicion of."

THERE cannot be a greater Patience and Intentneſs of hearing, than the Queen manifeſted during the Time of his Diſcourſe, ſometimes ſeeming not diſ- pleaſed, but oftener by a Smile declaring that She did not believe what He ſaid: And in Concluſion, in few Words declared, " that the King might do what He " pleaſed, but that She would not conſent to it;" and pronounced it with a Countenance, as if She both hoped and believed, that her Obſtinacy would in the End prevail over the King's Importunity: And it is very probable, that She had Advice given her to that Purpoſe. The Chancellor concluded with telling her, " that He would give her no more Trou- " ble upon this Particular: That He was ſorry He " had not Credit enough to prevail with her Majeſty " in a Point that would have turned ſo much to her " Benefit; and that She would hereafter be ſorry for " her Refuſal." And when He had given the King a faithful Account of all that had paſſed; and " that " He believed them Both to be very much to blame, " and that that Party would be moſt excuſable who " yielded firſt;" He made it his humble Suit, " that " He might be no more conſulted with, nor em- " ployed in an Affair in which He had been ſo unſuc- " ceſsful." His Endeavours prove unſucceſsful.

THE King came ſeldom into the Queen's Company, and when He did He ſpake not to her; but ſpent his Time in other Divertiſements, and in the Company of thoſe who made it their Buſineſs to laugh at all the World, and who were as bold with God Almighty as with any of his Creatures. He perſevered in all his Reſolutions without any Remorſe; directed a Day for all the Portugueſes to be embarked, without aſſigning any conſiderable Thing of Bounty to any of them, or vouchſafing to write any Letter to the King or Queen of Portugal of the Cauſe of the Diſmiſſion of them. And this Rigour prevailed upon the great Heart of the Queen, who had not received any Money to enable her to be liberal to any of thoſe, who had attended her out of their own Country, and promiſed themſelves Places of great Advantage in her Family: And She earneſtly deſired the King, " that She " might retain ſome few of thoſe who were known " to her, and of moſt Uſe, that She might not be " wholly left in the Hands of Strangers;" and em- ployed others to make the ſame Suit to the King on her Behalf. Whereupon the Counteſs of Penalva, who had been bred with her from a Child, and who, by the Infirmity of her Eyes and other Indiſpoſition of Health, ſcarce ſtirred out of her Chamber, was permitted to remain in the Court: And ſome few inferiour Servants in her Kitchen and in the loweſt Offices, beſides thoſe who were neceſſary to her Devotions, were left here. All the reſt were tranſported to Portugal.

The Officers of the Revenue were required to uſe all Strictneſs in the Receipt of that Part of the Portion that was brought over with the Fleet; and not to allow any of thoſe Demands which were made upon Computation of the Value of Money, and other Allowances, upon the Account: And Diego de Silva, who was deſigned in Portugal without any good Reaſon to be the Queen's Treaſurer, and upon that Expectation had undertaken that troubleſome Province to ſee the Money paid in London by what was aſſigned to that Purpoſe, was committed to Priſon for not making Haſte enough in the Payment and in finiſhing the Account; and his Commitment went very near the Queen, as an Affront done to herſelf. The Portugal Ambaſſadour, who was a very honeſt Man, and ſo deſirous to ſerve the King that He had upon the Matter loſt the Queen, was heartbroken; and after a long Sickneſs, which all Men believed would have killed him, as ſoon as He was able to endure the Air, left Hampton-Court, and retired to his own Houſe in the City.

In all this Time the King purſued his Point; the Lady came to the Court, was lodged there, was every Day in the Queen's Preſence, and the King in continual Conference with her; whilſt the Queen ſate untaken Notice of: And if her Majeſty roſe at the Indignity and retired into her Chamber, it may be one or two attended her, but all the Company remained in the Room She left, and too often ſaid thoſe Things aloud which Nobody ought to have whiſpered. The King (who had in the Beginning of this Conflict appeared ſtill with a Countenance of Trouble and Sadneſs, which had been manifeſt to every Body, and no Doubt was really afflicted, and ſometimes wiſhed that He had not proceeded ſo far, until He was again new chafed with the Reproach of being governed, which He received with the moſt ſenſible Indignation, and was commonly provoked with it moſt by thoſe who intended moſt to govern him) had now vanquiſhed or ſuppreſſed all thoſe Tenderneſſes and Reluctancies, and appeared every Day more gay and pleaſant, without any Clouds in his Face, and full of good Humour; ſaving that the cloſe Obſervers thought it more feigned and affected than of a natural Growth. However to the Queen it appeared very real, and made her the more ſenſible, that She alone was left out in all Jollities, and not ſuffered to have any Part of thoſe pleaſant Applications and Careſſes, which She ſaw made almoſt to every Body elſe; an univerſal Mirth in all Company but in hers, and in all Places but in her Chamber; her own Servants ſhewing more Reſpect and more Diligence to the Perſon of the Lady, than towards their own Miſtreſs, who They found could do them leſs Good. The nightly Meeting continued with the ſame or more Licenſe; and the Diſcourſes which paſſed there, of what Argument ſoever, were the Diſcourſe of the whole Court and of the Town the Day following: Whilſt the Queen had the King's Company thoſe few Hours which remained of the preceding Night, and which were too little for Sleep.

All theſe Mortifications were too heavy to be borne: So that at laſt, when it was leaſt expected or ſuſpected, the Queen on a ſudden let herſelf fall firſt to Converſation and then to Familiarity, and even in the ſame Inſtance to a Confidence with the Lady; was merry with her in publick, talked kindly of her, and in private uſed Nobody more friendly. This Exceſs of Condeſcenſion, without any Provocation or Invitation, except by Multiplication of Injuries and Neglect, and after all Friendſhips were renewed, and Indulgence yielded to new Liberty, did the Queen leſs Good than her former Reſoluteneſs had done. Very many looked upon her with much Compaſſion, commended the Greatneſs of her Spirit, deteſted the Barbarity of the Affronts She underwent, and cenſured them as loudly as They durſt; not without aſſuming the Liberty ſometimes of inſinuating to the King himſelf, "how "much his own Honour ſuffered in the Neglect and "Diſreſpect of her own Servants, who ought at leaſt "in publick to manifeſt ſome Duty and Reverence "towards her Majeſty; and how much He loſt in "the general Affections of his Subjects: And that, "beſides the Diſpleaſure of God Almighty, He could "not reaſonably hope for Children by the Queen, "which was the great if not the only Bleſſing of "which He ſtood in Need, whilſt her Heart was ſo "full of Grief, and whilſt She was continually exer-"ciſed with ſuch inſupportable Afflictions." And many, who were not wholly unconverſant with the King, nor Strangers to his Temper and Conſtitution, did believe that He grew weary of the Struggle, and even ready to avoid the Scandal that was ſo notorious, by the Lady's withdrawing from the Verge of the Court and being no longer ſeen there, how firmly ſoever the Friendſhip might be eſtabliſhed. But this ſudden Downfal and total abandoning her own Greatneſs, this low Demeanour and even Application to a Perſon She had juſtly abhorred and worthily contemned, made all Men conclude, that it was a hard Matter to know her, and conſequently to ſerve her. And the King himſelf was ſo far from being reconciled by it, that the Eſteem, which He could not hitherto but retain in his Heart for her, grew now much leſs. He concluded that all her former Averſion expreſſed in thoſe lively Paſſions, which ſeemed not capable of Diſſimulation, was all Fiction, and purely acted to the Life by a Nature crafty, perverſe and inconſtant. He congratulated his own illnatured Perſeverance, by which He had diſcovered how He was to behave himſelf hereafter, and what Remedies He was to apply to all future Indiſpoſitions: Nor had He ever after the ſame Value of her Wit, Judgment and Underſtanding, which He had formerly; and was well enough pleaſed to obſerve, that the Reverence others had for all three was ſomewhat diminiſhed.

The Parliament aſſembled together at the ſame Time in February to which They had been adjourned or prorogued, and continued together till the End of July following. They brought the ſame Affection and Duty with them towards the King, which They had formerly; but were much troubled at what They had heard and what They had obſerved of the Diviſions in Court. They had the ſame Fidelity for the King's Service, but not the ſame Alacrity in it: The Diſpatch was much ſlower in all Matters depending, than it had uſed to be. The Truth is; the Houſe of Commons was upon the Matter not the ſame: Three Years ſitting, for it was very near ſo long ſince They had been firſt aſſembled, had conſumed very many of their Members; and in the Places of thoſe who died, great Pains were taken to have ſome of the King's menial Servants choſen; ſo that there was a very great Number of Men in all Stations in the Court, as well below Stairs as above, who were Members of the Houſe of Commons. And there were very few of them, who did not think themſelves qualified to reform whatſoever was amiſs in Church or State, and to procure whatſoever Supply the King would require. The Parliament meets.

They, who either out of their own Modeſty, or in Regard of their diſtant Relation to his Service, had ſeldom had Acceſs to his Preſence, never had preſumed to ſpeak to him; now by the Privilege of Parliament every Day reſorted to him, and had as much Conference with him as They deſired. They, according to the Comprehenſion They had of Affairs, repreſented their Advice to him for the conducting his Affairs; according to their ſeveral Obſervations repreſented thoſe and thoſe Men as well affected to his his Service, and others, much better than They, who did not pay them ſo much Reſpect, to be ill affected and to want Duty for his Majeſty. They brought thoſe, who appeared to them to be moſt zealous for his Service, becauſe They profeſſed to be ready to do any Thing He pleaſed to preſcribe, to receive his Majeſty's Thanks, and from himſelf his immediate Directions how to behave themſelves in the Houſe; when the Men were capable of no other Inſtruction, than to follow the Example of ſome diſcreet Man in whatſoever He ſhould vote, and behave themſelves accordingly.

To this Time, the King had been content to refer the Conduct of his Affairs in the Parliament to the Chancellor and the Treaſurer; who had every Day Conference with ſome ſelect Perſons of the Houſe of Commons, who had always ſerved the King, and upon that Account had great Intereſt in that Aſſembly, and in Regard of the Experience They had and their good Parts were hearkened to with Reverence. And with thoſe They conſulted in what Method to proceed in diſpoſing the Houſe, ſometimes to propoſe ſometimes to conſent to what ſhould be moſt neceſſary for the Publick; and by them to aſſign Parts to other Men, whom They found diſpoſed and willing to concur in what was to be deſired: And all this without any Noiſe, or bringing many together to deſign, which ever was and ever will be ingrateful to Parliaments, and however it may ſucceed for a little Time, will in the End be attended with Prejudice.

Characters of two leading Men in the Houſe of Commons.

BUT there were two Perſons now introduced to act upon that Stage, who diſdained to receive Orders, or to have any Method preſcribed to them; who took upon them to judge of other Mens Defects, and thought their own Abilities beyond Exception.

Of Sir Henry Bennet.

THE one was Sir Harry Bennet, who had procured himſelf to be ſent Agent or Envoy into Spain, as ſoon as the King came from Bruſſels; being a Man very well known to the King, and for his pleaſant and agreeable Humour acceptable to him: And He remained there at much Eaſe till the King returned to England, having waited upon his Majeſty at Fuentarabia in the Cloſe of the Treaty between the two Crowns, and there appeared by his Dexterity to have gained good Credit in the Court of Spain, and particularly with Don Lewis de Haro; and by that ſhort Negotiation He renewed and confirmed the former good Inclinations of his Maſter to him. He had been obliged always to correſpond with the Chancellor, by whom his Inſtructions had been drawn, and to receive the King's Pleaſure by his Signification; which He had always done, and profeſſed much Reſpect and Submiſſion to him; Though whatever Orders He received, and how poſitive ſoever, in Particulars which highly concerned the King's Honour and Dignity, He obſerved them ſo far and no farther than his own Humour diſpoſed him; and in ſome Caſes flatly diſobeyed what the King enjoined, and did directly the contrary, as in the Caſe of the Jeſuit Peter Talbot; who having carried himſelf with notorious Inſolence towards the King in Flanders, had tranſported himſelf into England, offered his Service to Cromwell, and after his Death was employed by the ruling Powers into Spain, upon his undertaking to procure Orders, by which the King ſhould not be ſuffered longer to reſide in Flanders; of all which his Majeſty having received full Advertiſement, He made Haſte to ſend Orders into Spain to Sir Harry Bennet, "that He ſhould prepare "Don Lewis for his Reception by letting him know, "that though that Jeſuit was his natural Subject, "He had ſo miſbehaved himſelf, that He looked "upon him as a moſt inveterate Enemy and a "Traitor; and therefore his Majeſty deſired, that "He might receive no Countenance there, being as "He well knew ſent by the greateſt Rebels to do him "Prejudice."

THIS was received by Sir Harry Bennet before the Arrival of the Man, who found no Inconvenience by it; and inſtead of making any Complaint concerning him, He writ Word, "that Talbot had more Credit "than He in that Court, that He profeſſed to have "great Devotion for the King; and therefore his Ad-"vice was, that the King would have a better Opi-"nion of him, and employ him in his Service:" And himſelf received him into his full Confidence, and conſulted with no Man ſo much as with him; which made all Men believe that He was a Roman Catholick, who did believe that He had any Religion. But He had made his full Excuſe and Defence for all this at the Interview at Fuentarabia, from whence the King returned with marvellous Satisfaction in his Diſcretion as well as in his Affection. And until, contrary to all his Expectation, He heard of the King's Return into England, all his Thoughts were employed how to make Benefit of the Duke of York's coming into Spain to be Admiral of the Gallies; which He writ to haſten all that might be.

THOUGH He continued his formal Correſpondence with the Chancellor, which He could not decline; yet He held a more ſecret Intelligence with Daniel O Neile of the Bedchamber, with whom He had a long Friendſhip. As ſoon as the King arrived in England, He truſted O Neile to procure any Direction from the King immediately in thoſe Particulars which himſelf adviſed. And ſo He obtained the King's Conſent, for his conſenting to the old League that had been made between England and Spain in the Time of the late King, and which Spain had expreſsly refuſed to renew after the Death of that King (which was ſuddenly proclaimed in Spain, without ever being conſulted in England); and preſently after Leave to return into England without any Letter of Revocation: Both which were procured or rather ſignified by O Neile, without the Privity of the Chancellor or of either of the Secretaries of State; nor did either of them know that He was from Madrid, till They heard He was in Paris, from whence He arrived in London in a very ſhort Time after. So far the Chancellor was from that powerful Intereſt or Influence, when his Credit was at higheſt.

BUT He was very well received by the King, in whoſe Affections He had a very good Place: And ſhortly after his Arrival, though not ſo ſoon as He thought his high Merit deſerved, his Majeſty conferred the only Place then void (and that had been long promiſed to a noble Perſon, who had behaved himſelf very well towards his Majeſty and his bleſſed Father) upon him, which was the Office of Privy Purſe; received him into great Familiarity, and into the nightly Meeting, in which He filled a principal Place to all Intents and Purpoſes. The King very much deſired to have him elected a Member in the Houſe of Commons, and commanded the Chancellor to uſe his Credit to obtain it upon the firſt Opportunity: And in Obedience to that Command, He did procure him to be choſen about the Time we are now ſpeaking of, when the Parliament aſſembled in February.

Of Mr. William Coventry.

THE other Perſon was Mr. William Coventry, the youngeſt Son to a very wiſe Father, the Lord Coventry, who had been Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England for many Years with an univerſal Reputation. This Gentleman was young whilſt the War continued: Yet He had put himſelf before the End of it into the Army, and had the Command of a Foot Company, and ſhortly after travelled into France; where He remained whilſt there was any Hope of getting another Army for the King, or that either of the other Crowns would engage in his Quarrel. But when all Thoughts of that were deſperate, He returned into England: Where He remained for many Years without the leaſt Correſpondence with any of his Friends beyond the Seas, and with ſo little Reputation of caring much for the King's Reſtoration, that ſome of his own Family, who were moſt zealous for his his Majeſty's Service, and had always ſome ſignal Part in any reaſonable Deſign, took Care of Nothing more, than that Nothing They did ſhould come to his Knowledge; and gave the ſame Advice to thoſe about the King, with whom They correſponded, to uſe the ſame Caution. Not that any Body ſuſpected his being inclined to the Rebels, or to do any Act of Treachery; but that the Pride and Cenſoriouſneſs of his Nature made him unconverſable, and his Deſpair that any Thing could be effectually done made him incompetent to conſult the Ways of doing it. Nor had He any Converſation with any of the King's Party, nor They with him, till the King was proclaimed in London; and then He came over with the reſt to offer his Service to his Majeſty at the Hague, and had the good Fortune to find the Duke of York without a Secretary. For though He had a Walloon that was, in Reſpect of the Languages of which He was Maſter, fit for that Function in the Army, and had diſcharged it very well for ſome Years; yet for the Province the Duke was now to govern, having the Office of High Admiral of England, He was without any fit Perſon to diſcharge the Office of Secretary with any tolerable Sufficiency: So that Mr. Coventry no ſooner offered his Service to the Duke, but He was received into that Employment, very honourable under ſuch a Maſter, and in itſelf of the greateſt Profit next the Secretaries of State, if they in that Reſpect be to be preferred.

He had been well known to the King and Duke in France, and had a Brother whom the King loved well and had promiſed to take into his Bedchamber, as He ſhortly after did, Harry Coventry, who was beloved by every Body, which made them glad of the Preferment of the other; whilſt They who knew the worſt of him, yet knew him able to diſcharge that Office, and ſo contributed to the Duke's receiving him. He was a ſullen, illnatured, proud Man, whoſe Ambition had no Limits, nor could be contained within any. His Parts were very good, if He had not thought them better than any other Man's; and He had Diligence and Induſtry, which Men of good Parts are too often without, which made him quickly to have at leaſt Credit and Power enough with the Duke; and He was without thoſe Vices which were too much in Requeſt, and which make Men moſt unfit for Buſineſs and the Truſt that cannot be ſeparated from it.

He had ſate a Member in the Houſe of Commons, from the Beginning of the Parliament, with very much Reputation of an able Man. He ſpake pertinently, and was always very acceptable and well heard; and was one of thoſe with whom They, who were truſted by the King in conducting his Affairs in the lower Houſe, conſulted very frequently; but not ſo much, nor relied equally upon his Advice, as upon ſome few others who had much more Experience, which He thought was of Uſe only to ignorant and dull Men, and that Men of Sagacity could ſee and determine at a little Light, and ought rather to perſuade and engage Men to do that which They judged fit, than conſider what themſelves were inclined to do: And ſo did not think himſelf to be enough valued and relied upon, and only to be made Uſe of to the celebrating the Deſigns and Contrivance of other Men, without being ſignal in the Managery, which He aſpired to be. Nor did any Man envy him the Province, if He could indeed have governed it, and that others who had more uſeful Talents would have been ruled by him. However being a Man who naturally loved Faction and Contradiction, He often made Experiments how far He could prevail in the Houſe, by declining the Method that was preſcribed, and propoſing ſomewhat to the Houſe that was either beſide or contrary to it, and which the others would not oppoſe, believing, in Regard of his Relation, that He had received newer Directions; And then if it ſucceeded well (as ſometimes it did), He had Argument enough to cenſure and inveigh againſt the Chancellor, for having taken ſo ill Meaſures of the Temper and Affections of the Houſe; for He did not diſſemble in his private Converſation (though his outward Carriage was very fair) that He had no Kindneſs for him, which in Gratitude He ought to have had; nor had He any Thing to complain of from him, but that He wiſhed well and did all He could to defend and ſupport a very worthy Perſon, who had deſerved very well from the King, againſt whom He manifeſted a great and cauſeleſs Animoſity, and deſired to oppreſs for his own Profit, of which He had an immoderate Appetite.

When thoſe two Perſons, Sir Harry Bennet and Mr. Coventry, (between whom there had been as great a League of Friendſhip, as can be between two very proud Men equally illnatured) came now to ſit together in the Houſe of Commons; though the former of them knew no more of the Conſtitution and Laws of England than He did of China, nor had in Truth a Care or Tenderneſs for Church or State, but believed France was the beſt Pattern in the World; They thought They ſhould have the greateſt Wrong imaginable, if They did not entirely govern it, and if the King took his Meaſures of what ſhould be done there from any Body but themſelves. They made Friendſhips with ſome young Men, who ſpake confidently and often, and upon ſome Occaſions ſeemed to have Credit in the Houſe. And upon a little Converſation with thoſe Men, who being Country Gentlemen of ordinary Condition and mean Fortunes, were deſirous to have Intereſt in ſuch a Perſon as Sir Harry Bennet, who was believed to have great Credit with the King; He believed He underſtood the Houſe and what was to be done there, as well as any Man in England.

He recommended thoſe Men to the King "as "Perſons of ſublime Parts, worthy of his Majeſty's "careſſing: That He would undertake to fix them "to his Service; and when they were his own, He "might carry what He would in the Houſe of Com-"mons." The Men had Parts indeed and good Affections, and often had reſorted to the Chancellor, received Advice from him, and thought themſelves beholden to him; being at that Time entirely governed by Sir Hugh Pollard, who was himſelf ſtill adviſed by the Chancellor (with whom He had a long and faſt Friendſhip) how He ſhould direct his Friends, having indeed a greater Party in the Houſe of Commons willing to be diſpoſed of by him, than any Man that ever ſate there in my Time. But now theſe Gentlemen had got a better Patron; the new Courtier had raiſed their Value, and talked in another Dialect to them, of Recompenſes and Rewards, than They had heard formerly. He carried them to the King, and told his Majeſty in their own Hearing, "what Men "of Parts They were, what Services They had done "for him, and how much greater They could do:" And his Majeſty received and conferred with them very graciouſly, and diſmiſſed them with Promiſes which made them rich already.

The two Friends before mentioned agreed ſo well between themſelves, that whether They ſpake together or apart to the King, They ſaid always the ſame Things, gave the ſame Information, and took Care that Both their Maſters might have the ſame Opinions and Judgments. They magnified the Affections of the Houſe of Commons, "which were ſo great and "united, that They would do whatſoever his Majeſty "would require. That there were many worthy and "able Men, of whoſe Wiſdom the Houſe was ſo well "perſuaded, that They commonly conſented to what-"ſoever They propoſed: And that theſe Men com-"plained, that They had no Directions given to them "which Way They might beſt ſerve the King; They knew "not what He deſired, which when They ſhould do, it

"would

" would quickly appear how much They were at the King's " Diſpoſal, and all Things which now depended long would " be hereafter diſpatched in Half the Time."

THE King wondered very much, " that his Friends " in the Houſe were no better informed, of which " He had never heard any Complaint before, and " wiſhed them to ſpeak with the Chancellor:" For neither of thoſe Men were yet arrived at the Confidence to inſinuate in the leaſt Degree any Ill-Will or Prejudice to him, though They were not united in any one Thing more than the Deſire of his Ruin, and the Reſolution to compaſs it by all the ill Arts and Devices They could uſe; but till it ſhould be more ſeaſonable, They diſſembled to Both their Maſters to have a high Eſteem of him, having not yet Credit enough with either to do him Harm. They ſaid, " They " would very willingly repair to him, and be directed " by him: But They deſired that his Majeſty himſelf " would firſt ſpeak to him (becauſe it would not ſo " well become them) to call thoſe Perſons, whom " They had recommended to him, to meet together " with the reſt with whom He uſed to adviſe; which " the Perſons They named They were ſure would be " very glad of, having all of them a great Eſteem of " the Chancellor, and being well known to him," as indeed They were, and moſt of them obliged by him.

THE King willingly undertook it: And being ſhortly after attended by the Chancellor, his Majeſty told him all that the other two had ſaid to him, and did not forget to let him know the great Good-Will They had Both profeſſed towards him. He aſked him " what He thought of ſuch and ſuch Men," and particularly named Mr. Clifford and Mr. Churchill, and ſome other Men of better Quality and much more Intereſt, " who," He ſaid, " took it ill that They " were not particularly informed what the King de- " ſired, and which Way They might beſt ſerve him;" and bade him, " that at the next Meeting of the reſt, " theſe Men might likewiſe have Notice to be pre- " ſent, together with Sir Harry Bennet and Mr. Wil- " liam Coventry;" for Harry Coventry (who was a much wiſer Man than his Brother, and had a much better Reputation with wiſe Men) was conſtantly in thoſe Councils.

THE Chancellor told him, " that great and noto- " rious Meetings and Cabals in Parliament had been " always odious in Parliament: And though they " might produce ſome Succeſs in one or two Par- " ticulars till they were diſcovered, they had always " ended unluckily; until they were introduced in the " late ill Times by ſo great a Combination, that they " could not receive any Diſcountenance. Yet that " They, who compaſſed all their wicked Deſigns by " thoſe Cabals, were ſo jealous that They might be " overmatched by the like Practices, that when They " diſcovered any three or four of thoſe, who were " uſed to concur with them, to have any private " Meetings, They accuſed them to conſpire againſt " the Parliament. That when his Majeſty returned, " and all the World was full of Joy and Delight to " ſerve him, and Perſons were willing and importu- " nate to receive Direction how They might do it in " that Convention; Care had been taken without any " Noiſe, or bringing any Prejudice upon thoſe who " were willing to be Inſtruments towards the pro- " curing what was deſirable, and to prevent what " would be ingrateful, that little Notice might be " taken of them, which had good Succeſs."

" THAT ſince this Parliament the Lord Treaſurer " and He had, by his Majeſty's Direction, made " Choice of ſome Perſons eminent for their Affection " to the Crown, of great Experience and known Abi- " lities, to confer with for the better preparing and " conducting what was to be done in the Houſe of " Commons: But the Number of them was not ſo " great as to give any Umbrage. Nor did They " meet oftner together with them, than upon Acci- " dents and Contingencies was abſolutely neceſſary; " but appointed thoſe few who had a mutual Confi- " dence in each other, and every one of which had an " Influence upon others and adviſed them what to do, " to meet by themſelves, either at the Lord Bridg- " man's or Mr. Attorney's Chambers, who ſtill gave " Notice to the other two of what was neceſſary, " and received Advice. That there were very few of " any notable Conſideration, who did not frequently " repair to Both of them, either to dine with them or " to perform ſome Office of Civility; with every " one of whom They conferred, and ſaid what was " neceſſary to inform them what was fit for them " to do."

" THAT two of thoſe who were named by his " Majeſty, Mr. Clifford and Mr. Churchill, were honeſt " Gentlemen, and received the Advice They were to " follow from Sir Hugh Pollard, who had in Truth a " very particular Influence upon all the Corniſh and " Devonſhire Men. And that his Majeſty might know " that He had not been well informed, that the others " named by him took it unkindly that They did not know " his Pleaſure, who were leading Men, as indeed They " were; He aſſured his Majeſty that there was not " one of thoſe, who was not particularly conſulted " with, and advertiſed by ſome Perſon who was " choſen by every one of them for that Purpoſe; and " that They would by no Means reſort to any Meet- " ing, fearing to undergo the odious Name of Under- " takers, which in all Parliaments hath been a Brand; " But as They had never oppoſed any Thing that re- " lated to his Service, ſo upon any private Inſinuation " They had been ready to propoſe any Thing which " would not have been ſo acceptable from any, who " had been known to have Relation tohis Service, or " to depend upon thoſe who had."

HE beſought his Majeſty to conſider, " whether " any Thing had hitherto, in near three Years, fallen " out amiſs or ſhort of what He had expected, in the " wary Adminiſtration that had been in that Affair;" and did not conceal his own Fears, " that putting it " into a more open and wider Channel, his Majeſty's " own too publick ſpeaking with the Members of " Parliament, and believing what every Man who was " preſent told him paſſed in Debates, and who for " Want of Comprehenſion as well as Memory com- " mitted many Miſtakes in their Relations, would be " attended with ſome Inconveniencies not eaſy to be " remedied." The King was not diſſatisfied with the Diſcourſe, but ſeemed to approve it: However He would have Sir Harry Bennet, Mr. Clifford and Churchill, called to the next Meeting; and becauſe They were to be introduced into Company They had not uſed to converſe with, that it ſhould be at the Chancellor's Chamber, who ſhould let the reſt know the good Opinion his Majeſty had of thoſe who were added to the Number.

An Alteration in the Management of the Houſe of Commons.

BY this Means and with theſe Circumſtances this Alteration was made in the Conduct of the King's Service in the Parliament; upon which many other Alterations followed by Degrees, though not at once. Yet preſently it appeared, that this Introduction of new Confidents was not acceptable to thoſe, who thought They had very well diſcharged their Truſt. Sir Harry Bennet was utterly unknown to them, a Man unverſed in any Buſineſs, who never had nor ever was like to ſpeak in the Houſe, except in his Fur who ſate next him to the Diſadvantage of ſome who had ſpoken, and had not the Faculties to get himſelf beloved, and was thought by all Men to be a Roman Catholick, for which They had not any other Reaſon but from his Indifference in all Things which concerned the Church.

WHEN They met firſt at the Chancellor's Chamber, as the King had directed, They conferred freely together with little Difference of Opinion; Though it appeared that They, who had uſed to be together before, did not uſe the ſame Freedom as formerly in delivering their particular Judgments, not having Confidence enough in the new Comers, who in their private Meetings afterwards took more upon them, rather to direct than to adviſe; ſo that the other grew unſatisfied in their Converſation. And though the Meetings continued at one of the Places before mentioned, ſome always diſcontinued their Attendance; ſo that by Degrees there were leſs Reſolutions taken than had been formerly: Nor was there ſo chearful a Concurrence, or ſo ſpeedy a Diſpatch of the Buſineſs depending in the Houſe, as had been.

However, there appeared Nothing of Diſunion in the Parliament, but the ſame Zeal and Concurrence in all Things which related to the King. The Murmurs and Diſcontents were moſt in the Country, where the People began to talk with more Licenſe and leſs Reverence of the Court and of the King himſelf, and to reproach the Parliament for their raiſing ſo much Money, and increaſing of the Impoſitions upon the Kingdom, without having done any Thing for the Redreſs of any Grievance that lay upon the People. The Licenſe with Reference to Religion grew every Day greater, the Conventicles more frequent and more inſolent, which diſturbed the Country exceedingly; but not ſo much as the Liberty the Papiſts aſſumed, who behaved themſelves with Indiſcretion, and bragged as if They had a Toleration and cared not what the Magiſtrates could do. The Parliament had a Deſire to have provided againſt thoſe Evils with the ſame Rigour: But though there would have been a general Conſent in any Proviſion that could be made againſt the Fanaticks and the Conventicles, yet there would not be the like Concurrence againſt the Papiſts; and it was not poſſible to carry on the one without the other. And therefore the Court, that They might be ſure to prevent the laſt, interrupted all that was propoſed againſt the former, which They wiſhed provided againſt, and choſe to have neither out of Fear of Both; which increaſed the Diſorders in the Country, and cauſed more Reflections upon the Court: So that this Seſſion of Parliament produced leſs of Moment than any other.

And the King, after They had given him four Subſidies, which was all the Money They could be drawn to give, that He might part as kindly with them as He uſed to do, and upon Diſcovery of ſeveral ſeditious Meetings amongſt the Officers of the diſbanded Army, which He could beſt ſuppreſs when He had moſt Leiſure, He reſolved to prorogue the Parliament. And ſo ſending for them upon the 27th of July, He thanked them for the Preſent which They had made to him of the four Subſidies, "which," He told them, "He would not have received from "them, if it were not abſolutely neceſſary for their "Peace and Quiet as well as his: And that it would "yet do him very little Good, if He did not improve "it by very good Huſbandry of his own; and by re-"trenching thoſe very Expences, which in many Re-"ſpects might be thought neceſſary enough. But "They ſhould ſee that He would much rather impoſe "upon himſelf, than upon his Subjects; and that if "all Men would follow his Example in retrenching "their Expences (which poſſibly They might do "with much more Convenience than He could do "his) the Kingdom would in a ſhort Time gain "what They had given him that Day." He told them, "He was very glad that They were going "into their ſeveral Countries, where their Preſence "would do much Good: And He hoped their Vigi-"lance and Authority would prevent thoſe Diſtur-"bances, which the reſtleſs Spirits of ill and un-"quiet Men would be always contriving, and of "which his Majeſty did aſſure them They promiſed "themſelves ſome Effects that Summer. And that "there had been more Pains and unuſual Ways taken "to kindle the old fatal Fears and Jealouſies, than "He thought He ſhould ever have lived to have ſeen, "at leaſt to have ſeen ſo countenanced."

The King's Speech at the Prorogation of the Parliament.

He told them, "that He had expected to have "had ſome Bills preſented to him againſt the ſeveral "Diſtempers in Religion, againſt ſeditious Conven-"ticles, and againſt the Growth of Popery: But "that it might be They had been in ſome Fear of "reconciling thoſe Contradictions in Religion into "ſome Conſpiracy againſt the publick Peace, to "which himſelf doubted Men of the moſt contrary "Motives in Conſcience were inclinable enough. He "did promiſe them that He would lay that Buſineſs "to Heart, and the Miſchiefs which might flow from "thoſe Licenſes; and if He lived to meet with them "again, as He hoped He ſhould, He would himſelf "take Care to preſent two Bills to them to that End. "And that, as He had already given it in Charge to "the Judges, in their ſeveral Circuits, to uſe their "utmoſt Endeavours to prevent and puniſh the ſcan-"dalous and ſeditious Meetings of Sectaries, and to "convict the Papiſts; ſo He would be as watchful, "and take all the Pains He could, that neither the "one or the other ſhould diſturb the Peace of the "Kingdom." And adding many gracious Expreſſions of his Eſteem and Confidence in their Affections, He cauſed them to be prorogued towards the End of March, which would be the Beginning of the Year 1664.

The King intends to prepare two Bills againſt the Papiſts and Sectaries.

The King had an Intention at that Time to have prepared againſt the next Meeting two ſuch Bills as He mentioned to them, and was well enough content that the Parliament had not preſented ſuch to him, which He well foreſaw would not have been ſuch as He ſhould have been pleaſed with. He would have liked the moſt rigorous Acts againſt all the other Factions in Religion, but did not think the Papiſts had deſerved the ſame Severities, which would have been provided againſt them with the other, it being very apparent, that the Kingdom generally had reſumed their old Jealouſies of them, provoked by the very unwary Behaviour of that People, who bragged of more Credit in the Court than They could juſtify, though moſt Men thought They had too much: And that was the Reaſon that He had commanded the Chancellor to require the Judges, who were then beginning their Circuits, to cauſe the Roman Catholicks to be convicted, which He believed would allay much of the Jealouſies in the Country, as for the preſent it did. And then He reſolved to cauſe two ſuch Bills to be prepared for ſeveral Reaſons, of which the principal was, that He might divide them into two Bills; preſuming that when He had ſent one againſt either, They would not affect reducing Both into one, which was that which the Catholick Party moſt apprehended.

Imprudent Behaviour of the Papiſts.

His Majeſty was himſelf very unſatisfied with the imprudent Carriage of the Catholicks, and thought They did affect too much to appear as if they ſtood upon the Level with all other Subjects: And He received very particular and unqueſtionable Information, that ſome Prieſts had made it an Argument to ſome whom They endeavoured to make their Proſelytes, "that the King was of their Religion in "his Heart, and would ſhortly declare it to all the "World;" with which his Majeſty was marvellouſly offended, and did heartily deſire that any of thoſe indiſcreet Perſons might be proceeded againſt with Severity. Yet He had no Mind that any Man ſhould be put to Death, which could hardly be avoided if any Man ſhould be brought to Trial in the Caſe aforeſaid, except He had granted his Pardon, which with theſe Circumſtances would have carried Scandal in it. Beſides He did think the wiſeſt of that Party had not carried themſelves with Modeſty enough, with what was good for themſelves and for his Majeſty's Honour. And therefore He had, without imparting it to any Friends of theirs, given that Direction to the Judges for convicting them, as the beſt Means to reclaim them to a better Temper: And He had a Purpoſe, that the Bill He meant ſhould be prepared ſhould more effectually perform that Part, without expoſing them to any notable Inconveniences in their Perſons or their Fortunes, if They behaved themſelves well and warily.

to

The King deſigns to have the Papiſts convicted.

HE did believe, that it was neceſſary for his Service that They ſhould be all convicted, that it might be evident to himſelf what their Numbers conſiſted of and amounted to, which He believed would be found much inferiour to what they were generally computed, and then the Danger from their Power would not be thought ſo formidable: And it could be no Prejudice to them without a further Proceeding upon their Conviction, which He was reſolved to reſtrain, as He well might, and had done hitherto, reſolving within himſelf, that no Man ſhould ſuffer under thoſe penal Laws which had been made againſt them in the Age before, if They lived like good Subjects, and adminiſtered no Occaſion of Scandal. And as He was not reſerved in declaring that his gracious Purpoſe towards them (as hath been ſaid before); ſo hitherto it had not been attended by any Murmurs: And yet He was not without a Purpoſe of keeping ſuch a Power over them, as might make them wholly depend upon him.

HIS Majeſty did in his Judgment and Inclination put a great Difference between thoſe Roman Catholicks, who being of antient Extraction had continued of the ſame Religion from Father to Son, without having ever been Proteſtant, amongſt whom there were very few who had not behaved themſelves very worthily; and thoſe, who ſince the late Troubles had apoſtatized from the Church of England to that of the Roman, without any ſuch Evidence of Conſcience, as might not adminiſter juſt Reaſon to ſuſpect, that their Inducements had been from worldly Temptations. And He did reſolve in his Bill to make a Diſtinction between thoſe Claſſes, and to prevent or at leaſt to diſcourage thoſe Lapſes which fell out too frequently in the Court; nor did Men believe that They need make any Apology for it, but appeared the more confidently in all Places. He did reſolve likewiſe to contract and leſſen the Number of the Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, who upon Miſſions reſorted hither as to an Infidel Nation (which was and is a Grievance that the Catholicks would be glad to be eaſed in), and to reduce them into ſuch an Order and Method by this Bill, that He might himſelf know the Names of all Prieſts remaining in the Kingdom, and their ſeveral Stations where They reſided; which muſt have produced ſuch a Security to thoſe who ſtayed, and to thoſe with whom They ſtayed, as would have ſet them free from any Apprehenſion of any Penalties impoſed by preceding Parliaments.

Meaſures taken to fruſtrate his Deſign.

BUT this Deſign (which comprehended many other Particulars) vaniſhed as ſoon as it was diſcovered. The King's own Diſcourſe of a Bill that He would cauſe to be drawn againſt the Roman Catholicks awakened great Jealouſies; nor did They want Inſtruments or Opportunities to diſcover what the Meaning of it could be. Nor was the King reſerved in the Argument, but communicated it with thoſe who He knew were well affected to that Party, and to one or two of themſelves who were reputed to be moderate Men, and to deſire Nothing but the Exerciſe of their Religion with the greateſt Secrecy and Caution, and who often informed him and complained "of the Folly "and Vanity of ſome of their Friends, and more par-"ticularly of the Preſumption of the Jeſuits." And ſuch Kind of Factions and Diviſions there are amongſt them, which might be cultivated to very happy Productions: But ſuch Ingenuity, as to be contented with what might gratify all their own Pretences, there is not amongſt them.

THESE moderate Men complained already, "that "the King was deceived by their Enemy the Chan-"cellor," who indeed was generally very odious to them, for no other Reaſon, but becauſe They knew He was irreconcilable to their Profeſſion; not that They thought He deſired that the Laws ſhould be put in Execution againſt them; and ſome of the chief of them believed him to be much their Friend, and had Obligations to him. But They all lamented this Direction given to the Judges for their Conviction, "which," They informed the King, "was the neceſ-"ſary Preamble to the higheſt Perſecution the Law "had prepared againſt them. That till They were "convicted They were in the ſame Predicament with "the reſt of his Subjects; but as ſoon as They were "convicted," (which the Judges now cauſed to be proſecuted throughout the Kingdom) "They were "liable to all the other Penalties, which his Majeſty "was inclined to protect them from." They preſented to him a ſhort Memorial of the Diſadvantages which were conſequent to a Conviction, in which They alledged ſome Particulars which were not clear in the Law, at leaſt had never been practiſed in the ſevereſt Times.

THOUGH the King had well weighed all He had done before He did it, and well knew, after all their Inſinuations and Allegations, that none of thoſe Inconveniences could enſue to them, if He reſtrained any further Proſecution, which He always had intended to do; yet They wrought ſo far upon him, that He was even ſorry that He had proceeded ſo far: And though it was not fit to revoke any Part of it, yet He cared not how little it was advanced. And for the Bill He meant to preſent in the next Seſſion, They ſaid, "all their Security and Quiet They had "enjoyed ſince his Majeſty's happy Return depend-"ed wholly upon the general Opinion, that He had "Favour for them, and Satisfaction in their Duty "and Obedience as good Subjects, and their Readi-"neſs to do him any Service, which They would all "make good with their Lives and all that They had. "But if He ſhould now diſcover any Jealouſy of "their Fidelities, and that there was Need of a new "Law againſt them, which his Purpoſe of providing "a Bill implied, what Mitigation ſoever his Majeſty "intended in it, it would not be in his Majeſty's "Power to reſtrain the Paſſion of other Men; but "all thoſe Animoſities which had been hitherto "covered and concealed, as grateful to him, would "upon this Occaſion break out to their Deſtruction: "And therefore They hoped, that whatever Bitter-"neſs the Parliament might expreſs againſt them "when They came together, They ſhould receive "no Invitation or Encouragement by any Jealouſy or "Diſpleaſure his Majeſty ſhould manifeſt to have to-"wards them."

The King gives over his Purpoſe.

THESE and the like Arguments, or the Credit of thoſe who urged them, made that Impreſſion, that He declined any farther Thought of that Bill; nor was there ever after Mention of it. The Catholicks grew bolder in all Places, and converſant in thoſe Rooms of the Court into which the King's Chaplains never preſumed to enter; and to crown all their Hopes, the Lady declared herſelf of that Faith, and inveighed ſharply againſt the Church She had been bred in.

Diſcontents in the Country.

DURING the Interval of the Parliament, there was not ſuch a Vacation from Trouble and Anxiety as was expected. The domeſtic Unquietneſs in the Court made every Day more Noiſe abroad: Infinite Scandals and Calumnies were ſcattered amongſt the People; and They expreſſed their Diſcontents upon the great Taxes and Impoſitions which They were compelled to pay, and publickly reproached the Parliament; when They were in Truth vexed and grieved at Heart for that which They durſt not avow, and did really believe that God was angry with the Nation, tion, and reſolved to exerciſe it under greater Tribulation than He had ſo lately freed them from. The general Want of Money was complained of, and a great Decay of Trade; ſo that the native Commodities of the Kingdom were not tranſported. Yet Both theſe were but Pretences, and reſulted from Combinations rather than from Reaſon. For it appeared by the Cuſtoms, that the Trade was greater than it had ever been, though ſome of our native Commodities, eſpecially Cloth, ſeemed for ſome Time to be at a Stand; which proceeded rather from the preſent Glut, which in the general Licenſe the Interlopers had irregularly tranſported in great Quantities, by which the Prices were brought low, and could only be recovered by a Reſtraint for ſome Time, which the Merchant Adventurers put upon themſelves, and would have put upon the Interlopers, who were at laſt too hard for them, even upon the Matter to the ſuppreſſing the Company, that had ſtood in great Reputation for very many Years, and had advanced that Manufacture to a great Height; and whether it deſerved that Diſcountenance, Time muſt decide. How unreaſonable the other Diſcourſe was of Want of Money, there needs no other Argument, but the great Purchaſes which were every Day made of great Eſtates; nor was any conſiderable Parcel of Land in any Part of England offered to be ſold, but there was a Purchaſer at Hand ready to buy it.

HOWEVER theſe Pretences, together with the ſudden bringing up all the Money, that was collected for the King, in Specie to London, which proceeded from the Bankers advancing ſo much preſent Money for the emergent Occaſions, for which They had thoſe Aſſignments upon the Money of the Country, did really produce ſuch a ſudden Fall of the Rents throughout the Kingdom, as had never been known before: So that Men were compelled to abate generally a fourth Part of their annual Rents at the leaſt, or to take their Lands into their own Hands, for which They were as ill provided. All this Miſchief fell upon the Nobility and greateſt Gentry, who were Owners of the greateſt Eſtates, every Body whoſe Eſtate lay in Land undergoing a Share in the Suffering, which made the Diſcontent general; which They thought the beſt Way to remedy would be to raiſe no more Taxes, which They took to be the Cauſe why the Rents fell. In the mean Time the Expences of the Court, and of all who depended upon it, grew ſtill higher, and the King himſelf leſs intent upon his Buſineſs, and more loved his Pleaſures, to which He preſcribed no Limits, nor to the Expences which could not but accompany them.

A ſudden Fall of Rents.

THERE was Cauſe enough to be jealous of the publick Peace; there being every Day Diſcoveries made of private Meetings and Conferences between Officers of the old Army; and that Correſpondencies were ſettled between them throughout the Kingdom in a wonderful Method; and that They had a grand Committee reſiding in London, who had the ſupreme Power, and which ſent Orders to all the reſt, who were to riſe in one Day and meet at ſeveral Rendezvouſes. Hereupon ſeveral Perſons were apprehended and committed to Priſon; and the King himſelf often took the Pains to examine them; and They confeſſed commonly more to his Majeſty himſelf than upon any other Examination. Proclamations iſſued often for the baniſhing all Officers who had ever borne Arms againſt the King twenty Miles from London, which did more publiſh the Apprehenſion of new Troubles.

Danger of an Inſurrection.

THERE can be no Doubt, but that there were many ſeditious Purpoſes amongſt that People, of which there often appeared ſo full Evidence, that many were executed for High Treaſon, who were tried and condemned by the Judges at their general Seſſions at Newgate: Yet there was often Cauſe to believe that many Men were committed, who in Truth had not been more faulty, than in keeping ill Company and in hearing idle Diſcourſes. Informing was grown a Trade, which many affected to get Money by: And as the King's Miniſters could not reject in a Time of ſo much Jealouſy, ſo the receiving them gave them great Trouble; for few of them were willing to be produced as Evidence againſt thoſe They accuſed, pretending, ſometimes with Reaſon, "that if They were known They ſhould be rendered "uſeleſs for the future, whereas They were yet un-"ſuſpected and admitted into all Councils." All the Sects in Religion ſpake with more Boldneſs in their Meetings, and met more frequently, than They had uſed to do in the Times that Sir Richard Browne and Sir John Robinſon had been Lord Mayors; and the Officers who ſucceeded them proved leſs vigilant. A general Deſpondency ſeemed to poſſeſs the Minds of Men, as if They little cared what came to paſs; which did not proceed ſo much from Malice, as from the Diſeaſe of murmuring, which had been contracting above twenty Years, and became almoſt incorporated into the Nature of the Nation.

An Intrigue in the Court to advance Sir H. Bennet.

THERE happened about this Time an Alteration in the Court, that produced afterwards many other Alterations which were not then ſuſpected, yet even at that Time was not liked in the Court itſelf, and leſs out of it. The Keeper of the Privy Purſe, who was more fit for that Province than for any other to which He could be applied, did not think himſelf yet preferred to a Station worthy of his Merit and great Qualifications. Some Promiſes the King had made to him when He was at Fuentarabia, and had long much Kindneſs for his Perſon and much Delight in his Company: So that his Friend, Mr. O Neile, who was ſtill ready to put his Majeſty in Mind of all his Services, had Nothing hard to do but to find a Vacancy that might give Opportunity for his Advancement; and He was dexterous in making Opportunities which He could not find, and made no Scruple to inſinuate to the King, "that the Abilities of nei-"ther of his Secretaries were ſo great but that He "might be better ſerved." Indeed his Majeſty, who did not naturally love old Men, had not ſo much Eſteem of them as their Parts and Induſtry and Integrity deſerved, and would not have been ſorry if either or Both of them had died.

Character of Secretary Nicholas.

SECRETARY Nicholas had ſerved the Crown very many Years with a very good Acceptation, was made Secretary of State by the late King, and loved and truſted by him in his neareſt Concernments to his Death: Nor had any Man, who ſerved him, a more general Reputation of Virtue and Piety and unqueſtionable Integrity throughout the Kingdom. He was a Man to whom the Rebels had been always irreconcilable; and from the End of the War lived in Baniſhment beyond the Seas, was with his Majeſty from the Time He left France (for whilſt the King was in France with his Mother, to whom the Secretary was not gracious, He remained at a Diſtance; but from the Time that his Majeſty came into Germany He was always with him) in the Exerciſe of the ſame Function He had under his Father, and returned into England with him, with Hope to repair his Fortune by the juſt Perquiſites of his Office, which had been very much impaired by his long Sufferings and Baniſhment. He had never been in his Youth a Man of quick and ſudden Parts, but full of Induſtry and Application (which it may be is the better Compoſition), and always verſed in Buſineſs and all the Forms of Diſpatch. He was now ſome Years above ſeventy, yet truly performed his Office with Punctuality, and to the Satisfaction of all Men who repaired to him: And the King thought it an envious as well as an ill-natured Thing, to diſcharge ſuch an Officer becauſe He had lived too long.

Of Secretary Morrice.

THE other Secretary was Secretary Morrice, whoſe Merit had been his having tranſacted all that had been between between the King and the General, which was thought to be much more than it was. Yet He had behaved himſelf very well, and as much diſpoſed the General as He was capable of being diſpoſed; and his Majeſty had preferred him to that Office purely to gratify and oblige the General; and He had behaved himſelf very honeſtly and diligently in the King's Service, and had a good Reputation in the Houſe of Commons, and did the Buſineſs of his Office without Reproach. He had lived moſt Part of his Time in the Country, with the Repute of a wiſe Man and a very good Scholar, as indeed He was both in the Latin and Greek Learning; but being without any Knowledge in the modern Languages, He gave the King often Occaſion to laugh at his unſkilful Pronunciation of many Words. In the Latin Diſpatches, which concern all the Northern Parts, He was ready, and treated with thoſe Ambaſſadours fluently and elegantly; and for all domeſtick Affairs no Man doubted his Sufficiency, except in the Garb and Mode and Humour of the Court.

AND the Inducement that brought him in made it unfit to remove him, leſt it might grieve the General, whoſe Friend and Kinſman He was: So that there was no Expedient to provide for Sir Harry Bennet, but by removing Secretary Nicholas by his own Conſent; for the King would not do it otherwiſe to ſo old and faithful a Servant. And his Majeſty was the more inclined to it, becauſe it would give him the Opportunity to bring another Perſon into the Office of the Privy Purſe, of whom He was lately grown very fond, and towards whom He had, when He came into England, a greater Averſion than to any Gentleman who had been abroad with him, and that was Sir Charles Berkley, who was then Captain of the Duke of York's Guard, and much in the good Grace of his Royal Highneſs.

WHILST this Intrigue was contriving and depending, great Care was taken that it might not come to the Notice of the Chancellor, leſt if He could not divert the King from deſiring it, which They believed He would not attempt, He might diſſuade his old Friend the Secretary, with whom He had held a long and particular Friendſhip, from hearkening to any Propoſition, or accepting any Compoſition; which They believed not unreaſonably that the other would be very ſolicitous in, as well to keep a Man in, whom He could entirely truſt, as to keep another out, of whoſe Abilities He had no Eſteem, and in whoſe Affection He had no Confidence: And it was thought by many, that the ſame Apprehenſion prevailed with the good old Man himſelf to cheriſh the Secrecy. Certain it is, that the whole Matter was reſolved and conſented to, before ever the Chancellor had a Suſpicion of it.

O NEILE, who had always the Skill to bring that to paſs by others which He could not barefaced appear in himſelf, inſinuated to Mr. Aſhburnham, who pretended and I think had much Friendſhip for the Secretary, "that the King thought the Secretary too "old to take ſo much Pains, and often wiſhed that "his Friends would perſuade him to retire, that there "might be a younger Man in the Office, who could "attend upon his Majeſty at all Hours and in all "Journies; but that his Majeſty always ſpake kindly "of him, and as if He reſolved to give him an ample Recompenſe;" And in Confidence told him, "that the King had an impatient Deſire to have Sir "Harry Bennet Secretary of State." Aſhburnham was well verſed in the Artifices of Court too; and thought He might very well perform the Office of a Friend to his old Confident, and at the ſame Time find a new and more uſeful Friend for himſelf, by having a Hand in procuring a large Satisfaction for the old, and likewiſe facilitating the Way for the Introduction of a new Secretary, who could not forget the Obligation. So He told O Neile, "that all the World knew "that He had for many Years profeſſed a great "Friendſhip for Secretary Nicholas" (They had been Both Servants at the ſame Time to the Duke of Buckingham, when He was killed), "and that He ſhould "be much troubled to ſee him diſplaced in his old "Age with Contempt; but if his Majeſty would "diſmiſs him with Honour and Reward, that He "might be able to provide for his Wife and Children, He would make no Scruple to perſuade him "to quit his Employment." O Neile had all He looked for, and only enjoined him Secrecy, "that it "might not come to the King's Ear that He had "communicated this Secret to any Man; and He did "preſume, that before any Reſolution was taken in "it, his Majeſty would ſpeak of it to the Chancellor."

WITHIN a Day or two the King ſent for Aſhburnham and told him, "He knew He was a Friend to "the Secretary, who was now grown old, and not "able to take the Pains He had done; that He had "ſerved his Father and himſelf very faithfully, and "had ſpent his Fortune in his Service; that if He "were willing to retire, for without his Conſent He "would do Nothing, He would give him ten thouſand Pounds, or any other Recompenſe He ſhould "chooſe," implying a Title of Honour: But intimated, though He referred all to his own Will, "that "He wiſhed, and that it would be acceptable to him, "that the Office might be vacant and at his Majeſty's "Diſpoſal."

HE undertook the Employment very chearfully, and quickly imparted all that had paſſed from the King, and all that He knew before, to the Secretary; who was not fond of the Court, and thought He had lived long enough there, having ſeen and obſerved much that He was grieved at Heart to ſee. He conſidered, that though this Meſſage was very gracious, and offered a noble Reward for his Service, it did withal appear that the King did deſire He ſhould be gone; and having deſigned a Succeſſor to him, who had already much Credit with him, if He ſhould ſeem ſullen or unwilling, He might in a ſhort Time be put out without any Conſideration, or at moſt with the Promiſe of one. Thereupon He wiſhed his Friend "to aſſure the King, that He "would very readily do whatſoever his Majeſty "thought neceſſary for his Service; but He hoped, "that after above forty Years ſpent in the Service "of the Crown, He ſhould not be expoſed to Diſgrace and Contempt. That He had a Wife and "Children, who had all ſuffered with him in Exile till "his Majeſty's Return, and for whom He could not "make a competent Proviſion without his Majeſty's "Bounty; and therefore He hoped, that before his "Majeſty required the Signet, He would cauſe the "Recompenſe He deſigned to be more than what He "had mentioned, and to be firſt paid."

THIS Province could not be put into a fitter Hand, for it was managed with notable Skill. And as ſoon as it was known that the Secretary would willingly reſign, which was feared, and that only a better Recompenſe was expected, every Body was willing that the King ſhould make the Act look as graciouſly as might be, that the Succeſſor might be attended with the leſs Envy. And Mr. Aſhburnham cultivated their Impatience ſo ſkilfully, that it coſt the King, in preſent Money and Land or Leaſe, very little leſs than twenty thouſand Pounds, to bring in a Servant whom very few cared for, in the Place of an old Servant whom every Body loved: And He received all that was promiſed, before He reſigned his Place. And if the Change had been as good for the King, as it was for the good old Secretary, every Body would have been glad. And thus Sir Harry Bennet was at the King's Charge accommodated, even to the Satisfaction of his own Ambition: And his Majeſty was as well pleaſed, that He had gotten Sir Charles Berkley into the

the other Office about his Perſon, whom He every Day loved with more Paſſion, for what Reaſon no Man knew nor could imagine.

The Chancellor's Intereſt declines.

AND from this Time They who ſtood at any near Diſtance could not but diſcern, that the Chancellor's Intereſt and Credit with the King manifeſtly declined: Not that either of theſe two pretended to be his Rival, or appeared to croſs any Thing in Council that He propoſed or adviſed; on the contrary, They Both profeſſed great Reſpect towards him. One of them, being no Privy Counſellor, made great Profeſſions and Addreſſes to him by himſelf, and by ſome Friends who had much Credit with him; proteſted "againſt meddling at all in Buſineſs, and that He "only hoped to gain a Fortune by his Majeſty's Fa-"vour, upon which He might be able to live;" nor did it appear afterwards, that He did to his Death wiſh that the Chancellor's Power ſhould be leſſened: And the other made all the Profeſſions imaginable of Affection and Reſpect to him, and repaired upon Occaſions to him for Advice and for Direction. Nor in Truth could either of them have done him any Prejudice at that Time with the King by pretending to do it; but by pretending the contrary by Degrees got Power to do it.

The King ſtill continues his Favour to him.

HIS Majeſty did not in the leaſt Degree withdraw his Favour from him, heard him as willingly, came as often to him, was as little reſerved in any Thing; only in one Particular He did with ſome Solemnity conjure him never to mention it to him again, in which He did not yet punctually obey him, nor avoid ſeaſonably ſaying any Thing to him which He believed to be his Duty, and which his Majeſty never ſeemed to take ill. And whenever He ſpake to him of either of the other two Gentlemen, which He frequently did with much Kindneſs, He always added ſomewhat of Both their Reſpects and Eſteem for him, as a Thing that pleaſed him well; and ſaid once, "that it concerned them, for whenever He ſhould "diſcern it to be otherwiſe, He ſhould make them "repent it." Yet notwithſtanding all this, from that Time Counſels were not ſo ſecret, and greater Liberty was taken to talk of the publick Affairs in the Evening Converſation, than had been before, when they happened ſometimes to be ſhortly mentioned in the Production of ſome Wit or Jeſt; but now they were often taken into Debate, and cenſured with too much Liberty with Reference to Things and Perſons; and the King himſelf was leſs fixed and more irreſolute in his Counſels; and inconvenient Grants came every Day to the Seal for the Benefit of particular Perſons, againſt which the King had particularly reſolved, and at laſt by Importunity would have paſſed. Laſtly, Both theſe Perſons were moſt devoted to the Lady, and much depended upon her Intereſt, and conſequently were ready to do any Thing that would be grateful to her.

The firſt Riſe of the Dutch War.

THERE was another Miſchief contrived about this Time, that had a much worſe Influence upon the Publick, except We ſhall call it the ſame, becauſe it did in Truth proceed from it. Though the publick State of Affairs, in Reſpect of the Diſtempers and Diſcompoſures which are mentioned before, and that the Expences exceeded what was aſſigned to ſupport it, whereby the great Debt was little diminiſhed, yielded little Delight to thoſe who were moſt truſted to manage and provide for them, and who had a melancholick and dreadful Apprehenſion of Conſequences: Yet whilſt the Nation continued in Peace, and without any Danger from any foreign Enemy, the Proſpect was ſo pleaſant, eſpecially to thoſe who ſtood at a Diſtance, that They ſaw Nothing worthy of any Man's Fear; and there was reaſonable Hope, that the Expences might every Year be reduced within reaſonable Bounds. But all that Hope vaniſhed, when there appeared an immoderate Deſire to engage the Nation in a War.

UPON the King's firſt Arrival in England, He manifeſted a very great Deſire to improve the general Traffick and Trade of the Kingdom, and upon all Occaſions conferred with the moſt active Merchants upon it, and offered all that He could contribute to the Advancement thereof. He erected a Council of Trade, which produced little other Effect than the Opportunity of Mens ſpeaking together, which poſſibly diſpoſed them to think more, and to conſult more effectually in private, than They could in ſuch a Crowd of Commiſſioners. Some Merchants and Seamen made a Propoſition by Mr. William Coventry and ſome few others to the Duke of York, "for the Erec-"tion of a Company in which They deſired his Royal "Highneſs to preſide" (and from thence it was called the Royal Company), "to which his Majeſty ſhould "grant the ſole Trade of Guinea, which in a ſhort "Time They preſumed would bring great Advantage "to the Publick, and much Profit to the Adventu-"rers, who ſhould begin upon a joint Stock, to be "managed by a Council of ſuch as ſhould be choſen "out of the Adventurers."

The Erection of the Royal African Company.

THIS Privilege had before the Troubles been granted by the late King to Sir Nicholas Criſpe and others named by him, who had at their own Charge ſent Ships thither: And Sir Nicholas had at his own Charge bought a Nook of Ground, that lay into the Sea, of the true Owners thereof (all that Coaſt being inhabited by Heathens), and built thereon a good Fort and Warehouſes, under which the Ships lay; and He had advanced this Trade ſo far before the Troubles, that He found it might be carried on with very great Benefit. After the Rebellion began, and Sir Nicholas betook himſelf to ſerve the King, ſome Merchants continued the Trade, and either by his Conſent or Cromwell's Power had the Poſſeſſion of that Fort, called Cormantine; which was ſtill in the Poſſeſſion of the Engliſh when his Majeſty returned, though the Trade was ſmall, in Reſpect the Dutch had fixed a ſtronger Quarter at no great Diſtance from it, and ſent much more Ships and Commodities thither, and returned once every Year to their own Country with much Wealth. The chief End of this Trade was, beſides the putting off great Quantities of our own Manufactures according as the Trade ſhould advance, to return with Gold, which that Coaſt produced in good Quantity, and with Slaves, Blacks, which were readily ſold to any Plantation at great Prices.

A Charter granted him.

THE Model was ſo well prepared, and the whole Method for governing the Trade ſo rationally propoſed, that the Duke was much pleaſed with it, and quickly procured a Charter to be granted from the King to this Company with ample Privileges, and his Majeſty himſelf to become an Adventurer, and which was more, to aſſiſt them for the firſt Eſtabliſhment of their Trade with the Uſe of ſome of his own Ships. The Duke was the Governour of the Company, with Power to make a Deputy: All the other Officers and Council were choſen by the Company, which conſiſted of Perſons of Honour and Quality, every one of which brought in five hundred Pounds for the firſt joint Stock, with which They ſet out the firſt Ships; upon the Return whereof They received ſo much Encouragement and Benefit, that They compounded with Sir Nicholas Criſpe for his Propriety in the Fort and Caſtle; and poſſeſſed themſelves of another Place upon the Coaſt, and ſent many Ships thither, which made very good Returns, by putting off their Blacks at the Barbadoes and other the King's Plantations at their own Prices, and brought Home ſuch Store of Gold that adminiſtered the firſt Occaſion for the Coinage of thoſe Pieces, which from thence had the Denomination of Guineas; and what was afterwards made of the ſame Species, was coined of the Gold that was brought from that Coaſt by the Royal Company. In a Word, if that Company be not broken or diſordered by by the Jealouſy that the Gentlemen Adventurers have of the Merchants, and their Opinion that They underſtand the Myſteries of Trade as well as the other, by which They refuſe to concur in the neceſſary Expedients propoſed by the other, and interpoſe unſkilful Overtures of their own with Pertinacy, it will be found a Model equally to advance the Trade of England with that of any other Company, even that of the Eaſt-Indies.

FROM the firſt Entrance into this Trade, which the Duke was exceedingly diſpoſed to advance, and was conſtantly preſent himſelf at all Councils, which were held once a Week in his own Lodgings at Whiteball, it was eaſily diſcovered that the Dutch had a better Trade there than the Engliſh, which They were then willing to believe that They had no Right to, for that the Trade was firſt found out and ſettled there by the Engliſh; which was a ſufficient Foundation to ſettle it upon this Nation, and to exclude all others, at leaſt by the ſame Law that the Spaniard enjoys the Weſt-Indies, and the Dutch what They or the Portugueſe poſſeſſed in the Eaſt. But this They quickly found would not eſtabliſh ſuch a Title as would bear a Diſpute: The having ſent a Ship or two thither, and built a little Fort, could not be allowed ſuch a Poſſeſſion as would exclude all other Nations. And the Truth was; the Dutch were there ſome Time before us, and the Dane before either: And the Dutch, which was the true Grievance, had planted themſelves more advantageouſly, upon the Bank of a River, than We had done; and by the Erection of more Forts were more ſtrongly ſeated, and drove a much greater Trade, which They did not believe They would be perſuaded to quit. This drew the Diſcourſe from the Right to the Eaſineſs, by the Aſſiſtance of two or three of the King's Ships, to take away all that the Dutch poſſeſſed in and about Guinea, there having never been a Ship of War ſeen in thoſe Parts; ſo that the Work might be preſently done, and ſuch an Alliance made with the Natives, who did not love the Dutch, that the Engliſh might be unqueſtionably poſſeſſed of the whole Trade of that Country, which would be of ineſtimable Profit to the Kingdom.

The Merchants deſirous of a War with the Dutch.

THE Merchants took much Delight to enlarge themſelves upon this Argument, and ſhortly after to diſcourſe "of the infinite Benefit that would accrue "from a barefaced War againſt the Dutch, how eaſily "They might be ſubdued, and the Trade carried "by the Engliſh. That Cromwell had always beaten "them, and thereby gotten the greateſt Glory he had, "and brought them upon their Knees; and could "totally have ſubdued them, if He had not thought "it more for his Intereſt to have ſuch a Second, "whereby He might the better ſupport his Uſurpation "againſt the King. And therefore, after They had "conſented to all the infamous Conditions of the "total abandoning his Majeſty, and as far as in "them lay to the Extirpation of all the Royal Family, "and to a perpetual Excluſion of the Prince of "Orange, He made a firm Peace with them; which "They had not yet performed, by their retaining "ſtill the Iſland of Poleroone, which They had ſo "long ſince barbarouſly taken from the Engliſh, and "which They had expreſsly promiſed and under-"taken to deliver in the laſt Treaty, after Cromwell "had compelled them to pay a great Sum of Money "for the Damages which the Engliſh had ſuſtained "at Amboyna, when all the Demands and Threats "from King James could never procure any Satisfac-"tion for that foul Action."

The Duke of York much for it.

THESE Diſcourſes, often reiterated in Seaſon and out of Seaſon, made a very deep Impreſſion in the Duke; who having been even from his Childhood in the Command in Armies and in his Nature inclined to the moſt difficult and dangerous Enterpriſes, was already weary of having ſo little to do, and too impatiently longed for any War, in which He knew He could not but have the chief Command. But theſe Kind of Debates, or the Place in which they were made, could contribute little to an Affair of ſo huge an Importance, otherwiſe than by inciting the Duke, which they did too much, to conſider and affect it, and to diſpoſe others who were near him to inculcate the ſame Thoughts into him, as an Argument in which his Honour would be much exalted in the Eye of all the World: And to theſe good Offices They were enough diſpoſed by the Reſtleſſneſs and Unquietneſs of their own Natures, and by many other Motives for the accompliſhing their own Deſigns, and getting more Power into their own Hands.

BUT there was lately, very lately, a Peace fully concluded with the States General upon the ſame Terms, Articles and Conditions, which They had formerly yielded to Cromwell, being very much more advantageous than They had ever granted in any Treaty to the Crown. And at the Time of the Concluſion of the Peace, They delivered their Orders from the States General and their Eaſt-India Company for the Delivery of the Iſland of Poleroone to the Engliſh, which Cromwell himſelf had extorted from them with the greateſt Difficulty: So that there was now no Colour of Juſtice to make a War upon them. Beſides that there were at preſent great Jealouſies from Spain upon the Marriage with Portugal; nor did France, which had broken Promiſe in making a Treaty with Holland, make any Haſte to renew the Treaty with England. And therefore it could not but ſeem ſtrange to all Men, that when We had only made a Treaty of Peace with Holland, and that ſo newly, and upon ſo long Conſideration, and had none with either of the Crowns, We ſhould ſo much deſire to enter into a War with them.

The King not inclined to it.

HOWEVER, the Duke's Heart was ſet upon it, and He loved to ſpeak of it, and the Benefits which would attend it. He ſpake of it to the King, whom He found no Ways inclined to it, and therefore He knew it was unfit to propoſe it in Council: Yet He ſpake often of it to ſuch of the Lords of whom He had the beſt Opinion, and found many of them to concur with him in the Opinion of the Advantages which might ariſe from thence. And ſometimes He thought He left the King diſpoſed to it, by an Argument which He found prevailed with many: "That the "Differences and Jealouſies in Point of Trade, which "did every Day fall out and would every Day increaſe "between the Engliſh and the Dutch, who had in the "late Diſtractions gotten great Advantages, would "unavoidably produce a War between them; and "then that the Queſtion only was, whether it were "not better for us to begin it now, when They do "not expect it, and We are better prepared for it than "probably We ſhall be then; or to ſtay two or three "Years, in which the ſame Jealouſy would provoke "them to be well provided, when probably We might "not be ready. That We had the beſt Sea Officers "in the World, many of whom had often beaten the "Dutch, and knew how to do it again; and a Mul-"titude of excellent Mariners and common Seamen: "All which, if They found that Nothing would be "done at Home, would diſperſe themſelves in Mer-"chant Voyages to the Indies and the Straits; and "probably ſo many good Men would never be found "together again."

The Chancellor oppoſes it.

AND with ſuch Arguments He many Times thought that He left the King much moved: But when He ſpake to him again (though He knew that He had no Kindneſs for the Dutch) his Majeſty was changed, and very averſe to a War; which He imputed to the Chancellor, who had not diſſembled, as often as his Highneſs ſpake to him, to be paſſionately and obſtinately againſt it. And He did take all the Opportunities He could find to confirm the King in his Averſion to it, who was in his Heart averſe from it, by preſenting to the him the State of his own Affairs, " the great Debt " that yet lay upon him, which with Peace and good " Husbandry might be in some Time paid; but a " War would involve him in so much greater, that " no Man could see the End of it. That He would " be able to preserve himself against the Factions and " Distempers in his own Kingdom, and probably sup- " press them, if He were without a foreign Enemy: " But if He should be engaged in a War abroad, his " domestick Divisions, especially those in Religion, " would give him more Trouble than He could well " struggle withal.

" That it was an erroneous Assumption, that the " Dutch would be better provided for a War two or three " Years hence, and his Majesty worse, for which there " was no Reason. That within that Time it would " be his own Fault, if the Distempers in his three " Kingdoms were not composed, which would make " him much fitter for a War; whereas now neither " of them could be said to be in Peace, that of Ireland " being totally unsettled, and that of Scotland not yet " well pleased, and England far from it. That in " that Time it was very probable that the two Crowns " would be again engaged in a War; since it was " generally believed, and with great Reason, that " France only expected the Death of the King of " Spain, who was very infirm, and meant then to fall " into Flanders, having at the same Time with great " Expence provided great Magazines of Corn and " Hay upon the Borders, which could be for no " other End. That whilst He continued in Peace, " his Friendship would be valuable to all the Princes " of Europe, and the two Crowns would strive who " should gain him: But if He engaged in a War, and " in such a War as that with Holland, which would in- " terrupt and disturb all the Trade of the Kingdom, " upon which the greatest Part of his Revenue did " rise; all other Princes would look on, and not much " esteem any Offices He could perform to them. And " lastly, that a little Time might possibly administer " a just Occasion of a War, which at present there " was not."

These, and better Arguments which the King's own Understanding suggested to him, made him fully resolve against the War, and to endeavour to change his Brother from affecting it, which wrought not at all upon him; but finding that many Things fell from the King in the Argument, which had been alledged to himself by the Chancellor, He concluded the Mischief came from him, and was displeased accordingly, and complained to his Wife, " that her Father " should oppose him in an Affair upon which He " knew his Heart was so much set, and of which every " Body took so much Notice;" which troubled her very much. And She very earnestly desired her Father, " that He would no more oppose the Duke in that " Matter." He answered her, " that She did not " enough understand the Consequence of that Affair; " but that He would take Notice to the Duke of " what She had said, and give him the best Answer " He could." And accordingly He waited upon the Duke, who very frankly confessed to him, " that " He took it very unkindly, that He should so posi- " tively endeavour to cross a Design so honourable in " itself, and so much desired by the City of London; " and He was confident it would be very grateful to " the Parliament, and that They would supply the " King with Money enough to carry it on, which " would answer the chief Objection. That He was " engaged to pursue it, and He could not but be sorry " and displeased, that every Body should see how little " Credit He had with him."

The Duke offended with him for it.

The Chancellor satisfies the Duke.

The Chancellor told him, " that He had no Ap- " prehension that any sober Man in England, or his " Highness himself, should believe that He could " fail in his Duty to him, or that He would omit any " Opportunity to make it manifest, which He could " never do without being a Fool or a Madman. On " the other Hand, He could never give any Advice, " or consent to it whoever gave it, which in his Judg- " ment and Conscience would be very mischievous to " the Crown and to the Kingdom, though his Royal " Highness or the King himself were inclined to it." He did assure him, " that He found the King very " averse from any Thought of this War, before He " ever discovered his own Opinion of it;" but de- nied not, " that He had taken all Opportunities to " confirm him in that Judgment by Arguments that " He thought could not be answered; and that the " Consequence of that War would be very pernici- " ous. That He did presume that many good Men, " with whom He had conferred, did seem to concur " with his Highness out of Duty to him, and as " They saw it would be grateful to him, or upon a " sudden, and without making those Reflections " which would afterwards occur to them, and make " them change their Minds. That a few Merchants, " nor all the Merchants in London, were not the City " of London, which had War enough, and could only " become rich by Peace. That He did not think the " Parliament would be forward to encourage that " War; nor should the King be desirous that They " should interpose their Advice in it, since it was a " Subject entirely in the King's own Determination: " But if They should appear never so forward in it, " He was old enough to remember when a Parlia- " ment did advise, and upon the Matter compel, his " Grandfather King James to enter into a War with " Spain, upon Promise of ample Supplies; and yet " when He was engaged in it, They gave him no " more Supply; so that at last the Crown was com- " pelled to accept of a Peace not very honour- " able."

Beside the Arguments He had used to the King, He besought his Highness to reflect upon some others more immediately relating to himself, " upon the " Want of able Men to conduct the Counsels upon " which such a War must be carried on; how few " Accidents might expose the Crown to those Dis- " tresses, that it might with more Difficulty be " buoyed up than it had lately been;" with many other Arguments, which He thought made some Impression upon the Duke. And for some Months there was no more Mention or Discourse in the Court of the War; though They who first laid the Design still cultivated it, and made little Doubt of bringing it at last to pass.

The Design for the present dropt.

At or about this Time there was a Transaction of great Importance, which at the Time was not popular nor indeed understood, and afterwards was objected against the Chancellor in his Misfortunes, as a principal Argument of his Infidelity and Corruption; which was the Sale of Dunkirk: The whole Proceeding whereof shall be plainly and exactly related from the Beginning to the End thereof.

The Sale of Dunkirk.

The Charge and Expence the Crown was at; the Pay of the Land Forces and Garrisons; the great Fleets set out to Sea for the Reduction of the Turkish Pirates of Algiers and Tunis, and for guarding the narrow Seas, and Security of the Merchants; the constant yearly Charge of the Garrison of Dunkirk, of that at Tangier, and the vast Expence of building a Mole there, for which there was an Establishment, together with the Garrisons at Bombayne and in Jamaica, (none of which had been known to the Crown in former Times); and the Lord Treasurer's frequent Representation of all this to the King, as so prodigious an Expence as could never be supported; had put his Majesty to frequent Consultations how He might lessen and save any Part of it. But no Expedient could be resolved upon. The Lord Treasurer, who was most troubled when Money was wanted, had many secret Conferences with the General and with the best Seamen, of the Benefit that accrued to the Crown Crown by keeping of Dunkirk; the conſtant Charge and Expence whereof amounted to above one hundred and twenty thouſand Pounds yearly: And He found by them that it was a Place of little Importance. It is true that He had conferred of it with the Chancellor, with whom He held a faſt Friendſhip; but found him ſo averſe from it, that He reſolved to ſpeak with him no more, till the King had taken ſome Reſolution. And to that Purpoſe He perſuaded the General to go with him to the King and to the Duke of York, telling them Both, "that "the Chancellor muſt know Nothing of it:" And after ſeveral Debates the King thought it ſo counſellable a Thing, that He reſolved to have it debated before that Committee which He truſted in his moſt ſecret Affairs; and the Chancellor being then lame of the Gout, He commanded that all thoſe Lords ſhould attend him at his Houſe. Beſide his Majeſty himſelf and the Duke of York, there appeared the Lord Treaſurer, the General, the Earl of Sandwich, the Vice-Chamberlain Sir George Carteret, who had been a great Commander at Sea, and the two Secretaries of State. When the King entered the Room with the Lord Treaſurer, He deſired his Majeſty, ſmiling, "that "He would take the Chancellor's Staff from him, "otherwiſe He would break his Head." When They were all ſate, the King told him, "They were all "come to debate an Affair that He knew He was "againſt, which was the parting with Dunkirk; but "He did believe, when He had heard all that was "ſaid for it and againſt it, He would change his "Mind, as He himſelf had done." And ſo the Debate was entered into in this Method, after enough was ſaid of the Straights the Crown was in, and what the yearly Expence was.

The Chancellor againſt it.

The Buſineſs referred to a Committee.

Reaſons urged for parting with it.

(1.) "THAT the Profit which did or could accrue "to the Kingdom by the keeping of Dunkirk was "very inconſiderable, whether in War or Peace. "That by Sea it was very little uſeful, it being no "Harbour, nor having Place for the King's Ships "to ride in with Safety; and that if it were in the "Hand of an Enemy, it could do us little Prejudice, "becauſe three or four Ships might block it up, and "keep it from infeſting its Neighbours: And that "though heretofore it had been a Place of Licenſe at "Sea, and had much obſtructed Trade by their Men "of War, yet that proceeded only from the Unſkilfulneſs of that Time in applying proper Remedies "to it; which was manifeſt by Cromwell's blocking "them up, and reſtraining them when He made "War upon them, inſomuch as all the Men of War "left that Place, and betook themſelves to other "Harbours. That it was ſo weak to the Land (notwithſtanding the great Charge his Majeſty had been "at in the Fortifications; which were not yet finiſhed) "by the Situation and the Soil, that it required as "many Men within to defend it, as the Army ſhould "conſiſt of that beſieged it; otherwiſe that it could "never hold out and endure a Siege of two Months: "As it appeared clearly by its having been taken and "retaken ſo many Times within the late Years, in "all which Times it never held out ſo long, though "there was always an Army at no great Diſtance to "relieve it."

(2.) "THAT the Charge of keeping and maintaining it, without any Accidents from the Attempt of "an Enemy, did amount unto above one hundred "and twenty thouſand Pounds by the Year, which "was a Sum the Revenue of the Crown could not "ſupply, without leaving many other Particulars of "much more Importance unprovided for." And this was not lightly or curſorily urged; but the State of the Revenue, and the conſtant and indiſpenſable Iſſues, were at the ſame Time preſented and carefully examined.

(3.) "IT could not reaſonably be believed, but that "if Dunkirk was kept, his Majeſty would be ſhortly "involved in a War with one of the two Crowns. "The Spaniſh Ambaſſadour had already demanded "Reſtitution of it in Point of Juſtice, it having been "taken from his Maſter by the late Uſurper, in a "Time when there was not only a Peace between "his Majeſty and the King of Spain, but when his "Majeſty reſided, and was entertained by the Catholick King, in Flanders: And at this Time both "France and Spain inhibited their Subjects from paying thoſe ſmall Contributions to the Garriſon at "Dunkirk, and endeavoured to reſtrain the Governour himſelf from enjoying ſome Privileges, which "had been always enjoyed by him from the Time "that it had been put into Cromwell's Hands." And it was upon this and many other Reaſons then conceived, "that as it would be very hard for the King "to preſerve a Neutrality towards Both Crowns, even "during the Time of the War between them" (which Temper was thought very neceſſary for his Majeſty's Affairs); "ſo it would be much more difficult long to "avoid a War with one of them upon the keeping "Dunkirk, if the Peace that was newly made ſhould "remain firm and unſhaken."

UPON theſe Reaſons, urged and agreed upon by thoſe who could not but be thought very competent Judges, in Reſpect of their ſeveral Profeſſions and great Experience, the King reſolved to eaſe himſelf of the inſupportable Burden of maintaining Dunkirk, and to part with it in ſuch a Manner as might be moſt for his Advantage and Benefit. There remained then no other Queſtion, than into what Hand to put it: And the Meaſure of that was only who would give moſt Money for it, there being no Inclination to prefer one before another. It was enough underſtood, that Both Crowns would be very glad to have it, and would probably Both make large Offers for it. But it was then as evident, that whatſoever France ſhould contract for, the King would be ſure to receive, and the Buſineſs would be ſoon diſpatched: Whereas on the other Hand it was as notorious and evident to his Majeſty, and to all who had any Knowledge of the Court of Spain, and of the Scarcity of Money there and in Flanders; that how large Offers ſoever the Spaniard might make, They could not be able in any Time to pay any conſiderable Sum of Money; and that there would be ſo much Time ſpent in Conſult between Madrid and Bruſſels before it could be diſpatched, that the keeping it ſo long in his Majeſty's Hands would in the Expence diſappoint him of a good Part of the End in parting with it. Beſides that it ſeemed at that Time probable, that the Spaniard would ſhortly declare himſelf an Enemy; for beſides that He demanded Dunkirk as of Right, ſo He likewiſe required the Reſtitution of Tangier and Jamaica upon the ſame Reaſon, and declared "that without it there "could be no laſting Peace between England and "Spain," and refuſed ſo much as to enter upon a Treaty of Alliance with the King, before He ſhould promiſe to make ſuch a Reſtitution.

The King reſolves to diſpoſe of it.

Reaſons for ſelling it to France.

THERE wanted not in this Conference and Debate the Conſideration of the States of the United Provinces, as Perſons like enough to deſire the Poſſeſſion of Dunkirk, from whence They had formerly received ſo much Damage, and were like enough to receive more whenever They ſhould be engaged in any War: And if in Truth They ſhould have any ſuch Deſire, more Money might be reaſonably required and probably be obtained from them, than could be expected from either of the Kings. But upon the Diſcuſſion of that Point, it did appear to every Man's Reaſon very manifeſt, that though They had rather that Dunkirk ſhould be put into the Hands of the Spaniard than delivered to France, or than it ſhould be detained by the Engliſh; yet They durſt not receive it into their own Poſſeſſion, which neither of the two Crowns would have approved of, and ſo it would have expoſed them to the Diſpleaſure if not the Hoſtility of Both the Kings.

Upon this full Deliberation, his Majeſty inclined rather to give it up to France than to Spain; but deferred any poſitive Reſolution till He had imparted the whole Matter to the Council-Board, where the Debate was again reſumed, principally, "whether it "were more counſellable to keep it at ſo vaſt a "Charge, or to part with it for a good Sum of "Money." And in that Debate the Mention of what had been heretofore done in the Houſe of Commons upon that Subject was not omitted, nor the Bill that They had ſent up to the Houſe of Peers for annexing it inſeparably to the Crown; But that was not thought of Moment; for as it had been ſuddenly entertained in the Houſe of Commons, upon the Spaniſh Ambaſſadour's firſt Propoſition for the Reſtitution, ſo it was looked upon in the Houſe of Peers as unfit in itſelf, and ſo laid aſide after once being read (which had been in the firſt Convention ſoon after the King's Return), and ſo expired as ſoon as it was born. After a long Debate of the whole Matter at the Council-Board, where all was averred concerning the Uſeleſneſs and Weakneſs of the Place, by thoſe who had ſaid it at the Committee; there was but one Lord of the Council who offered his Advice to the King againſt parting with it: And the Ground of that Lord's diſſenting, who was the Earl of St. Albans, was enough underſtood to have Nothing of publick in it, but to draw the Negotiation for it into his own Hands. In Concluſion, his Majeſty reſolved to put it into the Hands of France, if that King would comply with his Majeſty's Expectation in the Payment of ſo much Money as He would require for it: And a Way was found out, that the King might privately be advertiſed of that his Majeſty's Reſolution, if He ſhould have any Deſire to deal for it.

The King refers it to the Privy Council.

Where only one oppoſes it.

The Advertiſement was very welcome to the French King, who was then reſolved to viſit Flanders as ſoon as He ſhould know of the Death of the King of Spain, which was expected every Day. Nor had He deferred it till then, upon the late Affront his Ambaſſadour had received at London from the Spaniſh Ambaſſadour (who by a contrived and laboured Stratagem had got the Precedence for his Coach before the other; which the King of France received with that Indignation, that He ſent preſently to demand Juſtice at Madrid, commanded his Ambaſſadour to retire from thence, and would not ſuffer the Spaniſh Ambaſſadour to remain in Paris till He ſhould have Satisfaction, and was reſolved to have begun a War upon it), if the King of Spain had not acknowledged the Fault of his Ambaſſadour, and under his Hand declared the Precedence to belong to France; which Declaration was ſent to the Courts of all Princes: And ſo for the preſent that Spark of Fire was extinguiſhed or rather raked up.

Monſieur D'Eſtrades comes over to treat about the Price.

The King ſent M. D'Eſtrades privately to London to treat about Dunkirk, without any Character, but pretending to make it his Way to Holland, whither He was deſigned Ambaſſadour. After He had waited upon the King, his Majeſty appointed four or five of the Lords of his Council, whereof the Chancellor and Treaſurer and General were three, to treat with M. D'Eſtrades for the Sale of Dunkirk; when the firſt Conference was ſpent in endeavouring to perſuade him to make the firſt Offer for the Price, which He could not be drawn to: So that the King's Commiſſioners were obliged to make their Demand. And They aſked the Sum of ſeven hundred thouſand Pounds Sterling, to be paid upon the Delivery of Dunkirk and Mardike into the Poſſeſſion of the King of France; which Sum appeared to him to be ſo ſtupendous, that He ſeemed to think the Treaty at an End, and reſolved to make no Offer at all on the Part of his Maſter. And ſo the Conference brake up.

At the next Meeting He offered three Millions of Livres, which according to the common Account amounted to three hundred thouſand Piſtoles, which the King's Commiſſioners as much undervalued; ſo that any farther Conference was diſcontinued, till He had ſent an Expreſs or two into France, and till their Return: For as the Expectation of a great Sum of ready Money was the King's Motive to part with it, beſides the ſaving the monthly Charge; ſo They concluded that his Neceſſities would oblige him to part with it at a moderate Price. And after the Return of the Expreſſes, the King's Commiſſioners inſiſting ſtill upon what D'Eſtrades thought too much, and He offering what They thought too little, the Treaty ſeemed to be at an End, and He prepared for his Return. In Concluſion, his Majeſty being fully as deſirous to part with it as the King of France could be to have it, it was agreed and concluded, "that "upon the Payment of five hundred thouſand Piſtoles "in Specie at Calais to ſuch Perſons as the King ſhould "appoint to receive it, his Majeſty's Garriſon of Dun-"kirk and Mardike ſhould be withdrawn, and thoſe "Places put into the Hands of the King of France:" All which was executed accordingly. And without Doubt it was a greater Sum of Money than was ever paid at one Payment by any Prince in Chriſtendom, upon what Occaſion ſoever; and every Body ſeemed very glad to ſee ſo vaſt a Sum of Money delivered into the Tower of London, as it was all together; the King at the ſame Time declaring, "that no Part of "it ſhould be applied to any ordinary Occaſion, but "be preſerved for ſome preſſing Accident, as an In-"ſurrection or the like," which was reaſonably enough apprehended.

The Price agreed upon.

Nor was there the leaſt Murmur at this Bargain in all the Seſſions of the Parliament which ſate after, until it fell out to ſome Mens Purpoſes to reproach the Chancellor: And then They charged him "with "adviſing the Sale of Dunkirk, and that the very Ar-"tillery, Ammunition and Stores amounted to a "greater Value than the King received for the "Whole;" when upon an Eſtimate that had been taken of all thoſe, they were not eſteemed to be more worth than twenty thouſand Pounds Sterling; and the Conſideration of thoſe, when the King's Commiſſioners inſiſted upon their being all ſhipped for England, and the Neceſſity of keeping them upon the Place where they were, had prevailed with M. D'Eſtrades to conſent to that Sum of five hundred thouſand Piſtoles. But whether the Bargain was ill or well made, there could be no Fault imputed to the Chancellor, who had no more to do in the Tranſaction than is before ſet down, the whole Matter having been ſo long deliberated and ſo fully debated. Nor did He ever before, or in, or after the Tranſaction, receive the Value of Half a Crown for Reward or Preſent, or any other Conſideration relating to that Affair: And the Treatment He received after his coming into France was Evidence enough, that that King never thought himſelf beholden to him.

A Vindication of the Chancellor in this Affair.

A little before this Time, the Queen Mother returned again for England, having diſburſed a great Sum of Money in making a noble Addition to her Palace of Somerſet-Houſe. With the Queen there came over a Youth of about ten or a dozen Years of Age, who was called by the Name of Mr. Crofts, becauſe the Lord Crofts had been truſted to take Care of his Breeding; but He was generally thought to be the King's Son, begotten upon a private Welchwoman of no good Fame, but handſome, who had tranſported herſelf to the Hague, when the King was firſt there, with a Deſign to obtain that Honour, which a Groom of the Bedchamber willingly preferred her to; and there it was this Boy was born. The Mother lived afterwards for ſome Years in France in the King's Sight, and at laſt loſt his Majeſty's Favour: Yet the King deſired to have the Son delivered to him, that He might take Care of his Education, which

The Queen Mother brings a natural Son of the King into England.

She

She would not consent to. At last the Lord Crofts got him into his Charge; and the Mother dying at Paris, He had the sole Tuition of him, and took Care for the breeding him suitable to the Quality of a very good Gentleman. And the Queen after some Years came to know of it, and frequently had him brought to her, and used him with much Grace; and upon the King's Desire brought him with her from Paris into England, when He was about twelve Years of Age, very handsome, and performed those Exercises gracefully which Youths of that Age used to learn in France. The King received him with extraordinary Fondness, and was willing that every Body should believe him to be his Son, though He did not yet make any Declaration that He looked upon him as such, otherwise than by his Kindness and Familiarity towards him. He assigned a liberal Maintenance for him; but took not that Care for a strict Breeding of him as his Age required.

THE General, during the Time of his Command in Scotland, had Acquaintance with a Lady of much Honour there, the Countess of Weemes, who had been before the Wife of the Earl of Buccleuch, and by him had one only Daughter, who inherited his very great Estate and Title, and was called the Countess of Buccleuch, a Child of eight or ten Years of Age. All Men believed, that the General's Purpose was to get this Lady for his own Son, a Match suitable enough: But the Time being now changed, the Lord Lautherdale, being a good Courtier, thought his Countrywoman might be much better married, if She were given to the King for this Youth, towards whom He expressed so much Fondness, those Kinds of Extractions carrying little Disadvantage with them in Scotland; and the General, whatever Thoughts He had before, would not be so ill a Courtier as not to advance such a Proposition. The Lady was already in Possession of the greatest Fortune in Scotland, which would have a fair Addition upon the Death of her Mother.

THE King liked the Motion well; and so the Mother was sent to, to bring up her Daughter to London, They being then Both in Scotland. And when They came, the King trusted the Earl of Lautherdale principally to treat that Affair with the Mother, who had rather have been referred to any other Body, having indeed some just Exceptions. They were Both yet under the Years of Consent; but that Time drawing on, such a Contract was drawn up as had been first proposed to the King, which was, "that the whole "Estate, for Want of Issue by the young Lady, or "by her Death, should be devolved upon the young "Man who was to marry her, and his Heirs for "ever, and that this should be settled by Act of "Parliament in Scotland." Matters being drawn to this Length, and Writings being to be prepared, it was now necessary that this young Gentleman must have a Name, and the Scots Advocate had prepared a Draught, in which He was styled the King's natural Son: And the King was every Day pressed by the great Lady, and those young Men who knew the Customs of France, to create him a Nobleman of England; and was indeed very willing to be advised to that Purpose.

He is contracted to the Countess of Buccleuch.

The King consults the Chancellor about this Son.

The Chancellor's Advice.

TILL this Time, this whole Matter was treated in secret amongst the Scots: But now the King thought fit to consult it with others; and telling the Chancellor of all that had past, shewed him the Draught prepared by the Scots Advocate, and asked him "what He "thought of it," and likewise implied, "that He "thought fit to give him some Title of Honour." After He had read it over, He told his Majesty, "that He need not give him any other Title of Ho"nour than He would enjoy by his Marriage, by "which He would by the Law of Scotland be called "Earl of Buccleuch, which would be Title enough; "and He desired his Majesty to pardon him, if He found "Fault with and disliked the Title They had given "him who prepared that Draught, wherein They had "presumed to style him the King's natural Son, which "was never, at least in many Ages, used in England, "and would have an ill Sound in England with all his "People, who thought that those unlawful Acts ought "to be concealed, and not published and justified. "That France indeed had, with Inconvenience enough "to the Crown, raised some Families of those Births; "but it was always from Women of great Quality, "and who had never been tainted with any other Fa"miliarity. And that there was another Circum"stance required in Spain, which his Majesty should "do well to observe in this Case, if He had taken a "Resolution in the Main; which was, that the King "took Care for the good Education of that Child whom "He believed to be his, but never publickly owned "or declared him to be such, till He had given some "notable Evidence of his inheriting or having ac"quired such Virtues and Qualities, as made him in "the Eyes of all Men worthy of such a Descent. "That this Gentleman was yet young, and not yet "to be judged of: And therefore if He were for the "present married to this young Lady, and assumed "her Title as he must do, his Majesty might defer "for some Years making any such Declaration; "which He might do when He would, and which "at present would be as unpopular an Action in the "Hearts of his Subjects as He could commit."

THOUGH the King did not seem to concur in all that was said, He did not appear at all offended, and only asked him, "whether He had not confer"red with the Queen his Mother upon that Subject." When He assured him, "He had not, nor with any "other Person, and though He had heard some "general Discourse of his Majesty's Purpose to make "that Marriage, He had never heard either of the "other Particulars mentioned;" the King said, "He "had Reason to ask the Question, because many of "those Things which He had said had been spoken "to him by the Queen his Mother, who was entirely "of his Opinion, which She used not to be;" and concluded, "that He would confer with them toge"ther," seeming for the present to be more moved and doubtful in the Matter of the Declaration, than in the other of the Creation; and said, "there was "no Reason, since She brought all the Estate, that "She should receive no Addition by her Husband." The Queen afterwards took an Occasion to speak at large to the Chancellor of it with much Warmth, and Manifestation that She did not like it. But the King spake with neither of them afterwards upon it, but signed the Declaration, and created him to be Duke of Monmouth; very few Persons dissuading it, and the Lady employing all her Credit to bring it to pass: And the Earl of Bristol (who in those difficult Cases was usually consulted) pressed it as the only Way to make the King's Friendship valuable.

The King publickly owns his Son, and creates him Duke of Monmouth.

SINCE the Earl of Bristol is mentioned upon this Occasion, it will not be unseasonable to give him the next Part in this Relation. Though He had left no Way unattempted to render himself gracious to the King, by saying and doing all that might be acceptable unto him, and contriving such Meetings and Jollities as He was pleased with; and though his Majesty had been several Ways very bountiful to him, and had particularly given him at one Time ten thousand Pounds in Money, with which He had purchased Wimbleton of the Queen, and had given him Ashdown-Forest and other Lands in Sussex: Yet He found He had not that Degree of Favour and Interest in the King's Affections, as He desired, or desired that other People should think He had. The Change of his Religion kept him from being admitted to the Council, or to any Employment of Moment. And whereas He made no Doubt of drawing the whole Dependance of the Roman Catholicks upon upon himſelf, and to have the Diſpoſal of that Intereſt, and to that Purpoſe had the Jeſuits firm to him; He found that He had no Kind of Credit with them, nor was admitted by them to their moſt ſecret Conſultations, and that the Fathers of the Society had more Enemies than Friends amongſt the Catholicks.

His Eſtate had been ſold and ſettled by his own Conſent, upon the Marriage of his eldeſt Son twice to great Fortunes: So that when He returned from beyond the Seas, He could not return to his Eſtate as others did, and had little more to ſubſiſt upon than the King's Bounty; and that was not poured out upon him in the Meaſure He wiſhed, though few Perſons taſted more of it. He was in his Nature very covetous, and ready to embrace all Ways that were offered to get Money, whether honourable or no, for He had not a great Power over himſelf, and could not bear Want, which He could hardly avoid, for He was nothing provident in his Expences, when He had any Temptation from his Ambition or Vanity. Beſides his Appetite to Play and Gaming, in which He had no Skill, and by which He had all his Life ſpent whatever He could get, was not at all abated. He ſpent as much Money at Wimbleton in building and gardening, as the Land was worth.

By all theſe Means He found himſelf in Streights, which He could neither endure nor get from, and which tranſported him to that Degree, that He reſolved to treat the King in another Manner than He had ever yet preſumed to do. And having aſked ſomewhat of him that his Majeſty did not think fit to grant, He told him, "He knew well the Cauſe of "his withdrawing his Favour from him; that it "proceeded only from the Chancellor, who governed "him and managed all his Affairs, whilſt himſelf "ſpent his Time only in Pleaſures and Debauchery:" And in this Paſſion upbraided him with many Exceſſes, to which no Man had contributed more than He had done. He ſaid many Truths which ought to have been more modeſtly and decently mentioned, and all this in the Preſence of the Lord Aubigny, who was as much ſurpriſed as the King; and concluded, "that if He did not give him Satisfaction within ſuch "a Time" (the Time allowed did not exceed four and twenty Hours), "He would do ſomewhat that "would awaken him out of his Slumber, and make "him look better to his own Buſineſs;" and added many Threats againſt the Chancellor. The King ſtood all this Time in ſuch Confuſion, that though He gave him more ſharp Words than were natural to him, He had not that Preſentneſs of Mind (as He afterwards accuſed himſelf) as He ought to have had; and ſaid, "He ought preſently to have called "for the Guard," it being in his own Cloſet, "and "ſent him to the Tower."

The Earl of Briſtol's extravagant Behaviour to the King.

The Court and the Town was full of the Diſcourſe that the Earl of Briſtol would accuſe the Chancellor of High Treaſon, who knew Nothing of what had paſſed with the King. And it ſeems when the Time was paſſed that He preſcribed to the King to give him Satisfaction, He came one Morning to the Houſe of Peers with a Paper in his Hand; and told the Lords, "that He could not but obſerve, that "after ſo glorious a Return with which God had "bleſſed the King and the Nation, ſo that all the "World had expected, that the Proſperity of the "Kingdom would have far exceeded the Miſery and "Adverſity that it had for many Years endured; "and after the Parliament had contributed more to"wards it, than ever Parliament had done: Not"withſtanding all which, it was evident to all Men, "and lamented by thoſe who wiſhed well to his Ma"jeſty, that his Affairs grew every Day worſe and "worſe; the King himſelf loſt much of his Honour, "and the Affection He had in the Hearts of the "People. That for his Part He looked upon it with "as much Sadneſs as any Man, and had made En"quiry as well as He could from whence this great "Misfortune, which every Body was ſenſible of, "could proceed; and that He was ſatisfied in his "own Conſcience, that it proceeded principally from "the Power and Credit and ſole Credit of the Chan"cellor: And therefore He was reſolved, for the "Good of his Country, to accuſe the Lord Chan"cellor of High Treaſon; which He had done in the "Paper which He deſired might be read, all written "with his own Hand, to which He ſubſcribed his "Name."

He accuſes the Chancellor of High Treaſon.

The Paper contained many Articles, which He called Articles of High Treaſon and other Miſdemeanors; amongſt which one was, "that He had perſuaded "the King to ſend a Gentleman (a Creature of his "own) to Rome with Letters to the Pope, to give a "Cardinal's Cap to the Lord Aubigny, who was Al"moner to the Queen." The reſt contained "his "aſſuming to himſelf the Government of all publick "Affairs, which He had adminiſtered unſkilfully, "corruptly and traiterouſly; which He was ready to "prove."

The Chancellor, without any Trouble in his Countenance, told the Lords, "that He had had the Ho"nour heretofore to have ſo much the good Opinion "and Friendſhip of that Lord, that He durſt appeal "to his own Conſcience, that He did not himſelf be"lieve one of thoſe Articles to be true, and knew the "contrary of moſt of them. And He was glad to "find that He thought it ſo high a Crime to ſend "to Rome, and to deſire a Cardinal's Cap for a Ca"tholick Lord, who had been always bred from his "Cradle in that Faith: But He did aſſure them, that "that Gentleman was only ſent by the Queen to the "Pope, upon an Affair that She thought herſelf "obliged to comply with him in, and in Hope to "do ſome good Office to Portugal; and that the "King had neither writ to the Pope, nor to any "other Perſon in Rome." He ſpake at large to moſt of the Articles, to ſhew the Impoſſibility of their being true, and that they reflected more upon the King's Honour than upon his; and concluded, "that He "was ſorry that Lord had not been better adviſed, "for He did believe that though all that was al"ledged in the Articles ſhould be true, they would "not all amount to High Treaſon, upon which He "deſired the Judges might be required to deliver "their Opinion; the which the Lords ordered the Judges to do. It was moved by one of the Lords, "that the Copy of the Articles might be ſent to the "King, becauſe He was mentioned ſo preſumptuouſly "in them;" which was likewiſe agreed; and the Articles were delivered to the Lord Chamberlain to preſent to the King.

The Chancellor had promiſed that Day to dine in Whitehall, but would not preſume to go thither till He had ſent to the King, not thinking it fit to go into his Court, whilſt He lay under an Accuſation of High Treaſon, without his Leave. His Majeſty ſent him Word, "that He ſhould dine where He had ap"pointed, and as ſoon as He had dined that He "ſhould attend him." Then his Majeſty told him and the Lord Treaſurer all that had paſſed between the Earl of Briſtol and him in the Preſence of the Lord Aubigny; and in the Relation of it expreſſed great Indignation, and was angry with himſelf, "that "He had not immediately ſent him to the Tower, "which," He ſaid, "He would do as ſoon as He "could apprehend him." He uſed the Chancellor with much Grace, and told him, "that the Earl of "Briſtol had not treated him ſo ill as He had done "his Majeſty; and that his Articles were more to his "Diſhonour, and reflected more upon him, for which "He would have Juſtice."

His Majeſty commanded the Lord Chamberlain, to return his Thanks to the Houſe, "for the Reſpect

"They

"They had ſhewed to him in ſending thoſe Articles "to him;" and to let them know, "that He looked "upon them as a Libel againſt himſelf more than a "Charge againſt the Chancellor, who upon his Know-"ledge was innocent in all the Particulars charged "upon him;" which Report the Lord Chamberlain made the next Morning to the Houſe: And at the ſame Time the Judges declared their Opinion unanimouſly, "that the whole Charge contained Nothing "of Treaſon though it were all true." Upon which the Earl of Briſtol, eſpecially upon what the Lord Chamberlain had reported from the King, appeared in great Confuſion, and lamented his Condition, "that He, for endeavouring to ſerve his Country "upon the Impulſion of his Conſcience, was dif-"countenanced, and threatened with the Anger and "Diſpleaſure of his Prince; whilſt his Adverſary "kept his Place in the Houſe, and had the Judges "ſo much at his Devotion that They would not cer-"tify againſt him." The Chancellor moved the Houſe, "that a ſhort Day might be given to the "Earl, to bring in his Evidence to prove the ſeveral "Matters of his Charge; otherwiſe that He might "have ſuch Reparation, as was in their Judgments "proportionable to the Indignity." The Earl ſaid, "He ſhould not fail to produce Witneſſes to prove "all He had alledged, and more: But that He could "not appoint a Time when He could be ready for "a Hearing, becauſe many of his moſt important "Witneſſes were beyond the Seas, ſome at Paris, "and others in other Places; and that He muſt "examine the Duke of Ormond who was Lieutenant "in Ireland, and the Earl of Lautherdale who was "then in Scotland, and muſt deſire Commiſſioners to "that Purpoſe."

The Earl of Briſtol abſconds upon the King's Warrant to apprehend him.

But from that Day He made no farther Inſtance: And underſtanding that the King had given Warrants to a Sergeant at Arms to apprehend him, He concealed himſelf in ſeveral Places for the Space of near two Years; ſending ſometimes Letters and Petitions by his Wife to the King, who would not receive them. But in the End his Majeſty was prevailed with by the Lady and Sir Harry Bennet to ſee him in private; but would not admit him to come to the Court, nor repeal his Warrants for his Apprehenſion: So that He appeared not publickly till the Chancellor's Misfortune; and then He came to the Court and to the Parliament in great Triumph, and ſhewed a more impotent Malice than was expected from his Generoſity and Underſtanding.

The Affairs of Scotland.

We ſhall in the next Place take a View of Scotland, whither We left Middleton ſent the King's Commiſſioner, who performed his Part with wonderful Dexterity and Conduct, and with more Succeſs than ſome of his Countrymen were pleaſed with. We have remembered before the Debate upon his Inſtructions, and the earneſt Advice and Caution given by Lautherdale againſt any haſty Attempt to make Alteration in the Matters of the Church, which was at laſt left to the Diſcretion of the Commiſſioner, to proceed in ſuch a Manner, and at ſuch a Time, as He found moſt convenient. As ſoon as He came thither, He found himſelf received with as univerſal an Exclamation, and the King's Authority as chearfully ſubmitted to, as can be imagined or could be wiſhed; and ſuch a Conſent to every Thing He propoſed, that He made no Queſtion but any Thing his Majeſty required would find an entire Obedience. The Earl of Glencarne who was Chancellor, and the Earl of Rothes, and all the Nobility of any Intereſt or Credit, were not only faithful to the King but faſt Friends to Middleton, and magnified his Conduct in all their Letters.

The Commiſſioners well received.

The Earl of Crawford alone who was Treaſurer, which is an Office that cannot be unattended by a great Faction in that Kingdom, retained ſtill his rigid Affection for the Preſbytery, when the Miniſters themſelves grew much leſs rigid, and were even aſhamed of the many Follies and Madneſſes They had committed. But the Earl of Crawford did all He could to raiſe their Spirits, and to keep them firm to the Kirk. In all other Particulars He was full of Devotion to the King, being entirely of the Faction of Hamilton, and nearly allied to it; and when the King was in Scotland had ſerved him ſignally, and had then been made by him High Treaſurer of that Kingdom; and upon Cromwell's prevailing and Conjunction with Argyle, was as odious as any Man to them Both, and had for many Years been Priſoner in England till the Time of the King's Return. There was always a great Friendſhip between him and Lautherdale; the former being a Man of much the greater Intereſt, and of unqueſtionable Courage, the other excelling him in all the Faculties which are neceſſary to Buſineſs, and being a Maſter in Diſſimulation.

Middleton, and the Lords who went with him, and the General (upon whoſe Advice the King depended as much in the Buſineſs of Scotland) were all earneſt with his Majeſty to remove the Earl of Crawford from that great Office, which would enable him to do Miſchief. But the King's good Nature prevailed over him, though He knew him as well as They did: And He thought it too hardhearted a Thing to remove a Man, whom He found Priſoner for his Service, from an Office He had formerly conferred upon him for his Merit, and which He had not forfeited by any Miſcarriage. And it may be it was ſome Argument to him of his Sincerity, that when others, who to his Majeſty's own Knowledge were as rigid Preſbyterians as He, were now very frank in renouncing and diſclaiming all Obligations from it, He of all the Nobility was the only Man who ſtill adhered to it, when it was evident to him that He ſhould upon the Matter be undone by it. However the King ſent him down with the reſt into Scotland, being confident that He would do Nothing to diſſerve him, as in Truth He never did; and reſolved that, when the Buſineſs of the Church came to be agitated, if He did continue ſtill refractory, He would take the Staff from him, and confer it upon Middleton: Who, though all Things were very fair between him and Lautherdale, to whom all his Diſpatches muſt be addreſſed, yet depended more upon thoſe of the Engliſh Council, to whom the King had required the Secretary to communicate all that He received from the Commiſſioner, and all the Diſpatches which He ſhould make to him. And by this Means no Orders were ſent from the King which reſtrained him from proceeding in the Matter of the Church according to Diſcretion, as He was appointed by his Inſtructions; though Lautherdale did not diſſemble, when Letters came from Scotland "of the good Poſture the King's "Affairs were in there, and that any Thing might be "brought to paſs that He deſired," to receive other Letters to which He gave more Credit; and was ſtill as ſolicitous that Nothing might be attempted with Reference to the Kirk.

Proceedings of the Scotch Parliament.

As ſoon as the Parliament was convened at Edinburgh, and the Commiſſioner found the Temper of them to be ſuch as He could wiſh, the Marquis of Argyle (who had been ſent by Sea from the Tower of London to Leith) was brought to his Trial upon many Articles of Treaſon and Murder; wherein all his Confederacies with Cromwell were laid open, and much inſiſted upon to prove his being privy to the Reſolution of taking the King's Life, and adviſing it: And though there was great Reaſon to ſuſpect it, and moſt Men believed it, the Proofs were not clear enough to convict him. But then the Evidence was ſo full and clear of ſo many horrid Murders committed by his Order upon Perſons in his Diſpleaſure, and his immediate poſſeſſing himſelf of their Eſtates, and other monſtrous and unheard of Acts of Oppreſſion; that the Parliament condemned him to be hanged upon a Gallows of an unuſual Height, and in or near the Place where He had cauſed the Marquis of Mountroſe to be formerly executed: All which was performed the ſame Day with the univerſal Joy of the People; the unfortunate Perſon himſelf ſhewing more Reſolution and Courage than was expected from him, and expreſſing much Affection and Zeal for the Covenant, for which He deſired all Men ſhould believe He was put to Death. There was likewiſe one ſeditious Preacher, Gilaſpy, who had been a notorious and malicious Rebel againſt the laſt and the preſent King, underwent the ſame Trial and Judgment, with the ſame Faith in the Covenant, and without Shew of Repentance. And it was much wondered at, that no more of that Tribe, which had kindled the Fire that had almoſt burned two Kingdoms, and never had endeavoured to extinguiſh it, were ever brought to Juſtice; and that the Lives of two Men ſhould be thought a ſufficient Sacrifice for that Kingdom to offer for all the Miſchief it had done.

Gilaſpy a Fanatick executed.

When this Work was done, the Parliament without Heſitation repealed all thoſe Acts prejudicial to the Crown and the Royal Dignity, which had been made ſince the Beginning of the Rebellion, and upon which all the Rebellions had been founded; and branded their beloved Covenant with all the Reproaches it deſerved, and this even with the Conſent and Approbation of the General Aſſembly of the Kirk. By all which the Obſtructions were removed; and it was now in the Power of the King to make Biſhops as heretofore, and to ſettle the Church in the ſame Government to which it had formerly been ſubject. But the Commiſſioner thought not this enough; and apprehended that the King might yet be perſuaded, though there was no ſuch Appearance, "that the "People were againſt it, and that it would be better "to defer it:" And therefore the Parliament prepared a Petition to the King, highly aggravating the Wickedneſs of the former Time in deſtroying Epiſcopacy, without which They could not have brought their wicked Devices to paſs; and therefore They were humble Suitors to his Majeſty, "that He would make "Choice of ſuch grave Divines, as He thought fit to be "conſecrated Biſhops, for all the vacant Sees," they being at that Time all vacant, there being not one Biſhop of the Nation alive.

The Parliament petition the King to reſtore Epiſcopacy.

And the Commiſſioner having declared that He meant to prorogue the Parliament, They appointed a Draught of an Oath or Subſcription to be prepared againſt the next Seſſion, whereby every Man, who was poſſeſſed of a Church or any other Eccleſiaſtical Promotion in that Kingdom, ſhould be bound to renounce the Covenant upon the Penalty of being deprived; intimating likewiſe, that They reſolved, at the next Meeting "that no Man ſhould be capable "of holding any Office, or of being a Privy Coun-"ſellor, who would not formally ſubſcribe the "ſame."

They prepare an Abjuration of the Covenant.

They ſettled a ſtanding Militia of forty thouſand Men, to be always ready to march upon the King's Orders; and raiſed two good Troops of Horſe, and provided for the Payment of them; and granted ſuch a Sum of Money to the King, as could be reaſonably expected from ſo poor and harraſſed a Country, and which would ſerve the defraying the neceſſary Expences thereof. And all this being done, and the Prorogation made, the Commiſſioner and ſome of the other Lords came to London to kiſs the King's Hand, and to receive his farther Directions, having ſo fully diſpatched all his former Orders. They brought likewiſe with them ſome other Propoſitions, which will be mentioned anon.

And ſettle a ſtanding Force.

The Commiſſioner returns to London.

The King received the Commiſſioner with open Arms, and was very well pleaſed with all that He had done; and Nobody ſeemed to magnify it more than Lautherdale, who was leaſt ſatisfied with it. Nor could He now longer oppoſe the making of Biſhops there; So having preſented the Names of ſuch Perſons to the King who were thought fit to be conſecrated Biſhops, whereof ſome had been with his Majeſty abroad, They were all ſent for to London; and ſuch of them who had not before received their Ordination from a Biſhop, but from the Preſbytery in Scotland, whereof the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews was one, firſt received Orders of Deacon and Prieſt from the Biſhop of London, and were afterwards conſecrated in the uſual Form by the Biſhops who were then near the Town, and made ſo great a Feaſt as if it had been at the Charge of their Country.

Scotch Biſhops conſecrated.

The Commiſſioner, the Chancellor, the Earl of Rothes and others, with the Lord Lautherdale, were deputed by the Parliament to be humble Suitors to the King; "ſince They had performed on their Part "all that was of the Duty of good Subjects, and "were ready to give any other Teſtimony of their "Obedience that his Majeſty would require; and "ſince the whole Kingdom was entirely at his Devo-"tion, and in ſuch a Poſture that They were able as "well as willing to preſerve the Peace thereof, and to "ſuppreſs any ſeditious Party that ſhould attempt any "Diſturbance; that his Majeſty would now remove "the Engliſh Garriſons from thence, and permit the "Fortifications and Works, which had been erected "at a vaſt Charge, to be demoliſhed, that there "might remain no Monuments of the Slavery They "had undergone." And this They demanded as in Juſtice due to them, "ſince there were few Men now "alive, none in the leaſt Power, who had contributed "to the Ills which had been committed; and all the "Men of Power had undergone for ten or a dozen "Years as great Oppreſſion as could be put upon "them, becauſe They would not renounce their Fi-"delity to the King: And ſince it had pleaſed God "to reſtore his Majeſty, They hoped He would not "continue thoſe Yokes and Shackles upon them, "which had been prepared and put upon them "to keep them from returning to their Allegi-"ance."

The Scotch deſire the Engliſh Garriſons may be withdrawn.

This was propoſed in the Preſence of thoſe of the Engliſh Council, who had been formally admitted to be of the Council of Scotland, and continued to meet upon that Affair. The Scots Lords enlarged with much Warmth "upon the intolerable Oppreſſion "that Nation had undergone, on the Poverty They "ſtill ſuffered, and the Impoſſibility of being able to "bear any Part of the Charge, and the Jealouſy that "it would keep up between the Nations, which could "not be to the King's Profit and Convenience." They had privately ſpoken before with the King upon it, and had prevailed with him to think what They deſired had Reaſon and Juſtice in it; and the Engliſh Lords could not upon the ſudden, and without Conference together, reſolve what was fit for them to ſay: So that They deſired, without expreſſing any Inclination in the Matter, "that the Debate might "be put off to another Day;" which the Scots took very ill, as if the very deferring it were an Argument that They thought it might be denied. But when They ſaw They would not preſently ſpeak to it, They were content that another Day ſhould be appointed for the Conſideration of it: And They afterwards deſired the King, "that He would call the Commit-"tee of the Engliſh Council, who uſed to attend him "in the moſt ſecret Affairs, to conſult what was to "be done." Nobody could deny but that the Scots had Reaſon to demand it. And They who thought it a Bridle fit to keep in their Mouths, to reſtrain them from future Rebellions which They might be inclined to, could not eaſily reſolve what Anſwer ſhould be given to them in the Negative. And They who thought the Demand to be ſo juſt and reaſonable, and ſo much for the King's Benefit and Advantage, that it ought to be granted, did believe likewiſe that it

it was a Thing so capable of Censure and Reproach, in Regard of the general Prejudice which the English have against that People, that no particular Person was able to bear the Odium of the Advice; nor that the King himself should take the Resolution upon himself without very mature Deliberation.

Some Circumstances that facilitate their Request.

THAT which advanced the Proposition as fit to be granted, was the Charge of maintaining those Forces; which that Kingdom was so incapable of bearing, that Middleton and Glencarne (whose Duties and entire Devotion to the King were above all Exception or Suspicion) declared not only to the King, but to those of the Lords with whom They would confer freely, "that if the King thought it necessary to keep "that People still there, He must send more Forces "of Horse and Foot thither; otherwise They were "not strong enough to subdue the whole Kingdom, "but would as soon as They stirred out of their Gar-"risons be knocked in the Head; nor would the "Country pay any Thing towards their Support, but "what should be extorted by Force: So that his Ma-"jesty would not be thought to possess that King-"dom in Peace, which otherwise He would unques-"tionably do."

AND this Consideration was improved by the Reflection upon the Body of Men of which those Forces consisted, which was a Parcel of the worst affected Men to the King of the whole Army, and which the General had therefore left in Scotland, when He marched into England under the Command of Major General Morgan (who was worthy of any Trust) because He was not sure enough of their Fidelity to take them with him, yet thought them fit enough to be left to restrain the Scots from any sudden Insurrection. But now They saw all their Model brought to Confusion, They were not so much above Temptation, but that They might, especially if They were drawn together, concur in any desperate Design with a discontented Party in Scotland, or with their Brethren of the disbanded Army of England, who at that Season had rebellious Resolutions in the North. And which was of no small Importance, there was at this very Time an Opportunity to transport all those Forces (the very disbanding whereof would not be without Danger for the Reasons aforesaid) to Portugal, in Compliance with the King's Obligation upon his Marriage.

ON the contrary, it was very notorious that the People generally throughout England, of what Quality soever, a few London Presbyterians excepted, were marvellously pleased to see the Scots so admirably chastised and yoked; nor had Cromwell ever done an Act that more reconciled the Affections of the English to him, than his most rigorous Treatment of that Nation; And They never contributed Money so willingly towards any of his Designs, as for the erecting those Forts in the several Quarters of the Kingdom; which, with a little Addition of Force, They had good Experience would suffice to keep it from giving any Disturbance to their Neighbours. And the demolishing all those Structures in one Instant, and leaving an unquiet and an impoverished People to their own Inclinations, could not be grateful.

THE King had, during the Time that He resided in Scotland before his March to Worcester, contracted, and had brought with him from thence, a perfect Detestation of their Kirk and Presbyterian Government, and a great Prejudice against the whole Family of Argyle and some other Persons. But He was exceedingly reconciled to the Nation; and besides the Esteem He had of the Persons of very many Noblemen, He did really believe the Burgesses and common People to be as heartily affected to him, and as much at his Disposal, as any Subjects He had. And the Lord Lautherdale cultivated this gracious Credulity with so much Diligence, that He assured the King, "that He might depend upon the whole Scots "Nation as upon one Man, to be employed in his "Service and Commands of what Kind soever, and "against what Enemy soever." His Majesty upon the Debate of this Business declared, "that He did "not only think it good Husbandry in Respect of "the Expence, and good Policy, that He might "keep Scotland entirely at his Devotion, whilst Ire-"land remained in this Confusion, and England itself "was threatened by such Factions in Religion, to "gratify them in what They desired; but that He "held himself obliged in Honour, Justice and Con-"science, to send all the Forces out of that King-"dom, and to deface the Monuments of that Time: "And that there would be no more to be consulted, "but what to do with those Forces" (which was quickly resolved, that They should be all sent for Portugal; and Order was presently given for Ships upon which They were to be embarked), "and then "to consider in what Method the other should be done."

The King for it.

THE Scots were very well satisfied with the King's Resolution upon the Main, but troubled at somewhat that the English Lords proposed for the Way, "that "the Privy Council first, and then the Parliament, "should be informed of his Majesty's Intentions: "Which," They said, "would be against the Ho-"nour and the Interest and the Right of Scotland, "which never submitted any of their Concernments "to be debated at the Council-Board of England; "and the Innovation would be no less in remitting "it to the Parliament, which had no Pretence of "Jurisdiction over them." To Both which They were answered, "that the withdrawing the English "Forces, and demolishing the English Fortifications, "concerned England no less than the other Kingdom; "and that his Majesty did not intend it should be "proposed to them, as a Thing of which He made "any Doubt or required their Advice, but only as a "Matter of Fact, which would prevent all Murmur-"ings or Censures, which otherwise might arise." The English Lords desired, "that the King's Orders "might be very positive, and that the Commissioner "might see them executed, for the utter demolishing "all those Fortifications which the English were to "abandon, that They might not be continued for "the Entertainment of new Garrisons of the Natives, "which would administer Matter of new Jealousies:" All which They chearfully consented to, well knowing that They might afterwards perform what They found convenient; and many did since believe, that there remains enough in some of the Places to be Shelter to a Rebellion hereafter.

THE King appointed the Chancellor to make a Relation, at a Conference between the two Houses of Parliament, "of the good Posture his Majesty's Af-"fairs of Scotland stood in; of their having repealed "all those ill Laws which had been made by the Ad-"vantage of the Rebellion, and all that concerned "the Church; upon which that his Majesty forthwith "resolved to settle Bishops in that Kingdom, which "appeared very unanimously devoted to his Service: "And that the King could not but communicate this "good News to them, which He knew would give "them Cause of rejoicing." And then He told them, "that the Scots Parliament, in Regard of the "Peace and Quiet that They enjoyed, without the "least Apprehension of Trouble from abroad or at "Home, had desired the King, that the English "Forces might be withdrawn and all the Fortifications "razed; and that those Forces might be convenient, "if his Majesty thought fit, to be transported to "Portugal;" without discovering what his Majesty had resolved to do, or asking any Opinion from them, which however They might have given if They pleased. The Effect was, that Both Houses sent their humble Thanks to the King "for his having vouch-"safed to let them know the good Condition of "Scotland, of which They wished his Majesty much "Joy; and hoped his other Dominions would in a short

The English Parliament do not oppose it.

" ſhort Time be in the ſame Tranquillity." Without taking any Notice of withdrawing the Garriſons. And ſo that Affair ended.

During this Agitation in London, it was diſcernable enough that there were great Jealouſies between the Scots Lords. The Commiſſioner and the other had Cauſe to believe, that the King gave much more Credit to Lautherdale than to them, and looked upon him as a Man of great Intereſt in that Country, when They knew He had none, being neither in his Quality or Fortune amongſt thoſe who were eſteemed Men of Power and Dependance. And He thought them linked in a Faction againſt him, to leſſen the Value the King had of him, which indeed was the Foundation of all his Credit and Intereſt. What Countenance ſoever He ſet upon it, He was ſenſibly afflicted at the Downfal of the Preſbytery, and that Middleton had brought that to paſs without any Difficulty (as He had before told the King He would), which He had aſſured his Majeſty was impoſſible to be effected but in long Time and by many Stratagems.

The Marquis of Argyle had been a Man univerſally odious to the whole Nation, ſome Miniſters and Preachers excepted: And there had been always thought to have been an implacable Animoſity from Lautherdale towards him; and after the King's Return no Man had appeared more againſt him, nor more inſiſted upon his not being admitted to his Majeſty's Preſence, or for his being ſent into Scotland to be tried. Yet after all this it was diſcovered, that He had interpoſed all He could with his Majeſty to ſave him, and employed all his Intereſt in Scotland to the ſame Purpoſe. And the Marquis was no ſooner executed, but the Earl of Lautherdale had prevailed with the King immediately to give his Son the Lord Lorne (who had remained in London to ſolicit on his Father's Behalf) Leave to kiſs his Hand, and to create him Earl of Argyle, and to confer on him the Office of General Juſtice in the Highlands, by which his Father had been qualified to do moſt of the Wickedneſſes He had committed; all which the Parliament of Scotland ſhould have treated as the moſt ſenſible Affront to them that They could undergo.

Lord Lorne reſtored, and created Earl of Argyle.

It was well known that this young Man, who was Captain of the King's Guard when He was in Scotland, had treated his Majeſty with that Rudeneſs and Barbarity, that He was much more odious to him than his Father; and in all the Letters which Lautherdale had found Opportunity to write, whilſt He was a Priſoner in England, to the King when He was beyond the Seas, He inveighed equally againſt the Son as the Father, and never gave him any other Title than THAT TOAD'S BIRD: So that Nobody could imagine from whence this Change could proceed, but from a Deſign to preſerve an Intereſt in the Preſbyterian Party againſt the Time He ſhould have Occaſion to uſe them.

Then there were Circumſtances in this Grace of the King to the Lord Lorne, that exceeded all Mens Comprehenſion: For his Majeſty cauſed all the Eſtate of the Marquis of Argyle, which did not appear in any Degree ſo conſiderable as it was generally believed to have been, to be ſeized upon as forfeited to him; and then would grant it to the Son ſo abſolutely, that neither the Owners ſhould recover what had been injuriouſly and violently taken from them for their Loyalty to the King, nor the Creditors receive Satisfaction for the juſt Debts which were due to them, and which muſt have been ſatisfied if the King had retained the Forfeiture. But upon the Application of the Commiſſioner and the other Lords, that the King would hear all Perſons concerned, there was ſome Mitigation in thoſe Particulars, notwithſtanding all the Oppoſition which Lautherdale did barefaced make on the Behalf of the Lord Lorne, and which the other bore with great Indignation: Which He knew very well, and did believe that the Oath and Subſcription, which He well knew They had contrived for the next Seſſion of Parliament, was levelled at him; that not taking it, as They did not believe He would do, the Secretary of Scotland's Place might become void, which They had much rather ſhould have been in any Man's Hand than in his. And therefore He took all Occaſions to profeſs and declare, beſides his conſtant Raillery againſt the Preſbytery, " that if " They ſhould require him to ſubſcribe that He is " a Turk, He would do it before He would loſe his " Office."

The Matter of theſe Offences being moſt in private, and ſo not publickly taken Notice of, They made a fair Show and kept good Quarter towards each other. And the King conſenting to all that the Commiſſioner propoſed with Reference to the Publick, being indeed abundantly ſatisfied with his Comportment, and at parting promiſing to give him the Office of Treaſurer, when by Crawford's refuſing to ſubſcribe it ſhould become void; They, with all their Biſhops, returned again for Scotland with incurable Jealouſy of Lautherdale, who remained waiting upon the King, and reſolved to croſs all their Deſigns He could, and quietly to expect a better Opportunity to undo what He could not for the preſent prevent.

The Commiſſioner and Biſhops return to Scotland.

It is Time now to return to the Parliament of England, which, according to the Time of the Prorogation, met again in March towards the Entrance into the Year 1664: When at their firſt Meeting the King informed them at large of the Inſurrection that had been endeavoured in the Summer before in Yorkſhire, which, how fooliſhly ſoever contrived, was a very great Inſtance of the Diſtemper of the Nation; that three Years after the diſbanding of the Army, the Officers thereof ſhould remain ſtill ſo unquiet, as to hope to give any ſignal Diſturbance to the Peace of the Kingdom, by ſuch a Commotion as They could upon their Credit raiſe.

The Engliſh Parliament meets.

The continual Diſcourſe of Plots and Inſurrections had ſo wearied the King, that He even reſolved to give no more Countenance to any ſuch Informations, nor to trouble himſelf with Inquiry into them; but to leave the Peace of the Kingdom againſt any ſuch Attempts to the Vigilance of the civil Magiſtrates, and the Care of the Officers of the Militia, which He preſumed would be ſufficient to quell and ſuppreſs any ordinary fanatick Deſign. And upon this Reſolution, and to avoid the Reproach of the late Times, of contriving Plots only to commit Men to Priſon againſt whom there was any Prejudice, He totally neglected the firſt Information He received of this ſeditious Purpoſe. But when the Intelligence was continued from ſeveral Parts, and ſo particular for the Time and Place of the Rendezvous, and for the ſeizing upon the City of York; and there was Evidence that ſome Men of Eſtate and Fortune, and who were held wary and diſcreet Men, were engaged in it; his Majeſty thought it Time to provide againſt it, and not only commended the Care of it to the Lords Lieutenants and Deputy Lieutenants of the Counties adjacent, but ſent likewiſe ſeveral Troops of his own Horſe to poſſeſs the City of York before the Day appointed, and to attend ſome of the Places of the Rendezvous. And They came very ſeaſonably, and ſurpriſed many upon the very Place, before their Company was ſtrong enough to make Reſiſtance. Others did make ſome Reſiſtance, but quickly fled and were diſperſed. Many were taken, and upon their Examination behaved themſelves as if They were ſure to be quickly reſcued; for it appeared that They did believe that the Inſurrection would have been general throughout the Kingdom, and that all the diſbanded Army would have been brought together at ſeveral Rendezvouſes.

An Inſurrection intended in Yorkſhire.

But prevented.

All the Priſons in the North were ſo full, that the King thought it neceſſary to ſend down four or five of the Judges of the ſeveral Benches of Weſtminſter- fter-Hall to York, with a Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, to examine the whole Matter. There, though the Judges did not believe that They had diſcovered the Bottom of the whole Conſpiracy, They found Cauſe to condemn very many; whereof ſeventeen or eighteen were executed, ſome reprieved, and very many left in Priſon to be tried at the next Aſſizes. Amongſt thoſe who were executed, the Man who was moſt looked upon was one Rymer, of the Quality of the better Sort of Grand-Jurymen, and held a wiſe Man, and was known to be truſted by the greateſt Men who had been in Rebellion: And He was diſcovered by a Perſon of intimate Truſt with him, who had heretofore the ſame Affections with him, but would venture no more. He was a ſullen Man, and uſed few Words to excuſe himſelf, and none to hurt any Body elſe, though He was thought to know much, and that having a good Eſtate He would never have embarked in a Deſign that had no Probability of Succeſs. Some of the Priſoners declared, "that They were aſſured by thoſe who engaged "them, that ſuch and ſuch great Men would appear "at the Rendezvous or ſoon after." But that was not thought a ſufficient Ground to trouble any Man, though ſome of them were very liable to Suſpicion; ſince in all Combinations of that Kind, it is a moſt uſual Artifice to work upon weak Men, by perſuading them that other Men, of whom They have great Eſteem, are engaged in it, who in Truth know Nothing of it.

Some of the Plotters executed.

THE Judges were returned from York little Time before the Parliament met; and therefore the King thought it fit to awaken them to much Vigilance, by informing them with what Secrecy that Conſpiracy had been carried. And his Majeſty aſſured them, "that He was not yet at the Bottom of that Buſineſs; "and that it appeared manifeſtly, that this Conſpi- "racy was but a Branch of that which He had diſ- "covered as well as He could to them about two "Years ſince, and had been then executed nearer "Hand, if He had not by God's Goodneſs come to "the Knowledge of ſome of the principal Contrivers, "and ſo ſecured them from doing the Miſchief They "intended."

The King's Speech at the Meeting of the Parliament.

HIS Majeſty told them, "that They would won- "der, (yet He ſaid what was true) that They were "now even in thoſe Parts, when They ſee their "Friends under Trial and Execution, ſtill purſuing "the ſame Conſultations: And it was evident that "They had Correſpondence with deſperate Perſons "in moſt Counties, and a ſtanding Council in Lon- "don itſelf, from which They received their Directions, "and by whom They were adviſed to defer their laſt "intended Inſurrection. But thoſe Orders ſerved on- "ly to diſtract them, and came too late to prevent "their Deſtruction." He ſaid, "He knew more of "their Intrigues, than They thought He did; and "hoped He ſhould ſhortly diſcover the Bottom: In "the mean Time He deſired the Parliament, that "They might all be as watchful to prevent, as They "were to contrive their Miſchief." He ſaid, "He "could not upon this Occaſion omit to tell them, "that theſe deſperate Men in their Counſels (as ap- "peared by ſeveral Examinations) had not been all "of one Mind in the Ways of carrying on their "wicked Reſolutions. Some would ſtill inſiſt upon "the Authority of the Long Parliament, of which "They ſay They have Members enough willing to "meet: Others have fancied to themſelves, by ſome "Computation of their own, upon ſome Clauſe in "the Triennial Bill, that this preſent Parliament was "at an End ſome Months ſince; and that for Want of "new Writs They may aſſemble themſelves, and chuſe "Members for Parliament; and that this is the beſt "Expedient to bring themſelves together for their "other Purpoſes. For the Long Parliament," his "Majeſty ſaid, "that He and They together could "do no more than He had done to inform and "compoſe the Minds of Men; let them proceed "upon that at their Peril. But He thought there "had been Nothing done to diſabuſe Men in reſpect "of the Triennial Bill. He confeſſed that He had "often himſelf read over that Bill; and though there "is no Colour for the Fancy of the Determination "of this Parliament; yet He would not deny to "them, that He had always expected that They "would, and even wondered that They had not "conſidered the wonderful Clauſes in that Bill, which "had paſſed in a Time very uncareful for the Dignity "of the Crown, or the Security of the People." His Majeſty deſired the Speaker and the Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, "that They would once "give that Triennial Bill a Reading in their Houſe; "and then in God's Name They might do what "They thought fit for him, themſelves, and the "whole Kingdom." His Majeſty ſaid, "that He "needed not tell them how much He loved Parlia- "ments: Never King was ſo much beholden to Par- "liaments as He had been; nor did He think that "the Crown could ever be happy without frequent "Parliaments. But He wiſhed them to aſſure them- "ſelves, that if He ſhould think otherwiſe, He would "never ſuffer a Parliament to come together, by the "Means preſcribed by that Bill."

HE renewed his Thanks to them "for the free "Supply They gave him the laſt Seſſion of four "Subſidies; yet He could not but tell them, that "that Supply was fallen much ſhort of what He ex- "pected and They intended. That it would hardly "be believed, yet They knew it to be true, that "very many Perſons, who have Eſtates of three or "four thouſand Pounds by the Year, do not pay "for theſe four Subſidies ſixteen Pounds: So that "whereas They intended and declared, that they ſhould "be collected according to former Precedents, they do not "now ariſe to Half the Proportion they did in the "Time of Queen Elizabeth; and yet ſure the Crown "wants more now than it did then, and the Subject "is at leaſt as well able to give." His Majeſty ſaid, "the Truth is, by the Licenſe of the late ill Time, "and ill Humour of this, too many of the People, "and even of thoſe who make fair Profeſſions, be- "lieve it to be no Sin to defraud the Crown of any "Thing that is due to it. That They no ſooner "gave him Tonnage and Poundage, than Men were "deviſing all the Means They could to ſteal Cuſtom; "nor could the Farmers be ſo vigilant for the Col- "lection, as others were to ſteal the Duties. They "gave him the Exciſe, which all People abroad be- "lieved to be the moſt inſenſible Impoſition that can "be laid upon a People: What Conſpiracies and "Combinations were entered into againſt it by the "Brewers, who He was ſure did not bear the Bur- "den themſelves, even to bring that Revenue to No- "thing, They would hear in Weſtminſter-Hall. They "had given him the Chimney-Money, which They had "Reaſon to believe was a growing Revenue, for "Men build at leaſt faſt enough; and They would "therefore wonder, that it was already declined, and "that this Half Year brings in leſs than the former "did." He deſired them therefore, "that They "would review that Bill; and ſince He was ſure that "They would have him receive whatſoever They "gave, that He might have the collecting and huſ- "banding of it by his own Officers, and then He "doubted not but to improve that Receipt, and He "would be cozened as little as He could."

HIS Majeſty concluded with "deſiring and con- "juring them to keep a very good Correſpondence "together, that it might not be in the Power of any "ſeditious or factious Spirits to make them jealous of "each other, or either of them jealous of him, till "They ſee him pretend one Thing and do another, "which He was ſure They had never yet done." He assured them, " it should be in Nobody's Power to " make him jealous of them." And so desired them, " that They would dispatch what They found ne- " cessary, that They might be ready for a Session " within two Months or thereabout, because the Sea- " son of the Year would invite them all to take the " Country Air."

It was very happy for his Majesty, that He did cut out their Work to their Hand, and asked no Money of them, and limited them a short Time to continue together. It made their Counsels very unanimous: And though They raised no new Taxes and Impositions upon the People, They made what They had before raised much more valuable to the King than it was before, by passing other Acts and Declarations for the explaining many Things, and the better collecting the Money They had formerly given; which much added to his Majesty's Profit without grieving the People, who were rather gratified in the Remedies which were provided against Frauds and Cozenage.

The Triennial Bill repealed.

The Parliament had sate but very little more than ten Days, when They presented a Bill to his Majesty for the Repeal of the Triennial Bill, which He had recommended to them; which was so grateful to him, that He came in Person to the House to pass it and to thank them: And He told them, " that every good " *English*man would thank them for it; for it could only " have served to discredit Parliaments, to make the " Crown jealous of Parliaments and Parliaments of the " Crown, and persuaded neighbour Princes that England " was not governed under a Monarch." The Truth is: It had passed in a very jealous and seditious Time, when the Wickedness was first in hatching, that ripened afterwards to a dismal Perfection; and when all, who were sworn never to consent to the Disherison of the Crown, thought only of preserving their own Inheritance which They had gotten, or improving it at the Expence of the Crown; and made it manifest enough, that it should wither, at least while it stood upon the Head of that King; for at that Time the Conspiracy went no farther, that is amongst those who had then Credit to promote its Passage, though They were weak Men who thought it could rest there.

Some Acts passed.

As They made this Entrance, so They were wholly intent upon Matters of Moment, and dispatched all They intended to do within the two Months, in which the King desired They would be ready for a Prorogation. And as there was greater Order and Unanimity in their Debates, so They dispatched more Business of publick Importance and Consequence, than any other Parliament had done in twice the Time: For, besides the Repeal of the odious Bill before mentioned, They made a very good additional Bill for the Chimney-Money, which made that Revenue much more considerable; and They passed likewise another Bill against the frequenting of Conventicles, which was looked upon as the greatest Discountenance the Parliament had yet given to all the Factions in Religion, and if it had been vigorously executed would no Doubt have produced a thorough Reformation. They made likewise a very good Act, and very necessary for a Time of such Corruption, that had contracted new Ways of Dishonesty and Villainy that former Times had not thought of, when many unworthy and cowardly Masters of Ships and Seamen had been contented to be robbed, and to suffer all their Owners Goods to be taken, upon an Allowance made to them by the Pirates; for the Discovery and Punishment whereof the Law had not enough provided. They therefore presented a Bill to the King, " for the " Discovery and Punishment of all such treacherous " and infamous Actions; and for the Reward of such " honest and stout Seamen, as should manfully and " courageously defend their Owners Goods, and there- " in maintain the Honour of the Nation."

All this They presented to his Majesty, and it was confirmed by his Royal Assent on the 17th of May; when his Majesty, after giving such Thanks to them as They deserved, told them, " He did not " intend to bring them together again till the Month " of November, that They might enjoy the Summer " in the Transaction of their own Affairs: Yet be- " cause there might some emergent Occasion fall out, " that might make him wish to find them together " sooner, He would prorogue them only to August; " and before the Day They should have seasonable " Notice, by Proclamation, not to give their Atten- " dance, except such Occasion should fall out." And so They were prorogued to a Day in August, but met not till November following.

The Parliament prorogued.

During this short Session of Parliament, They, who were very solicitous to promote a War with Holland, forgat not what They had to do; but They quickly discerned that it was not a good Season to mention the giving of Money (which the King himself had forborne to mention, that the People might see one Session of Parliament pass without granting new Impositions, which They had not yet seen), and therefore it would be as unseasonable to speak of a War. However, They made such an Approach towards it, as might make a farther Advance much more easy.

The Merchants remonstrate against the Dutch.

The Merchants in the Committee of Trade much lamented the Obstructions and Discouragements, which They had long found in their Commerce by Sea with other Nations, and which were not removed even by the blessed Return of the King; all which They imputed to the Pride and Insolence of the Hollanders, " who," They said, " observed no Laws of Com- " merce, or any Conditions which themselves con- " sented to. That by their Fraud and Practice the " English were almost driven out of the East and West- " Indies, and had their Trade in Turkey and in Africa " much diminished. In Sum, that besides many in- " sufferable Indignities offered by them to his Ma- " jesty and to the Crown of England, his Subjects had " in few Years sustained the Damage of seven or " eight hundred thousand Pounds Sterling."

All which, with some particular Instances, being reported from the Committee of Trade to the House, They had desired an Audience from his Majesty, and then presented this Grievance to him, and desired his Majesty, " that He would give such Order in it, as " to his Wisdom should seem fit, that might produce " just and honourable Satisfaction." The King, who continued firm to his former Resolution, answered them, " that He would transmit the Address " They had presented to him to his Resident at the " Hague, with Order that He should inform the States " of it, and require Satisfaction, which He hoped " the States General would yield unto, rather than " compel him to demand Justice in another Way." The Answer pleased them well, nor could They wish that the Prosecution should be put into a better Hand than the Resident's, who was a Member of the House, and a Man who had inflamed them more than the Merchants themselves against the Dutch.

Character of Sir George Downing the Resident in Holland.

That Resident was Sir George Downing, a Man of an obscure Birth, and more obscure Education, which He had received in Part in New England: He had passed through many Offices in Cromwell's Army, of Chaplain, Scoutmaster, and other Employments, and at last got a very particular Credit and Confidence with him, and under that Countenance married a beautiful Lady of a very noble Extraction, which was the Fate of many bold Men in that presumptuous Time. And when Cromwell had subdued the Dutch to that Temper He wished, and had thereupon made a Peace with them, He sent this Man to reside as his Agent with them, being a Man of a proud and insolent Spirit, and who would add to any imperious

Command

Command of his, ſomewhat of the Bitterneſs of his own Spirit.

AND He did ſo fully execute his Charge in all Things, eſpecially when He might manifeſt his Animoſity againſt the Royal Party, that when the King himſelf had once, during his Reſidence at Bruſſels, for his Divertiſement made a Journey incognito, with not above four Perſons, to ſee Amſterdam and from thence the Towns of North Holland; Downing coming to have Notice of it delivered a Memorial to the States of Holland, wherein He encloſed the third Article of their Treaty, by which They were obliged "not to "ſuffer any Traitor, Rebel or any other Perſon, who "was declared an Enemy to the Commonwealth of "England, to reſide or ſtay in their Dominions;" and told them, "that Charles Stuart and the Marquis of "Ormond had been lately in Amſterdam, and were ſtill "in ſome Places adjacent;" and required "that They "might not be permitted to remain in any Part of "their Dominions." Whereupon the States of Holland ſent preſently to the Princeſs Royal, who was then at her Country Houſe at Hounſlerdike, "that if "her Brother were then with her or ſhould come to "her, He ſhould forthwith depart out of their Pro-"vince:" And not ſatisfied herewith, They publiſhed an Order in the Hague to the ſame Purpoſe, which was ſent to Amſterdam and other Towns according to their Cuſtom.

WITH this rude Punctuality He behaved himſelf during the Life of Cromwell, and whilſt his Son retained the Uſurpation; but when He ſaw him thrown out with that Contempt, and that the Government was not like to be ſettled again till there was a Reſort to the old Foundation, He bethought himſelf how He might have a Reſerve of the King's Favour. And the Marquis of Ormond making about that Time a Journey incognito to the Hague, to treat of a Marriage for his eldeſt Son with a noble Lady whoſe Friends lived there, Downing found Opportunity to have a private Conference with him, and made Offer of his Service to the King, if his Devotion might be concealed, without which it would be uſeleſs to his Majeſty. And for an Earneſt of his Fidelity, He informed him of ſome Particulars which were of Moment for the King to know: Amongſt which one was, "that a Perſon, who in Reſpect of his very "honourable Extraction, and the preſent Obligations "himſelf had to the Royal Family, was not ſuſpected, "gave him, as He had long done, conſtant Intelli-"gence of what the King did, and of many particu-"lars which in their Nature deſerved to be more "ſecret, which He had always ſent to Cromwell whilſt "He was living; but ſince his Death, having a Re-"lution to ſerve the King, He had never diſſerved "him, and would hereafter give him Notice of any "Thing that it would be neceſſary for him to be "informed of with Reference to England or to Hol-"land."

THE Marquis thought it very fit to accept of ſuch an Inſtrument, and promiſed him "to acquaint his "Majeſty with his good Affection, who He preſumed "would receive it graciouſly, and give him as much "Encouragement to continue it as his preſent Con-"dition would permit." To which the other replied, "that He knew the King's preſent Condition too "well to expect any Reward from him: But if his "Majeſty would vouchſafe, when He ſhould be re-"ſtored, to confirm to him the Office He then held "of a Teller in the Exchequer, and continue him in "this Employment He then had in Holland, where "He preſumed He ſhould be able to do him more "Service than a Stranger could do, He would think "himſelf abundantly rewarded." Of all which when the Marquis advertiſed the King at his Return to Bruſſels, He had Authority to aſſure him "of the "King's Acceptation, and that all that He expected "ſhould be made good."

THIS was the Ground and Reaſon, that when the King came to the Hague the Year following to embark for England, He received Downing ſo graciouſly and knighted him, and left him there as his Reſident; which They who were near the King, and knew Nothing of what had paſſed, wondered at as much as Strangers who had obſerved his former Behaviour. And the States themſelves, who would not at ſuch a Time of publick Joy do any Thing that might be ingrateful to his Majeſty, could not forbear to lament in private, "that his Majeſty would depute a Perſon "to have his Authority, who had never uſed any "other Dialect to perſuade them to do any Thing "He propoſed, but Threats if They ſhould not do "it, and who at ſeveral Times had diſobliged moſt "of their Perſons by his Inſolence." And from the Time of his Majeſty's Departure from thence, He never made thoſe Repreſentations which Men in thoſe Miniſteries uſed to do, but put the worſt Commentaries upon all their Actions. And when He ſate afterwards as a Member of the Houſe, returning ſtill in the Interval of Parliament to his Employment at the Hague, He took all Opportunities to inveigh againſt their Uſurpations in Trade; and either did or pretended to know many of their Myſteries of Iniquity, in opening of which He rendered himſelf acceptable to the Houſe, though He was a voluminous Speaker, which naturally They do not like.

He endeavours to bring on a War.

WHEN this Province was committed to him of Expoſtulation for the Injuries ſuſtained in ſeveral Places from the Dutch, He had his Wiſh, and uſed little Modeſty in the urging of it. They anſwered, "that moſt of the Particulars of which He com-"plained were put under Oblivion by the late Treaty, "and that in Conſideration thereof They had yielded "to many Particulars for the Benefit of the Engliſh; "and that for the other Particulars, they were like-"wiſe by the ſame Treaty referred to a Proceſs in "Juſtice, of which They had yet no Cauſe to com-"plain: Nor had there been any Action pretended "to be committed ſince the Treaty was concluded," which was not many Months before, "that might "occaſion a Miſunderſtanding." And ſurely at this Time when theſe Things were urged all this was true: But He, according to the Method He had been accuſtomed to, inſiſted upon his own Demands; and frequently reproached them with their former Submiſſions to Cromwell, and their preſent Preſumptions upon the Goodneſs and Generoſity of the King.

IT is without Queſtion, that the States General did, by the Standard of their own Warineſs and Circumſpection, not ſuſpect that the King did intend to make a War upon them. They well knew the Streights and Neceſſities in which his Affairs ſtood, with Reference to Money, and to the ſeveral Diſtempers of the Nation in Matters of Religion, which might probably grow more dangerous if there were a foreign War; and concluded, that Downing's Importunities and Menaces were but the Reſults of his own Impetuoſity, and that the King would not be ſolicitous to interrupt and part with his own Peace. And therefore their own Ships They ſent out as They uſed to do, and thoſe for the Coaſt of Guinea better prepared and ſtronger than of Courſe. Nor was the Royal Company leſs vigilant to carry on that Trade, but about the ſame Time ſent a ſtronger Fleet of Merchants Ships than They had ever before done; and for their better Encouragement the King lent them two of his own Ships for a Convoy.

The inſolent Behaviour of the Dutch on the Coaſt of Guinea.

AND at this Time They gave the King an Advantage in Point of Juſtice, and which concerned all other Nations in Point of Traffick and Commerce. It had been begun by them in the Eaſt-Indies; where They had planted themſelves in great and ſtrong Towns, and had many Harbours well fortified, in which They conſtantly maintained a great Number of good and ſtrong Ships; by which They were abſolute Maſters of

thoſe Seas, and forced the neighbour Kings and Princes to enter into ſuch Terms of Amity with them as They thought fit to require. And if They found that any advantageous Trade was driven in any Port by any other Nation, They preſently ſent their Ships to lie before that Port, and denounced War againſt the Prince to whom that Port belonged; which being done, They publiſhed a Declaration, "that it ſhould not be "lawful for any Nation whatſoever to trade in the "Territories of that Prince with whom They then "were in War." And upon this Pretence They would not ſuffer an Engliſh Ship, belonging to the Eaſt-India Company, to enter into a Port to lade and take in a Cargaſon of Goods, that had been provided by their Factors there before there was any Mention or Imagination of ſuch a War, and of which there was no other Inſtance of Hoſtility than the very Declaration. And at this Time They tranſplanted this new Prerogative to Guinea: And having as They ſaid, for there was no other Evidence of it, a War with one of thoſe Princes, They would not ſuffer the Engliſh Ships to enter into thoſe Harbours where they had always traded. The King received Animadverſion of this unheard of Inſolence and Uſurpation, and added this more juſt Complaint to the former, and required his Reſident "to demand a poſitive Renunciation of all "Pretence to ſuch an odious Uſurpation, and a Re-"vocation of thoſe Orders which their Officers had "publiſhed." To this Complaint and Demand They deferred to make Anſwer, till their Ambaſſadour had preſented a Grievance to the King.

An Engliſh Captain ſeizes a Dutch Fort on the Coaſt of Africa.

One of thoſe Ships of War, which the King had lent to the Royal Company for the Convoy of their Fleet to Guinea, had in the Voyage thither aſſaulted and taken a Fort belonging to the Dutch near Cape Verde; which was of more Incommodity to them than of Benefit to the Engliſh. Of this Invaſion their Ambaſſadour made a loud Complaint, and demanded, "that the Captain might be puniſhed ſeverely; and in "the mean Time that the King would give a preſent "Order to him, the Ambaſſadour, for the Re-delivery "of the Place and all that was in it, and He would "ſend it to his Maſters, who would forthwith ſend a "Ship to demand it." The King had in Truth heard Nothing of it; and aſſured the Ambaſſadour, "that the Captain, if He had done any ſuch Thing, "had not the leaſt Commiſſion or Authority for the "doing it; and that He was ſure He was upon his "Way homeward, ſo that He might be expected "ſpeedily; and then He ſhould be ſure to undergo "ſuch Puniſhment as the Nature of his Offence re-"quired, when the Matter ſhould be examined, and "They ſhould then receive full Reparation." This Anſwer how reaſonable ſoever ſatisfied them not: Nothing would ſerve their Turn but a preſent Reſtitution, before his Majeſty could be informed of the Provocation or Ground that had produced ſo unwarrantable an Action. They gave preſent Orders for the equipping a very great Fleet, and the raiſing many Land Soldiers, making greater Preparations for War than They had made in many Years before. They likewiſe prepared a ſtrong Fleet for Guinea, and granted a Commiſſion (which was publiſhed in Print) to the Commander in Chief, "to make War upon the "Engliſh in thoſe Parts, and to do them all the Miſ-"chief He could."

The Dutch prepare a ſtrong Fleet for Guinea.

Prince Rupert, who had been heretofore with the Fleet then under his Command, in the Beginning of the King's Reign, upon the Coaſt of Guinea (and by the Report and Teſtimony He gave of that Coaſt the Royal Company had received greater Encouragement), now upon this inſolent Demeanour of the Dutch, and publiſhing the Commiſſion They had ſent to their Commander in Chief, offered his Service to the King, "to ſail into thoſe Parts with ſuch a Fleet as his Ma-"jeſty thought fit to ſend, with which He made little "Doubt to ſecure Trade, and abate the Preſumption "of the Dutch." And hereupon a Fleet was likewiſe preparing for that Purpoſe, to be commanded by Prince Rupert. The Engliſh prepare on likewiſe.

The Parliament had before declared, when They made their Addreſs to the King againſt the Dutch for obſtructing the Trade, "that They would with their "Lives and Fortunes aſſiſt his Majeſty againſt all "Oppreſſions whatſoever, which He ſhould meet "with in the Removal of thoſe Obſtructions;" which They believed would terrify, but in Truth made the Dutch merry: And in ſome of their Declarations or Anſwers to Downing's Memorials, They mentioned it with too much Pride and Contempt. And in this Poſture the Diſputes were when the Parliament met again in November, which came together for the moſt Part without a Deſire either to give Money or make War. And Downing, who laboured heartily to incenſe us and to provoke them, in all his Diſpatches declared, "that all thoſe Inſolencies proceeded only "from the Malignity of the States of Holland, which "could vent itſelf no farther than in Words; but "that the States General, without whoſe Concurrence "no War could be made, abhorred the Thought of "it:" And there is no Doubt that was true. And the Dutch Ambaſſadour, who remained at London, and was a very honeſt weak Man, and did all the Offices He could to prevent it, did not think it poſſible it could come to paſs; "and that there might be ſome Scuffles "upon the Coaſt of Guinea, by the Direction of the "Weſt-India Company, of whoſe Actions the States "General took Notice, but would cauſe Juſtice to be "done upon Complaint, and not ſuffer the publick "Peace to be diſturbed upon their Pretences." And ſo the King forbore to demand any Supply from the Parliament, becauſe an ordinary Supply would rather diſcredit his Demands than advance them, and He could not expect an extraordinary Supply but when the War was unqueſtionable. And the States General at this Time were made a Property by the States of Holland (who had given private Orders for their own Concernments), and preſented an humble Deſire to the King by their Ambaſſadour, "that Prince Rupert's "Fleet might ſtay in Harbour, as theirs likewiſe that "was prepared for Guinea ſhould do, till ſome Means "might be found for the Accommodation of all "Differences." Whereas before They pretended, that They would ſend their Guinea Fleet through the Channel, convoyed by their Admiral with a Fleet of fifty Sail; which Report had before ſtopped Prince Rupert, when He was under Sail for Guinea, to wait and expect that Piece of Bravery. But this Addreſs from the States General made all Men believe there would be an Accommodation, without ſo much as any Hoſtility in Guinea. The Parliament meets.

But it was quickly diſcovered, that They were the honeſter Men when They gave the worſt Words. For before the States General ſent to the King to ſtop Prince Rupert in Harbour, "and that their Fleets "ſhould likewiſe remain in their Harbours," the States of Holland, or that Committee that was qualified by them, had with great Privacy ſent Orders to De Ruyter, who was in the Mediterranean, "to make all "poſſible Haſte with his Fleet to go to the Coaſt of "Guinea, and not only to retake the Fort near Cape "Verde that the Engliſh had taken from them, but "likewiſe to take what Places He could which were "in Poſſeſſion of the Engliſh, and to do them what "Damage He could in thoſe Parts:" So that They might well offer that their Fleet ſhould now remain in their Harbours in Holland. The treacherous Behaviour of the Dutch.

When De Ruyter had been ſent into the Mediterranean, the Pretence was, that it was againſt the Pirates of Algiers and Tunis, who had in Truth preyed very much upon the Dutch, taken very many of their Ships, and had Abundance of their Subjects in Chains. And when that Fleet was ſent into the Mediterranean, their Ambaſſadour had deſired the King, "that his Ma-"jeſty's

" jesty's Fleet that was then in those Parts might " upon all Occasions join with De Ruyter, when Op- " portunity should be offered thereby to infest the " Turks;" which the King consented to, and sent Orders accordingly. But the Dutch had no such Purpose: His Business was to ransom their Captives with Money, and not to exact the Delivery of them by Force; and to make an Accommodation for the Time to come as well as He could. And when the English Fleet was at any Time in Pursuit of any of the Turks Vessels, and expected that the Dutch, by whom they must pass, would have given a little Stop to their Flight, which They might easily have done; They rather assisted than obstructed their Escape. And having made a very dishonourable Peace with the Pirates, He made Haste to prosecute his Orders for the Coast of Guinea.

Upon which their Ships are seized.

As soon as the King knew of this impudent Affront and that De Ruyter was in Truth gone out of the Mediterranean, He thought He might justly seize upon any Ships of theirs, to satisfy the Damages that He could not but sustain by De Ruyter in Guinea: And so, it being the Season of the Year that the Dutch Fleet returned with their Wines from Bourdeaux, Rochelle, and other Parts of France, such of them as were forced by the Weather to put into the English Harbours were seized upon. And the Duke of York, having put himself on Board with a Fleet of about fifty Sail, upon the Report of the Dutch being come out to defend their Ships, took many others, even upon their own Coasts; which They chose rather to suffer, than to venture out of their Ports to relieve them. However there was not any one of all those Ships suffered to be unladen, or any Prejudice done to them; but they were all preserved unhurt, till Notice might arrive from Guinea what De Ruyter had done there.

The Dutch commence Hostilities in Guinea.

But undoubted Intelligence arrived in a very short Time after, that De Ruyter had declared and begun the War upon the Coast of Africa, not only by a forceable retaking the Fort which had been taken from them, and which his Majesty had offered to deliver, but by seizing upon several English Ships in those Parts, and by assaulting and taking other his Majesty's Forts and Places, and exercising all the Acts of Hostility which his Commission authorised him to do.

They refuse to deliver the Island of Poleroone.

AND in a very short Time after, the East-India Company complained and informed the King, " that " when their Officer had demanded the Redelivery of " the Isle of Poleroone according to the Article of the " late Treaty, and delivered the Letters and Orders " from the States General and States of Holland, which " their Ambassadours had given at London, to the Go- " vernour and Captain of that Island; He, after mak- " ing him stay two or three Days there with his Ship " and the Men He had brought with him, told him, " that upon a better Perusal of the Orders which He had " brought, He found that they were not sufficient; and " therefore till He should receive fuller Orders, He could " not give up the Place." And so the Officer and Ship, which had been sent at a great Charge, were necessitated to return without any other Effect than the Affront and Indignity to his Majesty.

WHEN there was now no Remedy, and the War was actually made upon the King upon what Provocation soever, there was Nothing to be done but to resort to the Parliament, which had been so earnest to enter into it. A Fleet must be prepared equal to what the Dutch would infallibly make ready against the Spring, and worthy of the Presence of the Duke of York, who was impatient to engage his own Person in the Conduct of it; and the King had given his Promise to him that He should, when He had, God knows, no Purpose that there should be a War. It was quickly discovered, that there was not the same Alacrity towards a War now, after it was begun, in the Parliament, as there had been when They made their Vote: And They would have been glad that any Expedient might have been found for a Reconciliation, and that the Captain might have been called in Question, who first gave Offence by taking the Fort from the Dutch near Cape Verde, which some had pressed for when He came Home, before any more Mischief was done; and the not calling him in Question made many believe, that He had done Nothing without Warrant or Promise of Protection.

THE Dutch still disclaimed all Thought or Purpose of War, and seemed highly offended with their Governour of Poleroone, and protested, " that the Not- " delivery of the Place proceeded only from Want of " an Order from the Governour of Batavia, which " Order came the next Day after the English Ship was " departed: But that They had given Notice of it to " the English Factory at Bantam, that the same or " another English Ship might return and receive it; " and They were confident that it was then in the " Hand of the English." But it was now too late to expect any honourable Peace, at least without making very notable Preparations for a War, which could not be done without ready Money. And whatever Orders had been given for the Preservation of the Dutch Ships, it quickly appeared that much of them had been embezzled or disposed of, before they were brought to any Judicatory, or adjudged to be Prize; and there was too much Cause to fear, that the rest would be disposed of to other Purposes than the Support of the War; though Nothing was more positively spoken, than that the War would maintain itself.

Measures taken to dispose the Parliament to grant Supplies for a War.

THE Parliament still promised fairly, and entered upon Consultation how and what Money to raise. And now the King commanded the Chancellor and the Treasurer to meet with those Members of the House of Commons, with whom They had used to consult, and to whom the King had joined others upon whom He was told He might more depend, and to adjust together what Sum should be proposed, and how and in what Manner to propose and conduct it. It was about the Month of January. And though the Duke took indefatigable Pains, by going himself, sometimes to Portsmouth and sometimes to Chatham, to cause the Ships and all Provisions to be ready, that He might be at Sea before the Dutch; yet let what Advance could be made, as indeed there was great, Nothing could be said to be done, till a great Stock of ready Money could be provided; and it would be long after the Parliament had done their Part, before ready Money would be got: And therefore no more Time must be lost, without taking a particular Resolution.

A Meeting of some Lords and principal Commoners for that Purpose.

THE Meeting of those Persons the King appointed was at Worcester-House, where the Chancellor and Treasurer (who were known to be averse from the War) told the rest, " that there was no more De- " bate now to be, War or no War: It was come " upon us, and We were now only to contrive the " best Way of carrying it on with Success; which " could only be done by raising a great present Sum " of Money, that the Enemy might see that We were " prepared to continue it as well as to begin." They who were most desirous of the War, as Sir Harry Bennet and Mr. Coventry (who were in Truth the Men who brought it upon the Nation), with their Friends, were of the Opinion, " that there should not be a " great Sum demanded at present, but only so much " as might carry out the Fleet in the Spring, and " that sufficient Provisions might be made for the " Summer Service: And then, when the War was " once thoroughly entered into, another and a better " Supply might be gotten about Michaelmas, when " there was Reason to hope, that some good Success " would dispose all Men to a frank Prosecution of " the War." Whereas these Gentlemen had hitherto inflamed the King with an Assurance, " that He " could not aſk more Money of the Parliament than " They would readily give him, if He would be en- " gaged in this War which the whole Kingdom ſo " much deſired."

THE Chancellor and the Treaſurer were of Opinion, " that the Houſe of Commons could never be in a " better Diſpoſition to give, than They were at pre- " ſent; that hereafter They might grow weary, and " apt to find Fault with the Conduct, eſpecially when " They found the Country not ſo well pleaſed with " the War as They were now conceived to be: " Whereas, now the War was begun, and the King " engaged in it as much as He could be after ten " Battles, and all upon their Deſire and their Pro- " miſe; They could not refuſe to give any Thing " propoſed within the Compaſs of that Reaſon, which " all underſtanding Men might examine and judge " of. That it was evident enough, that the true " Ground of all the Confidence the Dutch had, was " from their Opinion of the King's Neceſſities and " Want of Money, and their Belief that the Parlia- " ment would ſupply him very ſparingly, and not " long to continue ſuch an Expence, as They very " well knew that a War at Sea would require: And " They would be much confirmed in this their Ima- " gination, if at the Beginning They ſhould ſee the " Parliament give him ſuch a Sum of Money, as " ſeemed to be implied by what had been ſaid. That " They therefore thought it abſolutely neceſſary, that " the King ſhould propoſe as much, that is, that his " Friends ſhould move for ſuch a Sum, as might " upon a reaſonable Computation, which every Man " would be ready to make, and of which wiſe Men " upon Experience would eaſily make an Eſtimate, " carry on the War for a full Year; that is, for the " ſetting out the preſent Fleet and paying it off upon " its Return, and for the ſetting out another Fleet " the next Spring. If this were now done, his Ma- " jeſty would not be involved in importunate Ne- " ceſſities the next Winter; but He might calmly " and deliberately conſult upon ſuch farther Supplies, " as the Experience of what would be then paſt " ſhould ſuggeſt to be neceſſary: And that this " would give his Majeſty ſuch a Reputation with all " his Neighbours, and ſuch Terror to his Enemies, " that it would probably diſpoſe them to Peace."

THEY told them, " the beſt Method to compute " what the Expence might amount to in a Year, " would be by reflecting upon the vaſt Diſproportion " of the Charge We were now already engaged in, " and what had been eſtimated four Months ſince, " when the War was deſigned. That it was well " known to Mr. Coventry, who had been always pre- " ſent at thoſe Conferences, that it had been ſaid by " the moſt experienced Sea Officers, and thoſe who " had fought all the late Battles againſt the Dutch, " that a Fleet of forty or fifty ſuch Ships, as the King's " were, would be Strength ſufficient to beat all the Ships the " Dutch had out of the narrow Seas; and one very " eminent Man amongſt them ſaid, He would not de- " ſire above fifty Ships to fight with all They had, and " that He was confident that a greater Number than fifty " could never be brought to fight orderly or uſefully: And " yet that there were at preſent no fewer than four- " ſcore good Ships preparing for the Duke. And " the Charge in many other Particulars appeared al- " ready to amount to double the Sum that was firſt " computed."

THEY concluded, " that a leſs Sum than two Mil- " lions and a Half" (which is five and twenty hun- dred thouſand Pounds Sterling) " ought not to be " propoſed, and being once propoſed ought to be in- " ſiſted on and purſued without conſenting to any " Diminution; for Nobody could conceive that it " would do more than maintain the War one Year, " which the Parliament could not refuſe to provide " for in the Beginning, as there was ſo much in " Truth of it already expended in the Preparations " and Expedition the Duke had made in November, " when He went to Sea upon the Fame of the Dutch " Fleet's Intention to convoy their Guinea Ships " through the Channel."

THERE was not a Man in the Company, who did not heartily wiſh that that Sum or a greater might be propoſed and granted: But They all, though They agreed in few other Things, proteſted, " that They " could not adviſe that ſo prodigious a Sum ſhould " be as much as named; and that They did not " know any one Man, ſince it could not be thought " fit that any Man who had Relation to the King's " Service ſhould move it, who had the Courage to " attempt it or would be perſuaded to it."

THE two Lords continued very obſtinate, " that " a leſs Sum ſhould not be named for the Reaſons " They had given," which the other confeſſed to be juſt; and They acknowledged too, " that the Pro- " poſition ought not to be made by any Man who " was related to the Court, or was thought to be in " any Grace there that might diſpoſe him, nor yet by " any Gentleman, how well ſoever thought of, who " was of a ſmall Eſtate, and ſo to pay little of ſo " great a Sum He was ſo liberal to give." They therefore deſired them " to name ſome of thoſe Mem- " bers, who were honeſt worthy Men, and looked " upon as Lovers of their Country, and of great For- " tunes, unſuſpected to have any Deſigns at Court; " and if They were not enough acquainted with them, " the Lords would find ſome Way by themſelves or " others to move them to it." Whereupon They named five or ſix Perſons very well known, of whom the Houſe had a very good Eſteem, but without any Hope that any of them would be prevailed with to undertake it. The Lords ſaid, " They would try " what might be done, and give them Notice the " next Day, that if it were poſſible it might be the " Buſineſs of the following Day."

THE Chancellor and the Treaſurer choſe three Norfolk Gentlemen of thoſe who had been named, becauſe They were good Friends and grateful to each other, and deſired them the next Day " that They might " confer together." They told them, " They knew " well the State of Affairs, the Parliament had en- " gaged the King in a War, that could not be car- " ried on without a vaſt Expence: And therefore if " at the Entrance into it there ſhould be a ſmall or " an ordinary Supply given, it would blaſt all their " Hopes, and ſtartle all other Princes from joining, " with whom the Dutch were not in Favour, and who " would be inclined to the King, if They ſaw ſuch " a Proviſion for the War as would be ſufficient to " continue it for ſome Time. And therefore They " deſired to confer with them, who upon all Occa- " ſions manifeſted good Affections to the King, and " whoſe Advice had a great Influence upon the Houſe, " upon the whole Matter how it might be conduct- " ed." They all conſented to what had been ſaid, and promiſed their own Concurrence and utmoſt En- deavours to compaſs what the King ſhould deſire. The Lords ſaid, " They promiſed themſelves more " from them, and that They would not only concur, " but propoſe what ſhould be neceſſary to be grant- " ed." And thereupon They enlarged upon the Charge which was already in View, and upon what was to be expected, and concluded " that two Mil- " lions and a Half were neceſſary to be inſiſted on;" and deſired, " that when the Debate ſhould be enter- " ed upon, which They hoped might be the next " Day, one of them would propoſe this Sum and the " other would ſecond it."

THEY looked long one upon another, as if They were ſurprized with the Sum. At laſt one of them ſaid, " that the Reaſons were unanſwerable for a " liberal Supply; yet He did not expect that ſo pro- " digious a Sum, which He believed had never yet

" been mentioned in Parliament to be granted at one " Time, would be propoſed: However He did not " think it too much, and that He would do the beſt " He could to anſwer any Objections which ſhould " be made againſt it, as He doubted many would; " but He confeſſed He durſt not propoſe it." Another was of the ſame Mind, and with many good Profeſſions deſired to be excuſed as to the firſt propoſing it. The third, who was Sir Robert Paſton, a Perſon of a much greater Eſtate than Both the other who had yet very good Fortunes, and a Gentleman of a very antient Extraction by his Father (and his Mother was Daughter to the Earl of Lindſey), declared very frankly, " that He was ſatisfied in his Con- " ſcience, that it would be very good for the King- " dom as well as for the King that ſuch a Sum ſhould " be granted: And therefore if They thought him " fit to do it, He would propoſe it the next Morn- " ing, let other Men think what They would of him " for it."

THE Lords gave him the Thanks They ought to do, and ſaid what was neceſſary to confirm him, and to thank the other Gentlemen for their Promiſe to ſecond him, and gave Notice to the reſt of the Reſolution, that They might call for the Debate the next Day; which was entered into with a general Chearfulneſs, every Man acknowledging the Neceſſity and the Engagement of the Houſe, but no Man adventuring to name the Proportion that ſhould be given. When the Houſe was in a deep Silence expecting that Motion, Sir Robert Paſton, who was no frequent Speaker, but delivered what He had a Mind to ſay very clearly, ſtood up, mentioned ſhortly the Obligation, the Charge of the War, and " that the pre- " ſent Supply ought to be ſuch as might as well ter- " rify the Enemy as aſſiſt the King; and therefore " He propoſed that They might give his Majeſty two " Millions and a Half, which would amount to five " and twenty hundred thouſand Pounds." The Silence of the Houſe was not broken; They ſate as in Amazement, until a Gentleman, who was believed to wiſh well to the King, without taking Notice of what had been propoſed, ſtood up, and moved that They might give the King a much leſs Proportion. But then the two others, who had promiſed to ſecond, renewed the Motion one after the other; which ſeemed to be entertained with a Conſent of many, and was contradicted by none: So that, after a ſhort Pauſe, no Man who had Relation to the Court ſpeaking a Word, the Speaker put it to the Queſtion, " whether " They would give the King five and twenty hundred " thouſand Pounds for the carrying on the War " againſt the Dutch;" and the Affirmative made a good Sound, and very few gave their Negative aloud, and it was notorious very many ſate ſilent. So the Vote was preſently drawn up into an Order; and the Houſe reſolved the next Day to be in a Committee, to agree upon the Way that ſhould be taken for the raiſing this vaſt Sum, the Proportion whereof could no more be brought into Debate.

Which is agreed to by the Houſe.

THIS brave Vote gave the King the firſt Liking of the War: It was above what He had expected or indeed wiſhed to be propoſed. And They, who had been at the firſt Conference, and delivered the Reſolution of the two Lords as impoſſible to be compaſſed, not without Inſinuation as if it were affected only to indiſpoſe the Houſe to the War (yet They did not think fit to vary from the Proportion, till They ſaw the Succeſs of the Propoſition, which the Lords were engaged to procure a fit Perſon to make); when They found the Concluſion to be ſuch as could be wiſhed, They commended the Counſel, and fell into another Extreme, that in the Thing itſelf and in the Conſequence did very much Harm; which ſhall be next mentioned, after I have ſaid that there appeared great Joy and Exaltation of Spirit upon this Vote, and not more in the Court than upon the Exchange, the Merchants generally being unſkilfully inclined to that War, above what their true Intereſt could invite them to, as in a ſhort Time afterwards They had Cauſe to confeſs.

THE King ſent to the Lord Mayor to call a Common Council, and commanded the Chancellor, Treaſurer, and other Lords of his Council, to go thither; who, upon the Credit of this Vote of the Houſe of Commons for this noble Supply, prevailed with the City preſently to furniſh the King with the Loan of two hundred thouſand Pounds; which being within few Days paid into the Hands of the Treaſurer of the Navy, all Preparations for the Fleet, and of whatever elſe was neceſſary for the Expedition, were provided with marvellous Alacrity: And the Parliament made what Haſte was poſſible to diſpatch the Bill, by which their great Preſent might be collected from the People.

IT hath been ſaid before, that in moſt vacant Places, upon the Death of any Members, Ways were found out to procure ſome of the King's domeſtick Servants to be elected in their Places; ſo that his Majeſty had many Voices there at his Devotion; which did not advance his Service. Theſe Men confidently ran out of the Houſe ſtill to inform the King of what was doing, commended this Man, and diſcommended another who deſerved better; and would many Times, when his Majeſty ſpake well of any Man, aſk his Majeſty " if He would give them " Leave to let that Perſon know how gracious his " Majeſty was to him, or to bring him to kiſs his " Hand." To which He commonly conſenting, every one of his Servants delivered ſome Meſſage from him to a Parliament-Man, and invited him to Court as if the King would be willing to ſee him. And by this Means the Rooms at Court, where the King was, were always full of the Members of the Houſe of Commons; this Man brought to kiſs his Hand, and the King induced to confer with that Man, and to thank him for his Affection, which never could conclude without ſome general Expreſſion of Grace or Promiſe, which the poor Gentleman always interpreted to his own Advantage, and expected ſome Fruit from it that it could never yield: All which, being contrary to all former Order, did the King no Good, and rendered thoſe unable to do him Service who were inclined to it.

THE new Secretary, and Sir Charles Berkley, who by this Time was entered very far into the King's Favour and his Confidence, were the chief, and by their Places had Acceſs to him in all Places and Hours: And They much diſliked the Officiouſneſs of the others, as if They preſumed to invade their Province. They thought it but their Due, that the King ſhould take his Meaſures of the Houſe of Commons by no other Report but theirs, nor diſpenſe his Graces there through any other Conduit. They took this Occaſion to careſs Sir Robert Paſton, who was a Stranger to them, and to magnify the Service He had done the King, and the great Senſe the King had of it, and that He did long to give him his own Thanks: They invited him to come to the Court, and Sir Charles Berkley told him as from the King, " that his Majeſty reſolved to make him a Baron." And by theſe daily Courtſhips and Importunities the Gentleman, who was well ſatisfied with what He had done, and never propoſed any Advantage to himſelf from it, was amuſed, and thought He was not to refuſe any Honour the King thought him worthy of, nor to neglect thoſe Graces which were offered to him by Perſons of their Intereſt. Yet He made not Haſte to go to the Court, believing that it might make him leſs capable of ſerving the King, and that any Favour his Majeſty ſhould do him would be more ſeaſonable hereafter than at preſent, leſt He might be thought to have made that Motion in the Houſe upon Promiſe of the other Reward. Yet after continued Invitations

Sir H. Bennet and Sir C. Berkley careſs and amuſe Sir Rob. Paſton.

He

He went thither, and thoſe Gentlemen preſented him to the King, who ſpake very graciouſly to him, told him, "He had done him great Service, which He "would never forget," and many other princely Expreſſions, and "that He ſhould be glad to ſee him "often," but no Particular to that Purpoſe which had been mentioned to him.

When He went next, He found his Majeſty's Countenance the ſame: But They, who had courted and amuſed him ſo much, grew every Day more dry and reſerved towards him; of which He complained to a Friend of his who He knew had Intereſt in the Chancellor, and deſired him to acquaint him with all that had paſſed, who had not till then heard that He had been at Court, and when He was informed of the whole Relation was very much troubled, well knowing, that how acceptable ſoever thoſe Kinds of Courtſhips were for few Days, they were attended with many Inconveniences when the End was not correſpondent with the Beginning. He knew well the Reſolution the King had taken to create no more Noblemen, the Number whereof already too much exceeded: However He was very ſorry, that a Perſon of that Quality and Merit ſhould be expoſed to any Indignity, for having endeavoured in ſuch a Conjuncture to do his Majeſty a ſignal Service, and ſucceeded ſo well; and ſpake with the King at large of it, and gave his Majeſty a full Account of the Modeſty and Temper of the Gentleman, of his Quality and Intereſt, and what had been ſaid and promiſed to him. The King was troubled, owned all that He had ſaid himſelf to him, as being very hearty, and "that He would never forget the Service He had "done, but requite it upon any Opportunity;" but proteſted, "that He had never made any ſuch Pro-"miſe, nor given Sir Charles Berkley any Authority to "mention any ſuch Thing to him, which would prove "very inconvenient;" and therefore wiſhed, "that "his Friend would divert him from proſecuting ſuch "a Pretence, which He knew to be contrary to his "Reſolution."

The Chancellor knew not what to ſay, but truly advertiſed his Friend of all the King had ſaid, who again informed Sir Robert Paſton, who thought himſelf very hardly treated, and went to Sir Charles Berkley, who had not the ſame open Arms, yet aſſured him, "that He had ſaid Nothing to him but by the "King's Direction, which He muſt aver. That He "did not uſe to interpoſe or move the King in any of "his Affairs: But if He would deſire the Chancellor "to take Notice of it, who He knew had a great "Affection for him, and upon whoſe Deſire He had "performed that great Service, He was confident it "would be attended with the Succeſs He wiſhed, to "which He would contribute all his Endeavours;" intimating, "that if He had not what He deſired, "He might impute it to the Chancellor." Upon which Sir Robert, who was well aſſured of the Chancellor's Kindneſs, concluded that his Court-Friends had deluded him, or expected Money, which He would not give: And ſo the Matter ended with Prejudice to the King.

Notwithstanding theſe and the like very inconvenient Activities, which loſt more Friends than were gotten by them, the Noiſe of this ſtupendous Supply, given to the King at one Time, made good Impreſſions upon all who had any Affections for the King, and was wondered at in thoſe Places where Money was moſt plenty. In Holland it wrought even to Conſternation, and the common People cried aloud for Peace, and the States pretended to have great Hope as well as Deſire of it, and ſent their Ambaſſadour, who remained ſtill in England, new Orders to ſolicit it.

The Condition of England in Reſpect to its Neighbours.

In the mean Time the King neglected not to apply what Endeavours He could uſe, to diſpoſe his Allies to act ſuch Parts as their own Intereſt might reaſonably invite them to. From France He expected only Neutrality, by Reaſon He knew He had renewed the Alliance with the States; but never ſuſpected, that it was in ſuch a Manner as would hinder the Neutrality. Spain could do little Good or Harm, nor durſt it to engage againſt Holland: Yet all was done that was neceſſary towards a good Correſpondence with it. The two Northern Kings would find themſelves concerned, at leaſt to wiſh better to one Side than to the other; and had been Both ſo diſobliged by the Dutch, that had it not been for the irreconcilable Jealouſy They had of each other, They might have been united to the Intereſt of England. But Denmark had in the late War given what They could not keep nor recover, and yet could hardly be without; and Sweden looked with too much Contempt upon the Weakneſs and Unactivity of their Neighbour, to give back any Thing They had got: And this reſtrained them Both from provoking an Enemy that might give Strength to the other.

Yet Denmark had the Year before by Hannibal Zeſted, who went Ambaſſadour into France and made England his Way, made many Complaints to the King "of the Oppreſſion the Crown of Denmark un-"derwent by the Dutch, and the Reſolution it had "to ſhake off that Yoke as ſoon as an Opportunity "ſhould be offered;" and made a Requeſt to the King, "that He would endeavour to make the Alli-"ance ſo faſt between Denmark and Sweden, that the "Jealouſy of each other might hinder neither of them "from doing any Thing that was for their own Inte-"reſt, without Prejudice to the other." And when the Difficulty was alledged, in Regard that Sweden would never be perſuaded to part with Elſenore, and thoſe other Places which had been given up in the late Treaty; Hannibal Zeſted conſented that what was done in that Treaty ſhould be again confirmed, and ſaid "his Maſter was willing and deſirous that the King of "England ſhould undertake and be Caution for the "Obſervation of this Treaty;" implying, "that if "this were done, and thereby the Fear of any "further Attempt from Sweden were extinguiſhed, "Denmark would not be long without redeeming itſelf "from the Vexation which it endured from Holland, "which, upon former Neceſſities and ill Bargains, "upon the Matter had an Exemption from paying all "Duties upon their own great Trade through the "Sound, as much to the Prejudice of all other Princes "as of the poor Crown of Denmark. This having ſo lately paſſed from a Miniſter of that Crown, the King thought it a good Time to endeavour to do that Office between the two Crowns, and thereby to unite them Both to the King in this Conjunction againſt the Dutch; at leaſt that They might Both remain good Friends to his Majeſty, and ſupply him with all thoſe Proviſions without which his Navy could not be ſupported, and as far as was poſſible reſtrain the Dutch from thoſe Supplies, by making ſuch large Contracts with the Engliſh, that there would not be enough left for the other.

Ambaſſadours ſent to Denmark and Sweden.

Upon this Ground He ſent Mr. Henry Coventry of his Bedchamber to the Swede, whoſe Friendſhip He much more valued as more able to aſſiſt him, and upon whoſe Word He could more firmly depend. And to Denmark He ſent Sir Gilbert Talbot, who was acceptable to that Crown by his having performed many Offices of Reſpect to the Prince of Denmark, when He had been incognito in England, and waited upon him to ſeveral Parts of the Kingdom which He had a Mind to ſee, and ſo cauſed him to be entertained in ſeveral Gentlemens Houſes in his Journey, of which the Prince ſeemed very ſenſible when He departed. That which was expected from that Negotiation, except the Confidence could be created between the two Crowns, was only to preſerve Denmark a Friend, that He might not favour the Dutch, and might recall all his Subjects out of their Service; and that We might have have the ſame Freedom of Trade, and the Security of his Ports for our Men of War.

Propoſals made by the Biſhop of Munſter for an Alliance againſt the Dutch.

WHILST the King took this Care for the Advancement of his Affairs abroad, there was an Advantage offered him that looked as if it came from Heaven. There came one Day a Gentleman, who looked rather like a Carter, who ſpoke ill Engliſh, and deſired that He might have a private Audience with the Chancellor; who preſently ſent for him, and in a ſhort Time knew him to be a Benedictine Monk, who had been ſometimes with him at Cologne, and belonged to the Engliſh Abbey at Lamſpring in Weſtphalia, where a very reverend Perſon of the Family of Gaſcoigne in Yorkſhire was Abbot, with whom the Chancellor had much Acquaintance, and eſteemed him very much; and He had, during the Time the King ſtayed in Cologne, ſent this Monk ſeveral Times thither, who was likewiſe a Gentleman, but by living long in Germany had almoſt forgot the Language as well as the Manners of his own Country. His Buſineſs now was to deliver him a Letter (whereof He knew little of the Contents) from the Biſhop of Munſter, upon the Edge of whoſe Dominions that Engliſh Abbey was ſeated, which had likewiſe a Territory that extended to the Principality of the other, and received much Favour and Protection from the other; who deſired the Abbot to give him an honeſt Man, that would carry a Letter from him to the Court of England: Upon which this Monk was deputed, the rather becauſe He was known to the Chancellor. The Matter of the Letter was no more, than "that if the War "againſt Holland was to be reſolutely proſecuted by "the King of England, He (the Biſhop) conceived "that a Conjunction with thoſe Allies, who could "infeſt the Dutch by Land as his Majeſty would do "by Sea, might not be unacceptable to his Majeſty; "and in that Caſe, upon the Anſwer to this Letter, "He would ſend a fit Perſon to make ſome Propo"ſitions to the King and to treat with him." The Inſtructions the Monk had, were "to make all poſſi"ble Haſte back, and that as ſoon as He returned on "that Side the Sea, He ſhould ſend the Anſwer He "had received, by the Poſt, ſo directed as was ap"pointed; and then that himſelf ſhould ſtay at Bruſſels "till He received farther Orders."

THE Chancellor quickly informed the King of this Diſpatch, to whom the Monk was likewiſe known; and his Majeſty immediately aſſembled thoſe Lords with whom He conſulted in the moſt ſecret Caſes. Every Body knew ſo much of the Biſhop of Munſter, that He was a warlike Prince, having had Command in Armies before He dedicated himſelf to the Church, and that He had a great Animoſity againſt Holland, which had diſobliged him in the higheſt Point, by encouraging his Subjects to rebel againſt him, and thoſe of his City of Munſter to ſhut their Gates againſt him: And when He endeavoured to reduce them by Force, and to that Purpoſe had beſieged them with his Army, the Dutch ſent an Army to relieve it, and declared that They would protect that City. And by this Means, and by the Mediation of the neighbour Princes, who had no Mind that the Peace of their Country ſhould be diſturbed by ſuch an Incurſion, the Biſhop was hindered from taking that Vengeance upon his rebel Subjects which He intended, and compelled to accept of ſuch Conditions as did not pleaſe him. And all this was but two Years before, and boiled ſtill in his Breaſt, that was naturally very hot. But He was a poor Prince, unable to give any Diſturbance to the United Provinces, whoſe Dominions extended within a Day's March of his. However every Man was of Opinion, that the Propoſition ought to be very kindly received, and the Biſhop invited to ſend his Agent. And to that Purpoſe the Chancellor wrote to him, and the Monk was diſpatched the next Day. And having obſerved his Orders in ſending away the Anſwer, He was very few Days at Bruſſels, when a Servant of the Biſhop arrived with Orders that the Monk ſhould accompany him back into England: And ſo They Both arrived in London in leſs Time than could be expected.

THE Gentleman who came from the Biſhop was a very proper Man, well-bred, a Baron of that Country, but a Subject to the Biſhop: He brought with him a Letter of Credit from the Biſhop to the King, and full Authority to treat and conclude according to his Inſtructions, which He likewiſe preſented to his Majeſty. He brought likewiſe a Letter to the Chancellor from the Elector of Mentz, in which He recommended to him the Perſon whom the Biſhop of Munſter ſhould ſend, and declared "that He believed "the Biſhop of Munſter would be able to perform "whatſoever He ſhould undertake:" Which Letter was a very great Encouragement to the King: For his Majeſty knew the Elector of Mentz very well to be a very wiſe Prince and notoriouſly his Friend, and that He would not ſay ſo much of the Ability of the Biſhop to perform, except He knew particularly his Deſign, and what He would undertake to do.

THE Baron's Inſtructions were to propoſe, "that "his Majeſty would cauſe one hundred thouſand "Pounds to be immediately paid, by Bills of Ex"change at Hamburgh or Cologne or Francfort, to ſuch "Perſons as the Biſhop ſhould appoint to receive it; "and ſhould promiſe to pay fifty thouſand Pounds by "the Month in the ſame Places for three Months to "come: Afterwards He hoped the Army would pro"vide for its own Support. This being undertaken "on his Majeſty's Part, the Biſhop would be en"gaged, within one Month after the firſt Bills of "Exchange for the one hundred thouſand Pounds "ſhould be delivered into the Hands of his Agent the "Baron, that He would be in the Dominions of the "States General with an Army of ſixteen thouſand "Foot and four thouſand Horſe; with which He "was very confident He ſhould within few Days be "poſſeſſed of Arnheim, and ſhortly after of Utrecht: "And if the King's Fleet came before Amſterdam, "that Army of the Biſhop ſhould march to what "Place or Quarter his Majeſty ſhould direct."

THE Baron was aſked, "how it could be poſſible "for the Biſhop, though a gallant Prince and very "active, to draw together ſuch an Army in ſo ſhort "a Time out of his ſmall Province; and how He "was ſure that his Neighbours, who two Years be"fore had compelled him to make ſo diſadvantageous "a Peace with the Dutch, would not again uſe the "ſame violent Importunity to obſtruct his Proceed"ings." To which He anſwered, "that the Biſhop "would never undertake to bring ſuch an Army to"gether in ſo ſhort a Time, in which They could "not be levied, but that He knows They are already "levied, and upon an Aſſurance of Money can be "brought together in the ſhort Time propoſed: For "the other, the Interpoſition of his Neighbours, He "had not then, when They prevailed, Half that Ar"my which He was ſure He ſhould now have; be"ſides thoſe Neighbours were now as much incenſed "againſt the Dutch as his Maſter was, and would all "engage with him againſt them; and that many of "the Army that is deſigned were at preſent quartered "in their Dominions; and that the Biſhop intended "not to march in his own private Capacity, but as "General of the Empire, for which the Elector of "Mentz had undertaken to procure him a Com"miſſion." He was demanded "how his Maſter "ſtood with France, and whether He did not fear that "it would either prevent the Enterpriſe by Mediation, "or diſappoint it by ſending Aid to Holland." He anſwered, "his Maſter was confident France would "not do him any Harm: That He had ſent an "Agent, from whom He ſhould be ſure to receive "Letters by every Poſt." And within few Days after, He ſhewed a Letter that He had received from that Agent, in which He ſaid, " that Monſieur " de Lionne bade him aſſure the Biſhop, that his " Chriſtian Majeſty would do Nothing to his Pre- " judice."

THIS being the State of that Affair, the King conſidered what He was to do. The Propoſitions made by the Biſhop were ſuch, as it was not poſſible for him to comply with. But then it was preſumed by every Body, that very much would be abated of the Money that was demanded: For it was not an auxiliary Army that was to be raiſed for the King's Service, whoſe Conqueſts were to be applied to his Benefit, but an Army raiſed to revenge the Injuries which himſelf had received, and what He ſhould get muſt be to his own Account; and his Majeſty's Hoſtility at Sea would as much facilitate his Enterpriſe at Land, as the marching of his Army might probably diſturb and diſtract their Preparations for the Sea. Yet it could not be expected, that the Biſhop could draw this Army together (and the Attempt was not to be made with leſs Force) without a good Supply of Money, nor keep it together without Pay.

THE Advantage, that would with God's Bleſſing attend this Conjunction, ſpread itſelf to a very large Proſpect. That the People generally in the Provinces were very unſatisfied with this War, was a Thing notorious; and that the Province of Holland which began it, and was entirely governed by De Wit, did even compel the other Provinces to concur with them, partly upon Hope that a farther Progreſs would be prevented by Treaty, or that a Peace would follow upon the firſt Engagement. But when They ſhould ſee an Army of twenty thouſand Men, which They ſuſpected not, to invade their Country at Land, and in that Part where They were moſt ſecure, and from whence ſo much of their neceſſary Proviſions were daily brought; They muſt be in great Conſternation, and draw all their Land Army together, which They had not done in near twenty Years, and could not be done to any Effect without vaſt Charge, which would put the People into a loud Diſtraction. Finally, there was great Reaſon to cheriſh the Deſign: And therefore the King reſolved by an unanimous Advice to undertake any Thing towards it, that could be in his Power to perform.

THERE was one Difficulty occurred, that had not been thought of nor ſo much as apprehended by the Baron, which was the Return of the Money, whatſoever ſhould be aſſigned to that Service: for of the three Places propoſed by him, beſides the Secrecy that was requiſite, all the Trade of London could not aſſign one thouſand Pounds in the Month to be paid upon Cologne and Francfort; nor could Hamburgh itſelf be charged with twenty thouſand Pounds in three Months Time: Which when the Agent knew, He ſeemed amazed, and ſaid, " They had believed that it had " been as eaſy to have tranſmitted Money to thoſe " three Towns, as it was for them to receive it from " thence."

IN Concluſion, the King gave his Anſwer in Writing, what Sum of Money He would cauſe to be paid at once for the firſt Advance, that the Biſhop might begin his March, and what He would afterwards cauſe to be paid by the Month; which being leſs than the Baron's Inſtructions would admit him to accept, He ſent an Expreſs with it to the Biſhop: And " till his Return," He deſired, " that the King " would appoint ſome Perſon of Experience to con- " fer with him; and They might together inform " themſelves of the beſt Expedients to return Money " into Germany, ſince his Majeſty had hitherto only " undertaken to pay his Aſſignations in London." What Succeſs this Treaty afterwards had will be related in its Place.

THESE Advantages from abroad being in this Manner deliberated and deſigned, it may be very ſeaſonable to look back, and conſider what Preparations were made at Home towards the carrying on this War, for which the Parliament had provided ſo bountifully: And if ordinary Prudence had been applied to the Managery, if any Order and Method had been conſulted and ſteadily purſued for the conducting the Whole, the Succeſs would have been anſwerable, and at leaſt any Inconvenience from the ſudden Want of Money would have been prevented. But whoever was at any near Diſtance in that Time when thoſe Tranſactions were in Agitation, as there are yet many worthy Men who were, or ſhall be able to procure a ſincere Information of the Occurrences of that Time, will be obliged to confeſs, that They who contrived the War had the entire conducting it, and were the ſole Cauſes of all the ill Effects of it; which cannot be ſet down particularly without wounding thoſe, who were by their Confidence in ill Inſtruments made acceſſary to thoſe Miſchiefs, in which themſelves ſuffered moſt. Nor is it the End of this true Relation to fix a Brand upon the Memory of thoſe, who deſerve it from the Publick and from very many worthy Men, but is to ſerve only for a Memorial to caſt my own Eyes upon, when I cannot but reflect upon thoſe Proceedings; and by my Conſent ſhall never come into any Hands but theirs, who for their own Sakes will take Care to preſerve it from any publick View or Peruſal.

IT cannot be denied and may very truly be averred, that from the Hour of the King's Return and being poſſeſſed of the entire Government, the Naval Affairs were never put into any Order. That Province, being committed to the Duke as Lord High Admiral of England, was entirely engroſſed by his Servants, in Truth by Mr. Coventry, who was newly made his Secretary, and who made Uſe of his other Servants, who were better known to him, to infuſe into his Highneſs the Opinion, " that whoever pre- " ſumed to meddle in any Thing that related to the " Navy or the Admiralty, invaded his Juriſdiction, " and would leſſen him in the Eyes of the People; " and that He ought to be jealous of ſuch Men, as " of thoſe who would undermine his Greatneſs; and " that as He was ſuperiour to all Men by being the " King's Brother, ſo being High Admiral He was " to render Account to none but to the King, nor " ſuffer any Body elſe to interpoſe in any Thing re- " lating to it." Whereas in Truth there is no Officer of the Crown more ſubject to the Council-Board than the Admiral of England, who is to give an Account of all his Actions and of every Branch of his Office conſtantly to the Board, and to receive their Orders: Nor hath He the Nomination of the Captains of the Ships, till upon the Preſentation of their Names He receives their Approbation, which is never denied. Nor was there any Counſellor who had ever ſate at the Board in the laſt King's Time, to whom this was not as much known as any Order of the Table.

BUT there was no retrieving this Authority, not only from the Influence Mr. Coventry, and They of the Family who adhered to him, had upon the Duke, but from the King's own Inclination, who thought that thoſe Officers, who immediately depended upon himſelf and only upon himſelf, were more at his Devotion than They who were obliged to give an Account to any other Superiour. And from the Time that He came firſt into France, He had not been accuſtomed to any Diſcourſe more than to the undervaluing the Privy Council, as if it ſhadowed the King too much, and uſurped too much of his Authority, and too often ſuperſeded his own Commands. And the Queen his Mother had, upon theſe Diſcourſes, always ſome Inſtances of the Authority which in ſuch a Caſe the Council had aſſumed againſt the King's Judgment; the Exception to which according to the Relation which Nobody could queſtion, ſeemed to be very reaſonable. This Kind of Diſcourſe, being the Subject of every Day, made ſo great Impreſſion that it could never be defaced, and made the Election and Nomination of Counſellors leſs conſidered, ſince They were to be no more adviſed with afterwards than before.

ANOTHER Argument, that uſed to be as frequently inſiſted upon by the Queen, and with more Paſſion and Indignation, was of the little Reſpect and Reverence, that by the Law or Cuſtom of England was paid to the younger Sons of the Crown; and though there was Nobody preſent in thoſe Converſations who knew any Thing of the Law or Cuſtom in thoſe Caſes, yet all that was ſaid was taken as granted. And not only the Duke but the King himſelf had a marvellous Prejudice to the Nation in that Part of good Manners: And it was eaſily agreed, that the Model of France was in thoſe and other Caſes much more preferable, and which was afterwards obſerved in too many.

THIS being then the State and Temper of the Royal Family when the King returned, which then conſiſted of the Duke of Gloceſter, and two Princeſſes more than it now hath; the very next Morning after the Fleet came to Scheveling, the Duke went on Board and took Poſſeſſion of it as Lord High Admiral: And ſo his Secretary provided new Commiſſions for all the Officers who were in preſent Command, for which it is probable They all paid very liberally; for with him the Cuſtom began to receive five Pounds for every Warrant ſigned by the Duke, and for which no Secretary to any Lord Admiral formerly had ever received above twenty Shillings. Mr. Coventry, who was utterly unacquainted with all the Rules and Cuſtoms of the Sea, and knew none of the Officers, but was much courted by all, as the Secretary to the Admiral always is, made Choice of Captain Pen, whom the King knighted as ſoon as He came on Board; who from a common Man had grown up under Cromwell to the higheſt Command, and was in great Favour with him till He failed in the Action of St. Domingo, when He went Admiral at Sea, as Venables was General at Land, for which They were Both impriſoned in the Tower by Cromwell, nor ever employed by him afterwards: But upon his Death He had Command again at Sea, as He had at this Time under Mountague when He came to attend the King. With this Man Mr. Coventry made a faſt Friendſhip, and was guided by him in all Things.

ALL the Offices which belonged to the Ships, to the Navy, to the Yards, to the whole Admiralty (except the three ſuperiour Officers, which are not in the Diſpoſal of the Admiral), were now void, and to be ſupplied by the Duke, that is, by Mr. Coventry; who by the Advice of Sir William Pen, who was ſolely truſted by him in the Brocage, conferred them upon thoſe (without obſerving any other Rule) who would give moſt Money, not conſidering any honeſt Seamen who had continued in the King's Service, or ſuffered long Impriſonment for him. And becauſe an incredible Sum of Money did and would riſe this Way, ſome principal Officers in the Yards, as the Maſter Smith and others, and the Keepers of the Stores, yielding ſeven, eight hundred or a thouſand Pounds; He had the Skill to move the Duke to beſtow ſuch Money as would ariſe upon ſuch Place upon Sir Charles Berkley, for another to another, and for ſome to be divided between two or three: By which Means the whole Family was obliged, and retained to juſtify him; and the Duke himſelf looked upon it as a Generoſity in Mr. Coventry, to accommodate his Fellow Servants with what He might have aſked or kept for himſelf. But it was the beſt Huſbandry He could have uſed: For by this Means all Mens Mouths were ſtopped, and all Clamour ſecured; whilſt the leſſer Sums for a Multitude of Offices of all Kinds were reſerved to himſelf, and which, in the Eſtimation of thoſe who were at no great Diſtance, amounted to a very great Sum, and more than any Officer under the King could poſſibly get by all the Perquiſites of his Place in many Years. By this Means, the whole Navy and Ships were filled with the ſame Men who had enjoyed the ſame Places and Offices under Cromwell, and thereby were the better able to pay well for them; whereof many of the moſt infamous Perſons which that Time took Notice of were now become the King's Officers, to the great Scandal of their honeſt Neighbours, who obſerved that They retained the ſame Manners and Affections, and uſed the ſame Diſcourſes They had formerly done.

BESIDES many other irreparable Inconveniences and Miſchiefs which reſulted from this Corruption and Choice, one grew quickly viſible and notorious, in the ſtealing and embezzling all Manner of Things out of the Ships, even when they were in Service: But when they returned from any Voyages, incredible Proportions of Powder, Match, Cordage, Sails, Anchors, and all other Things, inſtead of being reſtored to the ſeveral proper Officers which were to receive them, were embezzled and ſold, and very often ſold to the King himſelf for the ſetting out other Ships and for repleniſhing his Stores. And when this was diſcovered (as many Times it was) and the criminal Perſon apprehended, it was alledged by him as a Defence or Excuſe, "that He had paid ſo dear for his "Place, that He could not maintain himſelf and Fa"mily without practiſing ſuch Shifts:" And none of thoſe Fellows were ever brought to exemplary Juſtice, and moſt of them were reſtored to their Employments.

THE three ſuperiour Officers of the Navy were poſſeſſed of their Offices by Patents under the Great Seal of England before the King's Return; and They are the natural eſtabliſhed Council of the Lord High Admiral, and are to attend him when He requires it, and always uſed of Courſe to be with him one certain Day in a Week, to render him an Account of all the State of the Office, and to receive his Orders and to give their Advice. And now becauſe theſe three depended not enough upon him, but eſpecially out of Animoſity againſt Sir George Carteret, who beſides being Treaſurer of the Navy was Vice-Chamberlain of the King's Houſhold, and ſo a Privy Counſellor; Mr. Coventry propoſed to the Duke, "that in Regard of "the Multiplicity of Buſineſs in the Navy, much "more than in former Times, and the ſetting out "greater Fleets than had been accuſtomed in that "Age when thoſe Officers and that Model for the "Government of the Navy had been eſtabliſhed, his "Royal Highneſs would propoſe to the King to make "an Addition, by Commiſſioners, of ſome other Per"ſons always to ſit with the other Officers with equal "Authority, and to ſign all Bills with them;" which was a Thing never heard of before, and is in Truth a leſſening of the Power of the Admiral. It is very true, there have frequently been Commiſſioners for the Navy; but it hath been in the ſame Place of the Admiral and to perform his Office: But in the Time of an Admiral Commiſſioners have not been heard of. One principal End in this was, to draw from the Treaſurer of the Navy (whoſe Office Mr. Coventry thought too great, and had implacable Animoſity againſt him from the firſt Hour after He had made his Friendſhip with Pen) out of his Fees (which, though no greater than were granted by his Patent and had been always enjoyed by his Predeceſſors, were indeed greater than had uſed to be in Times of Peace, when much leſs Money paſſed through his Hands) what ſhould be enough to pay thoſe Commiſſioners; for it was not reaſonable They ſhould ſerve for Nothing, nor that They ſhould be upon the King's Charge, ſince the Treaſurer's Perquiſites might be enough for all.

THE Duke liked the Propoſition well, and without conferring with any Body elſe upon it propoſed it to the King at the Council-Board, where Nobody thought thought fit to examine or debate what the Duke propoſed; and the King approved it, and ordered "that "the Commiſſioners ſhould receive each five hundred "Pounds by the Year:" But finding afterwards that the Treaſurer of the Navy's Fees were granted to him under the Great Seal, his Majeſty did not think it juſt to take it from him, but would bear it himſelf, and appointed the Treaſurer to pay and paſs thoſe Penſions in his Account. The Commiſſioners named and commended by the Duke to the King were the Lord Berkley, Sir John Lawſon, Sir William Pen, and Sir George Ayſcue, the three laſt the moſt eminent Sea-Officers under Cromwell, but it muſt not be denied but that They ſerved the King afterwards very faithfully. Theſe the King made his Commiſſioners, with a Penſion to each of five hundred Pounds the Year, and in ſome Time after added Mr. Coventry to the Number with the ſame Penſion: So that this firſt Reformation in the Time of Peace coſt the King one Way or other no leſs than three thouſand Pounds yearly, without the leaſt viſible Benefit or Advantage. The Lord Berkley underſtood Nothing that related either to the Office or Employment, and therefore very ſeldom was preſent in the Execution. But after He had enjoyed the Penſion a Year or thereabout, He procured Leave to ſell his Place, and procured a Gentleman, Mr. Thomas Harvey, to give him three thouſand Pounds for it: So ſoon this temporary Commiſſion, which might have expired within a Month, got the Reputation of an Office for Life by the good Managery of an Officer.

The State of the Navy at the Commencement of the War.

THIS was the State of the Navy before the War with Holland was reſolved upon. Let us in the next Place ſee what Alterations were made in it, or what other Preparations were made, or Counſels entered upon, for the better Conduct of this War: And a clear and impartial View or Reflection upon what was then ſaid or done, gave diſcerning Men an unhappy Preſage of what would follow. There was no Diſcourſe now in the Court, after this Royal Subſidy of five and twenty hundred thouſand Pounds was granted, but, "of giving the Law to the whole Trade of "Chriſtendom; of making all Ships which paſſed by "or through the narrow Seas to pay an Impoſition "to the King, as all do to the King of Denmark who "paſs by the Sound; and making all who paſs near "to pay Contribution to his Majeſty;" which muſt concern all the Princes of Chriſtendom: And the King and Duke were often deſired to diſcountenance and ſuppreſs this impertinent Talk, which muſt increaſe the Number of the Enemies. Commiſſioners were appointed to reſide in all or the moſt eminent Port-Towns, for the Sale of all Prize-Goods; and theſe were choſen for the moſt Part out of thoſe Members of the Houſe of Commons, who were active to advance the King's Service or who promiſed to be ſo, to whom liberal Salaries were aſſigned.

Commiſſioners of Appeals appointed.

THERE were then Commiſſioners appointed to judge all Appeals, which ſhould be made upon and againſt all Sentences given by the Judge of the Admiralty and his Deputies; and theſe were all Privy Counſellors, the Earl of Lautherdale, the Lord Aſhley, and the Secretaries of State, who were like to be moſt careful of the King's Profit. But then the Rules which were preſcribed to judge by were ſuch as were warranted by no former Precedents, nor acknowledged to be juſt by the Practice of any neighbour Nation, and ſuch as would make all Ships which traded for Holland, from what Kingdom ſoever, lawful Prize; which was foreſeen would bring Complaints from all Places, as it did as ſoon as the War begun. French and Spaniard and Swede and Dane were alike treated; whilſt their Ambaſſadours made loud Complaints every Day to the King and the Council for the Injuſtice and the Rapine, without Remedy, more than References to the Admiralty, and then to the Lords Commiſſioners of Appeal, which increaſed the Charge, and raiſed and improved the Indignity. Above all, the Hanſe-Towns of Hamburgh, Lubeck, Bremen, and the reſt (who had large Exemptions and Privileges by Charter granted by former Kings and now renewed by this) had the worſt Luck; for none of them could ever be diſtinguiſhed from the Dutch. Their Ships were ſo like, and their Language ſo near, that not one of their Veſſels were met with, from what Part of the World ſoever they came, or whitherſoever they were bound, but they were brought in; and if the Evidence was ſuch as there could be no Colour to retain them, but that they muſt be releaſed, they always carried with them ſad Remembrances of the Company they had been in.

THERE was one ſure Rule to make any Ship Prize, which was, if above three Dutch Mariners were aboard it there need no further Proof for the Forfeiture; which being no where known could not be prevented, all Merchants Ships, when they are ready for their Voyage, taking all Seamen on Board of what Nation ſoever who are neceſſary for their Service: So that thoſe Dutchmen who run from their own Country to avoid fighting (as very many did, and very many more would have done), and put themſelves on Board Merchants Ships of any other Country, where They were willingly entertained, made thoſe Ships lawful Prize in which They ſerved, by a Rule that Nobody knew nor would ſubmit to.

Too much Encouragement given to Privateers.

IT was reſolved that all poſſible Encouragement ſhould be given to Privateers, that is, to as many as would take Commiſſions from the Admiral to ſet out Veſſels of War, as They call them, to take Prizes from the Enemy; which no Articles or Obligations can reſtrain from all the Villany They can act, and are a People, how countenanced ſoever or thought neceſſary, that do bring an unavoidable Scandal, and it is to be feared a Curſe, upon the juſteſt War that was ever made at Sea. A Sail! A Sail! is the Word with them; Friend or Foe is the ſame; They poſſeſs all They can maſter, and run with it to any obſcure Place where They can ſell it (which Retreats are never wanting), and never attend the Ceremony of an Adjudication. Beſides the horrible Scandal and Clamour that this Claſſis of Men brought upon the King and the whole Government for Defect of Juſtice, the Prejudice which reſulted from thence to the Publick and to the carrying on the Service is unſpeakable: All Seamen run to them. And though the King now aſſigned an ample Share of all Prizes taken by his own Ships to the Seamen, over and above their Wages; yet there was great Difference between the Condition of the one and the other: In the King's Fleet They might gain well, but They were ſure of Blows, Nothing could be got there without fighting; with the Privateers there was rarely fighting, They took all who could make little Reſiſtance, and fled from all who were too ſtrong for them. And ſo thoſe Fellows were always well manned, when the King's Ships were compelled to ſtay many Days for Want of Men, who were raiſed by preſſing and with great Difficulty. And whoever ſpake againſt thoſe lewd People, upon any Caſe whatſoever, was thought to have no Regard for the Duke's Profit, nor to deſire to weaken the Enemy.

IN all former Wars at Sea, as there was great Care taken to appoint Commiſſioners for the Sale of all Prize-Goods, who underſtood the Value of thoſe Commodities They had to ſell, yet were compelled to ſell better Bargains than are uſually got in publick Markets; ſo there was all Strictneſs uſed in bringing all Receivers to as punctual an Account, as any other of the King's Receivers are bound to make, and to compel them to pay in all the Money They receive into the Exchequer, that it might be iſſued out to the Treaſurer of the Navy or to other Officers for the Expence of the War. And it had been a great Argument in the firſt Conſultations upon this War,

"that

" that it would ſupport itſelf; and that after one " good Fleet ſhould be ſet out once to beat the " Dutch" (for that was never thought worthy of a Doubt), " the Prizes, which would every Day after " be taken, would plentifully do all the reſt: Beſides " the great Sum that the Dutch would give to pur- " chaſe their Peace, and the yearly Rent They would " give for the Liberty of fiſhing;" with all which it was not thought fit to allow them " to keep above " ſuch a Number of Ships of War, limited to ſo " many Ton and to ſo many Guns;" with many Particulars of that Nature, which were carefully digeſted by thoſe who promoted the War. But now, after this Supply given by the Parliament, there was no more Danger of Want of Money: And many Diſcourſes there were, " that the Prize-Money might " be better diſpoſed in rebuilding the King's Houſes, " and many other good Uſes which would occur;" and the King forbore to ſpeak any more of appointing Receivers and Treaſurers for that Purpoſe, when all or moſt other Officers, who were judged neceſſary for the Service, were already named; and the Lord Treaſurer, who by his Office ſhould have the Recommendation of thoſe Officers to the King, had a Liſt of Men, who for the Reputation and Experience They had were in his Judgment worthy to be truſted, to be preſented to the King when He ſhould enter upon that Subject.

Lord Aſhley obtains a Grant appointing him Treaſurer of Prize-Money.

BUT one Evening a Servant of the Lord Aſhley came to the Chancellor with a Bill ſigned, and deſired in his Maſter's Name, " that it might be ſealed that " Night." The Bill was, " to make and conſtitute " the Lord Aſhley Treaſurer of all the Money that " ſhould be raiſed upon the Sale of all Prizes, which " were or ſhould be taken in this preſent War, with " Power to make all ſuch Officers as ſhould be neceſ- " ſary for the Service; and that He ſhould account " for all Monies ſo received to the King himſelf, and " to no other Perſon whatſoever, and pay and iſſue " out all thoſe Monies which He ſhould receive, in " ſuch Manner as his Majeſty ſhould appoint by War- " rant under his Sign Manual, and by no other War- " rant; and that He ſhould be free and exempt from " accounting into the Exchequer." When the Chancellor had ſeen the Contents, He bade the Meſſenger tell his Lord, " that He would ſpeak with the King " before He would ſeal that Grant, and that He de- " ſired much to ſpeak with himſelf."

The Chancellor remonſtrates againſt ſealing this Grant.

THE next Morning He waited upon the King, and informed him " of the Bill that was brought " to him, and doubted that He had been ſurpriſed: " That it was not only ſuch an Original as was with- " out any Precedent, but in itſelf in many Particu- " lars deſtructive to his Service and to the Right of " other Men. That all Receivers of any Part of his " Revenue were accountable in the Exchequer, and " could receive their Diſcharge in no other Place: " And that if ſo great a Receipt, as this was already" (for the Fleet of Wine and other Ships already ſeized were by a general Computation valued at one hundred thouſand Pounds), " and as it evidently would " be, ſhould paſs without the moſt formal Account: " his Majeſty might be abominably cozened, nor " could it any other Way be prevented. And in " the next Place, that this Grant was not only dero- " gatory to the Lord Treaſurer, but did really de- " grade him, there being another Treaſurer made " more abſolute than himſelf, and without Depen- " dence upon him." And therefore He beſought his Majeſty, " that He would reconſider the Thing itſelf " and hear it debated, at leaſt that the Treaſurer " might be firſt heard, without which it could not " be done in Juſtice:" To which He added, " that " He would ſpeak with the Lord Aſhley himſelf, and " tell him how much He was to blame to affect ſuch " a Province, which might bring great Inconveni- " ences upon his Perſon and his Eſtate."

HE quickly found that the King had not been ſurpriſed in what He had done, " which," He ſaid, was " abſolutely in his own Power to do; and that it " would bring Prejudice only to himſelf, which He " had ſufficiently provided againſt." However He ſeemed willing to decline any Thing that looked like an Affront to the Treaſurer, and therefore was content that the ſealing it might be ſuſpended till He had further conſidered.

THE Lord Aſhley came ſhortly to the Chancellor, and ſeemed " to take it unkindly that his Patent was " not ſealed:" To which He anſwered, " that He " had ſuſpended the immediate ſealing it for three " Reaſons; whereof one was, that He might firſt " ſpeak with the King, who He believed would re- " ceive much Prejudice by it; another, that it would " not conſiſt with the Reſpect He owed to the Lord " Treaſurer, who was much affronted in it, to ſeal it " before He was made acquainted with it. And in " the laſt Place, that He had ſtopped it for his, the " Lord Aſhley's, own Sake: And that He believed " He had neither enough conſidered the Indignity " that was offered to the Lord Treaſurer, to whom " He profeſſed ſo much Reſpect, and by whoſe Fa- " vour and powerful Interpoſition He enjoyed the " Office He held, nor his own true Intereſt, in ſub- " mitting his Eſtate to thoſe Incumbrances which ſuch " a Receipt would inevitably expoſe it to. And that " the Exemption from making any Account but to " the King himſelf would deceive him: And as it was " an unuſual and unnatural Privilege, ſo it would " never be allowed in any Court of Juſtice, which " would exact both the Account and the Payment or " lawful Diſcharge of what Money He ſhould re- " ceive; and if He depended upon the Exemption " He would live to repent it."

HE anſwered little to the Particulars more than with ſome Sullenneſs, " that the King had given him " the Office, and knew beſt what is good for his own " Service; and that except his Majeſty retracted his " Grant, He would look to enjoy the Benefit of it. " That He did not deſire to put an Affront upon the " Lord Treaſurer; and if there were any Expreſſions " in his Commiſſion which reflected upon him, He " was content they ſhould be mended or left out: " In all other Reſpects He was reſolved to run the " Hazard."

THE Treaſurer himſelf, though He knew that He was not well uſed, and exceedingly diſdained the Behaviour of his Nephew (for the Lord Aſhley had married his Niece), who He well knew had by new Friendſhips cancelled all the Obligations to him, would not appear to oppoſe what the King reſolved, but ſate unconcerned and took no Notice of any Thing. And ſo within a ſhort Time the King ſent a poſitive Order to the Chancellor to ſeal the Commiſſion; which He could no longer refuſe, and did it with the more Trouble, becauſe He very well knew, that few Men knew the Lord Aſhley better than the King himſelf did, or had a worſe Opinion of his Integrity. But He was now gotten into Friendſhips which were moſt behooveful to him, and which could remove or reconcile all Prejudices: He was faſt linked to Sir Harry Bennet and Mr. Coventry in a League offenſive and defenſive, the ſame Friends and the ſame Enemies, and had got an entire Truſt with the Lady, who very well underſtood the Benefit ſuch an Officer would be to her. Nor was it difficult to perſuade the King (who thought himſelf more rich in having one thouſand Pounds in his Cloſet that Nobody knew of, than in fifty thouſand Pounds in his Exchequer) how many Conveniences He would find in having ſo much Money at his own immediate Diſpoſal, without the Formality of Privy Seals and other Mens Warrants, and the Indecency and Miſchief which would attend a formal Account of all his generous Donatives and Expence, which ſhould be known only to himſelf.

The King obliges him to ſeal it.

Measures taken to prejudice the King against the Chancellor.

THOUGH the King ſeemed to continue the ſame gracious Countenance towards the Chancellor which He had uſed, and frequently came to his Houſe when He was indiſpoſed with the Gout, and conſulted all his Buſineſs, which He thought of publick Importance, with him with equal Freedom; yet He himſelf found, and many others obſerved, that He had not the ſame Credit and Power with him. The nightly Meetings had of late made him more the Subject of the Diſcourſe; and ſince the Time of the new Secretary They had taken more Liberty to talk of what was done in Council, than They had done formerly: And the Duke of Buckingham pleaſed himſelf and all the Company in acting all the Perſons who ſpake there in their Looks and Motions, in which Piece of Mimickry He had an eſpecial Faculty; and in this Exerciſe the Chancellor, had a full Part. In the Height of Mirth, if the King ſaid "He would go "ſuch a Journey or do ſuch a trivial Thing to-"morrow," Somebody would lay a Wager that He would not do it; and when He aſked Why, it was anſwered, "that the Chancellor would not let him:" And then another would proteſt, "that He thought "there was no Ground for that Imputation; how-"ever He could not deny that it was generally be-"lieved abroad, that his Majeſty was entirely and "implicitly governed by the Chancellor." Which often put the King to declare in ſome Paſſion, "that "the Chancellor had ſerved him long, and under-"ſtood his Buſineſs, in which He truſted him: But "in any other Matter than his Buſineſs, He had "no other Credit with him than any other Man;" which They reported with great Joy in other Companies.

A Propoſal made to the King for Liberty of Conſcience.

IN the former Seſſion of the Parliament, the Lord Aſhley, out of his Indifferency in Matters of Religion, and the Lord Arlington out of his Good Will to the Roman Catholicks, had drawn in the Lord Privy Seal, whoſe Intereſt was moſt in the Preſbyterians, to propoſe to the King an Indulgence for Liberty of Conſcience: For which They offered two Motives; the one, "the "Probability of a War with the Dutch;" though it was not then declared; and in that Caſe the Pro-"ſecution of People at Home for their ſeveral Opini-"nions in Religion would be very inconvenient, and "might prove miſchievous." The other was, "that "the Fright Men were in by Reaſon of the late Bill "againſt Conventicles, and the Warmth the Parlia-"ment expreſſed with Reference to the Church, had "ſo prepared all Sorts of Non-Conformiſts, that "They would gladly compound for Liberty at any "reaſonable Rates: And by this Means a good yearly "Revenue might be raiſed to the King, and a firm "Concord and Tranquillity be eſtabliſhed in the "Kingdom, if Power were granted by the Parlia-"ment to the King to grant Diſpenſations to ſuch "whom He knew to be peaceably affected, for their "Exerciſe of that Religion which was agreeable to "their Conſcience, without undergoing the Penalty "of the Laws." And They had prepared a Schedule, in which They computed what every Roman Catholick would be willing to pay yearly for the Exerciſe of his Religion, and ſo of every other Sect; which, upon the Eſtimate They made, would indeed have amounted to a very great Sum of Money yearly.

The King approves it.

THE King liked the Arguments and the Project very well, and wiſhed them to prepare ſuch a Bill; which was done quickly, very ſhort, and without any Mention of other Advantage to grow from it, than "the Peace and Quiet of the Kingdom, and an en-"tire Reference to the King's own Judgment and "Diſcretion in diſpenſing his Diſpenſations." This was equally approved: And though hitherto it had been managed with great Secrecy, that it might not come to the Knowledge of the Chancellor and the Treaſurer, who they well knew would never conſent to it; yet the King reſolved to impart it to them. And the Chancellor being then afflicted with the Gout, the Committee that uſed to be called was appointed to meet at Worceſter-Houſe: And thither likewiſe came the Privy Seal and the Lord Aſhley, who had never before been preſent in thoſe Meetings.

The Chancellor and Treaſurer oppoſe it at the private Committee.

THE King informed them of the Occaſion of their Conference, and cauſed the Draught for the Bill to be read to them; which was done, and ſuch Reaſons given by thoſe who promoted it, as They thought fit; the chief of which was, "that there could be no "Danger in truſting the King, whoſe Zeal to the "Proteſtant Religion was ſo well known, that No-"body would doubt that He would uſe his Power, "when granted to him, otherwiſe than ſhould be for "the Good and Benefit of the Church and State." The Chancellor and the Treaſurer, as had been preſaged, were very warm againſt it, and uſed many Arguments to diſſuade the King from proſecuting it, "as a Thing that could never find the Concurrence "of either or Both Houſes, and which would raiſe "a Jealouſy in Both, and in the People generally, "of his Affection to the Papiſts, which would not "be good for either, and every Body knew that He "had no Favour for either of the other Factions." But what the others ſaid, who were of another Opinion, prevailed more; and his Majeſty declared, "that the Bill ſhould be preſented to the Houſe of "Peers as from him, and in his Name; and that He "hoped none of his Servants, who knew his Mind as "well as every Body there did, would oppoſe it, but "either be abſent or ſilent:" To which Both the Lords anſwered, "that They ſhould not be abſent "purpoſely, and if They were preſent, They hoped "his Majeſty would excuſe them if they ſpake ac-"cording to their Conſcience and Judgment, which "They could not forbear to do;" with which his Majeſty ſeemed unſatisfied, though the Lords of the Combination were better pleaſed than They would have been with their Concurrence.

The Bill preſented to the Houſe of Lords.

WITHIN few Days after, the Chancellor remaining ſtill in his Chamber without being able to go, the Bill was preſented in the Houſe of Peers by the Lord Privy Seal, as by the King's Direction and Approbation, and thereupon had the firſt Reading: And as ſoon as it was read, the Lord Treaſurer ſpake againſt it, "as "unfit to be received and to have the Countenance of "another Reading in the Houſe, being a Deſign "againſt the Proteſtant Religion and in Favour of "the Papiſts," with many ſharp Reflections upon thoſe who had ſpoken for it; and many of the Biſhops ſpake to the ſame Purpoſe, and urged many weighty Arguments againſt it. However it was moved, "that "ſince it was averred that it was with the King's "Privity, it would be a Thing unheard of to deny "it a ſecond Reading:" And that there might be no Danger of a Surpriſal by its being read in a thin Houſe, it was ordered "that it ſhould be read the ſecond "Time" upon a Day named "at ten of the Clock "in the Morning;" with which all were ſatisfied.

The Treaſurer and Biſhops oppoſe it at the firſt Reading.

IN the mean Time great Pains were taken to perſuade particular Men to approve it: And ſome of the Biſhops were ſharply reprehended for oppoſing the King's Prerogative, with ſome Intimation "that if "They continued in that Obſtinacy They would re-"pent it;" to which They made ſuch Anſwers as in Honeſty and Wiſdom They ought to do, without being ſhaken in their Reſolution. It was rather inſinuated than declared, "that the Bill had been peruſed," ſome ſaid "drawn, by the Chancellor," and averred "that He was not againſt it:" Which being confidently reported, and believed or not believed as He was more or leſs known to the Perſons preſent, He thought himſelf obliged to make his own Senſe known. And ſo on the Day appointed for the ſecond Reading, with Pain and Difficulty He was in his Place in the Houſe: And ſo after the ſecond Reading of the Bill, He was of Courſe to propoſe the Commitment of it.

Many

The Treaſurer and Biſhops oppoſe it at the ſecond Reading.

Many of the Biſhops and others ſpake fiercely againſt it, as a Way to undermine Religion; and the Lord Treaſurer with his uſual Weight of Words ſhewed the ill Conſequence that muſt attend it, and "that in the "Bottom it was a Project to get Money at the Price "of Religion; which he believed was not intended or "known to the King, but only to thoſe who had pro-"jected it, and it may be impoſed upon others who "meant well."

THE Lord Privy Seal, either upon the Obſervation of the Countenance of the Houſe or Advertiſement of his Friends, or unwilling to venture his Reputation in the Enterpriſe, had given over the Game the firſt Day, and now ſpake not at all: But the Lord Aſhley adhered firmly to this Point, ſpake often and with great Sharpneſs of Wit, and had a Cadence in his Words and Pronunciation that drew Attention. He ſaid, "it was "the King's Misfortune that a Matter of ſo great "Concernment to him, and ſuch a Prerogative as it "may be would be found to be inherent in him with-"out any Declaration of Parliament, ſhould be ſup-"ported only by ſuch weak Men as himſelf, who ſerv-"ed his Majeſty at a Diſtance, whilſt the great Officers "of the Crown thought fit to oppoſe it; which he "more wondered at, becauſe Nobody knew more "than They the King's unſhakeable Firmneſs in his "Religion, that had reſiſted and vanquiſhed ſo many "great Temptations; and therefore He could not be "thought unworthy of a greater Truſt with Refe-"rence to it, than he would have by this Bill."

Lord Aſhley ſpeaks for it.

The Chancellor ſpeaks againſt it.

THE Chancellor, having not been preſent at the former Debate upon the firſt Day, thought it fit to ſit ſilent in this, till He found the Houſe in ſome Expectation to hear his Opinion: And then He ſtood up and ſaid, "that no Man could ſay more, if it were ne-"ceſſary or pertinent, of the King's Conſtancy in his "Religion, and of his underſtanding the Conſtitution "and Foundation of the Church of England, than "He; no Man had been Witneſs to more Aſſaults "which He had ſuſtained than He had been, and of "many Victories; and therefore if the Queſtion were "how far He might be truſted in that Point, He "ſhould make no Scruple in declaring, that He "thought him more worthy to be truſted than any "Man alive. But there was Nothing in that Bill that "could make that the Queſtion, which had con-"founded all Notions of Religion, and erected a "Chaos of Policy to overthrow all Religion and Go-"vernment: So that the Queſtion was not, whether "the King were worthy of that Truſt, but whether "that Truſt were worthy of the King. That it had "been no new Thing for Kings to diveſt themſelves "of many particular Rights and Powers, becauſe "They were thereby expoſed to more Trouble and "Vexation, and ſo deputed that Authority to others "qualified by them: And He thought it a very un-"reaſonable and unjuſt Thing to commit ſuch a Truſt "to the King, which Nobody could ſuppoſe He could "execute himſelf, and yet muſt ſubject him to daily "and hourly Importunities, which muſt be ſo much "the more uneaſy to a Nature of ſo great Bounty and "Generoſity, that Nothing is ſo ungrateful to him as "to be obliged to deny."

And drops ſome unguarded Expreſſions.

IN the Vehemence of this Debate, the Lord Aſhley having uſed ſome Language that He knew reflected upon him, the Chancellor let fall ſome unwary Expreſſions, which were turned to his Reproach and remembered long after. When He inſiſted upon the Wildneſs and Illimitedneſs in the Bill, He ſaid, "it was "Ship-Money in Religion, that Nobody could know "the End of, or where it would reſt; that if it were "paſſed, Dr. Goffe or any other Apoſtate from the "Church of England might be made a Biſhop or "Archbiſhop here, all Oaths and Statutes and Sub-"ſcriptions being diſpenſed with:" Which were thought two envious Inſtances, and gave his Enemies Opportunities to make Gloſſes and Reflections upon to his Diſadvantage. In this Debate it fell out that the Duke of York appeared very much againſt the Bill; which was imputed to the Chancellor, and ſerved to heap Coals of Fire upon his Head. In the End, very few having ſpoken for it, though there were many who would have conſented to it, beſides the Catholick Lords, it was agreed that there ſhould be no Queſtion put for the Commitment; which was the moſt civil Way of rejecting it, and left it to be no more called for.

The King offended with the Chancellor and Treaſurer.

THE King was infinitely troubled at the ill Succeſs of this Bill, which He had been aſſured would paſs notwithſtanding the Oppoſition that was expected; and it had produced one Effect that was foreſeen though not believed, in renewing the Bitterneſs againſt the Roman Catholicks. And They, who watched all Occaſions to perform thoſe Offices, had now a large Field to expreſs their Malice againſt the Chancellor and the Treaſurer, "whoſe Pride only had diſpoſed "them to ſhew their Power and Credit in diverting "the Houſe from gratifying the King, to which They "had been inclined;" and his Majeſty heard all that could be ſaid againſt them without any Diſlike. After two or three Days He ſent for them Both together into his Cloſet, which made it generally believed in the Court, that He reſolved to take Both their Offices from them, and They did in Truth believe and expect it: But there was never any Cauſe appeared after to think that it was in his Purpoſe. He ſpake to them of other Buſineſs, without taking the leaſt Notice of the other Matter, and diſmiſſed them with a Countenance leſs open than He uſed to have towards them, and made it evident that He had not the ſame Thoughts of them He had formerly.

AND when the next Day the Chancellor went to him alone, and was admitted into his Cabinet, and began to take Notice "that He ſeemed to have Diſſatisfac-"tion in his Looks towards him;" the King, in more Choler than He had ever before ſeen him, told him, "his Looks were ſuch as they ought to be; that he "was very much unſatisfied with him, and thought "he had uſed him very ill; that He had deſerved "better of him, and did not expect that He would "have carried himſelf in that Manner as He had done "in the Houſe of Peers, having known his Majeſty's "own Opinion from himſelf, which it ſeemed was "of no Authority with him if it differed from his "Judgment, to which He would not ſubmit againſt "his Reaſon."

THE other, with the Confidence of an honeſt Man, entered upon the Diſcourſe of the Matter, aſſured him "the very propoſing it had done his Majeſty "much Prejudice, and that They who were beſt af-"fected to his Service in Both Houſes were much "troubled and afflicted with it: And of thoſe who "adviſed him to it, one knew Nothing of the Con-"ſtitution of England, and was not thought to wiſh "well to the Religion of it; and the other was ſo well "known to him, that Nothing was more wonderful "than that his Majeſty ſhould take him for a ſafe "Counſellor." He had Recourſe then again to the Matter, and uſed ſome Arguments againſt it which had not been urged before, and which ſeemed to make Impreſſion. He heard all He ſaid with Patience, but ſeemed not to change his Mind, and anſwered no more than "that it was no Time to ſpeak to the "Matter, which was now paſſed; and if it had been "unſeaſonably urged, He might ſtill have carried him-"ſelf otherwiſe than he had done;" and ſo ſpake of Somewhat elſe.

HIS Majeſty did not withdraw any of his Truſt or Confidence from him in his Buſineſs, and ſeemed to have the ſame Kindneſs for him: But from that Time He never had the ſame Credit with him as He had before. The Lord Aſhley got no Ground, but Sir Harry Bennet very much, who, though He ſpake very little in Council, ſhewed his Power out of it, by perſuading ſuading his Majeſty to recede from many Reſolutions He had taken there. And afterwards in all the Debates in Council which were preparatory to the War, and upon thoſe Particulars which have been mentioned before, which concerned the Juſtice and Policy that was to be obſerved, whatſoever was offered by the Chancellor or Treaſurer was never conſidered. It was Anſwer enough, "that They were Enemies to the "War;" which was true, as long as it was in Deliberation: But from the Time it was reſolved and remedileſs, none of them who promoted it contributed any Thing to the carrying it on proportionably to what was done by the other two.

And with the Biſhops. THERE was another and a greater Miſchief than hath been mentioned, that reſulted from that unhappy Debate; which was the Prejudice and Diſadvantage that the Biſhops underwent by their ſo unanimous Diſlike of that Bill. For from that Time the King never treated any of them with that Reſpect as He had done formerly, and often ſpake of them too ſlightly; which eaſily encouraged others not only to mention their Perſons very negligently, but their Function and Religion itſelf, as an Invention to impoſe upon the free Judgments and Underſtandings of Men. What was preached in the Pulpit was commented upon and derided in the Chamber, and Preachers acted, and Sermons vilified as laboured Diſcourſes, which the Preachers made only to ſhew their own Parts and Wit, without any other Deſign than to be commended and preferred. Theſe grew to be the Subjects of the Mirth and Wit of the Court; and ſo much Licenſe was manifeſted in it, that gave infinite Scandal to thoſe who obſerved it, and to thoſe who received the Reports of it: And all ſerious and prudent Men took it as an ill Preſage, that whilſt all warlike Preparations were made in Abundance ſuitable to the Occaſion, there ſhould ſo little Preparation of Spirit be for a War againſt an Enemy, who might poſſibly be without ſome of our Virtues, but aſſuredly was without any of our Vices.

The Plague breaks out. THERE begun now to appear another Enemy, much more formidable than the Dutch, and more difficult to be ſtruggled with; which was the Plague, that brake out in the Winter, and made ſuch an early Progreſs in the Spring, that though the weekly Numbers did not riſe high, and it appeared to be only in the Outſkirts of the Town, and in the moſt obſcure Alleys, amongſt the pooreſt People; yet the ancient Men, who well remembered in what Manner the laſt great Plague (which had been near forty Years before) firſt brake out, and the Progreſs it afterwards made, foretold a terrible Summer. And many of them removed their Families out of the City to Country Habitations; when the Neighbours laughed at their Providence, and thought They might have ſtayed without Danger: But They found ſhortly that They had done wiſely. In March it ſpread ſo much, that the Parliament was very willing to part: Which was likewiſe the more neceſſary, in Regard that ſo many of the Members of the Houſe of Commons were aſſigned to ſo many Offices and Employments which related to the War, and which required their immediate Attendance. For though the Fleet was not yet gone out, yet there were many Prizes daily brought in, beſides the firſt Seizure, which by this Time was adjudged lawful Prize; in all which great Loſs was ſuſtained by the Licenſe of Officers as well as common Men, and the Abſence of ſuch as ſhould reſtrain and puniſh it: So that, as ſoon as the Bill was paſſed the Houſes for the good Aid They had given the King, and was ready for the Royal Aſſent, his Majeſty paſſed it, and prorogued the Parliament in April (which was in 1665) till September following; his Majeſty declaring, "that "if it pleaſed God to extinguiſh or allay the Fierceneſs "of the Plague," which at that Time raged more, He "ſhould be glad to meet them then; by which Time "They would judge by ſome Succeſs of the War, "what was more to be done. But if that Viſitation "increaſed, They ſhould have Notice by Proclama-"tion that They might not hazard themſelves."

The Parliament prorogued.

THE Parliament being thus prorogued, there was the ſame Reaſon to haſten out the Fleet; towards which the Duke left Nothing undone, which his unwearied Induſtry and Example could contribute towards it, being himſelf on board, and having got all Things neceſſary into his own Ship that He cared for. But He found that it was abſolutely requiſite to put out to Sea, though many Things were wanting in other Ships, even of Beer and other Proviſion of Victual; not only to be before the Enemy, but becauſe he ſaw it would be impoſſible, whilſt the Ships were in Port, to keep the Seamen from going on Shore, by which They might bring the Plague on Board with them; and there was already a Suſpicion that the Infection was got into one of the ſmaller Ships. The Fleet prepared.

IT hath been ſaid before, that all Things relating to the Fleet were upon the Matter wholly governed by Mr. Coventry. It is very true, that the Officers of the Navy conſtantly attended the Duke together with thoſe three Sea Captains who have been named before: But from the Time that the War was declared, his Highneſs conſulted daily, for his own Information and Inſtruction, with Sir John Lawſon and Sir George Ayſcue and Sir William Pen, all Men of great Experience, and who had commanded in ſeveral Battles. Upon the Advice of theſe Men the Duke always made his Eſtimates and all Propoſitions to the King. There was ſomewhat of Rivalſhip between the two laſt, becauſe They had been in equal Command: Therefore the Duke took Sir William Pen into his own Ship, and made him Captain of it; which was a great Truſt, and a very honourable Command, that exempted him from receiving any Orders but from the Duke, and ſo extinguiſhed the other Emulation, the other two being Flag-Officers and to command ſeveral Squadrons. The Duke of York conſults much with three eminent Sea Officers.

IN all Conferences with theſe Men Mr. Coventry's Preſence and Attendance was neceſſary, both to reduce all Things into Writing which were agreed upon, and to be able to put the Duke in Mind of what He was to do. Lawſon was the Man of whoſe Judgment the Duke had the beſt Eſteem: And He was in Truth of a Man of that Breeding (for He was a perfect Tarpawlin), a very extraordinary Perſon; He underſtood his Profeſſion incomparably well, ſpake clearly and pertinently, but not pertinaciouſly enough when He was contradicted. Ayſcue was a Gentleman, but had kept ill Company too long, which had blunted his Underſtanding, if it had been ever ſharp: He was of few Words, yet ſpake to the Purpoſe and to be eaſily underſtood. Pen, who had much the worſt Underſtanding, had a great Mind to appear better bred, and to ſpeak like a Gentleman; He had got many good Words which He uſed at Adventure; He was a formal Man, and ſpake very leiſurely but much, and left the Matter more intricate and perplexed than He found it. He was entirely governed by Mr. Coventry, who ſtill learned enough of him to offer any Thing rationally in the Debate, or to croſs what was not agreeable to his own Fancy, by which He was ſtill ſwayed out of the Pride and Perverſeneſs of his Will.

UPON Debate and Conference with theſe Men, the Duke brought Propoſitions to the King reduced into Writing by Mr. Coventry; and the King commonly conſulted them with the Lord Treaſurer in his Preſence, the Propoſitions being commonly for Increaſe of the Expence, which Mr. Coventry was ſollicitous by all the Ways poſſible to contrive. To thoſe Conſultations the Duke always brought the Sea-Officers, and Mr. Coventry, who ſpake much more than They, to explain eſpecially what Sir William Pen ſaid, who took upon himſelf to ſpeak moſt, and often what the others had never thought though They durſt not contradict; and Sir John Lawſon often complained, "that Mr. "Coventry

" Coventry put that in Writing which had never been " propoſed by them, and would continue diſputing it " till They yielded." Every Conference raiſed the Charge very much; and what They propoſed Yeſterday as enough was To-day made twice as much; if They propoſed ſix Fire-Ships to be provided within two or three Days They demanded twelve: So there could be no poſſible Computation of the Charge.

The Duke puts out to Sea.

By this Means the Fleet that was now ready to put to Sea amounted to fourſcore Sail; and the King willingly conſented, upon the Reaſons the Duke preſented to him, that they ſhould ſet Sail as ſoon as was poſſible. And before the End of April the Duke was with the whole Fleet at Sea, and viſited the Coaſt of Holland, and took many Ships in their View, their Fleet being not yet in Readineſs. Many Noblemen, the Earl of Peterborough, the Lord Viſcount Ferrers, and others, with many Gentlemen of Quality, went as Volunteers, and were diſtributed into the ſeveral Ships with much Countenance by the Duke, and as many taken into his own Ship as could be done with Convenience.

Many Noblemen go as Volunteers.

THE Duke of Buckingham had from the firſt Mention, which He promoted all He could, declared " that He would make one in it:" And when it was declared, He deſired to have the Command of a Ship, which the Duke poſitively denied to give him, except the King commanded it (and his Majeſty was content to refer that, as He did the Nomination of all the other Officers, to his Brother), and did not think fit that a Man, of what Quality ſoever, who had never been at Sea, ſhould his firſt Voyage have the Command of any conſiderable Ship (and a ſmall one had not been for his Honour); at which He was much troubled. Yet his Friends told him that He was too far engaged, to ſtay at Home when his Royal Highneſs ventured his own Perſon: And thereupon He reſolved to go a Volunteer, and put himſelf on Board a Flag-Ship, the Captain whereof was in his Favour. And then He deſired, " that in Reſpect of his Quality, " and his being a Privy Counſellor, He might be pre- " ſent in all Councils of War." The Duke thought this not reaſonable, and would not make a new Precedent. There were many of the ancient Nobility, Earls and Barons, who were then on Board as Volunteers; and if the Conſideration of Quality might entitle them to be preſent in Council, all Orders would be broken, there being none called but Flag-Officers: And therefore his Royal Highneſs poſitively refuſed to gratify him in that Point; which the Duke of Buckingham thought (it being enough known that the Duke had neither Eſteem or Kindneſs for him) to be ſuch a perſonal Diſobligation, that would well excuſe him for declining the Enterpriſe. And pretending that He did appeal to the King in Point of Right, He left the Fleet, and returned to the Shore to complain. And We return back too to the View of other Particulars.

Some new Peers made.

THERE were two Perſons, whom the King and his Brother did deſire to make remarkable by ſome extraordinary Favours: One of which was equally grateful to Both, Sir Charles Berkley, who had been lately created an Iriſh Viſcount by the Name of Lord Fitzharding, the old and true Surname of the Family; upon whom the King had, for Reaſons only known to himſelf, ſet his Affection ſo much, that He had never denied any Thing He aſked for himſelf or for any Body elſe, and was well content that He ſhould be looked upon as his Favourite. He had been long thought ſo to the Duke, who was willing to promote any Thing to his Advantage: And the King had deferred thoſe Inſtances only till the Parliament ſhould be prorogued, leſt it ſhould raiſe the Appetites of others to make Suits, which He had hitherto defended himſelf from, by declaring He would make no more

Sir Charles Berkley created Earl of Falmouth.

Lords. But the Parliament was no ſooner prorogued, than it was reſolved to be put in Execution: And when it was to be done, the Chancellor had the Honour to be preſent alone with the King and Duke, when it ſeemed to be firſt thought of. And when the Duke propoſed it as a Suit to the King, that He would make the Lord Fitzharding an Earl, extolling his Courage and Affection to the King; He was pleaſed with the Motion to that Degree, that He extolled him with Praiſes which could be applied to few Men: And it was quickly reſolved that he ſhould be an Earl of England, and a Title was as ſoon found out; and ſo He was created Earl of Falmouth, before He had one Foot of Land in the World.

AND to gratify the King for this Favour, the Duke likewiſe propoſed that the King would make Sir Harry Bennet a Lord, whom all the World knew He did not care for; which was as willingly granted: And He had no more Eſtate than the other, and could not ſo eaſily find a Title for his Barony. But becauſe He had no Mind to retain his own Name, which was no good one, his firſt Warrant was to be created Cheney which was an ancient Barony expired, and to which Family He had not the leaſt Relation: And for ſome Days upon the ſigning the Warrant he was called Lord Cheney, until a Gentleman of the beſt Quality in Buckinghamſhire, who though he had no Title to the Barony was yet of the ſame Family, and inherited moſt Part of the Eſtate, which was very conſiderable, and was married to a Daughter of the Duke of Newcaſtle, heard of it, and made Haſte to ſtop it. He went firſt to Sir Harry Bennet himſelf, and deſired him " not to affect a Title to which he had no Relation; " and to which though He could not pretend of direct " Right, yet he was not ſo obſcure but that himſelf or " a Son of his might hereafter be thought worthy of " it by the Crown; and in that Reſpect it would be " ſome Trouble to him to ſee it veſted in the Family " of a Stranger." The Secretary did not give him ſo civil an Anſwer as He expected, having no Knowledge of the Gentleman. Yet ſhortly after, upon Information of his Condition and Quality (as he was in all Reſpects very worthy of Conſideration), the Patent being not yet prepared, He was contented to take the Title of a little Farm that had belonged to his Father and was ſold by him, and now in the Poſſeſſion of another private Perſon; and ſo was created Lord Arlington, the proper and true Name of the Place being Harlington, a little Village between London and Uxbridge.

And Sir H. Bennet Lord Arlington.

THE King took the Occaſion to make theſe two Noblemen from an Obligation that lay upon him to confer two Honours at the ſame Time; the one upon Mr. Freſcheville, of a very ancient Family in Derbyſhire and a fair Eſtate, who had been always bred in the Court, a menial Servant of the laſt King, and had ſerved him in the Head of a Troop of Horſe raiſed at his own Charge in the War, and whom his late Majeſty had promiſed to make a Baron.

Mr. Freſcheville created Lord Freſcheville.

THE other was Mr. Richard Arundel of Trerice in Cornwall, a Gentleman as well known by what He had done and ſuffered in the late Time, as by the Eminency of his Family, and the Fortune He was ſtill Maſter of after the great Depredation of the Time. John Arundel, his Father, was of the beſt Intereſt and Eſtate of the Gentlemen of Cornwall: And in the Beginning of the Troubles, when the Lord Hopton and the other Gentlemen with him were forced to retire into Cornwall, He and his Friends ſupported them, and gave the firſt Turn and Oppoſition to the Current of the Parliament's Uſurpation; and to them, their Courage and Activity, all the Succeſs that the Lord Hopton had afterwards was juſtly to be imputed as to the firſt Riſe. The old Gentleman was then above ſeventy Years of Age, and infirm; but all his Sons He engaged in the War: The two eldeſt were eminent Officers, Both Members of the Houſe of Commons, and the more zealous Soldiers by having been Witneſſes of the naughty Proceedings of thoſe who had raiſed the Rebellion. The eldeſt was killed in the Head of his Troop, charging and driving back a bold Sally that was made out of Plymouth when it was beſieged: And this other Gentleman of whom we now ſpeak, and who was then the younger Brother, was an excellent Colonel of Foot to the End of the War.

When Sir Nicholas Slanning, who was Governour of Pendennis, loſt his Life bravely in the Siege of Briſtol, the King knew not into what Hands to commit that important Place ſo ſecurely, as by ſending a Commiſſion to old John Arundel of Trerice to command, well knowing that it muſt be preſerved principally by his Intereſt; and in Reſpect of his Age joined his eldeſt Son with him: And after his Death He added the younger Brother to the Command, of whom We are ſpeaking, who was in Truth then looked upon as the moſt powerful Perſon in that County.

When the King, then Prince, was compelled after almoſt the whole Weſt was loſt to retire into Cornwall, He remained in Pendennis Caſtle,, and from thence made his firſt Embarkation to Scilly: And at parting, out of a princely Senſe of the Affection and Service of that Family, He took the old Gentleman aſide, and in the Preſence of his Son wiſhed him "to defend the Place "as long as He could, becauſe Relief might come, "of which there was ſome Hope from abroad;" and promiſed him, "if He lived to come back into England "He would make him a Baron, and if He were dead "He would make it good to his Son." The old Man behaved himſelf bravely to his Death, having all his Eſtate taken from him; and his Son remained as eminently faithful, and had as deep Marks of it as any Man: So that at the King's Return, who never forgat his Promiſe, He might have received the Effect of it in the firſt Creation, if He had deſired it; but He choſe rather to recover the Bruiſes his Fortune had endured by Seizures and Sequeſtrations, before He would embark him in a Condition that muſt preſently raiſe his Expence in his Way of Living. And as ſoon as He found himſelf at Eaſe in that Reſpect, He got a Friend to inform the King, "that he was ready to "receive his Bounty."

And his Majeſty, being under theſe two Obligations, was willing to take the ſame Opportunity to prefer the two other Perſons He loved ſo well. But at the ſame Time that He declared his Reſolution for the laſt two (but what concerned the others had been long known and expected), his Majeſty reflected upon the Number of the Houſe of Peers, which was in many Reſpects found grievous, and declared to his Brother and the Chancellor, who were only preſent, "that "no Importunity ſhould prevail with him to make any "more Lords in many Years, and till the preſent "Number ſhould be leſſened;" in which Reſolution the Duke willingly concurred, and proteſted "that He "would never more importune him in that Point." The Reaſon of mentioning this Declaration and Reſolution will appear hereafter. This Creation was no ſooner over, than the new Earl of Falmouth went with the Duke to Sea: For though his Relation was now immediately to the King and near his Perſon, yet He thought himſelf obliged not to be from the Duke when He was engaged in ſo much Danger; and He was confeſſed by all Men to abound in a moſt fearleſs Courage.

It will not be unſeaſonable in this Place to take a View of an Act of State that paſſed about this Time, and which afterwards adminiſtered Matter of Reproach againſt the Chancellor, and was made Uſe of by his Enemies as an Evidence of his Corruption; for the better underſtanding whereof, it will be neceſſary to begin the Relation from the original Ground of the Counſel. About the firſt Chriſtmas after the King's happy Return into England, the Chancellor, Treaſurer, Privy Seal, and the two Chief Juſtices (being the Perſons appointed by the Statute for that Purpoſe) met together to ſet the Prices upon the ſeveral Sorts of Wines; and were attended, according to Cuſtom, by the Company of Vintners, and the chief Merchants in the City who traded in that Commodity. And being firſt to limit the Merchants to a reaſonable Rate, before They could preſcribe any Price to the Vintners upon the Retail, They found, by the beſt Enquiry They could make, that the firſt Prices beyond the Seas which the Merchants paid for their Wines were ſo exceſſive, that the Retail could not be brought within any Compaſs; and that ſince the Beginning of the Troubles the Price of Wines in general was exceedingly increaſed, and particularly that of the Canaries was almoſt double to what it had been in the Year 1640.

The Chancellor knew very well, by the Correſpondence He had held in the Canaries (during the Time that He had ſerved his Majeſty as his Ambaſſadour in Spain), that the whole Trade for the Canary Wine was driven ſolely by the Engliſh, and the Commodity entirely vended in the King's Dominions, all Chriſtendom beſides not ſpending any Quantity of that Wine: And thereupon He aſked the Merchants "whether what He had reported was not true, and "what would be the Way to remedy that Miſchief."

They all confeſſed it to be very true, and "that it "was a great Reproach to the Nation to be ſo much "impoſed upon in a Trade that They might govern "themſelves: And that the unreaſonable Prices of "the Wine were not the greateſt Prejudice that was "befallen that Trade. That before the Troubles "They had been ſo far from employing any Stock of "Money for the Support of that Traffick, that They "uſed to ſend their Ships fully laden with all Com-"modities thither, which yielded very good Markets, "being ſent from thence into the Weſt-Indies with "their Plate Fleets; and that the very Pipe-Staves "which They carried did very near ſupply the Value "of their Wine, ſo that They brought Home the Pro-"ceed of their Commodities either in Pieces of Eight, "or ſuch other Merchandiſes as had been brought "thither from the Indies, and upon which They re-"ceived great Profit. On the contrary, that the Trade "was now wholly driven by ready Money; that the "Commodities They ſend thither are not taken off, "except at their own Prices, ſo that They have for "the late Years ſent their Veſſels empty thither, except "only with ſome few Pipe-Staves, which by the De-"ſtruction in Ireland They could not ſend in any great "Proportion; and that their Ships return from thence "with no other Lading but thoſe Wines, which They "trade for in ready Money, either by Pieces of Eight "ſent in their Ships from hence, or by Bills of Ex-"change charged upon ſome known Merchants in "Spain. That over and above theſe Diſadvantages, "the Spaniards in thoſe Iſlands had of late impoſed "new Duties upon the Wine, and laid other Impoſi-"tions upon the Merchants than the Engliſh Nation "had been ever accuſtomed to." They ſaid, "all "theſe Inconveniences proceeded from the immode-"rate Appetite this Nation hath for that Sort of Wine, "and therefore They take from them as much as "They can make; and from our own Diſorder and "Irregularity in buying them, and contending who "ſhall get the moſt, and ſo raiſing the Price upon "one another, and making the Spaniards themſelves "the Judges what the Merchants ſhall pay."

The Lords, upon Conſultation between themſelves, found the Matter too hard for them, and that the Reformation of ſo much Evil muſt be made by Degrees, and and upon a Repreſentation of the Whole, with the Difficulties which attended it, to the King and his Privy Council, whoſe Wiſdoms only could provide a Remedy proportionable to the Miſchiefs. For the preſent, as They reſolved not to raiſe the Prices at which Wine was at that Time bought and ſold (which They believed, how reaſonably ſoever it might be done, would yet be very unpopular), ſo They thought it not juſt to draw down and abate thoſe Prices, ſince it appeared to them that the Wines coſt more in Proportion upon the Places of their Growth. They declared therefore to the Merchants and to the Vintners, "that though for the preſent They would permit the "ſame Prices to continue for the next Year, which "they had been ſold for the preſent Year," and which indeed were confirmed by the late Act of Parliament, "They ſhould hereafter take Care what "Markets They made; for that They were reſolved "the next Year to make the Prices much lower both "to the Merchant and to the Vintner:" And ſo, upon the Report made by the Lords of the whole Matter to the King in Council, and of what They thought fit to be done for the preſent, a Proclamation was publiſhed accordingly.

THE next Year both the Merchants and Vintners were very earneſt Suitors to the Lords at their accuſtomed Meeting, that greater Prices might be allowed, or at leaſt that the ſame might be continued; making it very evident, that their Wines coſt them more than they had done the Year before. Upon the Debate the Canary Merchants were much divided. Some of them inſiſted very importunately to have the Price raiſed, "becauſe it was notorious that They had paid much "more than formerly, by Reaſon," as They alledged, "that the Vintage had not yielded near the Proportion "that it uſed to do." Others, though confeſſing the Increaſe of Price, yet pretended a more publick Spirit and the Neceſſity of a Reformation: And therefore They preſſed as earneſtly, "that the Price might not "be raiſed, but that They might be permitted to take "what They had done already for this Year." It was quickly diſcovered whence this Moderation proceeded; and that the laſt Propoſers had a great Quantity of Wine upon their Hands, which had been provided the Year before, and ſo might well be ſold at the ſame Price; but that the former had no old Wine left, but were ſupplied with a full Proviſion of new, which had coſt them ſo much dearer. Both the one and the other deſired the Lords, "that whatever Reſolution "They took for the preſent, a Clauſe might be inſerted "in the Proclamation, That, the next Year which fol-"lowed, Canary Wine ſhould not be ſold for above four "and twenty Pounds the Pipe, and that every Year after "it ſhould be drawn lower," as it might well be, it having been ſold in the Year 1640 for twenty Pounds the Pipe; though, in the Year when his Majeſty returned, it had been permitted to be ſold at ſix and thirty Pounds the Pipe. "Such a Clauſe," They ſaid, "would give Notice to the Iſlanders, and oblige them "to ſell their Wines at more reaſonable Rates, and "would render the Merchants unexcuſable if They "ſhould give greater." Notwithſtanding all their Allegations, the Lords remembered what They had declared to them the laſt Year, which was as fair a Warning as any Thing They could now ſay would be. And accordingly They ſet lower Prices upon all Wines for the Year to come than had been allowed the laſt, as the moſt effectual Warning for the future: Which was thought a very rigorous Proceeding; but being reported to the King and Council, what They had done was allowed and confirmed, and his Majeſty was well contented that ſuch a Clauſe as They had propoſed ſhould be inſerted in the Proclamation; which was accordingly done.

THE Year following, when the Lords met again according to Cuſtom, which is as hath been ſaid about Chriſtmas, They found not the leaſt Reformation; on the contrary, that the Canary Merchants had paid dearer than ever, which made them all more ſolicitous to have the Price raiſed, and the Vintners as importunate for their Retail. And indeed the Vintners ſeemed to be in a much worſe Condition than the Merchants. And They made it appear, "that They were often "compelled to pay higher Prices to the Merchant than "were impoſed by their Lordſhips; without which "They could get no good Wine, and ſo muſt give "over their keeping Houſe: That the Penalty upon "the Merchant was very ſmall, being not above forty "Shillings a Pipe, and the Crime not eaſy to be "diſcovered, as was evident by there not having been "one Merchant queſtioned in many Years for that "common Tranſgreſſion; whereas on the Vintner's "Part the Penalty was very ſevere, and eaſily diſco-"vered by any Man who went to a Tavern and would "be an Informer, and that moſt of the Vintners in "London were at that very Time ſued in the Exchequer "upon thoſe very Penalties, which if exacted muſt "produce their Ruin."

THE Merchants excuſed themſelves for their preſent Pretence, and for their having given more for their Wines than was lawful for them to have done by their own Deſire: "That They had done their beſt, "and that the greateſt Traders amongſt them had conſented between themſelves not to ſuffer the Prices to "be raiſed upon them; but that They found it ineffectual, and that though They ſhould give over "their Trades, it would produce no Reformation. "That the Trade was open to all Adventurers, and "that there had been many Ships ſent from England in "that very Year by Jews, and People of ſeveral "Trades, who had never been before known to trade "to the Canaries: Inſomuch as when They who had "been long bred up to the Trade, and had been long "Factors in thoſe Iſlands, ſent their Ships thither, They "found other Engliſh Ships there, and the Wines "bought at a greater Price than They had allowed "their Factors to give; ſo that They muſt either have "their Ships return empty and unladen, or take the "Wines at the Prices other Men gave. That They "had choſen the latter, as well to continue their "Trade, as to draw Home ſome Part of the Stock "They had in that Country. That They could imagine but two Ways to reform that Exceſs: The "one, by putting the Trade into ſuch a Method and "under ſuch Rules, as might reſtrain that Licence, "and not leave it in the Power of Perſons who never had "been in the Trade to give the Law to it; and by this "Means the Iſlanders would find it neceſſary to ſet "reaſonable Prices upon their Commodities, and to "yield ſuch other Advantages and Privileges to the "Merchants as They had heretofore enjoyed. The "other, that the King would by his Proclamation "prohibit the Importation of any Canary Wines into "his Dominions: And hereby He would quickly re-"ceive ſuch Propoſitions from Spain, as would put it "into his own Power to make the Reformation; other-"wiſe the Iſlanders had been perſuaded that England "could not live without their Wines."

THE Lords were reſolved, notwithſtanding all that had been ſaid, that They would execute the former Proclamation, and reduce the Prices of the Wines to what had been then determined: And after They had given a full Account of the whole Buſineſs to the King in Council, the Reſolution was approved, and a Proclamation was iſſued out to that Purpoſe. The Merchants and Vintners applied themſelves to his Majeſty, and to many of the Lords of the Council, and thought They had Encouragement enough to hope for a Relief lief in an Appeal to the King and Council by Petition; and They had thereupon a Day assigned to be heard. Many of the Lords thought it very hard, if not unjust, to compel Men to sell cheaper than They bought, which was the Truth of the Case, and which must oblige both Merchants and Vintners to sophisticate and corrupt their Wines to preserve their Estates; which might probably turn to the great Damage of the whole Kingdom, in producing Sickness and Diseases: And this charitable and generous Consideration prevailed with the major Part of the Lords to be well contented, and to wish that some Indulgence might be exercised towards them. On the contrary, when the King had well weighed the whole Proceedings, and with Trouble and Indignation considered the obstinate Vice of the Nation, which made it ridiculous to all the World, He expressed a positive Resolution to vindicate himself and his Government from this Reproach. He thought the adhering firmly to the Prices which had been resolved upon by the Lords would be the best Preface to this Reformation, though it might be attended with particular Damage to particular Persons, who had yet less Cause to complain, because their own Advice had been followed. And thereupon his Majesty declared, "that He would make no Alteration;" but withal told them, "that if They could make any "Proposition to him for the better Regulation of the "Trade" (for They had themselves mentioned a Charter), "He would graciously receive any Propo-"sitions They would make, and gratify them in what "was just:" And so, notwithstanding all Attempts which were often repeated, the Price set by the Lords was ratified for the Year following.

The principal Canary Merchants petition for a Charter.

Shortly after, many of the Merchants who had always traded to the Canaries did petition the King, "that They might be incorporated; and that none "might be permitted to trade thither but such who "would be of that Corporation, and observe the Con-"stitutions which should be made by them:" Which Petition was presented to the King at the Council-Board; and being read, his Majesty (according to his Custom in Matters of Difficulty and publick Concernment) directed it to be read again on that Day Month, at which Time his Majesty presumed that all who would oppose it would present their Reasons and Objections against it, which he desired to hear. At the Day appointed, though there was no Petition against it, yet it was observed that there were many of the most eminent Merchants of that Trade, whose Names were not to the Petition, nor who otherwise appeared desirous to have a Charter granted: Which his Majesty considering, He put off the Debate for another Week, and directed "that the other Merchants by "Name should be desired to be present, and to give "their Advice freely upon the Point."

And there was at that Day a very full Appearance; when his Majesty directed, "that a Relation should "be made to them of the whole Progress that had been "in the Business, and the Damage and Dishonour the "Nation underwent in the carrying on that Trade: "That many Merchants had presented a Petition to "him, containing an Expedient to bring it into bet-"ter Order; but finding them not to appear in it, and "being informed that They were best acquainted with "and most engaged in that Trade, He had sent for "them to know their Opinion, whether they thought "what was proposed to be reasonable and fit to be "granted, and if so, why They did not concern them-"selves in it." They answered, "that the Reason "why They had not appeared in it was, because They "thought They should be Losers by it, and therefore "were not solicitous to procure a Grant from his Ma-"jesty to their own Damage;" and so enlarged "upon "the Nature of the Trade, their long Experience in "it, and the Greatness of their Stock, which They "should not be allowed to continue under any Regula-"tion. But as They did not think themselves in a "Situation to be solicitous for a Change, so They "could not deny, being required by his Majesty to "speak the Truth, but that the Proposition that was "made was for the publick Good and Benefit of the "Kingdom, and that They conceived no other Way "to redeem that Trade, and the Nation from the In-"solence which the Spaniard exercised upon them;" implying, "that if his Majesty would command "them, They would likewise concur and join in the "carrying on the Service:" To which his Majesty giving them gracious Encouragement, They all seemed to depart of one Mind; and his Majesty remained confirmed in the former Opinion He had of it. The King approves the Petition.

But there remained yet an Objection, which was principally insisted on by the Ministers of the Revenue, who alledged very reasonably, "that this new-model-"ling the Trade must produce some Alteration, and "would meet some Opposition from the Spaniard, "which for the Time would lessen the Customs and "entitle the Farmers to a Defalcation." The Petition was therefore referred to the Farmers of the Customs, who were to attend the next Council-Day: And being then called, They did acknowledge, "that the "Design proposed would prove very profitable to "the Kingdom in many Respects," upon which They enlarged, "and that in the End it would not "be attended with any Diminutions of the Customs; "but for the present," They said, "They could not "but expect, that the Obstinacy and Contradiction "of the Spaniard would give such a Stop to Trade, "at least for one Year, that if his Majesty did not "reimburse them for what should fall short in the "Receipt of Custom, They must look to be very "great Losers." The Merchants on the other Hand offered "to be bound, that if They did not the "first Year bring in as much as had been usually "entered, They would make good what should be "wanting to the Farmers upon a Medium." Whereupon his Majesty himself declared, "that He would "not, for a small Damage to himself, hinder the "Kingdom from enjoying so great a Benefit:" And He commanded his Solicitor General, who then attended the Board, "to prepare such a Charter as "might provide for all those good Ends which were "desired in the Petition," and which had been so largely debated; and it was notorious, that there had never been a greater Concurrence of the Board in any Direction.

Many Months passed before the Charter was prepared; in which Time there was never the least new Objection made against it, nor was it known that any Man was unsatisfied with it. After it was engrossed and had passed the King's Hand, it was brought to the Great Seal; and there the Lord Mayor of London and the Court of Aldermen had entered a Caveat to stop the passing of it. The Chancellor, according to Course, appointed a Time when He would hear all Parties. The City alledged an Order made a Year or two before by the King in Council, upon a Complaint then exhibited by the Court of Aldermen against the Turkey Company and other Corporations, "in which," They said, "there were very many "Merchants of the best Trade and of the greatest "Estates in the City, who would never take out "their Freedom, and so refused to bear any Charge "or Office in it, to the very great Prejudice and "Dishonour of the City and of the Government "thereof; since They were thereby compelled to "call inferiour Citizens to be Aldermen, before "They had Estates to bear the Charge of it, whilst "the gravest and the richest Men, who were most "fit, The City of London oppose it.

" fit, could not be obliged to accept of it, becauſe " They were not Freemen." The Perſons concerned, which were indeed a great Number of very valuable and ſubſtantial Men and of great Eſtates, anſwered, " that They had traded very many Years " without finding any Reaſon to take out their Freedom, which They might do or not do as They " thought beſt for themſelves; that They had always paid Scot and Lot in the ſeveral Pariſhes " where They lived with the higheſt of the Inhabitants, and were taxed the more becauſe They had " not taken out their Freedom, They who taxed " them being always Freemen; that They were " grown old now, and had no Mind to become " young Freemen, but would rather give over their " Trade, and retire into the Country where They " had Eſtates."

BESIDES the Rules which the King gave upon the Difference then in Queſtion, He was pleaſed to declare, and appointed it to be entered as an Order in the Council-Book, " that Care ſhould be taken, that " in all Charters which He ſhould hereafter renew " or grant to any Companies or Corporations in the " City of London, They ſhould firſt make themſelves " Freemen of the City; by which They might be " liable to the Charges of it, as other Citizens are." They ſaid, " that there were many of this Company " that was now to be incorporated who were not " Freemen :" And therefore the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen deſired the Benefit of the King's Order, which was read.

THE Merchants confeſſed, " that many of them " were not Freemen, and reſolved not to be :" They ſaid, " They had never heard of this Order, and " were ſorry that They had ſpent ſo much Money " to no Purpoſe." The Chancellor declared to them, " that He could not ſeal their Charter till They had " complied with the King's Determination, and given " the Court of Aldermen Satisfaction ;" and They all ſeemed as poſitive that They would rather be without their Charter, than They would ſubmit to the other Inconveniences: And ſo They departed. But after ſome Days Deliberation and Conſultation between themſelves, and when They found that there was no Poſſibility to procure a Diſpenſation from that Order, They treated with the City, and agreed with them in the preparing a Clauſe to be inſerted in their Charter, by which They were obliged in ſo many Years to become Freemen; which Clauſe, being approved by all Parties, was in the King's Preſence entered in the Bill that his Majeſty had ſigned, and being afterwards added to the Engroſſment, it was again thus reformed and ſent to the Great Seal, and preſented to the Chancellor to be ſealed.

The Chancellor refuſes to put the Seal till the Merchants had ſatisfied the City.

THERE were by this Time ſeveral new Caveats entered againſt it at the Seal; all which the Chancellor heard, and ſettled every one of them to the joint Satisfaction of all Parties, and all Caveats were withdrawn. There was then a Rumour, that there would be ſome Motions made againſt it in the Houſe of Commons: And ſome Parliament-Men, who ſerved for the Weſtern Boroughs, came to the Chancellor, and deſired him " that He would defer the ſealing " it for ſome Days till They might be heard, ſince " it would undo their Weſtern Trade; and" They ſaid " They reſolved to move the Houſe of Com- " mons to put a Stop to it." The Chancellor informed them of the whole Progreſs it had paſſed, and told them, " He believed that They would " hardly be able to offer any good Reaſons againſt " it :" However, ſince it was then well known that the Parliament would be prorogued within ten or twelve Days, He ſaid " He would ſuſpend the ſeal- " ing it till then, to the End that They might offer " any Objections againſt it there or any where elſe." But though the Parliament ſate longer than it was then conceived it would have done, there was no Mention or Notice taken of it: And after the Prorogation no Application was farther made for the ſtopping it, and the Merchants preſſed very importunately that it might be ſealed, alledging with Reaſon " that the deferring it ſo long had been very much " to their Prejudice." Whereupon the Chancellor conceived that it would not conſiſt with his Duty to delay it longer, and ſo affixed the Great Seal to it.

THE Company then choſe a Governour and other Officers according to their Charter, and made ſuch Orders and By-Laws as They thought fit for the carrying on and Advancement of their Trade, which They might alter when They thought convenient; and for the preſent They reſolved upon a joint Stock, and aſſigned ſo many Shares to each particular Man. In this Compoſition and Diſtribution there fell out ſome Difference between themſelves, which could not be taken Notice of abroad: And even ſome of them, who firſt petitioned and were moſt ſolicitous to procure the Charter, did what They could to hinder the Effect of it; ſent privately to their Factors at the Canaries, " to oppoſe any Orders that ſhould " be ſent from the Governour and the Company, " and that They ſhould do all They could to incenſe " the Spaniards againſt the Charter," and bade them promiſe " that all their Wine ſhould be taken off in " Spite of the Corporation." Whereupon great Diſorders did ariſe in the Canaries between the Engliſh themſelves; and by the Conjunction of the Spaniards with thoſe few Engliſh who oppoſed the Charter, They proceeded ſo far as to ſend the principal Factors for the Company out of the Iſland into Spain, and to make a publick Act by the Governour and Council there, " that no Ship belonging to the Com- " pany ſhould be ſuffered to come into the Harbour, " or to take in any Lading from the Iſland :" All which was tranſacted there many Months before it was known in England, and probably would have been prevented or eaſily reformed, if it had not pleaſed God that the Plague at this Time ſpread very much in London, and if the War with the Dutch had not reſtrained all Engliſh Ships from going to the Canaries for the Space of a Year; which Intermiſſion, not to be prevented nor in Truth foreſeen, gave ſome Advantage to the Merchants at Home who oppoſed their Charter, who complained for the Not-Return of their ſeveral Stocks within the Time that the Company had promiſed they ſhould be returned.

Some Differences in the Company after their Incorporation.

I AM not willing to reſume this Diſcourſe in another Place, which I ſhould be compelled to do if I diſcontinued the Relation in this Place, as in Point of Time I ſhould do; but I chooſe rather to inſert here what fell out afterwards, and to finiſh the Account of that Affair, that there may be no Occaſion in the Current of this Narration to mention any Particulars that related to it.

WHEN the King was at Oxford, and was informed of what had paſſed at the Canaries, ſome Merchants appeared there to petition againſt the Charter, whereof there were ſome who were the firſt Petitioners for it. His Majeſty appointed a Day for the ſolemn hearing it in the Preſence of his Privy Council, the Governour being likewiſe ſummoned and preſent there. Upon opening all their Grievances the Petitioners themſelves confeſſed, " that They could not " complain of the Charter; that it was a juſt and " neceſſary Charter, and for the great Benefit of the " Kingdom, though ſome private Men might for the " preſent be Loſers by it: That their Complaint was

Which are referred to the King.

" only againſt their Conſtitutions and By-Laws, and " the ſevere Proſecution thereupon contrary to the In- " tention of the Charter itſelf;" inſtancing, amongſt other Things, " the very ſhort Day limited by the " Charter, after which They could not continue their " Trade without being Members of the Corpora- " tion; and that Day was ſo ſoon after the ſealing " the Charter, that it was not poſſible for them to " draw their Stocks from thence in ſo ſhort a " Time."

When They had finiſhed all their Objections, the King obſerved to them, " that They complained " only of what themſelves had done, and not at all " of the Charter, which gave them only Authority " to chooſe a Governour and to make Conſtitutions " and By-Laws, but directed not what the Conſtitu- " tions and By-Laws ſhould be, which were the Re- " ſult of their own Conſultations, in which the ma- " jor Part muſt have concurred; and of that Kind " the Reſolution for a joint Stock was one, which " and all the reſt They might alter again at the next " Court, if the major Part were grieved with it." But becauſe They had complained of ſome Particulars, in which They might have Reaſon on their Side, his Majeſty expreſſed a Willingneſs to mediate and to make an Agreement between them: And thereupon He required the Governour to anſwer ſuch and ſuch Particulars which ſeemed to have moſt of Juſtice; but the Governour anſwered all at large, and made it clearly appear, that They had in Truth no Cauſe of Complaint. As to the ſhort Day that was aſſigned for the drawing away their Stocks, which had the greateſt Semblance of Reaſon in all They complained of, He ſaid, " They had no Rea- " ſon to mention their Want of Warning, for that " the Day was well enough known to them long be- " fore the ſealing the Charter, and might very well " have been complied with" (the Reaſons why the ſealing the Charter was ſo long deferred are ſet down before), " and could be no Reaſon to them to ne- " glect the giving Direction in their own Concern- " ments; but that They knew likewiſe, that the " Day was enlarged to a Day deſired by themſelves, " that there might be no Pretence for Diſcontent:" And thereupon the Order of the Court to that Pur- poſe was read to his Majeſty, and They could not deny it to be true.

Who ſatisfies all Parties.

In Concluſion, ſince it did appear that their Stock did in Truth ſtill remain in the Canaries, and in Juſtice belonged to them, whether it was their Fault or their Misfortune that it had not been drawn over in Time; the King perſuaded the Governour and his Aſſiſtants to give them ſuch Satisfaction in that and other Particulars, that before They retired from his Majeſty's Preſence They were unanimouſly agreed upon all their Pretences: And though ſome of the Lords, upon ſome Inſinuations and Diſcourſes which They had heard, had believed the Company to have been in the Wrong, They were now fully convinced of the contrary, and believed the Charter to be founded upon great Reaſon of State, and that the Execution of it had been very juſtifiable and with great Moderation. And it is to be obſerved, that the Parliament being then aſſembled at Oxford, there was not the leaſt Complaint againſt that Charter or Corporation.

A Vindication of the Chancellor in this Affair.

And this was the whole Progreſs of that Affair, until it ſerved ſome Mens Turns to make it after- wards Matter of Reproach to the Chancellor, in a Time when He had too great a Weight of the King's Diſpleaſure upon him to defend himſelf from that and other Calumnies, which few Men thought him guilty of. And if the Motives of State were not of Weight enough to ſupport the Patent, more ought not to be objected to him than to every other Coun- ſellor, there having never been a more unanimous Concurrence at that Board in any Advice They have given: And the Delays He uſed in the paſſing the Charter after it came to his Hand, his giving ſo long Time for the making Objections againſt it, and his ſo poſitively oppoſing the Company with Reference to their being Freemen of the City, are no Signs that He had ſuch a Mind to pleaſe them, as a Man would have who had been corrupted by them, or who was to have a Share in the Profit of the Patent, as was afterwards ſuggeſted, but never believed by any to whom He was in any Degree known, who knew well that He frequently refuſed to receive Money that He might very lawfully have done, and never took a Penny which He was obliged to refuſe. He was indeed, as often as that Affair came to be debated, very clear in his Judgment for the King's granting it, and always continued of the ſame Opinion: Nor did He ever deny, that ſome Months after the Patent was ſealed the Governour made him a Preſent in the Name of the Corporation, as it is preſumed He did to many other Officers through whoſe Hands it paſſed, and which was never refuſed by any of his Prede- ceſſors when it came from a Community upon the paſſing a Charter; which He never concealed from the King, who thought He might well do it. In the laſt Place it is to be remembered, that after all the Clamour againſt this Charter in Parliament, and upon the argu- ing againſt the Legality of it by eminent Lawyers be- fore the Houſe of Peers, it was ſo well ſupported by the King's Attorney General and other learned Law- yers, that the Lords would not give Judgment againſt it: But the Governour and the Corporation durſt not diſpute it farther with the Houſe of Commons, but choſe to ſurrender their Charter into the King's Hands.

The French ſend Ambaſſadeur into England under Pretence of Mediation.

The French had their Ambaſſadour, Monſieur Com- minge, remaining ſtill in England, who pretended to be ready to finiſh ſtill the Treaty of Commerce, but formalized ſo much upon every Article, though No- thing was demanded but what had been granted to Cromwell, that it was concluded that He wanted Power, though Somewhat was imputed to the Ca- pricioufneſs of his Nature, which made him hard to treat with, and not always vacant at the Hours him- ſelf aſſigned, being hypochondriack and ſeldom ſleep- ing without Opium. As ſoon as the War was de- clared the King of France ſent two other Ambaſſa- dours, whereof, for the Countenance and Splendour of it, the Duke of Vernueil was one, who being Uncle to Both the Kings was received rather under that Relation than in the other Capacity, and was lodged and treated by the King during the whole Time of his Stay. With him came likewiſe Monſieur Courtine, a Maſter of Requeſts, and much the quickeſt Man of the three, and upon whoſe Parts and Addreſs moſt of the Buſineſs depended. The former Am- baſſadour was joined in Commiſſion with the other two: And their declared Buſineſs was to mediate a Peace between the King and the Dutch, when there had been yet little Harm done, only great Preparations made on Both Sides for the War; which They did not ſeem very ſolicitous to interrupt, but contented themſelves with declaring at their firſt Audience, " that the King their Maſter out of Chriſtianity, and " to prevent the Effuſion of Chriſtian Blood, deſired " to mediate a Peace, which the States of the United " Provinces were very willing He ſhould do, and " profeſſed to have a very great Deſire of Peace; " which made his Chriſtian Majeſty hope that He " ſhould find the ſame good Inclinations here, and " if He might be informed what his Majeſty did re- " quire or what would be grateful to him, He did " not

" not doubt but that He ſhould perſuade the States " to ſubmit to it."

AND with this general Diſcourſe, and without delivering any Memorial in Writing, the Ambaſſadeurs acquieſced for many Months, as if their Buſineſs was only that the Dutch Ambaſſadour, who remained ſtill in London, might know and ſend Word to his Maſters that They had begun their Mediation. Otherwiſe They ſeemed in all their Diſcourſes to make ſome Kind of Apology for being ſent, implying " as if " the extraordinary Importunity of the Dutch had " prevailed with the King to undertake this Media- " tion, and which He did the rather, upon their " Promiſe that They would yield to any Thing He " ſhould adviſe them; and He was very far from " deſiring that his Majeſty might not receive ample " Satisfaction in whatſoever He required:" So that the King did not imagine, whatever Information He had received before, and whatever Jealouſy He had entertained, that this Embaſſy would be concluded in the Denunciation of a War againſt him. Nor is it probable that the Ambaſſadours themſelves at that Time knew that They were to perform that Office, though it was afterwards evident that the Matter had been long before reſolved in France. They lived between the two Courts, for the Queen Mother was likewiſe at that Time at her Palace of Somerſet-Houſe, in much Jollity, and as vacant from any Affairs till They might receive new Orders from Court, but ſpending much Time with the Dutch Ambaſſadour, whom They perſuaded " that They were very in- " tent upon and had much advanced the Treaty," as appeared by the Ambaſſadour's Letters to the Hague.

The Queen Mother leaves England.

THE Plague increaſed ſo faſt, that the Queen Mother, who had all the Winter complained of her Indiſpoſition of Health, and declared that She would in the Summer go again into France, took that Occaſion, albeit She was recovered to a very good State; and about the End of July removed and embarked for France, and took ſo many Things with her, that it was thought by many that She did not intend ever to return into England. Whatever her Intentions at that Time were, She never did ſee England again, though She lived many Years after.

The Duke continually ſends for Reinforcements.

IT was in April that the Duke went to Sea: And from the Day of his going thither with the Fleet, Letters and Orders came from him to the Day of the Battle for an Addition of more Ships, upon Intelligence of an Increaſe of Strength added to the Enemy, though They yet lay ſtill in the Harbours, whilſt the Duke was upon their Coaſts. But Mr. Coventry ſtill made new Demands, and wrote to the Chancellor, " that whilſt the King's Brother was at " Sea and ventured his own Perſon, Nobody who " wiſhed him well would, for ſaving Money, hinder " any Thing from being ſent that his Highneſs " thought neceſſary for his Defence:" And all Things were ſent, though procured with wonderful Difficulty.

THE Treaſurer had believed, when all the Proviſions were delivered which had been demanded, and all Computations ſatisfied which had been made, and the Fleet at Sea, that there would have been no more Expence till its Return; whereas every Day added new Expence which had not been thought of: And the requiring of more Ships was then believed, and more afterwards, to proceed from the reſtleſs Spirit of Mr. Coventry, who cared not how much He increaſed the Expence, and was willing to put the Treaſurer and all the King's Miniſters to contend with all Difficulties, that He might reproach their Lazineſs or Want of Ability. But They did not gratify him in that, but all the Ships and whatever elſe was ſent for were ſent; inſomuch as the Fleet amounted to no leſs than one hundred Sail, and was now retired for Want of Somewhat to do to our own Coaſt, where They reſolved to attend the Motion of the Enemy: And in this Time moſt of the Volunteers, having endured the Unpleaſantneſs of the Sea above a Month, begun to think that the War was not ſo neceſſary as They had thought it to be.

He retires to the Engliſh Coaſt.

THE Duke's Family that was numerous in his own Ship were not at Eaſe, and found leſs Reſpect from the Seamen than They had looked for: They grew into Factions between themſelves, and the Earl of Falmouth and Mr. Coventry were Rivals who ſhould have moſt Intereſt in the Duke, who loved the Earl beſt but thought the other the wiſer Man, who ſupported Pen (who diſobliged all the Courtiers) even againſt the Earl, who contemned Pen as a Fellow of no Senſe, and not worthy of the Charge and Truſt that was repoſed in him. In this Diſcompoſure and having Nothing to do, every Body grew angry at the Occaſion that brought them thither, and wiſhed for Peace.

THE Earl of Falmouth, as in a Time of Leiſure, was ſent by the Duke with Compliments to the King, and to give him an Account of the good State of the Fleet: He viſited the Chancellor, to whom He had always paid great Reſpect and made many Profeſſions; and He told him, " that They were all mad who " had wiſhed this War, and that himſelf had been " made a Fool to contribute to it, but that his Eyes " were open, and a Month's Experience at Sea had " enough informed him of the great Hazards the " King ran in it." He reproached Pen " as a Sot, " and a Fellow that He thought would be found " without Courage." He told him, " that the King " and the Duke too were Both inclined to Peace, and " diſcerned that the Charge and Expence of the War " would be inſupportable;" and concluded, " that " as ſoon as this Action ſhould be over, which could " not be avoided many Days if the Dutch Fleet put " to Sea, as it could not be doubted it would, it " would be good Time to make a Peace, which He " deſired him to think of, and to ſpeak with the King, " whom He would find diſpoſed to it:" And ſo He returned to the Fleet.

The Dutch Fleet puts out to Sea under Opdam.

AND by that Time the Dutch were come out, and the next Day were in View. They were near of equal Number, and well manned, under the Command of Opdam the Admiral of the whole Fleet, upon whom the States had conferred that Charge, that the Prince of Orange his Party might conclude, that They never intended that He ſhould have the Charges of his Father and Grandfather, and likewiſe to gratify the Nobility of Holland, that had a very ſmall Share in the Government. And this Gentleman, who had never been at Sea before, and had but a ſmall Fortune, was of that Number, and had joined with that Faction which was averſe from the Family of Orange. The Fleets came within Sight of each other on the firſt of June, and had ſome Skirmiſhes which continued on the ſecond, the Wind favouring neither Party, as willing to keep them aſunder: But upon the third it ſerved Both their Turns, and brought them as near each other as They could deſire to be.

The firſt general Engagement.

NOR did the Dutch ſeem to advance with leſs Courage and Reſolution. Opdam the Dutch Admiral with his Squadron bore directly upon the Duke with a Reſolution to board him: But before He came near enough, and very little before, whether by an Accident within his own Ship, or from a Grenado or other Shot out of the Duke's Ship, his Gun-Room took Fire, and in a Moment the Ship ſunk without any Man being ſaved. The Vice-Admiral miral of the ſame Squadron, being a Zealander, purſued the ſame Reſolution, and had boarded the Duke if Captain Jeremy Smith, a Captain of the Duke's Squadron, had not put himſelf between and boarded the Vice-Admiral, who was equally attacked by the Duke: And ſo that Ship was taken after moſt of the Men were killed; and the Captain himſelf was ſo wounded, that He only lived to be brought on Board the Duke's Ship, and to complain of his Companions "for not having ſeconded him according to "an Oath They had taken on Board their Admiral "the Day before," and died within Half an Hour to the great Trouble of the Duke, who gave him a great Teſtimony for a very gallant Man, and much deſired to preſerve him.

The Dutch are worſted.

THE Fight continued all the Day with very great Loſs of Men on all Sides, though after the firſt two Hours the Dutch, ſeeing many of their beſt Ships burned and more taken, did all that the Wind would give them Leave to ſeparate themſelves from the Engliſh Fleet, which purſued them ſo cloſe, that They found They loſt more by flying than by fighting, and did leſſen their Sails to give ſome Stop to the Purſuit till the Night might favour them: And the Evening no ſooner came, but They hoiſed up all their Sails, and intended Nothing but their Eſcape.

WHEN there was no more to be done by the Approach of the Night, the Duke, who was infinitely tired with the Labour of the Day, having loſt above two hundred Men aboard his own Ship, whereof ſome were Perſons of Quality, who ſtood next his own Perſon and ſhall be named anon, was prevailed with to repoſe himſelf after He had taken ſome Suſtenance; which He did, after He had given the Maſter of the Ship, an honeſt and a ſkilful Seaman, direct and poſitive Charge "to bear up in that Man-"ner upon the Dutch Fleet that He might loſe no "Ground, but find himſelf as near, when the Day "ſhould appear, as He was then when He went to "Sleep." The Fleet had no Guide but the Lanthorn of the Admiral, and were not to outſail him of Courſe, and behaved themſelves accordingly. But when the Duke aroſe and the Day appeared, the Dutch Fleet was out of View; and before He could reach them, They were got into their Ports or under the Shelter of their Flats, that it was not counſellable for the great Ships to purſue them farther: Yet ſome of thoſe Ships which made not ſo much Way, or had not ſteered ſo directly, were taken by the leſſer Ships that followed them. And the Duke had received ſo many Blows on his own and the other Ships, that it was neceſſary to retire into Port, where they might be repaired.

The Remainder of their Fleet eſcapes by Night.

The great Loſs of the Dutch.

IT was a Day of ſignal Triumph, the Action of it having much ſurpaſſed all that was done in Cromwell's Time, whoſe Navals were much greater than had ever been in any Age: But the Dutch had never then fought with ſo much Courage and Reſolution; nor were their Ships then in Strength to be compared to the Engliſh as Van Trump aſſured them, "and that except They "built better Ships They would be as often beaten as "They fought with the Engliſh." And from that Time They new-built all their Navy, and brought now with them as good Ships as any the King had: And the Men for ſome Hours behaved themſelves well. In that Day the Duke ſunk, burned, and took eighteen good Ships of War, whereof Half were of the beſt They had, with the Loſs of one ſingle ſmall Ship, for there was no more miſſing of his whole Fleet. It is true the Number of the killed and wounded Men was very great, and was thought the greater, becauſe in the great Maſſacre that was on the other Side there was no Man, except Opdam their Admiral, who had a Name. There were many excellent Officers killed and taken, Men of Courage and great Experience in naval Affairs, and therefore an irreparable Damage to them; but They had grown up from common Seamen, and ſo were of no other Quality than every Mariner of the Fleet.

Perſons ſlain on the Side of the Engliſh.

ON the Part of the Engliſh, beſides above two hundred Men that were killed on Board the Duke's own Ship, there fell the Earl of Falmouth, who hath been lately ſpoken of, and the Lord Muſkerry, eldeſt Son to the Earl of Clancarty, a young Man of extraordinary Courage and Expectation, who had been Colonel of a Regiment of Foot in Flanders under the Duke, and had the general Eſtimation of an excellent Officer: He was of the Duke's Bedchamber, and the Earl and He were at that Time ſo near the Duke, that his Highneſs was all covered with their Blood. There fell likewiſe in the ſame Ship Mr. Richard Boyle, a younger Son of the Earl of Burlington, a Youth of great Hope, who came newly Home from Travel, where He had ſpent his Time with ſingular Advantage, and took the firſt Opportunity to loſe his Life in the King's Service. There were many other Gentlemen Volunteers in the ſame Ship, who had the ſame Fate.

The Earl of Falmouth. Lord Muſkerry.

Mr. Richard Boyle.

IN Prince Rupert's Ship, who did Wonders that Day, and in that of the Earl of Sandwich, who behaved him with notable Courage and Conduct, there were very many Men ſlain, and ſome Gentlemen Volunteers of the beſt Families whoſe Memories ſhould be preſerved. The Earl of Marlborough, who had the Command of one of the beſt Ships, and had great Experience at Sea, having made many long Voyages at Sea, and being now newly returned from the Eaſt-Indies, whither the King had ſent him with a Squadron of Ships to receive the Iſland of Bombayne from Portugal, was in this Battle likewiſe ſlain. He was a Man of wonderful Parts in all Kinds of Learning, which He took more Delight in than his Title; and having no great Eſtate deſcended to him, He brought down his Mind to his Fortune, and lived very retired, but with more Reputation than any Fortune could have given him. The Earl of Portland was a Volunteer on Board his Ship, and loſt his Life by his Side, being a young Man of very good Parts, newly come of Age, and the Son of a very wiſe and worthy Father, who died few Months before: And He having a long and entire Friendſhip with the Earl of Marlborough, his Son, though of a melancholick Nature, intended to lead an active Life, and to apply himſelf to it under the Conduct of his Father's Friend, with whom He died very bravely.

The Earl of Marlborough.

The Earl of Portland.

THERE was another almoſt irreparable Loſs this Day in Sir John Lawſon, who was Admiral of a Squadron, and of ſo eminent Skill and Conduct in all maritime Occaſions, that his Counſel was moſt conſidered in all Debates, and the greateſt Seamen were ready to receive Advice from him. In the Middle of the Battle He received a Shot with a Muſket-Bullet upon the Knee, with which He fell: And finding that He could no more ſtand and was in great Torment, He ſent to the Duke to deſire him to ſend another Man to command his Ship; which He preſently did. The Wound was not conceived to be mortal; and They made Haſte to ſend him on Shore, as far as Deptford or Greenwich, where for ſome Days there was Hope of his Recovery; but ſhortly his Wound gangrened, and ſo He died with very great Courage, and Profeſſion of an entire Duty and Fidelity to the King.

And Sir John Lawſon.

HE was indeed of all the Men of that Time, and of that Extraction and Education, incomparably the modeſteſt and wiſeſt Man, and moſt worthy to be confided in. He was of Yorkſhire near Scarborough, of that Rank of People who are bred to the Sea from their Cradle. And a young Man of that Profeſſion He was,

His Character.

was, when the Parliament first possessed themselves of the Royal Navy; and Hull being in their Hands, all the Northern Seamen easily betook themselves to their Service: And his Industry and Sobriety made him quickly taken Notice of, and to be preferred from one Degree to another, till from a common Sailor He was promoted to be a Captain of a small Vessel, and from thence to the Command of the best Ships.

HE had been in all the Actions performed by Blake, some of which were very stupendous, and in all the Battles which Cromwell had fought with the Dutch, in which he was a signal Officer and very much valued by him. He was of that Classis of Religion which were called Independents, most of which were Anabaptists, who were generally believed to have most Aversion to the King, and therefore employed in most Offices of Trust. He was Commander in Chief of the Fleet when Richard was thrown out: And when the Contest grew between the Rump and Lambert, He brought the whole Fleet into the River, and declared for that which was called the Parliament; which brake the Neck of all other Designs, though he intended only the better Settlement of the Commonwealth.

WHEN the Council of State was settled between the Dissolution of the Rump and the calling the Parliament, They did not like the Temper of the Fleet, nor especially of Lawson, who under the Title of Vice-Admiral had the whole Command of the Fleet, which was very strong, and in which there were many Captains They liked well: Yet They durst not remove the Vice-Admiral, lest his Interest in the Seamen, which was very great, should give them new Trouble. The Expedient They resolved upon was to send Colonel Mountague as Admiral to command the Fleet, without removing Lawson, who continued still in his Command, and could not refuse to be commanded by Mountague, who had always been his superiour Officer, and who had likewise a great Interest in very many of the Officers and Seamen. Yet Mountague, who brought with him a firm Resolution to serve the King, which was well known to his Majesty, had no Confidence in Lawson till the Parliament had proclaimed the King: And when He brought the Fleet to Scheveling to receive the King, all Men looked upon the Vice-Admiral as a great Anabaptist and not fit to be trusted. But when the King and the Duke had conferred with him, They liked him very well: And He was from Time to Time in the Command of Vice-Admiral in all the Fleets which were sent into the Mediterranean. Nor did any Man perform his Duty better: He caused all Persons, how well qualified soever, who He knew were affected to a Republick, to be dismissed from the Service, and brought very good Order into his own Ship, and frequented the Church-Prayers himself, and made all the Seamen do so. He was very remarkable in his Affection and Countenance towards all those who had faithfully served the King, and never commended any Body to the Duke to be preferred but such; and performed to his Death all that could be expected from a brave and an honest Man.

IT looked like some Presage that He had of his own Death, that before He went to Sea He came to the Treasurer and the Chancellor, to whom He had always borne much Respect, and spake to them in a Dialect He had never before used, for He was a very generous Man, and lived in his House decently and plentifully, and had never made any the least Suit or Pretence for Money. Now He told them, "that He "was going upon an Expedition in which many ho- "nest Men must lose their Lives: And though He "had no Apprehension of himself, but that God would "protect him as He had often done in the same Occa- "sions, yet He thought it became him against the "Worst to make his Condition known to them, "and the rather, because He knew He was esteemed "generally to be rich." He said, "in Truth He "thought himself so some few Months since, when "He was worth eight or nine thousand Pounds: But "the Marriage of his Daughter to a young Gentleman "in Quality and Fortune much above him (Mr. Ri- "chard Norton of Southwick in Hampshire, who had "fallen in Love with her, and his Father out of Ten- "derness to his Son had consented to it) had obliged "him to give her such a Portion as might in some "Degree make her worthy of so great a Fortune; "and that He had not reserved so much to himself and "Wife, and all his other Children which were four "or five, as He had given to that Daughter." He desired them therefore, "that if He should miscarry "in this Enterprise, the King would give his Wife, "two hundred Pounds a Year for her Life: if He "lived He desired Nothing. He hoped He should "make some Provision for them by his own Industry: "Nor did He desire any other Grant or Security for "this two hundred Pounds yearly, than the King's "Word and Promise, and that They would see it "effectual." The Suit was so modest, and the Ground of making it so just and reasonable, that They willingly informed his Majesty of it, who as graciously granted it, and spake himself to him of it with very obliging Circumstances; so that the poor Man went very contentedly to his Work, and perished as gallantly in it with an universal Lamentation. And it is to be presumed that the Promise was as well performed to his Wife: Sure it is, it was exactly complied with whilst either of those two Persons had any Power.

THE Victory and Triumph of that Day was surely very great, and a just Argument of publick Joy: How it came to be no greater shall be said anon. And the Trouble and Grief in many noble Families, for the Loss of so many worthy and gallant Persons, could not but be very lamentable in Wives, in Fathers and Mothers, and the other neerest Relations: But no Sorrow was equal, at least none so remarkable, as the King's was for the Earl of Falmouth. They who knew his Majesty best, and had seen how unshaken He had stood in other very terrible Assaults, were amazed at the Flood of Tears He shed upon this Occasion. The Immenseness of the Victory, and the Consequences that might have attended it; the Safety and Preservation of his Brother with so much Glory, on whose Behalf He had had so terrible Apprehensions during the three Days Fight, having by the Benefit of the Wind heard the Thunder of the Ordnance from the Beginning, even after by the lessening of the Noise as from a greater Distance He concluded that the Enemy was upon Flight: Yet all this, and the universal Joy that He saw in the Countenance of all Men for the Victory and the Safety of the Duke, made no Impression in him towards the Mitigation of his Passion for the Loss of this young Favourite, in whom few other Men had ever observed any Virtue or Quality which They did not wish their best Friends without; and very many did believe that his Death was a great Ingredient and considerable Part of the Victory. He was young and of insatiable Ambition; and a little more Experience might have taught him all Things which his weak Parts were capable of. But They who observed the strange Degree of Favour He had on the sudden arrived to, even from a Detestation the King had towards him, and concluded from thence, and more from the deep Sorrow the King was possessed with for his Death, to what a prodigious Height He might have reached in a little Time more, were not at all troubled that He was taken out of the Way.

THE Duke, after He had given Directions for the speedy repairing of the Fleet, and for the present ſending out ſuch Ships as could quickly be made ready to ride before the Coaſt of Holland, made Haſte to preſent himſelf to the King, and to the Queen his Mother, who was ready to begin her Journey to France, and had ſtayed ſome Days to ſee the Succeſs of the naval Fight, and afterwards to ſee the Duke; and within few Days after his Arrival her Majeſty left the Kingdom.

The Reaſon why the Victory was no farther improved.

And now the Whiſper began in the Duke's Family of the Reaſon, why the Victory after ſo great Advantages had not been purſued with that Vigour that might have made it more deſtructive to the Enemy than it proved to be. The Maſter of the Duke's Ship (Captain . . . . .) purſued his Orders very punctually after the Duke was gone to Sleep, and kept within a juſt Diſtance of the Dutch Fleet that remained in Order together, for many fled in Confuſion and ſingly to that Part of the Coaſt that They thought They knew beſt; and many of them were taken. But the Duke was no ſooner in Sleep, but Mr. Brounker of his Bedchamber, who with wonderful Confuſion had ſuſtained the Terrour of the Day, reſolved to prevent the like on the Day ſucceeding. He firſt went to Sir William Pen, who commanded the Ship, and told him, "that "He knew well how miraculouſly the Duke was pre- "ſerved that Day, and that They ought not farther to "tempt God;" wiſhed him to remember, "that the "Duke was not only the King's Brother but the Heir "Apparent of the Crown, and what the Conſequence "would be if He ſhould be loſt. And therefore it "would concern him not to ſuffer the Duke's known "and notorious Courage to engage him in a new "Danger, which He would infallibly be expoſed to "the next Morning, if They continued to make ſo "much Sail as They did, and to keep ſo near the "Dutch, who fled, but if They were preſſed and in "Deſpair, would fight as ſtoutly as They had done in "the Beginning. And therefore He deſired and ad- "viſed him to give the Maſter Order to ſlacken the "Sails, that the Dutch might get what Ground They "could, to avoid a farther Encounter." Pen anſwered him honeſtly, and told him, "He durſt give "no ſuch Orders except He had a Mind to be hang- "ed, for the Duke had himſelf given poſitive Charge "to the contrary."

Mr. Brounker, when He could not prevail there, confidently went to the Maſter of the Ship, who was an honeſt and a ſtout Man, and carefully kept the Steerage himſelf, that He might be ſure to obſerve the Order He had received from his Highneſs, and told him, "that it was the Duke's Pleaſure that He ſhould "ſlack the Sails without taking Notice of it to any "Man." Whereupon the Maſter did as He was commanded, making no Doubt that a Servant ſo near the Perſon of his Highneſs, and in ſo much Favour with him, would not have brought ſuch an Order without due Authority.

And by this Means the Remainder of the Fleet eſcaped, which otherwiſe would probably have been all taken: For it was afterwards known, that there was ſuch a Confuſion amongſt the Officers, that Nobody would obey; for though in Truth the Right of commanding, according to the Courſe amongſt them, after the Death of Opdam was in the Vice-Admiral of Zealand, yet, He being likewiſe killed, the other could not agree. But young Trump, the Son of the old famous Admiral, who had behaved himſelf very bravely all the Day, challenged the Command in the Right of Holland; but John Evertſon of Zealand, Brother to him that was killed, required it as his Right: Which begat ſo great an Animoſity as well as Confuſion amongſt them, that the Morning, if They had been purſued, would in all Probability have proved as diſmal to them as the Day before had done.

But the Duke never ſuſpected this, nor did any preſume to tell him of it, which made many Men preſume that it was done with Privity of Mr. Coventry, not only for the great Friendſhip between him and Brounker, but becauſe both Pen and the Maſter were ſo ſilent when the Duke was ſo much troubled the next Morning: Nor did the Duke come to hear of it till ſome Years after, when Mr. Brounker's ill Courſe of Life and his abominable Nature had rendered him ſo odious, that it was taken Notice of in Parliament, and upon Examination found to be true, as is here related; upon which He was expelled the Houſe of Commons, whereof He was a Member, as an infamous Perſon, though his Friend Coventry adhered to him, and uſed many indirect Arts to have protected him, and afterwards procured him to have more Countenance from the King than moſt Men thought He deſerved, being a Perſon throughout his whole Life never notorious for any Thing but the higheſt Degree of Impudence, and ſtooping to the moſt infamous Offices, and playing very well at Cheſs, which preferred him more than the moſt virtuous Qualities could have done.

With this Victory a new vaſt Charge and Expence (beſide the repairing the hurt Ships, Maſts and Rigging, and fitting out new Ships of War, and buying more Fireſhips) appeared, that was never foreſeen or brought into any Computation; which was a Proviſion for ſick and wounded Men, which amounted to ſo great a Number upon all the Coaſt, that the Charge amounted in all Places, notwithſtanding the general Charity of the People, and the Convenience that many Hoſpitals yielded, to above two thouſand Pounds the Week for ſome Weeks, and though leſs afterwards by the Death and Recovery of many, yet continued very great; beſides the Charge of keeping the Dutch Priſoners, which were above two thouſand, and every Day increaſed.

The Queen Mother prevents the Duke's going to Sea again.

The Duke was very impatient to repair and ſet out the Fleet again to Sea, and reſolved Nothing more than to go in Perſon again to command it, his Family remaining ſtill on Board, and preparing ſuch Things as were wanting for his Accommodation: But the Queen Mother had prevailed with the King at parting to promiſe her, "that the Duke ſhould not "go again in Perſon in that Expedition;" which was concealed from the Duke, his Majeſty believing that the Confidence of his Royal Highneſs's going, contributed very much to the ſetting out the Fleet, as it did ſo much, that but for that, it had been impoſſible to have procured ſo much Money as was with infinite Difficulty procured, to ſatisfy the Expences of ſo many Kinds, whereof many had been unthought of. And towards this there was a Benefit that flowed from a Fountain of extreme Miſery, which was the Increaſe of the Plague, which ſpread ſo faſt that the King's ſtaying ſo long in Town was very dangerous. Yet the Approach of this great Calamity, that in other Reſpects produced great Miſchiefs, advanced the preſent Enterpriſe: For all People who had Money knew not what to do with it, not daring to leave it in their Houſes where they durſt not ſtay themſelves; ſo that They willingly put it into the Bankers Hands, who ſupplied the King upon ſuch Aſſignations as the late Act of Parliament and other Branches of the King's Revenue would yet bear.

The French Ambaſſadours neglect an Opportunity of making Peace.

And if at this Time the French Ambaſſadours had purſued their Office of Mediation, it is very probable that it might have been with Succeſs. For beſides the great Loſs the Dutch had received in the Battle and in their being deprived of ſo many of the Merchant Ships the Factions were irreconcilable in the Fleet: There were many Officers who had behaved themſelves very baſely and cowardly in the Action, but They knew not not how to puniſh them; Everſon and Trump, who were their beſt Seamen, would not ſubmit to be commanded by each other; the People were ready to riſe upon De Wit, upon whom They looked as the Occaſion of the War, and cried aloud for Peace. And the Faction amongſt the States themſelves was very viſible: All the other complained bitterly againſt the Province of Holland, "which" They ſaid "had engaged them "in a War againſt their Will and without their Pri-"vity, which was directly contrary to the Form and "Conſtitution of their Government." In a Word, Peace was univerſally deſired and prayed for; and in the Opinion of all Men, any reaſonable Conditions would at that Time have been yielded to. And as the People of England generally had not been pleaſed with the Beginning the War, ſo the Court was weary of it; and the King would have been willing to have received any good Overtures for the compoſing it, and the Duke, ſince He was kept from bearing a Part in it, would not have oppoſed it. But the Ambaſſadours preſſed no ſuch Matter, but congratulated the Victory with the ſame Joy They found in the Court, and ſeemed to think that any Misfortune that could befall the Dutch would be but a juſt Puniſhment for their Pride and Inſolence towards all their neighbour Princes: The two Nations had not yet worried themſelves enough, entirely to ſubmit to the Arbitration of France; which it reſolved They ſhould do.

The Fleet again prepared.

WITHIN leſs than a Month the Fleet was again prepared and ready for the Sea, as ſtrong and in as good a Condition as it had been before the Battle; and the King and the Duke went thither, the Duke making no Doubt of putting his Perſon on Board. And the King at that Time reſolved that Prince Rupert and the Earl of Sandwich ſhould have the joint Command of it: In order to which Prince Rupert was prepared, of whoſe eaſy Concurrence only there was ſome Doubt, his Majeſty promiſing himſelf all Conformity and Reſignation from the Earl of Sandwich; which He met with in Both, for the Prince very cheerfully ſubmitted to his Majeſty's Pleaſure. In the Journey the King acquainted his Brother with his Reſolution, and the Promiſe He had made to the Queen their Mother; with which the Duke was much troubled, and offered many Reaſons to divert his Majeſty from laying his Command upon him: But when He found there was no Remedy, He ſubmitted, and gave Orders for diſembarking his Family and Goods.

BUT when this was communicated to Mr. Coventry, who was to prepare ſuch Commiſſions and Warrants as upon this Alteration of Counſels were neceſſary, He perſuaded the Duke, and prevailed with him to believe, "that it would be much better to commit the ſole "Command of the Fleet to the Earl of Sandwich, "than to join Prince Rupert in it with him," who, for no other Reaſon but for not eſteeming him at the Rate He valued himſelf, had been long in his Diſfavour. He ſuggeſted ſome Defects in the Prince, which Nobody could abſolve him from, and which the gentle Temper of the Earl of Sandwich, who knew him as well as the other, could have complied with: And many thought it would have in the Conjunction produced a very good Mixture, the Danger from the Prince being too ſudden Reſolutions from too much Heat and Paſſion, and the Earl having enough of Phlegm and Warineſs in deliberating, and much Vigour in the executing what was concluded; and They were Both well prepared and inclined to perform the Function.

BUT Mr. Coventry's Advice prevailed both with the Duke and King: And ſo in the Inſtant that the King and Duke were to return from the Fleet that was ready to ſet Sail with the firſt fair Wind, and not till then, the King told Prince Rupert, without enlarging upon the Reaſons, "that He would have him to return "with him to London, and accompany him this Summer, "and that the Earl of Sandwich ſhould have the ſole "Command of the Fleet;" with which the Prince was wonderfully ſurpriſed and perplexed and even heart-broken, but there was no contending. He ſtayed behind the King only till He could get his Goods and Family diſembarked, and then returned with very much Trouble to the Court: And the Earl of Sandwich ſet Sail with the Fleet, with Direction firſt to viſit the Coaſt of Holland, and if He found that the Dutch Fleet was not ready to come out, that He ſhould go to the Northward to watch the Eaſt-India Fleet, which had Orders from their Superiours to come by the North, that They might avoid the Engliſh Fleet, that was Maſter of the Sea.

The Fleet puts out to Sea under the Earl of Sandwich.

IT was in the End of June or Beginning of July that the King and Duke returned from the Fleet; and within few Days after it ſet Sail: When the Plague increaſed ſo faſt, that there died about two thouſand in a Week; ſo that all Men cried out againſt the King's ſtaying ſo long at Whitehall, the Sickneſs being already in Weſtminſter. Whereupon the King, after He had taken the beſt Care He could with the Lord Mayor for the good ordering the City, and publiſhed ſuch Orders as were thought neceſſary for the Relief and Regulation of infected Perſons, and prevailed with ſome Juſtices of the Peace in the Strand and in Weſtminſter to promiſe to reſide there (which They were the more eaſily perſuaded to do by the General's declaring that He would ſtay in his Lodgings at Whitehall, which He did during the whole Time of the Peſtilence; and the Lord Craven out of Friendſhip to him ſtayed likewiſe in his Houſe in Drury-Lane: And it cannot be denied that the Preſence of thoſe two great Perſons prevented many Miſchiefs which would have fallen out by the Diſorder of the People, and was of great Convenience and Benefit to that End of the Town): I ſay, when the King had ſettled all this He removed to Hampton, reſolving there to conſider how to diſpoſe of himſelf for the Remainder of the Summer. And becauſe there were many Particulars ſtill unreſolved concerning the Buſineſs of Ireland, his Majeſty for ſome Days appointed that numerous People, that They might have no Pretence to come to Hampton-Court, to attend at Sion; where for many Days together his Majeſty ſpent many Hours, till He had compoſed that Affair as well as it was for the preſent capable of.

The King removes to Hampton-Court on Account of the Plague.

THE Plague ſtill increaſed at London, and ſpread about the Country; ſo that it was not thought ſafe for the Court to remain longer where it then was, the Sickneſs being already in ſome of the adjacent Villages. Whereupon the King reſolved that his own Family and his Brother's ſhould remove to Saliſbury, and ſpend the Summer there. And becauſe it was already in View, that it would not be fit for the Parliament to aſſemble again at Weſtminſter in September, to which Time it was prorogued, nor could it be computed at what Time it could be ſafe to meet in that Place; and it was as notorious that if the Parliament met not ſomewhere, whereby the King might have another Supply before the Winter, there would be very great Confuſion for Want of Money: He cauſed therefore a Proclamation to iſſue out, "that "He intended to adjourn the Parliament to meet "at Oxford upon the tenth of October next, and "that the Members need not to attend at Weſtminſter "in September." And then He directed the Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, who lived within Half a Day of London, and the General and the Lord Craven, to give Notice to the Members of Both Houſes, who lived within that Diſtance, to be preſent in Both Houſes at the Day to which They were prorogued, and then to adjourn to Oxford according to

to the Proclamation. And this being ſettled, his Majeſty appointed a Day for beginning his Progreſs from Hampton-Court to Saliſbury; againſt which Time all Carriages and whatſoever was neceſſary for the Journey were prepared.

In the Morning, when every Body believed that the King and Queen and Duke and Dutcheſs, with Both their Families, were to go together one Way, Mr. Coventry found a Way to break that Reſolution, having no Mind to be in ſo great a Court that his Greatneſs would not appear. He told the Duke, "that there were general Diſcontents throughout the "Kingdom," which was true, "and a Probability "of Inſurrections," which were much ſpoken of and apprehended; "and therefore it might be better that "the King and the Duke might not be together, "but in ſeveral Places, that They might draw what "Forces were neceſſary to them, which the Preſence "of their own Perſons would eaſily do: That the "Fleet would probably be all the Summer upon the "Northern Coaſt in Expectation of the Dutch Eaſt-India Fleet;" for it was not then thought that the Hollanders would have been able to have ſet out another Fleet able to have encountered ours. Upon the whole Matter He propoſed to him, "that ſince the "King meant to ſpend the Summer in the Weſt, with "which there could very hardly be any Correſpondence from the Fleet, his Highneſs ſhould go into "the North and reſide at York; by which He would "have an Influence upon all thoſe Parts where the "moſt diſaffected Perſons were moſt inhabitant, and "from Hull and thoſe maritime Parts He could not "be long without receiving ſome Intelligence from "the Fleet."

Mr. W. Coventry perſuades the Duke to ſpend the Summer at York.

The Truth is; the Conſtitution of the Court at this Time was ſuch, the Prevalence of the Lady ſo great, and the Queen's Humour thereupon ſo inconſtant, and all together ſo diſcompoſed the King, that there was no Pleaſure in being a Part of it: And therefore the Advice was as ſoon embraced, as given, by the Duke and his Wife, who were well content to enjoy themſelves in their own Family apart. And the Duke preſently propoſed it to the King, and Mr. Coventry diſcourſed all the Motives to him ſo fully that his Majeſty approved it. And then, if it were to be done at all, the firſt attending the King to Saliſbury, which was ſo much out of the Way, would be to no Purpoſe: And therefore it was reſolved (all the Coaches and Carriages being then at the Doors to go to Farnham, which was the firſt Day's Journey towards Saliſbury), that the King and his Brother would part upon the Place, and that the King and Queen ſhould continue their Purpoſe for Farnham, and the Duke and his Wife ſhould go that Night to St. Albans, and ſo proſecute his Journey for York; and all Orders were in the Inſtant given out to this Purpoſe.

The King removes to Saliſbury.

Whether the Reaſons of this Counſel were of Importance or not, the Alteration on ſuch a ſudden from what had been before determined was thought very ſtrange, and wondered at, and made many believe that ſome Accident was fallen out that muſt not be diſcovered: For on the ſudden it was, there having been no ſuch Thought Overnight, when the Chancellor left the Court to go to his own Houſe at Twickenham. And when He returned the next Morning, the Reſolution was taken, and every Body well pleaſed with the Change, and both the King and the Duke told him with Satisfaction of it; nor did He underſtand it enough to make Objections againſt it, which would have been ingrateful; nor was it convenient to ſpend longer Time in Deliberation at that Place, where ſome of the inferiour Servants had died the Night before of the Plague: And ſo They all entered upon their Journey by Nine of the Clock the ſame Morning.

It is neceſſary in this Place to remember, that the Expreſs, that had been ſent by the Biſhop of Munſter's Agent with the Conditions which were offered by the King, returned with great Expedition, and brought the Biſhop's Acceptation and Engagement, "that, upon the Payment of the firſt Sum "that was agreed upon, He would draw his Army "together, and march with an Army of twenty "thouſand Horſe and Foot into the States Dominions." And the King before He left London had ſigned the Treaty, and made the firſt Payment, and provided for the ſecond: So that He now expected that the Biſhop ſhould be ſhortly upon his March, and fix his Winter-Quarters in thoſe Provinces; which He did reſolve and intend with Courage and Sincerity, and which in that Conjuncture muſt have put the Counſels of Holland into great Confuſion, when they began to be again reduced into ſome Order.

The Biſhop of Munſter engages to invade the United Provinces.

The indefatigable Induſtry and Dexterity of the Penſionary De Wit prevailed with the States to believe, "that He thought a Peace to be neceſſary for "their Affairs, and deſired Nothing but that it "might be upon honourable and ſafe Conditions, "and that France was very real in the endeavouring "it: But that the Enemy was ſo inſolent upon their "late Succeſs, that They neglected all Overtures, "and believed that the Factions and Diviſions a-"mongſt themſelves would hinder them from being "able to ſet out another Fleet; and therefore that "ought to be the firſt Deſign. And if their Fleet "were ready to go out, He doubted not but a "Peace would quickly follow: For that France was "engaged, if the King ſhould not conſent to what "is juſt and reaſonable, to declare a War againſt "England, and to aſſiſt them with Men and Money, "and all his own naval Power, which the Duke of "Beaufort was then preparing and making ready in "all the Ports of France. But that it was not to "be expected that They would ſend out their Fleet, "which was much inferiour to the Engliſh, except "They firſt ſaw a Dutch Fleet at Sea ready to join "with them." He wiſhed them to conſider "how "much They were all concerned in their India Ships, "which were in their Voyage, and could not be far from "their Coaſts, in a ſhort Time; all which would inevitably fall into the Hands of the Engliſh, if They "had no Fleet at Sea to relieve them."

De Wit perſuades the Dutch to prepare another Fleet.

Theſe Reaſons, of Weight in themſelves, and the Concernment of moſt of them in the Preſervation of the Indian Ships, prevailed with them to do all that could be done to ſet out a new Fleet: And to that Purpoſe They ſent very ſtrict and ſevere Orders to their ſeveral Admiralties, for the proceeding againſt all, without Diſtinction of Perſons, who had miſbehaved themſelves in the late Battle, and to provide new Ships and all neceſſary Proviſions, to the End that their Fleet might be at Sea by a Time. And this grew the more eaſy to them, by the ſeaſonable Return of De Ruyter with his Fleet from Guinea, which brought a preſent Addition of good Strength; and He had began the War upon the Engliſh, and was the beſt Sea-Officer They had, and had exerciſed thoſe Commands that no other Officer could refuſe to obey him.

For the ſpeedy carrying on theſe preſent Preparations, They made according to their uſual Cuſtom in extraordinary Occurrences, Committees of the States to aſſiſt in the Admiralties of Zealand, Amſterdam, and Rotterdam; and to that Purpoſe De Wit, and ſuch other as He thought fitteſt at this Time to join with him, were appointed. They went firſt to the Fleet to reform the Diſorders there; And though They durſt not not proceed with that Severity as had been fit, yet They caſhiered many Captains and other Officers, and put ſome other Marks of Diſgrace upon others, and cauſed one or two to die.

De Wit's Malice againſt Van Trump.

BUT that which De Wit's Heart was moſt ſet upon was to take Revenge upon Van Trump, and to remove him from ever having any Command at Sea: For though He was an excellent Officer, and upon the Stock of his Father's Credit of great Eſtimation with the Seamen, and inferiour to no Man but De Ruyter, and had behaved himſelf in the Battle with ſignal Courage; yet his Diſpute with Evertſon upon Command had brought much Prejudice to them. But that which was worſt of all and incenſed De Wit implacably was, that He was of entire Devotion to the Prince of Orange, as his Father had always been and all his Children continued to be, and He knew well had an eſpecial Part, how covertly ſoever, in fomenting the Murmurs of the People againſt him and the War: And He reſolved to take this Opportunity of the good Temper the States were in in their Concurrence for the ſetting out the Fleet, not only to provide for the better Government of their Ships and marine Conduct, but to puniſh and prevent the Murmurs at Land, by removing all thoſe out of any Power whom He ſuſpected to have ſecretly contributed to them. He did all He could to make Van Trump's Offence capital, as if the Right of Command had been ſo clear in Evertſon that the other could not diſpute it: But Van Trump defended himſelf ſo well and had ſo many Friends, that He was abſolved from that Guilt. Yet for ſome paſſionate and indiſcreet Words, in which He did naturally abound, He was deprived of his Command, with a Declaration "that "He ſhould no more be employed in the Service of "the States;" which whilſt the Government was in thoſe Hands He cared not for, and had a good Eſtate to ſubſiſt without it. And ſo for the preſent all Differences were compoſed ſo far, as to have a general Concurrence in whatſoever was neceſſary, and in order to the making ready and ſetting out their Fleet to Sea.

The French Ambaſſadours ſeem deſirous of mediating a Peace.

THE King had been few Days at Saliſbury before the French and Spaniſh Ambaſſadours arrrived there, and then They made ſome Inſtance with the King, that there might be a Treaty for Peace; and the French "Ambaſſadours declared, that the King their Maſter "was ſo far engaged by Treaty with the Dutch, that "if the King would not accept of a juſt and an ho- "nourable Peace, his Majeſty muſt declare himſelf on "their Behalf, which He was unwilling to do." The King anſwered, "that if there were any ſuch Engage- "ment He had not been well dealt with; for that the "French King had given his Word to him, that He "would not enter into any Treaty with the Dutch but pari "paſſu with his Majeſty" (and when his Majeſty had been informed that there was ſome Treaty concluded with them, He was aſſured from France "that it was "only a Treaty of Commerce, which He had been "obliged to enter into to prevent an Edict in Holland, "by which ſtrong Waters and other French Commo- "dities would have been inhibited to be brought into "thoſe Provinces, but that there was Nothing in that "Treaty that could be to his Majeſty's Prejudice"): "That his Majeſty had been always ready to embrace "Peace, which had been never yet offered by the "Dutch, nor did He know what Conditions They "expected."

THE Ambaſſadours ſeemed to be much offended with the inſolent Behaviour of the Dutch; and confeſſed "that they were not ſolicitous for Peace, but "only deſired to engage the King their Maſter in the "War: But that if his Majeſty would make his De- "mands, which They preſumed would be reaſonable, "the other ſhould be brought to conſent to them." To which the King replied, "that They had begun "the War upon him and not He upon them, and that "God had hitherto given him the Advantage, which "He hoped He ſhould improve; and till They were "as deſirous of Peace as He, it would not become "him to make any Propoſitions." And in this Manner that Affair ſtood whilſt the Court remained at Saliſbury.

AND there now fell out an unexpected Accident, which looked as if Providence had been inclined to repair the Miſchief and the Damage that the Plague had produced to the Affairs of the King. It hath been mentioned before, that upon the firſt Thoughts of a War with the Dutch, the King had ſent Mr. Henry Coventry to Sweden, and Sir Gilbert Talbot to Denmark, to engage thoſe Crowns as far as might be on his Majeſty's Behalf, Both of them being enough diſobliged and provoked by the Dutch.

Succeſs of Mr. Henry Coventry's Embaſſy to Sweden.

MR. Coventry in Sweden found a frank and open Reception, avowing a hearty Affection to the King, and an Inclination to join in any Thing that might not be deſtructive to their own Affairs: Nor did They diſſemble the Injuries They had received from the Hollander even to the Dutch Ambaſſadour himſelf, who was at the ſame Time ſent thither to unite that Crown to their Intereſt, to which Purpoſe He had made ſeveral ſpecious Overtures. Nor did They conceal the Jealouſy They had of the French, who had not complied with the Payment of the yearly Sum of Money, which They were obliged to make to them for the Support of their Army, of which they were in a great Arrear, that diſcompoſed their Affairs very much. And though M. Pompone, who had been long Reſident in that Court as an Envoy, was now come thither as Ambaſſadour from France, and brought with him a good Sum of Money to retain them faſt to their Dependance upon them; yet the Money was not Half that was due to them, and They well knew what dark Ends it was for: And They did exceedingly fear the Omnipotence of France.

THERE were two Things, which kept them from a full Declaration on the King's Behalf, and engaging preſently in his Intereſt. The firſt was the Apprehenſion that They had of Denmark, that it would take this Opportunity to unite themſelves more firmly to the Hollander, and ſo attempt to deprive Sweden of all their late Conqueſt, which was confirmed to them by their own Treaty of Copenhagen, which They were reſolved never to part from: And in this Particular They were to expect ſome Satisfaction and Security from the Negotiation of Sir Gilbert Talbot. The other was, that They might ſee the Biſhop of Munſter fully engaged, upon whoſe Expedition They had much Expectation. And Mr. Coventry had informed them of that whole Agreement, which would have given them Opportunity to have proſecuted their own Deſign upon Bremen. to which their Hearts were moſt devoted.

And of Sir Gilbert Talbot's to Denmark.

SIR Gilbert Talbot had been as well received in Denmark, with all the Profeſſions imaginable of Affection to the King, and of their Deteſtation of the Dutch, who in Truth had exerciſed a ſtrange Tyranny over them by the Advantage of their Neceſſities; nor is the Injuſtice, Oppreſſion and Indignities which They had ſuſtained from them to be expreſſed and deſcribed, without entering into a large Diſcourſe of Particulars which are foreign to this Relation: Let it ſuffice, that there needed few Arguments to perſuade that King to any Thing that was within his Power, and which would have done ſignal Miſchief to the Dutch. But the Truth is, the Kingdom was very poor, the People unwarlike, the King himſelf very good and very weak, jealous of all the great Men, and not yet recovered of the Fright that Wolfelt had put him into. His chief Miniſter, one Gabell, had gotten his Credit by having been his Barber, an illiterate and unbred Man, yet his ſole Confident in his Buſineſs of greateſt Truſt; which made all the Perſons of Quality in the Kingdom, who are as proud of their Nobility as any Nation, full of Indignation. And They were able to croſs many Reſolutions after they were taken, though They could not eſtabliſh others in the Place; which made the King very irreſolute and unfixed: So that what was concluded To-day was reverſed or not purſued To-morrow. They profeſſed a great Jealouſy of the Swede, as the greateſt Argument, but their Weakneſs, againſt a War with the Dutch; yet were not willing to propoſe any Expedients which might ſecure them againſt thoſe Jealouſies. And the King abſolutely denied that He had ever given Hannibal Zeſted Authority to declare, "that He would again confirm the Treaty He had "made;" and ſeemed to take it unkindly that his Majeſty ſhould think it reaſonable, who therefore thought it ſo, becauſe it was propoſed by himſelf, and becauſe He ſtill confeſſed, "that He could make no Attempt to "recover what He had parted with." That which He did unreaſonably deſign, in all the Diſguiſes which were put on, was to engage the King to endeavour to perſuade the Swede to give up and reſtore Elſenore and other Places to Denmark, or to aſſiſt him with Force for the Recovery of them when there ſhould be a Peace concluded with Holland: So that the King deſpaired of any Good from that Negotiation, and reſolved ſhortly to recall his Miniſter from thence.

A particular Account of the Attempt upon the Dutch at Bergen.

But there was on a ſudden a Change to Wonder. Gabell came early in a Morning to Sir Gilbert Talbot, and told him, "his Maſter was now reſolved to unite "his Intereſt entirely to that of the King of England, "having now an Opportunity to do it ſecurely to Both "their Benefits." He told him, "that there were "Letters arrived that Night from Bergen, with News "that the Dutch Eaſt-India Ships were all arrived in "that Port, with Orders to remain there till they re-"ceived new Orders from Holland, which they ſhould "have as ſoon as their Fleet ſhould be ready to join "with them. This had diſpoſed the King to reſolve "to give the King of England Opportunity to poſſeſs "himſelf of all that Treaſure, out of which He pre-"ſumed He would allow him ſuch a Share, as might "enable him to declare, and aſſiſt his Majeſty vigor-"ouſly in his War againſt the Dutch. That if He "gave ſpeedy Notice to the King's Fleet, which every "Body knew was then at Sea, it might eaſily go to "Bergen, where They might as eaſily ſurpriſe all thoſe "Ships in the Port, ſince They ſhould receive no "Oppoſition from the Caſtles under whoſe Protection "they lay."

And when He had done his Relation, He offered him to go with him to the King, that He might receive the Obligation from himſelf; which Sir Gilbert Talbot preſently did, and found his Majeſty as chearful in the Reſolution as Gabell had been. He repeated all that the other had ſaid, and more particularly "that He thought it reaſonable that He might expect "Half of the Value that the Whole would amount "to; which He would rely upon the King's Honour "and Juſtice for, after the Ships ſhould be in England, "that He might not be ſuſpected by the Hollander, "for He would proteſt againſt the Act as a Violence "that He could not reſiſt: And that He would expect "ſo many of his Majeſty's Ships to arrive in Denmark, "and to aſſiſt him, before He poſitively declared a-"gainſt the Dutch." He wiſhed Sir Gilbert Talbot "to ſend an Expreſs forthwith to the King with all "theſe Particulars;" which He did the next Day.

This Expreſs arrived within few Days after the King came to Saliſbury, and was diſpatched preſently back again with Letters to the King of Denmark of his Majeſty's Conſent and Ratification of all that He had propoſed, and with Letters likewiſe to the Earl of Sandwich, who according to his former Orders had ſailed Northward in Hope to meet with that Fleet, which was before got into Norway. The King's Letters to him came in a very good Seaſon, and He immediately continued his Courſe for Norway: And when He came to that Length, and near enough to that Land of Rocks which are terrible to all Seamen, He thought it beſt to remain at Sea with his Fleet, leſt De Ruyter might by this Time be come out with his Fleet (ſince his being come Northward could not be concealed, nor the Arrival of the Eaſt-India Fleet at Bergen; which would haſten the other), and ſent a Squadron of fifteen or ſixteen good Ships (of Strength ſufficient for the Buſineſs) into the Harbour of Bergen with a Letter to the Governour. And with it He ſent in a Gentleman that was a Volunteer on Board him, who hath been often mentioned before, Mr. Clifford, the Confident of the Lord Arlington, who was well inſtructed in all the Tranſactions which had been at Copenhagen. Before They went into the Harbour, Mr. Clifford and another Gentleman or two went by Boat to the Town, where He found all the Dutch Ships (about a Dozen in Number) riding very near the Shore, and all under the Protection of the Caſtle, into which They had put much of their richeſt Lading from the Time of their firſt coming thither, as to a Place of unqueſtionable Security.

The Governour was not ſurpriſed with the Meſſengers or the Letter, as appeared by the Reception of Both, but ſeemed troubled that They were come ſo ſoon, before the Manner of performing the Action was enough adjuſted: He could not deny but "that He had received "Orders from Copenhagen; but that He expected more "perfect Directions within four and twenty Hours, "and expected likewiſe the Preſence of the Vice-King "of Norway, who was his ſuperiour Officer, and would "infallibly be there the next Day." The Behaviour of the Man was ſuch as made them believe it ſincere, as in Truth it was, for He meant well, and was content that the Ships, which though they were not come into the Port did not ride ſafe amongſt the Rocks, ſhould come into the Port, upon Aſſurance that They would not attempt any hoſtile Act without his Conſent, which was till all Things ſhould be agreed between them: And ſo the Fleet entered; which the Dutch perceived with great Conſternation, yet changed the Poſture of ſome of their Ships, and new-moored the reſt and put themſelves upon their Defence.

It is a Port like no other that the World knows, a very great Number of formidable Rocks, between each of which the Sea runs deep enough for the greateſt Ships to ride ſecurely; ſo that the Ships were as in ſo many Chambers apart between the Rocks: And the Dutch, which came thither firſt, had poſſeſſed themſelves of that Line of the Sea that lay next to the Shore, to which They lay ſo near that They could deſcend from their Veſſels on Land; which had been much the better for the Enterpriſe, if the Dane had concurred in it.

It was ſo late before the Engliſh Ships had taken their Places, which was as near the Dutch as the Rocks would permit, that they remained quiet all Night, which was ſpent in Conſultation between the Commander in Chief of the Engliſh Ships (who was a ſtout and a good Officer but a rough Man, who knew better how to follow his Inſtructions than to debate the Ground of them; but He was adviſed by Mr. Clifford and conformed to his Judgment) and the Governour of the Town and Caſtle, who ſeemed ſtill inclined not only to ſuffer the Engliſh to do what They would, but to be willing to act a Part in it himſelf from the Shore, and to expect hourly Orders to that Purpoſe, as likewiſe the Arrival of the Vice-King, whoſe Authority was more equal to that Attempt, and who was a Man well well known to have a particular Reverence for the King, and as particular a Prejudice and Animosity against the Dutch. The Night being over, the Governour continued all the next Day as desirous and importunate that the Enterprise might be longer deferred; upon which there were some cholerick Words between the Governour and a Gentleman of Quality who was a Volunteer on Board the Ships, which many thought in some Degree irreconciled the Governour to the Affair.

IN Conclusion: The Commander of the Squadron was willing to think that the Governour had rather it should be done without his declared Consent than by it, and so told him, "that the next Morning He was "resolved to weigh his Anchors and fall upon the "Dutch;" to which the other made such a Reply as confirmed him in his former Imagination. And in the Morning the Ships were brought out of their several Channels, and placed as near the Sides of the Dutch as they could be, from whence They resolved to board them as soon as They had sent their Broadsides upon them. But They found that the Dutch had spent their Time well; for in the two Days and two Nights that the English had been in the Harbour, besides the unlading the richest of their Commodities that were left into the Castle, They had drawn all their Ordnance, which lay on that Side of the Ships which was to the Shore, on Land, and planted them upon a rising Ground, That they could shoot over their own Ships upon the English: And a Breastwork was cast up, behind which all the Inhabitants of the Town were in Arms.

The ill Success of it.

IT was a fair Warning, and might very well have persuaded our Men to be glad to retire out of the Harbour, which yet They might have done: But their Courage or their Anger disposed them to make farther Trial of the Governour, for They feared not the Ordnance from the Land which the Dutch had planted, nor the Muskets from the Breastworks, if the Castle did them no Harm, under the Power of which They all were: And so They fell upon their Work: And in some Time, and with the Loss of many Men from the Ships and from the Land, They had dismounted many of the Ordnance upon the Shore, and were even ready to board the Ships; when out of absurd Rage or Accident a Ship or two of the English discharged some Guns both upon the Breastworks, from whence They had received no Prejudice, and upon the Town, which beat down some Houses. But then all the Muskets from the Breastworks were poured out, and Guns from the Castle, which killed very many common Men, and five or six Officers of very good Account, and some Gentlemen Volunteers, amongst which was Edward Mountague, eldest Son to the Lord Mountague of Boughton and Cousin German to the Earl of Sandwich, a proper Man and wellbred but not easy to be pleased, and who was then withdrawn from the Court, where He was Master of the Horse to the Queen, and in some Discontent had put himself on Board the Fleet with a Captain, without the Privity of the Earl of Sandwich, and was now slain. There was now no farther Experiment to be made, but how They could get to Sea, which might easily have been prevented from the Shore and from the Rocks: But from the Minute that They prepared to be gone and gave over shooting, there was no more done against them, and They had Pilots from the Country that carried them safe out.

THE Noise of the Guns had called the Earl of Sandwich as near the Mouth of the Harbour as could safely be, to discover what became of his Squadron; so that They came shortly to him with the whole Account of their ill Success, and within a short Time after a Shallop from the Governour, with a Letter to the Officer who had commanded the Squadron, complaining as much as He could do of the Misbehaviour of the English in shooting upon the Town, and desiring "that "Mr. Clifford would give him a Meeting at a Place "He appointed, to which the Shallop should convey "him." Mr. Clifford was more willing to go than the Earl was to permit him; yet at last upon his earnest Desire He consented, and He put himself into the Shallop. It happened that when the Action was over and the English under Sail, the Vice-King arrived at Bergen with two or three Regiments of the Country; and the Orders were likewise come from Copenhagen, whereby, at least as They pretended, They were required to permit all that the English desired: And the Vice-King had caused the Shallop to be sent, and was himself with the Governour at the Place whither Mr. Clifford was to come, and there He spake with them together.

THE Governour with many Protestations excused himself for shooting from the Castle, after the Town was assaulted, and many of the Burghers killed, who had stood in Arms only to defend the Town, without being concerned for the Dutch or their Ships; and made it an Argument of his Integrity and Respect, "that He had permitted them to depart when it was "in his Power to have sunk them." He complained, "that the Commander would not have the Patience to "defer the Assault one Day longer, which if He had "done the Orders from Copenhagen had been come, "and the Vice-King had been present with his Forces, "which would have secured the Enterprise." The Vice-King seemed very much troubled for what had been done, and earnestly desired, "that the same or "another Squadron might be again sent in, when "They should be at Liberty to do what They would "upon the Dutch, and if They stood in Need of Assistance They should have as much as was necessary."

MR. Clifford replied to many of the Excuses which were made, and urged "the suffering the Dutch to "bring their Ordnance on Shore, and the Townsmen "being in Arms to assist them;" and proposed, "that "They would first begin by seizing upon some of "their Ships; and then that their Fleet should answer:" But this the Vice-King did absolutely refuse, and made another Proposition that startled more and was directly new, "that when the English had seized "upon all the Dutch Ships, They should not have "carried any of them away till a perfect Division of "the Goods was made, that the King of Denmark "might have his just Proportion." Mr. Clifford made no Answer but "that He would present all that "They proposed to the Earl of Sandwich, in whom "the Power of concluding and executing remained "solely:" And so He returned to the Fleet, and They to the Town and expected an Answer.

The Earl of Sandwich declines making another Attempt.

THE Earl of Sandwich thought not fit to run any more Hazards, and was not satisfied that They had proceeded sincerely. But that which most prevailed with him was, that He had received Intelligence "that De Ruyter was come out with the Fleet," and He would not He should find him entangled in those Rocks, or obliged to fight with him upon that Coast; and the Season of the Year now made that Station very unsecure, for it was already the Beginning of October, when those Seas run very high and boisterous: And therefore He resolved to be Master of more Sea-Room, that He might fight De Ruyter if He came, and if He did not He might then meet those East-India Ships more securely in their Way to Holland, than by making another Attempt in the Harbour. And so, after some Letters had passed and repassed between the Vice-King and him, and both the Vice-King and Governour had undertaken to keep the Dutch Ships there for the Space of six Weeks, for They desired to see the Success of another Engagement between the two

two Fleets; the Earl ſteered that Way with his Fleet that moſt probably might bring him and De Ruyter together, which above all Things He deſired.

The Author's Reflections upon this Affair.

THIS whole Affair of Bergen and the Managery thereof was ſo perplexed and intricate, that it was never clearly underſtood. That which ſeemed to have moſt Probability was, that as ſoon as the Dutch Fleet came to Bergen, They had unladen many of their richeſt Commodities and put them into the Caſtle, before the Governour had received his Orders from Copenhagen: And ſo both his own and his Maſter's Faith and Honour were engaged to diſcharge the Truſt, of which He made Haſte to ſend an Account to the King, and thereupon expected new Directions, which were not arrived when the Engliſh Fleet came thither. and when they did come, whether that Court according to its Cuſtom did change its Mind, and believe They ſhould make a better Bargain by keeping what was already depoſited in their Hands in the Caſtle, than by making an uncertain Diviſion with the King; or whether They did in Truth continue firm to the firſt Agreement, and that the Meſſenger was ſtopped by extraordinary Accidents in his Journey (which was poſitively alledged), ſo that He did not arrive in Time; or whether the Governour was not able to maſter the Town that was much inclined to the Hollanders, before the Vice-King came with his Troops, who did make all poſſible Haſte as ſoon as He heard that the Engliſh were arrived; or whether the Engliſh did proceed more unadviſedly and raſhly than They ought to have done; remains ſtill in the Dark: And Both Parties reproached each other afterwards, as They found moſt neceſſary for their ſeveral Defences and Pretences; of which more hereafter.

The King and the Court remove to Oxford.

THE King ſtayed not altogether ſo long at Saliſbury as He had intended to have done: For beſides a little accidental Indiſpoſition which made him diſlike the Air, ſome inferiour Servants and their Wives came from London or the Villages adjacent, and brought the Plague with them; ſo that the Court removed to Oxford before the End of September, the Parliament being to aſſemble there on the tenth of the next Month. And before He left Saliſbury, his Majeſty ſent an Expreſs to York to his Brother, "that He would "meet him as ſoon as He could." The Duke had lived in great Luſtre in York all that Summer, with the very great Reſpect and continual Attendance of all the Perſons of Quality of that large County: And the Duke no ſooner received his Majeſty's Summons than He took Poſt, and left his Wife and Family to follow by ordinary Journeys, and himſelf came to Oxford the next Day after the King, where there were indeed Matters of the higheſt Importance to be conſulted and reſolved.

THE King had ſent Mr. Clifford to Denmark to be ſatisfied, upon Conference with Sir Gilbert Talbot, concerning the Miſcarriage at Bergen, and if the Ships remained ſtill there according to the Promiſe the Vice-King had made, and if that King were ready to perform what He had undertaken, that all Particulars might be ſo adjuſted that there might be no farther Miſtake; and if He found that the Jealouſy of Sweden was a real Obſtruction to that Alliance, that He ſhould make a Journey to Sweden, and upon Conference with Mr. Coventry, who by his Dexterity and very good Parts had reconciled the Affections of that Court to a very great Eſteem of him, endeavour to remove all thoſe Obſtructions: And as ſoon as his Majeſty ſhould receive full Information of that whole Affair, He muſt conſider what He was to do to vindicate himſelf in that Buſineſs of Bergen; for He knew well that He muſt ſuffer with all the World, for violating the Peace of a Port that was under the Government of a neighbour Prince with whom He was allied, if He did not make it appear that He had the Conſent of that Prince, which He was not willing to do till He firſt knew what that King would do.

A further Negotiation with the French Ambaſſadours.

IN the next Place his Majeſty was to reſolve what Anſwer to make to the French Ambaſſadours, who now deſired frequent Audiences, and poſitively declared, "that their Maſter was engaged by his Treaty "with the Dutch that in Caſe They were invaded or "aſſaulted by any Prince, He would aſſiſt them with "Men, Money and Ships, which He had hitherto "deferred to do out of Reſpect to the King, and in "Hope that He would accept his Mediation, and "make ſuch Propoſitions towards Peace as He might "preſs the others to conſent to." The Dutch Ambaſſadour was likewiſe come to Town, rather to treat concerning the Priſoners and to obſerve what the French Ambaſſadours did, than that He had any Thing to propoſe in Order to Peace, there appearing now ſince their Fleet was at Sea more Inſolence in the Dutch, and a greater Averſion from the Peace, than had been formerly.

THE King complained to the Ambaſſadours of the French King's Proceedings, "that the entering into "that Treaty was expreſsly againſt his Word given "to the King: That the Dutch had firſt began the "War, and ought to make the firſt Approach to-"wards Peace, but that their Ambaſſadour had no "Inſtruction to make any ſuch Inſtance; and there-"fore it ſeemed very ſtrange to his Majeſty, that the "French King ſhould preſs for that which They had "no Deſire to have."

THE Ambaſſadours confeſſed "that the Dutch did "not deſire a Peace; that They thought They were "too much behindhand, and that They had at pre-"ſent great Advantages; that They looked upon "the great Plague in London" (which continued in its full Rage and Vigour, inſomuch as at that Time in the End of September there died not ſo few as ſix thouſand in the Week, amongſt which ſome were of the beſt Quality in the City) "as of ſuch inſuppor-"table Damage to the King, that He would not be "able to ſet out another Fleet the Year following: "And therefore that, when They had been preſſed "by the French King to make ſome Propoſitions to-"wards Peace, He could get no other Anſwer from "them, than that They expected that the Iſland of "Poleroone ſhould be releaſed to them, and that the Fort "at Cabo Corſo in Guinea ſhould be thrown down and "ſlighted, which They confeſſed was an inſolent Pro-"poſition. That They complained that the King "their Maſter, inſtead of giving them the Aſſiſtance He "was obliged to do, ſpent the Time in procuring a Peace, "which They cared not for: So that," They ſaid, "their Maſter continued the ſame Chriſtian Office "principally to do his Majeſty of Great Britain a "Service, who He in Truth believed would be re-"duced to great Streights by the terrible Effect of "the Plague; and in the next Place to defend him-"ſelf from entering into the War, which He could "no longer defer to do, if his Majeſty did not, by "conſenting to ſome reaſonable Overture, give him "a juſt Occaſion to preſs them to yield to it, and in "that Caſe He would behave himſelf in that Manner "that the King ſhould have no Cauſe to complain "of his Partiality." The King's Indignation was ſo provoked by the Pride and Impudence of the Dutch Demands, that He gave the Ambaſſadours no other Anſwer, than "that He hoped God Al-"mighty had not ſent that heavy Judgment of the "Plague upon him and his People on the Behalf "of the Hollanders, and to expoſe him to their In-"ſolence."

The Parliament meets at Oxford.

THE Parliament convened at Oxford in greater Numbers than could reaſonably have been expected, the Sickneſs ſtill continuing to rage and ſpread itſelf in ſeveral Counties; ſo that between the Danger that was in the Towns infected, and the neceſſary Severity in other Towns to keep themſelves from being infected, it was a very inconvenient Seaſon for all Perſons of Quality to travel from their own Habitations. Upon the tenth of October the King commanded Both Houſes to attend him in Chriſt-Church Hall, and told them, "that He "was confident they did all believe, that if it had "not been abſolutely neceſſary to conſult with them, "he would not have called them together at that "Time, when the Contagion had ſpread itſelf over "ſo many Parts of the Kingdom: And he thanked "them for their Compliance ſo far with his De-"ſires."

The King's Speech to Both Houſes.

HIS Majeſty ſaid, "the Truth was; as he had "entered upon the War by their Advice and En-"couragement, ſo he deſired that they might as "frequently as was poſſible receive Information of "the Effects and Conduct of it, and that he might "have the Continuance of their chearful Supply for "the carrying it on. He would not deny to them, "that it had proved more chargeable than he could "imagine it would have been; The Addition the "Enemy had ſtill made to their Fleets, beyond their "firſt Purpoſe, made it unavoidably neceſſary for "him to make proportionable Preparations, which "God had hitherto bleſſed with Succeſs in all En-"counters. And as they had uſed their utmoſt En-"deavours by Calumnies and falſe Suggeſtions to "gain Friends to themſelves, and to perſuade them "to aſſiſt them againſt him, ſo he had not been "wanting to encourage thoſe Princes who had been "wronged by the Dutch, to recover their own by "Force; and in Order thereunto, he had aſſiſted "the Biſhop of Munſter with a great Sum of ready "Money, and was to continue a Supply to him, "who he believed was at that Time in the Bowels "of their Country with a powerful Army.

"THOSE Iſſues, which he might tell them had "been made with very much Conduct and Huſban-"dry (nor indeed did he know that any Thing "had been ſpent that could have been well and ſafely "ſaved;" he ſaid, "thoſe Expences would not "ſuffer them to wonder, that the great Supply which "they gave him for this War in ſo bountiful a Pro-"portion was upon the Matter already ſpent: So "that he muſt not only expect an Aſſiſtance from "them to carry on that War, but ſuch an Aſſiſtance "as might enable him to defend himſelf and them "againſt a more powerful Neighbour, if he ſhould "prefer the Friendſhip of the Dutch before his."

HE put them in Mind, "that when he entered "upon this War he had told them, that he had not "ſuch a brutal Appetite as to make War for War's "Sake; He was ſtill of the ſame Mind: He had "been ready to receive any Propoſitions that France "had thought fit to offer to that End, but hitherto "Nothing had been offered worthy his Acceptance; "nor were the Dutch leſs inſolent, though he knew "no Advantage they had got but the Continuance "of the Contagion, and he hoped that God Al-"mighty would ſhortly deprive them of that En-"couragement."

Subſtance of the Chancellor's Speech.

THE Chancellor at the ſame Time, by the King's Command, made a ſhort Narrative of the Hiſtory of the War, the Circumſtances with which it was begun, and the Progreſs it had ſince made, and the Victory that the Duke had attained; of the vaſt Number of the Priſoners and ſick and wounded Men, a Charge that had never been computed.

HE told them, "the French King had indeed of-"fered his Mediation, and that if he intended no "more than a Mediation, it was an Office very wor-"thy the moſt Chriſtian King; he wiſhed, that as "a Mediator he would make equal Propoſitions, or "that he would not ſo importunately preſs his Ma-"jeſty to conſent to thoſe he makes, upon an In-"ſtance and Argument, that he holds himſelf engaged "by a former Treaty (of which his Majeſty had never "heard till ſince the Beginning of the War, and had "ſome Reaſon to have preſumed the contrary) to "aſſiſt the Dutch with Men and Money if his Majeſty "would not conſent."

He ſaid, "his Majeſty had told them, that he "had no Appetite to make War for War's Sake; but "he would be always ready to make ſuch a Peace "as might be for his Honour and the Intereſt of "his Subjects. And no Doubt it would be a great "Trouble and Grief to his Majeſty to find ſo great "a Prince, towards whom he had manifeſted ſo "great an Affection, in Conjunction with his Ene-"mies: Yet even the Apprehenſion of ſuch a War "would not terrify him to purchaſe a Peace, by ſuch "Conceſſions as he ſhould be aſhamed to make "them acquainted with; of which Nature they "would eaſily believe the Propoſitions hitherto made "to be, when they knew the Releaſe of Poleroone "in the Eaſt-Indies, and the demoliſhing the Fort of "Cabo Corſo upon the Coaſt of Guinea, were two; "which would be upon the Matter to be contented "with a very vile Trade in the Eaſt-Indies under "their Controul, and with none in Guinea. And yet "thoſe are not Propoſitions unreaſonable enough to "pleaſe the Dutch, who reproached France for in-"terpoſing for Peace, inſtead of aſſiſting them in the "War, boldly inſiſting upon the Advantage the Con-"tagion in London and ſome other Parts of the King-"dom gives them; by which, they confidently ſay, "the King will be no longer able to maintain a Fleet "againſt them at Sea."

HE told them, "that he had fully obeyed the "Command that had been laid upon him, in mak-"ing that plain, clear, true Narrative of what had "paſſed; he had no Order to make Reflection "upon it, nor any Deduction from it: The King "himſelf had told them, that the noble, unparalleled "Supply they had already given him is upon the Mat-"ter ſpent, ſpent with all the Animadverſions of good "Huſbandry, that the Nature of the Affair would "bear. What was more to be done he left to their "own generous Underſtandings, being not more "aſſured of any Thing that was to come in this "World, than that the ſame noble Indignation for "the Honour of the King and the Nation, that firſt "provoked them to inflame the King himſelf, would "continue the ſame Paſſion ſtill boiling in their "loyal Breaſts; that all the World may ſee, which "they never hoped to have ſeen, that never Prince "and People were ſo entirely united in their Affec-"tions, for their true, joint, inſeparable Honour, as "their only ſure infallible Expedient to preſerve their "diſtinct ſeveral Intereſts."

A further Supply granted.

THE King could not expect or wiſh a fuller Concurrence from a Parliament than he now found. With very little Heſitation they declared, "that "they would ſupply his Majeſty with another Mil-"lion (ten hundred thouſand Pounds):" And becauſe they deſired to be diſmiſſed as ſoon as might be to their ſeveral Habitations, not without Apprehenſion that ſo great a Concourſe of Perſons from all Places, even from London itſelf (for the Term was likewiſe adjourned to Oxford), might bring the Contagion thither likewiſe; they rejected all other Buſineſſes but what immediately related to the Publick. To the Supply they deſigned to the King, they added the Sum of above forty thouſand Pounds, which they deſired his Majeſty to confer upon the Duke, having received ſome Inſinuation, "that it

An Act for attainting the Engliſh in the Dutch Service.

" would not be ingrateful to the King that ſuch a " Preſent ſhould be made to his Brother." Then they paſſed two or three Acts of Parliament very much for the King's Honour and Security, amongſt which one was, " for the attainting all thoſe his Sub- " jects who either reſided in Holland" (as ſome of the Engliſh Officers who had long ſerved in that Country preſumed ſtill to do) " and continued in " their Service, or in any other Parts beyond the " Seas, if they did not appear at a Day prefixed, " after Notice by the King's Proclamation." And the Nomination of the Perſons was entirely left to his Majeſty.

His Majeſty did hope, that this very good Carriage in the Parliament would have made ſome Impreſſion upon France, either to have given over their Mediation, or to have drawn reaſonable and juſt Conceſſions from the States: But it did produce the contrary. The Hollanders had received a new Damage which inflamed them exceedingly, which ſhall be particularly mentioned in the next Place, whereupon they made grievous Complaints to France of its Breach of Faith upon the Promiſes that had been made to them. The King upon this required his Ambaſſadours once more to make a lively Inſtance to his Majeſty, " that he would declare what he " meant to inſiſt upon in Order to a Peace, which " if he ſhould refuſe to do, they ſhould take their " Leaves and return into France with all poſſible Ex- " pedition." In this Audience they ſpake in a higher Style than they had formerly uſed. They complained " of the intolerable Damage the Sub- " jects of France had ſuſtained in their Goods and " Eſtates by the King's Ships, and thoſe who were " licenſed by his Authority, which without any Diſ- " tinction ſeized upon all that came in their Way as " if they were Dutch: And when they complained " to the Admiralty or to the Lords Commiſſioners, " they could procure no Juſtice, and were obliged " to ſuch an Attendance and Expence, that what " they ſued for did not prove of Value to ſatisfy " the Charge of the Proſecution; and if after a long " and a tedious Solicitation they did at laſt procure " a Sentence for the Redelivery of what had been " taken from them, when they hoped to enjoy the " Benefit of this juſt Sentence by the Execution, " they found the Goods embezzled in the Port or " plundered by the Seamen, that the Owners had " rarely a third Part of their Goods ever reſtored to " them. And that by this Violence and unjuſt Pro- " ceeding, of which they had often made Com- " plaint, the French Merchants had loſt near five " hundred thouſand Piſtoles; which their Maſter re- " ſented and looked upon as a great Indignity to " himſelf, which he had hitherto borne, in Hope, " that the Licenſe would have been reſtrained by the " End of the War."

The French Ambaſſadors remonſtrate warmly againſt the Engliſh.

They urged it as an Argument of their Maſter's Friendſhip to the King, " that after an offenſive " Treaty had been ſo long ſince entered into by " him, by which he was obliged to aſſiſt the Dutch " with Men, Money and Ships, he had notwith- " ſtanding hitherto forborne it, and looked on whilſt " they were ſoundly beaten and had lately ſuſtained " another Blow; and that it was not poſſible for him to " defer it longer:" And ſo concluded with very earneſt Perſuaſions, " that his Majeſty would conſent to ſuch " a Peace as their Maſter ſhould judge to be reaſon- " able, who could not but be very juſt to his Ma- " jeſty;" and wiſhed, " that it might be conſidered, " beſides the Damage by the Plague which Nobody " knew how long it might continue, how impoſſible " it was for the King to ſuſtain the Arms of France " in Conjunction to thoſe of Holland, when poſ- " ſibly ſome other Prince might join likewiſe with " them."

A Conference between them and the Engliſh Miniſters upon their Remonſtrance.

They who were appointed by the King to confer with the Ambaſſadors were moſt perplexed to juſtify their firſt Charge, " of the Depredation that had " been made upon the French Merchants," which had in Truth been very great, though not amounting to the Sum they mentioned. Yet to that they anſwered, " that the Damage and Loſs which the " Subjects of France had undergone that Way, had " originally proceeded from themſelves, and their " own Default in owning the Goods and Merchan- " diſe of the Dutch to belong to themſelves as their " proper Goods, and in undertaking to carry and " deliver the Wine and other Goods, which were " bought and paid for in France by the Hollanders, " in French Veſſels in that Country; all which had " been fully and notoriouſly proved, and could not " be contradicted: And when that Diſcovery was " once made, it was no Wonder if the Seamen ſome- " times ſeized upon ſome Veſſels which were not " liable to the ſame Reproach. But when any Com- " plaints of that Kind had been made, the King had " always given ſtrict Charge to the Judges to cauſe " Reſtitution to be made, and the Tranſgreſſors to " be ſeverely puniſhed; and his Majeſty preſumed " that the Judges had done their Duty. For the " French King's being bound by his Treaty to aſſiſt " the Hollanders," They ſaid, " that if the King had " any ſuch Obligation upon him, it was ſubſequent " to his Obligation to his Majeſty, by which he was " bound to make no ſuch Treaty: Nor in Truth did " they believe that he had entered into any ſuch " Treaty, for if it were only ſuch as they themſelves " ſtated it to be, a defenſive League, it would nei- " ther engage nor excuſe France in giving Aſſiſtance " to them who had done the Wrong and begun " the War; and therefore if the King was in Truth " bound to aſſiſt them, it muſt be from ſome offen- " ſive not defenſive Clauſe."

The Ambaſſadors replied, " that their Maſter " concluded that their King was the Aggreſſor, and " then the defenſive Article did oblige him;" and they acknowledged there was no other. It was anſwered, " that the King had aſſumed a Power to " judge upon a Matter of Fact of which he had " taken no Examination; and that it was a Partiality " not agreeable to the Office of a Judge, to believe " what the Dutch ſaid, and not to believe what the " King ſaid, who had clearly publiſhed the true Hiſ- " tory of the Fact; and that it was notorious and " not poſſible to be denied, that they had refuſed " to deliver Poleroone according to their Treaty, and " that De Ruyter had begun the War in Guinea be- " fore one of their Ships had been ſeized on by the " King." To which they replied, " that their Maſ- " ter thought otherwiſe, and did look upon the King " as Aggreſſor." When they were urged with the Violation of the former Obligation by entering into the latter, all the Anſwer they gave was, " that " they knew Nothing of it, and that they had " Commiſſion only to treat upon the preſent State of " Affairs, and not upon what had paſſed long be- " fore." And ſo, according to the Character they underwent near fourteen hundred Years ſince, Galli ridentes fidem fregerunt.

The Counſellors of the King told them, " that " their Maſter had very well conſidered the Diſad- " vantage he muſt undergo by the Acceſs of ſo " powerful a Friend, and of whoſe Friendſhip he " had thought himſelf poſſeſſed, to the Part of his " Enemies, who were too inſolent already; and " therefore to prevent that Diſadvantage, he had " and would do any Thing that would conſiſt with " the Dignity of a King: But that he muſt be " laughed at and deſpiſed by all the World, if he " ſhould conſent to make him the Arbitrator of the " Differences who had already declared himſelf to be

" a Party, and that he is reſolved to make War againſt " him on the Behalf of his Enemy; and that ſuch Me- " naces would make no Impreſſion in the laſt Article " of Danger that could befall the King." The Ambaſſadours took that Expreſſion of Menaces very heavily, as if it were a Tax upon their Manners, and ſaid " they had never uſed Words that could " imply a Menace." To which it was replied, " that " there was no Purpoſe to make any Reflection upon " their Perſons, who had always carried themſelves " with great Reſpect to the King, and who his Ma- " jeſty believed, did in their own particular Affection " wiſh him better than they did the Dutch: How- " ever the declaring, that if the King did not do this " or that, the French King would make War upon him, " could in no Language be looked upon to have " any other Signification than of a Menace and " Threat." This raiſed a little Warmth on both Sides, which made the Conference break off at that Time.

THE Ambaſſadours prepared to be gone; and the King diſcerned clearly that there was no Way to divert the French from an entire Conjunction with the Dutch: And thereupon he aſſembled his ſecret Council together again, to conſult what ſhould be the final Anſwer his Majeſty ſhould give to the French Ambaſſadours at parting. There was no Perſon preſent, who had not a deep Apprehenſion of the extreme Damage and Danger that muſt fall upon the King's Affairs, if in this Conjuncture France ſhould declare a War againſt England.

The Proſpect of the King's Affairs at this Time.

IT was well known, that the Duke of Beaufort was forthwith to be at Breſt, where all the French King's Ships were to aſſemble at their Rendezvous by Chriſtmas; that the French King had already ſent to the Biſhop of Munſter to diſſuade him from proſecuting his Enterpriſe againſt Holland, and that probably he might unite Denmark again to the Dutch, and probably even allay thoſe warm Inclinations which the Swede had for the King. It was well known, that the French King had in the laſt Diſtractions in Holland contributed very much to the compoſing them, and to the Support of the Power and Credit of De Wit, who was the Soul of the War, and that he had ſent him one hundred thouſand Piſtoles, without which they would have hardly been able to have ſet out their laſt Fleet under De Ruyter. And above all this, his giving Life to ſome domeſtick Rebellion in England and in Ireland, by ſending Money to diſcontented Perſons, was apprehended: For as there were enough diſcontented and deſperate Perſons in the latter, who wanted only Arms and Money to declare for any Prince who would take them into his Protection; ſo it was well known that there was a general Combination amongſt thoſe of the late Army to have riſen, if the Duke of York had been defeated at Sea, and that it was that Victory that diſappointed that intended Inſurrection. That there had been a later Deſign, in the very Height of this diſmal Sickneſs and Contagion, in London (whither the Fanatick Party had repaired from all the Quarters of the Kingdom, and had appointed a Day upon which the General ſhould be aſſaſſinated, which ſome Soldiers of his own Regiment had undertaken, and then the whole Rendezvous was to be in ſeveral Streets at the ſame Time); which in ſo formidable a Conjuncture might have ſucceeded to a great Degree, if by God's Bleſſing it had not been diſcovered two Days before to the General, who cauſed ſome of the chief Conſpirators to be apprehended, who ſuffered afterwards by the Hand of Juſtice. And yet the chief amongſt them, Colonel Danvers, who in Spite of all the Vigilance that could be uſed, had been always ſearched for and always concealed from the Time of the King's Return, being at this Time apprehended and brought before the General, and by him ſent with a Lieutenant and a Guard of Soldiers to the Tower, was reſcued in Cheapſide, and ſo eſcaped, all the Citizens looking on without aiding the Officer.

THIS was the Proſpect that the King had of his Condition and Affairs in this Conſultation: And therefore if any Thing could have occurred that might probably have diverted this Storm, it would no Doubt have been embraced. But then the exceeding Breach of Faith in entering into that Treaty, the denying it afterwards, and concealing his Engagement by it ſo long after the War was entered into (which if he had not done the King could never have looked upon him as a fit Mediator), and the Impoſſibility of depending upon any Thing that ſhould be promiſed for the future, were convincing Arguments againſt any ſuch Reference of the Conditions to his Determination as was propoſed, and was the only Expedient that was propoſed towards the making a Peace. It was well known that the chief Counſels of France, ſince Monſieur Colbert entered upon the Miniſtry, had been directed towards the Advancement of Manufactures at Home, by which they might have leſs Need of Commerce with their Neighbours; and for the erecting a Trade abroad, with which they had been very little acquainted in former Times. And it was juſtly to be feared, that where the Judgment was left to them, they would imitate the infamous Roman Precedent, of adjudging that to themſelves that was in Difference between their Neighbours and left to their Deciſion: And ſo both Poleroone in the Eaſt-Indies, and Cabo Corſo for the Weſt, muſt be determined to belong to them; which might be the rather apprehended, by their having erected an Eaſt-India Company and a Weſt-India Company, before they had any viſible Foundation for a Trade in either, to which both theſe Places might carry with them great Conveniences.

A final Anſwer given to the French Ambaſſadors.

THESE Conſiderations being ſeriouſly reflected upon, with a little generous Indignation to find himſelf thus treated, prevailed with the King to lay aſide all Thoughts of farther complying with France, and to reſolve to diſmiſs the Ambaſſadours without any other Anſwer, than what ſhould contain Complaints " of the French King's Want of Kindneſs, which his " Majeſty had cultivated by all the Offices he could " perform ſince his Reſtoration, which did not re- " ceive an equal Return, by the preferring the " Friendſhip of the Dutch before that of his Ma- " jeſty." And with this Anſwer the Ambaſſadours were diſmiſſed, with liberal Preſents and all gracious Demonſtrations of Eſteem of their Perſons, and ſo returned for France, where They always gave juſt Teſtimony of the Civilities and fair Treatment they had received.

They leave the Kingdom.

But this Reſolution increaſed the King's Appetite to Peace, and made him think of all other Expedients that might contribute to it; and none ſeemed ſo hopeful, as that France and Holland might be divided: And he would have been very willing to have agreed with Holland upon any reaſonable Conditions, that he might continue the War with France, which there were many reaſonable Inducements to hope might be brought to paſs. It was notorious, that Preparations had been made for two or three Years paſt by France at a very great Expence upon the Borders, that they might be ready to enter into Flanders as ſoon as News ſhould arrive of the King of Spain's Death; and that War would immediately fall out as ſoon as that King's Deceaſe ſhould be known, which from his Age and Infirmities muſt be expected every Day: And in that Caſe the Friendſhip could not continue long with Holland, which thought that France was already too near a Neighbour to them, to be willing that they ſhould be nearer by a Conqueſt of Flanders, which with its own Force could not make an equal Reſiſtance. It was likewiſe as notorious that all the other Provinces, Holland only excepted, did impatiently deſire the Peace; and Holland had only been reſtrained from the ſame Impatience by the ſole Credit and Authority of De Wit, and by his perſuading them, "that "France would aſſiſt them with Men, Money and "Ships, and likewiſe declare a War againſt England, "which" (as hath been ſaid before) "would pro- "duce a Peace upon ſuch Conditions as would make "it happy to them:" And that though it was true that it had indeed aſſiſted them with ſome Money, it was not conſiderable to their vaſt Expences, nor in Truth of Importance in Compariſon of the other, which it was equally obliged to do, and had performed Nothing. And it was evident that Holland itſelf was jealous of thoſe Proceedings, and even De Wit in his private Diſcourſes to other Miniſters, ſeemed to be much unſatisfied with their Breach of Faith, and not to be without Apprehenſion that they would in the End enter into a ſtricter Alliance with England, and leave Holland as a Prey to both.

THE Spaniſh Ambaſſador, who always deſired that the Peace might be eſtabliſhed between the Engliſh and the Dutch, and that they would both join with Spain in a defenſive League, into which Denmark would be glad to enter, and Sweden might be drawn in upon the ſame Conditions which they now received from France, towards which he had often deſired the King to interpoſe, was now very glad that the French Ambaſſadours had taken their Leaves and were gone; and he pretended to have many Aſſurances from the Spaniſh Ambaſſadour at the Hague, that the Dutch had thoſe Inclinations which are mentioned before, "and that De Wit would be glad to "confer in private with any Man truſted by the "King, if he might be ſure that it ſhould not be "communicated to France." Upon all theſe Probabilities, and the Certainty that no Good could be expected from France, his Majeſty reſolved to embrace all Opportunities to agree with Holland; towards which he had a ſecret Intelligence, to which he gave more Credit than to all the reſt, which ſhall be mentioned hereafter.

THERE were ſo many great Tranſactions during the King's Reſidence in Oxford, beſides what was done in the Parliament, and what related to the Diſmiſſion of the French Ambaſſadors, ſo many Counſels which were executed, and ſo many ſecret Deſigns only initiated then and not executed till long after, that there cannot be too particular a Recollection of the Occurrences of all that Time. And if ſome Things are mentioned which ſeem too light and of too ſmall Importance to have a Place in this Relation, they will be found at laſt to be the Riſe and principal Ingredient to ſome Counſel and Reſolution, which proved afterwards of Conſequence enough as well to the Publick as to the Intereſt of particular Perſons.

An Attempt to break the Friendſhip between the Chancellor and Treaſurer.

THE firſt Attempt that was made was to make a Breach between the Chancellor and Treaſurer, who had been long faſt Friends, and were believed to have moſt Credit with the King; and they who loved neither of them, thought the moſt likely Way to hurt them was to make them love one another leſs. Several Attempts had been made upon the Chancellor to that Purpoſe without Effect: He knew the other too well to be ſhaken in the Eſteem he had of his Friendſhip, and the Knowledge he had of his Virtue.

The Occaſion of it.

BUT there was now an Accident fell out, gave them an Opportunity to ſuggeſt to the Treaſurer, "that the Chancellor had failed in his Friendſhip to- "wards him." The Occaſion was upon the Vacancy of an Office near the Queen by the Death of Mr. Mountague, Maſter of the Horſe to her Majeſty, who had been killed before Bergen: And the News arriving with the Duke at York, before it was known at Saliſbury to the King, the Duke and his Wife writ to the King and to the Queen "to confer that Place "upon his younger Brother," who was now become both the eldeſt and the only Son to his Father, the Lord Mountague of Boughton; and the Gentleman himſelf, on whoſe behalf the Letters were writ, came himſelf by Poſt with them within two or three Hours after the News was brought to Saliſbury, and he brought likewiſe a Letter from the Dutcheſs to the Chancellor, "to aſſiſt the Gentleman all he could in "his Pretence," He at the ſame Time enjoying the ſame Office under the Dutcheſs that his Brother had under the Queen.

THE Chancellor had never uſed to interpoſe in Matters of that Nature, nor had he any Acquaintance with this Gentleman who was now recommended: Yet he could not refuſe to wait upon the Queen and ſhew her the Letter he had received, without any Intention to appear farther in it. But when he waited upon the Queen, who had received her Letter before, her Majeſty ſeemed graciouſly diſpoſed to gratify the Gentleman if the King approved it, but ſaid "that She would make no Choice her- "ſelf of any Servant without knowing firſt his Ma- "jeſty's Pleaſure:" And ſhe added, "that ſhe had "been informed, that the Lord Mountague was very "angry with his Son that was unfortunately ſlain, for "having taken that Charge in her Family, and that He "never allowed him any Thing towards his Support; "and if all other Obſtructions were out of the Way, "ſhe would not receive him except ſhe were firſt aſ- "ſured that his Father would like and deſire it." Her Majeſty vouchſafed to wiſh the Chancellor "to ſpeak "with the King, and as dexterouſly as he could to "diſpoſe him to recommend Mr. Mountague to her, "as juſt and reaſonable, ſince his Brother had loſt "his life in his Service."

THIS Command of her Majeſty obliged the Chancellor to wait upon the King, and to ſhew him the Letter he had received from the Dutcheſs; and at the ſame Time the King gave him that which he had from the Duke, in which his Highneſs deſired him, "that "if that Place was not preſently conferred upon Mr. "Mountague, his Majeſty would not diſpoſe of it till "he waited upon him." The Chancellor told him, "that the Queen gave no Anſwer, but referred it en- "tirely to his Majeſty:" And he ſaid, "He would "never recommend any Perſon to her but ſuch a one "as would be very grateful to her." He ſaid, "it "would ſeem very hard to deny one Brother to ſuc- "ceed another who was killed in his Service." He confeſſed, "that the Lord Crofts had moved him on "the Behalf of Mr. Robert Spencer, of whom he had a "good Opinion: But that he had anſwered him, that "he would not do any Thing in it till he ſaw his Brother; "which Reſolution he would keep." To which the Chancellor made no Reply, having in his own private Inclinations and Affection much more Kindneſs for Mr. Spencer, of whoſe Pretence he had never received the leaſt Intimation before, than for the other, with whom he had ſpoken very few Words in his Life. He told Mr. Mountague no more but that which the King himſelf had told him, "that he would not diſpoſe "of the Place till the Duke ſhould arrive;" only he added what the Queen had ſaid of his Father, and adviſed him to think of the Way to remove that Obſtruction. Whereupon he reſolved to make a Journey to his Father, which he knew he might well do before the King and his Brother could meet.

THE ſame Night Mr. Spencer came to the Chancellor, and brought him a Letter from the Treaſurer (whoſe Nephew He was, and who was unfortunately gone out of the Town the Day before to a Houſe of his his own twenty Miles distant) to recommend his Nephew to the Queen, to whom and to the King He had likewise Letters. The Chancellor gave him an Account of all that had passed, shewed him the Letter that He had received from the Dutchess, and told him what the Queen and the King had said, and "that it "was not possible for him to do him Service, for "which He was very sorry; but advised him, "to "deliver both his Letters, and to attend their Ma-"jesties, who He was confident had yet taken no Re-"solution:" With all which He was very well satisfied, and confessed "He could not expect that "He should appear for him." When He delivered his Letters to Both their Majesties, He received so gracious an Answer from Both, that He might reasonably expect his Suit to be granted, though the King told him, He would not dispose of the Place till He spake with his Brother." And there is no Doubt but if the Lord Treasurer had been in the Town when the News first came to the King of Mr. Mountague's Death, which was a whole Day before the Arrival of the Duke's Letter, the King or Queen would not have denied him his Request.

WITHIN a short Time after Mr. Spencer had left him, the Lord Crofts, who had married his Sister, and was governed by the Lord Arlington, came to the Chancellor, and desired him "to take Care, out of "his Friendship with the Treasurer, that the King "might not refuse to gratify him in this Suit for his "Nephew, which was the first He had ever made, "and if He should be denied it would exceedingly "trouble him. That when He spake to the King of "it as soon as the News came, and told him, He was "sure that the Treasurer would be a Suitor to him for his "Nephew, his Majesty did promise him that he should "have it; and that Both their Majesties had as good "as said the same now to Robert Spencer: And there-"fore if He would now use his Credit, the Thing "might be dispatched presently and without farther "Delay."

THE Chancellor asked him, "whether Mr. Spencer "had informed him of all that had passed between "them two;" He said, "Yes; and that he had done "all that the Dutchess had desired him, in speaking "both to the King and Queen, and that his Friend-"ship to the Lord Treasurer should prevail with him "to use all his Endeavours for his Nephew." Whereupon the Chancellor shewed the Dutchess's Letter, and repeated to him again all that he had formerly said to Mr. Spencer, and asked him, "what the Duke and his "Wife must think of him, if instead of pursuing what "They desired, He should solicit quite contrary to it." He said, "that He might tell them that He was en-"gaged by the Lord Treasurer before He received "their Letter;" and then talked passionately and indiscreetly "of the Affront the Treasurer would think "He received if this were denied him, and that all the "World would say, that he might have compassed "it if He had not failed in his Friendship." To which He made no other Answer, than "that the doing so "base a Thing as He desired, would more probably "destroy that Friendship with a Man so punctual in "Honour and Justice as the Treasurer was, than any "Thing that He had done or should leave undone;" and advised him, "not to make the Business worse by "his Activity, and that if He had the King's and "Queen's Promise, as He pretended, he might very "well acquiesce till the Duke came."

HOWEVER his very great Indiscretion and Presumption made the Thing much worse, by delivering Messages from the King to the Queen, and from her Majesty to the King that They Both disavowed, and by his usual Discourses, "that it should now appear who "had the most Credit with the King, the Duke or the "Treasurer, and how much the King would suffer if "He disobliged the Treasurer; all which was quickly transmitted by the Intelligence that was every Day sent to York. On the other hand He still advised the Treasurer "to continue his Importunity to the King "and Queen" (a Thing the most contrary to his Nature), and assured him, "that it would be grate-"ful to them and was expected by them." Whereupon as soon as the Treasurer came to the Court, which was not till the King came to Oxford, He went to Both their Majesties, and renewed his Suit to them with more Warmth and Concernment than was customary to him, and received such an Answer from Both as very well satisfied him. And without Doubt the King intended to persuade his Brother to desist from pressing him farther on the Behalf of the other, for whom He had no Kindness.

BUT the Duke, who arrived by Post the very next Day, came in another Temper than was expected. The Intelligence from Salisbury of the Contest that was for that Place, and the insolent Behaviour and Expressions used by the Lord Crofts, had exceedingly moved him, and he looked upon the Treasurer as engaged to try who had the greatest Power, and as in Opposition to him: So that the same Night that He came to Town, when the King and He were in private, He complained of it with much Warmth; and He besought his Majesty importunately "that He would declare, that the "World might know who had most Interest in his "Favour, He or the Treasurer." The King was so much put out of the Method He intended to use in this Affair, knowing that the Expressions the Duke had mentioned had been too often used by the Lord Crofts, for which He had often reprehended him, that He presently applied that Remedy which He thought most proper, and after Conference with the Queen signed the Warrant for admitting Mr. Mountague into the Office, who was sworn the next Morning: So that the first News the Treasurer heard, after Both their Majesties had the Day before said all to him that He could desire, was, that the Place was already full; which He received with more Commotion than was natural to him, and looked upon it as a designed, contrived Affront to expose him to Contempt. "Why would "not the King, if He had changed his Mind after He "left him, first send him Word of it, that He might "have known his Purpose?"

ALL this Storm fell presently upon the Chancellor: The Lord Crofts assured him, "that it had been done "at Salisbury if He had not hindered it; that He had "been with the Duke before He spake with the King, "and given him Advice what Tune He should speak "in, which was used accordingly and had prevailed; "and that when He came into the Duke's Chamber "to kiss his Hand, his Highness turned away and "would not speak to him, which must proceed from "the Influence of the Chancellor." Whereas in Truth the Chancellor had only seen the Duke in publick, and said no more to him than what He said in publick, thinking it no good Manners to trouble him with any private Discourse, when He was weary of his Journey; nor did He know that any Thing was done in that Affair till the Day after it was done, and after it was known to the Treasurer. Upon the whole Matter, how unwilling soever He was to believe that He could be so grossly faulty to Him, when He saw the Chancellor next his Countenance was not the same it used to be; which the other taking Notice of asked him, according to his usual Familiarity, "what the "Matter was," but He received such an Answer as made him discern that there was Somewhat amiss: And so He said no more. The other being the same Day with the King, the Duke came into the Room, and in his Looks manifested a Displeasure towards the Treasurer, which confirmed the former Jealousy of the Chancellor; which was improved by the Ladies, who did not like their Lodging, and thought it proceeded from Want of Friendship in him, who had the Power over the University, and might have assigned what Lodgings He pleased to the Treasurer; and He had assigned this as the beſt Houſe in the Town for ſo great a Family, and which their own Servant had deſired as the beſt in the Town, as it was.

When the Chancellor diſcovered the Ground of this Alteration, He grew out of Humour too, and thought himſelf unworthily ſuſpected: And ſo for two or three Days the two Friends came not together. And in that Time the Chancellor had enough to do to inform the Duke, who was not only very much offended with the Treaſurer, but thought that He had been, out of his Friendſhip to the Treaſurer, more remiſs than He ought to have been in a Buſineſs ſo earneſtly recommended by him and his Wife; and the Intelligence from Saliſbury had made Reflections upon him as much as upon the other. But his Royal Highneſs willingly received Information of all that had paſſed, and diſcerned the foul Carriage of others as well as of the Lord Crofts; and was pleaſed to confeſs, "that He "had done all He ought to do, and that He had been "miſinformed of the Lord Treaſurer's Part in that "Affair, which had made him think amiſs of him, "which He would acknowledge to him next Time He "ſaw him."

After this the Chancellor, having a more clear View, upon Conference with the King and the Duke, of this pernicious Deſign, which in ſome Degree had compaſſed its End, if there grew a Strangeneſs between the Treaſurer and him, went to him: And They being together without any others, He told him, "it ſhould "not be in his Power to break Friendſhip with him to "gratify the Humour of other People, without letting "him know what the Matter was," which He conjured him to impart to him; aſſuring him, "that He would "find that Nothing was more impoſſible than that He "could commit a Fault towards him; and that They "who wiſhed well to neither of them, had contrived "this Separation as the beſt Way to hurt them Both." And when He ſaw that He did not yet open himſelf, He told him, "that He had heard that He had re-"ceived ſome Umbrage in the Pretence of his Ne-"phew, and therefore He would give him an Account "of all that He knew of it," which He did exactly; and concluded with a Proteſtation, "that He had not "known what had been done at Oxford till after He "came from him, when He obſerved the Change of "his Countenance towards him, of the Cauſe of which "He could not then make any Conjecture."

The Treaſurer thereupon with his uſual Freedom told him, "that if his Part had been no other than as "He related, He thought himſelf obliged to give him "a Narration of all He had done, and of the Grounds "and Motives He had to think that He had failed in "his Friendſhip." And thereupon He mentioned the "Kindneſs and Eſteem He had for his Nephew, "whom He thought in all Reſpects of Birth and "Breeding at leaſt as worthy of that Relation as the "Gentleman who was poſſeſſed of it; and yet that "ſince He was not upon the Place, He had no Mind "to engage himſelf in the Suit: And that when his "Nephew had given him an Account what the Chan-"cellor had ſaid to him," which He did with great Ingenuity, "and He knew that the Duke of York ap-"peared in it for another, He reſolved to proſecute "it no farther; until the Lord Crofts with all Confi-"dence aſſured him, that the King had promiſed him to "confer the Place upon Robert Spencer, and that Both "their Majeſties expected that He ſhould make it his Suit, "to the End that They might thereby decline the Importu-"nity that He expected from his Brother." He told him "of ſome Expreſſions He had uſed to the King in that "Affair, which the King himſelf had reported; and "that when He took his Leave of the Queen to go to "Oxford" (which was the next Day after Mr. Mounta-gue came from York); "He diſſuaded her Majeſty "from receiving Mr. Spencer, alledging ſome Reaſons "againſt it, which a Lady who was near overheard, "and informed the Perſon of it who acquainted him "with it: All which, with the King's and Queen's "ſo ample Promiſes to him ſo few Hours before the "conferring the Place upon another, and the Duke of "York's Manner of receiving him after He had been "ſhut up with him, as He was informed, might very "well excuſe him for thinking He had ſome Share in "the Affront He had undergone."

To which the other replied, "that if indeed He did "believe all that He had been told, He could not but "think ſo; but," He ſaid, "He thought He had "known him better than to give Credit to ſuch Re-"ports, which muſt make him a Fool and a Knave: "That for the Words He ſhould have uſed to the "King or the Queen, there had Nothing paſſed like "it to either of them, but that they were purely de-"viſed out of Malice; which ſhould be manifeſt unto "him, for He would not ſpeak a Word of it to the "King till they were Both with him together, and "then He would aſk before him what his Carriage had "been, and by his Majeſty's ſudden Anſwer He might "judge of the Report." He told him then, "how "much He had ſuffered with the Duke, and what ex-"cellent Stories had been made to his Royal Highneſs "of Both of them, and of the good Part the Lord "Crofts had acted, of which He was not without ſome "Evidence." After this Eclairciſſement, of the Sincerity whereof every Day adminiſtered new Teſtimony, They Both returned to their mutual Confidence in each other: And They who had contrived this former Device entered into a new Confederacy, how They might firſt remove the Treaſurer, which would facilitate the pulling the Chancellor down; of which anon.

The Duke conſults the Chancellor about making two Suits to the King.

Within a ſhort Time after the Duke returned out of Yorkſhire, his Highneſs told the Chancellor in Confidence, "that He had two Suits which He intended to "make to the King, and with which He firſt ac-"quainted him that He might have his Aſſiſtance in "the obtaining them. The firſt was, in which He "and his Wife were equally engaged, to prevail with "the King to make Sir George Savile a Viſcount." He ſaid, "He knew well the Reſolution the King had "taken, to which He had contributed his Advice, to "make no more Lords: But that He hoped in this "particular Caſe his Majeſty would upon his Deſire "diſpenſe with a general Rule. That Sir George had "one of the beſt Fortunes of any Man in England, and "lived the moſt like a great Man; that He had been "very civil to him and his Wife in the North, and "treated them at his Houſe in a very ſplendid Man-"ner; and that He was engaged to prevail with the "King in this Point, or to confeſs He had no Power, "which He hoped He ſhould not be without in this "Matter;" and aſked his Opinion.

The Chancellor in his uſual Freedom, which He always took when He was to deliver his Advice to the King or Duke, ſaid, "that He could not adviſe his "Highneſs to move the King in it; for beſides that He "knew the King's poſitive Determination, the Depar-"ture from which might be of ill Conſequence, Sir "George Savile was a Man of a very ill Reputation a-"mongſt Men of Piety and Religion, and was looked up-"on as void of all Senſe of Religion, even to the doubt-"ing, if not denying that there is a God, and that He "was not reſerved in any Company to publiſh his "Opinions: Which made him believe that it would "neither be for his Highneſs's Honour to propoſe it, "nor for the King's to grant it, in a Time when all "Licence in Diſcourſe and in Actions was ſpread over "the Kingdom, to the Heart-breaking of very many "good Men, who had terrible Apprehenſions of the "Conſequence of it." The Duke was not at all pleaſed with his Diſcourſe, and ſaid, "He was re-"ſolved to uſe all his Credit with the King to compaſs "it, and that He hoped that whatever He thought "He would not oppoſe it."

The other Particular was, that He would move the "King to make Mr. Coventry, his Secretary, a Privy "Counſellor,"

" Counſellor," and aſked him, " what He thought of " that." To which He anſwered, " that his Opinion " in that Point would pleaſe him no better than in the " former. That He did not think it fit to be aſked: " And if the King his Brother were inclined to be jea- " lous of him, as ſome had endeavoured to perſuade " him, ſuch an Inſtance as this would very much con- " firm it; for never any Prince of Wales had a Servant " of the higheſt Degree about him called to the Coun- " cil, till his Father called the Earl of Newcaſtle, who " was the Prince's Governour, to the Board, which was " not till upon the Approach of the Troubles He diſ- " cerned that He ſhould employ him in another " Charge. That the Members of that Board had been " always thoſe great Officers of State, and other Offi- " cers, who in Reſpect of the Places They held had a " Title to ſit there, and of ſuch few others who, hav- " ing great Titles and Fortunes and Intereſt in the " Kingdom, were an Ornament to the Table. That " there were at preſent too many already, and the " Number leſſened the Dignity of the Relation: That " his Highneſs had already brought the Lord Berkley " thither, who had no Manner of Title to be there but " his Dependance upon him; and now to bring in his " Secretary, for no other Reaſon but for being his Se- " cretary, might be thought an Encroachment, and " be miſinterpreted by the King." He added, " that " his wrangling, litigious Nature would give the Board " much Trouble; and that He knew him to be ſo " much his particular Enemy, that He would watch " all the Opportunities to do him all poſſible ill Offices " to the King and to his Royal Highneſs "

THE Duke replied only to the laſt, and ſaid, " He " perceived Somebody had done Will. Coventry ill " Offices, which He knew to be unjuſt and falſe: And " that He could aſſure him upon his own Knowledge, " that He had a great Reſpect for him, and deſired his " Favour; and that He would paſs his Word for him, " that He would never do any Thing to diſſerve him, " which if He ſhould do He ſhould for ever loſe his " Favour, which He knew well." And no Doubt the Duke did believe all He ſaid, for He had a perfect Kindneſs for the Chancellor; and when He did not comply with what He wiſhed, He knew that it was out of the Integrity of his Judgment, and his ſtrict Duty to the King and himſelf, and that He had never flattered or diſſembled with either of them. And Mr. Coventry had Skill enough to perſuade him to believe what He deſired ſhould be true, though there were in the View of all Men frequent Inſtances of the contrary, and of the Abſence of all Ingenuity and Sincerity in his Actions.

WITHIN very few Days after this Conference, and when the Dutcheſs had made new Inſtance with her Father in the Caſe of Sir George Savile, and with more Importunity than the Duke, and appeared more concerned and troubled that He ſhould not be more forward to comply with the Duke's Deſires (but the Chancellor, who always with the Reſpect that was due to her Quality preſerved the Dignity of a Father very entire, would give no other Anſwer than He had done to the Duke, and adviſed her to diſſuade him from making the Requeſt to the King); his Highneſs one Day deſired the King that He would retire into his Cloſet, and call the Chancellor to him: And when They three were together in the Room, after a ſhort Diſcourſe of Letters which He had received from the Earl of Sandwich, which there will be Occaſion anon to mention at large, the Duke told the King, " He " had an humble Suit to his Majeſty;" and then ſpake much of the great Intereſt that Sir George Savile had in the Northern Parts, of the Greatneſs of his Eſtate, and his orderly and ſplendid Way of Living, and concluded with his Deſire " that his Majeſty would make " him an Engliſh Viſcount." Upon which the King preſently put him in Mind " of the Reſolution He had " formerly made in that Room, and He thought upon " his own Motion, but He was ſure it had been with " his Concurrence and Approbation."

THE Duke replied, " that He remembered it very " well, and thought He ſhould do well ſtill in the " general to obſerve it: Yet it was in thoſe Caſes al- " ways ſuppoſed, that an extraordinary Caſe might " fall out, that might produce an Exception; and He " did moſt humbly beſeech his Majeſty, that He " would upon his very earneſt Interpoſition, from " which Nobody could make a Precedent, diſpenſe " with the Rule." He did confeſs, " that He was ſo " confident of his Majeſty's Favour, that He had " given Sir George Savile Cauſe to believe that He " would prevail in that Suit; which if He ſhould not " do, He muſt be thought either not to have intended " what He promiſed, or to have no Credit with his " Majeſty, neither of which would be for his Honour."

Which the King will not conſent to.

THE King replied roundly, and with more Preſence of Mind than He had always about him, " that it " was abſolutely neceſſary to be very preciſe in the " Obſervation of the Rule, which if He ſhould once " break, a World of Inconveniences would break in " upon him, which He could not defend himſelf " againſt." He named two or three Perſons who were very ſolicitous for Honours, and had ſeveral Pretences to it, and his Majeſty had only been able to reſiſt and evade their Importunity, by objecting this declared Reſolution to them. The plain Truth is; He had made ſome Promiſe (a Weakneſs he was too often liable to) to thoſe Perſons or to their Friends, " that when He ſhould make any new Creations They " ſhould be ſure to be in the Number:" Nor did He apprehend any Inconvenience from redeeming himſelf from the preſent Importunity, which was ſtill grievous to him, ſince He had reſolved to make no new Creation. And this was the true Reaſon that made him now ſo inexorable to his Brother, who was very much troubled, and declined to move any Thing elſe in ſo unlucky a Seaſon, not without ſome Apprehenſion, from the King's quicker Way of Diſcourſe, that He had been prepared for it by the Chancellor, who though preſent had not ſpoke one Word in the Debate, nor indeed ever informed the King of the Conference his Highneſs had formerly held with him upon that Subject, nor ever ſpoken to him concerning it.

HOWEVER in this Perplexity as the Duke thought it neceſſary to inform Mr. Coventry, who had principally advanced this Pretence, all that had paſſed before the King, that his Nephew (for ſo Sir George Savile was) might ſee He could make no farther Progreſs in it; ſo in the Paſſion He unwarily told him all that had paſſed in the former Conference with the Chancellor, which He took Care ſhould not be concealed from any who were like to be willing to revenge it. And the Duke, to ſhew how willing He was to oblige the Family, immediately received a younger Brother of Sir George Savile, whom He had only ſeen in the North to wait upon him in his Bedchamber; who being a young Man of Wit, and incredible Confidence and Preſumption, omitted no Occaſion to vent his Malice againſt the Chancellor, with a Licence that in former Times would have been very penal, though it had concerned a Perſon of a much inferiour Quality in the State.

Mr. William Coventry admitted of the Privy Council and the private Committee.

WITHIN a ſhort Time after the King told the Chancellor, " that his Brother had deſired him that " his Secretary Mr. Coventry might be admitted of the " Privy Council, which He could not deny, but had " promiſed it ſhould be done at the next Meeting;" which was accordingly done, and He knighted: And quickly after upon the like Deſire of the Duke, He was called to that Committee with which his Majeſty uſed to conſult his moſt ſecret Affairs. And from this Time there was an Alteration in the whole Carriage and Debate of all Manner of Buſineſs: And as the Chancellor had found his own Credit with the King much diminiſhed from the Time of the Lord Arlington's being Secretary; ſo a greater Decreaſe of it was now viſible to all Men from the Acceſs of this new Counſellor.

THE

THE Lord Arlington had not the Gift of ſpeaking nor of a quick Conception, and ſo rarely contradicted any Thing in Council: His Talent was in private, where He frequently procured, very inconveniently, Changes and Alterations from publick Determinations. But Sir William Coventry (between whom and the other there was an entire Conjunction and Combination) was a Man of quick Parts and a ready Speaker, unreſtrained by any Modeſty or Submiſſion to the Age, Experience or Dignity of other Men, equally cenſorious of what had been done before He was a Counſellor, as ſolicitous in Contradiction of whatſoever was propoſed afterwards: Inſomuch as the very firſt Time that He was admitted to the private Committee, the Debate being about providing Money to be paid at a Day approaching to the Biſhop of Munſter according to the King's Obligation, He ſaid, "We had Need enough "of Money for our own immediate Occaſions; and "that We ought not to aſſign any to the Advance-"ment of the Affairs of other Men." Whereupon He was informed "of the Treaty the King had en-"tered into, and that the Biſhop was at that Time "upon his March, which was by every Body looked "upon as of great Importance to his Majeſty:" To which He anſwered, "that He had heard Somewhat "of it how ſecretly ſoever it had been carried, and that "He had never liked it from the Beginning, nor "would give his Conſent that any more Money ſhould "be paid towards it;" which the King himſelf looked upon as a rare Impudence.

Where he conſtantly oppoſes the Chancellor and Treaſurer.

HIS great Ambition was to be taken Notice of, for oppoſing and contradicting whatſoever was propoſed or ſaid by the Chancellor or Treaſurer, towards whom all other Counſellors, how little ſoever They cared for their Perſons, had ever paid Reſpect in Regard of their Offices. He was a declared Enemy to all Lawyers, and to the Law itſelf; and any Thing paſſed under the great Seal of England was of no more Authority with him, than if it were the Scroll of a Scrivener. He had no Principles in Religion or State, of one Mind this Day and another To-morrow, and always very uneaſy to thoſe who were obliged to conſult with him; whoſe Pride and Inſolence will adminiſter frequent Occaſions of Mention throughout the enſuing Relation.

Succeſs of the Fleet after the Attempt at Bergen.

THE King had not been many Days in Oxford, when News arrived that the Earl of Sandwich had been engaged in ſome Conflict with the Dutch Fleet; of the Particulars whereof there was a general Longing to be advertiſed. The Truth was, that whilſt the Earl rode, after the Buſineſs of Bergen, as near that Coaſt as was ſafe, in Expectation of the Dutch Fleet, the Winds, which are always tempeſtuous in that Seaſon of the Year, September, made it abſolutely neceſſary for him to remove with his whole Fleet to the Coaſt of Scotland, where there were Harbours enough for him to ride ſafe; and in this Interval of Time De Ruyter was paſſed by towards that of Norway. The News of their Indian Fleet having been attacked by the Engliſh in Bergen, and the Letters of ſome of their Officers, which implied as if They were not ſatisfied in the Security of the Port and of the Fidelity of the Governour, produced a wonderful Conſternation in Holland; and if They ſhould be deprived of that Wealth, the very Company of the Eaſt-Indies would be in Danger of being diſſolved.

THE Fleet was ready to ſet Sail under the Command of De Ruyter well fitted and manned: But there were ſtill many Factions amongſt the Captains and other Officers; that might upon any Accidents produce many Miſchiefs; for the better Prevention whereof, the Penſionary De Wit was willing to venture his own Perſon, believing himſelf to be as ſecure any where as on Shore, if any Misfortune ſhould befall the Fleet. And ſo He was by a ſpecial Commiſſion made Plenipotentiary, with an ample Allowance for his Table, and a Guard of Halberdiers for the Safety of his Perſon, with a good Train of Volunteers: And ſo He put himſelf on Board the Ship of De Ruyter, who received Orders from him.

Lord Sandwich not able to come to an Engagement with De Ruyter.

THE Earl of Sandwich after He had received Advertiſements of the Dutch Fleet's being paſſed by for Norway, took all the Care He could to put himſelf and his Fleet in the Way of their Return. They made a ſhort Stay on the Coaſt of Norway, where upon good Conſideration their Ships were diſmiſſed, and loud Clamour raiſed againſt the Hoſtility of the Engliſh. And notwithſtanding all the Vigilance the Earl could uſe, the Darkneſs and Length of the Nights ſo favoured them, that he could not engage their whole Fleet as He endeavoured to do: Yet He had the good Fortune in two Encounters to take eight of their great Ships of War, two of their beſt Eaſt-India Ships, and about twenty of their other Merchant-Ships, which were all under the Protection of their Fleet, or ought to have been. After which He was by Tempeſt driven to put the Fleet into Security in the Engliſh Harbours, it being already the Month of October.

But takes many of his Ships in their Flight.

IT was a fair Booty, and came very opportunely to ſupply the preſent Neceſſities of the Navy, and to provide for the ſetting out of the next Fleet at Spring, and was in Truth gotten with very good Conduct, and without any conſiderable Damage: But it being much leſs than was expected (for whatſoever was upon the Sea was looked upon as our own), the News no ſooner arrived at Oxford, but Intelligence came with it of many Overſights which had been committed and Opportunities loſt, otherwiſe it had been eaſy to have taken the whole Fleet; and that it might have been purſued farther when it was in View, after thoſe Eaſt-India Ships were taken, which were indeed ſurpriſed and boarded at the Break of Day, when They thought themſelves in the Middle of their own Fleet. And it is as true that the Earl did then purſue to engage the Fleet, till They were got ſo near the French Shore, that the Wind blowing in to the Land, it was by all the Flag-Officers thought abſolutely neceſſary to give over the Chace.

Sir Wm. Coventry's unjuſt Reflection upon him.

SIR William Coventry, who had never paid a Civility to any worthy Man but as it was a Diſobligation to another whom He cared leſs for, and ſo had only contributed to the Preferment of the Earl of Sandwich in the laſt Expedition that He might croſs Prince Rupert, received much Intelligence from ſeveral Officers in the Fleet, which He ſcattered abroad to the Prejudice of the Earl, and was willing that it ſhould be believed that He had been too wary in avoiding Danger. But the King and the Duke were very juſt to the Earl, and diſcountenanced all thoſe Reports as Scandals and Calumnies: And the Duke, who had ſeen his Behaviour in the moſt dangerous Action, gave him a loud Teſtimony "of a prudent "and brave Commander, and as forward and bold "in the Face of Danger as the Occaſion required "or Diſcretion permitted." And his Highneſs undertook "that He had in all this Expedition done "what a Man of Honour was obliged to do," and was abundantly ſatisfied (as his Majeſty likewiſe was) with the rich Prizes He had brought home, which had cauſed equal Lamentation in Holland, and almoſt broke the Heart of De Wit himſelf. But what Succeſs ſoever the Earl had at Sea, it was his Misfortune to do an unadviſed Action when He came into the Harbour, that leſſened the King's own Eſteem of him, and to a great Degree irreconciled the Duke to him, and gave Opportunity to his Enemies to do him much Prejudice.

An ingrateful Action of the Earl of Sandwich after his Return.

IT was a conſtant and a known Rule in the Admiralty, that of any Ship that is taken from the Enemy, Bulk is not to be broken, till it be brought into the Port and adjudged lawful Prize. It ſeems that when the Fleet returned to the Harbour, the Flag-Officers petitioned or moved the Earl of Sandwich, "in Regard of their having continued all the "Summer upon the Seas with great Fatigue, and

" been engaged in many Actions of Danger, that " He would diſtribute amongſt them ſome Reward " out of the Indian Ships;" which He thought reaſonable and inclined to ſatisfy them, and writ a Letter to the Vice-Chamberlain to inform the King of it, and " that He thought it fit to be done;" to which the Vice-Chamberlain, having ſhewed the Letter to the King, returned his Majeſty's Approbation. But before the Anſwer came to his Hand He had executed the Deſign, and diſtributed as much of the coarſer Goods to the Flag-Officers, as by Eſtimation was valued to be one thouſand Pounds to each Officer, and took to the Value of two thouſand Pounds for himſelf. This ſuddenly made ſuch a Noiſe and Outcry, as if all the Indian and other Merchant-Ships had been plundered by the Seamen: And They again cried out as much, that no Care was taken of them, but all given to the Flag-Officers; which the other Captains thought to be an Injury to them.

Which the General repreſents in the worſt Light.

THE General (who had Nothing like Kindneſs for the Earl of Sandwich, whoſe Service He thought had been too much conſidered and recompenſed by the King at his Arrival) had Notice of it before it came to Oxford; and according to his univerſal Care (which was afterwards found to proceed from private Animoſity) ſent Orders to all the Port Towns to ſeize upon Goods which were brought in Shallops from the Fleet; and gave Advertiſement to Oxford of the extraordinary ill Conſequence of that Action, and " that it would ſpoil the Sale of all that remained of " thoſe Ships, ſince the Eaſt-India Company, which " probably would have been the beſt Chapmen, " would not now be forward to buy, ſince ſo much " was diſpoſed of already to other Hands as would " ſpoil their Market." And by this Time the Earl himſelf had given an Account of all that had been done, and the Motives, to the Duke. The King was juſtly diſpleaſed for the Expedition he had uſed, " why had his Approbation been deſired, when He " reſolved to do the Thing before He could receive an " Anſwer?" yet was glad that He had done ſo, becauſe He would have been more excuſable if He had received it.

The King offended with the Earl.

The Duke incenſed againſt him.

BUT the Duke, who had been conſtantly kind to the Earl, was offended in the higheſt Degree, and thought himſelf injured and affronted beyond any Precedent. " This moſt unjuſtifiable Action could " proceed only from two Fountains: The one of ex" treme Vanity and Ambition, to make himſelf po" pular amongſt the Officers of the Fleet, who ought " not to have been gratified by him at the King's " Charge. When any ſuch Bounty ſhould be ſea" ſonable, it was the Duke's Province to have been " the Author, and the Conduit to have conveyed it: " He had himſelf been an Eye-witneſs of their Be" haviour in the greateſt Action; and for the Earl " to aſſume the rewarding them by his own Autho" rity, was to defraud and rob him of his proper " Right and Juriſdiction." And he looked upon his having deſired the King's Allowance by the Vice-Chamberlain, as a Trick and an Aggravation; for He ought to have aſked his Advice as his ſuperiour Officer: And the poor Vice-Chamberlain underwent his Share in the Reproach, for having preſumed to move the King in a Particular that, if it was to be moved at all, had been to be moved by the Duke. " The other Fountain which might produce this " Preſumption might be Avarice," which was the ſole Blemiſh (though it never appeared in any groſs Inſtance) that ſeemed to cloud many noble Virtues in that Earl) who now became a very pregnant Evidence of the irreſiſtible Strength and Power of Envy; which though it feeds on its own Poiſon, and is naturally more grievous to the Perſon who harbours it than to him that is maligned, yet when it finds a Subject it can effectually work upon, it is more inſatiable in Revenge than any Paſſion the Soul is liable unto.

Character of the Earl of Sandwich.

HE was a Gentleman of ſo excellent a Temper and Behaviour that He could make himſelf no Enemies; of ſo many good Qualities, and ſo eaſy to live with, that He marvellouſly reconciled the Minds of all Men to him, who had not Intimacy enough with him to admire his other Parts: Yet was in the general Inclinations of Men upon ſome Diſadvantage. They who had conſtantly followed the King whilſt He as conſtantly adhered to Cromwell, and knew not how early He had entertained Repentance, and with what Hazards and Dangers He had manifeſted it, did believe the King had been too prodigal in heaping ſo many Honours upon him. And They who had been familiar with him and of the ſame Party, and thought They had been as active as He in contributing to the Revolution, conſidered him with ſome Anger, as one who had better Luck than They without more Merit, and who had made early Conditions: When in Truth no Man in the Kingdom had been leſs guilty of that Addreſs; nor did He ever contribute to any Advancement to which He arrived, by the leaſt Intimation or Inſinuation that He wiſhed it, or that it would be acceptable to him. Yet upon this Blaſt the Winds roſe from all Quarters, Reproaches of all Sorts were caſt upon him, and all Affronts contrived for him.

He is very injuriouſly treated.

THE Earl had conveyed that Part of the Goods which He had aſſigned to himſelf in a Shallop to Lynn, from whence it could paſs by Water to his own Houſe. An Officer in that Port ſeized upon it by Virtue of the General's Warrant, and would cauſe it preſently to be unladen, which He began to do. But the Servants of the Earl appealed to the other Officers in equal Authority, to whom They brought a Letter with them from the Earl of Sandwich, in which He owned all thoſe Goods to be his (amongſt which were his Bedding and Furniture for his Cabin, and all his Plate and other Things ſuitable), and likewiſe a Note of all the other Goods which might be liable to pay Cuſtom; and deſired them " to " ſend one of their Searchers with the Boat to his " Houſe, where He ſhould receive all their Dues, " without being unladen in the Port;" which, beſides the Delay, would be liable to many Inconveniences. The Officer who had at firſt arreſted it, and who had Dependance upon a great Man of the Country, who was not unwilling that any Affront ſhould be put upon the Earl, roughly refuſed to ſuffer it to paſs without being firſt unladen; but being overruled by the other Officers, vented his Anger in very unmannerly Language againſt the Earl: Of all which He, being advertiſed by his Servants, ſent a Complaint to the Lords of the Council, and deſired " the " Fellow might be ſent for and puniſhed;" which could not be refuſed, though it proved troubleſome in the Inquiry. For the Officer, who was a Gentleman of a fair Behaviour and good Repute, denied all thoſe Words which carried in them the worſt Interpretation; but juſtified the Action, and produced the General's Warrant, which had unuſual Expreſſions, and apparent enough to have a particular and not a general Intention.

THE General had quick Advertiſement of it, and writ very paſſionately from London, " that an Officer " ſhould be ſent for without having committed any " other Offence than in obeying and executing a " Warrant of his:" And the other great Man, who was of great Importance to the King's Service and in the higheſt Truſt in that Country, writ ſeveral Letters " how impoſſible it would be to carry on the " King's Service in that Country, if that Officer " ſhould be puniſhed for doing that, when He ought " to be puniſhed if He had not done it;" and therefore deſired, " that He might be repaired by them " who had cauſed him to be ſent for."

SIR William Coventry had now full Sea-Room to give Vent to all his Paſſions, and to incenſe the Duke, who was enough offended without ſuch Contributions: "If this proceeded from Covetouſneſs, it was "not probable that it would be ſatisfied with ſo lit-"tle; and therefore it was probable, that though "the Officers might not have received above the "Value of one thouſand Pounds," which was aſſigned to each, "yet himſelf would not be con-"tented with ſo little as two thouſand; and They "might therefore well conceive that He had taken "much more, which ought to be examined with the "greateſt Strictneſs." There had been Nothing ſaid before of not taking Advantage enough upon the Enemy in all Occaſions which had been offered, and of not purſuing them far enough, which was not now renewed, with Advice "that He might be pre-"ſently ſent for;" though it was known that, as ſoon as He could put the Ships into the Ports to which they were deſigned, He would come to Oxford. And there were great underhand Endeavours, that the Houſe of Commons might be inflamed with this Miſcarriage and Miſdemeanor, and preſent it as a Complaint to the Houſe of Peers, as fit to be examined and brought to Judgment before that Tribunal. And They, who with all the Malice imaginable did endeavour in vain to kindle this Fire, perſuaded the King and the Duke, "that by their ſole Activity "and Intereſt it was prevented for that Time, be-"cauſe the Seſſion was too ſhort, and that all neceſ-"ſary Evidence, could not be ſoon produced at Ox-"ford; but that, as ſoon as the Plague ſhould ceaſe "to ſuch a Degree in London that the Parliament "might aſſemble there, it would be impoſſible to re-"ſtrain the Houſe of Commons from purſuing that "Complaint," of which Nobody thought but themſelves and They who were provoked by them.

THE Earl of Sandwich had ſo good Intelligence from Oxford, that He knew all that was ſaid of him, and began to believe that He had done unadviſedly in adminiſtering Occaſion of ſpeaking ill to thoſe who greedily ſought for it: And as ſoon as his Abſence from the Fleet could be diſpenſed with, He made Haſte to Oxford, and gave ſo full an Account of every Day's Action from the Time that He went to Sea to the Day of his Return, and of his having never done any Thing of Importance, nor having left any Thing undone, but with and by the Advice of the Council of War, upon the Orders He had received, that both the King and the Duke could not but abſolve him from all the Imputations of Negligence or Inadvertency.

He fully clears himſelf of the Charge of Miſconduct at Sea.

BUT for the breaking Bulk and the Circumſtances that attended it, They declared They were unſatisfied. And He confeſſed "that He had been much "to blame," and aſked Pardon, and with ſuch Excuſes as He thought might in ſome Degree plead for him. He proteſted, "it ſeemed to him to have had "ſome Neceſſity: That the whole Fleet was in a "general Indiſpoſition, and complained that for all "that Summer Action" (which indeed had been full of Merit) "They had Nothing given to them, not "without ſome muttering that They would have Some-"what out of thoſe India Ships before They would "part with them; inſomuch as He had a real Ap-"prehenſion that They had a Purpoſe to plunder "them. And He ſhould have feared more, if He "had not complied with the Flag-Officers Impor-"tunity: And thereupon He conſented that They "ſhould have each of them the Value of one thou-"ſand Pounds, and which He was moſt confident "the Goods which had been delivered to them did "not exceed." He confeſſed, "He had not enough "conſidered the Conſequence, and that They who "had not received any Donative would be more diſ-"pleaſed, than They who had it were ſatisfied with "it; which He acknowledged was the Caſe: That "He was heartily ſorry for permitting any ſuch Thing "to be done, and more for having taken any him-"ſelf, and humbly aſked Pardon for Both; and deſired "that his own Part, which remained entire, might "be reſtored to the Ship from whence it had been "taken, which He would cauſe to be done."

And makes an ingenuous Acknowledgment of his Imprudence.

A MORE ingenuous Acknowledgment could not be made: And They who could not but obſerve many Perſons every Day excuſed for more enormous Tranſgreſſions, did hope that He, who had ſo few Faults to anſwer for, would have been abſolved for that Treſpaſs. And the King himſelf uſed him very graciouſly, and ſo did the Duke; and He was ſent back to the Fleet to give Order for the ſending out a Winter-Guard and ordering all other maritime Affairs, and for the ſending up the India Ships into the River, with great Care that none of the Seamen ſhould go on Shore, where the Plague ſtill raged little if at all leſs than it had done in the Summer: And ſo He himſelf and moſt other Men believed and were glad, that an ill Buſineſs was ſo well compoſed. But Sir William did not intend that it ſhould end there.

With which the King is ſatisfied.

THE preſent Buſineſs, that muſt admit no Interruption, was the raiſing what Money might be to ſupply the preſent Neceſſities of the Fleet, to pay the Seamen, and to make all Preparations to ſet out the Fleet againſt the Spring, when the French Ships would be infallibly ready to join with the Dutch; and the Money that was given by the Parliament would not be paid till long after; and the Affairs of the Bankers were in ſuch Diſorder by the Death of Servants, and the Plague having been in ſome of their Houſes, that the uſual Courſe of advancing Moneys by Aſſignations could not be depended upon. The General had written to the Lord Treaſurer, "that He thought that there could not be ſo good "Chapmen for thoſe Ships as the Eaſt-India Com-"pany, ſome whereof had been with him to know "the King's Pleaſure; and if Authority were granted "to any Man to treat upon that Affair, They would "ſend for Members enough of their Company, who "were diſperſed in the Country, to be preſent at "a Court, which would authoriſe a Committee to "treat and contract with them:" And He ſaid, "that "He was confident that Half the Money would be "paid upon the making the Bargain." The King was no ſooner advertiſed of this Overture, than He ſent Sir George Carteret and Mr. Aſhburnham to London, to confer with the General and to be adviſed by him, and granted Authority to them three to ſell thoſe two Prizes to thoſe who would give moſt. And They found no Overtures to be ſo advantageous as thoſe which were made by that Company: And yet They made ſo much Uſe of the Advantage of the Time, when all Men of notorious Wealth were out of the Town, that They thought not fit to make any Agreement till They gave the King an Account of the whole Tranſaction, with their Opinions upon Conference with other Men of Buſineſs; and to that Purpoſe the two Perſons who had been ſent to the General returned ſafe to Oxford.

The Eaſt-India Prizes ſold for the Service of the War.

IT hath been mentioned before, that it was thought a great Preſumption in any Body to preſume to interpoſe in the maritime Affairs, which was interpreted to be an Invaſion of the Duke's peculiar Province; and by this Means the Credit of Sir William Coventry was ſo abſolute, that the Diſpoſal of all was in his Power. He had perſuaded the Duke, and the Lord Arlington, who was in firm Conjunction with him had prevailed with the King to believe, "that the Houſe of Commons was ſo in-"cenſed againſt the Lord Sandwich for his late Pre-"ſumption, that it would not be poſſible to hinder "them in their next aſſembling" (which was appointed or reſolved to be in April, if it pleaſed God to extinguiſh the Sickneſs) "from falling "very ſeverely upon the Earl of Sandwich, which "would be a very great Diſhonour to the King, if He "were at that Time in the Command of the Fleet; "and that there was no Way to preſerve him" (for that that was their Method when They had a Mind to ruin a Man, to pretend a great Care that He might not be undone) "but by diſmiſſing him from that "Charge, which probably might preſerve him from "being further queſtioned, ſince it would be inter-"preted a Puniſhment inflicted on him by the King "for his Crime, and ſo might ſtop him from being "further proſecuted for the ſame Offence." To which They added, "that it would be neceſſary in "another Reſpect; for that many of the Officers as "well as common Seamen, had opened their Mouths "very wide againſt him, eſpecially after it was ge-"nerally known that the King and the Duke were "offended with him, and had not been at all reſer-"ved in charging him with ſeveral Reproaches: And "that if the ſame Command were ſtill continued in "him, it could not be preſumed, that thoſe Men "would ever put themſelves under his Command, "whom They had ſo much provoked."

THESE Arguments urged by Men who were not known, at leaſt by the King and Duke to be his Enemies, and one of them thought to be (and in Truth was but for his Conjunction with the other) his Friend, and to wiſh him very well, prevailed upon the Judgments of Both of them; inſomuch as They reſolved to confer with the Chancellor, whom They knew to be much the Earl's Friend. And They Both expreſſed "very much Kindneſs to "and Confidence in the Affection and Integrity "and Courage of the Earl of Sandwich, though He "was to be blamed for his late Indiſcretion, and a "Reſolution with their utmoſt Power to defend him "from undergoing any Diſgrace by it: But that it "would contribute moſt to his Preſervation, that He "quitted the Employment, and that ſome other Per-"ſons ſhould be ſent to command the next Fleet in "the Spring. For if He ſhould again go to Sea, "and the Parliament ſhould preſs to have him ſent "for to anſwer what They had to object againſt him, "his Majeſty muſt either refuſe to conſent to it, which "would make a Breach with his Parliament, or by "conſenting diſorder his maritime Affairs to that De-"gree, that the Enemy could not but take very great "Advantage of it." Therefore They commanded the Chancellor to confer with him and diſcourſe the whole Matter to him, to aſſure him "of the King's and "Duke's Favour, and that They were in this Parti-"cular moved only by their Tenderneſs to him; and "that ſome Expedient ſhould be firſt found out to "remove him with Honour before any Notice ſhould be "taken of the Purpoſe to remove him, and before any "other Perſon ſhould be deputed to the Command; "and that He himſelf ſhould either propoſe the Expedi-"ent, if any ſuch occurred to him that would be grate-"ful, or judge of any that ſhould be propoſed to him."

The King reſolves to diſmiſs him with Honour.

The Chancellor againſt removing him.

THE Chancellor did preſume to declare, "that He "thought that They were perſuaded to apprehend "Somewhat that could not fall out. That He would "not take upon him to excuſe the Earl of Sandwich "for any Offence He had committed: If it were of "that Magnitude that his Majeſty thought fit to re-"move him from his Command, Nobody could cen-"ſure it; and it may be in a Time of ſo much Li-"cence the Severity might be thought ſeaſonable. But "the Apprehenſion that the Parliament would take "more Notice of what the Earl had done, than They "would of any other Breach of Order that was every "Day committed, was without any juſt Reaſon." But that Argument was preſently ſilenced by their undertaking to know Somewhat that the other could not do, and that there was no other Way to preſerve him but that which was propoſed.

An Account of Sir Richard Fanſhaw's Embaſſy in Spain.

THERE was at that Time an Opportunity in View, that might give the Earl of Sandwich an Employment very worthy of him, and which no Man could imagine would be aſſigned to any Man who was in Diſgrace. Sir Richard Fanſhaw, who was a Gentleman very well known and very well beloved, had been firſt Ambaſſadour in Portugal, and had behaved himſelf ſo well there, that when He returned from thence He was recommended, and upon the Matter deſired, by that Crown to be ſent to Spain, as the fitteſt Perſon to mediate in the King's Name between Spain and Portugal; and the King had before deſigned to ſend him Ambaſſadour into Spain, as well to ſettle a Treaty between England and Spain (for there was none yet), as to do all the Offices between thoſe other Crowns which were requiſite to the End aforeſaid. No Man knew that Court better or was ſo well verſed in the Language, having lived many Years before in that Court in much better Times. He had remained now about two Years, with ſuch frequent Mortifications as Miniſters uſe to meet with in Courts irreſolute and perplexed in their own Affairs, as the Counſels of Madrid were in the laſt Years of the King, as his Indiſpoſition increaſed or by relaxing adminiſtered ſome Hope. He had made a Journey to Liſbon upon the earneſt Deſire of Spain, and returned without Effect. The Peace was equally deſired and equally neceſſary to Both Nations: But the Portugal was unmoveable in the Conditions of it, preferring the Worſt that could fall out, even the abandoning their Country, rather than to be without the Sovereignty of it; and the Spaniard as poſitive not to part with their Title, though They had no Hope of their Subjection. Nor did Spain appear ſolicitous to conclude any Treaty with England, except either Portugal might be comprehended in it or abandoned by it.

ON a ſudden, when the Recovery of the King grew more deſperate (which is never a Thing notoriouſly known in that Court), a Project for a Treaty was ſent to the Ambaſſadour, containing more Advantages in Trade to the Nation (which are the moſt important Matters in all thoſe Treaties), and inſiſting upon fewer inconvenient Conditions, than had ever been in any former Treaties; without any Mention of Tangier or Jamaica, which had hitherto in the Entrance into any Treaty ſince the King's Return made the Progreſs impoſſible: Only it was urged, "that it might either be "preſently accepted and ſigned by the Ambaſſadour, "with a Covenant that it ſhould be confirmed by the "King within ſo many Days after it ſhould be pre-"ſented to him, or elſe that there ſhould be no more "Mention or Diſcourſe of it."

THE Ambaſſadour, ſurpriſed with this Overture, compared what was offered with what He was to demand by his Inſtructions; and what was defective in thoſe Particulars He added to the Articles preſented to him, with ſuch Additions as upon his own Obſervation and Conference with the Merchants occurred to him, or which ſeemed probable to be granted from Somewhat themſelves had offered more than had been demanded by him. Theſe Alterations and Amendments were approved and conſented to, and quickly returned engroſſed and ſigned by the King, on Condition to be preſently ſigned by him, with the Undertaking that is formerly mentioned. It had been wiſely done by the Ambaſſadour, and no more than his Duty, if He had firſt acquainted his Maſter or the Miniſters with all that had paſſed, and expected a particular Order before He had ſigned it. But that being expreſsly refuſed, without concealing the Reaſon or the King's Weakneſs, "which" They declared "might make "ſuch an Alteration in Counſels, that if it were not "done in his Life-Time They knew not what might "happen after:" This was thought as good an Argument by him for the Diſpatch as it was to them; and that if He ſhould not make Uſe of this Conjuncture, there would never be the like advantageous Treaty offered again. Hereupon He preſently ſigned the Treaty, with ſome ſecret Article which was not to the Advantage of Portugal, otherwiſe than that He concluded, by what had been ſaid to him at Liſbon, it would have been acceptable to them.

THIS Treaty was no ſooner brought to the King by the Spaniſh Ambaſſadour (who had received it by an Expreſs) Expreſs) and peruſed at the Council-Table, but many groſs Faults were found to be in it. Beſides the Gentleman's Abſence, who would with greater Abilities have defended himſelf than any of thoſe who had reproached him, it was no Advantage to him that He was known to be much in the Chancellor's Confidence: And therefore the more Pain was taken to perſuade the King that He was a weak Man (which the King himſelf knew him not to be); and They put ſuch a Gloſs upon many of the Articles, and rejected others as unprofitable which were thought to contain Matters of great Moment, that They would not conſent that a Trade to the Weſt-Indies could be any Benefit to England, and the like. In the End, the King concluded that He would not ſign the Treaty; for which He had ſome Acceſs of Reaſon within a Month after, by the Death of the King of Spain.

He is recalled. When all theſe Reproaches were caſt upon the Ambaſſadour, and Notice given that the King did diſavow the Treaty and refuſed to ſign it; it was reaſonably reſolved that He ought not to remain there longer as Ambaſſadour, but to be recalled. But the Plague driving the King from London and diſperſing the Council, the purſuing this Reſolution was no more aſſumed, till the Buſineſs of the Earl of Sandwich made it thought on as a good Expedient; and the Chancellor was directed in his Diſcourſe with the Earl to mention it, as a proper Expedient in his Condition to be laid Hold on and embraced.

The Chancellor entered upon the whole Diſcourſe with that Freedom and Openneſs that became a Man who He knew was not ſuſpected by him. He told him all that himſelf knew of the Affair, and the Apprehenſion the King had of the Parliament, and the Expedient He had thought of to remove him out of the Reach or Noiſe of Clamour, of which He made him the Judge; and "if He did not like this Employment for Spain, "ſome other ſhould be thought of and publiſhed be-"fore it ſhould be known, and before the Command "of the Fleet ſhould be committed to any other."

The Earl of Sandwich lamented "that it had been "in any Body's Power to make ſo ill Impreſſions in "the King and the Duke, upon his having committed "a Treſpaſs for which He was heartily ſorry;" and confeſſed "it was a Preſumption and Indiſcretion, the "ill Conſequence whereof He had not Wit enough "to diſcover: However He did not yet think it ſo "great, as to make him fear to give an Account of "it before the Parliament, or any Thing that They "could do upon it." He ſeemed not to be ignorant of the Offices Sir William Coventry did him, "in draw-"ing Complaints and Reproaches from thoſe who had "neither Cauſe nor Inclination to ſpeak to his Diſad-"vantage. He was ſenſible of the General's Want of "Juſtice towards him, which He knew not to what to "impute but to his Pride and Weakneſs. He did ac-"knowledge it great Bounty in the King, ſince He "thought him unfit and unworthy to continue in the "Command He had, that He would yet aſſign him to "ſo honourable an Employment; which, though it "could not wipe off the Reproach of being diſ-"miſſed from the other Charge, was yet a ſufficient "Evidence that He was not out of his Majeſty's good "Opinion and Confidence: And therefore He did "with all Chearfulneſs ſubmit to his Majeſty's Plea-"ſure, and would be ready for his Journey to Spain "as ſoon as his Diſpatch ſhould be prepared."

He told him then, "that He was in one Reſpect "glad to be removed from his preſent Command, "for He was confident that He would ſee no more "great Matters done at Sea, for that the common Men "were weary of the War; and that Sir William would "never ſuffer any Peace to be in the Fleet, but had "Creatures ready to do all ill Offices amongſt them, "whom He cheriſhed and preferred before the beſt "Officers;" and told him many other Things which fell out afterwards, and ſaid "Sir William would make "any Man who ſhould ſucceed him weary of his "Command, by ſending ſuch Variety of Orders that "He would not know what to do." And ſhortly after He gave him a perfect Journal of his laſt Expedition, in which there were indeed many Orders which muſt needs ſtartle and perplex a Commander in Chief, it being his uſual Courſe to ſignify the Duke's Pleaſure in Matters of the greateſt Importance without the Duke's Hand; which yet They durſt not diſobey, nor produce in their own Juſtification, being ſuch as in Truth were no ſuch Warrants as They ought to obey, and yet would reflect upon his Royal Highneſs: And told him likewiſe of the ill Inventions He had ſet on Foot, by which Prince Rupert was ſtopped from being joined with him in the Command of the laſt Fleet.

The Earl of Sandwich ſent Ambaſſadour Extraordinary into Spain. When the Chancellor had informed the King of the Earl of Sandwich his Submiſſion to his Pleaſure, and that He would be ready to undertake the Employment for Spain as ſoon as his Majeſty pleaſed; hereupon the King declared his Reſolution in Council to ſend the Earl of Sandwich his Extraordinary Ambaſſadour, as well to correct and amend the Miſtakes and Errours in the late Treaty, as farther to mediate the Peace with Portugal, which upon the Death of the King was in ſome Reſpect more practicable. And to that Purpoſe He ſent Sir Robert Southwell, one of the Clerks of the Council, Envoy into Portugal, that the Earl might the better know the Inclinations of that People: And all Inſtructions neceſſary were preſently to be prepared to Both thoſe Ends.

The King thinks of appointing Prince Rupert and the General joint Admirals. This firſt Work being thus diſpatched, it remained to ſettle the Command, for the enſuing Year, of the Fleet; and there can be little Doubt made, but that the King and the Duke had reſolved this at the ſame Time that They determined that the Earl of Sandwich ſhould not continue in it: However it was communicated to Nobody, till the Deſignation of the other was publiſhed. Then the King told the Chancellor, "that "his Brother and He had long conſidered that Affair, "and could not think of any Expedient ſo good for the "Performance of that Service, as a Conjunction be-"tween Prince Rupert and the General, and making "them Both joint Commanders in Chief of the Fleet "for the next Expedition." There had many Exceptions occurred to them againſt committing the Charge to either of them ſingly; nor were They without Apprehenſion of ſome which might fall out by joining them together, which would be much greater, if They were not Both well prepared to embrace the Occaſion, and themſelves to like the Deſignation. For the doing this the Chancellor was again thought to be the fitteſt Man, being believed to have the greateſt Intereſt in Both of them, and moſt in him from whom the greateſt Difficulties were expected to ariſe, which was Prince Rupert. It was eaſy to know Prince Rupert's Mind, who was in the Houſe: Yet They were Both in Caſes of that Nature deſirous always to impart what They deſired by others, rather than to debate it firſt themſelves. But then the General was at London, beſieged by the Plague; and the Matter was not fit to be communicated by Letter, becauſe, if He ſhould make any Scruple of concurring in it, it was to be declined.

Prince Rupert willingly accepts of a joint Commiſſion. Upon theſe Conſiderations it was reſolved, firſt, that the Chancellor ſhould prepare Prince Rupert, and then that the General ſhould be ſent for to Oxford upon Pretences, of which enough would occur. The Prince, though He was much more willing to have gone alone, willingly conformed to the King's Pleaſure: And ſo Both the King and Duke ſpake at large with him upon all that was neceſſary to be adjuſted. And the General was ſent to, "that it was neceſſary for the King to "confer with him upon ſome Propoſitions, which "were made to him upon the Eaſt-India Ships" (which Tranſaction was not at that Time yet concluded); "and therefore that on ſuch a Day He ſhould come "from London early in the Morning" (for it was deep Winter) "in his own Coach to Beaconsfield, where He

"ſhould

" ſhould find another Coach ready to receive him, and " another at another Stage; ſo that He might be with " Eaſe at Oxford the ſame Night," as He was, and very graciouſly received by the King, as he deſerved to be. But as He had no Manner of Imagination of the true Reaſon why He was ſent for, ſo neither his Majeſty nor the Duke would impart it to him, out of real Imagination that it would not be grateful to him; but that was left to be imparted and dexterouſly managed by the Chancellor, in whom, as was ſaid before, it was generally believed that He had great Confidence.

The Chancellor confers with the General upon the Subject.

HE the next Morning entered into Conference with him, and after general Diſcourſes told him " that the " King had diſpoſed the Earl of Sandwich to another " Employment, for which He did not ſeem ſorry; " and that it muſt now be thought of, who was fit to " command in his Place: That there was no Hope " of Peace, inſtead whereof there would be an entire " Conjunction between France and the Dutch; and " that the French Fleet" (the Ambaſſadours being about this Time gone) " would be ready to join with " them as ſoon as They ſhould put to Sea; and there " was much Doubt that the Dane would betake himſelf to the ſame Alliance; and all would be at Sea " before We ſhould be, except extraordinary Diligence " were uſed, which the Continuance of the Plague " would hardly admit." The General preſently anſwered, " that no Perſon was ſo fit for that Command " as Prince Rupert, who underſtood the Seas well, " and had that Courage that was neceſſary in this " Conjuncture."

THE Chancellor told him, " that the King had great " Confidence in the Affection and unqueſtionable Courage of Prince Rupert: But He was not ſure, that " the Quickneſs of his Spirit and the Strength of his " Paſſion might not ſometimes ſtand in Need of the " Advice and Aſſiſtance of a Friend, who ſhould be " in equal Authority with him; and had therefore " thought of finding ſome fit Perſon to be joined with " and ſo make one Admiral of two Perſons." To which the other not replying ſuddenly, He continued his Diſcourſe, ſaying, " that the King had ſuch a Perſon in his View, whom He would never acquaint " with it, until He might find ſome Way to diſcover " that the propoſing it would not be ingrateful to " him; and that He was obliged to make this Diſcovery, and that the Perſon in the King's View was " himſelf; and that if He and Prince Rupert were " joined in the Command of the Fleet and undertook " it, his Majeſty would believe that He had done all " that was in his Power, and would with great Hope " commit all the reſt to God Almighty." He ſaid, " He thought He had behaved himſelf moſt like a " Friend in telling him ſhortly and plainly what the " King's Drift was, towards which, though the Secret " was known to none but the Duke of York, yet ſuch " an Advance was made, that his Majeſty was well " aſſured that Prince Rupert would readily comply with " his Pleaſure." Upon the whole Matter He deſired him " to deal as like a Friend with him, and to tell " him freely if He had no Mind to the Employment; " and He would take upon him to prevent the making the Propoſition to him, and that neither the " King nor Duke ſhould take it unkindly."

THE General appeared really ſurpriſed and full of Thoughts: And after a ſhort Pauſe He deſired him " not to believe that He made the leaſt Difficulty in " his Thoughts of undertaking the Service; but many " Things had occurred to him in the Diſcourſe, which " He would mention anon." He ſaid, " that for his " own Part He ſhould be willing to go out of London " To morrow, and think himſelf much ſafer in any " Action againſt the Dutch than He could be in the " Poſt He was, where every Day Men died about him " and in his View; and as He thought that He had " done the King better Service by ſtaying in London, " than He could have done in any other Place, ſo He " believed if the Sickneſs ſhould continue" (as it was like enough to do, there appearing yet very little Decreaſe), " his Majeſty might think that his Preſence " might be as neceſſary there as it had been." The Chancellor replied, " that his Majeſty had foreſeen " that Contingency; and had already reſolved that if " that fell out to be the Caſe, He ſhould rather deſire " his Reſidence ſhould be where it had been (though " he was much troubled to expoſe him to ſo much " Hazard) than in any other Place: But that his Majeſty's Confidence in the Mercy of God, that He " would take off this heavy Viſitation before the End " of Winter, had ſuggeſted the other Deſignation of " him to the Service of the Fleet, upon the good " Conduct whereof his own and the Kingdom's Happineſs ſo much depended."

The General ſubmits to the King's Pleaſure.

THE General quickly replied, " that for that Matter He was ſo willing to engage himſelf, that if the " King pleaſed He would moſt readily ſerve under the " Command of Prince Rupert:" To which the other anſwered as readily, " that the King would never conſent to that." And ſo They reſolved preſently to go to the King, that his Majeſty and the Duke, might know what would pleaſe them ſo much. And as They were going, the General ſaid ſmiling, " that He " would tell him now what the true Cauſe was, that " had made that Pauſe in him upon the firſt Diſcourſe of the Buſineſs; and that it would be neceſſary for him, after all Things ſhould be adjuſted " with the King and Duke and Prince Rupert, that " what concerned him ſhould ſtill remain a Secret, and " Prince Rupert be underſtood to have that Command alone. For if his Wife ſhould come to know it, " before He had by Degrees prepared her for it, She " would break out into ſuch Paſſions as would be very " uneaſy to him: But He would in a ſhort Time diſpoſe her well enough; and in the mean Time No- " thing ſhould be omitted on his Part, that was neceſſary for the Advancement of the Service." Hereupon the King, the Duke, the Prince and the General conſulted of all that was to be done: And He at the End of two Days returned to London with the ſame Expedition that He came to Oxford, together with Sir George Carteret the Treaſurer of the Navy, and all Orders that were requiſite for the Sale of the Eaſt-India Ships, upon which all Proviſions for the Fleet were to be made.

THOUGH the Parliament at Oxford had preſerved that excellent Harmony that the King had propoſed, and hardly wiſhed any Thing in which They had not concurred, inſomuch as never Parliament ſo entirely ſympathiſed with his Majeſty; and though it paſſed more Acts for his Honour and Security than any other had ever done in ſo ſhort a Seſſion: Yet it produced a Precedent of a very unhappy Nature, the Circumſtances whereof in the preſent were unuſual and pernicious, and the Conſequences in the future very miſchievous, and therefore not unfit to be ſet out at large.

THE Lord Arlington and Sir William Coventry, cloſely united in the ſame Purpoſes and eſpecially againſt the Chancellor, had a great Deſire to find ſome Means to change the Courſe and Method of the King's Counſels; which They could hardly do whilſt the ſame Perſons continued ſtill in the ſame Employments. Their Malice was moſt againſt the Chancellor: Yet They knew not what Suggeſtions to make to the King againſt him, having always pretended to his Majeſty, how falſely ſoever, to have a great Eſteem of him. Their Project therefore was to remove the Treaſurer, who was as weary of his Office and of the Court as any Body could be of him: But his Reputation was ſo great, his Wiſdom ſo unqueſtionable, and his Integrity ſo confeſſed, that they knew in neither of thoſe Points He could be impeached. And the King himſelf had Kindneſs and Reverence toward him, though He had for ſome Years thought him leſs active, and ſo leſs fit for that Adminiſtration, than every Body elſe knew him to be. And theſe Men had long inſinu-ated unto his Majeſty, "how ill all the Buſineſs of "the Exchequer was managed by the continual Infir- "mities of the Treaſurer, who between the Gout and "the Stone had not Eaſe enough to attend the painful "Function of that Office, but left the Whole to be "managed and governed by his Secretary Sir Philip "Warwick;" upon whoſe Experience and Fidelity He did in Truth much rely, as He had Reaſon to do, his Reputation for Both being very ſignal and univerſal. And towards faſtening this Reproach They had the Contribution of the Lord Aſhley, who was good at looking into other Mens Offices, and was not pleaſed to ſee Sir Philip Warwick's Credit greater than his with the Treaſurer, and his Advice more followed. And the other two had craftily inſinuated to him, that He would make much a better Treaſurer; which, whilſt He thought they were in Earneſt, prevailed with him not only to ſuggeſt Materials to them for that Reproach, but to inculcate the ſame to the King upon ſeveral Occaſions: But when He diſcovered that They intended Nothing of Advantage to his Particular, He withdrew from that Intrigue, though in all other Particulars He ſided with them.

THE King was too eaſy in making Aſſignations upon his Revenue, which would make it uncapable to ſatisfy others which were more neceſſary, and to grant Suits by Leaſe or Farm (ſometimes to worthy Men), which were of miſchievous Conſequence to all the Meaſures which could be taken; and thoſe the Treaſurer found himſelf obliged to ſtop: And commonly upon informing the King of it and of his Reaſons, his Majeſty was very well pleaſed with what He had done, and (as hath been ſaid before) did often give himſelf Eaſe from the Importunity of many, by ſigning the Warrants They brought to him, in Confidence that either the Chancellor or Treaſurer would not ſuffer them to paſs. However it raiſed Clamour; and there were Men enough who had the ſame Provocation to make a great Noiſe; and They eaſily found Countenance from others, who deſired it ſhould be believed, "that "it was a high Arrogance and Preſumption in any "Subject to ſtop any Signature of the King, and ſo "make his Majeſty's Grace and Bounty to be ineff- "fectual, if his Approbation and Conſent was not "likewiſe procured." There was viſibly great Want of Money, though there were vaſt Sums raiſed; which They laboured to perſuade the King proceeded from the Unſkilfulneſs or Unactivity of the Treaſurer, who was again tired with the Vexation and Indignity, when He had ſo frequently preſented the King with the Particulars of the Receipts and Diſburſements, and made it demonſtrable how much his Expences exceeded all his Income; and how impoſſible it would be, without leſſening theſe, to provide wherewithal to ſupply neceſſary Occaſions: But this was an ungracious Subject, and opened more Mouths than could eaſily be ſtopped.

THERE was a Man who hath been often named, Sir George Downing, who by having been ſome Years in the Office of one of the Tellers of the Exchequer, and being of a reſtleſs Brain, did underſtand enough of the Nature of the Revenue and of the Courſe of the Receipt, to make others who underſtood leſs of it to think that he knew the Bottom of it, and that the Expedients, which ſhould be propoſed by him towards a Reformation, could not but be very pertinent and practicable. And He was not unhurt in the Emoluments of his own Office, which were leſſened by the Aſſignations made to the Bankers, upon the Receipts themſelves, without the Money's ever paſſing through the Tellers Office; by which, though They did receive their juſt Fees, They had not what They would have taken if the Money had paſſed through their own Hands. He was a Member of Parliament, and a very voluminous Speaker, who would be thought wiſer in Trade than any of the Merchants, and to underſtand the Myſtery of all Profeſſions much better than the Profeſſors of them. And ſuch a Kind of Chat is always acceptable in a Crowd (where few underſtand many Subjects), who are always glad to find thoſe put out of Countenance who thought They underſtood it beſt: And ſo They were much pleaſed to hear Sir George Downing inveigh againſt the Ignorance of thoſe, who could only ſmile at his Want of Knowledge.

THIS Gentleman was very grateful to Sir William Coventry as well as to Lord Arlington, and was ready to inſtruct them in all the Miſcarriages and Overſights in the Treaſury, and to propoſe Ways of Reformation to them. "The Root of all Miſcarriage was the un- "limited Power of the Lord Treaſurer, that no Mo- "ney could iſſue out without his particular Direction, "and all Money was paid upon no other Rules than "his Order; ſo that let the King want as much as "was poſſible, no Money could be paid by his with- "out the Treaſurer's Warrant;" which to Men who underſtood no more than they did, ſeemed a very great Incongruity. "But," He ſaid, "if there were ſuch "a Clauſe inſerted into the Bill which was to be "paſſed in the Houſe of Commons for Money, it "might prevent all Inconveniences, and the King's "Money would be paid only to thoſe Perſons and Pur- "poſes to which his Majeſty ſhould aſſign them; and "more Money would be preſently advanced upon this "Act of Parliament, than the Credit of the Bankers "could procure;" for He foreſaw, that would be a very natural Objection againſt his Clauſe and the Method He propoſed.

A Project of Sir George Downing to new-model the Treaſury.

HE made his Diſcourſe ſo plauſible to them that They were much pleaſed with it; and it provided for ſo many of their own Ends, that They neither did nor were able to conſider the Reverſe of it, but were moſt ſolicitous that there might no Obſtructions ariſe in the Way. If it ſhould come to the Knowledge of the Chancellor, He would oppoſe it for the Novelty, and the Conſequences that might attend it; and if the Treaſurer had Notice of it, he would not conſent to it for the Indignity that his Office was ſubjected to: They therefore diſcourſed it to the King as a Matter of high Importance to his Service if it were ſecretly carried; and then brought the Projector, who was an indefatigable Talker, to inform his Majeſty of the many Benefits which would accrue to his Service by this new Method that He had deviſed, and the many Miſchiefs which would be prevented.

THERE were many Things which were ſuggeſted, that were agreeable to ſome Fancies that the King himſelf had entertained; there would not need now ſo many Formalities, as Warrants and Privy Seals, before Monies could be paid; and Money might hereafter iſſue out and be paid without the Treaſurer's Privity; in which many Conveniences ſeemed to appear: Though beſides the Innovation and Breach of all old Order, which is ever attended by many Miſchiefs unforeſeen, there were very great Inconveniences in View in thoſe very Particulars which they fancied to be Conveniences. But it was enough that the King ſo well liked the Advice upon Conference with them three, that He reſolved to communicate it with no others; but appointed that when the Bill for Supply ſhould be brought into the Houſe (it being to be, as was ſaid before, for the Sum of .....), at the Commitment Downing ſhould offer that Proviſo, which had been drawn by himſelf, and read to the King and the other two. And becauſe it was foreſeen, that it would be oppoſed by many of thoſe who were known to be very affectionate to the King's Service, They had all Authority privately to aſſure them, that it was offered with the King's Approbation.

AGAINST the Time that the Bill was to be brought in, They prepared the Houſe by many unſeaſonable, bitter Invectives againſt the Bankers, called them Cheats, Bloodſuckers, Extortioners, and loaded them with all the Reproaches which can be caſt upon the worſt Men in the World, and would have them looked upon as the Cauſes of all the King's Neceſſities, and of the Want of Monies throughout the Kingdom: All which was a plauſible Argument, as all Invectives againſt particular particular Men are; and all Men who had Faculties of depraving, and of making ill Things appear worſe than they are, were eaſily engaged with them. The Bankers did not conſiſt of above the Number of five or ſix Men, ſome whereof were Aldermen and had been Lord Mayors of London, and all the reſt were Aldermen or had fined for Aldermen. They were a Tribe that had riſen and grown up in Cromwell's Time, and never were heard of before the late Troubles, till when the whole Trade of Money had paſſed through the Hands of the Scriveners: They were for the moſt Part Goldſmiths, Men known to be ſo rich, and of ſo good Reputation, that all the Money of the Kingdom would be truſted or depoſited in their Hands.

The Advantage ariſing from the Bankers.

FROM the Time of the King's Return, when though great and vaſt Sums were granted, yet ſuch vaſt Debts were preſently to be paid, the Armies by Land and Sea to be preſently diſcharged, that the Money that was to be collected in ſix and ſix Months would not provide for thoſe preſent unavoidable Iſſues; but there muſt be two or three hundred thouſand Pounds gotten together in a few Days, before They could begin to diſband the Armies or to pay the Seamen off; the deferring whereof every Month increaſed the Charge to an incredible Proportion: None could ſupply thoſe Occaſions but the Bankers which brought the King's Miniſters firſt acquainted with them; and They were ſo well ſatisfied with their Proceedings, that They did always declare, "that They were ſo neceſſary "to the King's Affairs, that They knew not how to "have conducted them without that Aſſiſtance."

The Method of treating with them.

THE Method of Proceeding with them was thus: As ſoon as an Act of Parliament was paſſed, the King ſent for thoſe Bankers (for there was never any Contract made with them but in his Majeſty's Preſence): And He being attended by the Miniſters of the Revenue, and commonly the Chancellor and others of the Council, the Lord Treaſurer preſented a particular Information to the King of the moſt urgent Occaſions for preſent Money, either for diſbanding Troops, or diſcharging Ships, or ſetting out Fleets (all which are to be done together and not by Parcels); ſo that it was eaſily foreſeen what ready Money muſt be provided. And this Account being made, the Bankers were called in, and told, "that the King had Occaſion to uſe ſuch "a Sum of ready Money within ſuch a Day; They "underſtood the Act of Parliament, and ſo might "determine what Money They could lend the King, "and what Manner of Security would beſt ſatisfy "them." Whereupon one ſaid, "He would within "ſuch a Time pay one hundred thouſand Pounds," another more, and another leſs, as They found themſelves provided; for there was no joint Stock amongſt them, but every one ſupplied according to his Ability. They were deſirous to have eight in the Hundred, which was not unreaſonable to aſk and the King was "willing to give: But upon better Conſideration amongſt Themſelves, They thought fit to decline that Demand as being capable of turning to their Diſadvantage, and would leave the Intereſt to the King's own Bounty, declaring "that themſelves paid ſix in the "hundred for all the Money with which They were "intruſted," which was known to be true.

THEN They demanded ſuch a Receipt and Aſſignment to be made to them by the Lord Treaſurer, for the Payment of the firſt Money that ſhould be payable upon that Act of Parliament, or a Branch of that Act, or Tallies upon the Farmers of the Cuſtoms or Exciſe, or ſuch other Branches of the Revenue as were leaſt charged; having the King's own Word and the Faith of the Treaſurer, that They ſhould be exactly complied with; for let the Security be what They could deſire, it would ſtill be in the Power of the King or of the Lord Treaſurer to divert what was aſſigned to them to other Purpoſes. Therefore there is Nothing ſurer, than that the Confidence in the King's Juſtice, and the unqueſtionable Reputation of the Lord Treaſurer's Honour and Integrity, was the true Foundation of that Credit which ſupplied all his Majeſty's Neceſſities and Occaſions; and his Majeſty always treated thoſe Men very graciouſly as his very good Servants, and all his Miniſters looked upon them as very honeſt, and valuable Men. And in this Manner for many Years after his Majeſty's Return, even to the unhappy Beginning of the Dutch War, the publick Expences were carried on, it may be, with too little Difficulty, which poſſibly increaſed ſome Expences; and Nobody opened his Mouth againſt the Bankers, who every Day increaſed in Credit and Reputation, and had the Money of all Men at their Diſpoſal.

THE Solicitor General brought in the Bill for Supply according to Courſe, in that Form as thoſe Bills for Money ought and uſed to be: And after it had been read the ſecond Time, when it was committed Downing offered his Proviſo, the End of which was, "to make all the Money that was to be raiſed by this "Bill to be applied only to thoſe Ends to which it was "given, which was the carrying on the War, and to "no other Purpoſe whatſoever, by what Authority "ſoever;" with many other Clauſes in it ſo monſtrous, that the Solicitor and many others who were moſt watchful for the King's Service declared againſt it, as introductive to a Commonwealth, and not fit for Monarchy. It was obſerved, "that the Aſſignment "of the Money that was given by Act of Parliament "to be paid in another Manner and to other Perſons "than had been formerly uſed, though there wanted "not plauſible Pretences, was the Beginning of the "late Rebellion, and furniſhed the Parliament with "Money to raiſe a Rebellion, when the King had "none to defend himſelf; which had made Cromwell "wiſe enough never to permit any of thoſe Clauſes, "or that the Impoſitions which were raiſed ſhould be "diſpoſed to any Uſes or by any Perſons but by himſelf and his own Orders." And by ſuch and other Arguments, which the Contrivers had not foreſeen, the Proviſo had been abſolutely thrown out, if Sir William Coventry and Downing had not gone to the Solicitor and others who ſpake againſt it, and aſſured them, "that it was brought in by the King's own Direction, "and for Purpoſes well underſtood by his Majeſty." Upon which They were contented that it ſhould be committed, yet with Direction "that ſuch and ſuch "Expreſſions ſhould be reformed and amended."

Downing offers a new Proviſo in the Bill for the Supply.

Which is oppoſed by the Solicitor General.

IN the Afternoon the King ſent for the Solicitor, and forbad him any more to oppoſe that Proviſo, for that it was much for his Service. And when He would inform him of many Miſchiefs which would inevitably attend it, ſome were of thoſe which He had no Mind to prevent, being to leſſen their Power who He thought had too much, and the other He cared not to hear; and ſaid only, "that He would bear the Inconveni-"ences which would enſue upon his own Account, for "the Benefits which would accrue, and which it was "not yet ſeaſonable to communicate with other Mem-"bers of the Houſe of Commons, whom He thought "not to be ſo able to diſpute it with him." **

The King commands him not to oppoſe it further.

HE enlarged more in Diſcourſe, and told them, that "this would be an Encouragement to lend Money, "by making the Payment with Intereſt ſo certain "and fixed, that there could be no Security in the "Kingdom like it, when it ſhould be out of any Man's "Power to cauſe any Money that ſhould be lent To-"morrow to be paid before that which was lent Yeſ-"terday, but that all ſhould be infallibly paid in Or-"der; by which the Exchequer (which was now "Bankrupt and without any Credit) would be quickly "in that Reputation, that all Men would depoſite their "Money there: And that He hoped in few Years, "by obſerving the Method He now propoſed, He "would make his Exchequer the beſt and the greateſt "Bank in Europe, and where all Europe would, when "it was once underſtood, pay in their Money for the "certain Profit it would yield, and the indubitable

 SOMETHING ſeems to be wanting, to make the Senſe clear. Qu. Whether what follows was ſpoken by Downing to the King, Arlington and Coventry; or, by the King to the Solicitor. In the latter Caſe told them (as it is in the M.S.) ſhould be altered to told him.

"Certainty

" Certainty that They ſhould receive their Money." And with this Diſcourſe the vain Man, who had lived many Years in Holland, and would be thought to have made himſelf Maſter of all their Policy, had amuſed the King, and his two Friends, undertaking to erect the King's Exchequer into the ſame Degree of Credit that the Bank of Amſterſtam ſtood upon, the Inſtitution whereof He undertook to know, and from thence to make it evident, " that all that ſhould be tranſplanted " into England, and all Nations would ſooner ſend " their Money into the Exchequer than into Amſter- " dam or Genoa or Venice." And it cannot be enough wondered at, that this Intoxication prevailed ſo far that no Argument would be heard againſt it, the King having upon thoſe Notions, and with the Advice of thoſe Counſellors, in his own Thoughts new-modelled the whole Government of his Treaſury, in which He reſolved to have no more ſuperiour Officers. But this was only reſerved within his own Breaſt, and not communicated to any but thoſe who deviſed the Project, without weighing that the Security for Monies ſo depoſited in Banks is the Republick itſelf, which muſt expire before that Security can fail; which can never be depended on in a Monarchy, where the Monarch's ſole Word can cancel all thoſe formal Proviſions which can be made (as hath ſince been too evident), by vacating thoſe Aſſignations which have been made upon that and the like Acts of Parliament, for ſuch Time as the preſent Neceſſities have made counſellable; which would not then be admitted to be poſſible.

It is paſſed by the Commons.

And ſo without any more Oppoſition which was not grateful to the King, that Act paſſed the Houſe of Commons, with the Correction only of ſuch Abſurdities as had not been foreſeen by thoſe who framed the Proviſo, and which did indeed croſs their own Deſigns: And ſo it was ſent from the Commons to the Houſe of Peers for their Conſent.

Bills of that Nature which concern the raiſing of Money ſeldom ſtay long with the Lords; but as of Cuſtom, which They call Privilege, they are firſt begun in the Houſe of Commons, where they endure long Deliberation, ſo when they are adjuſted there, they ſeem to paſs through the Houſe of Peers with the reading twice and formal Commitment, in which any Alterations are very rarely made, except in any Impoſitions which are laid upon their own Perſons, for which there are uſually Blanks left, the filling up whereof is all the Amendment or Alteration that is commonly made by the Lords: So that the ſame Engroſſment that is ſent up by the Commons, is uſually the Bill itſelf that is preſented to the King for his Royal Aſſent. Yet there can be no reaſonable Doubt made, but that thoſe Bills of any Kind of Subſidies, as Exciſe, Chimney-Money, or any other Way of Impoſition, are as much the Gift and Preſent from the Houſe of Peers as they are from the Houſe of Commons, and are no more valid without their Conſent than without the Conſent of the other; and they may alter any Clauſe in them that They do not think for the Good of the People. But becauſe the Houſe of Commons is the immediate Repreſentative of the People, it is preſumed that they beſt know what They can bear or are willing to ſubmit to, and what They propoſe to give is proportionable to what They can ſpare; and therefore the Lords uſe not to put any Stop in the Paſſage of ſuch Bills, much leſs diminiſh what is offered by them to the King.

And in this Parliament the Expedition that was uſed in all Buſineſs out of Fear of the Sickneſs, and out of an impatient Deſire to be ſeparated, was very notorious: And as ſoon as this Bill for Supply was ſent to the Lords, very many Members of the Houſe of Commons left the Town and departed, conceiving that there was no more left for them to do; for it was generally thought, that at the paſſing that Act with the reſt which were ready, the King would prorogue the Parliament. Yet the Novelty in this Act ſo ſurpriſed the Lords, that They thought it worthy a very ſerious Deliberation, and uſed not their cuſtomary Expedition in the paſſing it. It happened to be in an ill Conjuncture, when the terrible cold Weather kept the Lord Treaſurer from going out of his Chamber for Fear of the Gout, of which the Chancellor laboured then in that Extremity, that He was obliged to remain in his Bed; and neither of them had received Information of this Affair. Many of the Lords came to them and advertiſed them of this new Proviſo; and ſome of them went to the King to let him know the Prejudice it would bring him, and cenſured the ill Hand that had contrived it.

Some Lords remonſtrate to the King againſt this Proviſo.

The Lord Aſhley, who was Chancellor of the Exchequer, and had been privy in the firſt Cabal in which this Reformation was deſigned, whether becauſe he found himſelf left out in the moſt ſecret Part of it, or not enough conſidered in it, paſſionately inveighed againſt it both publickly and privately, and according to the Fertility of his Wit and Invention found more Objections againſt it than any Body elſe had done, and the Conſequences to be more deſtructive; with which he ſo alarmed the King, that his Majeſty was contented that the Matter ſhould be debated in his Preſence; and becauſe the Chancellor was in his Bed, thought his Chamber to be the fitteſt Place for the Conſultation: And the Lord Treaſurer, though indiſpoſed and apprehenſive of the Gout, could yet uſe his Feet, and was very willing to attend his Majeſty there, without the leaſt Imagination that He was aimed at in the leaſt.

The King conſults the private Committee upon it.

The King appointed the Hour for the Meeting, where his Majeſty with his Brother was preſent, the Chancellor in his Bed, the Lord Treaſurer, the Lord Aſhley, the Lord Arlington, and Sir William Coventry; the Attorney General and the Solicitor were likewiſe preſent to word any Alterations which ſhould be fit to be made; and Sir George Downing likewiſe attended, who the King ſtill believed would be able to anſwer all Objections which could be made. The Chancellor had never ſeen the Proviſo which contained all the Novelty (for all the other Parts of the Bill were according to the Courſe), and the Treaſurer had read it only an Hour or two before the Meeting: The Lord Aſhley therefore, who had heard it read in the Houſe of Peers and obſerved what that Houſe thought of it, opened the whole Buſineſs with the Novelty, and the ill Conſequence that muſt inevitably attend it; all which He enforced with great Clearneſs and Evidence of Reaſon, and would have enlarged with ſome Sharpneſs upon the Adviſers of it.

But the King himſelf ſtopped that by declaring, " that whatſoever had been done in the whole Tranſ- " action of it had been with his Privity and Appro- " bation, and the whole Blame muſt be laid to his " own Charge, who it ſeems was like to ſuffer moſt " by it." He confeſſed, " He was ſo fully convinced " in his own Underſtanding, that the Method pro- " poſed would prove to his infinite Advantage and to " the Benefit of the Kingdom, that He had converted " many in the Houſe who had diſliked it; and that " ſince it came into the Houſe of Peers, He had " ſpoken with many of the Lords who ſeemed moſt " unſatisfied with it: And He was confident He had " ſo well informed many of them, that They had " changed their Opinion and would be no more " againſt that Proviſo. However He confeſſed that " ſome remained ſtill obſtinate againſt it, and They " had given ſome Reaſons which He had not thought " of, and which in Truth He could not anſwer: " He wiſhed therefore that They would apply them- " ſelves to the moſt weighty Objections which were " in View, or which might probably reſult from " thence, and think of the beſt Remedies which " might be applied by Alterations and Amendments " in the Houſe of Lords, which He doubted not " but that the Commons would concur in."

Objections made againſt it there.

THE firſt Objection was "the Novelty, which in "Caſes of that Nature was very dangerous, remembering what hath been mentioned before of the "Beginning of the late Rebellion, by putting the "Money to run in another Channel than it had uſed "to do: And that when once ſuch a Clauſe was admitted in one Bill, the King would hardly get it "left out in others of the ſame Kind hereafter; and "ſo his Majeſty ſhould never be Maſter of his own "Money, nor the Miniſters of his Revenue be able "to aſſign Monies to defray any caſual Expences of "what Nature ſoever; but that upon the Matter "the Authority of the Treaſurer and Chancellor of "the Exchequer muſt be inveſted in the Tellers of "the Exchequer who were ſubordinate Officers, "and qualified to do Nothing but by the immediate "Order of thoſe their ſuperiour Officers. And though "there are four Tellers in equal Authority, yet Sir "George Downing would in a ſhort Time make his "Office the ſole Receipt, and the reſt neither receive "nor pay but by his Favour and Conſent."

THE King had in his Nature ſo little Reverence or Eſteem for Antiquity, and did in Truth ſo much contemn old Orders, Forms and Inſtitutions, that the Objections of Novelty rather advanced than obſtructed any Propoſition. He was a great Lover of new Inventions, and thought them the Effects of Wit and Spirit, and fit to controul the ſuperſtitious Obſervation of the Dictates of our Anceſtors: So that Objection made little Impreſſion. And for the Continuance of the ſame Clauſe in future Bills, He looked for it as neceſſary in Order to the Eſtabliſhment of his Bank, which would abundantly recompenſe for his Loſs of Power in Diſpoſal of his own Money. And though it was made appear by very ſolid Arguments, that the Imagination of a Bank was a mere Chimera in itſelf, and the erecting it in the Exchequer muſt ſuppoſe that the Crown muſt be always liable to a vaſt Debt upon Intereſt, which would be very ill Huſbandry; and that there was great Hope, that after a happy Peace ſhould be concluded, and Care ſhould be taken to bring the Expences into a narrower Compaſs, the King might in a ſhort Time be out of Debt: Yet all Diſcourſe againſt a Bank was thought to proceed from pure Ignorance. And Sir George was let looſe to inſtruct them how eaſy it was to be eſtabliſhed, who talked imperiouſly "of the Method by which it came to be "ſettled in Holland by the Induſtry of very few Perſons, when the greateſt Men deſpaired of it as "impracticable; yet the Obſtinacy of the other prevailed, and it was now become the Strength, "Wealth and Security of the State: That the ſame "would be brought to paſs much more eaſily here, "and would be no ſooner done, than England would "be the Seat of all the Trade of Chriſtendom." And then aſſuming all He ſaid to be Demonſtration, He wrapped himſelf up, according to his Cuſtom, in a Miſt of Words that Nobody could ſee Light in, but They who by often hearing the ſame Chat thought They underſtood it.

THE next Objection was "againſt the Injuſtice of "this Clauſe, and the ill Conſequence of that In"juſtice. The Neceſſities of the Crown being ſtill "preſſing, and the Fleet every Day calling for Sup"ply, Money had been borrowed from the Bankers "upon the Credit of this Bill, as ſoon as the firſt "Vote had paſſed in the Houſe of Commons for "ſo conſiderable a Supply; and the Treaſurer had "made Aſſignments upon ſeveral Branches of the "Revenue, which had been preſerved and deſigned "for the Army and the immediate Expences of the "King's and Queen's Houſhold, and the like un"avoidable Iſſues, upon Preſumption that enough "would come in from this new Act of Parliament "to be replaced to thoſe Purpoſes before the Time "that would require it ſhould come. But by this "Proviſo eſpecial Care was taken, that none of the "Money that ſhould be raiſed ſhould be applied to "the Payment of any Debt that was contracted be"fore the Royal Aſſent was given to the Bill: So "that both the Money lent by the Bankers, upon "the Promiſe made to them muſt be unpaid and "unſecured, and the Money that had been ſupplied "from other Aſſignations muſt not be applied to "the original Uſe; by which the Army and Houſhold would be unprovided for, the Inconvenience "whereof had no Need of an Enlargement."

"Beſides that the Bankers had the King's Word, "and the Engagement of the Miniſters of the Re"venue, that all new Bills of Supply ſhould ſtill "make good what former Securities were not ſuffi"cient to do; as by this heavy Viſitation of the "Plague, the Aſſignations which had been made "upon the Exciſe and Chimney-Money, and by the "Decay of Trade that the War and Sickneſs toge"ther had produced, the Aſſignations made upon "the Cuſtoms, had brought in ſo little Money, that "the Debt to the Bankers, which but for thoſe Ob"ſtructions might by this Time have been much "abated, remained ſtill very little leſs than it was "near a Year before. And when it ſhould be known, "that this Sum of Money that was to be raiſed was "exempt from the Payment of any of thoſe and the "like Debts, it would be a great Heartbreaking to "all thoſe, who had not only lent all their own "Eſtates, but the whole Eſtates of many thouſands "of other Men, to the King, and muſt expect to be "called upon by all who have truſted them for their "Money, which by this Invention They have no "Means to pay: And for the future, let the Neceſ"ſities be what they will that the Crown may be in"volved in, there is no Hope of borrowing any "Money, ſince it is not in the Power of the King "himſelf to make any Aſſignment upon this new "Impoſition."

VERY much of this had been ſo abſolutely unthought of by the King, that He was very much troubled at it; and He had in his own Judgment a juſt Eſteem of the Bankers, and looked upon any Prejudice that They ſhould ſuffer as hurtful to himſelf, and a great Violation of his Honour and Juſtice. But it was plain enough that the principal Deſign of the Contrivers was to prejudice the Bankers, nor did They care what Ruin befell them, and ſo talked looſely and bitterly "of their cozening the King, "and what ill Bargains had been made with them;" though it was made manifeſt, that no private Gentleman in England did upon any real or perſonal Security borrow Money, but conſidering the Brocage He pays, and the often renewing his Security, it coſts him yearly much more than the King paid to the Bankers.

THEY ſlighted what was paſt as ſufficiently provided for; and for the future confidently undertook the King ſhould never more have Need of the Bankers, "for that this Act would be no ſooner paſſed, "but upon the Credit of it Money would be poured "into the Exchequer faſter than it could be told." And when They were told, "that Expectation would "deceive them, and that great Sums would not "come in, and ſmall Sums would do Hurt, becauſe "they would but ſtop up the Security from giving "Satisfaction to others, becauſe whatever was firſt "paid in muſt be firſt paid:" All this was anſwered confidently, "that vaſt Sums were ready to their "Knowledge to be paid in as ſoon as the Bill "ſhould paſs;" which fell out as was foretold. For after ten or twenty thouſand Pounds were delivered in by themſelves and their Friends to ſave their Credit, there was no more Money like to come; and that Sum did more Harm than Good, by interrupting the Security.

BUT notwithſtanding all their Anſwers, the King remained unſatisfied in many Particulars which He had not foreſeen, and wiſhed, "that the Matter had "been better conſulted;" and confeſſed "that Dow- "ning had not anſwered many of the Objections;" and wiſhed, "that Alterations might be prepared "to be offered in the Houſe of Peers as Amend- "ments, and tranſmitted to the Commons, without "caſting out the Proviſo;" the Foundation and End of which ſtill pleaſed him for thoſe Reaſons which He would not communicate, and for which only it ought to have been rejected. But as it had been very eaſy to have had it quite left out, which was the only proper Remedy; ſo the mending it would leave much Argument for Debate, and would ſpend much Time. And it was to be apprehended, that there were ſo many of the beſt affected Members of the Houſe of Commons gone out of the Town as having no more to do, that when it ſhould be ſent down thither again, it might be longer delayed there than would be convenient for the Publick; and ſo the Parliament be kept longer from a Prorogation, than would be grateful to them or agreeable to the King.

It is paſſed by the Lords.

And therefore upon the whole Matter his Majeſty choſe that no Interruption ſhould be given to it in the Houſe of Peers, and only ſuch ſmall Amend- ments, which would be as ſoon conſented to in Both Houſes as read, ſhould be offered, rather than run the other Hazard of Delay: And ſo accordingly it was paſſed; and upon the doing thereof, the Parlia- ment was prorogued to April following.

The Parlia- ment pro- rogued.

The King much offended with the Chancellor in this Affair.

In this Debate, upon the inſolent Behaviour of Downing in the Defence of that which could not be defended, and it may be out of the Extremity of the Pain which at that Time He endured in his Bed, the Chancellor had given ſome very ſharp Repre- henſions to Downing, for his Preſumption in under- taking to ſet ſuch a Deſign on Foot that concerned the whole Fabrick of the Exchequer (in which He was an inferiour Officer), and ſuch a Branch of the King's Revenue, without firſt communicating it to his ſuperiour Officers and receiving their Advice; and told him, "that it was impoſſible for the King "to be well ſerved, whilſt Fellows of his Condition "were admitted to ſpeak as much as They had a "Mind to; and that in the beſt Times ſuch Pre- "ſumptions had been puniſhed with Impriſonment by "the Lords of the Council, without the King's taking "Notice of it:" Which, with what Sharpneſs ſoever uttered (in which He naturally exceeded in ſuch Occaſions), in a Caſe of this Nature, in which with Reference to any Diſreſpect towards himſelf He was not concerned, He thought did not exceed the Privilege and Dignity of the Place He held; and for which there were many Precedents in the paſt Times.

At the preſent there was no Notice taken, nor Reply made to what He ſaid. But They who knew themſelves equally guilty, and believed They were reflected upon, found quickly Opportunity to incenſe the King, and to perſuade him to believe, "that the "Chancellor's Behaviour was a greater Affront to "him than to Downing: That a Servant ſhould un- "dergo ſuch Reproaches in the King's own Preſence, "for no other Reaſon but having with all Humility "preſented an Information to his Majeſty, which "was natural for him to underſtand in the Office "in which He ſerved him, and afterwards followed "and obſerved the Orders and Directions which "himſelf had preſcribed; that this muſt terrify all "Men from giving the King any Light in his Af- "fairs, that He may know Nothing of his own "neareſt Concernments but what his chief Miniſters "thought fit to impart to him." All which, and whatſoever elſe was natural to Wit ſharpened with Malice to ſuggeſt upon ſuch an Argument, They enforced with Warmth that They deſired might be taken for Zeal for his Service and Dignity, which was proſtituted by thoſe Preſumptions of the Chan- cellor.

And herewith They ſo inflamed the King that He was much offended, and expreſſed to them ſuch a Diſlike that pleaſed them well, and gave them Op- portunity to add more Fewel to the Fire; and told them, "that the Chancellor ſhould find that He was "not pleaſed," as indeed He did by a greater Re- ſervedneſs in his Countenance than his Majeſty uſed to carry towards him; the Reaſon whereof his Inno- cence kept him from comprehending, till in a ſhort Time He vouchſafed plainly to put him in Mind of his Behaviour at that Time, and to expreſs a great Reſentment of it, and urged all thoſe Gloſſes which had been made to him upon it, and "what Interpre- "tation all Men muſt make of ſuch an Action, and "be terrified by it from offering any Thing of what "Importance ſoever to his Service, if it would offend "his Miniſters;" and all this in a Choler very un- natural to him, which exceedingly troubled the Chan- cellor, and made him more diſcern, though He had Evidence enough of it before, that He ſtood upon very ſlippery Ground.

The Chancel- lor ſatisfies his Majeſty.

He told his Majeſty, "that ſince He thought his "Behaviour to be ſo bad in that Particular, for "which till then his own Conſcience or Diſcretion "had not reproached him, He muſt and did believe "He had committed a great Fault, for which He "did humbly aſk his Pardon; and promiſed here- "after no more to incur his Diſpleaſure for ſuch Ex- "ceſſes, which He could never have fallen into at "that Time and upon that Occaſion, but upon the "Preſumption, that it had been impoſſible for his "Majeſty to have made that Interpretation of it "which it ſeems He had done, or that any Body "could have Credit enough with him to perſuade "him to believe, that He deſired that his Majeſty "ſhould not have a clear View, and the moſt diſ- "cerning Inſight, into the darkeſt and moſt intri- "cate Parts of all his Affairs, which They knew in "their Conſciences to be moſt untrue. And He muſt "with great Confidence appeal to his Majeſty, who "knew how much He had deſired, and taken ſome "Pains, that his Majeſty might never ſet his Hand "to any Thing, before He fully underſtood it upon "ſuch References and Reports, as, according to the "Nature of the Buſineſs, were to be for his full In- "formation."

He beſought him to remember "how often He "had told him, that it was moſt abſolutely neceſſary "that He ſhould make himſelf entirely Maſter of his "own Buſineſs, for that there would be no Acquieſcence "in any Judgment but his own; and that his Majeſty "knew with what Boldneſs He had often lamented "to himſelf, that He would not take the Pains perfect- "ly to underſtand all his own Affairs, which expoſed "his Miniſters to the Cenſures of half-witted Men, and "was the greateſt Diſcouragement to all who ſerved "him honeſtly: And He deſired his Pardon again for "ſaying that, He would hereafter find that They "who had adviſed him in this late Tranſaction, in "the handling whereof He had taken the Liberty "that had offended his Majeſty, had but a very dim "Inſight into that Buſineſs which They took upon "themſelves to direct."

But his Majeſty was not willing to enter again into that Diſcourſe, and concluded with forbidding him to believe, "that it was or could be in any "Mens Power to make him ſuſpect his Affection or "Integrity to his Service," and uſed many other very gracious Expreſſions to him, nor ever after ſeemed to remember that Action to his Prejudice. But within a ſhort Time the Biſhoprick of Saliſbury becoming void by the never enough lamented Death of Dr. Earle, his Majeſty conferred that Biſhoprick upon Dr. Hyde, the Dean of Winchester, upon the Chan- cellor's Recommendation, whoſe near Kinſman He was. Nor was his Credit with the King thought to be leſſened by any Body but himſelf, who knew more to that Purpoſe than other People could do: Yet He judged more from the Credit that He found his Enemies got every Day, than from the King's withdrawing his Truſt and Kindneſs from him; nor did the King believe that They had then that Deſign againſt him, which ſhortly after They did not diſſemble.

The King perſuaded to deſire the Treaſurer would reſign.

THE Purpoſe of making the Alteration in the Government of the Treaſury was purſued very induſtriouſly. And ſince that Proviſo with all the Circumſtances thereof had not produced the Effect They propoſed, for They had believed that the Indignity of the Affront would have wrought ſo far upon the great Heart of the Treaſurer, that He would thereupon have given up his Staff; which He was too much inclined to have done, if He had not been prevailed with by thoſe who He knew were his Friends, not to gratify thoſe who deſired him out of their Way, in doing that which They of all Things wiſhed: Therefore that Plot not ſucceeding, They perſuaded the King to try another Expedient. For They all knew, that it was too envious a Thing for his Majeſty himſelf to remove him from his Office by any Act of his, and that it would be loudly imputed to them. But if He could be himſelf perſuaded to quit that which every Body knew He was weary of, it would prevent all Inconveniences: And They had been told that the Chancellor only had diſſuaded him from doing it, which He would not preſume to do, if He were clearly told that the King deſired that He ſhould give it up.

HEREUPON the King one Day called the Chancellor to him, and told him, "that He muſt ſpeak "with him in a Buſineſs of great Confidence, and "which required great Secrecy;" and then enlarged in a great Commendation of the Treaſurer (whom in Truth He did very much eſteem), "of his great "Parts of Judgment, of his unqueſtionable Integrity, "and of his general Intereſt and Reputation, throughout the Kingdom. But with all this, He ſaid, "He was not fit for the Office He held: That He "did not underſtand the Myſtery of that Place, nor "could in his Nature go through with the neceſſary "Obligations of it. That his bodily Infirmities were "ſuch, that many Times He could not be ſpoken "with for two or three Days, ſo that there could "be no Diſpatch; of which every Body complained, "and by which his Buſineſs ſuffered very much. "That all Men knew that all the Buſineſs was done "by Sir Philip Warwick, whom, though He was a "very honeſt Man, He did not think fit to be Treaſurer; which He was to all Effects, the Treaſurer "himſelf doing Nothing but ſigning the Papers "which the other prepared for him, which was neither for the King's Honour nor his." The Truth was, that his Underſtanding was too fine for ſuch groſs Matters as that Office muſt be converſant about, and that if his Want of Health did not hinder him, his Genius did not carry him that Way; nor would the Lazineſs of his Nature permit him to take that Pains, that was abſolutely neceſſary for the well diſcharging that great Office.

HIS Majeſty concluded, "that He loved him too "well to diſoblige him, and would never do any "Thing that would not be grateful to him: But "He had ſome Reaſon, even from what He had "ſometimes ſaid to him, to think that He was weary "of it, and might be eaſily perſuaded to deliver "up his Staff, which his Majeſty would be very "glad of; and therefore He wiſhed that He, the "Chancellor, who was known to have moſt Intereſt "in him, would perſuade him to it, in which He "would do his Majeſty a ſingular Service."

The King wiſhes the Chancellor to adviſe him to it.

THE Chancellor preſently aſked him, "if He were "ſo unfit, whom He would make Treaſurer, in his "Room?" The King as preſently anſwered, "that "He would never make another Treaſurer, which "was an Office of great Charge, and would be much "more effectually executed by Commiſſioners; which "had been done in Cromwell's Time, as many Offices "had been: And that his Majeſty found by Experience, that in Offices of that Kind Commiſſioners "were better than ſingle Officers; for though Sir "William Compton was a very extraordinary Man, of "great Induſtry and Fidelity, yet that the Office of "the Ordnance was neither in ſo good Order nor ſo "thriftily managed whilſt He was Maſter of it, as it "hath been ſince his Death, ſince when it hath been "governed by Commiſſioners; and ſo He was well "aſſured his Treaſury would be."

THE Chancellor replied, "that He was very ſorry "to find his Majeſty ſo much inclined to Commiſſioners, who were indeed fitteſt to execute all "Offices according to the Model of a Commonwealth, "but not at all agreeable to Monarchy: That if He "thought the Precedent of Cromwell's Time fit to be "followed, He ſhould be in the Poſture that Cromwell was, with an Army of one hundred thouſand "Men, which made him have no Need of the Authority and Reputation of a Treaſurer, either to "ſettle his Revenue or to direct the levying it; He "could do Both beſt himſelf." But He very paſſionately beſought his Majeſty to believe, "That They "who adviſed him to this Method of Government, "though They might have good Affection to his "Perſon and his Service, were very unſkilful in the "Conſtitution of this Kingdom, and in the Nature "the People. That the Office of Treaſurer had "ſometimes upon the Death of a preſent Officer "been executed by Commiſſioners, but very ſeldom "for any Time, or longer than whilſt the King could "deliberately make Choice of a fit Miniſter. That "himſelf had been twice a Commiſſioner for the "Treaſury, once in the Time of his Father, and "again upon his Majeſty's Return: And therefore "that He could upon Experience aſſure him, that "Commiſſioners, in ſo active a Time as this, could "never diſcharge the Duty of that Office; and that "the Dignity of the Perſon of the Treaſurer was moſt "neceſſary for his Service, both towards the procuring the raiſing of Money in Parliament, and the "improving his Revenue by the Grant of Additions "there, as likewiſe for the collecting and conducting "it afterwards. For the preſent Treaſurer," He ſaid, "there was no Queſtion but if He knew that his "Majeſty was weary of his Service, and wiſhed to "have the Staff out of his Hand, He would moſt "readily deliver it: But that They who gave the "Counſel, and thought it fit for his Majeſty's Service, "were much fitter to give him that Advertiſement, "than He who in his Conſcience did believe, that "the following it would be of the moſt pernicious "Conſequence to his Service of any Thing that could "be done."

The Chancellor earneſtly petitions him againſt this Meaſure.

HE moſt humbly and with much Earneſtneſs beſought his Majeſty "ſeriouſly to reflect, what an ill "Savour it would have over the whole Kingdom, "at this Time of a War with at leaſt two powerful "Enemies abroad together, of ſo great Diſcontent "and Jealouſy at Home, and when the Court was "in no great Reputation with the People, to remove a Perſon the moſt loved and reverenced by "the People for his moſt exemplary Fidelity and "Wiſdom, who had deſerved as much from his "bleſſed Father and himſelf as a Subject can do "from his Prince, a Nobleman of the beſt Quality, "the beſt allied and the beſt beloved; to remove "at ſuch a Time ſuch a Perſon and with ſuch Circumſtances from his Councils and his Truſt: For "Nobody could imagine, that, after ſuch a Manifeſtation of his Majeſty's Diſpleaſure, He would "be again converſant in the Court or in the Council, "Both which would be much leſs eſteemed upon "ſuch an Action. That many with the ſame Diſeaſes and Infirmities had long executed that Office,

"which

" which required more the Strength of the Mind " than of the Body. All were obliged to attend him, " and He only to wait upon his Majeſty.

" THAT it was impoſſible for any Man to diſcharge " that Office without a Secretary: And if the whole " Kingdom had been to have preferred a Secretary to " him, They would have commended this Gentle- " man to him whom He truſted, who had for many " Years ſerved a former Treaſurer in the ſame Truſt, " in the moſt malignant, captious and calumniating " Time that hath been known, and yet without the " leaſt Blemiſh or Imputation; and who, ever ſince " that Time, had ſerved his Father in and to the End " of the War, and himſelf ſince in the moſt ſecret " and dangerous Affairs" (for He had been truſted by the Perſons of the greateſt Quality to hold Intelligence with his Majeſty to the Time of his Return); " ſo that all Men rather expected to have found " him preferred to ſome good Place, than in the " ſame Poſt He had been in twenty Years before; " which He would never have undertaken under any " other Officer than one with whom He had much " Confidence, and who He knew would ſerve his " Majeſty ſo well. Yet," He ſaid, " that whoever " knew them could never believe that Sir Philip " Warwick could govern the Lord Treaſurer.".

THE King ſaid, " He had a very good Opinion of " Sir Philip Warwick, and had never heard any Thing " to his Prejudice." But upon the main Point of the Debate He ſeemed rather moved and troubled than convinced, when by good Fortune the Duke of York came into the Room, who had been well prepared to like the King's Purpoſe and to believe it neceſſary; and therefore his Majeſty was glad of his Preſence, and called him to him, and told him what He had been ſpeaking of; and the Chancellor informed him of all that had paſſed between the King and him, and told him, " that He could never do a " better Service to the King his Brother, than by " uſing his Credit with him to reſtrain him from pro- " ſecuting a Purpoſe that would prove miſchievous ſo " to him." And ſo the Diſcourſe was renewed: And in the End the Duke was ſo entirely converted, that He prevailed with his Majeſty to lay aſide the Thought of it; which ſo broke all the Meaſures the other Contrivers had formed their Counſels by, that They were much out of Countenance. But finding that They could not work upon the Duke to change his Mind, and to return to the former Reſolution, They thought not fit to preſs the King farther for the preſent; and only made ſo much Uſe of their Want of Succeſs, by preſenting to his Majeſty his Irreſoluteneſs, which made the Chancellor ſtill impoſe upon him, that the King did not think the better of the Chancellor or the Treaſurer, for his receding at that Time from proſecuting what He had ſo poſitively reſolved to have done, and promiſed them " to be firmer to his next Determi- " nation."

And at length prevails.

AFTER Chriſtmas the Rage and Fury of the Peſtilence began in ſome Degree to be mitigated, but ſo little, that Nobody who had left the Town had yet the Courage to return thither: Nor had They Reaſon; for though it was a conſiderable Abatement from the Height it had been at, yet there died ſtill between three and four thouſand in the Week, and of thoſe, ſome Men of better Condition than had fallen before. The General writ from thence, " that there ſtill aroſe new " Difficulties in providing for the ſetting out the Fleet, " and ſome of ſuch a Nature, that He could not eaſily " remove them without Communication with his Ma- " jeſty, and receiving his more poſitive Directions; " and how to bring that to paſs He knew not, for as " He could by no Means adviſe his Majeſty to leave " Oxford, ſo He found many Objections againſt his " own being abſent from London." Windſor was thought upon as a Place where the King might ſafely reſide, there being then no Infection there: But the King had adjourned the Term thither, which had poſſeſſed the whole Town; and He was not without ſome Apprehenſion, that the Plague had got into one Houſe.

The King removes from Oxford to Hampton-Court.

IN the End, towards the End of February, the King reſolved that the Queen and Dutcheſs and all their Families ſhould remain in Oxford; and that his Majeſty and his Brother, with Prince Rupert, and ſuch of his Council and other Servants as were thought neceſſary or fit, would make a quick Journey to Hampton-Court, where the General might be every Day and return again to London at Night, and his Majeſty give ſuch Orders as were requiſite for the carrying on his Service, and ſo after two or three Days Stay there return again to Oxford; for no Man did believe it counſellable, that his Majeſty ſhould reſide longer there, than the Diſpatch of the moſt important Buſineſs required: And with this Reſolution his Majeſty made his Journey to Hampton-Court.

The Plague decreaſes.

IT pleaſed God, that the next Week after his Majeſty came thither, the Number of thoſe who died of the Plague in the City decreaſed one thouſand; and there was a ſtrange univerſal Joy there for the King's being ſo near. The Weather was as it could be wiſhed, deep Snow and terrible Froſt, which very probably ſtopped the ſpreading of the Infection, though it might put an End to thoſe who were already infected, as it did, for in a Week or two the Number of the Dead was very little diminiſhed. The General came and went as was intended: But the Buſineſs every Day increaſed; and his Majeſty's Remove to a farther Diſtance was thought inconvenient, ſince there appeared no Danger in remaining where He was.

The King returns to Whitehall.

AND after a Fortnight's or three Weeks Stay, He reſolved, for the quicker Diſpatch of all that was to be done, to go to Whitehall, when there died above fifteen hundred in the Week, and when there was not in a Day ſeen a Coach in the Streets, but thoſe which came in his Majeſty's Train; ſo much all Men were terrified from returning to a Place of ſo much Mortality. Yet it can hardly be imagined, what Numbers flocked thither from all Parts upon the Fame of the King's being at Whitehall, all Men being aſhamed of their Fears for their own Safety, when the King ventured his Perſon. The Judges at Windſor adjourned the laſt Return of the Term to Weſtminſter-Hall, and the Town every Day filled marvellouſly; and which was more wonderful, the Plague every Day decreaſed. Upon which the King changed his Purpoſe, and inſtead of returning to Oxford, ſent for the Queen and all the Family to come to Whitehall: So that before the End of March the Streets were as full, the Exchange as much crowded, and the People in all Places as numerous, as They had ever been ſeen, few Perſons miſſing any of their Acquaintance, though by the weekly Bills there appeared to have died above one hundred and threeſcore thouſand Perſons: And many, who could compute very well, concluded that there were in Truth double that Number who died; and that in one Week, when the Bill mentioned only ſix thouſand, there had in Truth fourteen thouſand died. The frequent Deaths of the Clerks and Sextons of Pariſhes hindered the exact Account of every Week; but that which left it without any Certainty was the vaſt Number that was buried in the Fields, of which no Account was kept. Then of the Anabaptiſts and other Sectaries, who abounded in the City, very few left their Habitations; and Multitudes of them died, whereof no Church-warden or other Officer had Notice; but They found Burials according to their own Fancies, in ſmall Gardens or the next Fields. The greateſt Number of thoſe who died conſiſted of Women and Children, and the loweſt and pooreſt Sort of the People: So that, as I ſaid before, few Men miſſed any of their Acquaintance when They returned, not many of Wealth or Quality or of much Converſation being dead; yet ſome of either Sort there were.

The Number ſuppoſed to have died of the Plague.

Preparations for ſetting out the Fleet again.

THE Buſineſs of the King and of all about him, was, that the Fleet might be ready and at Sea with all the poſſible poſſible Expedition: And in or towards this there was leſs Diſturbance and Interruption than could reaſonably have been expected, an univerſal Chearfulneſs appearing in all who could obſtruct or contribute towards it, the People generally being abundantly ſatisfied in the King's Choice of the Commanders. Prince Rupert was very much beloved, for his confeſſed Courage, by the Seamen; and the People believed that They could not but have the Victory where the General commanded, who only underwent Unquietneſs and Vexation from the tempeſtuous Humour of his Wife. She, from his Return from Oxford, and from the Time that She had the firſt Intimation that the King had deſigned her Huſband for the Command of the Fleet, was all Storm and Fury; and, according to the Wiſdom and Modeſty of her Nature, poured out a thouſand full-mouthed Curſes againſt all thoſe who had contributed to that Counſel: But the Malice of all that Tempeſt fell upon the Chancellor. She declared, "that this was a Plot of his to remove her Huſband "from the King, that He might do what He had a "Mind to;" and threw all the ill Words at him which She had been accuſtomed to hear, accompanied with her good Wiſhes of what She would have befall him. But the Company She kept, and the Converſation She was accuſtomed to, could not propagate the Reproaches far; and the poor General himſelf felt them moſt, who knew the Chancellor to be his very faſt and faithful Friend, and that He would not be leſs ſo becauſe his Wife was no wiſer than She was born to be. He was indefatigable in taking Pains Night and Day, that the Fleet might be at Sea.

THE Duke of Beaufort, Admiral of France, was already gone to Breſt, and had taken Leave of the King at Paris, whither he was not to return till after the Summer's Service at Sea, and had appointed a Rendezvous of all the Ships to be at Breſt by the Middle of March, which They reported ſhould conſiſt of fifty Ships of War.

The French Fleet prepared.

THE Rupture was declared on Both Sides with Denmark. That King had appeared much troubled at the ill Accident at Bergen, which had fallen out merely by the Accidents of Weather, which had hindered the poſitive Orders from arriving in the preciſe Time: And He ſeemed ſtill reſolved to detain the Dutch Ships there, and only to fear the Conjunction of the Swede with the Hollander, which the King's Agent, Sir Gilbert Talbot, aſſured him He need not to fear. Which the better to confirm, Mr. Clifford, who had been preſent at Bergen, and is before mentioned to be ſent after that by the King to Denmark, went from thence into Sweden (where Mr. Coventry yet remained) with a Project of ſuch a Treaty as would have been with little Alterations conſented to in Sweden, who had good Inclinations to the King, and reſolved to join with the Biſhop of Munſter, when He ſhould advance according to his Engagement. But the Daniſh Reſident in Sweden delayed to conclude, and pretended to have received leſs poſitive Orders than the Nature of the Affair required, and that He expected fuller: And ſo all Matters were deferred, till Ambaſſadours came from Holland with no Expoſtulations, and a Deſire to renew their Alliance, and releaſe ſome Engagements They had upon the Sound, which had been very grievous to the Dane; and many other Conditions were granted which were very convenient to them. An Ambaſſadour likewiſe arrived in the Nick of Time from France, to diſpoſe them to a Conjunction with Holland, and to warrant the Performance of whatſoever the Hollander ſhould promiſe, and likewiſe to undertake that France would protect them againſt England, and therefore that They ſhould not apprehend any Danger from a War from thence; and De Ruyter was now gone with the Fleet for Bergen.

Denmark joins the Dutch.

UPON all theſe Motives concurring in the ſame Conjuncture, the poor King embraced that Party; and then declared and complained, "that the Engliſh had "broken the Law of Nations in violating the Peace "of his Ports, and endeavouring to fire his Town, "when they were hoſpitably received and treated "there under the Protection of his Caſtle." He denied that He had ever made ſuch an Offer or Promiſe as Sir Gilbert Talbot ſtill charged him with, and which He had not denied to Mr. Clifford when He came firſt thither. But now He reproached Sir Gilbert Talbot "for falſi-"fying his Words, at leaſt for miſtaking them, and "ſending that to the King his Maſter which He gave "him no Liberty to do." And now Sir Gilbert found his Errour in not having drawn from him or his Servant Gabell, in Writing, ſome Evidence of the Engagement: But after many Indignities He left the Court and returned to England. All Engliſh Ships in Denmark or Norway were ſeized upon; and the Perſons of all Merchants and others who were his Majeſty's Subjects, and to ſome of whom the King of Denmark owed great Sums of Money which They had lent to him, were impriſoned, and their Goods ſeized and confiſcated.

ALL which Proceedings provoked the King to give the like Orders, and to look upon them as Enemies, and to emit a Declaration of the Motive He had to ſend his Fleet to Bergen, "which He could never have "done but upon the Invitation and Promiſe of that "King; which was evident enough by the Reception "his Ships had there, and Expectation the Governour "had of their Arrival, and his Allegation, that He "expected that very Night fuller Orders than He had "yet received; and laſtly, his ſuffering them to depart "ſecurely, after all the Acts of Hoſtility had paſſed "in the Port." Much of this was denied with many indecent Expreſſions, and ſuch Evaſions as made all that was ſaid believed by equal Conſiderers: And ſo the War was declared.

AND then in the Beginning of the Year 1666, a Year long deſtined by all Aſtrologers for the Production of diſmal Changes and Alterations, throughout the World, and by ſome for the End of it, the King found his Condition ſo much worſe than it had been the laſt Year, as the Addition of France and Denmark could make it; againſt all which, and the Prodigies which the Year was to produce (and it did truly produce many), the King prepared with his accuſtomed Vigour and Reſolution, though the Predictions had a ſtrange Operation upon vulgar Minds.

Negotiations of the French at this Time.

THE Proclamation of the War in France, and the Seizure upon the Eſtates of the Engliſh with ſome Circumſtances in the Point of Time, and other Actions very unjuſt and unuſual, the great maritime Preparations there, and the viſible Aſſiſtance of Force that was ſent thence to the Dutch, did not trouble nor hurt the King ſo much as the ſecret and inviſible Negotiations of that Crown. From the firſt Declaration of the Biſhop of Munſter of his Reſolution to make a War upon Holland with which He acquainted the King of France before He declared it, and received ſuch an Anſwer that made him very confident (as hath been remembered before upon his firſt Addreſs to the King of Great Britain) that He ſhould meet with no Obſtruction from thence; and upon that Confidence the Treaty was concluded with the King, and great Sums of Money paid to the Biſhop upon his Promiſe and Engagement, "that he would fix himſelf with his Army within the "Territories of the States General before the Winter "was ended; and that againſt the Spring, when the "King's Fleet ſhould be ready for the Sea, He would "at the ſame Time march with an Army of twenty "thouſand Foot and five thouſand Horſe into the "Heart of their Country;" and what the Effect of that would have been in that Conjuncture may be in ſome Degree gueſſed at by what hath ſince fallen out): I ſay, France from the firſt Knowledge They had of his Purpoſe, and before They declared on the Behalf of the Dutch, ſecretly ſent to the neighbouring Princes "not to join with the Biſhop, and to do all that was "in their Power to hinder his Levies;" and prevailed with the Elector of Brandenburgh, who had given

They deter the neighbouring States from aſſiſting the Biſhop of Munſter.

Hopes to the Biſhop of a powerful Aſſiſtance upon the Expectation of the Reſtoration of Weſel, and other Towns then poſſeſſed by Holland, totally to decline any Conjunction with him, upon Promiſe "that He "ſhould find his own Account better from the Friend-"ſhip of France." The Dukes of Lunenburg, who had made the Biſhop believe that They would join with him, and had made Levies of Soldiers to that Purpoſe, having abundant Argument of Quarrel with Holland, were now perſuaded by the ſame Way not only to deſiſt from helping, but to declare themſelves Enemies to the Biſhop if He would not deſiſt, and "that They would ſerve the Dutch with their Forces."

When all this could not diſcourage the Biſhop from proſecuting his Intention, but that He ſtill gathered Troops, and gave new Commiſſions to Officers who had prepared for their Levees farther in Germany; the King of France ſent an Envoy expreſsly to the Biſhop himſelf, and offered his Mediation and Interpoſition with the Dutch, "that They ſhould do him all "the Right that in Juſtice He could demand from "them, and if this were not accepted by him, that "He muſt expect what Prejudice the Arms of France "could bring upon him;" and then ſent to all thoſe Princes who had permitted Levies to be made in their Countries, "that They ſhould not ſuffer thoſe Troops "to march out of their Country," but offered "to "receive and entertain them in his own Army." With this He ſent to the other Princes of Germany and to the Emperour himſelf, "that if They did not prevent this "Incurſion of the Biſhop of Munſter" (to which They all wiſhed well), "They would involve the Em-"pire in a War."

When all this could not terrify the Biſhop, who defended himſelf by his Engagement to the King of Great Britain, "that He would not enter into Treaty "nor give over his Enterpriſe without his Conſent," and drew his Forces together to a Rendezvous, and had got Permiſſion from the Marquis of Caſtelle Roderigo, then Governour of Flanders, to make Levies in thoſe Provinces without Noiſe or avowing it, and marched with his Army into the States Dominions, and took a Place or two even in the Sight of Prince Maurice (who drew as many of the States Troops together as could be ſpared out of their Garriſons, but thought not fit to engage with them, after He had found in ſome light Skirmiſhes that They were not firm); ſo that the Biſhop, by the Advantage of the Situation of which He was poſſeſſed, began to faſten himſelf in full Aſſurance of increaſing his Army, in Spite of all Diſcouragements, before the Spring (and He had already received ſome Troops out of Flanders, and Advertiſement from other of his Officers, that They were well advanced in their Levies): The King of France in this Conjuncture, in the imperious Style He cuſtomarily uſed in thoſe Caſes, ſent to the Governour of Flanders for a Licence for ſuch Troops, as He had Occaſion to ſend into Germany, to paſs through ſuch a Part of his Government; which as He had no Mind to grant, ſo He durſt not deny, having Orders from Spain to be very careful, that no Diſguſts might be given to France which might give any Occaſion, or Pretence, or Opportunity for a Breach, which They well knew was deſired and longed for.

Upon this Permiſſion the French Troops marched into Flanders: And in the firſt Place, whether in their Way or out of their Way, They fell upon the Levies which were made for the Biſhop, and routed and diſperſed them, or took them Priſoners. In one Place, by the Strength of their Quarter and a neighbour Church, They defended Themſelves, imagining the Country would relieve them, without ſuſpecting that They had Licence and Permiſſion to march through: But They were ſo much inferiour in Number or Strength, that after ſome of them were killed, the reſt were glad to throw down their Arms and become Priſoners at Mercy, the Officers not comprehending what declared Enemy could fall upon them in thoſe Quarters. With this Triumph They marched, and joined with Prince Maurice by the Time the Biſhop had Notice of the Diſaſter, and ſpeedily advanced upon his Quarters, and beat ſome of his Troops.

Upon which the poor Biſhop (who inſtead of the Supplies and Commiſſions and other Countenance that He had Reaſon to expect from thoſe Princes, who had been privy, and with great Promiſes encouraged his Enterpriſe, received every Day Arguments from them againſt his proceeding farther, with many Conjurations that He would entirely ſubmit to the King of France his Determination) found himſelf neceſſitated to comply, and even heartbroken ſigned a Treaty with the French, who then were careful enough both of his Honour and Intereſt in the Conditions with the Dutch, as for an Ally of whom They meant to make more Uſe in another Conjuncture. Upon all which the Biſhop had been much more excuſable, if He had not received ſome of the King's Money, even after He ſaw that He ſhould be obliged to ſign the Treaty; which He ought not to have done, though it had been due, and it may be expended, before He had any ſuch Intention, and to which it cannot be denied He had moſt forcible Compulſions.

And at length force him to make a Peace with the Dutch.

This was the moſt ſenſible Blow, but the Plague, that the King had felt from the Beginning of the War, and was Inſtance enough how terrible the King of France was to all the neighbour Kings and Princes, who had ſo ſuddenly departed from their own Inclinations and Reſolutions, and from their own Intereſt, only upon his Inſinuations, which became Orders to them. And Spain, if They knew that which all the World beſides diſcerned, could not but believe that France would break all Treaties as ſoon as the other King ſhould die, the News of which was expected and provided for every Week. But the drowſy Temper of that Monarch, who had been ſo much diſquieted throughout his whole Reign, extended ſo far only as to prepare a Stock of Peace that would laſt during his own Time, that He ſaw would be very ſhort, and to leave his Dominions and his infant Son to ſhift for themſelves when He was dead: And it was an unhappy Maxim of that State, that it was the beſt Huſbandry to purchaſe preſent Peace and preſent Money at how dear Intereſt ſoever for the future, which would be aſſiſted with ſome new Expedients, as Spain had always been.

All theſe Diſadvantages made the King the more ſolicitous to have but one Enemy to ſtruggle with, though it were France: And therefore He was very ſolicitous by all Ways He could deviſe to make Peace with Holland, and to leave Denmark to their own Inventions; and He had ſome Encouragement to believe, that it was not impoſſible to ſeparate Holland from France. They were ſenſible enough, that They had been upon the Matter betrayed into the War, by the poſitive Promiſe of Aſſiſtance, and a firm Conjunction from France in the Inſtant that the War ſhould be entered upon, without any Mention of Mediation or Interpoſition for Peace, which was againſt their Deſire; and that they had looked on very unconcernedly, or rather well pleaſed to ſee them beaten, and their own People ready to riſe againſt the Government. Then They knew that France did already provide for an Expedition againſt Flanders, which could not long defend itſelf with its own Forces; and that They depended upon this War between England and the Dutch, as what muſt hinder Both thoſe Nations from giving it Aſſiſtance: And They as well knew what their own Portion muſt be, when that Screen was removed, that was their beſt Security againſt ſo mighty a Neighbour. And this De Wit himſelf, who was the chief Supporter of the War, frequently obſerved and confeſſed to thoſe with whom He had moſt Converſation, and in whom He was believed to have moſt Truſt: And all thoſe Advertiſements were tranſmitted to the King by thoſe whoſe Integrity could not be ſuſpected, and who did not diſſemble being of the States themſelves, to be very deſirous of Peace and very jealous of France.

The King deſirous of uniting with Holland againſt France.

The Dutch jealous of France.

There

Character of M Bewett, a Gentleman of great Weight in Holland.

THERE was a Gentleman, one Monſieur Bewett, of a good Family in France and born there, but long bred in Holland whilſt the Wars were there, and who had been Captain in the laſt Prince of Orange's Horſe-Guards, and in very particular Favour with him, by which He was married to a Woman of Holland very rich, and very nearly allied to many of thoſe who had the greateſt Influence upon the Government; and who was now looked upon rather as a Dutchman than a Frenchman, and converſed moſt familiarly amongſt the Burgomaſters, and other principal Perſons of the States. And by this Intereſt, after the Death of the Prince of Orange, that Troop was ſtill preſerved for a Guard to the States, and was the only Horſe-Troop that remained conſtantly in the Hague. And for the better pleaſing the People, it was ſtill called the Prince of Orange's Guard, and continued to wear the ſame Livery it had always done: And the young Prince took much Delight to ſee them, and to hear himſelf called by them their Captain; and the Commander thereof, Bewett, profeſſed and paid the ſame Devotion to him that He had done to his Father.

THIS Gentleman was generally beloved, and held a Man of great Sincerity, brave in Point of Courage, and of good Parts of Wit and Judgment, ſave that He was immoderately given to Wine and to the Exceſs of it, which being the Diſeaſe or rather the Health of the Country, made him not the worſe thought of or leſs fit for Buſineſs. He was well known to the King, and well thought of by him, and had great Familiarity with ſome of the Bed-chamber, and others near the King and truſted by him. He had made a Journey once, ſince the King's Return into England, only to kiſs his Hand, and profeſs the ſame Affection and Duty He had often done when his Majeſty was abroad, which had always made him acceptable to him.

HE was a bold Speaker, and from the Time that the War was begun againſt England much inveighed againſt the Counſel that perſuaded it, as very pernicious to the Affairs of that Country; and in this Argument uſed not more Freedom with any than with De Wit himſelf, who loved his Perſon and his Spirit, and converſed very freely with him, though He knew his Friendſhips were chiefly with the Dependants upon the Houſe of Orange, and with others of the States who were of his own Opinion with Reference to the War: And the publiſhing his Opinion drew many of the greateſt Intereſt amongſt the Burgomaſters to delight in his Converſation, and to truſt him much. With thoſe He conſulted freely what Means ſhould be uſed to procure a Peace, and prevent the Miſchief that muſt attend the Continuance of the War, with good Senſe and Judgment: But thoſe Conſultations were always in the Exerciſe of Drinking, which never ended without the utmoſt Exceſs, though without Noiſe or Diſquiet or Unkindneſs, which are never the Effects of thoſe Exceſſes amongſt that People.

AFTER the firſt Battle, when the Dutch were ſo much beaten, and the People in that Conſternation that They called aloud for Peace, and reviled all thoſe who were thought to be againſt it, and amongſt thoſe De Wit principally, who had the more Enemies, and Peace the more Friends, for the Differences which had ariſen amongſt the Officers of the Fleet upon the Death of Opdam, and upon the Diſgrace which Trump had undergone by the Power and Injuſtice, as They ſaid, of De Wit upon perſonal Diſlikes, and becauſe He was known to have great Affection for the Prince of Orange (and Van Trump himſelf, as hath been ſaid, was not only of much Intereſt amongſt the Seamen, but very popular in the Government, and had his Siſters married to Burgomaſters in ſome of the greateſt Towns; ſo that the Diſgrace of him increaſed the Number of De Wit's Enemies): In this Conjuncture Bewett cultivated the beſt He could all thoſe ill Humours, how mutinous ſoever, which grew moſt importunate for Peace; yet without any Reflection upon the Perſon of De Wit, with whom He was known by the Company He moſt kept to have much Familiarity, and whom He did at that Time really believe to be inclined to Peace, and declared He did think ſo to thoſe who knew the contrary, yet did not think the worſe of him for being deceived, being aſſured He would never deceive them for Want of Integrity.

His Endeavours to bring about a Peace.

BUT He took Advantage of this general Diſtemper and of the Prejudice the People had againſt him, to talk very frankly to De Wit of Both; and admired, "ſince He did, as He profeſſed, deſire Peace, that "He would not find ſome Way to undeceive the Peo- "ple, which was neceſſary for his own Security; and "it might eaſily be effected, by giving a Beginning "to ſuch a Conſultation as might look towards an Ac- "commodation." De Wit had his Spies in all Places, and knew well what Company Bewett moſt delighted in, though his Acquaintance was univerſal and agreeable to all Men: And He was informed too of his particular Behaviour with Reference to him, and that He did conſtantly and confidently vindicate him from many Imputations, in the Preſence of thoſe who were not pleaſed with his Contradictions; ſo that He looked upon him as his Friend, and one that might by his Intereſt and Credit divert ſome of that popular Envy and Malice, of which He had no Contempt, but much Apprehenſion.

De Wit pretends to deſire a Peace.

HE renewed his former Profeſſions of his Deſire of Peace, and gave ſo good Reaſons for it as might naturally gain Belief; amongſt which one was always a vehement Jealouſy of France, "which," He ſaid, "though it had at laſt declared War againſt En- "gland, which They ought to have done ſo long be- "fore, had done it only to draw England into ſome "Conditions which might facilitate their own Enter- "priſe upon Flanders, which it concerned them to pre- "vent by all the Ways poſſible; of which none would "be ſo probable as a Peace between England and them, "which would immediately make each ſolicitous for "their own Intereſt. But how to ſet any Thing on "Foot that might contribute to this He knew not; "and the doing that which the other had propoſed, "by declaring himſelf, was the Way only to ſlacken "all the Proviſions for War, the expediting of which "would moſt advance a Peace."

BEWETT replied "that He knew He had many "Friends in the Engliſh Court, whereof ſome were of "near Truſt about his Majeſty, for whoſe Secrecy He "would be accountable;" and named the Lord Arlington, who had lately married a Lady of the Hague, the Daughter of Monſieur Beverwaert, a Perſon in his Quality and Fortune in the firſt Rank. He offered to him, "that He would himſelf write ſuch a Letter to "the Lord Arlington in his own Name, which He "ſhould firſt ſee and approve, without which He "would not ſend it, as ſhould only teſtify his own good "Wiſhes for a Peace between the two Nations, which "were not unknown to the King himſelf; and would "make no other Mention of Him, than that He had "Reaſon to believe, that Monſieur De Wit (in whoſe "good Opinion He had the Honour to be known to "have ſome Place) would not be unwilling to promote "any good Overture that ſhould be made." After ſome Debate He was content that He ſhould write, provided that He would promiſe to write Nothing but what he ſhould firſt ſee, and would ſtill bring the Anſwers to him which He ſhould receive; to which the other conſented.

Bewett enters into a Correſpondence with the Engliſh Court with De Wit's Conſent.

UPON this Encouragement He begun his Correſpondence with the Lord Arlington, and acquainted his Boſom-Friends with it, to diſpoſe them the more to hope for Peace, and to look upon De Wit as not averſe to it. But what He writ was with ſo much Warineſs, being dictated upon the Matter by the Penſioner, that it could draw no other Anſwers from the Secretary but of the ſame Style, with Expreſſions of his Majeſty's Deſire of Peace and Eſteem of De Wit, and as if He expected ſome Overtures to ariſe from thence. This Intelligence had not been long on Foot, but He begun to ſuſpect the Sincerity of De Wit, and that indeed He was was not ſo well inclined to Peace as He had pretended to be: His Countenance was not ſo open, nor He ſo vacant when He came as He uſed to be; He grew leſs jealous of the French, and more compoſed himſelf, and leſs apprehenſive of the People, as He found them more compoſed, and a greater Concurrence in the making all Things ready for the Fleet. All which Obſervations He likewiſe imparted to his Companions who were glad to find him begin to be undeceived; and from that Time He was apter to concur with them in the fiercer Counſels, how to compaſs a Peace in Spite of him by a Majority of Votes in the States, with the Help of the People for the Suppreſſion of any accidental Inſurrection whereof, there were no other Forces in View than thoſe Horſe-Guards that were commanded by him.

And reſolves to get a Peace in Oppoſition to him.

Hereupon He took a new Reſolution, but would not loſe the Advantage He had by the Knowledge De Wit had of his Correſpondence, and therefore ſhewed him a Letter that He had received from the Lord Arlington, in which He preſſed him "to inform him, "what Particulars would diſpoſe the States to Peace "and to ſeparate from the French," and had ſent him a Cipher for the more free and ſafe Communication; which Cipher He depoſited in the Hands of De Wit, having received his Directions and obſerved them by uſing the ſame Cipher, which the other examined and kept, and hoped by the Anſwer to put an End to that Correſpondence, of which He grew weary, and leſs confident of the Perſon, becauſe He heard that He was grown leſs zealous in his Defence than He had been.

He ſettles a ſecret Correſpondence with the Engliſh Court.

Bewett upon this grew more reſolute one Way and leſs apprehenſive the other Way, and ſent a Perſon with whom He had great Friendſhip, and who was well known to the King and moſt about him, Monſieur Silvius, a Servant to the late Princeſs Royal, and a Native of Orange, with a full Account "of the "State of the Counſels at the Hague, and his Diſco-"very that De Wit did not in Truth deſire a Peace, "nor would conſent to it but upon very unreaſonable "Terms," whereof ſome were mentioned in his Letter in Cipher which He had dictated; "but that He was "moſt aſſured, that He ſhould be compelled at the "next Aſſembly of the States to ſubmit to more rea-"ſonable Conditions." He gave the King an Account of the Ground of his Confidence, and an Information of the Perſons who were combined together to preſs it in the States, among which there were ſome of the greateſt Power: And by their Advice He offered the Subſtance of a Meſſage They wiſhed the King ſhould ſend to the States General at the Time of their convening, in which there was Nothing contained againſt which any Thing could be objected on his Majeſty's Behalf; and "upon the Delivery thereof there would "ſo few adhere to De Wit, that He ſhould not be able "to prevent a Treaty though France ſhould proteſt "againſt it." He ſent likewiſe at the ſame Time, and by the ſame Perſon, another Cipher to the Lord Arlington, with Direction, "that in ſuch Letters as were "intended for the View of the Penſioner the former "Cipher ſhould be uſed, and in the other Letters, "which were to be concealed from him, and which "were for the moſt Part to contain Intelligence "and Advice againſt him, the latter Cipher was only "to be made Uſe of."

Thoſe Informations by Silvius, who was a Man of Parts, and had Dependance upon the Duke of York, and meant not to return into Holland except upon a preſſing Occaſion, when He durſt adventure to go, being looked upon as an Inhabitant of the Hague, having been always bred there, and his Relation to the Duke ſcarce yet taken Notice of; I ſay, thoſe Informations the King thought to be worthy to be well conſidered, and conferred with the Chancellor upon the Whole, and appointed the Lord Arlington to inform him of all that had paſſed from the Beginning; and that Silvius, who was concealed, that They might have no Advertiſement in Holland of his having been in England, ſhould likewiſe attend him in ſome Evening; which He ſhortly after did, and made him an ample and clear Relation of the State of the Counſels at the Hague, and the ſeveral Factions amongſt them, and the Diſtemper of the People. He had himſelf ſpoken with many of the Burgomaſters and others in Authority, who were privy to his Coming, and communicated the Method They meant to proceed in towards the depreſſing De Wit, by mingling the Propoſition for Peace with the Intereſt of the Prince of Orange, which the People thought to be inſeparable.

In Fine, He gave a perfect good Account of all to which He was inſtructed, with great Modeſty: And when the Chancellor, to whom Bewett and He were Both well known, would have induced him to deliver Somewhat of his own Judgment, whether He thought that Combination to be ſtrong enough to over-rule De Wit; He could draw no other Anſwer from him than the magnifying the Credit and Intereſt of Bewett, which He ſeemed principally to rely upon, and the Impoſſibility that He ſhould fail in Point of Integrity or Courage.

Silvius had ſettled a ſure Way of Correſpondence, and by every Poſt received freſh Intelligence of the Preparations and Progreſs Bewett and his Friends made in their Deſigns, of the Succeſs whereof They were every Day more confident, and thought their Party ſo much to increaſe, that as They did not apprehend any Diſcovery like to be made by Treachery, ſo They did not ſeem to fear it, if De Wit himſelf ſhould know all that They intended: And They preſſed very earneſtly, "that the King's Letter, in "the Manner They had propoſed, might be at the "Hague when the General States were to meet," the Time whereof approached.

The King called thoſe to him to whom the whole Negotiation had been imparted, to adviſe what was to be done. On the King's Part Nothing was conſiderable, but whether He ſhould write to the States at all, and what He ſhould write: And againſt writing there ſeemed to be no Objection, and as little againſt writing what They adviſed, which was no more than He had formerly writ, and always ſaid to their Ambaſſadours. And that this might be a more favourable Conjuncture for the good Reception of it, and hearkening to it, his Majeſty was reaſonably to believe thoſe who meant to ſecond and promote it with their own Reaſons: And therefore the Time and the Manner of the Delivery of it was left to be reſolved amongſt themſelves, the King having no Miniſter there to preſent it.

The Way that They had thought of was, that Bewett ſhould at the proper Time deliver it to De Wit, who durſt not conceal it, and if He ſhould, there would be Ways enough to publiſh it to his Reproach; nor could He take any Advantage of Bewett for his Correſpondence with their Enemies, becauſe it had been entered into with his Approbation. But for the better Security in the ſending it, and the better Information of the Perſons engaged of all the Reflections which had been made by the King, and thoſe with whom He had conferred by his Majeſty's Order, it was thought beſt that Silvius ſhould return; and if Bewett thought fit to decline the Delivery of the King's Letter, and no better Way could be found for the Delivery of it, He might preſent it in the Manner his Friends there ſhould direct, and avow his having been at London to ſolicit his own Pretences ſince the Death of the Princeſs Royal his Miſtreſs, and that He had received the Letter from the King's own Hand. This being the concurrent Opinion of all, and the Gentleman himſelf willing to undertake it; Silvius was diſpatched.

In the Debate of the Matter, the King aſked the Chancellor "what He thought of the Deſign, and "whether

" whether He thought it would ſucceed;" who ſaid, " He doubted it much, and that it would conclude " in the Loſs of poor Bewett's Head, who had not " a Talent for the Managery of an Affair of that " Weight, which would require great Secrecy and " great Sobriety, and the Conſideration of more Par- " ticulars at once than his Comprehenſion could con- " tain together." Then He did not like the Method They propoſed, of joining the Demand of Peace with the Intereſt of the Prince of Orange, which, though it might probably follow the Peace and be an Effect of it, would not be ſeaſonable to be joined with it in Regard of his Infancy; and that many did heartily deſire the Peace, who had no Mind that the Prince ſhould be reſtored to the Offices of his Father and Family, or that there ſhould be any Debate of it, till the Prince came to the Age that was provided by the ſolemn Act and Declaration of the States: Which had been the Reaſon that his Majeſty (who had all the Tenderneſs for his Nephew that a Parent could have) would never be perſuaded to mention him (though it had been propoſed by many, and even by the Elector of Brandenburgh and the Princeſs Dowager) in the Conditions of the Peace; the King foreſeeing that De Wit would have been glad to have that Advantage, as to obſerve to the People, that the King would preſcribe to them what Officers They ſhould chooſe and admit into their Government, and that They muſt have no Peace, except They would take a General and a Stadtholder and an Admiral of his Nomination, which was to make them ſubject to himſelf.

AND this was the Reaſon, that in all Conferences with the French Ambaſſadours, who ſometimes would mention the Prince of Orange with Compaſſion for the Ingratitude of the States towards him, and add, " that They doubted not their Maſter would be ready " to join with his Majeſty in doing him all Offices;" and ſometimes when the Dutch Ambaſſadour (who was of that Party that did really wiſh the Reſtoration of the Prince) in Conference would ſeem to wiſh and to believe, that the reſtoring the Prince of Orange would be the Conſequence of the Peace: The King never gave other Anſwer, than " that He ſhould be " very glad that the States would gratify his Nephew; " but that it was a Matter He had Nothing to do to " interpoſe in, it depending wholly upon their own " Good-Will and Pleaſure."

THE reſt who were preſent had much more Eſteem of Bewett than the Chancellor had (who thought as well of his Courage and Integrity as They did), and believed He would have Succeſs in what He deſigned, his Intereſt in the Right of his Wife being confeſſedly very great amongſt the States, and his jolly Courſe of Living having rendered him very acceptable and grateful to Men of the moſt different Affections; and then of all the Officers of the Militia He was moſt eſteemed, which was like to be of Moment if the Diſpute brought the Matter to a Struggle: But the Event ſhewed the Contrary.

AFTER Silvius's Departure, Letters paſſed between them, as they had uſed to do, for two or three Poſts. And Bewett one Day meeting De Wit when He came from his good Fellows, and They walking a Turn together in common Diſcourſe, De Wit aſked him, " when He had any Letter from England, and " how Affairs went there:" To which He ſuddenly anſwered, " that He came juſt then from receiving " one, which He had not yet deciphered," and put his Hand into his Pocket, and took thence a Letter; and caſting his Eyes (which were never good, and now worſe by the Company He had left) upon the Superſcription, He gave it to him, and ſaid, " He " would go with him that They might decipher it to- " gether according to Cuſtom."

Bewett's ſecret Correſpondence accidentally diſcovered by De Wit.

DE WIT preſently found that it was not the accuſtomed Cipher (for He had delivered the wrong Letter, that which He ought not to ſee), and deſired him " that He would walk before, and He " would preſently overtake him, after He had ſpoken " a few Words at a Houſe in his Way." And ſo leaving him, He took preſent Order for the apprehending him and ſearching his Pockets; and at the ſame Time ſent to his Houſe, and cauſed his Cabinet, where all his Papers were, to be examined and ſealed up. And ſo poor Bewett, whilſt He ſtayed at the other's Houſe that They might decipher the Letter, was apprehended, and all his Papers taken out of his Pockets, and He ſent to Priſon. The other Cipher was quickly found, and many Letters and other Papers, which diſcovered many Secrets. Whereupon a Court of Juſtice was ſpeedily erected: And within three Days, according to the Expedition uſed there in ſuch Caſes, a Scaffold was erected, and the poor Gentleman brought thither in the Sight of all his Friends; and there, with his known Courage, and in few Words declaring " that He had honeſt Purpo- " ſes to the Country," loſt his Head. Upon which He is executed.

SILVIUS quickly heard of his Impriſonment, and as ſoon thought it neceſſary to make his own Eſcape, and arrived in England before he heard of his laſt Misfortune, which He did not ſuſpect, nor knew how the Diſcovery had been made. The Knot, thus broken, diſperſed themſelves: Moſt of them got into Flanders; the Burgomaſter of Rotterdam, and two or three others of Note, made all the Haſte They could into England; ſome thought themſelves ſecure in Antwerp and other Parts of Flanders; and ſome were ſeized upon in ſeveral Places of the States Dominions, and impriſoned with all the Circumſtances of Severity, though upon the Want of clear Proofs few of them were put to Death. The Troop of Guards was reformed, or rather transformed, under new Officers, and aſſigned for a conſtant Guard to the States, without the leaſt formal Relation to the Prince of Orange, or uſing his Name or Livery, or Permiſſion to pay any Reverence to him. And ſo the Prince was much lower than before, and all Hopes of reviving almoſt extinguiſhed or expired; De Wit ſtood firmer upon his own Feet than ever, and directed all Preparations for the War without Control; and all the preſent Expectation in England vaniſhed: Whilſt the Penſionary informed France of the Dangers He had eſcaped for them, and what great Matters had been offered to him if He would have departed from their Intereſt; and made the Plot to contain all that He fancied it might have done. His Friends obliged to fly.

WHEN the Parliament at Oxford was prorogued, it was to a Day in April: But the King had Reaſon to believe that They would not ſo ſoon be in good Humour enough to give more Money, which was the principal End of calling them together. And the Dregs of the Plague ſtill remaining, and venting its Malignity in many Burials every Week, his Majeſty thought fit to diſpenſe with their Attendance at that Time by a Proclamation: And He cauſed it at the Day to be prorogued to the twentieth of September following. In the mean Time the Court abounded in all its Exceſſes. There had been ſome Hope during the Abode at Oxford, that the Queen had been with Child; and whilſt that Hope laſted, the King lived with more Conſtraint and Caution, and prepared to make himſelf worthy of that Bleſſing: And there are many Reaſons to believe, beſides his own natural good Inclinations, that if God had vouchſafed to have given him a Child, and the Queen that Bleſſing to have merited from him, He would have reſtrained all thoſe inordinate Appetites and Delights; and that He would ſeriouſly have applied himſelf to his Government, and cut off all thoſe extravagant Expences of Money and Time, which diſturbed and corrupted the Evenneſs of his own Nature and the Sincerity of his Intentions, and expoſed him to the Temptations of thoſe who had all the Traps and Snares to catch and detain him.

The Queen miscarries.

THE Imagination of the Queen's Breeding was one Cauſe of her Stay there; and her Stay there was the longer, becauſe ſhe miſcarried when She intended to begin her Journey. And though the Doctors declared that it was a real Miſcarriage, ripe enough to make a Judgment of the Sex; yet ſome of the Women who had more Credit with the King aſſured him, "that it was only a falſe Conception, and that "She had not been at all with Child:" Inſomuch that his Majeſty, who had been ſo confident upon a former Occaſion, as to declare to the Queen his Mother and to others, "that upon his own Knowledge "her Majeſty had miſcarried of a Son," ſuffered himſelf now to be ſo totally convinced by thoſe Ladies and other Women, that He did as poſitively believe that She never had, never could be, with Child. And from that Time He took little Pleaſure in her Converſation, and more indulged to himſelf all Liberties in the Converſation of thoſe, who uſed all their Skill to ſupply him with Divertiſements, which might drive all that was ſerious out of his Thoughts, and make him undervalue thoſe whom He had uſed, and ſtill did moſt truſt and employ, in what He thought moſt important; though He ſometimes thought many Things not of Importance, which in the Conſequence were of the higheſt.

Great Licenſe in the Court.

THE Lady, who had never declined in Favour, was now greater in Power than ever: She was with Child again, and well enough contented that his Majeſty ſhould entertain an Amour with another Lady, and made a very ſtrict Friendſhip with her, it may be the more diligently out of Confidence that He would never prevail with her, which many others believed too. But without Doubt the King's Paſſion was ſtronger towards that other Lady, than ever it was to any other Woman: And She carried it with that Diſcretion and Modeſty, that She made no other Uſe of it than for the Convenience of her own Fortune and Subſiſtence, which was narrow enough; never ſeemed diſpoſed to interpoſe in the leaſt Degree in Buſineſs, nor to ſpeak ill of any Body; which Kind of Nature and Temper the more inflamed the King's Affection, who did not in his Nature love a buſy Woman, and had an Averſion from ſpeaking with any Woman, or hearing them ſpeak, of any Buſineſs but to that Purpoſe He thought them all made for; however, They broke in afterwards upon him to all other Purpoſes.

THE Lady herſelf, who every Day (as was ſaid before) grew in Power and Credit, did not yet preſume to interpoſe in any other Buſineſs, than in giving all the imaginable Countenance She could to thoſe who deſired to depend upon her, and, in their Right as well as her own, in depreſſing the Credit of thoſe who She knew wiſhed her's much leſs than it was; but in this laſt Argument She was hitherto wary, and took only ſuch Opportunities as were offered, without going out of her Way to find them. Her principal Buſineſs was to get an Eſtate for herſelf and her Children, which She thought the King at leaſt as much concerned to provide as She to ſolicit; which however She would not be wanting in, and ſo procured round Sums of Money out of the Privy Purſe (where She had placed Mr. May), and other Aſſignations in other Names, and ſo the leſs taken Notice of; though in great Proportions: All which yet amounted to little more than to pay her Debts, which She had in few Years contracted to an unimaginable Greatneſs, and to defray her conſtant Expences, which were very exceſſive in Coaches and Horſes, Cloaths and Jewels, without any Thing of Generoſity, or gratifying any of her Family, or ſo much as paying any of her Father's Debts, whereof ſome were very clamorous. Her Name was not uſed in any Suits for the Grant of Lands; for beſides that there was no avowing or publick Mention of natural Children, She did think the Chancellor and Treaſurer willing to obſtruct ſuch Grants, and deſired not to have any Occaſion to try the Kindneſs of either of them: And ſo all the Suits She made of that Kind were with Reference to Ireland, where They had no Title to obſtruct, nor natural Opportunity to know, what was granted; and in that Kingdom She procured the Grant of ſeveral great Quantities of Land, like to prove of great Benefit and Value to her or her Children.

An Attempt to raiſe Jealouſies in the King of his Brother.

THE chief Deſign They now began to deſign, and the worſt They could ever deſign, was to raiſe a Jealouſy in the King of his Brother, to which his Majeſty was not in any Degree inclined, and had in Truth a juſt Affection for him and Confidence in him, without thinking better of his natural Parts than He thought there was Cauſe for; and yet, which made it the more wondered at, He did very often depart in Matters of the higheſt Moment from his own Judgment to comply with his Brother, who was inſtructed, by thoſe who too well knew the King's Nature, to adhere to any Thing He once adviſed, and to be importunate in any Thing He propoſed; in which He prevailed the more eaſily, becauſe He never uſed it in any Thing that concerned himſelf or his own Benefit.

The Temper and Diſpoſition of the Stuart Family.

THE Truth is: It was the unhappy Fate and Conſtitution of that Family, that They truſted naturally the Judgments of thoſe, who were as much inferiour to them in Underſtanding as They were in Quality, before their own which was very good; and ſuffered even their Natures, which diſpoſed them to Virtue and Juſtice, to be prevailed upon and altered and corrupted by thoſe, who knew how to make Uſe of ſome one Infirmity that They diſcovered in them; and by complying with that, and cheriſhing and ſerving it, They by Degrees wrought upon the Maſs, and ſacrificed all the other good Inclinations to that ſingle Vice. They were too much inclined to like Men at firſt Sight, and did not love the Converſation of Men of many more Years than themſelves, and thought Age not only troubleſome but impertinent. They did not love to deny, and leſs to Strangers than to their Friends; not out of Bounty or Generoſity, which was a Flower that did never grow naturally in the Heart of either of the Families, that of Stuart or the other of Bourbon, but out of an Unſkilfulneſs and Defect in the Countenance: And when They prevailed with themſelves to make ſome Pauſe rather than to deny, Importunity removed all Reſolution, which They knew neither how to ſhut out nor to defend themſelves againſt, even when it was evident enough that They had much rather not conſent; which often made that which would have looked like Bounty loſe all its Grace and Luſtre.

Particularly of the King and Duke.

IF the Duke ſeemed to be more firm and fixed in his Reſolutions, it was rather from an Obſtinacy in his Will, which He defended by Averſion from the Debate, than from the Conſtancy of his Judgment, which was more ſubject to Perſons than to Arguments, and ſo as changeable at leaſt as the King's, which was in greateſt Danger by Surpriſe: And from this Want of Steadineſs, and Irreſolution (whenceſoever the Infirmity proceeded) moſt of the Misfortunes, which attended either of them or their Servants who ſerved them honeſtly, had their Riſe and Growth; of which there will be ſhortly an Occaſion, and too frequently, to ſay much more. In the mean Time it cannot be denied, and was obſerved and confeſſed by all, that never any Prince had a more humble and dutiful Condeſcenſion and Submiſſion to an elder Brother, than the Duke had towards the King: His whole Demeanour and Behaviour was ſo full of Reverence, that it might have given Example to be imitated by thoſe, who ought but did not obſerve a greater Diſtance. And the Conſcience and Reſentment He had within himſelf, for the Sally He had made in Flanders, made him after ſo wary in his Actions, and ſo abhorring to hear any Thing that might leſſen his Awe for the King, that no Man who had moſt Credit with him durſt approach towards any Thing of that Kind; ſo that there was never leſs Ground of Jealouſy than of him. And (as was ſaid before) the King (who was in his Nature ſo far from any Kind of Jealouſy, that He was too much inclined to make Interpretations of many Words and Actions, which might reaſonably harbour other Apprehenſions) was as incapable of any Infuſions which might leſſen his Confidence in his Brother, as any noble and virtuous Mind could be. And therefore thoſe ill Men, who began about this Time to ſow that curſed Seed that grew up to bear a large Crop of the worſt and rankeſt Jealouſy in the ſucceeding Time, did not preſume to make any Reflection upon the Duke himſelf, but upon his Wife, "upon the State She aſſumed, and the Height of the "whole Family, that lived in much more Plenty," They ſaid, "than the King's, and were more regarded abroad."

Endeavours uſed to leſſen the King's Eſteem of the Dutcheſs.

SUCH Kind of People are never without ſome particular Stories of the Perſons whom They deſire to deprave: And ſo They had many Inſtances, which They uſed upon all Occaſions, of ſome Levity or Vanity, of ſome Words affected by the Dutcheſs, or ſome outward Carriage, true or falſe, which for the moſt Part concluded in Mirth and Laughter, and ſeemed ridiculous; which was the Method They uſed in all their Approaches of that Kind towards the higheſt Acts of Malice, firſt to make the Perſon, whom They hoped to ruin in the End, leſs eſteemed, by the acting and Preſentation of his Words and Geſtures and Motions; which commonly is attended with Laughter. And this is the firſt Breach They make upon any Man's Reputation; and the frequent Cuſtom of this Kind of Laughter and Mirth, which is eaſily produced without any Malice, doth in the End open a Space large enough to let in Calumny and Scandal enough to weaken, if not to deſtroy, the beſt built Reputation.

THIS was the Courſe They held with Reference to the Dutcheſs, whom the King had from the Beginning treated with great Grace and Favour, and conſidered her as a Woman of more than an ordinary Wit and Underſtanding: And the Queen Mother had from the Reconciliation uſed her with that abundant Affection and Familiarity that was very wonderful; and the Heights She aſſumed, and all that Greatneſs which many thought too much, were not only inculcated, but enjoined by the Queen as a Duty due to her Huſband, of whoſe high Degree She thought She could not be too tender and careful. And She had the Happineſs ſo well to behave herſelf towards the Duke, that He was exceedingly pleaſed with her, and lived towards her with an Affection ſo remarkable and notorious, that it grew to be the publick Diſcourſe and Commendation; and which made the Liberties that were taken elſewhere the more ſpoken of and cenſured. It was very viſible that He liked her Company and Converſation very well, and was believed to communicate all his Counſels, and all He knew or thought, without Reſerve to her; which, being ſo contrary to the profeſſed Doctrine of the Court, adminiſtered Occaſion to the Men of Mirth, in thoſe Seaſons which took up a good Part of every Night, to be very pleaſant upon the Government of the Dutcheſs, and the Submiſſion of the Duke; in which there were always ſome witty Reflections upon the Chancellor. And this Kind of Liberty, being firſt grateful to the King for the Wit that accompanied it and the Mirth that it produced, grew by the Cuſtom of it the more acceptable; and it may be, the general and publick Obſervation of the Diſparity in the Lives of the two Brothers made it wiſhed, that there were no more of that Strictneſs in the one Place than in the other, towards which there wanted not Application and Advice accordingly as well as Example.

IN the mean Time the Chancellor had a hard Part to act, being neither able to do the Good He conſtantly endeavoured on one Side, nor remove the Ill He diſliked on the other Side; for He ſaw well the Miſchief that would inevitably follow the great Expences of the Duke, which exceeded all Limits and could never be provided for; and thought the Dutcheſs to be blamed for what She ſpent upon herſelf, and uſed all the Credit He had with Both to begin in Time to reform what Neceſſity would ſhortly do with more Diſhonour: But the Diſeaſe had grown from the firſt ill Digeſtion.

THE Lord Berkley had upon the King's firſt Arrival formed a Family without Rule or Precedent, and made the Servants in a much better Condition than the Maſter, by aſſigning liberal Penſions and Allowances to them, who had paid him dear for their Places, without conſidering from what Fund they ſhould ariſe: And now They all would have the Duke believe, "that He ſpent not too much; "but that He had too little Proviſion aſſigned to "him for his Quality and Relation, and that this "proceeded from the Neglect in the Chancellor, who "was able, if He endeavoured it, to perſuade the "King to enlarge it to a juſt Proportion." And this was as much urged to the Dutcheſs as to the Duke, and it made in her a greater Impreſſion; and though She had in all other Reſpects a very entire Affection and even a Duty and Reſignation to her Father, yet in this He had no Authority with her, nor did She think him a competent Judge what Expences Princes ſhould make: And having ſeen the State and Luſtre in which the Duke of Anjou lived in France, and having received many Infuſions from the Queen, of the great Defect in the Cuſtoms of England in providing either for the Reſpect or for the Support of the younger Sons of the Crown, She thought that the Chancellor ſhould rather uſe his Credit for the enlarging that Narrowneſs, which the King was enough diſpoſed to, than to reform their Expences. But of this enough.

THE Plague had really ſwept away and deſtroyed ſo many Seamen (Stepney and the Places adjacent, which were their common Habitations, being almoſt depopulated) that now, all other Obſtructions being removed, there ſeemed even an Impoſſibility to procure Sailors and Mariners enough to ſet out the Fleet; inſomuch as They found it neceſſary to preſs many Watermen, and to diſfurniſh all Merchant Ships which were prepared to be ſet out to the Plantations or to other Places of Trade: All which turned not ſo much to Benefit one Way, as it did to Loſs another Way. But the beſt Way to expedite all Things was the two Admirals going to the Fleet themſelves, that They who reſolved to go might haſten thither, and that They who had no Mind to go might, out of Shame, likewiſe accompany them.

THERE appeared great Unanimity and Conſent between them. Only Prince Rupert had a great Deſire to go in a Ship apart, and that They might not be Both in one Ship: But upon Debate it appeared to be unpracticable, and that in a Time of Action the Orders could not be the ſame, if They who gave them were not together and in the ſame Place; and ſo the Prince was perſuaded not to be poſitive in that Particular. And ſo They Both went together, and took Leave of the King towards the End of April, and laboured ſo effectually (as They were Both Men of great Dexterity and indefatigable Induſtry in ſuch Conjunctures), that They carried the Fleet out to Sea, well fitted and provided, by the Middle of May; with which They preſently viſited the Coaſt of Holland, and took many Prizes; and by the Intelligence They met with concluded that the Dutch Fleet would not be ready in a Month, of which They gave the King Advertiſement, and returned into the Downs. And Prince Rupert at the ſame Time

The Fleet puts to Sea under Prince Rupert and the General.

The Occaſion of the Diviſion of the Fleet.

Time expreſſed an Inclination to go himſelf with Part of the Fleet to meet the Duke of Beaufort, who was reported to be under Sail to join with the Dutch, and "that They would not put to Sea till "They foreſaw that They were like to join about "Calais."

At or near the ſame Time the Lord Arlington received Intelligence, "that the Dutch were not yet "well manned; and that the Ships which were in "the Texel, and were to join with the other under "De Ruyter in the Wierings, were more unprovided." Though at the ſame Time Secretary Morrice (who had always better Intelligence from Holland) was aſſured from thence, "that all the Ships in Both "Places were ſo ready that they would join within "very few Days." But the Lord Arlington, who thought He ought to be more believed, received as poſitive Advertiſement from France, "that the Duke "of Beaufort ſet ſail from Breſt on ſuch a Day:" And though the Wind had not been yet directly favourable for him, it was concluded that He muſt be well advanced in his Way, and He had no Port to Friend till He came to the Coaſt of France near Calais.

Upon this there ſeemed a great Deſire that Prince Rupert might take the Courſe He had propoſed; for the Convenience was agreed to be very great, if the French could be met with before the Conjunction. However the Council was ſo wary that at that Time attended the King at Worceſter-Houſe, the Chancellor being affected with the Gout, that They adviſed the King "not to ſend poſitive Orders for the dividing "the Fleet, which by many Accidents might pro-"duce Inconveniences; but rather to ſend two of "the Council to the Fleet, with an Account of all the "Intelligence, and the Reflections which occurred "to the King upon it." And hereupon Sir George Carteret and Sir William Coventry were preſently ſent, and carried ſuch Orders with them, as would be neceſſary if the Generals had not other Intelligence, or did think that the Diviſion was not liable to more Objections than had been in View. And this Caution I ſet down more particularly, becauſe the Council underwent Reproaches which it did not deſerve.

The two Counſellors uſed ſuch Expedition, and found ſo good Conveniences by Land and Water, that They returned to the King the next Day with an Account, "that the State of the Dutch Fleet was con-"firmed to be the ſame that his Majeſty had heard, "and that They believed the other concerning the "Duke of Beaufort to be very probable; whereupon "They had concluded with a mutual Conſent and Ap-"probation, that Prince Rupert ſhould take twenty of the "Ships, which He had already choſen, to meet the French, "though they were ſuperiour in Number, whilſt the Ge-"neral remained in the Downs with the reſt: And in "Order to this that the Prince went aboard his Ship "before They came away, and the rather, becauſe the "Wind was ſo much againſt him, that his Majeſty's "Orders, if He found Cauſe to ſend any, would be "ſure for ſome Days to find him upon the Weſtern "Coaſt; and the Wind that was againſt him was ſo "favourable to the Duke of Beaufort, that it was pro-"bable They might ſpeedily meet, and in a Place to "be wiſhed." The King ſaw no Cauſe yet to ſend Orders to the contrary; and this was the Reaſon, and all the Circumſtances, of the Separation of the Fleet that proved unfortunate.

It appeared very ſoon after, which Secretary had the better Intelligence: For the very next Day after the Departure of the Prince, the General, who remained in the Downs, had certain Intelligence that the Dutch were come out of their Harbours, having it ſeems received Intelligence likewiſe of the French Fleet's being at Sea, and being obliged to meet them, and had been long ready to do ſo; which had deceived the Court, They believing that They ſtayed becauſe They were not ready to come out, whereas They were ready and expected only the other Advertiſement.

As ſoon as the General was informed, He ſent Notice preſently to the Duke late in the ſame Evening, who, informing the King of it, gave Orders to Sir William Coventry to prepare Orders to Prince Rupert immediately to return; and if thoſe Orders had been carefully diſpatched, they might have come to the Prince before the Morning. But Sir William Coventry thought he had done his Part when He got the Order ſigned, which was about twelve of the Clock at Night, and then ſent them by his Servant to the Lord Arlington, whoſe Part He thought it was to charge a Meſſenger with them: But He was gone to Bed, and his Servants durſt not diſquiet him, a Tenderneſs not accuſtomed to be in the Family of a Secretary. But whether They did not wake him, as He pretended, or being awake He deferred it, it was not ſent away till the next Day, and never came to Prince Rupert's Hand till He turned his Sails upon the Thunder of the Cannon; and He no ſooner endeavoured to return, but the Wind chopped about to retard him, that He could make little Way that Day or the Night following. Whoſe Fault it was that theſe important Orders were not ſent with more Expedition, whether Sir William Coventry ought not to have taken Care for the conveying them, at leaſt to have given the Lord Arlington Notice what the Contents of them were, of which He denied to have any Notice, was diſputed with ſome Warmth between themſelves, and ſo came to be publiſhed: But it was never examined any where elſe, though the Negligence was very miſchievous in its Effect; but They were Both too great Men to be queſtioned in any Judicatory.

A Neglect in forwarding an Order to Prince Rupert to rejoin the Fleet.

The General, after the Notice He had received of the Motion of the Dutch, ordered the Fleet to weigh Anchor about three of the Clock in the Morning upon the firſt of June 1666, to ſail to the Buoy of the Gunfleet to join with ſome other Ships which lay there, to get more Men, being then but ill manned: And about ſeven of the Clock in the Morning the Scouts came in, and brought the General Notice, that the Dutch Fleet was to the Leeward, and probably intended to decline fighting till They might join with the French. And it had been to be wiſhed that the Engliſh had ſtood off too, upon Confidence that Prince Rupert, whom the Wind had kept from being far off, as They could not but know, would receive Direction from Court to return. But the General (who was as impatient upon the Sight of an Enemy to engage with him as Prince Rupert himſelf, and had a natural Contempt of the Dutch) called his Flag-Officers to Council, and quickly reſolved, "that it was not convenient "nor ſafe nor honourable to decline the Battle, leſt it "might take off the preſent Courage of the Seamen." And truly in all thoſe Conſultations, upon the like Occaſions, whoever propoſed any wary Advice run great Hazard of being reputed a Coward. And ſo They bore up with a full Wind upon the Enemy, notwithſtanding the viſible Diſadvantage They were in, in Reſpect of the Strength of the Enemy, for in the Abſence of Prince Rupert there remained little above fifty Sail with the General; whereas De Ruyter's Fleet conſiſted of above fourſcore Sail, who eaſily perceived his Advantage, and that a great Part of the Engliſh Fleet was abſent, and ſo willingly embraced the Occaſion, and made what Sail He could to meet with them.

The Dutch Fleet comes out.

It was about two of the Clock in the Afternoon when the Engagement began; and the Engliſh had got the Wind, which was ſo high that They could not carry out their lower Tiers. The Admiral was ſo ſhattered in his Rigging and Maſts, that He was compelled to get off and anchor, that He might mend what was amiſs; and many of his Squadron had their Main-yards ſhot off, and received ſuch Damage in their Tackling, which was the chief Aim of the Dutch, that They could hardly govern their Ships. And by this Means the Enemy got the Wind; and the Battle continued with great Fierceneſs, and Loſs of many Men on Both Sides, till nine or ten of the Clock at Night, when all were willing to have ſome Reſt. That

The ſecond Day's Action.

THAT Night was ſpent in repairing Maſts and Rigging: And at ſix of the Clock in the Morning the Battle began again with the ſame Fierceneſs, and laſted till Night. And that Day the Dutch ſuffered much, and one of their Vice-Admirals was boarded and afterwards ſunk, as many of their other Ships likewiſe were; ſo that They began to fall off: When ſixteen new great Ships came to their Aid, which gave them new Courage; ſo that They renewed and maintained the Fight with great Reſolution, and killed many Men of the Engliſh and diſabled many of the Ships, till the Night again parted them.

The Dutch reinforced.

The Engliſh retire.

UPON the Account the General received that Night, and the new Acceſs of Force to the Dutch, He thought it neceſſary to retire; for though he had loſt no Ship, very many were ſo diſabled, that there was Reaſon to fear they would hardly hold out to recover the Shore. And thereupon He cauſed all thoſe Ships to be put before and make all the Sail they could, and himſelf with ſixteen Ships in a Breadth went in the Rear: Which as ſoon as the Enemy perceived, They purſued, but came not within Reach of their Guns till four of the Clock in the Afternoon; and then though They ſhot hard They did very little Harm, the Sternpieces of the Engliſh over-reaching their Broadſides, which made many of them get off as quickly as They could. But by this Time the Engliſh deſcried about twenty Sail of Ships ſtanding towards them, which They concluded to be Prince Rupert (as it proved): And ſo being earneſt to join, They edged up towards them, but ſo unfortunately, that many of the Flag-Ships were on Ground off the Galloper-Sand. But with much ado they all got off ſafe, the Royal Prince only excepted, which for this laſt Age, and till the late War, was held the beſt Ship in the World. This brave Ship ſtuck ſo faſt that no Art or Induſtry could move her; ſo that the Enemy, when They found They could not carry her off, ſet her on Fire, and took the Captain Sir George Ayſcue and all the Company Priſoners, and without Diſtinction uſed all with great Barbarity, in which They pretended only to uſe Retaliation. That Night Prince Rupert joined: And then They bore to the Northward, that They might get clear of the Sands; and thereby the Enemy got the Wind again.

The third Day's Action.

Prince Rupert comes up with his Squadron.

The fourth Day's Action.

THE fourth Day of the Battle, which was the fourth of June, the Enemy being to Windward about three Leagues, the Generals in the Morning made all Sail towards them: And They lay with their Sails to the Maſts to ſtay for them, which They would not have had the Courage to have done, if They had not had Intelligence from the Priſoners of the Prince, in how tatter'd a Condition the Fleet was. The Battle began about eight of the Clock in the Morning with extraordinary Confidence on Both Sides, the Dutch continuing their old Guard to ſpend all their Shot upon the Rigging and Maſts, and to defend themſelves from being boarded, which the Engliſh moſt intended and laboured to do. But the Deſign of the others ſucceeded better: Inſomuch that one of the Vice-Admirals of a Squadron, and other of the beſt Ships, were ſo diſabled that They bore off from the Battle, that They might mend and repair; which gave no ſmall Encouragement to the Enemy. But the two Generals were invincible, and continued the Battle all the Day in ſeveral Forms, and by the Advantage of the Wind fited ſix or ſeven of their Ships and ſunk others, and had two or three of their own likewiſe ſunk. And between ſix and ſeven at Night, as if by Conſent (and no Doubt Both Sides were very weary of the Encounter), They ſeparated without looking after each other, and haſtened to their ſeveral Coaſts; many of the Engliſh being ſo hurt in Yards, Maſts, Rigging and Hulls, many of them wanting Men to ply their Guns, and their Powder and Shot near ſpent, that with very much Difficulty they got into Harbour. And ſo concluded that great Action, wherein either Side pretended to have Advantage, and Both loſt very much.

Both Sides claim the Victory.

THE next Day after the Battle was ſpent in fitting their Maſts and repairing their Rigging, that They might be able to reach the Coaſt: And when They came near it, the Generals called a Council about diſpoſing thoſe Ships which could not remain at Sea, and ſent them to ſuch ſeveral Places as they might be ſooneſt repaired in; and gave every Captain very ſtrict Order, "that all poſſible Diligence and Expedition "ſhould be uſed to get their Ships ready, and fur-"niſhed with whatſoever was wanting;" and the Commiſſioners of the Navy were required to be aſſiſtant in all Places. And ſo wonderful Diligence was uſed (which appears almoſt incredible) that the whole Fleet was ſo well fitted, that by the ſeventeenth Day of the ſame Month, within a Fortnight after ſo terrible a Battle, it was gathered together to a Rendezvous to the Buoy of the Nore. The Enemy made as much Haſte, rather to meet with the French, who were every Day ſtill expected, than to fight with the Engliſh, and kept as near to their own Coaſt as conveniently They could: So that how ready ſoever the Generals were (who had never left their Ships) with the Fleet by the ſeventeenth of the Month, the Winds were ſo averſe or ſo calm, that it was the four and twentieth Day of that Month before They could reach the Sight of the Enemy.

The third general Engagement.

AND the next Day, which was the twenty fifth, the Engliſh made all the Sail They could, and by ten in the Morning engaged in as hot an Encounter as had hitherto been in any Engagement: And though the Dutch ſeemed not to fight with the ſame Spirit and Mettle, yet the Battle held till two in the Afternoon, when by the Advantage of the Wind They bore away faſter than the Engliſh could follow. However here They took Vice-Admiral Banchart, and his Ship of threeſcore Guns and three hundred Men was burned; and another Ship of ſeventy Guns and three hundred Men was likewiſe taken and burned; which the Generals thought better, than to undergo the poſſible Inconvenience of keeping them: And ſo They kept up as cloſe to the Enemy in the Night as They could do. The next Morning They uſed all their Sails, and deſigned to board De Ruyter; which, the Wind leſſening, They could not effect, He fighting very well but running faſter: And ſo, though very well purſued, He got into his Faſtneſs at the Wierings, with thoſe who were neareſt to him. But the reſt who were farther off, and were like to have the Benefit of the Night, tacked about: Which They who attacked De Ruyter perceiving, and that They could follow him no farther, and that the reſt were five and forty Sail, They followed them, the Generals doing all They could with their Squadron to put themſelves between them and the Coaſt; but the Wind growing on a ſudden calm, about Midnight They dropped their Anchors, that They might not be driven farther than They had a Mind to be. But in the Morning, when They weighed Anchor to purſue them, and made all the Way They could with a little Wind, the Enemy got ſo cloſe to their own Shore, their Ships drawing leſs Water than the Engliſh, that there could be no farther Purſuit.

The Engliſh victorious.

ANOTHER Part of the Fleet, which was ſeparated when De Ruyter got into the Wierings, and which the Generals looked upon as their own, was ſo unhappily purſued, though by Men of very good Name, that they eſcaped; which raiſed a great Diſtemper in the Fleet, whilſt ſome Officers of the prime and moſt unqueſtionable Courage charged and accuſed others, who had always given great Teſtimony that They durſt do any Thing, "of baſe declining to fight when the "Enemy was in their Power, and that They choſe ra-"ther to ſuffer them to eſcape than to encounter them." And this Diſpute and Expoſtulation, between Men who had many Seconds, divided the Generals, one declaring himſelf on the one Side as the other did on the other; but They wiſely laid aſide the Debate, till They ſhould be at more Leiſure with leſs Inconvenience to determine it.

THE Generals thereupon, having thus ſcattered the Enemy, reſolved to ply upon the Dutch Coaſt to take all Ships of Trade, which They did; and off the Texel and the Flie took many Prizes, both Homeward and outward bound, of great Value. And They having now Nothing to do but to lie ſtill, there was a Dutch Captain, one Laurence Van Humſkerke, who after the firſt Battle, in the Faction between Evertſon and Van Trump, had given De Wit ſo great an Advantage, that if He had not made his Eſcape He had been hanged, who from that Time had always been on Board with Prince Rupert: This Man, whilſt the Fleet lay in this Poſture, adviſed Prince Rupert to attempt a Place near the Flie, which was ſo locked in the Land that it was always looked upon as very ſecure (and where all Ships laden at Amſterdam for the Straits and thoſe Parts, when they were outward bound, uſed to lie two or three Days, as in a ſafe Port, until all Things which might be forgotten were prepared, and all the Company came together), and had never been invaded in any War; and by it was a pretty large Village, called Schelling, which had many good Houſes in it, beſides other inhabited by, and for the Entertainment of, Seamen.

The Attempt upon the Iſland of Schelling.

THIS Enterpriſe was committed to Sir Robert Holmes, a very bold and expert Man; who with a Number of ſmall Veſſels very well manned, beſides a Body of ſtout Foot to land upon Occaſions, being aſſiſted by the Dutchman, ſo vigorouſly aſſaulted it, that He burned all the Dutch Ships lying there, being of ineſtimable Value, all outward bound, and ſome of them worth above one hundred thouſand Pounds each Ship. They burned likewiſe the whole Town of Schelling; which Conflagration, with that of the Ships, appearing at the Break of Day ſo near Amſterdam, put that Place into that Conſternation that They thought the Day of Judgment was come, not thinking of their Ships there, as being out of the Power or Reach of any Enemy: And no Doubt it was the greateſt Loſs that State ſuſtained in the whole War, that is, greater than all the reſt. And as this Victory, if it can be called a Victory when there is no Reſiſtance, occaſioned great Triumph in England, ſo it raiſed great Thoughts of Heart in De Wit, and a Reſolution of Revenge before any Peace ſhould be conſented to; which They effected to a good Degree the next Year.

The chief Town and a large Fleet of Merchant Ships burnt.

THERE appeared no more Likelihood of the Dutch coming out again: So about the fifteenth of Auguſt the Generals returned to Southwould Bay to receive a Recruit of Men, Proviſions and Ammunition, having left Ships enough upon the Coaſt of Holland to take Prizes, and Scouts upon the Coaſt to get Intelligence in what Readineſs the Enemy's Fleet was, and what was done within the Land. And about the twenty ſeventh a little Pink, that waited upon the Coaſt of Zealand, brought Notice that the Enemy, conſiſting of about fourſcore Sail of Ships, were ready to come out from the Wierings; and the next Day They were aſſured that They were come out and bound Weſtward, by which They concluded that They had Hope to join the French Fleet. Whereupon the Generals gave preſent Orders to unmoor the Fleet; and weighing Anchor about ſeven of the Clock in the Morning ſtood to Sea, and about Noon diſcovered the Dutch Fleet about four Leagues to the Leeward. The Generals made all Sail towards them: But the Enemy ſtood away for the Coaſt of Flanders, whilſt the Engliſh were ſo entangled upon the Galloper-Sands, that They could not ſtand after the Enemy till late in the Afternoon; ſo that it was Night before They came near each other, and then ſeveral Guns were fired to little Purpoſe.

The Dutch Fleet puts to Sea again.

THE next Morning, being the firſt of September, the Seaſon when the Winds begin to grow boiſterous, They had upon the breaking of the Day loſt the Sight of the Enemy, though They believed that They had bore up in the Night for them: But when it was Light, They found that They were to the Leeward as far as They could diſcover, near St. John's Bay beyond Calais. The Engliſh purſued them, and making ſome Stay for the Fireſhips, which could not make Haſte by Reaſon of the bluſtering Weather, it was four in the Afternoon before the Fleet came up together to them; when De Ruyter made a Shew as if He would draw off from the Shore towards them. But when He ſaw the Engliſh ſtand with him and advance with their uſual Reſolution, He tacked back again, and ſtood cloſe in to the Shore, where the reſt of the Fleet was, in the Bay of Staples. And then the Night came, and the Wind blew ſo violently, that the Engliſh were forced to tack, and many of the Ships were forced to the Leeward, the Night being ſo foul, that neither the Generals nor the chief Flags could be diſcerned. And though the Storm continued very violent the next Day; a good Part of the Fleet got again together, and ſtood to the Bay of Staples; where the Dutch ſtill remained cloſe under the Shore at Anchor, but could not be invited to come out. So the Engliſh found it neceſſary to ſtand farther out to the Sea; and then They diſcovered the reſt of the Fleet at a great Diſtance to the Leeward, and ſo bore after them, and at Night They all arrived at St. Helen's Point. And though the Tempeſt ſtill increaſed, a Squadron went every Day out to the Coaſt of France.

The English Fleet diſperſed by a Storm.

IN this Tempeſt the French Fleet had a very narrow Eſcape, by a Providence They are ſeldom without. A Gentleman of good Quality of that Nation returned at this Time out of England (whither They repaired with as much Liberty and were as kindly treated as if there were no War, whilſt no Engliſhman could be ſafe there); and landing at Calais, and finding that the Duke of Beaufort was every Day expected, He diſpatched two or three Barks to find him with Information how and where the Engliſh lay; one of which came ſo luckily to him towards the Evening, that He changed his Courſe, and by the Darkneſs of the Night got into the Road of Diepe, where He dropped his Anchors. But his Vice-Admiral, being the biggeſt and the beſt Ship but one in the Fleet, and carrying ſeventy Pieces of Cannon, purſuing the Courſe He was directed, in the Dark of the Night fell amongſt the Engliſh, as the reſt had done if it had not been for that Advertiſement; and after a little defending himſelf, which He ſaw was to no Purpoſe, was taken Priſoner, and deſired to be brought to Prince Rupert, who knew him well, and treated him as a gallant Perſon ought to be, and cauſed many Things which belonged to his own Perſon to be reſtored to him; and when He was brought into England, He found another Kind of Reception (though He was Priſoner in the Tower) than any of the Engliſh, though of the ſame Quality, met with abroad. By this Accident the French Fleet made a happy Eſcape: And the Continuance of the Storm for many Days kept the Engliſh and the Dutch from any farther Engagement. But the ſame Winds, and at the ſame Time, did much more Miſchief at Land than at Sea.

The French Fleet has a narrow Eſcape.

IT was upon the firſt Day of that September, in the diſmal Year of 1666 (in which many Prodigies were expected and ſo many really fell out), that that memorable and terrible Fire brake out in London, which began about Midnight, or nearer the Morning of Sunday, in a Baker's Houſe at the End of Thames Street next the Tower, there being many little narrow Alleys and very poor Houſes about the Place where it firſt appeared; and then finding ſuch Store of combuſtible Materials, as that Street is always furniſhed with in Timber-Houſes, the Fire prevailed ſo powerfully, that that whole Street and the Neighbourhood was in ſo ſhort a Time turned to Aſhes, that few Perſons had Time to ſave and preſerve any of their Goods; but were a Heap of People almoſt as dead with the ſudden Diſtraction, as the Ruins were which They ſuſtained. The Magiſtrates of the City aſſembled quickly together, and with the uſual Remedies of Buckets, which They were provided with: But the Fire was too ravenous to be extinguiſhed with ſuch Quantities of Water as thoſe Inſtruments could apply to it, and faſtened ſtill upon new Materials before it had deſtroyed the old. And though it raged furiouſly all that Day, to that Degree that all Men ſtood amazed, as Spectators only, no Man knowing what Remedy to apply, nor the Magiſtrates what Orders to give: Yet it kept within ſome Compaſs, burned what was next, and laid Hold only on Both Sides; and the greateſt Apprehenſion was of the Tower, and all Conſiderations entered upon how to ſecure that Place.

BUT in the Night the Wind changed, and carried the Danger from thence, but with ſo great and irreſiſtible Violence, that as it kept the Engliſh and Dutch Fleets from grappling when they were ſo near each other, ſo it ſcattered the Fire from purſuing the Line it was in with all its Force, and ſpread it over the City: So that They, who went late to Bed at a great Diſtance from any Place where the Fire prevailed, were awakened before Morning with their own Houſes being in a Flame; and whilſt Endeavour was uſed to quench that, other Houſes were diſcovered to be burning, which were near no Place from whence They could imagine the Fire could come; all which kindled another Fire in the Breaſts of Men, almoſt as dangerous as that within their Houſes.

MONDAY Morning produced firſt a Jealouſy, and then an univeral Concluſion, that this Fire came not by Chance, nor did They care where it began; but the breaking out in ſeveral Places at ſo great Diſtance from each other made it evident, that it was by Conſpiracy and Combination. And this Determination could not hold long without Diſcovery of the wicked Authors, who were concluded to be all the Dutch and all the French in the Town, though They had inhabited the ſame Places above twenty Years. All of that Kind, or, if They were Strangers, of what Nation ſoever, were laid Hold of; and after all the ill Uſage that can conſiſt in Words, and ſome Blows and Kicks, They were thrown into Priſon. And ſhortly after, the ſame Concluſion comprehended all the Roman Catholicks, who were in the ſame Predicament of Guilt and Danger, and quickly found that their only Safety conſiſted in keeping within Doors; and yet ſome of them, and of Quality, were taken by Force out of their Houſes and carried to Priſon.

WHEN this Rage ſpread as far as the Fire, and every Hour brought Reports of ſome bloody Effects of it, worſe than in Truth there were, the King diſtributed many of the Privy Council into ſeveral Quarters of the City, to prevent, by their Authorities, thoſe Inhumanities which He heard were committed. In the mean Time, even They or any other Perſon thought it not ſafe to declare, "that They believed that the Fire "came by Accident, or that it was not a Plot of the "Dutch and the French and Papiſts to burn the Ci-"ty;" which was ſo generally believed, and in the beſt Company, that He who ſaid the Contrary was ſuſpected for a Conſpirator, or at beſt a Favourer of them. It could not be conceived, how a Houſe that was diſtant a Mile from any Part of the Fire could ſuddenly be in a Flame, without ſome particular Malice; and this Caſe fell out every Hour. When a Man at the fartheſt End of Bread-Street had made a Shift to get out of his Houſe his beſt and moſt portable Goods, becauſe the Fire had approached near them; He no ſooner had ſecured them, as He thought, in ſome Friend's Houſe in Holborn, which was believed a ſafe Diſtance, but He ſaw that very Houſe, and none elſe near it, in a ſudden Flame. Nor did there want, in this woful Diſtemper, the Teſtimony of Witneſſes who ſaw this Villany committed, and apprehended Men who They were ready to ſwear threw Fireballs into Houſes, which were preſently burning.

THE Lord Hollis and Lord Aſhley, who had their Quarters aſſigned about Newgate Market and the Streets adjacent, had many brought to them in Cuſtody for Crimes of this Nature; and ſaw, within a very little Diſtance from the Place where They were, the People gathered together in great Diſorder; and as They came nearer ſaw a Man in the Middle of them without a Hat or Cloak, pulled and hauled and very ill uſed, whom They knew to be a Servant to the Portugal Ambaſſadour, who was preſently brought to them. And a ſubſtantial Citizen was ready to take his Oath, "that He ſaw that Man put his Hand into his Pocket, "and throw into a Shop a Fireball; upon which He "ſaw the Houſe immediately on Fire: Whereupon, "being on the other Side of the Way, and ſeeing this, "He cried out to the People to ſtop that Gentleman, "and made all the Haſte He could himſelf;" but the People had firſt ſeized upon him, and taken away his Sword, which He was ready to draw; and He not ſpeaking nor underſtanding Engliſh, They had uſed him in the Manner ſet down before. The Lord Hollis told him what He was accuſed of, and "that He was ſeen "to have thrown Somewhat out of his Pocket, which "They thought to be a Fireball, into a Houſe which "was now on Fire:" and the People had diligently ſearched his Pockets to find more of the ſame Commodities, but found Nothing that They meant to accuſe him of. The Man ſtanding in great Amazement to hear He was ſo charged, the Lord Hollis aſked him, "what it was that He pulled out of his Pocket, and "what it was He threw into the Houſe:" To which He anſwered, "that He did not think that He had "put his Hand into his Pocket; but He remembered "very well, that as He walked in the Street He ſaw "a Piece of Bread upon the Ground, which He took "up and laid upon a Shelf in the next Houſe;" which is a Cuſtom or Superſtition ſo natural to the Portugueſe, that if the King of Portugal were walking, and ſaw a Piece of Bread upon the Ground, He would take it up with his own Hand, and keep it till He ſaw a fit Place to lay it down.

THE Houſe being in View, the Lords with many of the People walked to it, and found the Piece of Bread juſt within the Door upon a Board, where He ſaid He laid it; and the Houſe on Fire was two Doors beyond it, which the Man who was on the other Side of the Way, and ſaw this Man put his Hand into the Houſe without ſtaying, and preſently after the Fire brake out, concluded to be the ſame Houſe; which was very natural in the Fright that all Men were in: Nor did the Lords, though They were ſatisfied, ſet the poor Man at Liberty; but, as if there remained Ground enough of Suſpicion, committed him to the Conſtable, to be kept by him in his own Houſe for ſome Hours, when They pretended They would examine him again. Nor were any Perſons who were ſeized upon in the ſame Manner, as Multitudes were in all the Parts of the Town, eſpecially if They were Strangers or Papiſts, preſently diſcharged, when there was no reaſonable Ground to ſuſpect; but all ſent to Priſon, where They were in much more Security than They could have been in full Liberty, after They were once known to have been ſuſpected; and moſt of them underſtood their Commitment to be upon that Ground, and were glad of it.

THE Fire and the Wind continued in the ſame Exceſs all Monday, Tueſday, and Wedneſday till Afternoon, and flung and ſcattered Brands burning into all Quarters; the Nights more terrible than the Days, and the Light the ſame, the Light of the Fire ſupplying that of the Sun. And indeed whoever was an Eyewitneſs of that terrible Proſpect, can never have ſo lively an Image of the laſt Conflagration till He beholds it; the Faces of all People in a wonderful Dejection and Diſcompoſure, not knowing where They could repoſe themſelves for one Hour's Sleep, and no Diſtance thought ſecure from the Fire, which ſuddenly ſtarted up before it was ſuſpected; ſo that People left their Houſes and carried away their Goods from many Places which received no Hurt, and whither They afterwards returned again; all the Fields full of Women and Children, who had made a Shift to bring thither

ſome

ſome Goods and Conveniences to reſt upon, as ſafer than any Houſes, where yet They felt ſuch intolerable Heat and Drought, as if They had been in the Middle of the Fire. The King and the Duke, who rode from one Place to another, and put themſelves into great Dangers amongſt the burning and falling Houſes, to give Advice and Direction what was to be done, underwent as much Fatigue as the meaneſt, and had as little Sleep or Reſt; and the Faces of all Men appeared ghaſtly, and in the higheſt Confuſion. The Country ſent in Carts to help thoſe miſerable People who had ſaved any Goods: And by this Means, and the Help of Coaches, all the neighbour Villages were filled with more People than they could contain, and more Goods than they could find Room for; ſo that thoſe Fields became likewiſe as full as the other about London and Weſtminſter.

It was obſerved that where the Fire prevailed moſt, when it met with brick Buildings, if it was not repulſed, it was ſo well reſiſted that it made a much ſlower Progreſs; and when it had done its Worſt, that the Timber and all the combuſtible Matter fell, it fell down to the Bottom within the Houſe, and the Walls ſtood and encloſed the Fire, and it was burned out without making a farther Progreſs in many of thoſe Places; and then the Vacancy ſo interrupted the Fury of it, that many Times the two or three next Houſes ſtood without much Damage. Beſides the ſpreading, inſomuch as all London ſeemed but one Fire in the Breadth of it, it ſeemed to continue in its full Fury a direct Line to the Thames Side, all Cheapſide from beyond the Exchange, through Fleet-ſtreet; inſomuch as for that Breadth, taking in Both Sides as far as the Thames, there was ſcarce a Houſe or Church ſtanding from the Bridge to Dorſet-Houſe, which was burned on Tueſday Night after Baynard's Caſtle.

On Wedneſday Morning, when the King ſaw that neither the Fire decreaſed nor the Wind leſſened, He even deſpaired of preſerving Whitehall, but was more afraid of Weſtminſter-Abbey. But having obſerved by his having viſited all Places, that where there were any vacant Places between the Houſes, by which the Progreſs of the Fire was interrupted, it changed its Courſe and went to the other Side; He gave Order for pulling down many Houſes about Whitehall, ſome whereof were newly built and hardly finiſhed, and ſent many of his choice Goods by Water to Hampton-Court; as moſt of the Perſons of Quality in the Strand, who had the Benefit of the River, got Barges and other Veſſels, and ſent their Furniture for their Houſes to ſome Houſes ſome Miles out of the Town. And very many on Both Sides the Strand, who knew not whither to go, and ſcarce what They did, fled with their Families out of their Houſes into the Streets, that They might not be within when the Fire fell upon their Houſes.

The Fire decreaſes.

But it pleaſed God, contrary to all Expectation, that on Wedneſday, about four or five of the Clock in the Afternoon, the Wind fell: And as in an Inſtant the Fire decreaſed, having burned all on the Thames Side to the New Buildings of the Inner-Temple next to White Friars, and having conſumed them, was ſtopped by that Vacancy from proceeding farther into that Houſe; but laid Hold on ſome old Buildings which joined to Ram-alley, and ſwept all thoſe into Fleet-ſtreet. And the other Side being likewiſe deſtroyed to Fetter-Lane, it advanced no farther; but left the other Part of Fleet-ſtreet to the Temple-Bar, and all the Strand, unhurt, but what Damage the Owners of the Houſes had done to themſelves by endeavouring to remove; and it ceaſed in all other Parts of the Town near the ſame Time: So that the greateſt Care then was, to keep good Guards to watch the Fire that was upon the Ground, that it might not break out again. And this was the better performed, becauſe They who had yet their Houſes ſtanding had not the Courage to ſleep, but watched with much leſs Diſtraction; though the ſame Diſtemper ſtill remained in the utmoſt Extent, "that all this had fallen out by the Conſpiracy of the "French and Dutch with the Papiſts;" and all Gaols were filled with thoſe who were every Hour apprehended upon that Jealouſy; or rather upon ſome Evidence that They were guilty of the Crime. And the People were ſo ſottiſh, that they believed that all the French in the Town (which no Doubt were a very great Number) were drawn into a Body, to proſecute thoſe by the Sword who were preſerved from the Fire: And the Inhabitants of a whole Street have ran in a great Tumult one Way, upon the Rumour that the French were marching at the other End of it; ſo terrified Men were with their own Apprehenſions.

When the Night, though far from being a quiet one, had ſomewhat leſſened the Conſternation, the firſt Care the King took was, that the Country might ſpeedily ſupply Markets in all Places, that They who had ſaved themſelves from burning might not be in Danger of ſtarving; and if there had not been extraordinary Care and Diligence uſed, many would have periſhed that Way. The vaſt Deſtruction of Corn, and all other Sorts of Proviſions, in thoſe Parts where the Fire had prevailed, had not only left all that People deſtitute of all that was to be eat or drank; but the Bakers and Brewers, which inhabited the other Parts which were unhurt, had forſaken their Houſes, and carried away all that was portable: Inſomuch as many Days paſſed, before They were enough in their Wits and in their Houſes to fall to their Occupations; and thoſe Parts of the Town which God had ſpared and preſerved were many Hours without any Thing to eat, as well as They who were in the Fields. And yet it can hardly be conceived, how great a Supply of all Kinds was brought from all Places within four and twenty Hours. And which was more miraculous, in four Days, in all the Fields about the Town, which had ſeemed covered with thoſe whoſe Habitations were burned, and with the Goods which They had ſaved, there was ſcarce a Man to be ſeen: All found Shelter in ſo ſhort a Time, either in thoſe Parts which remained of the City and in the Suburbs, or in the neighbour Villages; all Kind of People expreſſing a marvellous Charity toward thoſe who appeared to be undone. And very many, with more Expedition than can be conceived, ſet up little Sheds of Brick and Timber upon the Ruins of their own Houſes, where They choſe rather to inhabit than in more convenient Places, though They knew They could not long reſide in thoſe new Buildings.

The King was not more troubled at any Particular, than at the Imagination which poſſeſſed the Hearts of ſo many, that all this Miſchief had fallen out by a real and formed Conſpiracy; which, albeit He ſaw no Colour to believe, He found very many intelligent Men, and even ſome of his own Council, who did really believe it. Whereupon He appointed the Privy Council to ſit both Morning and Evening, to examine all Evidence of that Kind that ſhould be brought before them, and to ſend for any Perſons who had been committed to Priſon upon ſome Evidence that made the greateſt Noiſe; and ſent for the Lord Chief Juſtice, who was in the Country, to come to the Town for the better Examination of all Suggeſtions and Allegations of that Kind, there having been ſome malicious Report ſcattered about the Town, "that the Court had "ſo great a Prejudice againſt any Kind of Teſtimony "of ſuch a Conſpiracy, that They diſcountenanced all "Witneſſes who came before them to teſtify what "They knew;" which was without any Colour of Truth. Yet many, who were produced as if their Teſtimony would remove all Doubts, made ſuch ſenſeleſs Relations of what They had been told, without knowing the Condition of the Perſons who told them, or where to find them, that it was a hard Matter to forbear ſmiling at their Evidence. Some Frenchmens Houſes had been ſearched, in which had been found many of thoſe Shells for Squibs and other Fireworks, frequently uſed in Nights of Joy and Triumph; and the Men were well known, and had lived many Years there there by that Trade, and had no other: And one of these was the King's Servant, and employed by the Office of Ordnance for making Grenades of all Kinds, as well for the Hand as for Mortar pieces. Yet these Men were looked upon as in the Number of the Conspirators, and remained still in Prison till their Neighbours solicited for their Liberty. And it cannot be enough wondered at, that in this general Rage of the People no Mischief was done to the Strangers, that no one of them was assassinated outright, though many were sorely beaten and bruised.

Hubert's strange Confession.

THERE was a very odd Accident that confirmed many in what They were inclined to believe, and startled others, who thought the Conspiracy impossible, since no Combination not very discernible and discovered could have effected that Mischief, in which the immediate Hand of God was so visible. Amongst many Frenchmen who had been sent to Newgate, there was one Hubert, a young Man of five or six and twenty Years of Age, the Son of a famous Watchmaker in the City of Roan; and this Fellow had wrought in the same Profession with several Men in London, and had for many Years both in Roan and in London been looked upon as distracted. This Man confessed "that "He had set the first House on Fire, and that He "had been hired in Paris a Year before to do it: "That there were three more combined with him "to do the same Thing, and that They came over "together into England to put it in Execution in the "Time of the Plague; but when They were in Lon- "don, He and two of his Companions went into "Sweden, and returned from thence in the latter End "of August, and He resolved to undertake it; and "that the two others went away into France."

THE whole Examination was so senseless, that the Chief Justice, who was not looked upon as a Man who wanted Rigour, did not believe any Thing He said. He was asked, "who it was in Paris that suborned "him to this Action:" To which He answered, "that "He did not know, having never seen him before;" and in the enlarging upon that Point He contradicted himself in many Particulars. Being asked "what "Money He had received to perform a Service of so "much Hazard," He said, "He had received but a "Pistole, but was promised five Pistoles more when He "should have done his Work;" and many such unreasonable Things, that No body present credited any Thing He said. However They durst not slight the Evidence, but put him to a Particular, in which He so fully confirmed all that He had said before, that They were surprized with Wonder, and knew not afterwards what to say or think. They asked him, "if "He knew the Place where He first put Fire;" He answered, "that He knew it very well, and would "shew it to any Body." Upon this the Chief Justice, and many Aldermen who sate with him, sent a Guard of substantial Citizens with the Prisoner, that He might shew them the House; and They first led him to a Place at some Distance from it, and asked him "if that were it;" to which He answered presently, "No, it was lower, nearer to the Thames." The House and all which were near it were so covered and buried in Ruins, that the Owners themselves, without some infallible Mark, could very hardly have said where their own Houses had stood: But this Man led them directly to the Place, described how it stood, the Shape of the little Yard, the Fashion of the Door and Windows, and where He first put the Fire; and all this with such Exactness, that They who had dwelt long near it could not so perfectly have described all Particulars.

THIS silenced all farther Doubts. And though the Chief Justice told the King, "that all his Discourse "was so disjointed that He did not believe him guilty;" nor was there one Man who prosecuted or accused him: Yet upon his own Confession, and so sensible a Relation of all that He had done, accompanied with so many Circumstances (though without the least Shew of Compunction or Sorrow for what He said He had done, nor yet seeming to justify or to take Delight in it; but being asked whether He was not sorry for the Wickedness, and whether He intended to do so much, He gave no Answer at all, or made Reply to what was said; and with the same Temper died), the Jury found him guilty, and He was executed accordingly. And though no Man could imagine any Reason why a Man should so desperately throw away his Life, which He might have saved though He had been guilty, since He was only accused upon his own Confession; yet neither the Judges nor any present at the Trial did believe him guilty, but that He was a poor distracted Wretch weary of his Life, and chose to part with it this Way. Certain it is, that upon the strictest Examination that could be afterwards made by the King's Command, and then by the Diligence of the House, that upon the general Jealousy and Rumour made a Committee, that was very diligent and solicitous to make that Discovery, there was never any probable Evidence (that poor Creature's only excepted) that there was any other Cause of that woful Fire, than the Displeasure of God Almighty: The first Accident of the Beginning in a Baker's House, where there was so great a Stock of Faggots, and the Neighbourhood of much combustible Matter, of Pitch and Rosin and the like, led it in an Instant from House to House through Thames-street, with the Agitation of so terrible a Wind to scatter and disperse it.

Upon which He is executed.

LET the Cause be what it would, the Effect was very terrible; for above two Parts of three of that great City were burned to Ashes, and those the most rich and wealthy Parts of the City, where the greatest Warehouses and the best Shops stood. The Royal-Exchange with all the Streets about it, Lombard street, Cheapside, Paternoster-row, St. Paul's Church, and almost all the other Churches in the City, with the Old Bailey, Ludgate, all Paul's Church-yard even to the Thames, and the greatest Part of Fleet-street, all which were Places the best inhabited, were all burned without one House remaining.

The inestimable Loss sustained by the Fire.

THE Value or Estimate of what that devouring Fire consumed, over and above the Houses, could never be computed in any Degree: For besides that the first Night (which in a Moment swept away the vast Wealth of Thames-street) there was not any Thing that could be preserved in Respect of the Suddenness and Amazement (all People being in their Beds till the Fire was in their Houses, and so could save Nothing but themselves), the next Day with the Violence of the Wind increased the Distraction; nor did many believe that the Fire was near them, or that They had Reason to remove their Goods, till it was upon them and rendered it impossible. Then it fell out at a Season in the Year, the Beginning of September, when very many of the substantial Citizens and other wealthy Men were in the Country, whereof many had not left a Servant in their Houses, thinking themselves upon all ordinary Accidents more secure in the Goodness and Kindness of their Neighbours, than They could be in the Fidelity of a Servant; and whatsoever was in such Houses was entirely consumed by the Fire, or lost as to the Owners. And of this Classis of absent Men, when the Fire came where the Lawyers had Houses, as They had in many Places, especially Serjeants-Inn in Fleet-street, with that Part of the Inner-Temple that was next it and White-Friars, there was scarce a Man to whom those Lodgings appertained who was in Town: So that whatsoever was there, their Money, Books and Papers, besides the Evidences of many Mens Estates deposited in their Hands, were all burned or lost, to a very great Value. But of particular Mens Losses could never be made any Computation.

IT was an incredible Damage that was and might rationally be computed to be sustained by one small Company, the Company of Stationers, in Books, Paper, and the other lesser Commodities which are vendible in that Corporation, which amounted to no less than two hundred thouſand Pounds: In which prodigious Loſs there was one Circumſtance very lamentable. All thoſe who dwelt near Paul's carried their Goods, Books, Paper, and the like, as others of greater Trades did their Commodities, into the large Vaults which were under St. Paul's Church, before the Fire came thither: Which Vaults, though all the Church above the Ground was afterwards burned, with all the Houſes round about, ſtill ſtood firm and ſupported the Foundation, and preſerved all that was within them; until the Impatience of thoſe who had loſt their Houſes, and whatſoever They had elſe, in the Fire, made them very deſirous to ſee what They had ſaved, upon which all their Hopes were founded to repair the reſt.

It was the fourth Day after the Fire ceaſed to flame, though it ſtill burned in the Ruins, from whence there was ſtill an intolerable Heat, when the Bookſellers eſpecially, and ſome other Tradeſmen, who had depoſited all They had preſerved in the greateſt and moſt ſpacious Vault, came to behold all their Wealth, which to that Moment was ſafe: But the Doors were no ſooner opened, and the Air from without fanned the ſtrong Heat within, but firſt the dryeſt and moſt combuſtible Matters broke into a Flame, which conſumed all, of what Kind ſoever, that till then had been unhurt there. Yet They who had committed their Goods to ſome leſſer Vaults, at a Diſtance from that greater, had better Fortune; and having learned from the ſecond Ruin of their Friends to have more Patience, attended till the Rain fell, and extinguiſhed the Fire in all Places, and cooled the Air: And then They ſecurely opened the Doors, and received all from thence that They had there.

If ſo vaſt a Damage as two hundred thouſand Pounds befell that little Company of Stationers in Books and Paper and the like, what ſhall we conceive was loſt in Cloth (of which the Country Clothiers loſt all that They had brought up to Blackwell-Hall againſt Michaelmaſs, which was all burned with that fair Structure), in Silks of all Kinds, in Linen, and thoſe richer Manufactures? Not to ſpeak of Money, Plate and Jewels, whereof ſome were recovered out of the Ruins of thoſe Houſes which the Owners took Care to watch, as containing Somewhat that was worth the looking for, and in which Deluge there were Men ready enough to fiſh.

The Lord Mayor, though a very honeſt Man, was much blamed for Want of Sagacity in the firſt Night of the Fire, before the Wind gave it much Advancement: For though He came with great Diligence as ſoon as He had Notice of it, and was preſent with the firſt, yet having never been uſed to ſuch Spectacles, his Conſternation was equal to that of other Men, nor did He know how to apply his Authority to the remedying the preſent Diſtreſs; and when Men who were leſs terrified with the Object preſſed him very earneſtly, "that He would give Order for the preſent pul-" ling down thoſe Houſes which were neareſt, and by " which the Fire climbed to go farther" (the doing whereof at that Time might probably have prevented much of the Miſchief that ſucceeded), He thought it not ſafe Counſel, and made no other Anſwer, " than " that He durſt not do it without the Conſent of the " Owners." His want of Skill was the leſs wondered at, when it was known afterwards, that ſome Gentlemen of the Inner-Temple would not endeavour to preſerve the Goods which were in the Lodgings of abſent Perſons, nor ſuffer others to do it, " becauſe," They ſaid, " it was againſt the Law to break up any " Man's Chamber."

The ſo ſudden Repair of thoſe formidable Ruins, and the giving ſo great Beauty to all Deformity (a Beauty and a Luſtre that City had never before been acquainted with), is little leſs wonderful than the Fire that conſumed it.

It was hoped and expected that this prodigious and univerſal Calamity, for the Effects of it covered the whole Kingdom, would have made Impreſſion, and produced ſome Reformation in the Licence of the Court: For as the Pains the King had taken Night and Day during the Fire, and the Dangers He had expoſed himſelf to, even for the ſaving the Citizens Goods, had been very notorious, and in the Mouths of all Men, with good Wiſhes and Prayers for him; ſo his Majeſty had been heard during that Time to ſpeak with great Piety and Devotion of the Diſpleaſure that God was provoked to. And no Doubt the deep Senſe of it did raiſe many good Thoughts and Purpoſes in his Royal Breaſt. But He was narrowly watched and looked to, that ſuch melancholick Thoughts might not long poſſeſs him, the Conſequence and Effect whereof was like to be more grievous than that of the Fire itſelf; of which that looſe Company that was too much cheriſhed, even before it was extinguiſhed, diſcourſed as of an Argument for Mirth and Wit to deſcribe the Wildneſs of the Confuſion all People were in; in which the Scripture itſelf was uſed with equal Liberty, when They could apply it to their prophane Purpoſes. And Mr. May preſumed to aſſure the King, " that this was the greateſt Bleſſing " that God had ever conferred upon him, his Reſto-" ration only excepted: For the Walls and Gates be-" ing now burned and thrown down of that rebellious " City, which was always an Enemy to the Crown, " his Majeſty would never ſuffer them to repair and " build them up again to be a Bit in his Mouth and a " Bridle upon his Neck; but would keep all open, that " his Troops might enter upon them whenever He " thought neceſſary for his Service, there being no " other Way to govern that rude Multitude but by " Force."

The King ſeriouſly affected with this Calamity.

Meaſures taken to efface ſuch good Impreſſions in him.

This Kind of Diſcourſe did not pleaſe the King, but was highly approved by the Company; and for the Wit and Pleaſantneſs of it was repeated in all Companies, infinitely to the King's Diſſervice, and corrupted the Affections of the Citizens and of the Country, who uſed and aſſumed the ſame Liberty to publiſh the Prophaneneſs and Atheiſm of the Court. And as Nothing was done there in private, ſo it was made more publick in Paſquils and Libels, which were as bold with Reflections of the broadeſt Nature upon the King himſelf, and upon thoſe in whoſe Company He was moſt delighted, as upon the meaneſt Perſon.

All Men of Virtue and Sobriety, of which there were very many in the King's Family, were grieved and heartbroken with hearing what They could not chooſe but hear, and ſeeing many Things which They could not avoid the ſeeing. There were few of the Council that did not to one another lament the Exceſſes, which muſt in Time be attended with fatal Conſequences, and for the preſent did apparently leſſen the Reverence to the King, that is the beſt Support of his Royalty: But few of them had the Courage to ſay that to his Majeſty, which was not ſo fit to be ſaid to any Body elſe. Nor can it be denied, that his Majeſty did, upon all Occaſions, receive thoſe Advertiſements from thoſe who preſented them to him, with Patience and Benignity, and without the leaſt Shew of Diſpleaſure; though the Perſons concerned endeavoured no one Thing more than to perſuade him, " that it was " the higheſt Preſumption imaginable in the Privy " Council to believe, that They had any Juriſdiction " in the Court, or ought to cenſure the Manners of it."

And to leſſen his Eſteem of the Privy Council.

Nor were all thoſe Endeavours without making ſome Impreſſion upon his Majeſty, who rather eſteemed ſome particular Members of it, than was inclined to believe that the Body of it ought to receive a Reverence from the People, or be looked upon as a vital Part of the Government; In which his Majeſty (as hath been often ſaid before) by the ill Principles He had received in France, and the accuſtomed Liberty of his Bedchamber, was exceedingly and unhappily miſtaken. For by the Conſtitution of the Kingdom, and the very Laws and Cuſtoms of the Nation, as the Privy Council and every Member of it is of the King's ſole

ſole Choice and Election of him to that Truſt (for the greateſt Office in the State, though conferred likewiſe by the King himſelf, doth not qualify the Officer to be of the Privy Council, or to be preſent in it, before by a new Aſſignation that Honour is beſtowed on him, and that He be ſworn of the Council); ſo the Body of it is the moſt ſacred, and hath the greateſt Authority in the Government of the State, next the Perſon of the King himſelf, to whom all other Powers are equally ſubject: And no King of England can ſo well ſecure his own juſt Prerogative, or preſerve it from Violation, as by a ſtrict defending and ſupporting the Dignity of his Privy Council.

WHEN it was too much taken Notice of, that the King himſelf had not that Eſteem or Conſideration of the Council that was due to it, what They did or ordered to be done was leſs valued by the People; and that Diſreſpect every Day improved by the Want of Gravity and Juſtice and Conſtancy in the Proceedings there, the Reſolutions of one Day being reverſed or altered the next, either upon ſome Whiſpers in the King's Ear, or ſome new Fancy in ſome of thoſe Counſellors, who were always of one Mind againſt all former Orders and Precedents; the Pride and inſolent Humour of Sir William Coventry taking not ſo much Delight in any Thing, as to croſs and oppoſe whatſoever the Chancellor or the Treaſurer adviſed; and to reverſe what had been ordered upon that Ground. And though He had ſucked his Milk at the Charge of the Law, no Man was ſo profeſſed an Enemy to it and to the Profeſſors of it, and ſhewed ſo little Reſpect to any Thing paſſed and granted under the Great Seal of England, but ſpake againſt it with the ſame Confidence as if it had been a common Scroll of no Signification; which Kind of Behaviour in a Perſon unqualified by any Office to ſpeak much in ſuch an Aſſembly, as it had never been accuſtomed, ſo it would have found much Reprehenſion there, if it had not been for Reſpect to the Duke, and if the King himſelf had not very often declared himſelf to be of his Opinion, even in Particulars which himſelf had cauſed to be propoſed to a contrary Purpoſe.

ONE Day his Majeſty called the Chancellor to him, and complained very much of the Licence that was aſſumed in the Coffeehouſes, which were the Places where the boldeſt Calumnies and Scandals were raiſed, and diſcourſed amongſt a People who knew not each other, and came together only for that Communication, and from thence were propagated over the Kingdom; and mentioned ſome particular Rumours which had been lately diſperſed from the Fountains, which on his own Behalf He was enough diſpleaſed with, and aſked him what was to be done in it.

THE Chancellor concurred with him in the Senſe of the Scandal, and the Miſchief that muſt attend the Impunity of ſuch Places, where the fouleſt Imputations were laid upon the Government, which were held lawful to be reported and divulged to every Body but to the Magiſtrates, who might examine and puniſh them; of which there having yet been no Precedent, People generally believed that thoſe Houſes had a Charter of Privilege to ſpeak what They would, without being in Danger to be called in Queſtion: And "that it was high Time for his Majeſty to apply ſome "Remedy to ſuch a growing Diſeaſe, and to reform "the Underſtanding of thoſe who believed that no "Remedy could be applied to it. That it would be "fit, either by a Proclamation to forbid all Perſons "to reſort to thoſe Houſes, and ſo totally to ſuppreſs "them; or to employ ſome Spies, who, being pre"ſent in the Converſation might be ready to charge "and accuſe the Perſons who had talked with moſt "Licence in a Subject that would bear a Com"plaint; upon which the Proceedings might be in ſuch "a Manner, as would put an End to the Confidence "that was only miſchievous in thoſe Meetings." The King liked Both the Expedients, and thought that the laſt could not juſtly be made Uſe of till the former ſhould give fair Warning; and commanded him to propoſe it that ſame Day in Council, that ſome Order might be given in it.

THE Chancellor propoſed it, as He was required, with ſuch Arguments as were like to move with Men who knew the Inconveniences which aroſe from thoſe Places; and the King himſelf mentioned it with Paſſion, as derogatory to the Government, and directed that the Attorney might prepare a Proclamation for the Suppreſſion of thoſe Houſes, in which the Board ſeemed to agree: When Sir William Coventry, who had been heard within few Days before to inveigh with much Fierceneſs againſt the Permiſſion of ſo much ſeditious Prattle in the Impunity of thoſe Houſes, ſtood up, and ſaid, "that Coffee was a Commodity that yield"ed the King a good Revenue, and therefore it "would not be juſt to receive the Duties and inhibit "the Sale of it, which many Men found to be very "good for their Health," as if it might not be bought and drank but in thoſe licentious Meetings. "That "it had been permitted in Cromwell's Time, and that "the King's Friends had uſed more Liberty of Speech "in thoſe Places than They durſt do in any other; "and that He thought it would be better to leave "them as they were, without running the Hazard of "Ill being continued notwithſtanding his Command "to the Contrary." And upon theſe Reaſons his Majeſty was converted, and declined any farther Debate; which put the Chancellor very much out of Countenance, nor knew He how to behave himſelf.

The Chancellor's Intereſt declines: Whilſt the Courtiers affect to repreſent it at the higheſt.

THE Truth is: He had a very hard Province, and found his Credit every Day to decay with the King; whilſt They who prevailed againſt him uſed all the Skill and Cunning They had to make it believed, "that his Power with his Majeſty was as great as it "had ever been, and that all thoſe Things which He "moſt oppoſed were acted by his Advice." And whilſt They procured all thoſe for whom He had Kindneſs, or who profeſſed any Reſpect towards him, to be diſcountenanced and undervalued, and preferred none but ſuch who were known to have an Averſion for him upon Somewhat that He had, or They had been told that He had, obſtructed their Pretences in; They perſuaded Men, "that Nobody had any Credit "with the King to diſpoſe of any Place but He."

THOSE very Men would often profeſs to him, "that "They were ſo much afflicted at the King's Courſe of "Life, that They even deſpaired that He would be "able to maſter thoſe Difficulties which would ſtill "preſs him;" and would then tell him ſome Particulars which He himſelf had ſaid or done, or had been ſaid or done lately in his own Preſence, and of which He had never heard before; which gave him Occaſion often to blame them, "that They, who had the Op"portunity to ſee and know many Things which He "had no Notice of or could not take any, and fore"ſaw the Conſequence that did attend them, did yet "forbear to uſe the Credit They had with his Majeſty, "in adverliſing him what They thought and heard all "others ſay;" and He offered "to go with them to "his Majeſty, and make a lively Repreſentation to "him of the great Decay of his Reputation with the "People upon his exorbitant Exceſſes, which God "never would bleſs:" To all which they were not aſhamed to confeſs, "that They never had nor durſt "ſpeak to his Majeſty to that Purpoſe, or in ſuch a "Dialect." Indeed They were the honeſter Men in not doing it, for it had been groſs Hypocriſy to have found Fault with thoſe Actions, upon the purſuing whereof They moſt depended; and the Reformation which They would have been glad to have ſeen, had no Relation to thoſe inordinate and unlawful Appetites, which were the Root from whence all the other Miſchiefs had their Birth. They did not wiſh that the Lady's Authority and Power ſhould be leſſened, much leſs extinguiſhed; and that which would have been the moſt univerſal Bleſſing to the whole Kingdom, would have been received by them as the greateſt Curſe that could befall them.

ONE

Arlington laments to the Chancellor the King's Course of Life: The King enters the Room.

ONE Day the Chancellor and the Lord Arlington were together alone, and the Secretary according to his Custom was ſpeaking ſoberly of many great Miſcarriages by the Licence of the Court, and how much his Majeſty ſuffered thereby; when the King ſuddenly came into the Room to them, and after He was ſate aſked them what They were talking of; to which the Chancellor anſwered "that He would tell him honeſtly and truly, "and was not ſorry for the Opportunity." And the other looking with a very troubled Countenance, He proceeded and ſaid, "that They were ſpeaking of his "Majeſty, and, as They did frequently, were bewail-"ing the unhappy Life He lived, both with Reſpect "to himſelf, who, by the Exceſs of Pleaſures which "He indulged to himſelf, was indeed without the true "Delight and Reliſh of any; and in Reſpect to his "Government, which He totally neglected, and of "which the Kingdom was ſo ſenſible, that it could "not be long before He felt the ill Effects of it. That "the People were well prepared and well inclined "to obey; but if They found that He either would "not or could not command, their Temper would "quickly be changed, and He would find leſs Obedi-"ence in all Places, than was neceſſary for his Affairs: "And that it was too evident and viſible, that He "had already loſt very much of the Affection and Re-"verence the Nation had for him."

To whom the Chancellor repeats the Diſcourſe.

HE ſaid, "that this was the Subject They two were "diſcourſing upon when his Majeſty entered; and "that it is the Argument, upon which all thoſe of his "Council with whom He had any Converſation did "every Day enlarge, when They were together, with "Grief of Heart, and even with Tears; and that He "hoped that ſome of them did, with that Duty that "became them, repreſent to his Majeſty their own "Senſe, and the Senſe his good Subjects had, of his "Condition of living, both with Reference to God "who had wrought ſuch Miracles for him, and ex-"pected ſome proportionable Return; and with Re-"ference to his People, who were in the higheſt Diſ-"content. He doubted all Men did not diſcharge "their Duty this Way; and ſome had confeſſed to "him that They durſt not do it leſt They might offend him, which He had aſſured them often that They would not "do, having had ſo often Experience himſelf of his Good-"neſs in that Reſpect; and that He had the rather "taken this Opportunity to make this Repreſenta-"tion to him in the Preſence of another, which He "had never uſed to do:" And concluded "with be-"ſeeching his Majeſty to believe that which He had "often ſaid to him, that no Prince could be more mi-"ſerable, nor could have more Reaſon to fear his own "Ruin, than He who hath no Servants who dare con-"tradict him in his Opinion, or adviſe him againſt his "Inclinations how natural ſoever."

Arlington puts it off with Raillery.

THE King heard all this and more to the ſame Effect with his uſual Temper (for He was a patient Hearer) and ſpake ſenſibly, as if He thought that much that had been ſaid was with too much Reaſon; when the other, who wiſhed not ſuch an Effect from the Diſcourſe, inſtead of ſeconding any Thing that had been ſaid, made Uſe of the Warmth the Chancellor was in, and of ſome Expreſſions He had uſed, to fall into Raillery, which was his beſt Faculty; with which He diverted the King from any farther ſerious Reflections; and Both of them grew very merry with the other, and reproached his overmuch Severity, now He grew old and conſidered not the Infirmities of younger Men: Which increaſed the Paſſion He was in, and provoked him to ſay, "that it was obſerved abroad, "that it was a Faculty very much improved of late in "the Court, to laugh at thoſe Arguments They could "not anſwer, and which would always be requited "with the ſame Mirth amongſt thoſe who were Ene-"mies to it, and therefore it was Pity that it ſhould "be ſo much embraced by thoſe who pretended to "be Friends;" and to uſe ſome other, too plain, Expreſſions, which it may be were not warily enough uſed, and which the good Lord forgot not to put the King in Mind of, and to deſcant upon the Preſumption, in a Seaſon that was more ripe for ſuch Reflections, which at the preſent He forebore to do, and for ſome Time after remembered only in merry Occaſions.

THOUGH the King did not yet, nor in a good Time after, appear to diſlike the Liberty the Chancellor preſumed to take with him (who often told him, "that "He knew He made himſelf grievous to him, and "gave his Enemies too great Advantages againſt "him; but that the Conſcience of having done his "Duty, and having never failed to inform his Ma-"jeſty of any Thing that was fit for him to know and "to believe, was the only Support He had to bear "the preſent Trouble of his Mind, and to prepare "him for thoſe Diſtreſſes which He foreſaw He was "to undergo:" Which his Majeſty heard with great Goodneſs and Condeſcenſion, and vouchſafed ſtill to tell him, "that it was in Nobody's Power to divert his "Kindneſs from him"): Yet He found every Day that ſome Arguments grew leſs acceptable to him, and that the conſtant Converſation with Men of great Profaneneſs, whoſe Wit conſiſted in abuſing Scripture, and in repeating and acting what the Preachers ſaid in their Sermons, and turning it into Ridicule (a Faculty in which the Duke of Buckingham excelled), did much leſſen the natural Eſteem and Reverence He had for the Clergy; and inclined him to conſider them as a Rank of Men that compounded a Religion for their own Advantage, and to ſerve their own Turns Nor was all He could ſay to him of Weight enough to make Impreſſion to the contrary.

AND then He ſeemed to think, "that Men were "bolder in the examining his Actions and cenſuring "them than They ought to be:" And once He told him, "that He thought He was more ſevere againſt "common Infirmities than He ſhould be; and that "his Wife was not courteous in returning Viſits and "Civilities to thoſe who paid her Reſpect; and that "He expected that all his Friends ſhould be very kind "to thoſe who They knew were much loved by him, "and that He thought ſo much Juſtice was due to "him."

The Chancellor ſeriouſly remonſtrates with him.

THE Chancellor, who had never diſſembled with him, but on the contrary had always endeavoured to perſuade him to believe, that Diſſimulation was the moſt diſhoneſt and ungentlemanly Quality that could be affected, anſwered him very roundly, "that He "might ſeem not to underſtand his Meaning, and ſo "make no Reply to the Diſcourſe He had made: But "that He underſtood it all, and the Meaning of every "Word of it; and therefore that it would not become "him to ſuffer his Majeſty to depart with an Opinion, "that what He had ſaid would produce any Altera-"tion in his Behaviour towards him, or Reformation "of his Manners towards any other Perſons."

"THAT for the firſt Part, the Liberty Men took "to ſpeak of him and to cenſure his Actions, He was "of the Opinion that it was a very great Preſump-"tion, and a Crime very fit to be puniſhed: For let "it be true or falſe, Men had been always ſeverely "chaſtiſed for that Licence, becauſe it tended to Se-"dition. However He put his Majeſty in Mind of "the Example of Philip of Macedon, who, when one "of his Servants accuſed a Perſon of Condition to "him of having ſpoken ill of him, and offered to go "himſelf to the Magiſtrate and make Proof of it, an-"ſwered him; that the Perſon He accuſed was a Man "of the greateſt Reputation of Wiſdom and Integrity in "the Kingdom, and therefore it would be fit in the firſt "Place to examine, whether himſelf (the King) had not "done Somewhat by which He had deſerved to be ſpoken "of: Indeed this Way the beſt Men would often re-"ceive Benefit from their worſt Enemies. For the "Matter itſelf," He ſaid, "He need make no Apo-"logy: For that it was notoriouſly known, that He "had conſtantly given it in Charge to all the Judges, "to make diligent Inquiry into Miſdemeanours and

"Tranſgreſſions

" Tranſgreſſions of that Magnitude, and to puniſh " thoſe who were guilty in the moſt exemplary Man- " ner; and that He took not more Pains any Way, " than to preſerve in the Hearts of the People that " Veneration for his Perſon that is due to his Dignity, " and to perſuade many who appeared afflicted with " the Reports They heard, that They heard more than " was true; and that the ſuppreſſing all Reports of that " Kind was the Duty of every good Subject, and would " contribute more towards the reforming any Thing that " in Truth is amiſs, than the propagating the Scandal by " ſpreading it in Diſcourſes could do. However that all " this which was his Duty, and but his Duty, did not " make it unfit for him, or any other under his Obli- " gations, in fit Seaſons to make a lively Repreſenta- " tion to his Majeſty of what is done, and how ſe- " cretly ſoever, that cannot be juſtified or excuſed; " and of the Untruths and Scandals which ſpring from " thence to his irreparable Diſhonour and Prejudice."

" For the other Part, of Want of Ceremony and " Reſpect to thoſe who were loved and eſteemed by " his Majeſty, He might likewiſe avoid enlarging up- " on that Subject, by putting his Majeſty in Mind, " that He had the Honour to ſerve him in a Province " that excuſed him from making Viſits, and exempt- " ed him from all Ceremonies of that Kind. But He " would not ſhelter himſelf under ſuch a general De- " fence, when He perceived that his Majeſty had in " the Reprehenſion a particular Intention: And there- " fore He confeſſed ingenuouſly to his Majeſty, that " He did deny himſelf many Liberties, which in them- " ſelves might be innocent enough and agreeable to " his Perſon, becauſe they would not be decent or " agreeable to the Office He held, which obliged him " for his Majeſty's Honour, and to preſerve him from " the Reproach of having put a light Perſon into a grave " Place, to have the more Care of his own Carriage " and Behaviour. And that, as it would reflect upon " his Majeſty himſelf, if his Chancellor was known or " thought to be of diſſolute and debauched Manners, " which would make him as uncapable as unwor- " thy to do him Service; ſo it would be a Blemiſh and " Taint upon him to give any Countenance, or to pay " more than ordinary, curſory and unavoidable Civi- " lities, to Perſons infamous for any Vice, for which " by the Laws of God and Man They ought to be " odious, and to be expoſed to the Judgment of the " Church and State. And that He would not for his " own Sake and for his own Dignity, to how low a " Condition ſoever He might be reduced, ſtoop to " ſuch a Condeſcenſion as to have the leaſt Commerce, " or to make the Application of a Viſit, to any ſuch " Perſon, for any Benefit or Advantage that it might " bring to him. He did beſeech his Majeſty not to " believe, that He hath a Prerogative to declare Vice " Virtue; or to qualify any Perſon who lives in a Sin " and avows it, againſt which God himſelf hath pro- " nounced Damnation, for the Company and Con- " verſation of innocent and worthy Perſons. And that " whatever low Obedience, which was in Truth groſs " Flattery, ſome People might pay to what They be- " lieved would be grateful to his Majeſty, They had " in their Hearts a perfect Deteſtation of the Perſons " They made Addreſs to: And that for his Part He " was long reſolved that his Wife ſhould not be one " of thoſe Courtiers; and that He would himſelf much " leſs like her Company, if She put herſelf into theirs " who had not the ſame Innocence."

THE King was not the more pleaſed for the Defence He made, and did not diſſemble his Diſlike of it, without any other Sharpneſs, than by telling him " that He " was in the Wrong, and had an Underſtanding diffe- " rent from all other Men who had Experience in " the World." And it is moſt certain, it was an avowed Doctrine, and with great Addreſs daily inſinuated to the King, " that Princes had many Li- " berties which private Perſons have not; and that a " Lady of Honour who dedicates herſelf only to pleaſe " a King, and continues faithful to him, ought not " to be branded with any Name or Mark of Infamy, " but hath been always looked upon by all Perſons " wellbred as worthy of Reſpect;" And to this Purpoſe the Hiſtory of all the Amours of his Grandfather were carefully preſented to him, and with what Indignation He ſuffered any Diſreſpect towards any of his Miſtreſſes.

BUT of all theſe Artifices the Chancellor had no Apprehenſion, out of the Confidence He had in the Integrity of the King's Nature; and that though He might be ſwayed to ſacrifice his preſent Affections to his Appetite, He could never be prevailed upon to entertain a real Suſpicion of his very paſſionate Affection and Duty to his Perſon. That which gave him moſt Trouble, and many Times made him wiſh himſelf in any private Condition ſeparated from the Court, was that Unfixedneſs and Irreſolution of Judgment that was natural to all his Family of the Male Line, which often expoſed them all to the Importunies of bold, and to the Snares of crafty, Men.

ONE Day the King and the Duke came to the Chancellor together; and the King told him with a very viſible Trouble in his Countenance, " that They were " come to confer and adviſe with him upon an Affair " of Importance, which exceedingly diſquieted them " Both. That Dick Talbot" (which was the familiar Appellation, according to the ill Cuſtom of the Court, that moſt Men gave him) " had a Reſolution to aſſaſ- " ſinate the Duke of Ormond. That He had ſworn " in the Preſence of two or three Perſons of Honour, " that He would do it in the Revenge of ſome Injuries " which, He pretended, He had done his Family: That " He had much rather fight with him, which He knew the " Duke would be willing enough to do; but That He ſhould " never be able to bring to paſs; and therefore He would " take his Revenge in any Way that ſhould offer itſelf. And " every Body knew that the Man had Courage and " Wickedneſs enough to attempt any Thing like it. " That the Duke of Ormond knew well enough that " the Fellow threatened it, and was like enough to act " it; but that He thought it below him to apprehend " it; And that his Majeſty came to the Notice of it " by the Earl of Clancarty, to whom Sir Robert Talbot, " the elder Brother of the other, told it, to the End " that the Earl might give the Duke Notice of it, and " find ſome Way to prevent it; and the Earl had that " Day informed the King of it, as the beſt Way He " could think of to prevent it." His Majeſty ſaid, " there remained no Doubt to be made of the Truth " of it; for there were two or three more of unque- " ſtionable Credit who had heard him uſe the ſame " Expreſſions: And that He had firſt ſpoken with " his Brother, whoſe Servant He was, whom He " found equally incenſed as himſelf; and that They " came immediately together to conſult with him " what was to be done."

One Talbot an Iriſhman, deſigns to aſſaſſinate the Duke of Ormond.

THE Chancellor knew all the Brothers well, and was believed to have too much Prejudice to them all. They were all of an Iriſh Family but of ancient Engliſh Extraction, which had always inhabited within that Circle that was called the Pale; which, being originally an Engliſh Plantation, was in ſo many hundred Years for the moſt Part degenerated into the Manners of the Iriſh, and roſe and mingled with them in the late Rebellion: And of this Family there were two diſtinct Families, who had competent Eſtates, and lived in many Deſcents in the Rank of Gentlemen of Quality; and thoſe Brothers were all the Sons, or the Grandſons, of one who was a Judge in Ireland, and eſteemed a learned Man. The eldeſt was Sir Robert Talbot, who was by much the beſt; that is, the reſt were much worſe Men: A Man, whom the Duke of Ormond moſt eſteemed of thoſe who had been in Rebellion, as one who had leſs Malice than moſt of the reſt, and had recommended to the King as a Perſon fit for his Favour. But becauſe He did not aſk all on his Behalf, which He muſt have done for a Man entirely innocent, this Refuſal was looked upon as the higheſt Diſobligation.

An Account of this Man's Family, with the Characters of the five Brothers.

Sir Robert Talbot the eldeſt.

Peter the ſecond, a Jeſuit.

THE ſecond Brother was a Jeſuit, who had been very troubleſome to the King abroad, and had behaved himſelf in ſo inſolent a Manner, that his Majeſty had forbidden him his Court; after which He went into England, and applied himſelf to the ruling Power there, and was by that ſent into Spain, at the Time when the Treaty was at Fuentarabia between the two Crowns, to procure that England might be included in that Peace, and the King excluded, and not to be ſuffered to remain in Flanders. Of all which his Majeſty having Advertiſement, ſent poſitive Orders to Sir Harry Bennet, his Reſident then in Madrid to complain of him, and to deſire Don Lewis de Haro, that He might receive no Countenance in that Court. But the Jeſuit had better and more powerful Recommendation; and was not only welcome there, but (which was very ſtrange, conſidering his Talent of Underſtanding) in a ſhort Time got ſo much Intereſt in the Reſident, that He received him into all Kind of Familiarity and Truſt, and undertook to reconcile the King to him, and was as good as his Word: And from the Time of his Majeſty's Return, or rather from the Return of Sir Harry Bennet, He was as much and as buſy in the Court as if He were a domeſtick Servant. And after the Queen came to Whitehall, He was admitted one of her Almoners; and walked with the ſame or more Freedom in the King's Houſe (and in Clergy Habit) than any of his Majeſty's Chaplains did; who did not preſume to be ſeen in the Galleries and other reſerved Rooms, where He was converſant with the ſame Confidence as if He were of the Bedchamber.

Gilbert the third, called Colonel Talbot.

THE third Brother was Gilbert, who was called Colonel Talbot from ſome Command He had with the Rebels againſt the King. And He had likewiſe been with the King in Flanders, that is had lived in Antwerp and Bruſſels whilſt the King was there; and being a half-witted Fellow did not meddle with any Thing nor angered any Body, but found a Way to get good Cloaths and to play, and was looked upon as a Man of Courage, having fought a Duel or two with ſtout Men.

Thomas, the fourth, a Franciſcan Friar.

THE fourth Brother was a Franciſcan Friar, of Wit enough, of but of ſo notorious Debauchery, that He was frequently under ſevere Diſcipline by the Superiours of his Order for his ſcandalous Life, which made him hate his Habit, and take all Opportunities to make Journies into England and Ireland: But not being able to live there, He was forced to return and put on his abhorred Habit, which he always called his Fool's Coat, and came ſeldom into thoſe Places where He was known, and ſo wandered into Germany and Flanders, and took all Opportunities to be in the Places where the King was; and ſo He came to Cologne and Bruſſels and Bruges, and being a merry Fellow, was the more made of for laughing at and contemning his Brother the Jeſuit, who had not ſo good natural Parts, though by his Education He had more Sobriety, and lived without Scandal in his Manners. He went by the Name of Tom Talbot, and after the King's Return was in London in his Man's Cloaths (as He called them), with the natural Licence of an Iriſh Friar (which are a People, for the moſt Part, of the whole Creation the moſt ſottiſh and the moſt brutal), and againſt his Obedience, and all Orders of his Superiours, who interdicted him to ſay Maſs.

Richard, the fifth, the Perſon concerned.

THE fifth Brother was this Dick Talbot, who gave the King and the Duke the Trouble mentioned before. He was brought into Flanders firſt by Daniel O Neile, as one who was willing to aſſaſſinate Cromwell; and He made a Journey into England with that Reſolution not long before his Death, and after it returned into Flanders ready to do all that He ſhould be required. He was a very handſome young Man, wore good Cloaths, and was without Doubt of a clear, ready Courage, which was Virtue enough to recommend a Man to the Duke's good Opinion; which, with more Expedition than could be expected, He got to that Degree, that He was made of his Bedchamber; and, from that Qualification, embarked himſelf after the King's Return in the Pretences of the Iriſh, with ſuch an unuſual Confidence, and upon private Contracts with very ſcandalous Circumſtances, that the Chancellor had ſometimes at the Council-Table been obliged to give him ſevere Reprehenſions, and often deſired the Duke to withdraw his Countenance from him. He had likewiſe declared very loudly againſt the Jeſuit, and, though He had made many Addreſſes unto him by Letters and by ſome Friends who had Credit with him, would never from the Time of the King's Return be perſuaded to ſpeak with him, and had once prevailed with the King ſo far, that He was forbid to come to the Court; but He had a Friend, who after ſome Time got that Reſtraint off again. The Chancellor had likewiſe obſerved the Friar to be too frequently in the Galleries, and ſometimes drunk there, and cauſed him to be forbid to come into the Court: And the eldeſt Brother, towards whom He had rather Kindneſs than Prejudice, finding many Obſtructions in his Pretences, was perſuaded to think him not his Friend. And ſo He got the Reproach of being an Enemy to the whole Family.

THIS Conſideration did really affect the Chancellor, ſo that He appeared more reſerved and more wary in this Particular propoſed by the King and by the Duke, than He uſed to be. He ſaid, "that in many Re-
"ſpects He was not ſo fit to adviſe in this Particular
"as other Men were. Though this Man's Behaviour
"was ſo ſcandalous that it deſerved exemplary Puniſh-
"ment, yet He did not conceive any preſent Danger
"from it: That He would deny it and repent it, and "give any other Satisfaction that would be required or "aſſigned; and then his Majeſty and the Duke would "be prevailed with to take off their Diſpleaſure. And "therefore it would be better not to make ſuch a Mat"ter publick, which, conſidering the Perſon and the "Circumſtances, would make a deep Impreſſion upon
"the Minds of all wiſe Men; than, after the World "takes Notice of it, to paſs it over with a light and "ordinary Puniſhment." The King interrupted him as He was going on, and told him, "there was no "Danger of that, and that He would deal freely with "him. That as the Offence was in itſelf unpardon-"able, ſo He and his Brother were reſolved to take "this Opportunity and Occaſion to free themſelves
"from the Importunity of the whole Family: That "all the Brothers were naughty Fellows, and had no "good Meaning." And thereupon his Majeſty enlarged with much Sharpneſs upon the Jeſuit and Friar, with Charges upon Both very weighty and unanſwerable; and the Duke upon this Man who was the Subject of the Debate: And Both concluded, "that They
"ſhould be in great Eaſe by the Abſence of all of "them, which ſhould be enjoined as ſoon as a Re-
"ſolution ſhould be taken in this Particular."

THE Chancellor knew that there was Somewhat elſe, which was not ſo fit to be mentioned, that had offended them Both as much; and thought He had Reaſon to believe that They would be Both reſolute in the Puniſhment, and that They had deliberated it too long to depart from the Proſecution. He therefore adviſed, "that the Gentleman ſhould be preſently
"apprehended and examined upon the Words, which "ſome Witneſs ſhould be ready to affirm: And that
"thereupon He ſhould be ſent to the Tower, and the "next Day that his Majeſty ſhould inform the Privy "Council of the Whole, which without Queſtion
"would give Direction to his Attorney General to "proſecute this foul Miſdemeanour in ſuch a Manner,
"that ſhould put this Gentleman in ſuch a Condi"tion that He ſhould not trouble the Court with his "Attendance; and other Men ſhould by his Exam"ple find, that their Tongues are not their own, to "be employed according to their own malicious
"Pleaſures."

He is ſent to the Tower by the Chancellor's Advice.

THE Perſon was the ſame Night ſent to the Tower; and both the King and the Duke declared themſelves, in in the Preſence of their Servants and many others, to be as highly offended, and as poſitively reſolved to take as much Vengeance upon the impudent Preſumption of the Offender as the Rigour of the Law would inflict, as ever They had done upon any Occurrence and Accident in their Lives: And if They had had Perſons enough about them, who out of a juſt Senſe of their Honour would have confirmed them in the Judgment They were of, it would have been in Nobody's Power to have ſhaken them. But as from the firſt Day of his Commitment, the Servants near the Perſon both of the King and Duke preſumed, againſt all ancient Order (which made it a Crime in any to perform thoſe Civilities to Perſons declared to be under his Majeſty's Diſpleaſure), to viſit Mr. Talbot, and to cenſure thoſe who had adviſed his Commitment; ſo after ſome few Days, when They thought the Duke's Paſſion in ſome Degree abated, the Lord Berkley confidently told the Duke, "that He ſuffered much in the Opinion of the World, "in permitting a Servant of ſo near Relation to be "committed to Priſon for a few haſty and unadviſed "Words to which He had been provoked; and that "it was well enough known that it was by the Con"trivement and Advice of the Chancellor, who was "taken Notice of to be an Enemy to that whole Fa"mily, nor any great Friend to any of his Highneſs's "Servants; and if He had that Credit to remove any "of them from his Perſon, there would in a ſhort "Time be few of them found in his Court."

THIS was ſeconded by all the Standers by; and though it did not ſuddenly work its Effect, yet the continual preſſing it by Degrees weakened the Reſolution: And the ſame Offices being with equal Importunity performed towards the King, and with the more Zeal after it was publiſhed that the Whole was done by the Chancellor's Procurement; both his Majeſty and his Highneſs grew weary of their Severity, and, upon Conference together, reſolved to interpoſe with the Duke for his Remiſſion, who diſdained to make himſelf a Proſecutor in ſuch a Tranſgreſſion. And ſo the Priſoner returned to Whitehall, with the Advantage which Men who have been unjuſtly impriſoned uſually receive: And all Men thought He triumphed over the Chancellor, who, how unconcerned ſoever, knew every Day the leſs how to behave himſelf. And this unhappy Conſtitution grew ſo notorious (for there were too many Inſtances of it), that all Men grew leſs reſolute in Matters which concerned the King and drew the Diſpleaſure of others upon them, which was like to prove unprofitable to them.

But ſoon releaſed by the Artifice of the Chancellor's Enemies.

ACCORDING to their laſt Prorogation the Parliament convened again upon the one and twentieth of September; when the King told them, "that He was "very glad to meet ſo many of them together again, "and thanked God for their meeting together again "in that Place." He ſaid, "little Time had paſſed "ſince They were almoſt in Deſpair of having that "Place left to meet in. They ſaw the diſmal Ruins "the Fire had made; and Nothing but a Miracle of "God's Mercy could have preſerved what was left "from the ſame Deſtruction."

The Parliament meets. The King's Speech.

HIS Majeſty told them, "He need make no Excuſe "to them for having diſpenſed with their Attendance "in April; He was confident They all thanked him "for it: The Truth is, He deſired to put them to as "little Trouble as He could; and He could tell them "truly, He deſired to put them to as little Coſt as was "poſſible. He wiſhed with all his Heart that He could "bear the whole Charge of the War himſelf, and that "his Subjects ſhould reap the whole Benefit of it to "themſelves. But He had two great and powerful "Enemies, who uſed all the Ways They could, fair "and foul, to make all the World to concur with "them; and the War was more chargeable by that "Conjunction, than any Body thought it would have "been. He needed not tell them the Succeſs of "the Summer, in which God had given them great "Succeſs; and no Queſtion the Enemy had under"gone great Loſſes; and if it had pleaſed God to "have withheld his late Judgment by Fire, He had "been in no ill Condition." His Majeſty confeſſed "that They had given him very large Supplies for "the carrying on the War: And yet," He told them, "that if He had not, by anticipating his own Reve"nue, raiſed a very great Sum of Money, He had "not been able to have ſet out the Fleet the laſt "Spring; and He had ſome Hope upon the ſame "Credit to be able to pay off the great Ships as they "ſhould come in. They would conſider what was to "be done next, when They were well informed of "the Expence: And He would leave it to their Wiſ"doms, to find out the beſt Expedients for the car"rying on the War with as little Burden to the Peo"ple as was poſſible." He ſaid, "He would add "no more than to put them in Mind, that their Ene"mies were very inſolent; and if They were able the "laſt Year to perſuade their miſerable People whom "They miſled, that the Contagion had ſo waſted the "Nation, and impoveriſhed the King, that He would "not be able to ſet out any Fleet; how would They be "exalted with this laſt Impoveriſhment of the City, "and contemn all reaſonable Conditions of Peace? "And therefore He could not doubt but that They "would provide accordingly."

INDEED the King did not till now underſtand the Damage He had ſuſtained by the Plague, much leſs what He muſt ſuſtain by the Fire. Monies could neither be collected nor borrowed where the Plague had prevailed, which was over all the City and over a great Part of the Country; the Collectors durſt not go to require it or receive it. Yet the Fountains remained yet clear, and the Waters would run again: But this late Conflagration had dried up or ſo ſtopped the very Fountains, that there was no Proſpect when they would flow again. The two great Branches of the Revenue, the Cuſtoms and Exciſe, which was the great and almoſt inexhauſtible Security to borrow Money upon, were now bankrupt, and would neither bring in Money nor ſupply Credit: All the Meaſures by which Computations had been made were ſo broken, that they could not be brought to meet again. By a Medium of the conſtant Receipts it had been depended upon, that what had been borrowed upon that Fund would by this Time have been fully ſatisfied with all the Intereſt, whereby the Money would have been replaced in the Hands to which it was due, which would have been glad to have laid it out again; and the Security would have remained ſtill in Vigour to be applied to any other Occaſions: But now the Plague had routed all thoſe Receipts, eſpecially in London, where the great Conduits of thoſe Receipts ſtill ran. The Plague and the War had ſo totally broken and diſtracted thoſe Receipts, that the Farmers of either had not received enough to diſcharge the conſtant Burden of the Officers, and were ſo far from paying any Part of the Principal that was ſecured upon it, that it left the Intereſt unpaid to ſwell the Principal. And now this Deluge by Fire had diſſipated the Perſons, and deſtroyed the Houſes, which were liable to the Reimburſement of all Arrears; and the very Stocks were conſumed which ſhould carry on and revive the Trade. And the third next conſiderable Branch of the Revenue, the Chimney-Money, was determined; and the City muſt be rebuilt before any Body could be required to pay for his Chimnies.

THIS was the true State of the Crown, if all other Inconveniences and caſual Expences had been away, and all Application to Things ſerious had been made by all Perſons concerned. And this woful Proſpect was in View when the Parliament met again; which came not together with the better Countenance by ſeeing all Hopes abroad with ſo ſad an Aſpect, and all Things at Home (that troubled them much more) appear ſo deſperate in many Reſpects. Yet within few Days after the King had ſpoken to them, the Houſe of Commons mons being moſt filled with the King's Servants, the Gentlemen of the Country being not yet come, there was a faint Vote procured, "that they would give a "Supply to the King proportionable to his Wants," without mentioning any Sum, or which Way it ſhould be raiſed: Nor from that Minute did They make the leaſt Reflection upon that Engagement in many Months after. Whilſt the Enemies, much more exalted than ever, believed, as They had good Cauſe, that They ſhould reap a much greater Benefit by the Burning of London than they had from the Contagion.

Diſcontents in the Houſe of Commons.

When the Numbers of the Members increaſed, the Parliament appeared much more chagrined than it had hitherto done; and though They made the ſame Profeſſions of Affection and Duty to the King They had ever done, They did not conceal the very ill Opinion They had of the Court and the continual Riotings there: And the very idle Diſcourſes of ſome (who were much countenanced) upon the miſerable Event of the Fire made them even believe, that the former Jealouſies of the City, when They ſaw their Houſes burning at ſuch a Diſtance from each other, were not without ſome Foundation, nor without juſt Apprehenſion of a Conſpiracy, and that it had not been diligently enough examined; and therefore They appointed a Committee, with large Authority to ſend for and examine all Perſons who could give any Information concerning it.

A Committee appointed to inquire into the Cauſes of the Fire.

When any Mention was made of the Declaration They had ſo lately paſſed, for giving the King Supply, and "that it was high Time to diſpatch it, that "all neceſſary Proviſions might be made for the ſetting out a Fleet againſt the Spring;" it was anſwered with Paſſion, "that the King's Wants muſt be "made firſt to appear before any Supply muſt be diſcourſed of: That there were already ſuch vaſt Sums "of Money given to the King, that there was none "left in the Country; nor could any Commodities "there, upon which They ſhould raiſe wherewith to "pay their Taxes, be ſold for Want of Money, which "was all brought to London in Specie, and none left to "carry on the Commerce and Trade in the Country, "where They could not ſell their Corn or their Cattle or their Wool for Half the Value."

They who had not ſate in the Parliament at Oxford were exceedingly vexed, that there had been ſo much given there, ſo ſoon after the two Millions and a Half had been granted; and ſaid, "if the King wanted "again already, that He muſt have been abominably "cheated, which was fit to be examined. That the "Number of the Ships, which had been ſet out by "the King in ſeveral Fleets ſince the Beginning of this "War, was no Secret; and that there are Men "enough who are acquainted with the Charge of ſetting out and manning and victualling Ships, and "can make thereby a reaſonable Computation what "this vaſt Expence can amount to: And that They "cannot but conclude, that if his Majeſty hath been "honeſtly dealt with, there muſt remain ſtill a very "great Proportion of Money to carry on the War, "without Need of impoſing more upon the People, "till They are better able to bear it. And therefore "that it was abſolutely neceſſary, that all thoſe, "through whoſe Hands the Money had paſſed, "ſhould firſt give an exact Account of what They "had received, and what and how They had diſburſed it: And when that ſhould appear, it would be "ſeaſonable to demand an Addition of Supply, which "would be chearfully granted."

And for the better Expedition of this (for every Body confeſſed that the Time preſſed) it was propoſed, "that forthwith a Bill ſhould be prepared, which "ſhould paſs into an Act of Parliament, in which ſuch "Commiſſioners ſhould be appointed as the Houſes "ſhould think fit, to examine all Accounts of thoſe "who had received or iſſued out any Monies for this "War; and where They found any Perſons faulty, "and who had broken their Truſt, They ſhould be "liable to ſuch Puniſhment as the Parliament ſhould "think fit:" And a Committee was preſently named to prepare ſuch a Bill accordingly. This Propoſition found ſuch a Concurrence in the Houſe, that none of the Court thought fit to oppoſe it; and others who knew the Method to be new, and liable to juſt Exceptions, thought it to as little Purpoſe to endeavour to divert it: And ſo all Motions for preſent Supply were to be laid aſide till a more favourable Conjuncture; and the Overture had been contrived and put on by many who ſeemed not to like it, which is an Artifice not unuſual in Courts or Parliaments.

A Bill brought in for inſpecting publick Accounts.

The Perſons, who were principally aimed at (for no Doubt They believed that others would be comprehended), were Sir George Carteret the Treaſurer of the Navy, through whom all that Expence had paſſed, who had many Enemies, upon the Opinion that his Office was too great, and the more by the ill Offices Sir William Coventry was always ready to do him; and the Lord Aſhley, who was Treaſurer of all the Money that had been raiſed upon Prizes, which could not but be a great Proportion. The former was a punctual Officer and a good Accomptant, and had already paſſed his Account in the Exchequer for two Years, upon which He had his Quietus eſt; which was the only lawful Way known and practiſed by all Accomptants to the Crown, who can receive a good Diſcharge no other Way: And he was ready to make another Year's Account. But what Method Commiſſioners extraordinary by Act of Parliament would put it into, He could not imagine, nor be well ſatisfied with. The other, the Lord Aſhley, had more Reaſon to be troubled, for He was by his Commiſſion exempted from giving any other Account but to the King himſelf, which Exemption was the only Reaſon that made him ſo ſolicitous for the Office; and He well knew that there were great Sums iſſued, which could not be put into any publick Account: So that his Perplexity in ſeveral Reſpects was not ſmall. And They Both applied themſelves to the King for his Protection in the Point.

His Majeſty was no leſs troubled, knowing that Both had iſſued out many Sums upon his Warrants, which He would not ſuffer to be produced; and called that Committee of the Privy Council with which He uſed to adviſe, and complained of this unuſual Way of Proceeding in the Houſe of Commons, which would terrify all Men from ſerving his Majeſty in any Receipts; to which Employment Men ſubmitted becauſe They knew what They were to do, and what They were to ſuffer. If They made their Account according to the known Rules of the Exchequer, their Diſcharge could not be denied; and if They failed, They knew what Proceſs would be awarded againſt them. But to account by ſuch Orders as the Parliament ſhould preſcribe, and to be liable to ſuch Puniſhment as the Parliament would inflict, was ſuch an Uncertainty as would deprive them of all Reſt and Quiet of Mind; and was in itſelf ſo unjuſt, that his Majeſty declared "that He would never ſuffer it: That He hoped it "would never find a Conſent in the Houſe of Commons; "if it ſhould, that the Houſe of Peers would reject "it; but if it ſhould be brought to him, He was reſolved "never to give his Royal Aſſent." There was no Man preſent, who did not ſeem fully to concur with his Majeſty that He ſhould never conſent to it: "However that "the beſt Care and Diligence ſhould be uſed, that it "might never be preſented to him, but ſtopped in the "Houſes; and to that Purpoſe that the Members ſhould "be prepared by giving them Notice of his Pleaſure."

Upon which the King conſults the private Committee.

The Chancellor upon this Argument, in which He diſcerned no Oppoſition, enlarged himſelf upon what He had often before put his Majeſty in Mind of; "that He could not be too indulgent in the Defence "of the Privileges of Parliament; that He hoped He "would never violate any of them:" But He deſired him "to be equally ſolicitous to prevent the Exceſſes "in Parliament, and not to ſuffer them to extend their

"Juriſdiction

" Juriſdiction to Caſes They have Nothing to do " with; and that to reſtrain them within their proper " Bounds and Limits is as neceſſary, as it is to pre- " ſerve them from being invaded. That this was ſuch a " new Encroachment as had no Bottom; and the Scars " were yet too freſh and green of thoſe Wounds which " had been inflicted upon the Kingdom from ſuch " Uſurpation." And therefore He deſired his Majeſty " to be firm in the Reſolution He had taken, and not to " depart from it; and if ſuch a Bill ſhould be brought " up to the Houſe of Peers, He would not fail in doing " his Duty, and ſpeaking freely his Opinion againſt " ſuch Innovations, how many ſoever it might offend."

Which is ſoon reported abroad to his Prejudice.

All which Diſcourſe of his was in a ſhort Time after communicated to thoſe, who would not fail to make Uſe of it to his Diſadvantage.

THERE was a Correſpondence by this Time begun and warmly purſued between ſome diſcontented Members of the Houſe of Peers, who thought their Parts not enough valued (and the Duke of Buckingham was in the Head of them), and ſome Members of the Houſe of Commons, who made themſelves remarkable by oppoſing all Things which were propoſed in that Houſe for the King's Service, or which were like to be grateful to him, as Sir Richard Temple, Mr. Seymour, and Mr. Garraway, and Sir Robert Howard; who were all bold Speakers, and meant to make themſelves conſiderable by ſaying, upon all Occaſions, what wiſer Men would not, whatever They thought.

The Duke of Buckingham at the Head of the Oppoſition.

THE Duke of Buckingham took more Pains than was agreeable to his Conſtitution to get an Intereſt in all ſuch Perſons, invited them to his Table, pretended to have a great Eſteem of their Parts, aſked Counſel of them, lamented the King's neglecting his Buſineſs, and committing it to other People who were not fit for it; and then reported all the Licence and Debauchery of the Court in the moſt lively Colours, being himſelf a frequent Eye and Earwitneſs of it. He had a mortal Quarrel with the Lady, and was at this Time ſo much in the King's Diſpleaſure (as He was very frequently), that He forbore going to the Court, and revenged himſelf upon it by all the merry Tales He could tell of what was done there.

IT cannot be imagined, conſidering the looſe Life He led (which was a Life more by Night than by Day) in all the Liberties that Nature could deſire or Wit invent, how great an Intereſt He had in Both Houſes of Parliament; that is, how many in Both would follow his Advice, and concur in what He propoſed. His Quality and Condeſcenſions, the Pleaſantneſs of his Humour and Converſation; the Extravagance and Sharpneſs of his Wit, unreſtrained by any Modeſty or Religion, drew Perſons of all Affections and Inclinations to like his Company; and to believe that the Levities and the Vanities would be wrought off by Age, and there would enough of Good be left to become a great Man, and make him uſeful to his Country; for which He pretended to have a wonderful Affection and Reverence; and that all his Diſpleaſure againſt the Court proceeded from their declared Malignity againſt the Liberty of the Subject, and their Deſire that the King ſhould govern by the Example of France. He had always held Intelligence with the principal Perſons of the Levelling Party, and profeſſed to deſire that Liberty of Conſcience might be granted to all; and exerciſed his Wit with moſt Licence againſt the Church, the Law and the Court.

THE King had conſtant Intelligence of all his Behaviour, and the Liberty He took in his Diſcourſes of him, for which He had Indignation enough: But of this new Stratagem to make himſelf great in Parliament, and to have a Faction there to diſturb his Buſineſs, his Majeſty had no Apprehenſion, believing it impoſſible for the Duke to keep his Mind long bent upon any particular Deſign, or to keep and obſerve thoſe Hours and Orders of ſleeping and eating, as Men who pretend to Buſineſs are obliged to; and that it was more impoſſible, for him to make and preſerve a Friendſhip with any ſerious Perſons, whom He could never reſtrain himſelf from abuſing and making ridiculous, as ſoon as He was out of their Company. Yet with all theſe Infirmities and Vices He found a Reſpect and Concurrence from Men of different Tempers and Talents, and had an incredible Opinion with the People.

His Hatred to the Duke of Ormond.

THE great Object of his Diſlike, Diſpleaſure and Hatred was the Duke of Ormond, who being his Equal in Title, and Superiour in Credit with the King, and at leaſt equal to him in all other Reſpects, He looked upon him as his Rival; and that his conſtant Attendance upon the King through all his Fortunes, was a Reproach to him for not having performed his Duty that Way, and gave him a general Reputation in the Kingdom with all Men who had been faithful to the Crown. The Duke of Ormond's younger Son had married his Niece, who was the Heir apparent of his Houſe; to which though He had given his Conſent when He ſaw it was not in his Power to contradict it, yet He pretended that the Duke had made many Promiſes of Friendſhip to him which He had not made good; whereas in Truth the other did really deſire, and had heartily endeavoured, to do him all the good Offices He could with the King, which ſome other new Extravagance of his own diſappointed and made uneffectual. Let the Ground and Reaſon be what they will, He did not diſſemble to hate the Duke of Ormond heartily, and to be willing to undertake the Proſecution of any Complaint againſt him; of which, in that diſtempered and disjointed Condition of Ireland, there could not be Occaſion wanting, as ſoon as it was known that ſuch a Patron was ready to undertake their Defence. And it cannot be denied (the Spirit of Envy is ſo powerful), that there were too many, who had no Affection for the Duke of Buckingham, who were yet willing that any Thing ſhould be done to the Prejudice of the Duke of Ormond, who They thought eclipſed the Nobility of England.

THERE had been for many Months a great Murmur, rather than Complaint, " of the great Damage the King- " dom in general ſuſtained by the Importation of ſuch " great Quantities of Iriſh Cattle, which were bred there " for Nothing, and tranſported for little, that They " might well underſell all the Cattle here; and from " hence the Breed of Cattle in the Kingdom was to- " tally given over, and thereby the Land would yield " no Rent proportionably to what it had ever done: " And that this was a principal Cauſe of the Want of " Money in the Country, which could only be reme- " died by a very ſtrict Act of Parliament, to forbid " the Importation of any Sort of Cattle out of Ireland " into this Kingdom." And ſome of them who had moſt thought of the Matter had prepared a Bill, and brought it into the Houſe of Commons, where it was read. At firſt it underwent very calm and reaſonable Debates. Very many Members of ſeveral Counties deſired, " that their Counties might not undergo any " Damage for the Benefit of other individual Places." They profeſſed " that their Counties had no Land bad " enough to breed: But that their great Traffick con- " ſiſted in buying lean Cattle, and making them fat, " and upon this They paid their Rent; and if the " bringing over Iriſh Cattle ſhould be reſtrained, their " Counties muſt be undone." And this appeared to be the Caſe of very many Counties in England. And the Complaint was of ſo new a Nature, that it had never been heard of in England till ſome few Months before this Meeting in Parliament; only it had been mentioned in the Parliament at Oxford, as a Grievance to the Northern Counties, which complained no leſs of the Scots than of the Iriſh Cattle; and the Bill that was at this Time brought into the Houſe of Commons provided as well againſt the one as the other.

A Bill brought into the Houſe of Commons againſt the Importation of Iriſh Cattle.

WHETHER this Complaint originally proceeded from the Damage which the People of ſome Counties ſuſtained, or thought They ſuſtained, which made their Members in Parliament preſs the Reſtraint with much Earneſtneſs (and it cannot be denied that many worthy Men were paſſionate in it, who were not like to be engaged in particular and factious Conteſts, to comply with the Humours of other Men), is not eaſy to other Men to judge of than thoſe who ſat in the Houſes, and obſerved the Manner and the Paſſion in which thoſe Debates were carried. And it cannot be denied but that, how innocently ſoever the Grievance firſt came to be mentioned, and to be recommended to the Conſideration and Wiſdom of the Houſe, the carrying it on was with unuſual Heat and Paſſion, different from what appeared in the Tranſaction of any other Buſineſs, that had an Aſpect only to the Publick: And it was obſerved, that the Cabal that is mentioned before, between ſome of the Houſe of Peers and of the Houſe of Commons, began at this Time to meet more frequently, and were united in the driving on this Affair; which ſuddenly grew to be inſiſted on as of that Importance, that there could be no Debate begun with Reference to the giving Money to the King, till this Bill were firſt paſſed.

The Privy Council of Ireland remonſtrate againſt this Bill.

In the mean Time the Council of Ireland had the Alarm of what was intended before the Parliament, and did not only write to the King himſelf, but a large Letter to the Lords of the Privy Council, in which They repreſented the preſent diſtracted Condition of that Kingdom, "that there were more than one hundred thouſand Perſons who had Nothing elſe to live "upon but their Droves of Cattle; out of which They "twice a Year ſent as many as They could ſpare into "England, which enabled them to pay their Rents, "and return ſuch Goods and Merchandiſe from thence "as the Kingdom ſtood in Need of;" for no Money in Specie was returned upon that Commerce. "That "if this Liberty of Trade, which they had enjoyed "in all Ages, ſhould be taken from them, the King's "Army could not be ſupported, nor the Government "maintained, but the Kingdom muſt neceſſarily be "ruined; and probably a new Rebellion, in ſo ge-"neral a Diſcontent as this Reſtraint would admini-"ſter, might be again entered into: And therefore "They deſired, that at leaſt ſome Years might be al-"lowed to that Traffick which had been always en-"joyed; to the End that ſome other Huſbandry might "be introduced into the Kingdom, by which the Peo-"ple might live, and which the Government would "endeavour to plant with all poſſible Diligence and "Encouragement."

The King againſt the Bill.

The King himſelf was ſo much moved with thoſe Letters, that He declared, "that He could neither in "Juſtice nor in Conſcience conſent to ſuch a Bill, "which upon Pretence of Benefit to one of his King-"doms might and muſt be ſo miſchievous to the other "two" (for Scotland, as is ſaid, was yet comprehended as well as Ireland): "That He was equally King to "all, and obliged to have an equal Care of all; and "never to conſent to any Thing that might be preju-"dicial to either of the other, eſpecially if the Benefit "to the one were not proportionable to, and as evi-"dent as, the Damage was to the other." And upon theſe Grounds He recommended to them, "to give "ſuch a Stop to this Bill, that it might never be pre-"ſented to him, for if it were He muſt poſitively re-"ject it:" And without Doubt his Majeſty at that Time did not reſolve any Thing more within himſelf, than never to give his Royal Aſſent to that Bill.

The Privy Council divided in their Opinions upon it.

The Letters from Ireland did not make the ſame Impreſſions upon the Lords of the Council, who were very much divided in their Opinions, even They whoſe Zeal for the King's Service was moſt unqueſtionable. Some were, upon the ſole Conſideration of the Injuſtice of it, and the Miſchief that it would produce in Ireland, poſitively againſt ever conſenting to it, and as poſitive that it might be ſtopped in the Houſe of Commons, or thrown out of the Lords Houſe, that it ſhould never come to the King: Others did as much believe that it was a real Grievance, in which the Subject ſhould have Relief; and inſiſted much, "that in "a Point evidently for the Benefit and Advantage of "England, Ireland ought not to be put into the Scale, "becauſe it would be ſome Inconvenience there." Some did in Truth think that the King was too much inclined to favour the Iriſh, and in that Reſpect were well content that this Bill ſhould be a Mortification to them: And there wanted not others, who in dark Expreſſions (which grew clearer when the Matter came into the Houſe of Peers) ſeemed to think, "that the "Eſtates in Ireland were more valuable than they were "in England; and that ſome Noblemen of that King-"dom lived in a higher Garb, and made greater Ex-"pences, than the Noblemen in England were able to "do; which had not been in former Times." But They never conſidered, that thoſe Noblemen had Nothing but what deſcended to them from their Anceſtors; and that They had faithfully adhered to the King, and undergone as much Damage for doing ſo, as any Men had done.

The Houſe of Commons ſeemed much more moroſe and obſtinate than it had formerly appeared to be, and ſolicitous to graſp as much Power and Authority as any of their Predeceſſors had done, though no Doubt with no ill Intention: And it may be this would not have ſo much appeared, if there had been the ſame Vigour in thoſe who had uſed to conduct the King's Buſineſs in that Houſe, as there had uſed to be. But that Spirit was much fallen. The chief Men of the Court, upon whoſe Example other Men looked, were much more humble than They had uſed to be, and took more Pains to ingratiate themſelves than to advance the Intereſt of their Maſter: And inſtead of preſſing what was deſirable upon the Strength of Reaſon and Policy, as They had uſed to do, and by which the major Part of the Houſe had uſually concurred with them, They now applied themſelves with Addreſs to thoſe, who had always frowardly oppoſed whatſoever They thought would be grateful to the King; and deſired rather to buy their Votes and Concurrence by Promiſes of Reward and Preferment (which is the moſt diſhonourable and unthrifty Brokery that can be practiſed in a Parliament, which from this Time was much practiſed, and brought many ill Things to paſs), than to prevail upon thoſe weighty and important Arguments which would bear the Light. Which low Artifice raiſed the Inſolence of thoſe, which would, as eaſily as it had been, have been ſtill over-ruled and ſuppreſſed; and was quickly diſcerned by thoſe others, who upon the Principles of Honour and Wiſdom had hitherto ſwayed the Houſe in all Matters of publick Concernment, and who now concluded by thoſe new Condeſcenſions, that the former ſober Spirit and Reſolution was laid aſide, and that peeviſh Men would be compounded with; and ſo reſolved to ſit ſtill or look on, till the Succeſs of this Stratagem might be diſcerned.

And by this Means the Bill for Iriſh Cattle was driven on with more Fury, and the other concerning Accounts more paſſionately ſpoken of; whilſt every Day not only many of thoſe, who had conſtantly obſerved the Advice that had been given them on the Behalf of the King, fell off to the other Party, but many of his houſhold Servants concurred in the Bill for Ireland; whilſt the reſt, who did not yet think fit to do ſo, applied themſelves to the King for his Leave that They might do the ſame. And Sir William Coventry, who had now by his Inſinuations and Communication made himſelf very grateful to the refractory Party, perſuaded the King, "that the Houſe had ta-"ken the Iriſh Bill ſo much to Heart, that They would "never enter upon the Debate of Money, till that had "paſſed the Houſe and was ſent to the Lords, who no "Doubt, upon the Knowledge of his Majeſty's Mind "and Reſolution, would eaſily throw it out. That if "his Servants continued obſtinate in oppoſing it be-"low, They ſhould but provoke and anger the Houſe, "and render themſelves uſeleſs to other Parts of his "Majeſty's more important Buſineſs: Whereas if They "did

" did now gratify the Houſe by concurring with them " in this Matter, They ſhould make themſelves ac- " ceptable, have Credit enough to divert the Bill of " Accounts, and preſently to diſpoſe every Body to " enter upon the Matter of Supply."

THE King was not pleaſed with the Counſel, but had a very good Opinion of the Counſellor, who He believed could not but judge aright of the Temper of thoſe with whom He had ſate and converſed ſo long: And ſo his Majeſty told him, "He was contented He " ſhould follow the Dictates of his own Judgment and " Conſcience;" and the ſame Anſwer He gave to all ſuch Members of the Houſe of Commons who came to receive his Orders. And after all this, the Bill was carried with great Difficulty, and long Oppoſition given to it by thoſe Members of ſeveral Counties, which profeſſed, " that the bringing over the Iriſh " Cattle was ſo much for their Benefit, that They " could not live well without it," and were exceedingly perplexed that it ſhould paſs; which yet They hoped would be prevented in the Houſe of Peers: And ſo the Bill was in great Triumph, and by all the Members (as in Caſes They much delight in is uſual), preſented to the Houſe of Peers.

The Bill, after great Oppoſition, paſſed by the Commons.

AND the Commons no ſooner repaired to their own Houſe, than They aſſumed the Debate upon the Accounts, with the ſame Fervour They had purſued the other Bill of Ireland, and with the ſame Declaration, " that They would not enter upon the Subject of Mo- " ney, till They ſaw what Succeſs that Bill would like- " wiſe have;" and appearing every Day more out of Humour, expreſſed leſs Reverence towards the Court. And ſome Expreſſions were frequently uſed, which ſeemed to glance at the Licence and Diſorders and extravagant Expence of that Place, not without ſome Reflections which aimed at the Lady, and at the exorbitant Power exerciſed by her. And this imperious Way of Proceeding confirmed thoſe in their Warineſs, who had no Mind to oppoſe or contradict the Party that They would and meant ſhould prevail: But They the more endeavoured to render themſelves gracious to the Leaders, as being willing to adminiſter Fewel to the Fire the others intended to kindle; and, ſo They might preſerve themſelves, were very willing to expoſe other Miniſters to the Jealouſy of them, who They thought would not be quiet without ſome Sacrifice. And thus They alarmed the King with the new Apprehenſions, " that the Houſe, " which had yet dutiful Intentions, if They were " croſſed in what They deſigned for his Service, " might be provoked to be bolder with his Majeſty " Than they had been yet, and to mention the Pre- " valence of the Lady," which every Body knew the Duke of Buckingham would have been glad to have contributed to. And with theſe continued Repreſentations, but eſpecially with their old Argument of caſting it out by the Houſe of Peers, where his Power could not but be doubted, They at laſt prevailed with the King to leave all Men to themſelves in the Buſineſs of the Accounts (where there was a greater Concurrence), as He had done in the Iriſh Bill: And ſo that Bill likewiſe was tranſmitted to the Lords.

The Bill for inſpecting publick Accounts paſſed by the Commons.

The Propriety of diſſolving the Parliament at this Time.

AND at this Time many wiſe Men thought, that it would have been very happy for the King if He would have diſſolved the Parliament, and preſently after called another; which would have diſcovered many Combinations, when the Actors had found themſelves excluded from entering again upon the Stage; and it would have appeared, that all the Storms had been raiſed by thoſe Winds which had their Birth in the King's own Houſe. And ſuch a Diſſolution (to which the King himſelf was enough inclined) would have been very popular throughout the Kingdom, which naturally doth not love long Parliaments, and exceedingly deteſted this for having only given away their Money, and raiſed a War of which They ſaw no End nor poſſible Benefit, without paſſing any good Laws for the Advancement of the Peace and Happineſs of the Kingdom. And very few of thoſe, who had gotten Credit in the Houſe to obſtruct what the King deſired, were Men of any Intereſt or Reputation with the People.

BUT as Nobody was forward publickly to own and avow this Counſel, the Conſequence whereof They knew if it were not conſented to; ſo They who meant to do themſelves more Good by the preſent Indiſpoſition and Diſtemper, than They could propoſe from a new Convention of Men utterly unknown, and who were like enough to bring Prejudice againſt their own Particulars, uſed all the Means They could deviſe to divert the King from that Inclination. They told him, " that He would never have ſuch another " Parliament, where He had near one hundred Mem- " bers of his own menial Servants and their near " Relations, who were all at his Diſpoſal; by which " They had incurred ſo much Prejudice in the " Country, that very few of them would ever be " elected again. That the preſent Diſtemper was " contracted by Accidents and Miſtakes, and would " vaniſh upon very reaſonable Condeſcenſions, and in " another Prorogation: Whereas if it ſhould be diſ- " ſolved and new Writs ſent out, the People would " return none but Preſbyterians and known Enemies " to the Church, and ſuch who were moſt notoriouſly " diſaffected to the Court." And this Argument, preſſed by Men who had no more Affection for the Church than the Quakers had, prevailed with moſt of the Biſhops to diſſuade the King from hearkening to any ſuch Advice; when They had much more Reaſon to expect a ſtronger Party in a new Parliament, and might have obſerved that their Friends fell from them every Day in Both Houſes, and that the Court was not propitious to them, of which They had afterwards a ſad Experience, and which They might then have well foreſeen.

THE Houſe of Peers was no ſooner poſſeſſed of the Bill againſt Iriſh Cattle but it was read, and a marvellous keen Reſolution appeared in many to uſe all Expedition in the paſſing it; though if the Matter itſelf had been without Exception, there were ſo many Clauſes and Proviſos in it ſo derogatory to the King's Honour and Prerogative, that many thought it a high Diſreſpect to his Majeſty to admit them into Debate. But of theſe anon. The Duke of Buckingham appeared in the Head of thoſe who favoured the Bill, with a marvellous Concernment: And at the Times appointed for the Debate of it, contrary to his Cuſtom of coming into the Houſe, indeed of not riſing till eleven of the Clock, and ſeldom ſtaying above a Quarter of an Hour, except upon ſome Affair which He concerned himſelf in, He was now always preſent with the firſt in a Morning, and ſtayed till the laſt at Night; for the Debate often held from the Morning till four of the Clock in the Afternoon, and ſometimes till Candles were brought in.

Great Animoſities in the Houſe of Lords upon the Bill againſt Iriſh Cattle.

AND it grew quickly evident, that there were other Reaſons which cauſed ſo earneſt a Proſecution of it, above the Encouragement of the Breed of Cattle in England: Inſomuch as the Lord Aſhley, who next the Duke of Buckingham appeared the moſt violent Supporter of the Bill, could not forbear to urge it as an Argument for the proſecuting it, " that if this Bill " did not paſs, all the Rents in Ireland would riſe in " a vaſt Proportion, and thoſe in England fall as " much; ſo that in a Year or two the Duke of Or- " mond would have a greater Revenue than the Earl " of Northumberland;" which made a viſible Impreſſion in many, as a Thing not to be endured. Whereas the Duke had indeed at leaſt four Times the Proportion of Land in Ireland that deſcended to him from his Anceſtors, that the Earl had in England; and the Revenue of it before the Rebellion was not inferiour to the other's. But nothing was more manifeſt, than that the Warmth of that Proſecution in the Houſe of Peers in many Lords did proceed from the Envy They had of the Duke's Station in one Kingdom, and of his Fortune in the other.

AND

And the whole Debate upon the Bill was so disorderly and unparliamentary, that the like had never been known: No Rules or Orders of the House for the Course and Method of Debate were observed. And there being, amongst those who advanced the Bill, fewer Speakers than there were of those who were against it, those few took upon them to speak oftener than They ought to do, and to reply to every Man who declared himself to be of another Opinion: And when They were put in Mind of the Rule of the House, "that no Man should spake above once upon "the same Question," They called presently to have the House resolved into a Committee, which any single Member may require, and then every Man may speak as often as He please; and so the Time was spent unprofitably without the Business being advanced. In the mean Time the House of Commons proceeded as irregularly, in sending frequent Messages to hasten the Dispatch of the Bill, when They knew well the Debate of every Day: And it was frequently urged as an Argument, "that the House of Commons was "the fittest Judge of the Necessities and Grievances "of the People; and They having passed this Bill, "the Lords ought to conform to their Opinion." In Fine there grew so great a Licence of Words in this Debate, and so many personal Reflections, that every Day some Quarrels arose, to the great Scandal and Dishonour of a Court that was the supreme Judicatory of the Kingdom.

The Duke of Buckingham, who assumed a Liberty of speaking when and what He would in a Dialect unusual and ungrave, his Similes and other Expressions giving Occasion of much Mirth and Laughter, one Day said in the Debate, "that whoever was against "that Bill had either an Irish Interest or an Irish Un-"derstanding:" Which so much offended the Lord Ossory, who was eldest Son to the Duke of Ormond (who had very narrowly escaped the Censure of the House lately, for reproaching the Lord Ashley with having been a Counsellor to Cromwell, and would not therefore trust himself with giving a present Answer), that meeting him afterwards in the Court, He desired the Duke "that He would walk into the next Room "with him;" and there told him, "that He had taken "the Liberty to use many loose and unworthy Expres-"sions which reflected upon the whole Irish Nation, "and which He himself resented so much that He ex-"pected Satisfaction, and to find him with his Sword "in his Hand;" which the Duke endeavoured to avoid by all the fair Words and Shifts He could use, but was so far pressed by the other, whose Courage was never doubted, that He could not avoid appointing a Place where They would presently meet, which He found the other would exact to prevent Discovery, and therefore had chosen rather to urge it himself than to send a Message to him. And so He named a known Place in Chelsea Fields, and to be there within less than an Hour.

The Lord Ossory challenges the Duke of Buckingham.

The Lord Ossory made Haste thither, and expected him much beyond the Time; and then seeing some Persons come out of the Way towards the Place where He was, and concluding They were sent out to prevent any Action between them, He avoided speaking with them, but got to the Place where his Horse was, and so retired to London. The Duke was found by himself in another Place on the other Side of the Water, which was never known by the Name of Chelsea Fields which He said was the Place He had appointed to meet.

Finding that Night that the Lord Ossory was not in Custody, and so He was sure He should quickly hear from him, and upon Conference with his Friends, that the Mistake of the Place would be imputed to him; He took a strange Resolution, that every Body wondered at, and his Friends dissuaded him from. And the next Morning, as soon as the House was sate, the Lord Ossory being likewise present that He might find some Opportunity to speak with him, the Duke told the House, "that He must inform them of "Somewhat that concerned himself; and being sure "that it would come to their Notice some other Way, "He had therefore chose to acquaint them with it "himself;" And thereupon related "how the Lord "Ossory had the Day before found him in the Court, "and desired him to walk into the next Room, where "He charged him with many Particulars which He "had spoken in that Place, and in few Words told "him He should fight with him; which though He "did not hold himself obliged to do in Maintenance "of any Thing He had said or done in the Parlia-"liament, yet that it being suitable and agreeable to "his Nature, to fight with any Man who had a Mind "to fight with him" (upon which He enlarged with a little Vanity, as if Duelling were his daily Exercise and Inclination), "He appointed the Place in Chelsea "Fields, which He understood to be the Fields over "against Chelsea; whither, having only gone to his "Lodging to change his Sword, He hastened, by "presently crossing the Water in a Pair of Oars, and "stayed there in Expectation of the Lord Ossory, until "such Gentlemen," whom He named, "found him "there, and said, They were sent to prevent his and the "Lord Ossory's Meeting, whom others were likewise sent "to find for the same Prevention. Whereupon, con-"cluding that for the present there would be no "Meeting together, He returned with those Gentle-"men to his Lodging, being always ready to give "any Gentleman Satisfaction that should require it "of him.

The Duke of Buckingham inform the House of the Affair.

Every Body was exceedingly surprised with the Oddness and Unseasonableness of the Discourse, which consisted, with some Confusion, between aggravating the Presumption of the Lord Ossory, and making the Offence as heinous as the violating all the Privileges of Parliament could amount unto; and magnifying his own Courage and Readiness to fight upon any Opportunity, when it was clear enough that He had declined it by a gross Shift: And it was wondered at, that He had not chosen rather that some other Person might inform the House of a Quarrrel between two Members, that it might be examined and the Mischief prevented. But He believed that Way would not so well represent and manifest the Lustre of his Courage, and might leave him under an Examination that would not be so advantageous to him as his own Information: And therefore no Persuasion and Importunity of his Friends could prevail with him to decline that Method.

The Lord Ossory seemed out of Countenance, and troubled that the Contest was like to be only in that Place, and cared not to deny any Thing that the Duke had accused him of; only "wondered, that He should "say He had challenged him for Words spoken in the "House, when He had expressly declared to him, "when his Grace insisted much upon the Privilege of "Parliament to decline giving him any Satisfaction, "that He did not question him for any Words spoken in "Parliament, but for Words spoken in other Places, and "for Affronts, which He had at other Times chosen to bear, "rather than to disturb the Company." He confessed, "He had attended in the very Place where the Duke "had done him the Honour to promise to meet him;" and mentioned some Expressions which He had used in designing it, which left the Certainty of it not to be doubted.

When They had Both said as much as They had a Mind to, They were Both required, as is the Custom, to withdraw to several Rooms near the House: And then the Lords entered upon Debate of the Transgression; many insisting "upon the Magnitude of the "Offence, which concerned the Honour and Safety of "the highest Tribunal in the Kingdom, and the Li-"berty and Security of every Member of the House. "That if in any Debate any Lord exceeded the modest "Limits prescribed, in any offensive Expressions, the "House had the Power and the Practice to restrain "and reprehend and imprison the Person, according to

" the Quality and Degree of the Offence; and that " no other Remedy or Examination could be applied " to it, even by the King himſelf. But if it ſhould be " in any private Man to take Exceptions againſt any " Words which the Houſe finds no Fault with, and " to require Men to juſtify with their Swords all that " They ſay in Diſcharge of their Conſcience, and for " the Good and Benefit of their Country; there is an " End of the Privilege of Parliament and the Freedom " of Speech: And therefore that there could not be " too great a Puniſhment inflicted upon this notorious " and monſtrous Offence of the Lord Oſſory, which " concerned every Lord in particular, as much as it " did the Duke of Buckingham; who had carried him- " ſelf as well as the ill Cuſtom and Iniquity of the Age " would admit, and had given no Offence to the " Houſe, towards which He had always paid all poſ- " ſible Reſpect and Reverence."

THEY who conſidered the Honour and Dignity only of the Houſe, and the ill Conſequence of ſuch Violations as theſe, which Way ſoever their Affections were inclined with Reference to their Perſons, were all of Opinion, " that their Offences were ſo near equal that " their Puniſhment ought to be equal: For that be- " ſides the Lord Oſſory's Denial that He had made any " Reflection upon any Words ſpoken in Parliament, " which was the Aggravation of his Offence, there " was ſome Teſtimony given to the Houſe by ſome " Lords preſent, that the Lord Oſſory had complained " of the Duke's Comportment towards him before " thoſe Words uſed in the Houſe by him, of the Iriſh " Intereſt or Iriſh Underſtanding, and reſolved to expoſ- " tulate with him upon it; ſo that thoſe Words could " not be the Ground of the Quarrel. And it was evi- " dent by the Duke's own Confeſſion and Declaration, " that He was as ready to fight, and went to the Place " appointed by himſelf for Encounter; which made " the Offence equal." And therefore They moved, " that They might be Both brought to the Bar, and " upon their Knees receive the Sentence of the Houſe " for their Commitment to the Tower."

SOME, who would ſhew their Kindneſs to the Duke, were not willing that He ſhould undergo the ſame Puniſhment with the other, until ſome Lords, who were " known not to be his Friends, were very earneſt that " the Duke might receive no Puniſhment, becauſe He " had committed no Fault; for that it was very evi- " dent that He never intended to fight, and had, " when no other Tergiverſation would ſerve his Turn, " prudently miſtaken the Place that was appointed by " himſelf;" which was preſſed by two or three Lords in ſuch a pleaſant Manner, with Reflection upon ſome Expreſſions uſed by himſelf, that his better Friends thought it would be more for his Honour to undergo the Cenſure of the Houſe than the Penalty of ſuch a Vindication: And ſo They were Both ſent to the Tower.

They are Both ſent to the Tower.

AND during the Time They remained there, the Bill againſt Ireland remained in Suſpenſe, and uncalled for by thoſe, who would not hazard their Cauſe in the Abſence of their ſtrongeſt Champion. But the ſame Spirit was kept up in all other Arguments, the Diſpleaſure, that had ariſen againſt each other in that, venting itſelf in Contradictions and ſharp Replies in all other Occaſions; a Miſchief that is always contracted from the Agitation of private Affairs, where different Intereſts are purſued; from whence perſonal Animoſities ariſe, which are not quickly laid aſide, after the Affair itſelf that produced thoſe Paſſions is compoſed and ended. And this Kind of Diſtemper never more appeared, nor ever laſted longer, than from the Debate and Conteſtation upon this Bill.

A Scuffle between the Duke of Buckingham, and the Marquis of Dorcheſter.

THOSE two Lords were no ſooner at Liberty, and their Diſpleaſure towards each other ſuppreſſed or ſilenced by the King's Command, but another more untoward Outrage happened, that continued the ſame Diſturbance. It happened that upon the Debate of the ſame Affair, the Iriſh Bill, there was a Conference appointed with the Houſe of Commons, in which the Duke of Buckingham was a Manager; and as They were ſitting down in the Painted Chamber, which is ſeldom done in good Order, it chanced that the Marquis of Dorcheſter ſate next to the Duke of Buckingham, between whom there was no good Correſpondence. The one changing his Poſture for his own Eaſe, which made the Station of the other the more uneaſy, They firſt endeavoured by juſtling to recover what They had diſpoſſeſſed each other of, and afterwards fell to direct Blows; in which the Marquis, who was the lower of the two in Stature, and was leſs active in his Limbs, loſt his Periwig, and received ſome Rudeneſs, which Nobody imputed to his Want of Courage, which was ever leſs queſtioned than that of the other.

THE Miſdemeanor, greater than had ever happened, in that Place and upon ſuch an Occaſion, in any Age when the leaſt Reverence to Government was preſerved, could not be concealed; but as ſoon as the Conference was ended, was reported to the Houſe, and Both Parties heard, who Both confeſſed enough to make them undergo the Cenſure of the Houſe. The Duke's Friends would fain have juſtified him, as being provoked by the other; and it was evident their mutual undervaluing each other always diſpoſed them to affect any Opportunity to manifeſt it. But the Houſe ſent them Both to the Tower; from whence after a few Day They were again releaſed together, and ſuch a Reconciliation made as after ſuch Rencounters is uſual, where either Party thinks himſelf beforehand with the other, as the Marquis had much of the Duke's Hair in his Hands to recompenſe for his pulling off his Perriwig, which He could not reach high enough to do to the other.

For which They are committed to the Tower.

WHEN all Things were thus far quieted, the Bill was again entered upon with no leſs Paſſion for the Stock that had been waſted. The Arguments which were urged againſt the Bill for the Injuſtice of it were, " that They ſhould, without any Cauſe or Demerit on " their Part, or any viſible Evidence of a Benefit that " would accrue from it to this Kingdom, deprive his " Majeſty's two other Kingdoms of a Privilege they " had ever been poſſeſſed of. That They might as " reaſonably take away the Trade from any one " County in England, becauſe it produced ſome In- " convenience to another County more in their Fa- " vour. That the large Counties of Norfolk, Suffolk, " Kent, and other Provinces, would loſe as much by " the paſſing of this Act, as the Northern and any " other Counties would gain by it. That thoſe two " Kingdoms might with the ſame Juſtice preſs his " Majeſty's Concurrence, that They might have no " Trade with England, which would bring more Da- " mage to England by much, than it would gain by " this Act of Reſtraint: And that it was againſt all " the Maxims of Prudence, to run the Danger of a " preſent Miſchief and Damage, as this would pro- " duce in Ireland by the Teſtimony of the Lord Lieu- " tenant and Council of that Kingdom, only upon " the Speculation of a future Benefit that might ac- " crue, though it were yet only in Speculation."

Arguments urged againſt the Iriſh Bill in the Houſe of Peers.

THESE, and many other Arguments of this Kind, which for the moſt Part were offered by Men who had not the leaſt Relation to Ireland, made no other Impreſſion, than that They were content to leave Scotland out of the Bill; which increaſed their Party againſt Ireland, and gave little Satisfaction to the other, who did not ſo much value the Commerce with the other Kingdom. And this Alteration the Houſe of Commons likewiſe conſented to, but with great Oppoſition, ſince in Truth that Conceſſion deſtroyed the Foundation upon which the whole Fabrick of the Bill was ſupported.

THEN the Debate fell upon ſome derogatory Clauſes, and Proviſos very contrary to his Majeſty's juſt Prerogative and Power (for They made his Majeſty's own Licence and Warrant of no Effect or Authority, but liable to be controlled by a Conſtable; nor would permit the Importation of three thouſand Beeves, which,

Againſt Clauſes in it derogatory to the Prerogative.

by an Act of Parliament in Ireland, were every Year to be delivered at Cheſter and another Port for the Proviſion of the King's Houſe); which in many Reſpects the Houſe generally diſliked, and deſired "that "it might have no other Style than had been accuſtomed in all the penal Acts of Parliament which were "in Force, it being to be preſumed, that the King "would never diſpenſe with any Violation of it, except in ſuch Caſes as the Benefit and Good of the "Kingdom required it; which might naturally fall "out, if there ſhould happen ſuch a Murrain amongſt "the Beaſts of that Species, as had been theſe late "Years amongſt Horſes, which had deſtroyed ſo many thouſand, that good Horſes were now hard to "be procured. And if the ſame or the like Deſtruction ſhould fall upon the other Cattle, We ſhould "have then more Cauſe to complain of the Scarcity "and the Dearneſs of Meat, than We have now of the "Plenty and Cheapneſs, which was the only Grievance now felt, and which Kingdoms ſeldom complained of: And in ſuch a Caſe it would be very "great Pity, that the King ſhould not have Power "enough to provide for the Supply of his Subjects, "and to prevent a common Dearth."

But this was again oppoſed with as much Paſſion and Violence as had fallen out in any Part of the Debate; and ſuch rude Arguments uſed againſt ſuch a Power in the King, as if the Queſtion were upon repoſing ſome new Truſt in him, whereas it was upon diveſting him of a Truſt that was inherent in him from all Antiquity: And "that it was the ſame Thing to "be without the Bill, and not to provide againſt the "King's diſpenſing with the not obeying it, whoſe In"clinations were well known in this Particular; and "therefore the Effect of them, and of the Importu"nity of the Courtiers, muſt be provided againſt." And throughout this Diſcourſe there was ſuch a Liberty of Language made Uſe of, as reflected more upon the King's Honour, and indeed upon his whole Council and Court, than has been heard in that Houſe, but in a Time of Rebellion, without very ſevere Reprehenſion: And it ſo much offended the Houſe now, that, notwithſtanding all the ſturdy Oppoſition, it was reſolved that thoſe Clauſes and Proviſos ſhould be amended in ſome Places, and totally left out in others. And with the Alteration and Amendments it was ſent down to the Houſe of Commons.

Theſe Clauſes are amended by the Lords.

At this Time the publick Affairs and Neceſſities were little looked after or conſidered. The Fleet was come into the Ports, but there was no Money to pay off the Men: And what was equally miſchievous, there was no Way to make the Proviſions for the next Spring, that the Fleet might be ready for the Sea by the Time the Enemy would aſſuredly be out. If the Victualler were not ſupplied, who had much Money due to him, the Seaſon would be paſt in which He was to buy the Cattle that He muſt kill; and He complained how much He ſhould ſuffer by this Bill of Ireland, which already raiſed the Price of all Meats. And the Yards wanted all thoſe Tacklings and Rigging and Maſts, without which another Fleet could not be ſent out, and which could no otherwiſe be provided than by ready Money. The King had anticipated all his own Revenue, and was ready to expoſe that for farther Security, but Nobody would truſt. The new Proviſos in the Bill of Supply at Oxford gave no new Credit, but were found as miſchievous as any Body had apprehended they would be: And the Bankers, who in all ſuch Occaſions were a ſure Refuge, wanted now Credit themſelves; which that They might not recover, the Parliament had treated them as ill ſince They came together, that is, with Reproaches and Threats, as They had done at Oxford. In which Kind of Perſecution Sir William Coventry, and ſome who followed him, led the Van, very much to the King's Prejudice and againſt his Command; but They excuſed themſelves, upon the Credit it gave them in the Houſe to do him Service.

All this was well enough underſtood: And it was as viſible, that They intended to make it a forcible Argument for the paſſing the Iriſh Bill, which, though from different Motives, was now become the Sacrifice, without which They would not be appeaſed; and therefore, when the Bill was ſent to them with thoſe Alterations and Amendments, They rejected them all, and voted, "that They would adhere to their own "Bill without departing from a Word of it, except "with Reference to Scotland," from which They had receded. And if upon this very unuſual Return the Houſe of Peers had likewiſe voted, "that They too "would adhere," which They might regularly have done, and would have been conſented to by the major Part of the Houſe if the Queſtion had been then put; there had been an End of that Bill. But that muſt not be ſuffered: The Party that cheriſhed it was too much concerned to let it expire in a deep Silence, and were numerous enough to obſtruct and defer what They liked not, though not to eſtabliſh what They deſired. Some of them, that is, ſome who deſired that the Bill ſhould paſs, though uncorrupted by their Paſſions, did not like the Obſtinacy of the Houſe of Commons in not departing from ſome unuſual Clauſes and Pretences; yet were not willing to have the like Vote for adhering to paſs in that Houſe, which it might do when all other Remedies ſhould fail; and therefore moved, "that a Conference might be required, in which ſuch "Reaſons might be given as might ſatisfy them." Many Conferences, and free Conferences, were held, in which the Commons ſtill maintained their Adherence with a wonderful Petulance: And thoſe Members, who were appointed to manage the Conferences, took the Liberty to uſe all thoſe Arguments, and the very Expreſſions, which had been uſed in the Houſe of Peers, againſt leaving any Power in the King to diſpenſe; and added ſuch other of their own as more reflected on his Majeſty's Honour; and yet concluded as if They could ſay more if They were provoked, upon which every Man might make what Gloſſes He pleaſed, and the King himſelf was left to his own Imaginations.

The Commons adhere to their Bill.

There need be no other Inſtance given of the unheard of and incredible Paſſion that was ſhewed in the Tranſaction of that Bill, than a Particular that related to the City of London. Upon the News of the great Fire in London, and the Devaſtation that it made there, there was ſo general a Lamentation in Ireland as might be expected from a neighbour Province, that had ſo great a Commerce with and Dependance upon it. And the Conſent in this Lamentation was ſo digeſted, that the ſeveral Provinces had made a Computation and Diviſion between themſelves, and preſented a Declaration to the Lord Lieutenant and Council, "that They "had ſo tender a Senſe of that Calamity, that if They "were able to raiſe Money to adminiſter ſome Aſſiſtance "to the City towards the Reparation of their great Loſs, "They would willingly offer and preſent it: But that "not being in their Power or Poſſeſſion, the great "Scarcity and Want of Money throughout that King"dom being notoriouſly known, but there being "Somewhat in their Power to offer, which might at "leaſt teſtify their Good-will, and not be wholly "uſeleſs towards the End They deſigned it; They "had agreed between themſelves to give unto the "Lord Mayor and City of London, to be diſpoſed of "by them to ſuch particular Uſes as They ſhould judge "moſt convenient, the Number of thirty thouſand "Iriſh Beaſts, which ſhould be delivered within ſuch "a Time and at ſuch Ports," which were named, "to any ſuch Perſons as ſhould be appointed to re"ceive them." And of this They deſired the Lord Lieutenant and Council to advertiſe the King, and likewiſe give Notice to the City of London: Both which were done accordingly; and the Advertiſement arrived in the City in the Time when this Bill was depending in the Lords Houſe. Whereupon the Lord Mayor and Aldermen preſented a Petition to the Lords, with An Inſtance of the Paſſion of the Commons in this Affair.

a Proviſo

a Proviſo that They deſired might be inſerted in the Bill that was before them, by which it was provided, "that Nothing contained in that Bill ſhould hinder "the City of London from enjoying the charitable "Donative of the thirty thouſand Cattle, but that "They might have Liberty to import the ſame."

IT can hardly be believed with that Paſſion and Indignation this Petition was received by the Houſe, what Invectives were made againſt the City, "for "their Preſumption in interpoſing their own particular "Intereſt to obſtruct the publick Affairs of the King-"dom;" and then the Reflections which were made "upon the Council of Ireland, "for giving Counte-"nance to ſuch an Addreſs, and becoming Inſtru-"ments themſelves to promote and advance it:" Which They would not allow "to be an Offering of "Charity, but a Cheat and a Cozenage by Combi-"nation to elude an Act of Parliament, which They "could not chooſe but hear of, and could not but be-"lieve that it was paſſed by this Time. Which if it "had been, and that Power left in the King as had "been propoſed, They might now ſee how it would "have been applied: For They could not doubt, but "there would enough have adviſed the King, that He "ſhould gratify the City of London with a Licence "for this Importation; which could not or would not "have been ſo warily drawn, but that, under the Li-"cence for thirty thouſand, there would be three hun-"dred thouſand imported into England; and this the "great Charity aimed at and was aſſured of." And ſo, after much Bitterneſs, They deſired "that the Pe-"tition and the Proviſo might be Both rejected."

BUT this Paſſion did not cover the whole Houſe, which neither commended nor approved it, and were much leſs tranſported with it. They believed it was a very ſeaſonable Intention of Charity, and would not take upon them to fruſtrate it; and ſo prevailed, that it was paſſed in that Houſe, and tranſmitted with Approbation to the other. But it had the ſame Fate there with the other Proviſos, and was thrown out with that Bitterneſs and Obſervation which had been offered againſt it by ſome Lords. Nor could any Expedients alter or remove their Obſtinacy, though many were offered upon Conferences, and particularly "that "all the Beaſts ſhould be killed in Ireland and pow-"dered there, and then ſent over in Barrels or other "Caſks;" but They found Cozenage in that too, and were as angry with the Cattle when they were dead, as when they were alive, as if it would for a Time keep down the Price of Meat in England, which They deſired to advance: So that there was Nothing gotten in all thoſe Conferences, but the Diſcovery of new Jealouſies of the King and the Court, and new Inſinuations of the Diſcontents and Murmurs in the Country, that this Bill was ſo long obſtructed. Which being ſtill repreſented to the King with moſt ghaſtly Aſpects towards what Effects it might produce, his Majeſty in the End was prevailed upon, notwithſtanding very earneſt Advice to the Contrary, not only to be willing to give his Royal Aſſent when it ſhould be offered to him, but to take very great Pains to remove thoſe Obſtructions which hindered it from being offered to him, and to ſolicit particularly very many Lords to depart from their own Senſe, and to conform to what He thought convenient to his Service; which gave thoſe who loved him not great Argument of Triumph, and to thoſe who loved him very paſſionately much Matter of Mortification. Yet after all this, and when his Majeſty had changed ſome Mens Reſolutions, and prevailed with others to withdraw and to be abſent when the Bill ſhould come again to be diſcuſſed, it was carried with great Difficulty and with great Oppoſition, and againſt the Proteſtation of many of the Lords.

The Bill at length conſented to by the Houſe of Lords.

IN all the Debate upon this Bill, and upon the other of Accounts, the Chancellor had the Misfortune to loſe much Credit in the Houſe of Commons, not only by a very ſtrong and cordial Oppoſition to what They deſired, but by taking all Occaſions, which were offered by the frequent Arguments which were urged "of the Opinion and the Authority of the Houſe of "Commons, and that it was fit and neceſſary to con-"cur with them," to mention them with leſs Reverence than They expected. It is very true: He had always uſed in ſuch Provocations to deſire the Lords, "to be more ſolicitous in preſerving their own un-"queſtionable Rights and moſt important Privileges, "and leſs tender in reſtraining the Exceſs and new "Encroachments of the Houſe of Commons, which "extended their Juriſdiction beyond their Limits." He put them often in Mind "of the Miſchiefs which "had their Original from the Liberties the Houſe of "Commons aſſumed, and the Compliance the Houſe "of Peers had deſcended to, in the late ill Times, and "which produced the Rebellion; and were carried "ſo far, till, after all the multiplied Affronts, They "had wreſted the whole Authority out of the Hands "of the Houſe of Peers, and at laſt declared them "uſeleſs Members of the Commonwealth, and ſhut "up the Door of their Houſe with a Padlock, which "They had never Power to unfaſten till the King's "Return." And in thoſe Occaſions his Expreſſions were many Times ſo lively, that they offended many of the Lords who were preſent, and had too much contributed to thoſe Extravagancies, as much as it could do any of the Commons.

The Chancellor offends the Commons by deſiring the Peers to reſtrain their Encroachments.

THE Truth is; He did never diſſemble from the Time of his Return with the King, whom He had likewiſe prepared and diſpoſed to the ſame Sentiments whilſt his Majeſty was abroad, that his Opinion was, "that the late Rebellion could never be extirpated and "pulled up by the Roots, till the King's regal and in-"herent Power and Prerogative ſhould be fully "avowed and vindicated; and till the Uſurpations in "Both Houſes of Parliament ſince the Year 1640 "were diſclaimed and made odious; and many other "Exceſſes, which had been affected by Both before "that Time under the Name of Privileges, ſhould be "reſtrained or explained:" For all which Reformation the Kingdom in general was very well diſpoſed, when it pleaſed God to reſtore the King to it. Nor did the Convention, which proclaimed the King and invited him to return, exerciſe after his Return any exorbitant Power, but what was of Neceſſity upon former Irregularities, and contributed to the preſent Ends and Deſires of the King.

AND this Parliament, that was upon the Diſſolution of the former quickly ſummoned by the King's Writ, willingly inclined to that Method, as appears by thoſe many excellent Acts which vindicated the King's Sovereign Power over Parliaments, and declared the Nullity of all Acts done by one or Both Houſes without the King's Aſſent; declared and ſettled the abſolute Power of the Crown over the Militia; repealed that Act of Parliament that had excluded the Biſhops from being Members of the Houſe of Peers and reſtored them to their Seſſion there; and repealed that other infamous Act for Triennial Parliaments, which had Clauſes in it to have led the People into Rebellion; and would willingly have proſecuted the ſame Method, if They had had the ſame Advice and Encouragement.

BUT They had continued to ſit too long together, and were invited to meddle and interpoſe in Matters out of their own Sphere, to give their Advice with Reference to Peace and War, to hold Conferences with the King, and to offer their Advices to him, and to receive Orders from himſelf; and his Majeſty was perſuaded by very unſkilful Men, "that They were "ſo abſolutely at his Diſpoſal, that He need never "doubt their undertaking any Thing that would be "ingrateful to him, and that whilſt He preſerved "that entire Intereſt He had in the lower Houſe "(which He might eaſily do) He need not care what "the other Houſe did or had a Mind to do;" and ſo induced his Majeſty to undervalue his Houſe of Peers as of little Power to do him Good or Harm, and prevailed vailed with him too far to countenance that falſe Doctrine; towards which the Houſe of Peers themſelves contributed too much, by not inquiring into or conſidering the publick State of the Kingdom, or providing Remedies for growing Evils, or indeed meddling with any Thing in the Government till They were invited to it by ſome Meſſage or Overture from the Houſe of Commons: Inſomuch as They ſate not early in the Morning, according to the former Cuſtom of Parliaments, but came not together till ten of the Clock; and very often adjourned as ſoon as They met, becauſe that Nothing was brought from the Houſe of Commons that adminiſtered Cauſe of Conſultation; and upon that Ground often adjourned for one or two Days together, whilſt the other Houſe ſate, and drew the Eyes of the Kingdom upon them, as the only vigilant People for their Good.

THEN when any Thing fell in their Way, that They could draw a Conſequence from that might relate to their Privileges, They were ſo jealous of an Invaſion, that They neither conſidered former Precedents, nor Rules of Honour or Juſtice; and were not only ſolicitous for that Freedom which belonged to themſelves and their menial Servants, who ought not to be diſquieted by private Suits and Proſecutions in Law, whilſt They are obliged to attend upon the Service of their Country in Parliament, but gave their Protections ad Libitum, which were commonly ſold by their Servants to bankrupt Citizens, and to ſuch who were able but refuſed to pay their juſt Debts. And when their Creditors knew that They could have no Relation of Attendance to any Man, and thereupon cauſed them to be arreſted, They produced ſome Protection granted to them by ſome Lord; whereupon They were not only diſcharged, but their Creditors, and all who bore any Part in the Proſecution, were puniſhed with great Rigour, and to their great Loſs and Damage, and to the great Prejudice of the City and Interruption of the whole Courſe of the Juſtice of the Kingdom.

WHEN the Houſe of Commons ſent up a Bill for the Suppreſſion or Reformation of many Irregularities and Miſdemeanors, which had grown up in the late Times of Diſorder and Confuſion, as Conventicles and other riotous Aſſemblies, wherein there was a Neceſſity of ſome Clauſes of Power to inferiour Officers, whereby They were qualified to diſcover thoſe Tranſgreſſions which would otherwiſe be concealed; the Lords would be ſure always to inſert ſome Proviſo to ſave their Privileges, even in Acts which provided for the Puniſhment of ſuch Crimes as no Perſon of Quality could be ſuppoſed to be guilty of, as ſtealing of Wood, and ſuch vile Treſpaſſes: Which took up much Time in Debate, and incenſed the Houſe of Commons, and produced many froward Debates, in which the King thought the Peers in the Wrong.

THIS Kind of Temper or Diſtemper upon very trivial and light Occaſions, in Seaſons which required Gravity and Diſpatch, provoked the Houſe of Commons to take more upon them, to enter upon Conteſts ſometimes unreaſonably with the Lords, and to aſſume to themſelves an Authority in Matters in which They ought not to interpoſe; and then were encouraged and indeed induced by thoſe who had near Relation to the King and were truſted in his Service, to affect Novelties both in the Form and Subſtance of their Proceedings, which thoſe Perſons concurred in, much out of Ignorance what was to be done, and more out of Affectation to compaſs ſome crooked End of their own, to the Prejudice of another Perſon who was in their Diſfavour. And when theſe Sallies out of the old trodden Path were taken Notice of, and his Majeſty had been adviſed to prevent them in Time, He was perſuaded, either "that the Exceptions were "in Matters of little Moment, and made only by "formal Men who liked Nothing that was out of the "old common Road; or that the Liberty would be "applied to his Service, and in many uſeful Occaſi-"ons would mollify or ſubdue the inconvenient Mo-"roſity of the Lords; or, when it ſhould exceed, it "would be ſtill in his Majeſty's Power to reſtrain it, "when He found it neceſſary." And theſe Diſcourſes prevailed too much with his Majeſty, till He now found the Humour was grown too ſturdy for him to contend with; and the ſame Men, who had perſuaded him to contemn it, were now more importunate with him that He would comply with it.

He offends the Lords by adviſing them not to inſiſt unreaſonably upon Privilege.

THE Chancellor had always as earneſtly oppoſed the over-captious inſiſting upon Privilege in the Lords Houſe, either when in Truth there was not a juſt Ground for it, or when They would extend it farther than it would regularly reach; and oftentimes put them in Mind "of many exorbitant Acts which ſtood "ſtill mentioned in their Journal-Books, of their Pro-"ceedings in the late rebellious Times, which might "be looked upon as Precedents by Poſterity, and in "which the Houſe of Commons had really invaded "their greateſt Privileges, and trampled upon their "higheſt Juriſdiction; which was worthy of their "moſt ſtrict Proceedings to vindicate by Proteſtation, "and by expunging the Memorial thereof out of all "their Books and Records, that there might be no "Footſteps left to miſlead the ſucceeding Ages;" and often deſired them "to preſerve a Power in themſelves "to put the Houſe of Commons in Mind of their ex-"ceeding their Limits, for which They often gave "them Occaſion, and particularly as often as They "ſent to quicken them in any Debate, which was a "very modern Preſumption, and derogatory from that "Reſpect which a Houſe of Commons had always "paid to the Houſe of Lords. And this They could "not reaſonably or effectually do, till They declined "all unjuſt or unneceſſary Pretences to Privileges "which were not their Due, and eſpecially to a Power "of calling private Caſes of Right and Juſtice, which "ought to be determined by the Law and in Courts "of Juſtice, to be heard and adjudged before them-"ſelves in Parliament; of which there were too fre-"quent Occaſions to oppoſe and contradict their "Juriſdiction."

THIS free Way of Diſcourſe offended many of the Lords, who thought him not jealous enough of nor zealous for the Privilege of the Peerage: And They were now very glad that He uſed ſo much more Freedom againſt the Proceedings of the Houſe of Commons, which They were ſure would be reſented below, more than it had been above. And many of his Friends informed him "how ill it was taken; and how care-"fully all that He ſaid, and much that He did not ſay, "was tranſmitted by ſome of the Lords to them, who "would not fail in ſome Seaſon to remember and ap-"ply it to his higheſt Diſadvantage;" and therefore deſired him "to uſe leſs Fervour in thoſe Argumenta-"tions." But He was in that, as in many Things of that Kind that related to the offending other Men, for his own Sake uncounſellable: Not that He did not know that it expoſed him to the Cenſure of ſome Men who lay in Wait to do him Hurt, but becauſe He neglected thoſe Cenſures, nor valued the Perſons who promoted them; being confident that He would be liable to no Charge that He ſhould be aſhamed of, and well knowing that He had, and being well known to have, a higher Eſteem of Parliament, and a greater Deſire to preſerve the juſt Privileges of Both Houſes, than They had who ſeemed to be angry with him on that Behalf; and that the extending them beyond their due Length would in the End endanger the Deſtruction of Parliaments.

BUT He ſhortly after found, that this Guard was not ſecure enough to defend him. What He ſaid in Parliament was the Senſe of more who would not ſpeak it, than there were of thoſe who diſliked it; and how much ſoever it offended them, They could not out of it find a Crime to accuſe him of. But They who were more concerned to remove him from a Poſt, where He too narrowly watched and too often obſtructed the Liberties They took, reſolved to ſacrifice all all their Oaths and Obligations, which obliged them to the Contrary, to the Satisfaction of their Envy and their Malice: And ſo whatſoever He ſaid or adviſed in the moſt ſecret Council to the King himſelf with Reference to Things or Perſons, They communicated all to thoſe who had moſt Reaſon to be angry, yet could not own the Information. Of all which He had Advertiſement, and that a Storm would be ſhortly raiſed to ſhake him, of which He had little Apprehenſion; never ſuſpecting that it would ariſe out of that Quarter, from whence He ſoon after diſcerned it to proceed.

THERE was another particular and private Accident that fell out at this Time, that adminiſtered more Occaſion of Faction and Diſſention in the Houſes, which always obſtructed and perplexed all publick Buſineſs. The Marquis of Dorcheſter had ſome Years before married one of his Daughters to the Lord Roos, eldeſt Son to the Earl of Rutland; Both Families very noble in themſelves, and of great Fortunes, and allied to all the great Families of the Kingdom. The Lady being of a Humour not very agreeable, and not finding the Satisfaction She expected where She ought to have received it, looked for it abroad where She ought not to find it. And her Huſband, as Men conſcious to themſelves of any notable Defect uſed to be, was indulgent enough, not ſtrictly inquiring how She behaved herſelf, and She as little diſſembling or concealing the Contempt She had of her Huſband; until his Friends, eſpecially the Mother (who was a Lady of a very great Spirit and moſt exalted Paſſion), took Notice of her frequent Abſence from her Huſband, and of her little Kindneſs towards him when She was preſent with him. And the young Lady, who with her other Defects had Want of Wit to bear a Reprehenſion She deſerved, inſtead of excuſing, avowed her no Eſteem of her Huſband; charged him with Debauchery, and being alway in Drink, which was too true; and reproached him with Folly, as a Man not worthy to be beloved. And the Paſſion ſwelling to a great Height on Both Sides, the Marquis came to be engaged on the Behalf of his Daughter, and challenged her Huſband to fight with him, who in many Reſpects was not capable, nor did underſtand thoſe Encounters.

IN the End, after many Acts of Paſſion, which adminiſtered too much Cauſe of Mirth and Scandal to the World, yet by the Advice and Mediation of Friends, as good a Reconciliation as in ſuch Caſes is uſual was made, and the young Couple brought to live again together. And the Lady having the Aſcendant over the Lord, who was very deſirous to live quietly upon any Conditions, that He might enjoy himſelf though He could not enjoy her, He was contented that She made a Journey to London upon Pretence to ſee ſome Friends: And the Time being expired which She had preſcribed for her Abſence, He ſent to her to return, which She deferred from Time to Time. But at laſt after many Months She returned to him in ſo groſs a Manner, that it appeared that She had kept Company too much, which She never endeavoured to conceal; and when her Huſband told her "that She "was with Child," and aſked "who got it;" She anſwered him confidently, "that whoever got it, if "it proved a Boy as She believed it would, He ſhould "be Earl of Rutland."

THIS was more than the young Man could bear without informing his Mother (the good Earl not loving to engage himſelf in ſo much Noiſe), who preſently took Care that the great-bellied Lady was made a Priſoner in her Chamber, ſtrictly guarded, that She could not go out of thoſe Lodgings which were aſſigned her; all her own Servants removed from her, and others appointed to attend; and all other Things ſupplied that She could ſtand in Need of or require, Liberty only excepted. Yet in this cloſe Reſtraint She found Means to advertiſe her Father of the Condition She was in, and made it much worſe than it was, ſeeming to apprehend the Safety of her Life threatened by the Malice of the Counteſs, Mother to her Huſband, who, She ſaid, "did all She could to alienate "his Affection from her; and now that She found "She was with Child, would perſuade him that it was "not his; and took all this extreme Courſe, either "to make her miſcarry and ſo endanger her Life, or "to put an End to Mother and Child when She "ſhould miſcarry:" And therefore beſought her Father "that He would find ſome Way to procure "her Liberty, and to remove her from that Place, "as the only Means to ſave her Life."

THE Marquis, with the Paſſion of a Father, and Confidence of his Daughter's Virtue, and having no Reverence for the Counteſs, thought it an Act of great Barbarity, and conſulted whether He could have any Remedy at Law to recover his Daughter's Liberty; and finding little Hope from thence (the Reſtraint of a Wife by the Jealouſy of her Huſband in his own Houſe being not a Crime the Law had provided a Remedy againſt) He reſorted then to the King, who as little knew how to meddle in it. In the mean Time He ſent Women to ſee and attend his Daughter, who were admitted to ſee and confer with her, but not to ſtay with her; the Counteſs declaring "that She ſhould want Nothing; but that ſince it was "impoſſible that the Child could be of Kin to her Son, "who had not ſeen her in ſo many Months before the "Child muſt have been got, She would provide that "there ſhould be no more foul Play, when She ſhould "be delivered; and after that Time She ſhould have "no more Reſtraint or Reſidence in that Houſe, but "be at Liberty to go whither She would."

THE Concluſion was: The Lady was delivered, and a Son born, who was quickly chriſtened by the Name of Ignoto, and committed to a poor Woman, who lived near, to be nurſed; and as ſoon as the Lady recovered Strength enough, She was diſmiſſed and ſent to a Houſe of her Father, who received her with the Affection He thought was due to her. And having conferred and examined her with all the Strictneſs He could, He remained ſatisfied in her Innocence, and conſequently of the barbarous Treatment She had received, and the Injury and Indignity, both to him and her, that was done to the Son; for which He was reſolved to leave no Way untried in which He might receive a Vindication. In order to which He firſt deſired the King to hear all Parties, who was prevailed with to appoint a Day for the doing it, being attended by ſome Biſhops and other Lords of his Council; when the Marquis and his Daughter, and the Lord Roos and his Mother, appeared, with more Ladies than could have the Patience to ſtay till the End of the Examination, where there were ſo many indecent and uncleanly Particulars mentioned, that made all the Auditors very weary. Nor was there any Room for his Majeſty to interpoſe towards a Reconciliation, which was in View impoſſible; nor could the Lady be excuſed for a great Delight She took in making her Huſband jealous of her, and in expreſſing a Contempt of him whatever elſe She was guilty of: And ſo the King left it as He found it. And the Marquis, who had heard many Things He did not expect to have heard, took his Daughter to his own Houſe, that by her own ſtrict Behaviour She might beſt vindicate herſelf from the Scandal She lay under: But She quickly freed him from that Hope and Expectation; for within a ſhort Time after, She, not being able to ſubmit to the ſtrict Order and Diſcipline of her Father's Houſe, which would not permit thoſe Wanderings She deſired to make, nor the Viſits She deſired to receive, made an Eſcape from thence, and lodged herſelf at more Liberty, and lived in that Manner as gave too much Evidence againſt her with Reference to the Time that was paſt.

THE Marquis, who was a Man of great Honour, and moſt punctual in all Things relating to Juſtice, gave a noble Inſtance of Both, and how much He deteſted the baſe and unworthy Behaviour of his own Child, when it was manifeſt to him. He went to the other noble Family, aſked their Pardon " for his Incredu- " lity, and for any Offence He had committed againſt " them, or Reproach He laid upon them, for the " Vindication of an unworthy Woman, who He be- " lieved now had deſerved all and more Aſperſions " than had been laid on her: And therefore He was " ready to join with them to free the Family, as much " as was poſſible, from the Infamy She had brought " to them and him, and that her baſe Iſſue might not " be an eternal Reproach in their Family." Upon this She was firſt, upon the Complaint of her Huſband, cited into the Court of the Arches before the Eccleſiaſtical Judges: Where, after a full Examination of Witneſſes on Both Sides, and hearing what She could alledge in her own Defence, her Crime was declared to be proved ſufficiently; and thereupon a Judgment was pronounced " of a full and entire Separation " a Thoro et a Menſâ pro Cauſâ Adulterii," in ſuch a Form, and with ſuch Circumſtances, as are of Courſe in thoſe Caſes.

A Bill brought in for this Purpoſe.

But all this was not Remedy enough againſt the Baſtard's Title to the Honour of that illuſtrious Family: And therefore there was a Bill prepared, wherein all the foul Carriage of the Lady was ſet out, the Birth and Chriſtening of Ignoto, the Declaration and Judgment of the Court of the Arches, and Separation of the Parties for the Adultery proved; and thereupon a Deſire that it might be declared by Act of Parliament, " that the Son, Ignoto, by Name, is a " Baſtard, and incapable to inherit any Part of the " Title, Honour or Eſtate of or belonging to the " Houſe of Rutland; and the ſame Incapacity to at- " tend all other Children, which from that Time, the " Birth of Ignoto, had or might be born from the Body " of that Lady." And this Bill being preſented to the Houſe of Peers by a Lord nearly allied to that Family, the Earl of Rutland being preſent with the Marquis, as ſoon as it was read the Marquis ſtood up, and " with Expreſſions of Trouble, and of the Juſtice " that was due to the Greatneſs of a noble Houſe, that " had received a foul Blemiſh by a Woman of too " near a Relation to him, of whom He was aſhamed," gave his free Conſent to the Bill, and deſired that it might paſs: And the Earl likewiſe beſought the Houſe, " that ſo infamous a Branch might not be ingrafted " into his Family, of which his Son the Lord Roos " was the ſole Heir Male, with whom the Honour " muſt expire".

Some Lords againſt a Precedent of this Nature.

It was a Caſe of general Concernment as well as Compaſſion, that an impudent Woman ſhould have the Power to give an Heir to inherit a noble Title and Fortune by Deſcent, when it was ſo notoriouſly known and adjudged to be illegitimate, and a mere Stranger to the Blood of the Houſe. Yet there were ſome very good Lords, and who deteſted the Woman and the Wickedneſs, made much Scruple of making a new Precedent in a particular Caſe, that undermined a Foundation of Law, and opened a Door to let in an unjuſt Declaration, upon Pretences not ſo well proved, to the Diſinheriſon of one that ſhould not be illegitimate. But thought it was a rare Caſe, it was found not to be a new one, there having been one or two Declarations of Baſtardy in Parliament in the Reign of King Henry VII. and Henry VIII.

However it was as juſt that She ſhould be heard, to defend both herſelf and her Son; and therefore the Bill being read the ſecond Time, it was committed, with Direction " that the Lady ſhould have perſonal " Notice to attend, before the Committee entered upon " it:" And after long Inquiry at the Places where She uſed to be, it was found that She had tranſported herſelf into Ireland, in the Company of the Perſon whom She had preferred before her Huſband; and there was Reaſon to believe, that it was after She had Notice of the Bill. However all Proceedings were reſpited till there was full Proof given to the Houſe, by the Perſon himſelf who had ſpoken with her in Ireland, and given her the Warrant that required her Attendance upon the Committee: And then, after many Days longer Delay, it was read and debated, and by the Committee reported to the Houſe to be engroſſed.

The Duke of Buckingham obſtructs the Bill.

And then, and not till then, the Duke of Buckingham oppoſed the paſſing of it, upon Pretence, " that " in the Bill the Lord Roos had aſſumed a Title that " belonged to him by his Mother, who had been Heir " Female to Francis Earl of Rutland;" when that Title, now challenged, had deſcended to George the Brother of Francis, and had been enjoyed by two Earls of Rutland ſince. It was generally thought a ſtrange Exception: Nor was it known, whether the Duke was diſpoſed to it as a Revenge upon the Marquis, or to ſhew his own Power (for He had many who concurred with him in Both Houſes upon many Occaſions), or whether He did in Truth deſire to ſupport the Lady in her Infamy, He not being over tender in Caſes of that Nature. However it was neceſſary to recommit the Bill, that ſome Expedient might be there found to remove the Obſtruction, which though He was obſtinate in till the Houſe was tired with many Days Debate upon it, in which moſt of his Adherents upon the Unreaſonableneſs left him, He perſiſted ſtill and maintained the Debate almoſt alone, till the Time of the Seſſion approached; when the Lord Roos was compelled to humour him in leaving out a Title that all the World gave him. And then, after intolerable Vexation to the Houſe and Loſs of Time, He deſiſted to appear againſt it; and the Act paſſed the Royal Aſſent.

But it is at length paſſed.

The ill Humour of the Houſe of Commons was not abated; and though They knew well that their Iriſh Bill could never have paſſed the upper Houſe but by the King's powerful Interpoſition, They remained ſtill jealous, or pretended to be ſo, that He would not give his Aſſent; which till He ſhould do, They would admit no Debate of Money: So that as ſoon as the Bill was preſented to him, his Majeſty came to the Houſe of Peers, and ſent for the Commons to attend him upon the 18th Day of January; when, after He had given his Conſent to that and another private Bill which They had preſented, He told them, " that " He had now paſſed their Bills, and that He had " been in Hope to have had other Bills, ready to " have paſſed too" He ſaid, " that He could not " forget, that within few Days after their coming to- " gether in September, Both Houſes had preſented to " him their Vote and Declaration, that They would " give him a Supply proportionable to his Occaſions; " and the Confidence of that had made him antici- " pate that ſmall Part of his Revenue which was un- " anticipated, for the Payment of the Seamen; and " his Credit had gone farther than He had Reaſon to " think it would, but it was now at an End."

The King paſſes the Iriſh Bill with a Speech.

" This was the firſt Day," He ſaid, " He had heard " of a Supply, being the 18th of January, and what " it would amount unto, God only knew; and what " Time He had to make ſuch Preparations as were " neceſſary to meet three ſuch Enemies as He had, " They could well enough judge. And He muſt tell " them, what Diſcourſes ſoever were abroad, He was " not in any Treaty; but by the Grace of God He " would not give over himſelf and them, but would " do what was in his Power for Defence of Both. It " was high Time for them to make good their Pro- " miſe; and it was high Time for them to be in the " Country, as well for the raiſing of Money, as that " the Lords Lieutenants and Deputy-Lieutenants " might watch thoſe ſeditious Spirits which were at " Work to diſturb the publick Peace. And therefore " He was reſolved to put an End to that Seſſion on " Monday next come Sennight, before which Time He " deſired that all Things might be made ready that " He was to diſpatch." His Majeſty ſaid, " He was " not willing to complain that They had dealt unkindly " with him in a Bill He had then paſſed, in which

" They

" They had manifeſted a greater Diſtruſt of him than " He had deſerved. He did not pretend to be with- " out Infirmities, but He had never broken his Word " to them; and if He did not flatter himſelf, the Na- " tion had never leſs Cauſe to complain of Grievances, " or the leaſt Injuſtice or Oppreſſion, than it had had " in thoſe ſeven Years ſince it had pleaſed God to re- " ſtore him to them: He would," He ſaid, " be glad " to be uſed accordingly."

THIS little Quickneſs in his Majeſty prevailed more upon them, than all the former Application had done: And now They ſaw that They ſhould not be ſuffered to continue longer together, They reſolved to leave ſome Reliſh of their former Duty and Compliance. Not that the Humour was at all reformed or abated in thoſe who had ſhewed ſo much Frowardneſs, who ſtill continued as perverſe as ever; but They were over-ruled by the major Part of the Houſe, as They would have been ſooner, if it had not been that a contrary Courſe had been purſued to what had been formerly. Nor were They, who had adviſed that Change, willing that his Majeſty ſhould decline the ſame Method, and were much troubled that He had not careſſed the Houſe more in his late Diſcourſe. And as They had before adviſed his Majeſty freely and without any Condition to offer the Repeal, and releaſe the Act that had granted the Chimney-Money to him, which was a very good and a growing Revenue, but They obſerved to be unpopular; upon a Preſumption (which They aſſured him could not fail) that ſo generous an Action in his Majeſty towards his People would be immediately requited by a Grant of much greater Value (and They had prevailed in this Counſel, if the Chancellor and the Treaſurer had not with great Reſolution oppoſed it, and made evident to his Majeſty, " that He ought never to propoſe it himſelf " though with Conditions, becauſe it would make the " Grace undervalued, and the Conditions to be eſ- " teemed unreaſonable; nor to hearken to any ge- " neral Propoſition, or conſent to the Repeal of that " Act, without having a full and equivalent Recom- " pence (which ought to be very well weighed) grant- " ed in the ſame Act of Parliament; for He had now " ſufficient Evidence, that the conſtant Good-humour " of the Houſe was not to be depended upon:" Which confirmed his Majeſty to reſolve never to hearken to the one without the other, and ſo that Miſchief was prevented): So They were now as deſirous that the Houſe of Commons would ſtill preſs the Diſpatch of the Bill of Accounts, which reſted in the Lords Houſe; and aſſured them, " that if They would " embrace the ſame Poſitiveneſs They had done, the " Chancellor would be no more able to hinder the " paſſing of that Act, than He had been to keep his " Majeſty from conſenting to the Iriſh Bill ſo much " againſt his Reſolution." But They and their Friends could not keep up the ſame Spirit of Stubbornneſs in the Houſe, nor prevail with the King to recede from his Purpoſe: So that the Bill for Accounts remained ſtill in the Houſe of Lords not fully diſcuſſed. And ſuch a Progreſs was made in the Houſe of Commons, notwithſtanding all Oppoſition, that a Bill for Supply was prepared within the Time preſcribed, though in Reſpect of the Proportion not equal to the Occaſions, and entangled ſtill with the ſame inconvenient Clauſes and Proviſos which had ſo unwarily been admitted at Oxford, and which made what was granted unapplicable to the procuring ready Money; of which his Majeſty was now fully convinced. But the Time was too ſhort to labour in the Alteration. And ſo the Bill, as it was, was ſent up to the Lords, who, after the ſhort Formality that cannot be avoided, gave it a Paſſage through that Houſe: So that it was now ready for the King.

A Supply granted.

The King's Speech at the Prorogation of the Parliament.

THE 8th of February the King came to the Parliament, and the Speaker of the Houſe preſented the Bill to the King, who gave his Royal Aſſent to it, and thanked them for it, with his Aſſurance " that the " Money ſhould be laid out for the Ends it was given: " However," He ſaid, " He hoped He ſhould live to " have Bills of this Nature in the old Style, with fewer " Proviſos." He took Notice, " that the Bill of Ac- " counts for the Money that had been already raiſed " ſince the War was not offered to him: But," his Majeſty ſaid, " that he would take Care (after ſo " much Noiſe) that the ſame ſhould not be ſtifled; " but that He would iſſue out his Commiſſion in the " Manner He had formerly promiſed the Houſe of " Peers; and the Commiſſioners ſhould have very " much to anſwer, if They ſhould not diſcover all " Matters of Fraud and Cozenage." He told them, " the Seaſon of the Year was very far ſpent, in which " the Enemy had got great Advantage; but by the " Help of God, He would make all the Preparations " He could, and as faſt as He could: And yet He " would tell them, that if any good Overtures were " made for an honourable Peace, He would not re- " ject them; and He believed all ſober Men would " be glad to ſee it brought to paſs."

" HE would now prorogue them till towards Win- " ter, that they might in their ſeveral Places intend the " Peace and Security of their ſeveral Countries, where " there were unquiet Spirits ſtill working. He did " pray them, and" ſaid " He did expect it from them, " that They would uſe their utmoſt Endeavours to re- " move all thoſe falſe Imaginations out of the Hearts " of the People, which the Malice of ill Men had in- " duſtriouſly infuſed into them, of He knew not what " Jealouſies and Grievances: For He muſt tell them " again, and He was ſure He was in the Right, that " the People had never ſo little Cauſe to complain of Op- " preſſion and Grievances, as They had ſince his Return to " them. If the Taxes and Impoſitions were grievous " and heavy upon them, They would put them in " Mind, that a War with ſuch powerful Enemies could " not be maintained without Taxes; and He was ſure " the Money raiſed thereby came not into his Purſe." He concluded " with promiſing himſelf good Effects " from their Affections and Wiſdoms, wherever They " were: And He did hope They ſhould all meet again " of one Mind, for his Honour, and the Good of the " Kingdom." And ſo They were prorogued to the 10th Day of October next.

The King appoints Commiſſioners for inſpecting publick Accounts.

AND now the King had very much to do, more than He had Time or Tools to diſpatch. Yet He began firſt where the Parliament left off, that when They came again together They might have no Cauſe to ſay, that He had not performed what He had promiſed, and ſo with the ſame Paſſion renew their Clamour upon the Accounts, which was made now a very popular Complaint; and whoever was accuſed of obſtructing that Examination, was preſently concluded to have had a Share in the Prey. Yet He was not willing that ſuch a ſtrict Account or Examination ſhould be made, eſpecially into the Receipt of the Lord Aſhley for the Prizes, that all the World ſhould know what Money had been iſſued out by his own immediate Orders, and to whom. Hereupon He commanded his Attorney and Solicitor General to prepare a Commiſſion, with all neceſſary Clauſes, to call all Perſons to Account who had received any ſuch Monies, and to examine and take any Exception to the ſame.

AND that there might be no juſt Exception to the Commiſſion, which He knew would be ſtrictly looked into, They were required " to adviſe with all or any " of the Judges, that it might have their Approba- " tion; and that there ſhould be a Clauſe in the Com- " miſſion, whereby the Commiſſioners ſhould be au- " thoriſed to call any of the Judges to their Aſſiſtance, " when upon any Matters of Difficulty They ſhould " think it neceſſary" And that there might be no Exception to any of the Commiſſioners, as like to be partial in Reſpect of Friendſhip or Alliance to any of thoſe who were to be called before them, his Majeſty appointed all thoſe Perſons, who were nominated for

Commiſſioners

Commiſſioners in the Bill ſent to the Houſe of Lords by the Commons, to be inſerted into this Commiſſion; and likewiſe made Choice of ſuch a Number of the Peers as was fit, to be joined to the others, and named thoſe who had upon all Debates in the Houſe appeared moſt ſolicitous, that a very exact Account ſhould be required, and of ſuch others who had no Relation to the Court, and were looked upon with the utmoſt Eſteem by the Houſe of Commons: All which was prepared with the Expedition that was poſſible, and the Commiſſion ſealed; and Notice given to all the Commiſſioners, that They ſhould meet at a Place appointed; upon a Day named, preſently after Eaſter, by which Time the Judges would be returned out of their Circuits; and They were then at Liberty to adjourn to what Place They pleaſed.

We are now to enter upon the Occurrences of the Year 1667, a Year little more proſperous to the Publick than the Year preceding, and fatal in Reſpect to many calamitous Accidents to the Chancellor, and which put a Period to his Greatneſs; the Circumſtances whereof, very notorious, were ſo interwoven with the publick Tranſactions of State, that it is not eaſy to make a diſtinct and clear Relation of the one without the other.

The King involved in great Difficulties.

The Temper the Parliament had been in, and the Delay They had uſed in giving the King any Supply towards the carrying on the War, made the King diſcern that He had been too confident of their Generoſity, and that They had already departed from that Spirit with which They firſt had perſuaded him to enter into that War: And it was as evident (which had been often foretold to him) that the Dutch could endure being beaten longer than He could endure to beat them. They were now relieved and ſupplied with the Money of France, and the governing Party had ſubdued all Contradictions; and whatever their Affections were, all Compliance and Submiſſion appeared to the Commands of the State; and there wanted Nothing but the Seaſon of the Year to carry their Fleet again to Sea, as great and as well provided as it had ever been. All Murmuring was tranſplanted from thence into England, where it grew up plentifully: And the King was, upon the Credit of an Act of Parliament that was paſſed on the 8th of February, to provide a Fleet ready to encounter with the potent Enemies in the Spring. There was no Trade by Sea, and therefore could not be much by Land, that could bring any Benefit to the King; and the Seamen ran all to the Privateers, who adventured for Booty, which They preferred before ſerving in the Royal Navy.

He conſults the private Committee upon the perplexing State of his Affairs.

The King in thoſe Streights called that Council together with whom He uſed to conſult his moſt ſecret Affairs; and the chief Officers at Sea, and the Commiſſioners of the Navy, attended to give ſuch Information as was neceſſary before any Reſolution could be taken. There the whole State of the Navy was inquired into; what was in the Stores, and what the Defects or Deficiencies were, and what Hopes there were of ſupplying them; what Ships were ready, and what would be made ready in three Months. The Victualler was ſent for to give an Account what Proviſion of Victuals was ready, and what could be provided and put on Board in the ſame Time, which was the utmoſt that could be limited. Every Officer proteſted, "that there could not be the leaſt Attempt to-"wards any Preparations without a good Sum of ready "Money:" And the Yards were in that Neceſſity by Reaſon of the great Arrear of Wages that was due to them, that they were near a Mutiny, and could not be kept to their Work, being neceſſitated to do any Work abroad to get Victuals for their Families. The inferiour Officers, which belonged to the Stores, lived by ſtealing and ſelling what They were entruſted to keep. In ſhort: All Things were preſented to be in that Confuſion, that there appeared no Probability of being able to ſet out any Fleet before the Enemy would be ſo ſtrong upon the Coaſt, that it would be very difficult to make a Conjunction between thoſe Ships which were in the River, and the other which were at Portſmouth and in other Ports.

This deſperate Repreſentation did not make the King take a ſudden Reſolution: But the ſame Council met many Days Morning and Evening. All Ways were thought upon which might adminiſter Hope to get any Money; and Conſiderations were entered upon what was to be done in Caſe a Fleet could not be provided fit to engage the Enemy, and which Way a defenſive War was to be made at Sea, and how the Trade ſhould be ſecured, and the Coaſts and Harbours be ſo preſerved, that the Enemy might do no Affront at Land; for every Day brought looſe and ungrounded Intelligence of Bodies of Horſe and Foot, drawn in France to the Sea ſide in many Places upon that large Coaſt, and likewiſe in Holland, and great Proviſion of Flatbottoms, as if They intended to make ſome Deſcent; which Kind of Rumours exceedingly diſcompoſed the common People, though They who underſtood the Expeditions of that Nature, and with what Difficulty Land Armies were tranſported, were not moved by thoſe Reports. After all Expedients were conſidered and well weighed, his Majeſty found Cauſe to deſpair of being able to ſet out in any Time a Fleet equal to the Occaſion, and ſo contracted his Thoughts to the other Part, for the Defenſive. A Reſolution taken to act on the Defenſive.

There is a Point of Land on the Kentiſh Coaſt that extends itſelf into the Sea, and at the very Entrance of the River, where the King had often thought and diſcourſed of erecting a Royal Fort, that would both preſerve the Coaſt, and likewiſe be a great Security to the River: And the proſecuting this Deſign was in this Conſultation thought of great Importance, and the erecting another Fort in another Place, and repairing and ſtrengthening Landguard Point upon the Coaſt of Eſſex and Suſſex.

For Preparations for the Sea, it was thought fit and enough, "that a good Squadron of light Frigates "ſhould ride on the Coaſt of Scotland, and another "of the ſame Strength lie off Plymouth, Both which "ſhould intercept the Trade of Holland both outward "and inward, if They did not maintain it with ſtrong "Convoys, which would break their Fleet; and "in thoſe Caſes the Frigates would eaſily retire "to their Harbours. That ſome Frigates ſhould be "always in the Downs, to chaſe Picaroons from in-"feſting the Coaſt, and to obſerve and get Intelligence "of the Enemies Motion, and upon Occaſion ſhould "retire up the River. That there ſhould be ſome of "the greateſt Ships at Chatham, Portſmouth and other "Places, prepared and put in Readineſs againſt the "End of Summer, before which Time Money might "be provided: And then the Enemies Fleet being "weary and foul, it might be preſumed the French "would return early into their own Ports, which were "ſo far off; and then the Frigates from the Weſt and "the North might find the Way to join with the great "Ships, which ſhould be ready againſt that Time, "and either fight the Dutch if They ſhould chooſe "it, or infeſt their Coaſt more than They had done "this, and take all their Ships homeward bound from "all Places, which, upon the Fame of their being "Maſters of the Sea all the Summer, would repair "Home without Apprehenſion of an Enemy." And there were ſome Officers of great Experience at Sea, who, being called by the King to adviſe upon this Project, declared with Confidence, "that the Dutch "would be greater Loſers by the War thus conduc-"ted the next Summer, than They had been in any "Year ſince the War begun."

For the Security of Trade, it was declared, "that "there was no poſſible Way to ſecure it but by re-"ſtraining it, and not ſuffering any Merchants Ships "to go to Sea, and by giving them Advice to ſend to "all their Factors and Correſpondents, that They ſhould "ſend no Goods Home till They received new Orders:" Which Reſtraint ſome were againſt, "both becauſe

" it would have an ill Reception with the People, " when They ſhould find that a War, which had been " entered into for the Enlargement and Advancement " of Trade, had produced a Ceſſation of Trade; and " it would appear very hard that Men, who had laid " out their own Stocks and were willing to venture " them, ſhould be forbid and hindered from ſending " them to thoſe Markets for which They had provided " them, which would turn to little leſs Loſs to them " than They ſhould incur by their being taken by the " Enemy. Then it would be, not a Diſcouragement " but a Diſſipation of the Seamen, who, if They " could have no Employment in the King's Ships or " in the Merchant Ships, would be ſcattered abroad " to ſeek their Fortune, ſo that They would not be " brought together when the King had Occaſion for " their Service. In the laſt Place: That the giving " this Order for Reſtraint, and Advice to the Mer- " chants to inform their Factors and Correſpondents, " would be, and could not chooſe but be, an abſolute " Publication of this Reſolution of the King to ſend " out no Fleet in the Spring; which was yet agreed to " be the higheſt Secret."

ALL theſe Reaſons were temperately weighed and anſwered, " That it could not be unreaſonable or " unjuſt to hinder Men from doing themſelves Harm: " The King could not take their Goods from them to his " own Uſe; but He might lawfully hinder them from " ſpoiling or deſtroying the Goods that were their " own. That their being taken by the Enemy (which " would be unavoidable) concerned the King and the " Kingdom little leſs than it did the private Owners: " It would increaſe the Inſolence and the Wealth of " the Enemy, and reflect upon his Majeſty's Honour " as well as impoveriſh his Subjects; and the Differ- " ence would be very great between loſing their Goods, " and keeping them upon their Hands for a better " Market. For the Diſſipation of the Seamen, there " would no great Danger be of that: The Squadrons " on the Weſtern and the Northern Coaſts, which " muſt be very well manned, would entertain good " Numbers; and the reſt would put themſelves on " Board the Privateers, who ſhould be all bound " to come Home againſt the Time the King would " have Occaſion for their Service, and then the Pri- " vateers ſhould be reſtrained as now the Merchants. " For the keeping the preſent Reſolution ſecret, which " would by this Means be publiſhed, it were to be de- " ſired that it might remain a Secret as long as ſhould " be poſſible: But as diſcerning Men would eaſily diſ- " cover it, and could not but already know that it was " impoſſible for the King in Time to ſet out a Fleet, " ſo it would quickly be evident to all the World; " and the Secret was not to be affected longer than it " could be concealed."

THERE was another Inconvenience or Miſchief that was in View, that would come like an armed Man upon the City, which was Want of Fewel, eſpecially the Want of Coals from Newcaſtle, of which there had been a vaſt Quantity conſumed in the late Fire, which had likewiſe conſumed thoſe Houſes and Chimnies which ſhould be ſupplied; yet the People remained ſtill, and were not like to be much the warmer for being crowded cloſer together. But to that there could no other Remedy be applied, but the ſending Orders to Newcaſtle to employ all their Ships, and all They could procure, in ſending as much Coal as was poſſible to London and the Towns adjacent, before the Enemies Fleet could put to Sea; and Convoys were aſſigned too ſtrong for their Privateers or ſmall Parties of their Men of War: And the King gave two or three Veſſels of his own, and likewiſe Money, to fetch Coals, that the Poor might have them at the Rates they coſt; and directed the City to do the ſame. All which produced ſome good Effect.

UPON the whole Matter, and thorough Examination of the Whole, the King concluded upon all the Particulars mentioned before, aſſigning proper Perſons to ſuperviſe every Particular, that all ſhould be executed in Time that was agreed upon. The Duke iſſued out all his Orders to the Ships, with which Sir William Coventry was charged, whoſe Office it was: And the King would charge himſelf with that which was moſt important, the Fortification at Sheerneſs; whither his Majeſty made a Journey in the Cold and Depth of Winter, and took an Engineer and ſome Officers of the Ordnance with him, that all Things might be ſupplied from thence which belonged to that Office. He cauſed Maſter-Workmen to be ſent from London, and drew common Labourers enough out of the Country, having provided Money to pay them. And after all Things were in this Order, and He had ſeen the Work begun, He left the Maſter-Engineer, whom He deſigned to be Governour of the Fort, for which He was very equal, upon the Place; and committed the overlooking of the Whole, that all poſſible Expedition might be uſed, to one of the Commiſſioners of the Ordnance, who promiſed to look carefully to it: And his Majeſty returned to London, when in the Opinion of all his Servants He had ſtayed too long in ſuch a Seaſon, and ſuch an Air, to the Danger of his Health. How all thoſe Reſolutions and Orders were executed afterwards, or complied with, muſt unavoidably be mentioned in its Place.

The King inſpects the Fortifications of Sheerneſs.

IT cannot be imagined by any Man who in any Degree knew him, that the Chancellor, though He was preſent, could have any Part in theſe Reſolutions but the ſubmitting to them; every Particular being ſo much out of his Sphere, that He never pretended to underſtand what was fit and reaſonable to be done: Nor throughout the whole Conduct of the War was He ever known to preſume to give an Advice; but preſuming that all whoſe Profeſſion it was, adviſed what was fit, He readily concurred. And He did always declare, " that in this laſt Conſultation all Points were " ſo fully debated; and that there was ſo concurrent " an Opinion in the Commanders of the Ships, and " the Officers of the Navy, with the Approbation of " the Duke of York, Prince Rupert, and the General, " that it was not poſſible to ſet out a Fleet in Time equal to " that of the Enemy, to engage with it; and that the next " beſt would be to ſtand upon the Defenſive in the Manner " propoſed: That it did not appear to him, that there " was any Election left but to purſue that Courſe," which He did believe very reaſonably propoſed and reſolved upon; nor did any Thing occur to him, why very much Good might not be hoped from it, He being ſo totally unſkilful in the Knowledge of the Coaſt and the River, that He knew not where Sheerneſs was, nor had ever heard of the Name of ſuch a Place till this laſt Diſcourſe, nor had ever been upon any Part of the River with any other Thought about him, than to get on Shore as ſoon as could be poſſible.

THE King had not himſelf thought of this defenſive Way, but approved it very much when He heard it ſo fully diſcuſſed, and in which himſelf had propoſed all his Doubts, which no Man raiſed more pertinently in Arguments of that Nature than his Majeſty; and it may be He liked it the better, becauſe at that Time, as He was heartily weary of the War, ſo He was not without a reaſonable Hope of Peace, which He reſolved to cheriſh, as He told the Parliament at parting He would do. The Grounds of which Hope, and the Progreſs thereupon, the entering upon a Treaty, and the Concluſion thereof, will be the Diſcourſe and Relation We ſhall next enter upon.

The Swedes diſpoſed to aſſiſt the Engliſh.

How ill Succeſs ſoever had attended the Negotiation of Denmark by the Irreſolution and Unſteadineſs of that Court, Mr. Coventry had conducted what had been committed to him with very good Effect in Sweden. And after He had diſpoſed that Court (where He had rendered himſelf extremely acceptable) to a juſt Eſteem of the King's Friendſhip, and an equal Averſion to the Hollander, and concluded ſuch Articles as were for the preſent and joint Convenience and Benefit of Both Nations, and prepared them to be willing to enter into a ſtricter and nearer Alliance, and to that Purpoſe to ſend Ambaſſadours into England, where They had an Agent; He returned to give his Majeſty an Account and Information of the Conſtitution and Temper of that Court, and of the Nature and Diſpoſition of the two Ambaſſadours who were to attend his Majeſty, who were choſen before He left Stockholm, and reſolved to embark within ten Days: Which They did, and arrived about the Time, or ſoon after, that the City was ſo miſerably deſtroyed by Fire; which was the leſs favourable Conjuncture, not ſo much by the Influence that dreadful Diſtraction and Damage was like to have upon the vigorous carrying on the War, as by the ill Humour which the Parliament ſhortly after appeared to be in, and their manifeſt Obſtinacy againſt the King's Deſires: which was a Temper very different from what They expected to have found, and what They had been informed had poſſeſſed them from the Time of his Majeſty's Return. Nor was this manifeſt Indiſpoſition without ſome unhappy Impreſſion upon the Spirits of the Ambaſſadours, and that Alacrity They brought with them preſently to enter into a Treaty, and Conjunction of Forces againſt the common Enemy.

They ſend Ambaſſadors into England.

It was manifeſt enough, that the Crown of Sweden was weary of the Obligations They had been long bound in to France, which had ſuperciliouſly neglected of late to comply with what was on their Part to be performed; and rather endeavoured to make Alliances with Denmark, and the leſſer neighbour Princes, as thoſe of the Houſe of Brunſwick and Lunenburg, to their Diſadvantage, than to conſider that Crown which had been ſo uſeful to them, as if their Friendſhip was ſo conſiderable to them. Nor was this out of a real Diſeſteem of them; but that They might bind them to a faſter Dependance upon them, and that They might not be ſevered from their Intereſt, whatſoever They ſhould declare it to be. And therefore, when it was firſt ſuſpected that They might be inclined to England, and Holland apprehended that They might be induced to make a Conjunction with the Biſhop of Munſter, France (as hath been touched before) ſent their Ambaſſadour Pompone into Sweden, with a full Year's Salary of what was in Arrear, much more ſtill remaining due, and to incline that Crown to a Neutrality between the Engliſh and the Dutch; in which He found Mr. Coventry had prevented him, and though He had not then the Character of Ambaſſadour, He was much better reſpected there than He was. And as they would have joined with the Biſhop of Munſter, if He had advanced according to his Pretence, or had not been abſolutely taken off by France; ſo, when He was diverted from his Purpoſe, They were the more inclined to make a firm Alliance with England, and thereby ſuch a farther Conjunction with other Princes, Proteſtant or Catholick, that might give ſome Check to the impetuous Humour of France, which They now were as jealous of, and of their overflowing all the Banks which belonged to their Neighbours, as They had been formerly of the Houſe of Auſtria; and for the ſame Reaſon were as deſirous to retire from any Dependance upon or Relation to that Crown, as They had been formerly of its Protection; and were very well prepared to change their Alliance, and, if They might not be Loſers by it, to make a Conjunction with Germany and the Houſe of Auſtria, into which it was reaſonable to be preſumed that the United Provinces would be glad to be received upon moderate Conditions when a Peace ſhould be made with England.

And this was the Proſpect that had been preſented to them by Mr. Coventry, and upon View of which They now ſent their Ambaſſadours, without being terrified by the Declaration of France on the Behalf of the Dutch; and with a Reſolution, if They could not perſuade Holland to ſeparate from that Conjunction, and make a Peace apart with the King (which They laboured by their Ambaſſadour the Count of Dbona to the States) to join their Intereſt frankly to that of his Majeſty, and to run the Hazard and expect the Iſſue and Event of the War.

The two Ambaſſadours were Flemming and Coyet, Both Senators in the great Council of Sweden, and Men of prime Authority there: The former of the greater Place and Eſteem, being a Nobleman of an ancient and noble Extraction of a Family in Scotland, that had lived through many Deſcents in Sweden in great Employment and Luſtre; and this Man never diſſembled a particular Devotion to the King, and for that Reaſon principally was deſigned to this Negotiation. The other was not ſo well born or bred, or of ſo chearful a Complexion, but a more thinking and melancholick Man, more converſant in Books, and more verſed in the Courſe and Forms of Buſineſs; and by his own Virtue and humble Induſtry had from a mean and low Birth, which in thoſe Northern Kingdoms is the higheſt Diſadvantage, by Degrees aſcended to the Degree of a Senator, which is the chiefeſt Qualification; and had gotten his firſt Credit and Reputation by a Negotiation He was intruſted with in Holland, and a Treaty well managed by him there: which made him liable in that Court to be much inclined to the Dutch, and to have ſome particular Friendſhip with De Wit, They having ſtudied together in Leyden when They were young; and their Familiarity after was improved to a good Correſpondence in that Negotiation in Holland.

The Characters of the Ambaſſadours.

This being well known and commonly ſpoken of there, Mr. Coventry endeavoured to prevent his Deſignation to that Employment, by ſpeaking to the Chancellor of that Kingdom, who always received him with open Arms, and gave good Teſtimony of his hearty and paſſionate Deſire of a firm Conjunction between the two Crowns; and, though He was of a French Extraction, had a full Jealouſy of the Want of Sincerity and Juſtice of that Nation. When He diſcovered the Apprehenſion Mr. Coventry had, He perſuaded him to acquieſce in his Judgment rather than to credit common Rumour: "That He well knew "Both, and had contributed to the Election of Both, "who were very fit to be joined together in an Em- "ployment of this Nature, the Gaiety and Warmth "of the one ſtanding in Need ſometimes of the Phlegm "of the other, who would yet pay that Reverence to "him that was due to his ſuperiour Quality; and that "He was too good a Swede to have Inclinations to the "Dutch, how much Converſation ſoever He had with "them. In a Word, He would paſs his Word;" which put an End to all farther Doubts: And it was well enough known, that He had been raiſed by and was a Creature of the Chancellor.

And in Truth, from the Time of their Arrival in England He carried himſelf very fairly, and without any viſible Inclination to the Dutch, and much leſs to the French; and They Both very frankly declared to thoſe of the King's Miniſters with whom They conferred with Intimacy, "that that Crown would gladly "be ſeparated from them, if a good Expedient might "be found to make them no Loſers by it." Yet it is as true, that after They had been ſome Months in England, and ſaw in how ill a Poſture the King was for the carrying on the War, and how far the Parliament was from giving Money, or from any reaſonable Compliance with his Majeſty's Deſires, Coyet did not concur with the ſame Warmth in his Diſpatches, with Flemming, into Sweden; but writ apart to the Miniſters there, "that They muſt take new Meaſures, and not "depend upon a Conjunction with England, to which, "how well ſoever the King was inclined, He would "not be able to bear the Part They expected, by "Reaſon that He had no Power with the Parliament;" which Letters his Majeſty's Agent then in Sweden had a Sight of: Which produced no other Effect there, but a Reſolution, that if They ſaw that either the King was inclined to a Peace, or would be reduced to a Neceſſity to treat, the Ambaſſadours ſhould offer in the Name of their Maſter his Interpoſition, which their Miniſters in France and Holland ſhould then likewiſe make Proffer of, upon Advertiſement firſt from them, but with a ſecret Aſſurance to the King, "that if a Treaty ſhould not take Effect" (which it could hardly be believed it would do), "the Crown of Sweden "would firmly unite itſelf to his Majeſty's Intereſt, "and engage in the War with him; which it was evident They were more inclined to, than to a Peace in which France might be comprehended. But that which They moſt deſired was, that a Peace might be made with the Dutch without comprehending France, in which They would willingly enter, which would draw Spain and all the Princes of Germany to deſire to be admitted for their own Security.

Miniſters

Sweden is deſirous of a ſeparate Treaty with Holland.

THE Conde of Molina was Ambaſſadour from Spain, near the King, a Man rather ſincere than ſubtil, and ſo had the more Need of the Advice and Aſſiſtance of the Baron of Iſola, who was under the Title of Envoy from the Emperour, entirely truſted and ſupported (as moſt of the Emperour's Miniſters were) by the King of Spain; who being a Burgundian, born in thoſe Parts which remain ſubject to Spain, had an implacable Hatred to the French; and by the Employments He had undergone in Italy and other Places, where He had been Ambaſſadour, had made himſelf ſo conſiderable, that He was become notoriouſly odious to the French, and was a Man of great Experience and very ſubtil Parts. Both thoſe Miniſters did heartily wiſh a Peace between England and Holland, with the Excluſion of France: But if that could not be, They had much rather the War ſhould continue as it was, than that France ſhould be comprehended in the Peace; for which They had ſome Reaſon. For at this Time the King of Spain died, which They had too many Reaſons to believe would put an End to the Quiet of Flanders; and therefore would be glad that They might have the Aſſiſtance of England for their Defence, and in which Holland could not think itſelf unconcerned. The Probability of this and the conſtant Intelligence They received from the Hague, "that there "were already Jealouſies grown up between the French "and the Dutch," perſuaded them, and They endeavoured to perſuade the King, "that Holland might be "now induced to treat by themſelves; or if They "could not do that, but muſt proceed jointly with "France, They would upon Aſſurance of the King's "Affection ſever themſelves from them, if They inſiſted upon any Thing that was not for the joint "Benefit of all." The King left them to do what They thought fit towards it, without undertaking any Thing on his Part until their fair Intentions were diſcerned, and then to aſſure them of his Majeſty's Inclinations to Peace upon juſt and honourable Conditions.

The ſame endeavoured by the Spaniſh and Imperial Ambaſſadours.

THERE is no Doubt, there was a real Jealouſy and Diſſatisfaction between France and Holland at this Time. The Dutch complained, "that the French had broken "their Promiſe with them no leſs this Year than They "had done the laſt: They had indeed declared and "proclaimed a War, but They had done no Acts of "Hoſtility; and whereas They were engaged that "their Fleet ſhould have joined with theirs in the "Month of May, They had never been in View but "at a great Diſtance, and ſuffered the Dutch to fight "ſo many Days together without any Help from "them. And upon their renewed Promiſe, They had "again carried out their Fleet to meet with them in "Auguſt; when They failed again, and left them expoſed to the whole Engliſh Fleet: So that They "were compelled with ſome Loſs to get again into "their Harbours." And now They had a real Apprehenſion, that They might treat with England apart, and leave them to ſupport the War at Sea by themſelves, whilſt they purſued their Expedition againſt Flanders upon the Death of the King of Spain.

Holland and France jealous of each other.

ON the other Side, France as much complained of the Proceedings of the Dutch: "That after They had "received a great Sum of Money from them, without "which They could not have ſet out their Fleet, "They no more cared for a Conjunction with their "Ships, nor went to that Length at Sea which They "were bound to, to join with them; which They "might have done, if They had continued their "Courſe when They put to Sea in the Beginning of "June. Inſtead of which They went over to the "Coaſt of England to find the Engliſh, confeſſing thereby, that They had no Need of the Aſſiſtance of the "French Ships; but leaving them to ſhift for themſelves. And afterwards, in the End of Auguſt, They "came not to the Place They had promiſed to have "done; by Reaſon of which Neglect and Breach of "Faith, if a ſingular Act of Providence had not prevented it, their whole Fleet had fallen into the "Hands of the Engliſh, as ſome Part of it did." But that which made them likewiſe willing that this War ſhould be at an End was, that now, the King of Spain being dead, They might enter upon a War with Spain; towards which They prepared Manifeſtos to publiſh upon the Matter of their Right, and already prepared Levies of Men, of which They could pretend no other Uſe: Yet They profeſſed to the Spaniſh Ambaſſadour to have no ſuch Deſign in their Purpoſes. However They would not enter upon any Treaty apart without the Dutch: Nor would De Wit, who entirely governed the Councils of Holland, be induced to conſent to any Overtures made to ſeparate before or in the Treaty, from France; but gave Information of whatſoever was propoſed by the Baron of Iſola, or the Spaniard or any other Perſon, to that Purpoſe, and enlarged upon that Information more than was true, to endear his own Punctuality.

The Queen-Mother endeavours to bring about a Peace with France.

THE Mother of the King was then at Paris, having choſen rather to reſide there than in England, ſince She ſaw the Reſolution of a War between them, and deſired Nothing more than to be an Inſtrument in the compoſing thoſe Differences, which She thought were not good for either of the Crowns; and found now another Style in that Court than it had uſed to diſcourſe in, and from the Time of the News of the Death of the King of Spain, that the French King had ſpoken as if He wiſhed a Peace with England: Whereupon about the Time when the Parliament was prorogued, the Earl of St. Albans came to London, as to look to the Queen's Affairs, of which He was the great Intendant. He informed the King "of the good Temper the French "Court was in, and that He was confident, if his Ma"jeſty would make any Advance towards a Peace, the "Queen would be able to diſpoſe that King to hear"ken to it, and to be a Mediator between England "and Holland; and either to draw them to conſent to "what was juſt, or to ſeparate from them: And He "thought it very reaſonable, that the Conditions "ſhould be referred to the King of France, who He "was ſure, upon ſuch a Truſt, would be very careful "of the King's Honour and Intereſt." He profeſſed "to have no Authority for any Thing He propoſed, "from the French King or any of his Miniſters, but "from the Queen's Conjectures and his own Obſervation: And if the King would give him a Commiſſion He would preſently return, and would not be "known to have any Powers, till He ſhould find ſuch "a Conjuncture to own it, as that the Peace ſhould be "concluded before there ſhould be any Diſcourſe of "a Treaty (which He knew the French moſt deſired) "leſt Spain might interpoſe to perplex or delay it." And therefore He propoſed, "that He might carry "Inſtructions with him, upon what Conditions the "King would be willing that a Peace ſhould be eſtabliſhed." His Majeſty was reſolved never to make the French King Arbitrator of the Conditions of the Peace, nor that it ſhould be treated at Paris; and moſt of all, that the Earl of St. Albans ſhould not have any Power to treat, "who," the King always uſed to ſay, "was more a French than an Engliſh Man:" And He likewiſe reſolved, "that no Overture ſhould be made "towards Peace in his Name."

She ſends the Earl of St. Albans into England for that Purpoſe.

WHILST this was in Suſpenſe, the Earl received Letters from Paris, in which He was adviſed "to re"turn

" turn thither with Power to treat, and with Informa" tion what Conditions the King expected; for that " his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty had ſo prepared the Dutch,
" that He ſhould have preſent Power to treat and con" clude; and ſo all Things might be ſettled before
" the Formality of a Treaty ſhould be entered into or " heard of." This did not alter the King's Reſolution againſt authorizing the Earl to treat, or making Paris the Place of the Treaty. But becaule the Letters were written by Monſieur Ruvigny, who was a Perſon well known to the King, and of whom He had a good Opinion, and whom He well knew to be too wary a Man to write in that Manner without having good Authority to do ſo; his Majeſty was contented " that " the Earl ſhould make Haſte to Paris; and if He " found by Ruvigny that what They propoſed was really
" deſired, He ſhould undertake to know that the King
" was very well inclined to Peace, and that himſelf
" would willingly confer with any Body He would " carry him to; and whatſoever ſhould be propoſed,
" He would with all poſſible Expedition tranſmit it to " the King:" With this farther Direction " that if " He were ſatisfied that their Intentions were real,
" which the Alterations in their own Affairs made pro" bable, He ſhould endeavour, by the Queen or Ru-
" vigny, to diſcover whether it would not be poſſible
" to perſuade that King to treat apart and exclude " Holland; and if it appeared to him that was not to " be hoped, that at leaſt his Majeſty would think it
" reaſonable, that the Dutch ſhould reſtore whatſoever
" Fort or other Place They had taken upon the Coaſt
" of Guinea, and likewiſe pay a good Sum of Money
" to the King towards the Charge of the War."

The Earl of St. Albans had no Mind to return with no larger a Commiſſion, and pretended to know " that " this was not the Way to advance a Treaty, and that " He could as well write what the King directed, and " know again by Letter what They thought of it; and " therefore He would ſtay and diſpatch the Buſineſs
" which the Queen ſent him about, before He would " return." But when He ſaw the King was contented He ſhould ſtay; rather than have Nothing to do in the Treaty, He choſe to be at the Beginning of it, and thought He ſhould not be afterwards left out; and ſo offered the King to depart without farther Delay.

The King had from the Beginning informed the Chancellor of all that the Earl had ſaid to him from his Arrival: And when He had received thoſe Letters from Ruvigny, He ſent him to ſhew them to him; and himſelf came preſently whilſt the Earl was there, and directed him to prepare the Inſtructions for him, which the Earl likewiſe deſired He might do. The Chancellor very well knew, that his Credit with the King was much leſſened, and that of the Lord Arlington much increaſed, who did not like that He ſhould meddle in the Affairs proper to his Office: Beſides He had no Mind to be intruſted in the Tranſactions with France, of whoſe Want of Faith He had too much Experience; which would neither be grateful to the Queen Mother nor to the Earl. And therefore He very earneſtly beſought the King, " that, it being the " Lord Arlington's Province, all thoſe Diſpatches might " paſs through his Hands." The King ſaid, " that " He knew the Lord Arlington deſired his Help,
" and that He ſhould prepare all thoſe Diſpatches," which He required him to do: And the Earl of St. Albans ſeemed very much to deſire, " that not " only his Inſtructions might be prepared by him, but that He might always receive his Majeſty's Plea-
" ſure ſignified by him, upon any material Point that " ſhould ariſe;" which the King promiſed him He ſhould do. Upon which the other, who durſt not decline thoſe Commands He was ſo unwilling to obey, humbly deſired his Majeſty, " that the whole Matter
" might be firſt communicated to that Committee of " the Council, with which He conſulted his moſt ſe" cret Affairs; and that the Earl of St. Albans might " be preſent at the Debate; and that whatever He " ſhould be appointed to put into Writing might be
" peruſed at that Board, and if it required his Ma-
" jeſty's Signature, it ſhould be preſented to him by " the Secretary:" All which his Majeſty conſented to. And all being done according to what is mentioned before, the Earl departed for France.

He returns into France to negotiate a Peace.

It is very true, there was yet no viſible Alteration in the King's Confidence towards the Chancellor with Reference to his Buſineſs, in which his Majeſty had no Reſerve, and ſpent as much Time with him, and vouchſafed as often to go to his Houſe, as He had ever uſed to do. But when He offered to ſpeak to him of other Matters, as He could not forbear to do, which He thought concerned him more than his moſt publick Tranſactions; He found his Countenance preſently ſhut, no Attention, and no Anſwer, or ſuch a one as ſhewed He was not pleaſed: And He took all Occaſions to make others ſee, that He was adviſed only by him in what immediately related to his Buſineſs, and not more in that than by other Men.

When the Earl came to Paris, He found the French leſs upon their Guard than He expected: And the King himſelf frankly expreſſed himſelf " to wiſh an End of " this War, and that He might be poſſeſſed of the " King's Friendſhip, which He valued exceedingly;"
and referred to Monſieur Lionne, " who" his Majeſty ſaid " was prepared to ſpeak to him." Monſieur De Lionne kept himſelf within Generals, " of the Benefit
" that England would receive by a Peace, which made " his Chriſtian Majeſty deſire to promote it, and never " more to depart from his Friendſhip. That He was " obliged in Honour now not to quit the Dutch,
" having entered into a Treaty with them, when He " had no Imagination that there would be a War be" tween them and England; that He had been often
" ſorry for it, and had given them juſt Occaſion to " complain, that He forbore longer than He ought to have " done to give them Help: And therefore He could not " now leave them to themſelves, except They were
" obſtinate, and refuſed to make Peace upon juſt Con" ditions; and then He would renounce them." But when He found that the Earl had no Power, and that He talked of Money to be given for the Charge of the War, and expected to have particular Overtures to ſend to the King; He brake off the Diſcourſe till He could confer with his Maſter.

Within two or three Days Monſieur De Lionne viſited the Earl, and told him, " that if any Thing
" were to be done towards a Peace, there muſt be no
" Time loſt: It was yet in the Power of the moſt
" Chriſtian King to bring it to paſs upon juſt and " honourable Terms; but He knew not how long it " would continue in his Power; for He confeſſed the " Dutch took themſelves to be ſo much behindhand, " that They had no Mind to Peace, believing They " had now Advantage. That it was never heard of,
" that after a War between two Nations, upon the " making Peace, either Side conſented to pay the " Charge of the War: Therefore any Expectation of " that, or but Mention of it, would ſhut the Door
" againſt any Treaty." He gave two Papers to him to ſend to the King, Both under his own Hand, which his Majeſty had the Choice of, and which the Dutch would conſent to; " but if that ſhould be required,
" the Treaty was at an End before it was begun, and
" the Sword muſt determine it."

Overtures made by France.

One of the Papers contained an Equivalent, of which his Majeſty might make his Choice; whether " all Things ſhould continue in the State and Poſture
" in which they were at preſent, either Side enjoying what They had got and ſuſtaining what They had
" loſt, and ſo all Things to remain as they were before " the War; or, " that a true and juſt Computation
" ſhould be made of the Loſſes on Both Sides, and
" They who were found to have received moſt Da" mage ſhould be repaired at the Charge of the other."
The other Paper was, " that if his Majeſty approved
" of either of theſe Expedients, He ſhould himſelf

" make

" Choice of the Place where the Treaty ſhould be, " whither all Parties ſhould ſend their Ambaſſadours:" But then the French King deſired, " that his Majeſty " would not make Choice of any Place in the King of " Spain's Dominions;" and the Dutch Ambaſſadour there had nominated Cologne or Francfort or Hamburgh. And the Earl of St. Albans immediately ſent away an Expreſs with thoſe two Papers to the King, upon Receipt whereof the Council were ſummoned.

THERE was no Hope of Money, which ſome, not reaſonably, had expected ſhould be paid whenever a Peace ſhould be made; and it had been mentioned in Holland as a Thing They expected ſhould be propounded, it may be, that it might be propounded and rejected. Then the Diſpatch of whatſoever ſhould be agreed concerned the King very much, that the Dutch might not put to Sea, nor diſcover that the King had no Fleet to ſet out; for the Spring was not yet come, though approaching. There appeared little Difficulty in the Choice of the Equivalent, for the Engliſh had taken much more from the Dutch than They had taken from England; and the other Computation would be endleſs, and liable to very difficult Examinations: So that by an unanimous Advice the King reſolved to chooſe the firſt Equivalent.

Which the King approves.

Difficulties about ſettling the Place for the Treaty.

BUT then the Place for the Treaty was not ſo eaſy to be choſen. The moſt natural had been Bruſſels, Antwerp, or ſome other large City in Flanders, which were all neutral Places, and to which all Parties might repair with the ſame Eaſe and Security. Whereas all the Places mentioned in Germany were at ſo great a Diſtance, that the Summer would be far entered into, and ſo, many Acts of Hoſtility paſs, before the Ambaſſadours could meet; and the Engliſh muſt paſs through the Enemy's Country thither: Therefore there could be no Thought of any of thoſe Places. Then the King of France had taken upon him to exclude Flanders, which He had no Power to do, and it was as deſirable to the Dutch as to the King: And therefore it was thought reaſonable, that the King ſhould inſiſt upon ſome good Town there, of which there was Choice enough; and if Holland ſhould approve it France could not reject it. But on the other Hand it was clearly diſcerned, that France would never ſend Ambaſſadours into a Country which He meant at the ſame Time to invade; and that his Majeſty knew very well to be the Intention, and the Ground of that King's deſiring the Peace, which it was plain enough the Dutch did not deſire, and were only drawn to conſent to a Treaty by the poſitive Demand of France, which They durſt not contradict: And therefore it concerned the King to preſerve that good Diſpoſition, and that the French Ambaſſadours might come fully inſtructed to concur with the Engliſh in what ſhould be juſt, and prevent any inſolent Carriage of the Dutch, or the Dane, who was likewiſe to have his Ambaſſadours upon the Place.

UPON thoſe Reaſons the Expreſs returned with his Majeſty's Conſent and Election of the firſt Equivalent, and " that as ſoon as He ſhould know that the Dutch " had conſented to it, his Majeſty would propoſe ſome " equal Place for the Treaty." And as ſoon as the Expreſs was diſpatched, his Majeſty entered upon the Debate of a fit Place for the Treaty; and ſaid, " that " He had a Propoſition then made to him by Sir Wil- " liam Coventry, that was of ſuch a Nature as much " ſurpriſed him, as He believed it would the Lords; " yet He had not thought enough to diſlike or con- " demn it:" And ſo bade the other to propoſe it. He, with ſome ſhort Apology which He did not uſe to make, ſaid, " that He perceived there would be little " leſs Difficulty in agreeing upon a Place for the " Treaty than upon any Doubts which might ariſe in " it; for if the King of France was to be gratified in " the Excluſion of Flanders, it would be very incon- " venient to oblige the King to ſend into Germany, " which by the great Delay would deprive the King of " the greateſt Benefit He expected from the Treaty; " the ſpeedy Diſpatch whereof would be attended " with the greateſt Conveniencies: Therefore He had " propoſed to the King, that He would immediately " write to the States-General without acquainting " France with it, and offer to ſend his Ambaſſadours to " treat the Peace at the Hague, that it might be ſpee- " dily concluded, which would otherwiſe take up much " Time in ſending for any Reſolution to the States upon " what ſhould ariſe. If They conſented to it, it would " probably be attended with Succeſs, the general Affection " of the People being well known to deſire Peace: And " if They refuſed it, the World would conclude that They " would have no Peace, when They would not treat about " it; and that his Majeſty would never have done them " the Honour to have ſent his Ambaſſadours Home to " them, if He had intended to deny any Thing that was " reaſonable to them."

IT was very new, and thought of by Nobody but the Lord Arlington and Sir William Coventry, who had communicated it together; and the Objection of the Condeſcenſion that it would ſeem to moſt Men, as if the King ſent to beg a Peace at their own Doors, was obvious to all Men: But that would have been an Objection againſt admitting it to have been at Paris. But the States not being upon any Level that pretended to an Equality, the probable Convenience or Benefit that might attend it was only to be conſidered; and the Affection and Deſire of the People generally to Peace was ſo notorious, that there was Reaſon to believe that They would not be willing that a Treaty begun amongſt them ſhould end but with Effect: And therefore it was unanimouſly agreed, that the Advice ſhould be purſued. But then it was a new Doubt, how the Meſſage or Overture or Letter, for the Form was not yet thought of, ſhould be conveyed; for the ſending a Trumpet or Expreſs had much more of Application than the Thing itſelf: And it was to be wiſhed, that it might be gone out of the King's Hands before the Anſwer could come from Paris, leſt new Inſtance ſhould be made for a particular Place.

IT was at laſt reſolved, that the Swedes Ambaſſadours (both France and Holland having accepted the Mediation of that Crown) ſhould be conſulted with, to engage their Miniſter at the Hague to deliver it to the States General, for there was ſome Apprehenſion, that if De Wit knew of it, it might be conſidered only by that Committee which was deputed for that Affair, and never be brought to the States: And the adjuſting all that was commended to the Chancellor, who preſently ſent for the Ambaſſadours, and found them very ready to perform any Office which might bring them upon the Stage in the Treaty. And upon Communication together, They were willing to ſend a Servant of their own to the Hague, who ſhould deliver to their Ambaſſadour the King's Meſſage to the States General, as an Effect of their Mediation and Credit with the King. And ſo it was delivered, not in the Form of a Letter, but of a Meſſage in the third Perſon to the States General, ſigned by the King and under the Signet; and the Ambaſſadours ſent a Gentleman in Poſt with it.

The Dutch refuſe to reſtore Poleroone according to the Overtures.

BUT within two Days a new Alarm comes from France; and all that was done proved to be to no Purpoſe. When They received the King's Anſwer, They could not but acknowledge that it was as fair as They could expect; and Monſieur De Lionne ſhewed it as ſuch to the Dutch Ambaſſadour, who finding that He was ſatisfied with it, and by him, that the King was ſo too, fell into much Paſſion, and declared " that it was not according to the Conſent He had " given to the King and to Monſieur De Lionne; and " that He muſt proteſt againſt any Treaty to be en- " tered into upon this Declaration." He put him then in Mind, " that He had informed the King, in " his Preſence, that there was an Article in the late " Treaty between England and Holland, by which They " were obliged to deliver up the Iſland of Poleroone in

" the East-Indies to the East-India Company of London, " which They had formerly conſented to with Cromwell, " but had neither delivered it then nor yet, and were re- " ſolved rather to continue the War than to part with it; " which He had declared, when with Reference to " all other Things He conſented to the Alternative: " And if the King would not releaſe that Article of " the former Treaty, his Maſters would not enter " upon any new."

WHETHER this was true or no cannot be known. But Monſieur De Lionne came in great Diſorder to the Lord of St. Albans, and told him all that the Ambaſſadour had ſaid, and confeſſed it " to be very true, " and that the King remembered it well, and pro- " miſed that Article ſhould be releaſed: But that He, " not clearly underſtanding the Delivery of it to be " contained in a former Treaty, and knowing it had " been many Years in the Poſſeſſion of the Dutch, and " that it ſtill remained ſo, thought it had been com- " prehended in the Alternative, and forgot to inſert " it in the Paper that was ſent to the King, for which " He aſked a thouſand Pardons; and made it his Suit " to the King that He would yield to it, and that a " Treaty that was ſo neceſſary to the Good of Chriſten- " dom might not be extinguiſhed upon his Negligence " and Want of Memory;" which was a ſtrange Ex- cuſe for a Miniſter of his known Sagacity.

THE Earl of St. Albans refuſed to tranſmit any ſuch Tergiverſation to the King, and ſaid, " He knew the " King would never conſent to it; and that this Man- " ner of Proceeding, after that his Majeſty had con- " ſented to what themſelves propoſed, would ſhut " out all future Confidence of their Sincerity." Mon- ſieur De Lionne was exceedingly troubled and out of Countenance, as a Man conſcious to himſelf of a great Overſight, and deſired him, " that He would meet " the Dutch Ambaſſadour at his Lodging, that They " might together endeavour to remove him from the " Obſtinacy He profeſſed;" which the Earl was con- tented to do, and the Ambaſſadour, how unwillingly ſoever, was prevailed with to meet at the Time ap- pointed: But They were no ſooner met, and Monſieur De Lionne entered upon the Argument of Poleroone, but the Ambaſſadour fell into a rude Paſſion, and ſaid, " the War ſhould determine it." And when the Earl of St. Albans began to ſpeak of the Unreaſonableneſs of the Demand, and entered upon the foul Man- ner in which They had firſt taken that Iſland from the Engliſh, who were in Poſſeſſion of it; He told him, " that He had Nothing to ſay to him," and uſed much other Language unfit for the other to hear, and which He had returned with Intereſt, if Monſieur De Lionne had not interpoſed, and been very deſirous the Con- ference ſhould end, the Ambaſſadour's Inſolence be- ing not to be endured: And ſo They parted, Lionne ſeeming very much offended; and He complained to the King, and the Earl gave the Account of all to his Majeſty.

THE French King was no leſs ſurpriſed and offended when He heard what Meſſage the King had ſent to the States (which He was advertiſed of by an Expreſs from Holland), than De Wit had been at the Delivery of it, who preſently knew the Driſt of it, and could not forbear to tell the States, " that the Deſign was " only to ſtir up the People againſt the Magiſtrates, " and indeed to make them the Judges of the Con- " ditions of the Peace:" And He knew well that the People generally were no Friends to the Eaſt-India Company (where himſelf had a great Stock), and therefore would never conſent that a Treaty entered into ſhould break only upon their Intereſt; which likewiſe was the Reaſon, why They had provided that that Particular ſhould be firſt conſented to, before any Treaty ſhould be agreed upon. And hereupon He prevailed upon the States General forthwith to de- clare in the Negative, " that the Treaty ſhould not " be at the Hague." But at the ſame Time, after the naming again of Cologne and Francfort, They added, " that if the King deſired to do them the Honour to " appoint it in any Place of their Dominions, which " They did not preſume to propoſe; They ſhould " conſent that it might be at Breda, or Maeſtricht," or a Place or two that They named. And this was reſolved before the People heard that the King had named the Hague, and wondered and murmured at their Refuſal.

THE King of France took it ill, that at a Time when He proceeded with ſo much Openneſs, and had given the firſt Riſe to a Treaty, and opened the Door which the Hollander peeviſhly ſhut againſt it, by his own offering the Alternative, which the King had ſo far approved as to make his Election; He ſhould at the ſame Time, without communicating it to him, ſend this Overture to the Hague: Which troubled him the more, that it gave him Matter of Jealouſy to ap- prehend, that there was ſome other underhand Treaty that was concealed from him, and contrived by the Baron of Iſola, who He knew had been privately at the Hague and had Conference with De Wit. And the ſame Imagination did more perplex the Queen Mother and the Earl of St. Albans, who looked upon this as a Device to exclude them from having any Share in the Peace; the Earl having digeſted the Concluſion in his own Breaſt, that in what Place ſoever the Treaty ſhould be held, He ſhould without Doubt be intruſted in the Managery of it. However the King could not own his Part of the Diſlike, ſince his Majeſty might without any Violation of Friendſhip make the Over- ture by Meſſage to the Hague, as well as to or by him: Therefore He ſeemed to take no Exception to it, and only ſent the King Word, " that He believed " the Dutch would quickly diſcern, that this Conde- " ſcenſion in his Majeſty proceeded from ſome Ex- " pectation of a Party amongſt the People to ſecond " it; and therefore He was confident They would " never conſent to treat at the Hague." But He pro- poſed, " as the beſt Way for Expedition, that it might " be at Dover," which He adviſed his Majeſty not to reject: " For if it were once begun there, it might " poſſibly, and He would further it all He could, " quickly be removed to Canterbury, and probably " might be concluded in London."

BUT before this Meſſage arrived, the other new Demand of Poleroone, with Monſieur De Lionne's Ac- knowledgment of the Defect of his Memory, and that He ought to have inſerted it in the Paper that con- tained the Alternative, with all the Excuſes He made for it, was received; which ſeemed to put an End to all Hopes of Peace. The King was highly incenſed, and looked upon it as an Affront contrived by Both Parties to amuſe him. Every Body concluded, that there could be no Safety in depending upon any Thing that could be offered from France, when They could never be without as reaſonable a Pretence as They had at preſent, to diſclaim or avoid any Conceſſion They had made in Writing. That the Particular demanded could never be conſented to by his Majeſty, without ſwerving from the common Rules of Juſtice, and the Violation of his own Honour. That though it did not immediately concern his Majeſty in his own Intereſt and the Intereſt of the Crown, which was an Argu- ment uſed in France for his Majeſty's not inſiſting upon it, it was however an unqueſtionable and a very conſiderable Intereſt of his Subjects, which He was in Juſtice bound to maintain, and which in Juſtice He had no Power to releaſe. It was an Intereſt ſo valuable, that Cromwell had inſiſted upon it ſo reſo- lutely, that They had conſented to it as a principal Article of the Peace He made with them; by which He gained great Reputation with the People. And his Majeſty had thought himſelf ſo much concerned in Honour not to ſuffer his Subjects to be deprived of that Right which Cromwell had vindicated (though by his Death it came not to be executed), that He would never conſent to the Treaty that had been con- cluded ſince his happy Return, until They conſented

to

to and renewed the ſame Article, and promiſed the Redelivery of the ſaid Iſland to the Engliſh by ſuch a Day: And their having broken their Faith in not delivering it according to the laſt Treaty, and with very offenſive Circumſtances, his Majeſty had declared to be a principal Cauſe of the War, and made them unqueſtionably to appear the firſt Aggreſſor. And in that Reſpect, his Honour could not receive a more mortal Wound than in releaſing that Article, which concerned the Eſtates of other Men, and would in the Opinion of the World draw the Guilt of the War upon himſelf, or, which would be as bad, the Reproach of having purchaſed a Peace upon very diſhonourable Conditions to himſelf, at the Charge and with the Eſtates of his Subjects.

And reſolves to continue the War.

UPON the Whole, the King reſolved rather to undergo the Hazard of the War upon what Diſadvantage ſoever, than to conſent to a Propoſition ſo diſhonourable: And a Diſpatch was preſently ſent to the Earl of St. Albans, with a very lively Reſentment "of the "Indignity offered to the King, in receding from "what was offered by themſelves, and in aſking what "He was reſolved never to grant." And all were enjoined to review all that had been reſolved for the War, and to give the utmoſt Advancement to it that was poſſible: And without Doubt, if Spain had yet put itſelf into any Poſture to defend itſelf againſt the Power that was even ready to invade it, and to act any Part towards the Support of a common Intereſt; the King would hardly have been perſuaded to have hearkened more to any Propoſitions from France.

New Overtures from France.

NOTWITHSTANDING all this, new Overtures and new Importunities were ſent from France. "It was "true, that the Dutch had always proteſted againſt "making a Peace or conſenting to a Treaty without "the Releaſe of Poleroone; which his Chriſtian Ma"jeſty had conſented to, and could not recede from "it without their Conſent, though the Mention of it "had been unfortunately omitted by Monſieur De "Lionne: But his Majeſty promiſed and engaged "his Royal Word, that when the Treaty ſhould be "entered into, He would uſe all his Credit and Au"thority to perſuade the States General to recede from "their Obſtinacy, and to make no Alteration in the "laſt Treaty; but that all Things ſhould remain as "had been ſettled by it. And if He could not pre"vail with them to ſatisfy him therein, as He did "fear that there was upon their particular Intereſt "ſome peremptory Reſolution fixed, from whence "They would not be removed as to the Main; yet "in that Caſe He did in no Degree deſpair of ob"liging them to give a conſiderable Sum of Money "for Recompenſe thereof, which He deſired might "ſatisfy the King, who would find himſelf at much "Eaſe by it. And if the Commiſſioners once met "and the Treaty was begun, it would not be diſ"ſolved before a Peace ſhould be concluded; and "that the French Ambaſſadours, as ſoon as They "met, ſhould propoſe a Ceſſation from all Acts of "Hoſtility, which He expected ſhould be as ſoon "yielded to as propoſed; and that already They had "promiſed that their Fleet ſhould remain in their Har"bours till the Middle of May, before which Time the "Treaty might well begin." And from the preſent Time the French King promiſed, "that no hoſtile "Act ſhould be done by him, and that his own Fleet "ſhould not ſtir out of their Port; and that his Am"baſſadours ſhould in all Things behave themſelves "as his Majeſty could wiſh, that Particular only of "Poleroone excepted, in which They ſhould do as He "had promiſed."

THE King had by this Time had Recourſe to all the Inventions and Devices, which might yet enable him to ſet out a Fleet that might be able to fight the Enemy; but in vain. He found all Men of the ſame Opinion They had been, that He muſt be upon the Defenſive in the Manner expreſſed before, and expect the End of the Summer before He could draw his Ships together; and that there was an univerſal Impatience for Peace: So that when the Warmth of his Indignation was a little remitted, He was very willing to hear any Thing that might revive the Hope of a Treaty, when this laſt Overture from Paris arrived; upon which He preſently convened the Council, that He might take a ſpeedy Reſolution what He was to do, for He ſaw many Conveniences might be loſt by the not ſpeedily entering upon the Treaty, if it were to be entered upon at all. The Proteſtation and Promiſe to France to aſſiſt in all Things, that Particular only excepted, for his Majeſty's Service, and his Promiſe even in that, made him willing to believe that they might be real: The Hope of Recompenſe for it ſeemed little inferiour to the Redelivery of the Iſland, and was an equal Satisfaction to his Majeſty's Honour. And it ſeemed the more probable to be compaſſed, in that De Wit in his private Conference with the Baron of Iſola, in all his Paſſion in which He would not endure the Mention of the Delivery of Poleroone, and ſaid, "that the States would periſh "before They would part with it," concluded, "that "He would not ſay that They might not be perſuad"ed to give ſome Recompenſe for it."

AND many believed that the Eaſt-India Company, which was only concerned in the Intereſt of it, would chooſe rather to receive a good Recompenſe than the Iſland itſelf, which was a barren, ſandy Soil, which yielded no Fruit, but only Nutmegs, which was the ſole Commodity it bore, and is a Commodity of great Value. But when They were bound to give it up to Cromwell, there had been immediate Order ſent to cut down all the Trees upon the Iſland; which Order would be now again repeated: And ſo no leſs than ſeven Years muſt expire before any Fruit could be expected from thence. And it was ſo far from any Engliſh Factory, and ſo near to the Dutch, that They would eaſily poſſeſs themſelves of it again when They had a Mind to it. And therefore if the Company might have Money, or ſuch a Quantity of Money, of ſuch a Quantity of Nutmegs delivered to them, as might, beſides being enough for the Expence of England, bear a Part in the foreign Trade (which had been mentioned by ſome Merchants of that Company), it might be reaſonably preferable to the Iſland.

WHATSOEVER Reſolution ſhould in the End be taken, this Expedient of Recompenſe gave a Hint to a Counſel that had not yet been thought of, which was to leave the Buſineſs of Poleroone to the ſole Managery of the Eaſt-India Company, who ſhould be adviſed to chooſe ſome Members of their own, who ſhould go over with the Ambaſſadours, and receive all Advice and Aſſiſtance from them in the Conduct of their Pretences: And they would be the Witneſſes of what the King inſiſted upon on their Behalf; and would likewiſe judge, if Nothing prevented the Peace but that Intereſt, how far it ſhould be inſiſted on.

The Eaſt-India Company conſulted in Relation to Poleroone.

THE Eaſt-India Company was ſent for, and were told "that the King had Hope of a Treaty for Peace, "which He preſumed would be welcome to them: "He heard that the greateſt Difficulty and Obſtruc"tion that was like to ariſe would be concerning their "Intereſt in the Iſland of Poleroone, which He was re"ſolved never to abandon. But becauſe He heard "likewiſe that the Dutch did intend to offer a Recom"penſe rather than to reſtore the Place, and that the "Recompenſe might be ſuch as might be as agreeable "to them (of which He would not take upon him to "judge, but leave it entirely to themſelves), He had "given them this timely Notice of it, that They might "bethink themſelves what was fit for them to do, upon "a Proſpect of all that might probably occur; and "that They might make Choice of ſuch Perſons "amongſt themſelves, who beſt underſtood their Af"fairs, to the End that when the Treaty ſhould be "agreed upon and the Place appointed, and his Ma"jeſty had reſolved what Ambaſſadours He would "ſend (of all which They ſhould have ſeaſonable No"tice),

" tice), thoſe Perſons elected by them as their Com-
" miſſioners might go over with the Ambaſſadours;
" that when that Point came into Debate, and the " Dutch ſhould call ſome of their Eaſt-India Company
" to inform them, They likewiſe might be ready to " adverti ſe his Ambaſſadours of whatſoever might ad" vance their Pretences: And if a Recompenſe was to " be conſidered, They might enter into that Conſul-
" tation with the other Deputies; and that They ſhould
" be ſure to receive all the Advice and Aſſiſtance from " his Ambaſſadours, that they could require or ſtand
" in Need of." The Company received this Information from his Majeſty with all Demonſtration of Duty and Submiſſion, giving humble Thanks for his Majeſty's Bounty and Care of their Intereſt; and ſaid,
" They would not fail to make Choice of a Commit" tee to attend the Ambaſſadours, when They ſhould
" know it would be ſeaſonable."

The King conſults the Privy Council upon the Overtures made by France.

THE King thought it now Time to receive the Advice of his whole Council-Board upon this Affair, which had been hitherto only debated before the Committee for foreign Affairs: And ſo They being aſſembled, an Account was given of all that had paſſed, with all its Circumſtances, in France, and in Holland by the Baron of Iſola and by the Swedes Ambaſſadours. And his Majeſty ſaid thereupon, " that He had yet taken no
" Reſolution, and had been ſo provoked by the Miſ-" carriage of France, that He would have been glad " to have put himſelf into a better Poſture, and not " thought farther of a Treaty, till there ſhould appear
" a more favourable Conjuncture: But They now un-
" derſtood as much as He did with Reference to the " State He was in both at Home and abroad, and that " He was reſolved to follow their Advice."

Which adviſes him to enter upon the Treaty.

ALL the Objections which had been foreſeen before, and the Conſiderations thereupon, were renewed and again debated: And in the End there was a general Concurrence, " that his Majeſty ſhould embrace the " Opportunity of a Treaty; and if a reaſonable Peace
" could be obtained, it would be very grateful to the " whole Kingdom, that was weary of the War; and " that his Majeſty ſhould loſe no Time in returning
" ſuch a Diſpatch to Paris, as might bring on the " Treaty." And ſome of the Lords proceeded ſo far as to declare, " that the Conſideration of Polerovne was " not of that Importance, nor could be thought ſo by
" the Eaſt-India Company themſelves, as that the in-" ſiſting upon it ſhould deprive the Kingdom of a " Peace that was ſo neceſſary for it." But the King thought the entering upon that Argument was not yet ſeaſonable: But He gave Order for the Diſpatch to be prepared for France.

THERE were two material Points not yet determined, the firſt of which was fit to be inſerted into the preſent Diſpatch; which was the Nomination of the Place where the Treaty ſhould be. Some were of Opinion, " that his Majeſty ſhould lay Hold of the " Overture that had been made from France, which " was ſince likewiſe confirmed by Holland, that the " Treaty ſhould be at Dover:" But They changed their Minds, when They well conſidered that the ſame Objections would be naturally made againſt Dover on the King's Behalf, that had been made by the Dutch againſt the Hague; and that the People there, and leſs at Canterbury, were not incapable of any Impreſſions, which the numerous Trains of the French and the Dutch would be ready to imprint in them. In a Word; there was much more fit to be conſidered upon that Point, than is fit to be remembered. The Concluſi-on was, " that Breda, which had been offered by the " Dutch, ſhould be the Place the King would accept;"
which was added to the Diſpatch for Paris, and pre-ſently ſent away.

Breda agreed to be the Place of treating.

THE other Matter undetermined of was the Choice of Ambaſſadours, which had been never entered upon.
The King had ſpoken with the Chancellor, what Per-ſons would be fit to be employed in that Negotiation, when the Time ſhould be ripe for it; and took Notice, as He did frequently, of the ſmall Choice He had of Men well acquainted with Buſineſs of that Nature:
Upon which He had named to the King the Lord
Hollis, who had been lately Ambaſſadour in France, and was in all Reſpects equal to any Buſineſs, and Mr.
Henry Coventry of his Bedchamber, who had ſhewed ſo great Abilities in his late Negotiation in Sweden.
Upon the naming of whom his Majeſty ſaid, " They " were both very fit, and that He would think of no
" other" So that when all other Particulars were ad-juſted with Reference to the Treaty, the King, without farther conſulting it, declared, " that He intended " to ſend thoſe two his Ambaſſadours for the Treaty," before either of them knew or thought of the Employment. And when his Majeſty told them of it, He bade them repair to the Chancellor for their Inſtructions. And this gave new Thoughts of Heart to the Lord Arlington, who had deſigned himſelf and Sir Thomas Clifford, who was newly made a Privy Coun-ſellor and Comptroller of the Houſhold upon the Death of Sir Hugh Pollard, for the Performance of that Service; and thought himſelf the better qualified for it by his late Alliance in Holland, by his Marriage with the Daughter of Monſieur Beverwaert, a natural Son of Prince Maurice. And this Diſappointment went very near him; though the other had not the leaſt Thought that He had any ſuch Thing in his Heart, but adviſed it purely as They were the fitteſt Perſons who could be thought of; and their Abilities, which were well thought of before, were very notorious in this Negotiation.

Lord Hollis and Mr. Henry Coventry appointed Plenipotentiaries.

THE Swediſh Ambaſſadours, who were the only Mediators, prepared likewiſe to go to the Treaty, having agreed with the King, " that if the Treaty ſhould not " produce a Peace," of which They who hoped moſt were not confident, " that Crown would immedi" ately declare for the King, and unite itſelf to his In-" tereſt both againſt the Dutch and the French;" their Army at that Time, being held the beſt in Europe, under the Command of their General Wrangel, being near the States Dominions. And for the better confirming them in that Diſpoſition, the Chancellor had brought the Baron of Iſola to a Conference with the Swedes Ambaſſadours, and begun that Treaty between them which was ſhortly after finiſhed, and known by the Style of the Triple Alliance, that was the firſt Act that detached the Swede from France: And for the preſent the King himſelf found Means to ſupply the Crown of Sweden with a Sum of Money for the Support of their Army.

The Swediſh Ambaſſadours Mediators.

ALL Things being thus adjuſted, and the Place of the Treaty being on all Hands agreed to be Breda, and Notice being ſent from Paris, " that their Ambaſſa-" dours were departed from thence;" the King thought himſelf as much concerned in the Expedition in Re-ſpect of the Ceſſation, which the French promiſed to obtain in the very Entrance into the Treaty; and it was now the Month of May. And ſo his Ambaſſa-dours were diſpatched, and arrived there before the Middle of that Month, with an Equipage worthy their Maſter who ſent them.

THERE happened at this Time an Accident that made a fatal Breach into the Chancellor's Fortune, with a Gap wide enough to let in all that Ruin which ſoon after was poured upon him. The Earl of Southampton, the Treaſurer, with whom He had an entire faſt Friendſhip, and who, when They were together, had Credit enough with the King and at the Board to prevent, at leaſt to defer, any very unreaſonable Reſolution, was now ready to expire with the Stone; a Diſeaſe that had kept him in great Pain many Months, and for which He had ſent to Paris for a Surgeon to be cut, but had deferred it too long by the Phyſicians not agreeing what the Diſeaſe was: So that at laſt He grew too weak to apply that Remedy. They who had with ſo much Induſtry, and as They thought Certainty, prevailed with the King at Oxford to have removed him from that Office, had never ſince inter-

The Death of the Earl of Southampton.

mitted

mitted the purſuing the Deſign, and perſuaded his Majeſty, " that his Service had ſuffered exceedingly " by his receding from his Purpoſe;" and did not think their Triumph notorious enough, if They ſuffered him to die in the Office: Inſomuch as when He grew ſo weak that it is true He could not ſign any Orders with his Hand, which was four or five Days before his Death, They had again perſuaded the King to ſend for the Staff. But the Chancellor again prevailed with him not to do ſo ungracious an Act to a Servant, who had ſerved him and his Father ſo long and ſo eminently, to ſo little Purpoſe as the raviſhing an Office unſeaſonably, which muſt within five or ſix Days fall into his Hands; as it did within leſs Time by his Death.

His Character.

HE was a Perſon of extraordinary Parts, of Faculties very diſcerning and a Judgment very profound, great Eloquence in his Delivery, without the leaſt Affectation of Words, for He always ſpake beſt on the ſudden. In the Beginning of the Troubles, He was looked upon amongſt thoſe Lords who were leaſt inclined to the Court, and ſo moſt acceptable to the People: He was in Truth not obliged by the Court, and thought himſelf oppreſſed by it, which his great Spirit could not bear; and ſo He had for ſome Years forbore to be much ſeen there, which was imputed to a Habit of Melancholy, to which He was naturally inclined, though it appeared more in his Countenance than in his Converſation, which to thoſe with whom He was acquainted was very chearful.

THE great Friendſhip that had been between their Fathers made many believe, that there was a Confidence between the Earl of Eſſex and him; which was true to that Degree as could be between Men of ſo different Natures and Underſtandings. And when They came to the Parliament in the Year 1640, They appeared Both unſatisfied with the Prudence and Politicks of the Court, and were not reſerved in declaring it, when the great Officers were called in Queſtion for great Tranſgreſſions in their ſeveral Adminiſtrations: But in the Proſecution there was great Difference in their Paſſions and their Ends. The Earl of Eſſex was a great Lover of Juſtice, and could not have been tempted to conſent to the Oppreſſion of an innocent Man: But in the diſcerning the ſeveral Species of Guilt, and in the proportioning the Degrees of Puniſhment to the Degree of Guilt, He had no Faculties or Meaſure of judging; nor was above the Temptation of general Prejudice, and it may be of particular Diſobligations and Reſentments, which proceeded from the Weakneſs of his Judgment, not the Malice of his Nature. The Earl of Southampton was not only an exact Obſerver of Juſtice, but ſo clearſighted a Diſcerner of all the Circumſtances which might diſguiſe it, that no falſe or fraudulent Colour could impoſe upon him; and of ſo ſincere and impartial a Judgment, that no Prejudice to the Perſon of any Man made him leſs awake to his Cauſe; but believed that there is aliquid et in Hoſtem Nefas, and that a very ill Man might be very unjuſtly dealt with.

THIS Difference of Faculties divided them quickly in the Progreſs of thoſe Buſineſſes, in the Beginning whereof They were Both of one Mind. They Both thought the Crown had committed great Exceſſes in the Exerciſe of its Power, which the one thought could not be otherwiſe prevented, than by its being deprived of it: The Conſequence whereof the other too well underſtood, and that the abſolute taking away that Power that might do Hurt, would likewiſe take away ſome of that which was neceſſary for the doing Good; and that a Monarch cannot be deprived of a fundamental Right, without ſuch a laſting Wound to Monarchy itſelf, that They who have moſt Shelter from it and ſtand neareſt to it, the Nobility, could not continue long in their native Strength, if the Crown receive a Maim. Which if the Earl of Eſſex had comprehended, who ſet as great a Price upon Nobility as any Man living did, He could never have been wrought upon to have contributed to his own Undoing; which the other knew was unavoidable, if the King were undone. So They were Both ſatisfied that the Earl of Strafford had countenanced ſome high Proceedings, which could not be ſupported by any Rules of Juſtice, though the Policy of Ireland, and the conſtant Courſe obſerved in the Government of that Kingdom, might have excuſed and juſtified many of the high Proceedings with which He was reproached: And They who had now the Advantage-Ground, by being thought to be moſt ſolicitous for the Liberty of the Subject, and moſt vigilant that the ſame Outrages might not be tranſplanted out of the other Kingdom into this, looked upon him as having the ſtrongeſt Influence upon the Counſels of England as well as Governour of Ireland. Then He had declared himſelf ſo averſe and irreconcilable to the Sedition and Rebellion of the Scots, that the whole Nation had contracted ſo great an Animoſity againſt him, that leſs than his Life could not ſecure them from the Fears They had conceived of him: And this Fury of theirs met with a full Concurrence from thoſe of the Engliſh, who could not compaſs their own Ends without their Help. And this Combination too ſoon drew the Earl of Eſſex, who had none of their Ends, into their Party, to ſatisfy his Pride and his Paſſion, in removing a Man who ſeemed to have no Regard for him; for the Stories, which were then made of Diſobligations from the Earl of Strafford towards the Earl of Clanrickard, were without any Foundation of Truth.

THE Earl of Southampton, who had Nothing of Obligation, and Somewhat of Prejudice to ſome high Acts of Power which had been exerciſed by the Earl of Strafford, was not unwilling that they ſhould be ſo far looked into and examined, as might raiſe more Caution and Apprehenſion in Men of great Authority of the Conſequence of ſuch Exceſſes. But when He diſcerned irregular Ways entered into to puniſh thoſe Irregularities, and which might be attended with as ill Conſequences, and that They intended to compound one great Crime out of ſeveral ſmaller Treſpaſſes, and, to uſe their own Style, to complicate a Treaſon out of Miſdemeanors, and ſo to take away his Life for what He might be fined and impriſoned; He firſt diſſuaded and then abhorred that Exorbitance, and more abhorred it, when He found it paſſionately and maliciouſly reſolved by a direct Combination.

FROM this Time He and the Earl of Eſſex were perfectly divided and ſeparated, and ſeldom afterwards concurred in the ſame Opinion: But as He worthily and bravely ſtood in the Gap in the Defence of that great Man's Life, ſo He did afterwards oppoſe all thoſe Invaſions, which were every Day made by the Houſe of Commons upon the Rights of the Crown, or the Privileges of the Peers, which the Lords were willing to ſacrifice to the uſeful Humour of the other. And by this Means, whilſt moſt of the King's Servants liſted themſelves with the Conſpirators in promoting all Things which were ingrateful to him, this Lord, who had no Relation to his Service, was looked upon as a Courtier; and by the Strength of his Reaſon gave ſuch a Check to their Proceedings, that He became little leſs odious to them than the Court itſelf; and ſo much the more odious, becauſe as He was ſuperiour to their Temptations, ſo his unqueſtionable Integrity was out of their Reach, and made him contemn their Power as much as their Malice.

HE had all the Deteſtation imaginable of the civil War, and diſcerned the diſmal Effects it would produce, more than moſt other Men, which made him do all He could to prevent it. But when it could not be avoided, He made no Scruple how to diſpoſe of himſelf, but frankly declared for the King, who had a juſt Senſe of the Service He had done him, and made him then both of his Privy Council and Gentleman of his Bedchamber, without the leaſt Application or Deſire of his, and when moſt of thoſe who were under Both thoſe Relations had choſen, as the much ſtronger, the Rebels Side: And his receiving those Obligations at that present was known to proceed more from his Duty than his Ambition. He had all the Fidelity that God requires, and all the Affection to the Person of the King that his Duty suggested to him was due, without any Reverence for or Compliance with his Infirmities or Weakness; which made him many Times uneasy to the King, especially in all Consultations towards Peace, in which He was always desirous that his Majesty should yield more than He was inclined to do.

He was in his Nature melancholick, and reserved in his Conversation, except towards those with whom He was very well acquainted; with whom He was not only chearful, but upon Occasion light and pleasant. He was naturally lazy, and indulged overmuch Ease to himself: Yet as no Man had a quicker Apprehension or solider Judgment in Business of all Kinds, so, when it had a hopeful Prospect, no Man could keep his Mind longer bent, and take more Pains in it. In the Treaty at Uxbridge, which was a continued Fatigue of twenty Days, He never slept four Hours in a Night, who had never used to allow himself less than ten, and at the End of the Treaty was much more vigorous than in the Beginning; which made the Chancellor to tell the King when They returned to Oxford, "that if He would have the Earl of Southamp-"ton in good Health and good Humour, He must "give him good Store of Business to do."

His Person was of a small Stature; his Courage, as all his other Faculties, very great; having no Sign of Fear or Sense of Danger, when He was in a Place where He ought to be found. When the King had withdrawn himself from Oxford in order to his Escape to the Scotch Army, and Fairfax had brought his Army before the Town; in some Debate at the Council-Board, there being some Mention of Prince Rupert with Reference to his Dignity in a large Degree above all the Nobility, the Earl of Southampton, who never used to speak indecently, used some Expressions, which, being unfaithfully reported to the Prince, His Highness interpreted to be disrespectful towards him: Whereupon He sent the Lord Gerard to expostulate with him. To whom the Earl without any Apology related the Words He had used; which being reported by him again to the Prince, though they were not the same which He had been informed, yet He was not so well satisfied with them, but that He sent the same Lord to him again to tell him, "that his Highness "expected other Satisfaction from him, and expected "to meet him with his Sword in his Hand, and desired "it might be as soon as He could, lest it might be "prevented."

The Earl appointed the next Morning, at a Place well known; and being asked "what Weapon He "chose," He said, "that He had no Horse fit for "such a Service, nor knew where suddenly to get one; "and that He knew himself too weak to close with the "Prince: And therefore He hoped his Highness "would excuse him, if He made Choice of such Wea-"pons as He could best use; and therefore He re-"solved to fight on Foot with a Case of Pistols only;" which the Prince willingly consented to. And without Doubt They had met the next Morning, the Earl having chosen Sir George Villiers for his Second; but that the Lord Gerard's coming to the Earl so often, with whom He had no Acquaintance, had been so much observed, that some of the Lords who had been present at the Debate at the Board, and heard some Replies which had been made, and thence concluded that ill Offices had been done, watched them Both so narrowly, and caused the Town-Gates to be shut, that They discovered enough, notwithstanding the Denial of Both Parties, to prevent their Meeting; and afterwards interposed till a Reconciliation was made: And the Prince ever afterwards had a good Respect for the Earl.

After the Murder of the King, the Earl of Southampton remained in his own House, without the least Application to those Powers which had made themselves so terrible, and which seemed to resolve to root out the whole Party as well as the Royal Family; and would not receive a Civility from any of them: And when Cromwell was near his House in the Country, upon the Marriage of his Son in those Parts, and had a Purpose to have made a Visit to him; upon a private Notice thereof, He immediately removed to another House at a greater Distance. He sent frequently some trusty Person to the King with such Presents of Money, as He could receive out of the Fortune They had left to him, which was scarce enough to support him in that Retirement: And after the Battle of Worcester, when the Rebels had set a Price upon the King's Head, and denounced the most terrible Judgment upon any Person, and his Posterity, that should presume to give any Shelter or Assistance to Charles Stuart towards his Escape; He sent a faithful Servant to all those Persons, who in Respect of their Fidelity and Activity were most like to be trusted upon such an Occasion, that They should advertise the King, "that He would "most willingly receive him into his House, and pro-"vide a Ship for his Escape." And his Majesty received this Advertisement from him the Day before He was ready to embark in a small Vessel prepared for him in Sussex; which his Majesty always remembered as a worthy Testimony of his Affection and Courage in so general a Consternation. And the Earl was used to say, "that after that miraculous Escape, how dis-"mal soever the Prospect was, He had still Confi-"dence of his Majesty's Restoration."

His own natural Disposition inclined to melancholick; and his Retirement from all Conversation, in which He might have given some Vent to his own Thoughts, with the Discontinuance of all those bodily Exercises and Recreations to which He had been accustomed, brought many Diseases upon him, which made his Life less pleasant to him; so that from the Time of the King's Return, between the Gout and the Stone, He underwent great Affliction. Yet upon the happy Return of his Majesty He seemed to recover great Vigour of Mind, and undertook the Charge of High Treasurer with much Alacrity and Industry, as long as He had any Hope to get a Revenue settled proportionable to the Expence of the Crown (towards which his Interest and Authority and Counsel contributed very much), or to reduce the Expence of the Court within the Limits of the Revenue. But when He discerned that the last did and would still make the former impossible (upon which He made as frequent and lively Representations as He thought himself obliged to do), and when He saw Irregularities and Excesses to abound, and to overflow all the Banks which should restrain them; He grew more dispirited, and weary of that Province, which exposed him to the Reproaches which others ought to undergo, and which supplied him not with Authority to prevent them. And He had then withdrawn from the Burden, which He infinitely desired to be eased of, but out of Conscience of his Duty to the King, who He knew would suffer in it; and that the People who knew his Affections very well, and already opened their Mouths wide against the License of the Court, would believe it worse and incurable if He quitted the Station He was in. This, and this only, prevailed with him still to undergo that Burden, even when He knew that They who enjoyed the Benefit of it were as weary that He should be disquieted with it.

He was a Man of great and exemplary Virtue and Piety, and very regular in his Devotions; yet was not generally believed by the Bishops to have an Affection keen enough for the Government of the Church, because He was willing and desirous, that Somewhat more might have been done to gratify the Presbyterians than They thought just. But the Truth is; He had a perfect Detestation of all the Presbyterian Principles, nor had ever had any Conversation with their Persons, having during all those wicked Times strictly observed the Devotions preſcribed by the Church of England; in the Performance whereof He had always an orthodox Chaplain, one of thoſe deprived of their Eſtates by that Government, which diſpoſed of the Church as well as of the State. But it is very true, that upon the Obſervation of the great Power and Authority which the Preſbyterians uſurped and were poſſeſſed of, even when Cromwell did all He could to diveſt them of it, and applied all his Intereſt to oppreſs or ſuppreſs them, inſomuch as They did often give a Check to and divert many of his Deſigns; He did believe that their Numbers and their Credit had been much greater than in Truth they were. And then ſome Perſons, who had Credit with him by being thought to have an equal Averſion from them, perſuaded him to believe, that They would be ſatisfied with very eaſy Conceſſions, which would bring no Prejudice or Inconvenience to the Church. And this Imagination prevailed with him, and more with others who loved them not, to wiſh that there might be ſome Indulgence towards them. But that which had the ſtrongeſt Influence upon him, and which made him leſs apprehenſive of the Venom of any other Sect, was the extreme Jealouſy He had of the Power and Malignity of the Roman Catholicks; whoſe Behaviour from the Time of the Suppreſſion of the Regal Power, and more ſcandalouſly at and from the Time of the Murder of the King, had very much irreconciled him towards them: And He did believe, that the King and the Duke of York had a better Opinion of their Fidelity, and leſs Jealouſy of their Affections, than They deſerved; and ſo thought there could not be too great an Union of all other Intereſts to control the Exorbitance of that. And upon this Argument, with his private Friends, He was more paſſionate than in any other.

He had a marvellous Zeal and Affection for the Royal Family; inſomuch as the two Sons of the Duke of York falling Both into Diſtempers (of which They Both ſhortly after died) very few Days before his Death, He was ſo marvellouſly affected with it, that many believed the Trouble of it, or a Preſage what might befall the Kingdom by it, haſtened his Death ſome Hours: And in the Agony of Death, the very Morning He died, He ſent to know how They did; and ſeemed to receive ſome Relief, when the Meſſenger returned with the News, that They were both alive and in ſome Degree mended.

The King reſolves to put the Treaſury into Commiſſion.

The next Day after his Death, which was about the End of May, the King called the Chancellor into his Cloſet; and, the Duke of York being only preſent, told him "that He could think of no Man fit to be "Treaſurer, and therefore reſolved, as He had long "done, to put that Office into Commiſſion;" and then aſked, "who ſhould be Commiſſioners:" To which He anſwered, "the Buſineſs would be much "better done by a ſingle Officer, if he could think "of a fit one; for Commiſſioners never had, never "would do, that Buſineſs well." The Duke of York ſaid, "that He believed it would be beſt done by "Commiſſion; it had been ſo managed during all the "ill Times" (for from the Beginning of the Troubles there had been no Treaſurer): "And He had obſerved "(and the King found the Benefit of it), that though "Sir William Compton was an extraordinary Perſon, "and better qualified than moſt Men for that Charge, "yet ſince his Deceaſe, that his Majeſty had put the "Office of the Ordnance under the Government of "Commiſſioners it was in much better Order, and the "King was better ſerved there than He had ever been; "and He believed He would be ſo likewiſe in the Of-"fice of Treaſury, if fit Perſons were choſen for it, "who might have Nothing elſe to do." And the King ſeemed to be of the ſame Mind.

The Chancellor adviſes him againſt it.

The Chancellor replied, "that He was very ſorry, "that They were Both ſo much delighted with the "Function of Commiſſioners, which were more ſuit-"able to the modelling a Commonwealth, than for "the Support of Monarchy; That during the late "Troubles, whilſt the Parliament exerciſed the Go-"vernment, They reduced it as faſt as They could to "the Form of a Commonwealth; and then no Queſ-"tion the putting the Treaſury into the Hands of "Commiſſioners was much more ſuitable to the reſt "of the Model, than it could be under a ſingle Perſon. "Beſides, having no Revenue of their own, but being "to raiſe one according to their Inventions and pro-"portionable to their own Occaſions, it could never "be well collected or ordered by old Officers, who "were obliged to Forms which would not be agree-"able to their neceſſary Tranſactions: So that new "Miniſters were to be made for new Employments, "who might be obliged punctually to obſerve their "new Orders without any Superiority over each "other, but a joint Obedience to the ſupreme Autho-"rity. But when Cromwell aſſumed the entire Go-"vernment into his own Hands, He cancelled all thoſe "Republican Rules and Forms, and appointed infe-"riour Perſons to ſeveral Functions, and reſerved the "whole Diſpoſition to himſelf, and was his own High "Treaſurer: And it was well known that He reſol-"ved, as ſoon as He ſhould be able to reduce Things "to the Forms He intended, to cancel all thoſe Com-"miſſions, and inveſt ſingle Perſons in the Govern-"ment of thoſe Provinces."

He ſaid, "He would not take upon him to ſay any "Thing of the Office of the Ordnance, where the "Commiſſioners were his Friends; only He might "ſay, that that Kind of Adminiſtration had not been "yet long enough known to have a good Judgment "made of it: However, that it was of ſo different a "Nature from the Office of the Treaſury, that no "Obſervation of the one could be applied to the other, "The Ordnance was converſant only with Smiths and "Carpenters, and other Artificers and Handicrafts-"men, with whom all their Tranſactions were; "Whereas the Treaſury had much to do with the No-"bility and chief Gentry of the Kingdom; muſt have "often Recourſe to the King himſelf for his particular "Directions, to the Privy Council for their Aſſiſtance "and Advice, to the Judges for their Reſolutions in "Matters of Difficulty; and if the Miniſters of it "were not of that Quality and Degree, that They "might have free Recourſe to all thoſe, and find Re-"ſpect from them, his Majeſty's Service would noto-"riouſly ſuffer. And that the White Staff itſelf, in "the Hands of a Perſon eſteemed, did more to the "bringing in ſeveral Branches of the Revenue, by the "Obedience and Reverence all Officers paid to it, "than any Orders from Commiſſioners could do: "And that how mean an Opinion ſoever ſome Men "had of the Faculties of the late excellent Officer for "that Adminiſtration, his Majeſty would find by Ex-"perience, that the vaſt Sums of Money, which He "had borrowed in theſe late Years, had been in a great "Meaſure procured upon the general Confidence all "Men had in the Honour and Juſtice of the Trea-"ſurer; and that the Credit of Commiſſioners would "never be able to ſupply ſuch Neceſſities."

The King ſaid, "He was not at all of his Opinion, "and doubted not his Buſineſs would be much better "done by Commiſſioners; and therefore He ſhould "ſpeak to the Nomination of thoſe, ſince He was ſure "He could propoſe no ſingle Perſon fit for it." To which the Chancellor anſwered, "that He thought it "much harder to find a worthy Man, who would be "perſuaded to accept it in the Diſorder in which his "Affairs were, than a Man who might be very fit for "it: And that if that Subject who had the greateſt "Fortune in England and the moſt general Reputa-"tion would receive it, his Majeſty would be no "Loſer in conferring it on ſuch a one; and till ſuch "a one might be found, He might put it into Com-"miſſion. But," He ſaid, "He perceived well, that "He would not approve the old Courſe in the Choice "of Commiſſioners; who had always been the Keeper "of the Great Seal, and the two Secretaries of State,

"and

" and two others of the principal Perſons of the Coun" cil, beſides the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who
" uſed to be the ſole Perſon of the Quorum."

NEITHER the King nor Duke ſeemed to like any of thoſe; and the Chancellor plainly diſcerned from the Beginning that They were reſolved upon the Perſons, though his Opinion was aſked: And the King ſaid, " He would chooſe ſuch Perſons, whether Privy Coun-
" ſellors or not, who might have Nothing elſe to do,
" and were rough and ill-natured Men, not to be moved " with Civilities or Importunities in the Payment of " Money; but would apply it all to his preſent Ne" ceſſities, till ſome new Supplies might be gotten for " the Payment of thoſe Debts, which were firſt neceſ-
" ſary to be paid. That He, the Chancellor, had ſo
" much Buſineſs upon his Hands, that He could not " attend this other; and the Secretaries had enough
" to do: So He would have none of thoſe." And then He named Sir Thomas Clifford, who was newly of the Council and Comptroller of the Houſe, and Sir William Coventry; and ſaid, " He did not think there
" ſhould be many:" And the Duke then named Sir John Duncombe as a Man of whom He had heard well, and every Body knew He was intimate with Sir William Coventry. The King ſaid, " He thought They
" three would be enough, and that a greater Number " would but make the Diſpatch of all Buſineſs the " more ſlow."

THE Chancellor ſaid, " He doubted thoſe Per-
" ſons would not have Credit and Authority enough
" to go through the neceſſary Affairs of that Pro" vince; that for his own Part, He was not deſirous
" to meddle in it; He had indeed too much Buſineſs to " do: That He had no Objection to the three Perſons
" named, but that He thought them not known and " eſteemed enough for that Employment; and that it " would be very incongruous to bring Sir John Dun-
" combe, who was a private Country Gentleman, and " utterly unacquainted with Buſineſs of that Nature,
" to ſit in equal Authority with Privy Counſellors, and
" in Affairs which would be often debated at the " Council-Table, where He could not be preſent.";
And He put his Majeſty in Mind, " that He muſt
" put the Lord Aſhley out of his Office of Chancellor " of the Exchequer, if He did not make him Com-
" miſſioner of the Treaſury, and of the Quorum:"
And concluded " that if He did not name the Gene" ral, and ſome other Perſon that might give ſome
" Luſtre to the others, the Work would not be done
" as it ought to be; for many Perſons would be ſome-
" times obliged to attend upon the Treaſury, who " would not think thoſe Gentlemen enough ſuperiour
" to them, how qualified ſoever."

THE King ſaid, " He could eaſily provide againſt
" the Exception to Sir John Duncombe, by making " him a Privy Counſellor; and He did not care if He " added the General to them." The Lord Aſhley gave him ſome Trouble, and He ſaid enough to make it manifeſt that He thought him not fit to be amongſt them: Yet He knew not how to put him out of his Place; but gave Direction for preparing the Commiſſion for the Treaſury to the Perſons named before, and made the Lord Aſhley only one of the Commiſſioners, and a major Part to make a Quorum; which would quickly bring the Government of the whole Buſineſs into the Hands of thoſe three who were deſigned for it. And Aſhley rather choſe to be degraded, than to diſpute it.

Commiſſioners of the Treaſury appointed.

Negotiations at Breda.

THE King expected, that as ſoon as the Ambaſſadours ſhould meet at the Hague, a Ceſſation would be the firſt Thing that would be agreed upon: And the French Ambaſſadours did in the firſt Place propoſe it, and in ſuch a Manner, as made it evident that They depended upon it as a Thing reſolved upon; and their Maſter had with their Conſent diſmiſſed his own Fleet, and theirs was yet in their Ports. Nor did the Dutch ſeem to refuſe it; but anſwered, " that the adjuſting all " Things in Order to a Ceſſation would require as much " Time as would ſerve to finiſh the Treaty, conſider-
" ing all material Points were upon the Matter alrea" dy ſtated and agreed upon, the King having already
" choſen the Alternative:" And notwithſtanding all the Earneſtneſs uſed by the French Ambaſſadours, no other Anſwer could be obtained as a Ceſſation; which, together with the ſupercilious Behaviour of the Commiſſioners from Holland, made it apparent, that They had no other Mind at that Time to Peace, than as They were compelled to it by France, that was impatient to have it concluded. They would not hear any Mention for the Redelivery of Poleroone, " which,"
They ſaid, " the King of France had promiſed ſhould
" not be demanded;" and as little for any Recompenſe in Money; nor would ſuffer the Merchant-Deputies from the Engliſh Company to go to Amſterdam, to confer with the Eaſt-India Company there for any Compoſition. It quickly appeared, that They had Revenge in their Hearts for their laſt Year's Affront and Damage at the Flie; and De Wit had often ſaid,
" that before any Peace They would leave ſome ſuch
" Mark of their having been upon the Engliſh Coaſt,
" as the Engliſh had left of their having been upon
" that of Holland."

The Dutch defer agreeing to a Ceſſation.

AFTER the Treaty was entered into, about the Beginning of June, De Ruyter came with the Fleet out of the Wierings and joining with the reſt from the Texel ſailed for the Coaſt of England: And having a fair Wind ſtood for the River of Thames; which put the County of Kent into ſuch an Alarm, that all near the Sea left their Houſes and fled into the Country. The Earl of Winchelſea who was Lord Lieutenant of that County, was at that Time Ambaſſadour at Conſtantinople, and the Deputy-Lieutenants had all equal Authority: So that no Man had Power to command in that large County in ſo general a Diſtraction. Hereupon the King ſent down Lieutenant General Middleton with Commiſſion to draw all the Trainbands together, and to command all the Forces that could be raiſed: And He immediately went thither, and was very well obeyed, and quickly drew all the Trainbands of Horſe and Foot to Rocheſter; and other Troops reſorted to him from the neighbour Counties, all the People expreſſing a great Alacrity in being commanded by him.

The Attempt of the Dutch upon Sheerneſs and Chatham.

THERE had been enough Diſcourſe all that Year of erecting a Fort at Sheerneſs for the Defence of the River: And the King had made two Journies thither in the Winter, and had given ſuch Orders to the Commiſſioners of the Ordnance for the overſeeing and finiſhing the Fortifications, that every Body believed that Work done; it having been the principal Defence and Proviſion directed and depended upon (as hath been ſaid before), when the Reſolution had been taken for the ſtanding only upon the Defence for this Summer. But whatever had been thought or directed, very little had been done. There were a Company or two of very good Soldiers there under excellent Officers; but the Fortifications were ſo weak and unfiniſhed, and all other Proviſions ſo entirely wanting, that the Dutch Fleet no ſooner approached within a Diſtance, but with their Cannon They beat all the Works flat, and drove all the Men from the Ground: Which as ſoon as They had done, with their Boats They landed Men, and ſeemed reſolved to fortify and keep it.

THIS put the Country into a Flame, and the News of it exceedingly diſturbed the King. He knew the Conſequence of the Place, and how eaſily it might have been ſecured, and was the more troubled, that it had been neglected: And with what Loſs ſoever, it muſt be preſently recovered out of thoſe Hands. The General was immediately ordered to march to Chatham, for the Security of the Navy, with ſuch Troops of Horſe and Foot as could be preſently drawn together out of the Guards, and from the neighbour Counties; and the City appeared very forward to ſend ſuch Regiments of their Trainbands as ſhould be required. When the General came to Chatham, He found Mid- dleton in ſo good a Poſture, and ſo good a Body of Men, that He had no Apprehenſion of any Attempt the Dutch could make at Land; and He writ very chearful and confident Letters to the King and the Duke, "that if the Enemy ſhould make any Attempt, "which He believed They durſt not do, They would "repent it. That He had put a Chain over the "River, which would hinder them from coming up: "And if They ſhould adventure to land any where, "He would quickly beat them to their Ships;" as no Doubt He had been very well able to have done.

THERE was indeed no Danger of their landing, and They were too wiſe to think of it: Their Buſineſs was in an Element They had more Confidence in and more Power upon. They had good Intelligence how looſely all Things were left in the River: And therefore as ſoon as the Tide came to help them, They ſtood full up the River, without any Conſideration of the Chain, which their Ships immediately brake in Pieces, and paſſed without the leaſt Pauſe; there being either no ſuch Device to be made that can obſtruct ſuch an Enterpriſe, or that which was made was ſo weak, that it was of no Signification, but to raiſe an unſeaſonable Confidence in unſkilful Men, that being diſappointed muſt increaſe the Confuſion, as it did. For all Men were ſo confounded to ſee the Dutch Fleet advance over the Chain, which They looked upon as a Wall of Braſs, that They knew not what They were to do.

THE General was of a Conſtitution and Temper ſo void of Fear, that there could appear no Signs of Diſtraction in him: Yet it was plain enough that He knew not what Orders to give. There were two or three Ships of the Royal Navy negligently, if not treacherouſly, left in the River, which might have been very eaſily drawn into Safety, and could be of no imaginable Uſe in the Place where they then were: Into one of thoſe the General put himſelf, and invited the young Gentlemen who were Volunteers to accompany him; which They readily did in great Numbers, only with Pikes in their Hands. But ſome of his Friends whiſpered to him, "how unadviſed that Re-"ſolution was, and how deſperate, without Poſſibility "of Succeſs, the whole Fleet of the Enemy approach-"ing as faſt as the Tide would enable them." And ſo He was prevailed with to put himſelf again on Shore: Which except He had done, both himſelf and two or three hundred Gentlemen of the Nobility and prime Gentry of the Kingdom had inevitably periſhed; for all thoſe Ships, and ſome Merchant-Men laden and ready to put to Sea, were preſently in a Flame; the Dutch, knowing that They could not carry them off, giving Order to burn them, the General ſtanding upon the Shore, and not knowing what Remedy to apply to all this Miſchief. The People of Chatham, which is naturally an Army of Seamen and Officers of the Navy, who might and ought to have ſecured all thoſe Ships, which They had Time enough to have done, were in Diſtraction; their chief Officers having applied all thoſe Boats and lighter Veſſels which ſhould have towed up the Ships, to carry away their own Goods and Houſhold ſtuff, and given what They left behind for loſt. And without Doubt, if the Dutch had proſecuted the preſent Advantage They had, with that Circumſpection and Courage that was neceſſary, They might have fired the Royal Navy at Chatham, and taken or deſtroyed all the Ships which lay higher in the River, and ſo fully revenged themſelves for what They had ſuffered at the Flie: But They thought They had done enough, and ſo made Uſe of the Ebb to carry them back again.

Great Conſternation in the City and Court.

BUT the Noiſe of this, and the Flame of the Ships which were burned, made it eaſily believed in the City of London, that the Enemy had done all that They conceived They might have done: They thought that They were landed in many Places, and that their Fleet was come up as far as Greenwich. Nor was the Confuſion there greater than it was in the Court itſelf: Where They who had moſt advanced the War, and reproached all them who had been or were thought to be againſt it, "as Men who had no publick Spirits, and "were not ſolicitous for the Honour and Glory of the "Nation;" and who had never ſpoken of the Dutch but with Scorn and Contempt, as a Nation rather worthy to be cudgelled than fought with; were now the moſt dejected Men that can be imagined, railed very bitterly at thoſe who had adviſed the King to enter into that War, "which had already conſumed "ſo many gallant Men, and would probably ruin the "Kingdom," and wiſhed "that a Peace, as the only "Hope, were made upon any Terms." In a Word, the Diſtraction and Conſternation was ſo great in Court and City, as if the Dutch had not been only Maſters of the River, but had really landed an Army of one hundred thouſand Men.

THEY who remember that Conjuncture, and were then preſent in the Galleries and privy Lodgings at Whitehall, whither all the World flocked with equal Liberty, can eaſily call to Mind many Inſtances of ſuch wild Deſpair and even ridiculous Apprehenſions, that I am willing to forget, and would not that the leaſt Mention of them ſhould remain: And if the King's and Duke's perſonal Compoſure had not reſtrained Men from expreſſing their Fears, there wanted not ſome who would have adviſed them to have left the City. And there was a Lord, who would be thought one of the greateſt Soldiers in Europe, to whom the Cuſtody of the Tower was committed, who lodging there only one Night, declared "that it was not te-"nable," and deſired not to be charged with it: And thereupon many who had carried their Money and Goods thither, removed them from thence that they might be farther from the River. Nor did this unreaſonable Diſtemper paſs away, when it was known that the Dutch Fleet had not only left the River, but had taken away all their Men from Sheerneſs, which was a Manifeſtation very ſufficient that They had no Deſign upon the Land: But there remained ſtill ſuch a Chagrin in the Minds of many, as if They would return again; in which They were confirmed, when They heard that They were ſtill upon the Coaſts, and gave the ſame Alarm now to Eſſex and Suffolk, as They had done to Kent, not without making a Shew as if They meant to attempt Harwich and Languard Point; which drew all the Trainbands of thoſe Counties to the Seaſide, and the Duke of York went thither to conduct them, if there ſhould be Occaſion.

The King adviſed to convene the Parliament during the Prorogation.

IN this Perplexity the King was not at Eaſe, and the leſs that every Man took upon him to diſcourſe to him of the Diſtemper of the People generally over the Kingdom, and to give him Counſel what was to be done: And ſome Men had adviſed him to call the Parliament, which at the laſt Seſſion had been prorogued to the twentieth of October; and it was now the Middle of June. And ſurely moſt diſcerning Men thought ſuch a Conjuncture ſo unſeaſonable for the Council of a Parliament, that if it had been then ſitting, the moſt wholeſome Advice that could be given would be to ſeparate them. till that Occaſion ſhould be over, which could be beſt provided for by a more contracted Council: However not knowing elſe what to do diſpoſed the King to incline to that Remedy. And it being a current Opinion, or rather an unqueſtioned Certainty, that upon a Prorogation a Parliament cannot be convened before the Day, though upon an Adjournment it may; They had brought Mr. Prynne privately to the King to ſatisfy him, "that "upon an extraordinary Occaſion He might do it:" And his Judgment, which in all other Caſes He did enough undervalue, very much confirmed him in what He had a Mind to.

IN the Beginning of the Summer, when He had reſolved to have no Fleet at Sea, there were many Reaſons which induced him to increaſe his Forces at Land. And that He might do it without Jealouſy of the People, He gave Commiſſion to three or four Perſons of the Nobility, of great Fortunes and good Names, to raiſe Regiments of Foot, and to others for Troops of Horſe; which was done at their own Charge, and with wonderful Expedition: And upon their firſt Muſters They all received one Month's Pay. Of theſe Levies ſome were ſent to repoſſeſs Sheerneſs, and extraordinary Care was taken for the better Advancement of thoſe Fortifications; and others were diſpoſed to other Poſts upon the Coaſt: But it was in View, that upon the Expiration of that Month, there muſt be new Pay provided for thoſe Regiments and Troops. Then the Trainbands, which had been drawn together, had continued for one Month, which was as long as the Law required: And now they required, or were ſaid to require, to be relieved or diſmiſſed, or that They might receive Pay. There were Diſcontents and Emulations upon Command; and They who had uſually profeſſed, "that They would willingly ſerve "the King in the Offices of Corporals or Serjeants, "whatever Command They formerly had," now diſputed all the Punctilios, and would not receive Orders from any who had been formerly in inferiour Offices. And all theſe Waywardneſſes were brought to the King, as Matters of the higheſt Conſequence, who found Difficulty enough in determining Points of more Importance.

The Privy Council conſulted about the reaſſembling the Parliament.

THEY who for their own private Deſigns deſired that the Parliament might meet, and cared not in what Humour They met, urged the King very importunately, "that He would iſſue out a Proclamation to "ſummon them, as the only Expedient to give him-"ſelf Eaſe, and to provide for all that was to be "done:" And his Majeſty was moſt inclined to it, and in Truth reſolved it; though knowing that it was contrary to the Senſe of many, He reſolved to debate it at the Council. And there He told them, "that They "all ſaw the Streights that He was in, the Inſolence "of the Enemy, and the general Diſtemper of the "Nation, which made it manifeſt that it was neceſſary "for him to have an Army, that might be ready "againſt any Thing that might fall out. That He had "no Money, nor knew where to get any; nor could "imagine any other Way to provide againſt the Miſ-"chiefs which were in View, than by calling the Par-"liament to come together, of which or any other "Expedient He was willing to receive their Advice;" expreſſing ſo much of his own Senſe, that it was plain enough that He thought that Remedy the beſt that could be applied. Three or four of thoſe who ſate at the lower End of the Board, and who were well enough known to have given the Counſel, and to be induſtrious that it might be followed, enlarged themſelves in the Debate, "that the Soldiers could not be kept toge-"ther without Money; and They could not adviſe any "other Way to get Money but by the convening the "Parliament, which They were confident might juſtly "and regularly be done:" And They deſired, "that "They who were of another Opinion would propoſe "ſome other Way how the King might get Money."

THE Chancellor diſcerned that the Matter was already concluded, what Advice ſoever ſhould be given; and that the three new Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, ſince They could find no Way to procure Money, had been very importunate with the King to try that Expedient, and the more, becauſe They well knew that He was againſt it, He having not been at all reſerved upon ſeveral Occaſions in private Diſcourſes, when They were preſent, to give many Reaſons againſt it: And He knew as well, that They would gladly make any Uſe of any Expreſſions which might fall from him, when the Remembrance might be applied to his Prejudice. Yet his natural Unwarineſs in ſuch Caſes with Reference to himſelf, when He thought his Majeſty's Service concerned, to which He did really believe the preſent Advice would produce much Prejudice, prevailed with him to diſſuade it.

The Chancellor for oppoſes it.

He ſaid, "He knew well upon what Diſadvantage "He ſpake, and how unpopular a thing it was to "ſpeak againſt the convening the Parliament in thoſe "Streights, which ſeemed to be capable of no other "Remedy: Yet ſince He thought the Remedy neither proper to the Diſeaſe, nor that it could be applied in Time, He could not concur with thoſe who "adviſed it. That moſt Men who had any Knowledge "in the Law did confeſs, that when the Parliament "ſtood prorogued to a certain Day, the convening "them upon a ſooner Day was very doubtful; and to "him, upon all the Diſquiſition He could make, it "was very clear that it could not be done: And therefore He deſired the Judges might be conſulted in "that Point, before any Reſolution ſhould be taken. "That the Temper of Both Houſes was well known; "and that it could not but be preſumed, that when "They came together, the firſt Debate They would "fall upon would be of the Manner of their coming "together, and whether They were in a Capacity to "act: And He doubted there would be very few who "would be forward to paſs an Act in a Seaſon, when "the Validity of it might be queſtioned by thoſe who "had no Mind to pay any Obedience to it. And then "if their Meeting were only to conſer together upon "all Occurrences, and They might preſume of Liberty to ſay what They had a Mind to ſay, without Power to conclude any Thing; it was well "worth the conſidering, whether, in ſo general a Diſtemper, ſuch an Aſſembly might not interrupt all "other Conſultations and Expedients, and yet propoſe none, and ſo increaſe the Confuſion. If the "Neceſſities were ſo urgent, that it was abſolutely neceſſary that a Parliament ſhould be convened, and "that which ſtood prorogued could not lawfully re-"aſſemble till the twentieth of October, as He was "confident it could not; there was no Queſtion to "be made, but that the King might lawfully by his "Proclamation preſently diſſolve the prorogued Par-"liament, and ſend out his Writs to have a new Par-"liament, which might regularly meet a Month be-"fore the prorogued Parliament could come together." And many of the Council were of Opinion, that it would moſt conduce to his Majeſty's Service to diſſolve the one, and to call another Parliament.

THIS was an Advice They believed no Man had the Courage to make, and were ſorry to find ſo many of the Opinion, which They had rather ſhould have appeared to be ſingle. Many very warmly oppoſed this Expedient, magnified the Affections and Inclinations of Both Houſes: "And though there appeared "ſome ill Humour in them at their laſt being toge-"ther, and Averſion to give any Money for the pre-"ſent; yet in the Main their Affections were very "right for Church and State. And that the King was "never to hope to ſee a Parliament better conſtituted "for his Service, or ſo many of the Members at his "Diſpoſal: But that He muſt expect that the Preſby-"terians would be choſen in all Places, and that They "who were moſt eminent now for oppoſing all that "He deſired would be choſen, and all They who were "moſt zealous for his Service would be carefully ex-"cluded;" which was a Fancy that ſunk very deep in the Minds of the Biſhops, though their beſt Friends thought them like to find more Friends and a ſtronger Support in any, than They would have in that Parliament. But the King quickly declared his Confidence in the Parliament that was prorogued, and his Reſolution not to diſſolve it; which put an End to that Debate. And the other was again reſumed, "what "the King was to do towards the raiſing Money; or "how He ſhould be able to maintain his Army, if He "ſhould defer calling the Parliament till the Day upon "which They were to aſſemble by the Prorogation:" And all Men were to reſtrain their Diſcourſe to that Point.

THE old Argument, "that there could be no other "Way found out," was renewed, and urged with more more Earneſtneſs and Confidence; and that They who were againſt it might be obliged to offer their Advice what other Courſe ſhould be taken: And this was often demanded, in a Manner not uſual in that Place, as a Reproach to the Perſons. His Majeſty himſelf with ſome Quickneſs was pleaſed to aſk the Chancellor, "what He did adviſe." To which He replied, "that "if in Truth what was propoſed was in the Nature of "it not practicable, or being practiſed could not at- "tain the Effect propoſed, it ought to be laid aſide, "that Men might unbiaſſed apply their Thoughts to "find out ſome other Expedient. That He thought "it very clear that the Parliament could not aſſemble, "though the Proclamation ſhould iſſue out that very "Hour, within leſs than twenty Days; and that if "They were met, and believed themſelves lawfully "qualified to grant a Supply of Moneys, all Men "knew the Formality of that Tranſaction would re- "quire ſo much Time, that Money could not be rai- "ſed Time enough to raiſe an Army, or to maintain "that Part of it that was raiſed, to prevent the land- "ing of an Enemy that was already upon the Coaſt, "and (as many thought or ſeemed to think) ready "every Day to make their Deſcent: And yet the "ſending out a Proclamation for reaſſembling the "Parliament would inevitably put an End to all other "Counſels. That for His Part He did believe, that "the Dutch had already ſatisfied themſelves in the "Affront They had given, and could not be in any "Condition to purſue it, or have Men enough on "Board to make a Deſcent, without the King's having "Notice of it; and that the Dutch, without a Con- "junction with the French, had not Strength for "ſuch an Undertaking: And that the French had "no ſuch Purpoſe his Majeſty had all the Aſſur- "ance poſſible, and that their Fleet was gone far "from the Coaſt of England. And his Majeſty "had reaſon to believe, that the preſent Treaty "would put an End to this War in a ſhort Time, "though the Power and Artifice of De Wit had "prevented a Ceſſation.

"HOWEVER, for the preſent Support of thoſe "Troops which were neceſſary to guard the Coaſts, "ſince Money could not be found for their preſent con- "ſtant Pay, without which free Quarter could not be "avoided; the only Way that appeared to him to be "practicable, and to avoid the laſt Evil, would be, "to write Letters to the Lieutenants and Deputy- "Lieutenants of thoſe Counties where the Troops "were obliged to remain, that They would cauſe Provi- "ſions of all Kinds to be brought into thoſe Quarters, that "ſo the Soldiers might not be compelled to ſtraggle "abroad to provide their own Victual, which would "end in the worſt Kind of free Quarter: and that the "like Letters might be written to the neighbour "Counties, wherein no Soldiers were quartered, to "raiſe Money by Way of Contribution or Loan, "which ſhould be abated out of the next Impoſi- "tions, that ſo the Troops might be enabled to ſtay "and continue in their Poſts where They were, for "Defence of the Kingdom; in which thoſe other "Counties had their Share in the Benefit, and with- "out which They muſt themſelves be expoſed to the "Diſorder of the Soldiers, and poſſibly to the Inva- "ſion of the Enemy."

IT is very probable, that in the Earneſtneſs of this Debate, and the frequent Interruptions which were given, He might uſe that Expreſſion (which was afterwards objected againſt him) "of raiſing Contribution "as had been in the late civil War." Whatever it was He ſaid, it was evident at the Time that ſome Men were well pleaſed with it, as Somewhat They meant to make Uſe of hereafter, in which his Innocence made him little concerned.

The Parliament ſummoned to meet.

THE Concluſion was, though many of the Lords ſpake againſt it, and much the major Part thought it not counſellable; that a Proclamation ſhould forthwith iſſue out, to require all the Members of Parliament to meet upon a Day appointed in the Beginning of Auguſt, to conſult upon the great Affairs of the Kingdom: And this Proclamation was preſently iſſued accordingly.

The Treaty advanced.

ALL this Time the Treaty proceeded at Breda, as faſt as the inſolent Humour of the Dutch would ſuffer it. The French King declared himſelf much offended with their Proceedings at Sea; And his Ambaſſadours ſpake ſo loud, that the States gave Order to their Deputies to bring the Treaty to a Concluſion; and ſent ſuch Orders to De Ruyter, that there was no more Hoſtility of any Moment; only the Fleet remained at Sea, that it might appear They were Maſters of it. It cannot be denied that the French Ambaſſadours, except in what referred to Poleroone, behaved themſelves as candidly as could be wiſhed: And it is probable, that the ſame Reaſon which moved the French to uſe all poſſible Diligence to bring the Treaty to an End, prevailed likewiſe with the Dutch to uſe all the Delays They could, that it might be prolonged.

THOUGH there was no War declared, it had been long notorious that Flanders would be invaded; And it was as notorious, that there was no Proviſion made there towards a Reſiſtance or Defence: the Marquis of Caſtelle Roderigo, who came Governour thither with a great Reputation, not making good the Expectation in the Sagacity He was famed for, nor offering at any Levies of Men, or mending Fortifications, until the French Army was upon the Borders. Then He ſent into England to preſs the King to aſſiſt him with an Army of Horſe and Foot; and it eaſily appeared the Nation would gladly have engaged in that War, not being willing that Flanders ſhould be in the Poſſeſſion of France: But the King was engaged not to give any Aſſiſtance to the Enemies of France until the Treaty ſhould be ended, which yet it was not. However He ſuffered the Earl of Caſtle-Haven, under Pretence of recruiting a Regiment in Flanders which He had formerly, to raiſe a Body of one thouſand Foot, which He quickly tranſported to Oſtend.

THE King of France was impatient to march, and yet deſired the Treaty might be firſt concluded, that both himſelf and the King of England might be at Liberty to enter into ſuch an Alliance as They ſhould think proper for their Intereſt: And the Dutch, who had no Mind that the Expedition ſhould be proſecuted, and as much feared the Conſequence of ſuch an Alliance, though They were not wiſe enough to conſider the right Means to prevent it, deſired that the Treaty might not be concluded till the Winter drew nearer. But the French quickly put an End to that their Hope by marching into the Heart of Flanders, and ſo giving them new Matter for their preſent Conſultations; not without Intimation, "that if They "would not finiſh the Treaty, that King would con- "clude for what concerned himſelf:" And this put an End to it. Yet there were ſome Alterations of ſmall Importance in ſome Articles of the former Treaty, beſides that of Poleroone, which the Ambaſſadours would not conſent to without farther Knowledge of the King's Pleaſure: And ſo one of them (Mr. Henry Coventry) came to attend his Majeſty to give him an Account of all Particulars, and receive his own final Determination.

The French invade Flanders.

THE King in the firſt Place ſent for the Eaſt-India Company, and let them know, "that the Dutch "would not conſent to the former Article for the Re- "delivery of Poleroone, nor give any Recompenſe for "it; and that He was reſolved not to depart from "them, and ſo releaſe their Right without their Con- "ſent: And therefore that they ſhould conſider "what would be for their Good." They anſwered, "that They thought a Peace to be ſo neceſſary for the "Kingdom, that They would not that any Particular "Intereſt of theirs ſhould give any Interruption to "it:" And They acknowledged, "that if the War "continued, They ſhould in many Reſpects be greater

The Eaſt-India Company give up their Claim to Poleroone.

"Loſers,

" Loſers, than the Redelivery of Poleroone would re" pair; and that They would gladly ſacrifice that
" Pretence to the public Peace."

Upon which Anſwer the Ambaſſadour made his Report of all the Particulars which were conſented to on Both Sides in the Treaty, and what remained yet in Suſpence; and made Anſwer to all Queſtions which any of the Council thought fit to aſk. And the King requiring him to deliver his own Opinion upon his Obſervation, and " whether He believed, that if " his Majeſty ſhould poſitively inſiſt upon what They " had hitherto refuſed to conſent to, the Dutch would
" chooſe to continue the War; and whether the French
" would join with them in it:" He anſwered, " that " it was very evident that the Dutch did not at preſent
" deſire the Peace, otherwiſe than to comply with " France and for Fear of it; and that France was ob" liged not to abandon them in the Point of Pole-
" roone, which the other would never part with, nor " give any Recompenſe for, though the French Am-
" baſſadours had uſed all the Arguments to perſuade
" them to it. But if that were agreed, He was con" fident They would be compelled to conſent to " whatſoever was elſe of Moment. And that the " French had uſed ſome threatning Expreſſions, up-
" on ſome inſolent Propoſitions made by the Dane,
" which They thought proceeded from the Inſtiga-" tion of Holland. And that at his coming away, the " French Ambaſſadours had uſed great Freedom with " him, and adviſed in what Particulars which were yet
" unagreed They wiſhed his Majeſty would not conſent,
" and in which they could not ſerve him, but believed a
" Time would come, in which he would be repaired for
" thoſe Condeſcenſions: In other Particulars He ſhould
" poſitively inſiſt, at leaſt with ſome little Variation of " Expreſſion; in which He expreſſed both his own and
" the Opinion of the other Ambaſſadour."

And the Whole being in this Manner clearly ſtated, the King required all the Lords ſeverally to deliver their Judgment what He was to do; and every Man did deliver his Opinion in more or fewer Words. And it may be truly ſaid, that, though one or two adorned their Paſſion with ſome Expreſſions of Indignation againſt the Dutch for their Preſumption, and as if They did believe that the Parliament would concur with the King in all Things which might vindicate his Honour from their inſolent Demands, the Advice was upon the Matter unanimous, " that the Ambaſ-
" ſadours ſhould immediately return, and conclude the " Peace upon thoſe Conditions which were ſtated at
" the Board. And He did preſently return: And all Matters were, within few Days after his Arrival, adjuſted, and put into proper miniſterial Hands for Engroſſment, and all Forms and Circumſtances agreed upon for the Proclamation of the Peace, and the Day appointed for the proclaiming thereof; and ſuch Forms of Paſſes as ſhould be given on all Sides to Merchants Ships (which would be impatient for Trade before the Days could be expired), in which all Ships of War ſhould be obliged to take Notice that the Peace was proclaimed.

The Privy Council adviſes the King to conclude the Treaty.

The Peace made.

The Parliament meets, and is immediately prorogued.

All this was done before the Day of the Parliament's convening upon the King's Proclamation: So that there being now no Uſe of an Army, and Reaſon enough to diſband thoſe Regiments which had been raiſed towards it, his Majeſty thought it not reaſonable that They ſhould enter upon the Debate of any Buſineſs, but be continued under the former Prorogation to the Day appointed; and in this there appeared not one Perſon of a different Opinion. And ſo, upon the Day, the King went to the Houſe, and told them, " that
" ſince the Condition of his Affairs was not ſo full of " Difficulty as it had been when He ſent out his Pro" clamation, and ſince many were of Opinion, that " there might be Doubts ariſe upon the Regularity of " their Meeting; He was content to diſmiſs them till
" the twentieth of October:" And ſo They ſeparated without any Debate.

The Storm begins to ariſe againſt the Chancellor.

The Publick no ſooner entered into this Repoſe, than the Storm began to ariſe that deſtroyed all the Proſperity, ruined the Fortune, and ſhipwrecked all the Hopes, of the Chancellor, who had been the principal Inſtrument in the providing that Repoſe. The Parliament, that had been ſo unſeaſonably called together from their Buſineſs and Recreations, in a Seaſon of the Year that They moſt deſired to be vacant, were not pleaſed to be ſo ſoon diſmiſſed! And very great Pains were taken by thoſe, who were thought to be able to do him the leaſt Harm, becauſe They were known to be his Enemies, to perſuade the Members of Parliament, " that it was the Chancellor
" only who had hindered their continuing together,
" and that he had adviſed the King to diſſolve them;"
which exceedingly inflamed them.

Sir William Coventry inceenſes the Members of the Houſe of Commons againſt him.

And Sir William Coventry was ſo far from being reſerved in his Malice, that the very Day that the Parliament was diſmiſſed, after He had incenſed them againſt the Chancellor, in the Preſence of ſix or ſeven of the Members, who were not all of the ſame Mind, He declared, " that if at their next Meeting, which " would be within little more than two Months, They " had a Mind to remove the Chancellor from the " Court, They ſhould eaſily bring it to paſs:" Of all which He had quickly Information, and had ſeveral other Advertiſements from Perſons of Honour, " that " there was a ſtrong Combination entered into againſt
" him;" and They mentioned ſome Particulars to have been told the King concerning him, which had exceedingly offended his Majeſty. All which Particulars, being without any Colour or Ground of Truth, He believed were Inventions (though not from thoſe who informed him) only to amuſe him.

Yet He took an Opportunity to acquaint the King with it, who, with the ſame Openneſs He had always uſed, conferred with him about his preſent Buſineſs, but only of the Buſineſs. He beſought his Majeſty to let him know, " whether he had received any In" formation that He had done or ſaid ſuch and ſuch
" Things," which He made appear to him to be in themſelves ſo incredible and improbable, that it could hardly be in his Majeſty's Power to believe them; to which the King anſwered, " that Nobody had told " him any ſuch Thing." To which the other replied, " that He did really think They had not, though He " knew that they had bragged They had done ſo,
" and thereby incenſed his Majeſty againſt him;
" which they deſired ſhould be generally believed."

The Truth is, the Chancellor was guilty of that himſelf which He had uſed to accuſe the Archbiſhop Laud of, that He was too proud of a good Conſcience. He knew his own Innocence, and had no Kind of Apprehenſion of being publickly charged with any Crime. He knew well He had many Enemies who had Credit with the King, and that They did him all the ill Offices they could: And He knew that the Lady's Power and Credit increaſed, and that She deſired Nothing more than to remove him from his Majeſty's Confidence; in which He never thought her to blame, ſince She well knew that He employed all the Credit He had to remove her from the Court. But He thought himſelf very ſecure in the King's Juſtice: And though his Kindneſs was much leſſened, He was confident his Majeſty would protect him from being oppreſſed, ſince He knew his Integrity; and never ſuſpected that he would conſent to his Ruin. He was in Truth weary of the Condition He was in, and had in the laſt Year undergone much Mortification; and deſired Nothing more than to be diveſted of all other Truſts and Employments than what concerned the Chancery only, in which He could have no Rival, and in the Adminiſtration whereof He had not heard of any Complaint: And this He thought might have ſatisfied all Parties; and had ſometimes deſired the King, " that He might retire from all other Bu-
" ſineſs, than that of the Judicatory," for He plainly diſcerned He was not able to contend with other Struggles.

I CANNOT

A Particular relating to the Duke of Buckingham which haſtens the Fate of the Chancellor.

I CANNOT avoid in this Place mentioning an Accident that fell out in this Time, and enlarge upon all the Circumſtances thereof, which might otherwiſe be paſſed over, but that it had an immediate Influence on the Fate of the Perſon who is ſo near his Fall. The King had been very much offended with the Duke of Buckingham, who had behaved himſelf much worſe towards him than could be expected from his Obligations and Diſcretion, and had been in Truth the original Cauſe of all the ill Humour which had been in Both Houſes of Parliament in the laſt Seſſion; after the End of which He went into the Country without taking his Leave of the King, and in ſeveral Places ſpake with greater Licenſe of the Court and Government, and of the Perſon of the King, than any other Perſon preſumed to do; of all which his Majeſty had Intelligence and Information, and was at that Time without Doubt more offended with him than with any Man in England, and had really great Provocation to Jealouſy of his Fidelity, as well as of his Reſpect and Affection. The Lord Arlington, a Secretary of State, had received ſeveral Informations of dangerous Words ſpoken by him againſt the King, and of his Correſpondencies with Perſons the moſt ſuſpected for ſeditious Inclinations, the Duke having made himſelf very popular amongſt the Levellers, and amongſt them who clamoured for Liberty of Conſcience, which Pretence He ſeemed very much to cheriſh.

An Account of the Duke's Behaviour.

THE King was very much awakened to be jealous of him, beſides his Behaviour in the Parliament, by ſome Informations He received from his own Servants. There was one Braythwaite a Citizen, who had been a great Confident of Cromwell and of the Council of State, a Man of Parts, and looked upon as having a greater Intereſt with the diſcontented Party than any Man of the City. Upon the King's Return this Man fled beyond the Seas, and after near a Year's Stay there came again to London, but remained there as incognito, came not upon the Exchange, nor was ſeen in publick, and returned again into Holland; and ſo made frequent Journies backward and forward for ſeveral Months, and then came and reſided publickly in the City. This being taken Notice of by Sir Richard Browne, who was Major General of the City, upon whoſe Vigilance the King very much and very juſtly depended, and the Man being well known to him, He had long endeavoured to apprehend him, till He underſtood that He was a Servant to the Duke of Buckingham, and in great Truſt with him, as He was; for the Duke had committed the whole Managery of his Eſtate to him, and upon his Recommendation had received many other inferiour Servants to be employed under him, all of the ſame Leven with him, and all notorious for their Diſaffection to the Church and State. The Major General, being one Day to give the King an Account of ſome Buſineſs, told him likewiſe of this Man, "as "one as worthy to be ſuſpected for all diſloyal Pur- "poſes, and as like to bring them to paſs, as any Man "of that Condition in England;" and ſeemed to wonder "that the Duke would entertain ſuch a Per- "ſon in his Service."

AT that Time the Duke had by his Diligence, and thoſe Faculties towards Mirth in which He excelled, made himſelf very acceptable to the King; though many wondered that He could be ſo, conſidering what the King himſelf knew of him: Inſomuch that his Majeſty told him what He had been informed of his Steward, and how much He ſuffered in his Reputation for entertaining ſuch Servants. The Duke received the Animadverſion with all poſſible Submiſſion and Acknowledgment of the Obligation, and then enlarged upon the Commendation of the Man, "of his great "Abilities, and the Benefit He received by his Ser- "vice;" and beſought his Majeſty "that He would "vouchſafe to hear him, for He believed He would "give an Account of the State of the City, and of "many Particulars which related to his Majeſty's "Service better than moſt Men could do." And the King ſhortly after ſupping at the Duke's Houſe, He found an Opportunity to preſent Mr. Braythwaite to him, who was a Man of a very good Aſpect, which that People uſed not to have, and of notable Inſinuation. He made the King a Narration of the whole Courſe of his Life, in which He did not endeavour to make himſelf appear a better Man than He had been reported to be; which Kind of Ingenuity, as Men call it, is a wonderful Approach towards being believed. He related "by what Degrees, and in what "Method of Conviction, He had explicated himſelf "from all thoſe ill Principles in which He had been "entangled: And that it had been a principal Motive "to him to embrace the Opportunity of ſerving the "Duke, that He might totally retire from that Com- "pany and Converſation to which He had been moſt "accuſtomed. And yet He thought He had ſo much "Credit with the chief of them, that They could ne- "ver enter into any active Combination, but He "ſhould have Notice of it; And aſſured his Majeſty "that Nothing ſhould paſs of Moment amongſt that "People, but his Majeſty ſhould have very ſeaſonable "Information of it, and that He would always ſerve "him with great Fidelity." In Fine, the King was well ſatisfied with his Diſcourſe, and often afterwards upon the like Opportunities conferred with him, and believed him to be well diſpoſed to do him any Service.

DURING the laſt Seſſion of Parliament, in which the Duke carried himſelf ſo diſreſpectfully to the King, this Man found an Opportunity to get Acceſs to his Majeſty, which He was willing to give him; when He ſaid, "that He thought it his Duty, and accord- "ing to his Obligation, to give his Majeſty an Ac- "count of what He had lately obſerved, and of his "own Reſolutions." He told him, "that his Lord "was of late very much altered, and was fallen into "the Acquaintance and Converſation of ſome Men of "very mean Condition, but of very deſperate Inten- "tions; with whom He uſed to meet at unſeaſonable "Hours, and in obſcure Places, where Perſons of "Quality did not uſe to reſort; and that He fre- "quently received Letters from them: All which "made him apprehend that there was a Deſign on "Foot, which, how unreaſonable ſoever, the Duke "might be engaged in. And for theſe and other Rea- "ſons, and the irregular Courſe of his Life, He was "reſolved to withdraw himſelf from his Service: And "that He hoped, into what Extravagancies ſoever the "Duke ſhould caſt himſelf, his Majeſty would retain "a good Opinion of him, who would never ſwerve "from his Affection and Duty."

THE Information and Teſtimony, which the Lord Arlington brought to the King ſhortly after this Advertiſement, made the greater Impreſſion; and there were many Particulars in the Information that could not be ſuſpected to be forged. And it appeared that there was a poor Fellow, who had a poorer Lodging about Tower-Hill, and profeſſed Skill in Horoſcopes, to whom the Duke often repaired in Diſguiſe in the Night: And the Lord Arlington had cauſed that Fellow to be apprehended, and his Pockets and his Chamber to be ſearched; where were found ſeveral Letters to the Duke of Buckingham, one or two whereof were in his Pocket ſealed and not ſent, and the reſt Copies, and one original Letter from the Duke to him, in all which there were many unuſual Expreſſions, which were capable of a very ill Interpretation, and could not bear a good one. This Man and ſome others were ſent cloſe Priſoners to the Tower, where the Lord Arlington and two other Privy Counſellors, by the King's Order, took their ſeveral Examinations, and confronted them with thoſe Witneſſes, who accuſed them and juſtified their Accuſations; all which were brought to the King.

AND then his Majeſty was pleaſed to acquaint the Chancellor with all that had paſſed, who to that Minute had not the leaſt Imagination of any Particular relating to it: Nor had He any other Prejudice to the Perſon of the Duke (for He behaved himſelf towards him with more than ordinary Civility), than what was neceſſary for any Man to have upon Account of the Extravagancy of his Life; and which He could not be without, upon what He had often received from the Duke himſelf upon his own Knowledge. The King now ſhewed him all thoſe Examinations and Depoſitions which had been taken; and that Letter to the Fellow, "which," his Majeſty ſaid, "He knew to "be every Word the Duke's own Hand;" and the Letters to the Duke from the Fellow, which ſtill gave him the Style of Prince, and mentioned what great Things his Stars promiſed to him, and that He was the Darling of the People, who had ſet their Hearts and Affections and all their Hopes upon his Highneſs, with many other fooliſh and fuſtian Expreſſions. His Majeſty told him in what Places the Duke had been ſince He left London; "that He ſtayed few Days in any Place; "and that He intended on ſuch a Day, that was to "come, to be in Staffordſhire, at the Houſe of Sir "Charles Wolſely," a Gentleman who had been of great Eminency in Cromwell's Council, and one of thoſe who had been ſent by the Houſe of Commons to perſuade him to accept the Crown with the Title of King. Upon the whole Matter his Majeſty aſked him, "what Way He was to proceed againſt him:" To which he anſwered, "that He was firſt to be apprehended; "and when He ſhould be in Cuſtody and "examined, his Majeſty would better judge which "Way He was to proceed againſt him."

The King iſſues out his Warrant to apprehend him.

UPON farther Conſideration with the Chancellor and Lord Arlington and others of the Council, the King ſent a Sergeant at Arms, with a Warrant under his Sign Manual, "to apprehend the Duke of Buckingham, "and to bring him before one of the Secretaries of "State, to anſwer to ſuch Crimes as ſhould be ob-"jected againſt him;" or to that Purpoſe. The Sergeant made a Journey into Northamptonſhire, where He was informed the Duke was: But ſtill, when He came to the Houſe where He was ſaid to be, it was pretended that He was gone from thence ſome Hours before; by which He found that He had Notice of his Buſineſs. And therefore He concealed himſelf, and appointed ſome Men to watch and inform themſelves of his Motions, it being generally reported that He would be at the Houſe of the Earl of Exeter at ſuch a Time. And Notice was given him, that He was then in a Coach with Ladies going to that Houſe: Upon which He made ſo good Haſte, that He was in View of the Coach, and ſaw the Duke alight out of the Coach, and lead a Lady into the Houſe; upon which the Door of the Court was ſhut before He could get to it. He knocked loudly at that and other Doors that were all ſhut; ſo that He could not get into the Houſe, though it were ſome Hours before Sunſet in the Month of May. After ſome Hours Attendance, one Mr. Fairfax, who waited upon the Duke of Buckingham, came to the Door, and without opening it, aſked him, "what He would have:" And He anſwered, "that He had a Meſſage to the Duke from "the King, and that He muſt ſpeak with him;" to which He replied, "that He was not there, and that "He ſhould ſeek for him in ſome other Place." The Sergeant told him, "that He ſaw him go into the "Houſe; and that if He might not be admitted to "ſpeak with him, He would require the Sheriff of "the County to give him his Aſſiſtance:" Upon which the Gentleman went away, and about Half an Hour after returned again, and threatened the Sergeant ſo much, after He had opened the Door, that the poor Man had not the Courage to ſtay longer; but returned to the Court, and gave a full Relation in Writing to the Secretary of the Endeavours He had uſed, and the Affronts He had received.

He is removed from all his Employments.

WHY all the particular Circumſtances of this Affair are ſo punctually related will appear anon. The King was ſo exceedingly offended at this Carriage, and Behaviour of the Duke, that He made Relation of it to the Council-Board, and publickly declared, "that He "was no longer of that Number," and cauſed his Name to be left out in the Liſt of the Counſellors, and "that He was no longer a Gentleman of his Bed-"chamber," and put the Earl of Rocheſter to wait in his Place. His Majeſty likewiſe revoked that Commiſſion by which He was conſtituted Lord Lieutenant of the Eaſt Riding in Yorkſhire, and granted that Commiſſion to the Earl of Burlington: So that it was not poſſible for his Majeſty to give more lively Inſtances of his Diſpleaſure againſt any Man, than He had done againſt the Duke. And at the ſame Time, with the Advice of the Board, a Proclamation iſſued out for his Apprehenſion, and inhibiting all Perſons to entertain, receive or conceal him. Upon which He thought it fit to leave the Country, and that He ſhould be leſs diſcovered in London, whither He reſorted, and had many Lodgings in ſeveral Quarters of the City. And though his Majeſty had frequent Intelligence where He was, and continued Advertiſements of the Liberty He took in his Diſcourſes of his own Perſon, and of ſome others, of which He was no leſs ſenſible; yet when the Sergeant at Arms, and others employed for his Apprehenſion, came where He was known to have been but an Hour before, He was gone from thence, or ſo concealed there that He could not be found: And in this Manner He continued ſleeping all the Day, and walking from Place to Place in the Night, for the Space of ſome Months.

A Proclamation for apprehending him.

AT laſt being advertiſed of renewed Inſtances of the King's Diſpleaſure, and that it every Day increaſed upon new Intelligence that He received of his Behaviour, He grew weary of the Poſture He was in, and employed ſeveral Perſons to move the King on his Behalf; for He was informed that the King reſolved to proceed againſt him for his Life, and that his Eſtate was begged and given. Upon this one Night He ſent his Secretary, Mr. Clifford, to the Chancellor, with whom He had never entered into any Diſpute, with ſome Compliments and Expreſſions of Confidence in his Friendſhip. He profeſſed "great Innocence and "Integrity in all his Actions with Reference to the "King, though He might have been paſſionate and "indiſcreet in his Words; that there was a Conſpiracy "againſt his Life, and that his Eſtate was granted or "promiſed to Perſons who had begged it:" And in Concluſion He deſired "that He would ſend him his "Advice what He ſhould do, but rather, that He "would permit him to come to him in the Evening "to his Houſe that He might confer with him."

The Duke deſires the Chancellor to interpoſe in his Behalf.

THE Chancellor anſwered his Secretary, who was well known to him, "that He might not confer with "him till He rendered himſelf to the King; that He "was confident, having ſeen Teſtimony enough to "convince him, that the Duke was not innocent; and "that He had much to anſwer for diſreſpectful Men-"tion of the King, which would require much Ac-"knowledgment and Submiſſion: But that He did not "know that his Crimes were of that Magnitude as "would put his Life into Danger; and that He "was moſt confident that there was no Conſpiracy "to take that from him, except his Faults were of "another Nature than they yet appeared to be; and "which no Conſpiracy, which He need not fear, "could deprive him of. And He did not believe "that there had been any Attempt to beg his Eſtate: "But He was ſure there had not been, nor could be, "any Grant of it to any Man, which muſt have paſſed "by the Great Seal." He did adviſe him, and deſired him to follow his Advice, "that if He did know "himſelf innocent as to unlawful Actions and Deſigns, "and that his Fault conſiſted only in indiſcreet Words, "as He ſeemed to confeſs, He would no longer aggra-"vate his Offence by contemning his Warrants, which "He would not be long able to avoid, but deliver him-"ſelf into the Cuſtody of the Lieutenant of the Tower, "which He was at Liberty by the Proclamation to "do, and ſend then a Petition to the King, that He

The Chancellor's Advice to him.

" might be heard: And that when He had done " this, He would be ready and willing to do him all " the Offices which would conſiſt with his Duty."

AND the next Day He gave his Majeſty a particular Account of the Meſſage which he had received, and of the Anſwer which He had returned; which his Majeſty approved, and ſhewed him a Letter that He had received from the Duke that Morning, which ſeemed to have been written after his Secretary had returned from the Chancellor. The Letter contained a large Profeſſion of his Innocence, and Complaint of the Power of his Enemies, and a very earneſt Deſire " that " his Majeſty would give him Leave to ſpeak with " him, and then diſpoſe of him as He pleaſed;" to which his Majeſty had anſwered to the Perſon who brought the Letter, who, as I remember, was Sir Robert Howard, " that the Duke need not fear the " Power of any Enemies, but would be ſure to have " Juſtice if He would ſubmit to it."

The King grows weary of the Proſecution.

BUT his Majeſty in his Diſcourſe ſeemed to be as weary of the Proſecution, as the Duke was of the concealing himſelf to avoid it, and to have much Apprehenſion of his Intereſt and Power in the Parliament; and to be troubled that the principal Witneſs, upon whoſe Teſtimony He relied, was at that Time ſick of the Small-pox, and in Danger of Death, and that another retracted Part of that Evidence that He had given. In a Word, his Majeſty appeared leſs angry than He had been, and willing that an End ſhould be put to the Buſineſs without any publick Proſecution. To which the Chancellor made no other Anſwer, than " that no " Advice could be given with Preſervation of his Ma- " jeſty's Dignity, till the Duke rendered himſelf into " the Hand of Juſtice:" Which He was very unwilling to do, and ſent again to the Chancellor by Sir Robert Howard, to preſs him, " that He might be admitted " firſt to the King's Preſence, and then ſent to the " Tower." The other told him, " that if the King " were inclined to admit him in that Manner, He " would diſſuade him from it, as a Thing diſhonour- " able to him after ſo long a Conteſt;" and repeated the ſame to him that He ſaid formerly to Mr. Clifford: Nor could He be perſuaded by any others (for others did ſpeak to him to the ſame Purpoſe) to recede a Tittle from what He had inſiſted upon, " that He " ſhould put himſelf in the Tower." In all which He ſtill gave the King a faithful Account of every Word that paſſed: For He knew well that the Lord Arlington endeavoured to perſuade the King, " that the " Chancellor favoured the Duke, and deſired that He " ſhould be at Liberty;" when at the ſame Time He uſed all the Ways He could to have it inſinuated to the Duke's Friends, " that He knew Nothing of the " Buſineſs, but that the whole Proſecution was made " by the Information and Advice of the Chancellor."

The Duke ſurrenders himſelf.

IN the End, the Duke was perſuaded to render himſelf to the Tower: And from thence He ſent a Petition to the King, who preſently appeared very well inclined to give over any farther Proſecution; which Alteration all Men wondered at, nor could any Man imagine the Ground or Reaſon of it. For though the principal Witneſs was dead, as the Lord Arlington declared He was, and that ſo much could not be proved as at the firſt Diſcovery was reaſonably ſuſpected; yet the Meanneſs and Vileneſs of the Perſons with whom He kept ſo familiar Correſpondence, the Letters between them which were ready to be produced, the diſreſpectful and ſcandalous Diſcourſes, which He often held concerning the King's Perſon, and many other Particulars which had moſt inflamed the King, and which might fully have been proved, would have manifeſted ſo much Vanity and Preſumption in the Duke, as muſt have leſſened his Credit and Reputation with all ſerious Men, and made him worthy of ſevere Cenſure. But whether the King thought not fit to proceed upon the Words and ſcandalous Diſcourſes, which He thought would more diſperſe and publiſh the Scandals; or whether He did really believe that it would diſturb and obſtruct all his Buſineſs in Parliament; or what other Reaſon ſoever prevailed with his Majeſty, as without Doubt ſome other there were; His Majeſty was very impatient to be rid of the Buſineſs, and would have been eaſily perſuaded to have given preſent Order for ſetting the Duke at Liberty, and ſo to ſilence all farther Diſcourſe. But he was perſuaded, " that that " would moſt reflect upon his own Honour, by mak- " ing it believed, that there had been in Truth a foul " Conſpiracy againſt the Perſon of the Duke, which " would give him more Credit in the Parliament and " every where elſe;" for the King had not yet, with all his Indulgence, a better Opinion of his Affection and Fidelity than He had before.

He is examined at the Council-Board.

IN Concluſion; it was reſolved, " that the Lieu- " tenant of the Tower ſhould bring the Duke of Buck- " ingham to the Council-Chamber, his Majeſty being " preſent; and there the Attorney and Solicitor Ge- " neral ſhould open the Charge that was againſt him, " and read all the Examinations which had been ta- " ken, and the Letters which had paſſed between " them:" All which was done. And the Duke denying " that He had ever written to that Fellow, " though He knew him well, and uſed to make him- " ſelf merry with him," the Letter was produced (which the King and the Lord Arlington, who Both knew his Hand well, made no Doubt to be his Hand) and delivered to the Duke; who, as ſoon as He caſt his Eye upon it, ſaid, " it was not his Hand, but He well " knew whoſe it was." And being aſked whoſe Hand it was, He ſaid, " it was his Siſter's, the Dutcheſs " of Richmond, with whom," He ſaid, " it was known " that He had no Correſpondence." Whereupon the King called for the Letter, and, having looked upon it, He ſaid, " He had been miſtaken," and confeſſed " that it was the Dutcheſs's Hand;" and ſeemed much out of Countenance upon the Miſtake: Though the Letter gave ſtill as much Cauſe of Suſpicion, for it was as ſtrange that She ſhould write to ſuch a Fellow in a Style very obliging, and in Anſwer to a Letter; ſo that it ſeemed very reaſonable ſtill to believe, that She might have written it upon his Deſire and dictating.

THE Duke denied moſt of the Particulars contained in the Examinations: And for the other Letters which had been written to him by the Fellow who was in the Tower (whereof one was found in his Pocket ſealed to be ſent to the Duke, and the others were Copies of others which had been ſent; and the Witneſs who was dead had delivered one of them into the Duke's own Hand, and related at large the Kindneſs He expreſſed towards the Man, and the Meſſage He ſent to him by him), He denied that He had ever received thoſe Letters; but acknowledged, " that the Man came often to him, and pretended " great Skill in Horoſcopes, but more in Diſtillations, " in which the Duke delighted and exerciſed himſelf, " but looked upon the Fellow as cracked in his Brain " and fit only to be laughed at." When the Duke was withdrawn, the King declared, " that He had " been deceived in being confident that the Letter " had been written by the Duke, which He now diſ- " cerned not to be his Hand, and He knew as well " to have been written by the Dutcheſs;" and thereupon ſeemed to think that there was Nothing elſe worth the examining: And ſo Order was given to ſet the Duke at Liberty, who immediately went to his own Houſe, and went not in ſome Days afterwards to the Court.

The King eaſily ſatisfied with his Defence.

ABOUT this Time, or in a few Days afterwards, a great Affliction befell the Chancellor in his Domeſticks, which prepared him to bear all the unexpected Accidents that ſuddenly ſucceeded that more inſupportable Misfortune. His Wife, the Mother of all his Children, and his Companion in all his Baniſhment, and who had made all his former Calamities leſs grievous by her Company and Courage, having made made a Journey to Tunbridge for her Health, returned from thence without the Benefit She expected, yet without being thought by the Phyſicians to be in any Danger; and within leſs than three Days died: Which was ſo ſudden, unexpected and irreparable a Loſs, that He had not Courage to ſupport; which Nobody wondered at who knew the mutual Satisfaction and Comfort They had in each other. And He might poſſibly have ſunk under it, if his Enemies had not found out a new Kind of Conſolation to him, which his Friends could never have thought of.

The Duke of York ſent by the King to deſire the Chancellor to reſign.

WITHIN few Days after his Wife's Death, the King vouchſafed to come to his Houſe to condole with him, and uſed many gracious Expreſſions to him: Yet within leſs than a Fortnight the Duke (who was ſeldom a Day without doing him the Honour to ſee him) came to him, and with very much Trouble told him, "that ſuch a Day, that was paſt, walking with the "King in the Park, his Majeſty aſked him how the "Chancellor did: To which his Highneſs had made An- "ſwer, that He was the moſt diſconſolate Perſon He ever "ſaw; and that He had lamented himſelf to him not only "upon the Loſs of his Wife, but out of Apprehenſion that "his Majeſty had of late withdrawn his Countenance from "him; to which his Majeſty replied, that He wondered "He ſhould think ſo, but that He would ſpeak more to him "of that Subject the next Day. And that that Morning "his Majeſty had held a long Diſcourſe with him, in "which he told him, that he had received very particu- "lar and certain Intelligence, that when the Parliament "ſhould meet again They were reſolved to impeach the Chan- "cellor, who was grown very odious to them, not only for his "having oppoſed them in all thoſe Things upon which They "had ſet their Hearts, but that They had been informed "that He had propoſed and adviſed their Diſſolution; which "had enraged them to that Degree, that They had taken a "Reſolution as ſoon as They came together again to ſend up "an Impeachment againſt him; which would be a great "Diſhonour to his Majeſty and obſtruct all his Affairs, nor "ſhould He be able to protect him or divert them: And "therefore that it would be neceſſary for his Service, and "likewiſe for the Preſervation of the Chancellor, that He "ſhould deliver up the Seal to him. All which He de- "ſired the Duke" (who confeſſed that He had likewiſe received the ſame Advertiſement) "to inform him "of: And that the Chancellor himſelf ſhould chooſe the "Way and the Manner of delivering up the Seal, whether "He would wait upon the King and give it into his own "Hand, or whether the King ſhould ſend a Secretary or a "Privy Counſellor for it." When the Duke had ſaid all that the King had given him in Charge, He declared himſelf "to be much unſatisfied with the King's "Reſolution; and that though He had received the "ſame Advertiſement, and believed that there was a "real Combination and Conſpiracy againſt him, yet "He knew the Chancellor's Innocence would not be "frighted with it."

THE Chancellor was indeed as much ſurpriſed with this Relation, as He could have been at the Sight of a Warrant for his Execution. He told the Duke, "that He did not wonder that the King and his High- "neſs had been informed of ſuch a Reſolution; for "that They who had contrived the Conſpiracy, and "done all They could to make it prevalent, could beſt "inform his Majeſty and his Highneſs of what would "probably fall out." And thereupon He informed the Duke "of what had paſſed at the Day of the laſt "Prorogation, and the Diſcourſe and Promiſe Sir "William Coventry had made to them, if They had a "Mind to be rid of the Chancellor: But," He ſaid, "that which only afflicted him was, that the King "ſhould have no better Opinion of his Innocence and "Integrity, than to conclude that ſuch a Combination "muſt ruin him. And He was more troubled to find, "that the King himſelf had ſo terrible an Apprehen- "ſion of their Power and their Purpoſes, as if They "might do any Thing They had a Mind to do. He "did not believe that He was ſo odious to the Parlia- "ment as He was reported to be; if He were, it was "only for his Zeal to his Majeſty's Service, and his "inſiſting upon what His Majeſty had reſolved: But "He was confident that when his Enemies had done "all that their Malice could ſuggeſt againſt him, it "would appear that the Parliament was not of their "Mind. He wiſhed that He might have the Honour "to ſpeak with the King, before he returned any An- "ſwer to his Commands." The Duke was pleaſed graciouſly to reply, "that it was the Advice he in- "tended to give him, that he ſhould deſire it; and "that He doubted not but that He ſhould eaſily pre- "vail with the King to come to his Houſe, whither He "had uſed ſo frequently to come, and where He had "been ſo few Days before:" And at this Time the Chancellor was not well able to walk; beſides that it was againſt the common Rules of Decency to go ſo ſoon out of his Houſe. When the Duke deſired the King, that He would vouchſafe to go to Clarendon-Houſe; his Majeſty very readily conſented to it, and ſaid, "He would go "thither the next Day." But that and more Days paſſed: And then He told the Duke, "that ſince He "reſolved to take the Seal, it would not be ſo fit for "him to go thither; but He would ſend for the Chan- "cellor to come to his own Chamber in Whitehall, "and He would go thither to him."

Many Perſons of Eminence interpoſe on his Behalf.

IN the mean Time it began to be the Diſcourſe of the Court: And the Dutcheſs, from whom the Duke had yet concealed it, came to be informed of it; who preſently went to the King with ſome Paſſion; and the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and the General accompanied her, who all beſought the King not to take ſuch a Reſolution. And many other of the Privy Council, with none of whom the Chancellor had ſpoken, taking Notice of the Rumour, attended the King with the ſame Suit and Advice. To all whom his Majeſty anſwered, "that what He intended was for his Good, "and the only Way to preſerve him." He held longer Diſcourſe to the General, "that He did believe by "what his Brother had told him, of the extreme "Agony the Chancellor was in upon the Death of his "Wife, that He had himſelf deſired to be diſmiſſed "from his Office;" and bade the General "go to "him, and bid him come the next Morning to his "own Chamber at Whitehall, and the King would "come thither to him." And the General came to him with great Profeſſions of Kindneſs, which he had well deſerved from him, gave him a Relation of all that had paſſed with the King, and concluded, "that "what had been done had been upon Miſtake; and "He doubted not, but that upon Conference with "his Majeſty all Things would be well ſettled again "to his Content;" which no Doubt He did at that Time believe as well as wiſh.

The Chancellor attends the King at Whitehall.

UPON Monday, the twenty-ſixth of Auguſt, about Ten of the Clock in the Morning, the Chancellor went to his Chamber in Whitehall, where He had not been many Minutes, before the King and Duke by themſelves came into the Room. His Majeſty looked very graciouſly upon him, and made him ſit down; when the other acknowledged "the Honour his Ma- "jeſty had done him, in admitting him into his Pre- "ſence before He executed a Reſolution He had ta- "ken." He ſaid, "that He had no Suit to make to "him, nor the leaſt Thought to diſpute with him, or "to divert him, from the Reſolution He had taken; "but only to receive his Determination from himſelf, "and moſt humbly to beſeech him to let him know "what Fault He had committed, that had drawn this "Severity upon him from his Majeſty." The King told him, "He had not any Thing to object againſt "him; but muſt always acknowledge, that He had "always ſerved him honeſtly and faithfully, and that "He did believe that never King had a better Servant: "and that He had taken this Reſolution for his Good "and Preſervation, as well as for his own Convenience "and Security; and that He had verily believed that "it had been upon his Conſent and Deſire." And Conference between them.

thereupon his Majeſty entered upon a Relation of all that had paſſed between him and the Duke, and "that He really thought his Brother had concurred "with him in his Opinion, as the only Way to pre-"ſerve him." In that Diſcourſe the Duke ſometimes poſitively denied to have ſaid Somewhat, and explained other Things as not ſaid to the Purpoſe his Majeſty underſtood, or that He ever implied that himſelf thought it fit.

THE Sum of what his Majeſty ſaid was, "that He "was moſt aſſured by Information that could not de-"ceive him, that the Parliament was reſolved, as "ſoon as They ſhould come together again, to im-"peach the Chancellor; and then that his Innocence "would no more defend and ſecure him againſt their "Power, than the Earl of Strafford had defended "himſelf againſt them: And," He ſaid, "He was "as ſure, that his taking the Seal from him at this "Time would ſo well pleaſe the Parliament, that his "Majeſty ſhould thereby be able to preſerve him, "and to provide for the Paſſage of his own Buſineſs, "and the obtaining all that He deſired." He ſaid, "He was ſorry that the Buſineſs had taken ſo much "Air, and was ſo publickly ſpoken of, that He knew "not how to change his Purpoſe;" Which he ſeemed to impute to the Paſſion of the Dutcheſs, that had divulged it.

THE Chancellor told him, "that He had not con-"tributed to the Noiſe, nor had imparted it to his "own Children, till They with great Trouble in-"formed him, that They heard it from ſuch and ſuch "Perſons," whom They named, "with ſome Com-"plaint that it was concealed from them: Nor did "He then come in Hope to divert him from the Re-"ſolution He had taken in the Matter itſelf." He ſaid, "He had but two Things to trouble him with. "The firſt, that He would by no Means ſuffer it to "be believed, that He himſelf was willing to deliver "up the Seal; and that He ſhould not think himſelf a "Gentleman, if He were willing to depart and "withdraw himſelf from the Office, in a Time when "He thought his Majeſty would have Need of all "honeſt Men, and in which He thought He might "be able to do him ſome Service. The ſecond, that "He could not acknowledge this Deprivation to be "done in his Favour, or in Order to do him Good; "but on the Contrary, that he looked upon it as the "greateſt Ruin He could undergo, by His Majeſty's "own declaring his Judgment upon him, which would "amount to little leſs than a Confirmation of thoſe "many libellous Diſcourſes which had been raiſed, "and would upon the Matter expoſe him to the "Rage and Fury of the People, who had been with "great Artifice and Induſtry perſuaded to believe, "that He had been the Cauſe and the Councellor of "all that They liked not. That He was ſo far from "fearing the Juſtice of the Parliament, that He re-"nounced his Majeſty's Protection or Interpoſition "towards his Preſervation: And that though the "Earl of Strafford had undergone a Sentence He did "not deſerve, yet He could not acknowledge their "Caſes to be parallel. That though that great Per-"ſon had never committed any Offence that could "amount to Treaſon, yet He had done many Things "which He could not juſtify, and which were Tranſ-"greſſions againſt the Law: Whereas He was not "guilty of any Action, whereof He did not deſire "the Law might be the Judge. And if his Majeſty "himſelf ſhould diſcover all that He had ſaid to him "in Secret, He feared not any Cenſure that ſhould "attend it: If any Body could charge him with any "Crime or Offence, He would moſt willingly under-"go the Puniſhment that belonged to it."

"BUT," He ſaid, "He doubted very much, that "the throwing off an old Servant, who had ſerved "the Crown in ſome Truſt near thirty Years (who "had the Honour by the Command of his bleſſed "Father, who had left good Evidence of the Eſteem "He had of his Fidelity, to wait upon his Majeſty "when He went out of the Kingdom, and by the "great Bleſſing of God had the Honour to return "with him again; which no other Counſellor alive "could ſay), on the Sudden, without any Suggeſtion "of a Crime, nay with a Declaration of Innocence, "would call his Majeſty's Juſtice and good Nature "into Queſtion; and Men would not know how ſe-"curely to ſerve him, when They ſhould ſee it was "in the Power of three or four Perſons who had never "done him any notable Service, nor were in the Opi-"nion of thoſe who knew them beſt like to do, to "diſpoſe him to ſo ungracious an Act."

THE King ſeemed very much troubled and irreſolute; then repeated "the great Power of the Parlia-"ment, and the clear Information He had of their "Purpoſes, which They were reſolved to go through "with right or wrong; and that his own Condition "was ſuch, that He could not diſpute with them, "but was upon the Matter at their Mercy."

The Chancellor told him, "it was not poſſible "for his Majeſty to have any probable Aſſurance what "the Parliament would do. And though He knew "He had offended ſome of the Houſe of Commons, "in oppoſing their Deſires in ſuch Particulars as his Ma-"jeſty thought were prejudicial to his Service; yet He "did not doubt but his Reputation was much greater "in Both Houſes, than either of theirs who were known "to be his Enemies, and to have this Influence up-"on his Majeſty, who were all known to be guilty of "ſome Tranſgreſſions, which They would have been "called in Queſtion for in Parliament, if He had not "very induſtriouſly, out of the Tenderneſs He had "for his Majeſty's Honour and Service, prevented it; "Somewhat whereof was not unknown to his Ma-"jeſty." He concluded "with beſeeching him, what-"ever Reſolution He took in his Particular, not to "ſuffer his Spirits to fall, nor himſelf to be dejected "with the Apprehenſion of the formidable Power of "the Parliament, which was more or leſs or Nothing, "as He pleaſed to make it: That it was yet in his "own Power to govern them; but if they found it "was in theirs to govern him, Nobody knew what "the End would be." And thereupon He made him a ſhort Relation of the Method that was uſed in the Time of Richard the Second, "when They terrified "the King with the Power and the Purpoſes of the "Parliament, till They brought him to conſent to "that from which He could not redeem himſelf, "and without which They could have done him no "Harm." And in the Warmth of this Relation He found a ſeaſonable Opportunity to mention the Lady with ſome Reflections and Cautions, which He might more adviſedly have declined.

The King leaves him in Diſpleaſure.

AFTER two Hours Diſcourſe the King roſe without ſaying any Thing, but appeared not well pleaſed with all that had been ſaid; and the Duke of York found He was offended with the laſt Part of it. The Garden, that uſed to be private, had now many in it to obſerve the Countenance of the King when He came out of the Room: And when the Chancellor returned, the Lady, the Lord Arlington and Mr. May, looked together out of her open Window with great Gaiety and Triumph, which all People obſerved.

FOUR or five Days paſſed without any farther Proceedings, or the King's declaring his Reſolution: And in that Time the Chancellor's Concern was the only Argument of the Court. Many of the Council, and other Perſons of Honour and Intereſt, preſumed to ſpeak with the King, and to give a very good Teſtimony of him, of his unqueſtionable Integrity, and of his Parts, and Credit with the ſober Part of the Nation: And to thoſe his Majeſty always commended him, with Profeſſion of much Kindneſs; but ſaid, "He had made himſelf odious to the Parlia-"ment, and ſo was no more capable to do him Ser-"vice." On the other Side the Lady and Lord Arlington and Sir William Coventry exceedingly triumphed, phed, the laſt of which openly and without Reſerve declared, "that He had given the King Advice to "remove him as a Man odious to the Parliament, "and that the King would be ruined if He did it "not; that He was ſo imperious that He would en- "dure no Contradiction;" with many other Reproaches to that Purpoſe. But except thoſe three, and Mr. May and Mr. Brounker, there ſeemed none of Name in the Court who wiſhed that the Reſolution ſhould be purſued.

The Duke of York interpoſes himſelf on the Chancellor's Behalf.

THE Duke of York concerned himſelf wonderfully on the Chancellor's Behalf, and with as much Warmth as any private Gentleman could expreſs on the Behalf of his Friend. He had great Indignation at the Behaviour of Sir William Coventry and Mr. Brounker, that being his Servants They ſhould preſume to ſhew ſo much Malice towards a Perſon They knew He had Kindneſs for. And the former had ſo much Senſe of it, that He reſolved to quit the Relation by which He had got vaſt Wealth, and came to him, and told him, "that ſince He was Commiſſioner for the Trea- "ſury, He found He ſhould not be able to attend "his Service ſo diligently as He ought to do; and "therefore deſired his Highneſs's Favour in his Diſ- "miſſion, and that He would give him Leave to "commend an honeſt Man to ſucceed him in his Ser- "vice:" To which his Highneſs ſhortly anſwered, "that He might diſpoſe himſelf as He would, with "which He was well content; and that He would "chooſe another Secretary for himſelf without his "Recommendation." And his Highneſs preſently went to the Chancellor, and informed him of it, with Diſpleaſure enough towards the Man, and much Satisfaction that He was rid of him; and aſked him "whom He would recommend to him for a Secre- "tary." He told his Highneſs, "that if He would "truſt his Judgment, He would recommend a Perſon "to him, who He believed was not unknown to him, "and for whoſe Parts and Fidelity He would paſs his "Word, having had good Experience of Both in his "having ſerved him as a Secretary for the Space of "above ſeven Years;" and named Mr. Wren. The Duke ſaid, "He knew him well, being a Member "of the Royal Company, where He often heard "him ſpeak very intelligently, and diſcerned him to "be a Man of very good Parts, and therefore He "would very willingly receive him; and the rather, "that He knew it would be looked upon as an Evi- "dence of his Kindneſs to him, which He would "always own and teſtify to all the World:" And within two Days after, He received him into his Service with the King's Approbation, the Gentleman's Abilities being very well known, and his Perſon much loved.

IN this Suſpenſion, the common Argument was, "that it was not now the Queſtion whether the Chan- "cellor was innocent; but whether, when the King "had ſo long reſolved to remove him, and had now "proceeded ſo far towards it, He ſhould retract his "Reſolution, and be governed by his Brother: It was "enough that He was not beloved, and that the "Court wiſhed him removed." And Mr. Brounker openly declared, "that the Reſolution had been taken "above two Months before; and that it would not "conſiſt with his Majeſty's Honour to be hectored "out of it by his Brother, who was wrought upon "by his Wife's Crying." And this Kind of Argumentation was every Moment inculcated by the Lady and her Party: Inſomuch as when the Duke made his Inſtances with all the Importunity He could uſe, and put his Majeſty in Mind "of many Diſcourſes "his Majeſty had formerly held with him, of the "Chancellor's Honeſty and Diſcretion, conjuring him "to love and eſteem him accordingly, when his High- "neſs had not ſo good an Opinion of him;" and complained, "that now He had found by good Ex- "perience that He deſerved that Character, his Ma- "jeſty would withdraw his Kindneſs from him, and "rather believe others, who He knew were his Ene- "mies, than his own Judgment:" The King gave "no other Anſwer, than "that He had proceeded too "far to retire; and that He ſhould be looked upon "as a Child if He receded from his Purpoſe."

The great Seal taken from the Chancellor.

AND ſo being reconfirmed, upon the thirtieth of Auguſt in the Year 1667 He ſent Secretary Morrice, who had no Mind to the Employment, with a Warrant under the Sign Manual, to require and receive the Great Seal; which the Chancellor immediately delivered to him with all the Expreſſions of Duty to the King. And as ſoon as the Secretary had delivered it to the King in his Cloſet, Mr. May went into the Cloſet, and fell upon his Knees, and kiſſed his Majeſty's Hand, telling him, "that He was now "King, which He had never been before."

THE Chancellor believed that the Storm had been now over; for He had not the leaſt Apprehenſion of the Diſpleaſure of the Parliament, or of any Thing They could ſay or do againſt him: Yet He reſolved to ſtay at his Houſe till it ſhould meet (without going thither, which He was informed would be ill taken), that He might not be thought to be afraid of being queſtioned; and then to retire into the Country, and to live there very privately. And there was a Report raiſed without any Ground, that He intended to go to the Houſe of Peers, and take his Precedence as Chancellor, with which the King was much offended: But as ſoon as He heard of it, He deſired the Lord Chamberlain to aſſure his Majeſty, "that He never intended any ſuch Thing, nor "would ever do any Thing that He believed would "diſpleaſe him;" with which He ſeemed well ſatisfied.

HOWEVER a new Tempeſt was quickly raiſed againſt him. Many Perſons of Honour and Quality came every Day to viſit him with many Expreſſions of Affection and Eſteem; and moſt of the King's Servants, except only thoſe few who had declared themſelves his Enemies, ſtill frequented his Houſe with the ſame Kindneſs They had always profeſſed: But They were looked upon quickly with a very ill Countenance by the other Party, and were plainly told, "that the King would take it ill from all his "Servants who viſited the Chancellor;" though when ſome of them aſked his Majeſty, "whether their viſit- "ing him, to whom They had been formerly much "beholden, would offend his Majeſty;" He anſwered, "No, He had not forbid any Man to viſit him." Yet it appeared more every Day, that They were beſt looked on who forbore going to him, and the other found themſelves upon much Diſadvantage; by which however many were not diſcouraged.

THE chief Proſecutors behaved themſelves with more Inſolence than was agreeable to their Diſcretion: And the Lord Arlington, who had long before behaved himſelf with very little Courteſy towards all Perſons whom He believed to be well affected to the Chancellor, even towards Ambaſſadours and other foreign Miniſters, now when any of his Friends came to him for the Diſpatch of Buſineſs in his Office, aſked them "when They ſaw the Chancellor," and bade them "go to him to put their Buſineſs into a "Method." The Duke of Buckingham, who had after his Enlargement viſited the Chancellor, and acknowledged the Civilities He had received from him, came now again to the Court, and was received with extraordinary Grace by the King, and reſtored to all the Honours and Offices of which He was deprived; and was informed and aſſured, "that all the Proceed- "ings which had been againſt him were upon the In- "formation and Advice of the Chancellor." And whatever He had ſpoken in Council was told him in that Manner (and without the true Circumſtances) that might make moſt Impreſſion on him.

The Duke of Buckingham reſtored to all his Employments.

ONE Day whilſt that Matter was depending (which is not mentioned before) the Lord Arlington, after He found the King had acquainted the Chancellor with with the Buſineſs, and ſhewed him the Information and Examinations which had been taken, propoſed, there being more or the ſame Witneſſes to be farther examined, "that the Chancellor might be preſent "with the reſt who had been formerly employed at "their examining:" Which the King ſeeming to conſent to, the other deſired to be excuſed, "for "that the Office He held never uſed to be ſubject to "thoſe Employments;" and in the Debate added, "that if the Teſtimony of Witneſſes made good all "that was ſuggeſted, and the Duke ſhould be brought "to a Trial, it might probably fall out, that the "King might command him to execute the Office "of High Steward, as He had lately done in the "Trial of the Lord Morley; and in that Reſpect it "would be very incongruous for him to be preſent at "the Examinations." The Duke was now informed, without any of the Circumſtances, that the Chancellor had ſaid that He was to be High Steward at the Trial of the Duke.

He is inflamed againſt the Chancellor.

THE Duke, who always believed, and could not but upon the Matter know, that the Lord Arlington (with whom He had Enmity) had been very ſolicitous in his Proſecution, had, after his having viſited the Chancellor, ſent a Friend, whom He thought He would truſt, to him "to deſire him to deal freely "with him concerning the Lord Arlington, whom "He knew to be an Enemy to Both of them; and "that He muſt have him examined upon that Con-"ſpiracy, which He hoped He would not take ill:" To which He anſwered, "that He neither would nor "could be examined concerning any Thing that had "been ſaid or done in Council; but that He would "as his Friend, and to prevent his expoſing himſelf "to any new Inconveniences, very freely and faith-"fully aſſure him, that He did not believe that there "had been any Conſpiracy againſt him, nor did know "that the Lord Arlington had done any Thing in the "Proſecution, but what was according to the Obli-"gation and Duty of his Office; which Teſtimony," He ſaid, "could proceed only from Juſtice, ſince He "well knew that Lord did not wiſh him well." This Anſwer, it ſeems, or the Deſpair of drawing any other from him to his Purpoſe, diſpoſed him to give entire Credit to the other Information; and the King took great Pains to reconcile him to the Lord Arlington, who made many Vows to him of his future Service, and deſired his Protection: And hereupon the Duke openly profeſſed his Reſolution of Revenge, and frankly entered into the Combination with the Lord Arlington and Sir William Coventry againſt the Chancellor.

And induced to concur in the Proſecution.

BUT the Knowledge of all this did not give him much Trouble (ſo much Confidence He had in his own Innocence, and ſo little Eſteem of the Credit and Intereſt of his Enemies), until He heard that the King himſelf expreſſed great Diſpleaſure towards him, and declared "that He had miſbehaved him-"ſelf towards his Majeſty, and that He was ſo im-"perious, that He would endure no Contradiction; "that He had a Faction in the Houſe of Commons, "that oppoſed every Thing that concerned his Ma-"jeſty's Service, if it were not recommended to them "by him; and that He had given him very ill Ad-"vice concerning the Parliament, which offended "him moſt:" All which They to whom his Majeſty ſaid it divulged to others, that They might thereby leſſen the Chancellor's Credit and Intereſt. It is very true, They who had taken all Advantages to alienate the King's Affections from him, had at firſt only propoſed his Removal "as a Perſon odious to the "Parliament, and whom They were reſolved to im-"peach, which would put his Majeſty into a Streight, "either to renounce and deſert an old Servant, which "would not be for his Honour, or, by protecting "him, to deprive himſelf of all thoſe Benefits which "He expected from the Parliament; whereas the "removing him would ſo gratify the Houſes, that "They would deny nothing that his Majeſty ſhould "demand of them;" and his Majeſty did believe it the only Way to preſerve him. But when they had prevailed ſo far, and rendered themſelves more neceſſary to him, They proſecuted what They had begun with more viſible Animoſity, and told him, "that if "the Parliament ſuſpected that his Majeſty retained "ſtill any Kindneſs towards him, They would not be "ſatisfied with his Removal, but apprehend that "He would be again received into his Favour; and "He would in the mean Time have ſo much Credit "in Both Houſes, eſpecially if He ſate in the "Houſe of Peers," which They undertook to know He intended to do, "that He would be able to obſtruct "whatſoever his Majeſty deſired: And therefore it "was neceſſary that His Majeſty ſhould upon all Oc-"caſions declare, that it ſhould be believed, that he "had ſo full a Prejudice againſt him, that Nobody "ſhould have Cauſe to fear, that He would ever again "be received into any Truſt." And this diſpoſed his Majeſty to diſcourſe to many in that Manner that is before ſet down.

The King expreſſes great Diſpleaſure againſt the Chancellor.

AND when the Duke of York lamented to his Majeſty the Reports which were generally ſpread abroad, of the Diſcourſes which He made to many Perſons of the Chancellor's Miſbehaviour towards himſelf, and his own Diſpleaſure againſt him; the King denied many of the Particulars, as that concerning his ill Counſel againſt the Parliament, which He denied to have ſpoken: But ſaid withal, "that if the Chancel-"lor had done as He adviſed him, and delivered up "the Seal to him as of his own Inclination, all would "have been quiet. But ſince He inſiſted ſo much "upon it, and compelled him to ſend for it in that "Manner, He was obliged in the Vindication of his "Honour to give ſome Reaſons for what He had done, when other Men took upon them ſo loudly "to commend the Chancellor, and to juſtify his In-"nocence, not without ſome Reflection upon his "own Honour and Juſtice, which He could not but "take very ill: But He ſhould not ſuffer" (He ſaid) "for what other Men did, and that He would uſe "his two Sons as kindly as ever He had done." And it muſt be always acknowledged, that though great Importunity was uſed to his Majeſty to diſcharge his two Sons from his Service, as a Thing neceſſary by all the Rules of Policy, not to ſuffer the Sons to remain ſo near his Perſon, when their Father lay under ſo notorious a Brand of his Diſpleaſure (in which They believed They had ſo far prevailed, that They took upon them to promiſe their Places to other Men); yet the King poſitively refuſed to yield to them, and continued his Favour ſtill to them Both in the ſame Manner He had done. And though He was long after perſuaded to ſuſpend his eldeſt Son from waiting, under which Cloud He continued for many Months, yet at laſt He was reſtored to his Place with Circumſtances of extraordinary Favour and Grace: Nor did his Majeſty afterwards recede from his Goodneſs towards either of them, notwithſtanding all the Attempts which were made.

The Parliament meets: The King reflects on the Chancellor.

THE Parliament met upon the tenth of October, when the King in a ſhort Speech told them, "that "there had been ſome former Miſcarriages, which "had occaſioned ſome Differences between him and "them: But that He had now altered his Counſels, "and made no Queſtion but that They ſhould "henceforward agree, for He was reſolved to give "them all Satisfaction; and did not doubt but that "They would ſupply his Neceſſities, and provide for "the Payment of his Debts;" with an Inſinuation, "that what had been formerly done amiſs had been "by the Advice of the Perſon whom he had remov-"ed from his Counſels, and with whom He ſhould "not hereafter adviſe."

Unfair Methods uſed to induce Both Houſes to thank the King for removing him.

WHEN the Houſe of Commons came together, one Tomkins, a Man of very contemptible Parts and of worſe Manners (who uſed to be encouraged by Men of of Deſign to ſet ſome Motion on Foot, which They thought not fit to appear in themſelves till They diſcerned how it would take), moved the Houſe, " that " They might ſend a Meſſage of Thanks to the King " for his gracious Expreſſions, and for the many good " Things which he had done, and particularly for " his removing the Chancellor ;" which was ſeconded by two or three, but rejected by the Houſe as a Thing unreaſonable for them who knew not the Motives which had diſpoſed his Majeſty: And ſo a Committee was appointed to prepare ſuch a Meſſage as might be fit for them to ſend. And the Houſe of Lords the ſame Day ſent to the King, without conſulting with the Houſe of Commons, to give his Majeſty Thanks for the Speech He had made to them in the Morning, which commonly uſed to be done. The King declared himſelf very much offended that the Propoſition in the Houſe of Commons for returning Thanks to him had not ſucceeded, and more that it had been oppoſed by many of his own Servants; and commanded them " to preſs and renew the Mo- " tion: That his Honour was concerned in it; and " therefore He would expect Thanks, and would " take it very ill of any of his own Servants who re- " fuſed to concur in it." Hereupon it was again moved: But notwithſtanding all the Labour that had been uſed contrary to all Cuſtom and Privilege of Parliament, the Queſtion held ſix Hours Debate, very many ſpeaking againſt the Injuſtice and Irregularity of it; They on the other Side urging the King's Expectation of it. In the End the Queſtion being put, it was believed the Noes were the greater Number: But the Diviſion of the Houſe was not urged for many Reaſons; and ſo the Vote was ſent to the Houſe of Lords, who were deſired to concur with them.

But it had there a greater Contradiction. They had already returned their Thanks to the King; and now to ſend again, and to add any Particular to it, would be very inconguous and without any Precedent: And therefore They would not concur in it. This Obſtinacy very much diſpleaſed the King: And He was perſuaded by thoſe who had hitherto prevailed with him, to believe that this Contradiction, if He did not maſter it, would run through all his Buſineſs that ſhould be brought into that Houſe. Whereupon his Majeſty reproached many of the Lords for preſuming to oppoſe and croſs what was ſo abſolutely neceſſary for his Service: And ſent to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, " that He ſhould in his Majeſty's Name command all " the Biſhops Bench to concur in it; and if They " ſhould refuſe it, He would make them repent it;" with many other very ſevere Reprehenſions and Animadverſions. This being done in ſo extraordinary a Manner, the Duke of York told his Majeſty, " how " much it was ſpoken of and wondered at:" To which his Majeſty replied, " that his Honour was engaged, " and that He would not be ſatisfied if Thanks were " not returned to him by Both Houſes; and that it " ſhould go the worſe for the Chancellor if his Friends " oppoſed it." And He commanded his Royal Highneſs that He ſhould not croſs it, but was contented to diſpenſe with his Attendance, and gave him Leave to be abſent from the Debate; which Liberty many others likewiſe took: And ſo when it was again moved, though it ſtill was confidently oppoſed, it was carried by a major Part, many being abſent.

And ſo Both Houſes attended the King and gave him Thanks, which his Majeſty graciouſly received as a Boon He looked for, and ſaid Somewhat that implied that He was much diſpleaſed with the Chancellor; of which ſome Men thought They were to make the beſt Uſe They could. And therefore, after the King's Anſwer was reported to the Houſe of Peers, as of Courſe whatſoever the King ſays upon any Meſſage is always reported, it was reported, " that the King's " Anſwer might be entered into the Journal-Book;" which was rejected, as not uſual, even when the King himſelf ſpoke to Both Houſes: Nor was what He now ſaid entered in the Houſe of Commons. However when They had conſulted together, finding that They had not yet ſo particular a Record of the Diſpleaſure againſt the Chancellor, as what He had ſaid upon this Meſſage did amount unto, They moved the Houſe again, " that it might be entered in the Book:" And it was again rejected. All which would not ſerve the Turn; but the Duke of Buckingham a third Time moved it, as a Thing the King expected: And thereupon it was entered.

And his Majeſty now declared to his Brother and to many of the Lords, " that He had now all He de- " ſired, that there ſhould be no more done to the " Chancellor." And without Doubt the King had not at this Time a Purpoſe to give any farther Countenance to the Animoſity of his Enemies, who thought that what was already done was too eaſy a Compoſition, and told his Majeſty, " that, if He were not pro- " ſecuted farther, He would gain Reputation by it: " For that the Manner in which all Votes had been " yet carried was rather a Vindication than Cenſure of " him; and He would ſhortly come to the Houſe with " more Credit to do Miſchief, and to obſtruct what- " ſoever related to his Service. But that ſuch Things " would be found againſt him, as ſoon as Men were " ſatisfied that his Majeſty had totally deſerted him " (which yet They were not), that He would have no " more Credit to do Good or Harm." Hereupon there were ſeveral Cabals entered into, who invited and ſent for Perſons of all Conditions, who had had any Buſineſs depending before the Chancellor, or Charters paſſed the Seal; and examined them whether He had not received Money from them, or They were otherwiſe grieved by him, promiſing that they ſhould receive ample Satisfaction.

Perſons ſought after to furniſh Matter of Impeachment againſt him.

The Duke of Buckingham, and ſome others with him, ſent for Sir Robert Harlow, who had the Year before gone to the Barbadoes with the Lord Willoughby, who had much Friendſhip for him; yet after They came thither, They grew unſatisfied with each other to that Degree, that the Lord Willoughby, who was Governor of thoſe Iſlands, removed him from the Office He had conferred on him, and ſent him by the next Shipping into England; where He arrived full of Vexation for the Treatment He had received, and willing to embrace any Opportunity to be revenged on the Governour. Him the Duke of Buckingham ſent for, who He knew was privy to all the Lord Willoughby's Counſels, and aſked him, " what Money the " Lord Willoughby had given the Chancellor for that " Government" (for it was well known that the Chancellor had been his chief Friend in procuring that Government for him, and in diſcountenancing and ſuppreſſing thoſe who in England or in the Iſlands had complained of him,) " and what Money He had recei- " ved from thoſe Iſlands; and that it was probable " that He had ſome Influence upon the Lord Wil- " loughby towards the Diſgrace himſelf had under- " gone:" And added, " that He would do the King " a very acceptable Service, in diſcovering any Thing " of the Chancellor's Miſcarriages, of which his " Majeſty himſelf knew ſo much." To which the Gentleman anſwered, " that He had no Obligation to the " Chancellor that would reſtrain him from declaring " any Thing that might be to his Prejudice; but that " He was not able to do it: Nor did He believe that " He had ever received any Money from the Lord " Willoughby or from the Iſlands." And this Kind of Artifice and Inquiſition was uſed to examine all his Actions; and They who were known to be any Way offended with him, or diſobliged by him, were moſt welcome to them.

After many Days ſpent in ſuch cloſe Contrivances and Combinations, Mr. Seymour, a young Man of great Confidence and Boldneſs, ſtood up in the Houſe of Commons, and ſpake long and with great Bitterneſs againſt the Chancellor, and " of his great Corruption " in

Mr. Seymour accuſes him of High Treaſon in the Houſe of Commons.

" in many Particulars, by which, He ſaid, " He " had gotten a vaſt Eſtate. That He had received " great Sums of Money from Ireland, for making a " Settlement that every Body complained of, and that " left that Kingdom in as great Diſtraction as ever it " had been. That He had gotten great Sums of Mo- " ney indirectly and corruptly from the Plantations, " the Governments whereof He had diſpoſed; by Pre- " ferments in the Law and in the Church; and for the " paſſing of Charters: And that He had received four " thouſand Pounds from the Canary Company for the " eſtabliſhing that Company, which was ſo great and " general a Grievance to the Kingdom. And, which " was above all this, that he had traiterouſly per- " ſuaded, or endeavoured to perſuade, the King to " diſſolve the Parliament, and to govern by a ſtand- " ing Army; and that He had ſaid, that four hundred " Country Gentlemen were only fit to give Money, and did " not underſtand how an Invaſion was to be reſiſted." He mentioned many other odious Particulars " which He ſaid He would prove," and therefore propoſed, " that They would preſently ſend up to the Lords to " accuſe him of High Treaſon, and require that his " Perſon might be ſecured." Some others ſeconded him with very bitter Invectives: And as many gave another Kind of Teſtimony, and many Reaſons which made it improbable that He could be guilty of ſo many heinous Crimes; and " that it would be unreaſonable that He " ſhould be accuſed of High Treaſon by the " Houſe, before ſuch Proofs ſhould be preſented to " them of Crimes, that They had Reaſon to believe " him guilty." And ſo after many Hours Debate, what They propoſed for the preſent accuſing him was rejected, and a Committee appointed to conſider of all Particulars which ſhould be preſented againſt him; " upon reporting whereof to the Houſe, it would give " ſuch farther Order as ſhould be juſt."

THE confident Averment of ſo many Particulars, and the ſo poſitively naming the particular Sums of Money which He had received, with Circumſtances not likely to be feigned; and eſpecially the mentioning of many Things ſpoken in Council, " which," They ſaid, " would be proved by Privy Councellors; and other particular Advices given in private to the King him- ſelf, " which," They implied, and confidently affirmed in private, " the King himſelf would acknowledge;" made that Impreſſion upon many who had no ill Opi- nion of the Chancellor, and upon others who had al- ways thought well of him, and had in Truth Kindneſs for him, that of Both Sorts ſeveral Meſſages of Advice were ſecretly ſent to him, " that He would preſerve " his Life by making an Eſcape, and tranſporting " himſelf into foreign Parts; for that it was not pro- " bable there could be ſo extreme and violent a Proſe- " cution, if They had not ſuch Evidence againſt him " as would compaſs their Ends." To all which He anſwered, " that He would not give his Enemies " that Advantage as to fly from them: And in the " mean Time deſired his Friends to retain the good " Opinion They had always had of Him, until They " heard Somewhat proved that would make him un- " worthy of it; and then He would be well content- " ed They ſhould withdraw it." And it appeared after- wards, that though ſome of his good Friends had ad- viſed that He ſhould ſecure himſelf by Flight, it pro- ceeded from the Advertiſements that They had re- ceived through other Hands, which came originally from his chiefeſt Enemies, who deſired that He might appear to be guilty by avoiding a Trial; and who confidently informed many Men, " that the Impeach- " ment was ready, and had been peruſed by the King, " and that his Majeſty had with his Hand ſtruck out " an Article which related to the Queen's Marriage, " and another that concerned the Marriage of the " Duke; but that there was enough left to do the Bu- " ſineſs; and that the Duke of Buckingham ſhould be " made Lord High Steward for the Trial."

Many adviſe him to make his Eſcape.

Which He refuſes to do.

THESE Reports, being ſpread abroad, wrought upon the Duke to deſire the King, " that He would " let him know what He did intend; and whether He " deſired to have the Chancellor's Life, or that He " ſhould be condemned to perpetual Impriſonment:" To which his Majeſty proteſted, " that He would " have neither, but was well ſatisfied; and that He " was reſolved to ſtop all farther Proſecution againſt " him," which his Majeſty likewiſe ſaid to many others. The Duke then aſked the King, " whether " the Chancellor had ever given him Counſel to go- " vern by an Army, or any Thing like it; which," He ſaid, " was ſo contrary to his Humour, and to the " Profeſſions which He had always made, and the " Advices He had given him, that if He were guilty " of it, He ſhould doubt his Sincerity in all other " Things:" To which his Majeſty anſwered, " that " He had never given him ſuch Counſel in his Life; " but, on the Contrary, his Fault was that He always " inſiſted too much upon the Law." Whereupon his Royal Higneſs aſked him, " whether He would give " him leave to ſay ſo to others;" and his Majeſty replied " with all his Heart."

The King's Declaration of the Chancellor's Innocence.

THE Duke then told it to his Secretary Mr. Wren, and to many other Perſons, and wiſhed them to publiſh it upon any Occaſion: Upon which it was ſpread abroad, and Mr. Wren informed many of the Members of the Houſe of Commons of all that had paſſed between the King and the Duke in that Diſcourſe; which ſo much diſheartened the violent Proſecutors, that when the Committee met that was to preſent the Heads of a Charge againſt him to the Houſe, Nobody appeared to give any Evidence, ſo that They adjourned with- out doing any Thing. Hereupon Sir Thomas Oſborne, a Dependant and Creature of the Duke of Buckingham, and who had told many Perſons in the Country before the Parliament met, " that the Chancellor " would be accuſed of High Treaſon; and if He were " not hanged, He would be hanged himſelf;" this Gentleman went to the King, and informed him what Mr. Wren confidently reported in all Places, " which " very much diſſatisfied that Party that deſired to do " him Service; ſo that they knew not how to behave " themſelves:" To which his Majeſty anſwered, " that " Wren was a lying Fellow, and that He had never " held any ſuch Diſcourſe with his Brother." This gave them new Courage, and They reſolved to call Mr. Wren to an Account for traducing the King. And his Majeſty expoſtulated with the Duke for what Mr. Wren had ſo publickly diſcourſed: And his Highneſs declared, " that Mr. Wren had purſued his " Order, his Majeſty having not only ſaid all that was " reported, but having given him Leave to divulge " it; to which the King made no other Anſwer, " but " that He ſhould be hereafter more careful of what " He ſaid to him."

Which he afterwards diſowns.

ALL this begot new Pauſes, and no Advance was made in many Days; ſo that it was generally believed that there would be no farther Proſecution: But the old Argument, that They were gone too far to retire, had now more Force, becauſe many Members of Both Houſes were now joined to the Party in declaring againſt the Chancellor, who would think themſelves to be betrayed and deſerted if no more ſhould be done againſt him. And hereupon the Committee was again revived, that was appointed to prepare Heads for a Charge, which ſate many Days, there being little De- bate upon the Matter; for ſuch of the Committee, who knew him well, were ſo well pleaſed to find him accuſed of Nothing but what all the World did be- lieve him not guilty of, that They thought They could not do him more Right, than to ſuffer all that was of- fered to paſs, ſince there appeared no Perſon that of- fered to make Proof of any Particular that was ſug- geſted. But three or four Members of the Houſe brought ſeveral Papers, containing Particulars, " which," They ſaid, " would be proved:" All which they re- ported to the Houſe.

Articles of the Charge againſt him.

THE Heads were;

I. "THAT the Chancellor had traiterouſly, about "the Month of June laſt, adviſed the King to diſſolve "the Parliament, and ſaid there could be no farther Uſe of "Parliaments; that it was a fooliſh Conſtitution and not "fit to govern by; and that it could not be imagined, that "three or four hundred Country Gentlemen could be either "prudent Men or Stateſmen: And that it would be beſt "for the King to raiſe a ſtanding Army and to govern "by that; whereupon it being demanded how that "Army ſhould be maintained, He anſwered by Con- "tribution and free Quarter, as the laſt King maintain- "ed his Army in the War."

II. "THAT He had, in the Hearing of ſeveral "Perſons, reported that the King was a Papiſt in his "Heart, or popiſhly affected, or had uſed Words to "that Effect."

III. "THAT He had adviſed the King to grant a "Charter to the Canary Company for which He had "received great Sums of Money."

IV. "THAT He had raiſed great Sums of Money "by the Sale of Offices which ought not to be ſold, "and granted Injunctions to ſtop Proceedings at Law, "and diſſolved them afterwards for Money."

V. "THAT He had introduced an arbitrary Go-"vernment into his Majeſty's ſeveral Plantations, and "had cauſed ſuch as had complained to his Majeſty "and Privy Council of it to be impriſoned long for "their Preſumption; and that He had fruſtrated and "rejected a Propoſition that had been made for the "Preſervation of Nevis and St. Chriſtophers, and for "the reducing the French Plantations to his Majeſty's "Obedience."

VI. "THAT He had cauſed Quo Warrantos to be "iſſued out againſt moſt Corporations in England, al-"though the Charters were newly confirmed by Act "of Parliament, 'till They paid him good Sums of "Money, and then the Quo Warrantos were diſ-"charged."

VII. "THAT He had received great Sums of Mo-"ney for the Settlement of Ireland."

VIII. "THAT He had deluded the King and be-"trayed the Nation in all foreign Treaties and Ne-"gotiations, eſpecially concerning the late War."

IX. "THAT He had procured his Majeſty's Cuſ-"toms to be farmed at Under-rates, knowing them "to be ſo; and cauſed many pretended Debts to be "paid by his Majeſty, to the Payment whereof his "Majeſty was not in Strictneſs bound; for all which "He had received great Sums of Money."

X. "THAT He had received Bribes from the Com-"pany of Vintners, that They might continue the "Prices of their Wines, and might be freed from the "Penalties which They were liable to."

XI. "THAT He had raiſed in a ſhort Time a "greater Eſtate than could be lawfully got; and that "He had gotten the Grant of ſeveral of the Crown "Lands contrary to his Duty."

XII. "THAT He had adviſed and effected the Sale "of Dunkirk to the French King, for leſs Money than "the Ammunition, Artillery and Stores were worth."

XIII. "THAT He had cauſed the King's Letters "under the Great Seal to one Dr. Crowther to be al-"tered, and the Enrolment thereof to be razed."

XIV. "THAT He had in an arbitrary Way exa-"mined and drawn into Queſtion divers of his Maje-"ſty's Subjects concerning their Lands and Proper-"ties, and determined thereof at the Council-Table, "and ſtopped the Proceedings at Law, and threaten-"ed ſome that pleaded the Statute of 17 Car."

XV. "THAT He was a principal Author of that "fatal Counſel of dividing the Fleet in June 1666."

THE Committee reported another Article for his Charge, which was, "that He had kept Correſpon-"ence with Cromwell during the Time of the King's "being beyond the Seas, and had ſent over his Secre-"tary to him, was ſhut up with him for many "Hours:" But there were many Members of the Houſe, who wiſhed it had been true, knew well enough that fooliſh Calumny had been examined at Paris during the Time that his Majeſty reſided there, when Perſons of the higheſt Degree were very deſi-rous to have kindled a Jealouſy in the King of the Chancellor's Fidelity; and that the Scandal appeared ſo groſs and impoſſible, that his Majeſty had then publiſhed a full Vindication of his Innocence; with a farther Declaration, "that when it ſhould pleaſe "God to reſtore him to his own Dominions, He "ſhould receive ſuch farther Juſtice and Reparation, "as the Laws would enable him to procure." And it was well known to divers of the Members preſent, that the Perſons who were ſuborned in that Conſpi-racy had acknowledged it ſince the King's Return; and the Perſons themſelves who had ſuborned them had confeſſed it, and begged the Chancellor's Par-don: Of all which his Majeſty had been particularly and fully informed. And that it might be no more ripped up or look into, They ſeemed to reject it as being included under the Act of Indemnity, which They would have left him to have pleaded for the Infamy of it, if They had not very well known the Groſſneſs of the Scandal.

THOUGH the Fierceneſs of the Malice that was contracted againſt him was enough known and taken Notice of, yet the Heads for the Charge, which up-on ſo much Deliberation were prepared and offered to the Houſe againſt him, were of ſuch a Nature, that all Men preſent did in their own Conſcience ac-quit him: And therefore it was generally believed the Proſecutors would rather have acquieſced with what They had done to blaſt his Reputation, than have proceeded farther to bring him to anſwer for himſelf. But They had gone too far to retire. And They who had firſt wrought upon the King, only by per-ſuading him, "that there was ſo univerſal a Hatred "againſt the Chancellor, that the Parliament would "the firſt Day accuſe him of High Treaſon; and "that the removing him from his Office was the "only Way to preſerve him, except He would in "ſuch a Conjuncture, and when He had ſo much "Need of the Parliament, ſacrifice all his Intereſt "for the Protection of the Chancellor" (and this was the ſole Motive that had prevailed with him, as his Majeſty not only aſſured him the laſt Time He ſpake with him, with many gracious Expreſſions, but at large expreſſed it to very many Perſons of Honour, who endeavoured to diſſuade him from purſuing that Counſel, "that it was the only Expedient for the "Chancellor's Preſervation," with as great a Teſti-mony of his Integrity and the Services He had done him as could be given): The ſame Men now impor-tuned him "to proſecute with all his Power, and to "let thoſe of his Servants, and others who regarded "his Commands, know that They could not ſerve "him and the Chancellor together; and that He "ſhould look upon their adhering to him as the "abandoning his Majeſty's Service. That the Chan-"cellor had ſo great a Faction in Both Houſes, that "no Propoſition on his Majeſty's Behalf would have "Effect; and that He would ſhortly come to the "Houſe of Peers, and obſtruct all Proceedings "there.

The King perſuaded to encourage the Proſecution.

THIS prevailed ſo far that They reſumed their former Courage, and preſſed "that He might be ac-"cuſed by the Houſe of Commons of High Trea-"ſon: Upon which the Lords would preſently com-"mit him to the Tower; and then Nobody would "have any longer Apprehenſion of his Power to do "Hurt." Hereupon They reſolved again to conſider the ſeveral Heads of the Charge They had provided, to ſee if They could find any one upon which They could ground an Accuſation of High Treaſon. They ſpent a whole Day upon the firſt Head, which They thought contained enough to do their Work, it con-taining the moſt unpopular and ungracious Reproach that any Man could lie under; "that He had de-Proceedings againſt him in the Houſe of Commons.

"ſigned

" ſigned a ſtanding Army to be raiſed, and to govern " the Kingdom thereby; He adviſed the King to " diſſolve the preſent Parliament, to lay aſide all " Thoughts of Parliaments for the future, to govern " by military Power, and to maintain the ſame by " free Quarter and Contribution."

THE Chancellor had been bred of the Gown; and in the firſt War, in which the laſt King had been involved by a powerful Rebellion, was known always to have advanced and embraced all Overtures towards Peace. Since the King's Return He laboured Nothing more, than that his Majeſty might enter into a firm Peace with all his Neighbours, as moſt neceſſary for the reducing his own Dominions into that Temper of Subjection and Obedience, as they ought to be in. It was notorious to all Men, that He had moſt paſſionately diſſuaded the War with Holland, with much Diſadvantage to himſelf; and that no Man had taken ſo much Pains as He to bring the preſent Peace to paſs, which at that Time was grateful to all Degrees of Men: And, in a Word, that He had no Manner of Intereſt or Credit with the Soldiers; but was looked upon by them all, as an Enemy to the Privileges which They required, of being exempted from the ordinary Rules of Juſtice, in which He always oppoſed them.

BUT let the Improbability of this Charge be what it would, there were were Perſons of the Houſe who pretended that it ſhould be fully proved; and ſo the Queſtion was only, " whether upon it They ſhould " charge him with an Accuſation of Treaſon:" And after a Debate of eight Hours, it was declared by all the Lawyers of the Houſe, " that how foul ſoever " the Charge ſeemed to be, yet it contained no High " Treaſon;" and in that Concluſion They at laſt concurred who were moſt relied upon to ſupport the Accuſation. But when the Speaker directed the Order to be drawn, " that the Earl of Clarendon ſhould " not be accuſed of High Treaſon," it was alledged that the Order was only to relate to that firſt Head; ſome Men declaring, " that though that Article had " miſſed him, yet there were others which would hit " him:" And ſo the Night being come, the farther Debate was adjourned to another Day.

WHEN the Day appointed came (in which Interval all imaginable Pains and Arts were uſed, by Threats and Promiſes, to allure and terrify as many as could be wrought upon, either to be againſt the Chancellor, or to be abſent at the next Debate that concerned him), upon reading the ſeveral other Heads as they had been preſented from the Committee, it appeared to all Men, that though all that was alledged were proved, the Whole would not amount to make him guilty of High Treaſon. And They got no Ground by throwing Aſperſions upon him upon the ſeveral Arguments, which They did with extraordinary Licenſe who were known to be his Enemies; for thereby other Men of much better Reputations, and who had no Relation to the Chancellor, took Occaſion to anſwer and contradict their Calumnies, and to give him ſuch a Teſtimony, as made him another Man than They would have him underſtood to be; and their Teſtimony had more Credit: So that They declined the Purſuit of that Licenſe, and intended wholly the Diſcovery of the Treaſon, ſince no other Accuſation would ſerve their Turn.

WHEN They had examined all their Store, They pitched at laſt upon that Head, " that He had de- " luded and betrayed his Majeſty and the Nation in " all foreign Treaties and Negotiations relating to " the late War:" Which when read and conſidered, it was ſaid, " that in thoſe general Expreſſions there " was not enough contained upon which They could " accuſe him of High Treaſon, except it were add- " ed, that being a Privy Counſellor He had diſcover- " ed the King's ſecret Counſels to the Enemy." Which was no ſooner ſaid, than a young confident Man, the Lord Vaughan, Son to the Earl of Carbery, a Perſon of as ill a Face as Fame, his Looks and his Manners Both extreme bad, aſked for the Paper that hhad been preſented from the Committee, and with is own Hand entered into that Place thoſe Words, " that being a Privy Counſellor He had diſcovered " the King's Secrets to the Enemy," which He ſaid He would prove; whilſt many others whiſpered into the Ears of thoſe who ſate next to them, " that He " had diſcovered all the ſecret Reſolutions to the King " of France, which," They ſaid, " was the Ground " of the King's Diſpleaſure towards him." Upon this confident Inſinuation from Perſons who were near the Perſon of his Majeſty, and known to have much Credit with him; and the poſitive Averment by a Member, " that the diſcloſing the King's Se- " crets to the Enemy," which Nobody could deny to be Treaſon, " would be poſitively and fully proved " againſt him," and the rather becauſe no Man believed it to be true; it was voted, " that They ſhould " impeach him of High Treaſon in the uſual Man- " ner to the Houſe of Peers." Whereupon Mr. Seymour, who had appeared very violent againſt him, was ſent up to the Lords; and at the Bar He accuſed Edward Earl of Clarendon of High Treaſon and other Crimes and Miſdemeanours, and deſired " that He " might be ſequeſtered from that Houſe, and his Per- " ſon ſecured."

Mr. Seymour accuſes him of High Treaſon at the Bar of the Houſe of Lords.

AND as ſoon as He was withdrawn, ſome of the Lords moved, " that He might be ſet for:" And now the Warmth that had been ſo long within the Walls of the Houſe of Commons appeared in the Houſe of Peers. Many of the Lords, who were not thought much inclined to the Perſon of the Chancellor, repreſented, " that the Conſequence of ſuch " a Proceeding, would reflect to the Prejudice of " every one of the Peers. If upon a general Accu- " ſation from the Houſe of Commons of High Trea- " ſon without mentioning any Particular, They " ſhould be obliged to commit any Peer; any Mem- " ber that Houſe ſhould be offended with, how un- " juſtly ſoever, might be removed from the Body: " Which would be a greater Diſadvantage than the " Members of the Houſe of Commons were liable " to." And therefore They adviſed, " that They " ſhould for Anſwer let the Houſe of Commons " know, that They would not commit the Earl of " Clarendon until ſome particular Charge was exhibit- " ed againſt him."

Debates in that Houſe concerning his Commitment.

ON the other Side, it was urged with much Paſſion, " that They ought to comply with the Houſe " of Commons in ſatisfying their Requeſts, according " to former Precedents:" And the Caſe of the Earl of Strafford, and ſome other Caſes in that Parliament, were cited; which gave thoſe who were of another Mind, Opportunity to inveigh againſt that Time, and the accurſed Precedents thereof, which had produced ſo many and great Miſchiefs to the Kingdom. They put them in Mind, " that They had committed " eleven Biſhops at one Time for High Treaſon, " only that They might be removed from the Houſe, " whilſt a Bill paſſed againſt their having Votes any " more in that Houſe, which was no ſooner paſſed " than They were ſet at Liberty; which had brought " great Reproach upon the Honour and Juſtice of " the Parliament: And that Both thoſe Bills, for the " Attainder of the Earl of Strafford and for the ex- " cluding the Biſhops out of the Houſe of Peers, ſtand " at preſent repealed by the Wiſdom and Authority " of this Parliament." In a Word, after many Hours Debate with much Paſſion, either Side adhering obſtinately to their Opinion, no Reſolution was taken; but the Houſe adjourned, without ſo much as putting the Queſtion, to the next Day.

FROM the Time of the Parliament's coming together, and after the King's Diſpleaſure was generally taken Notice of, many of the Chancellor's Friends adviſed him to withdraw, and tranſport himſelf into foreign foreign Parts; and ſome very near the King, and who were Witneſſes of the very great Diſpleaſure his Majeſty every Day expreſſed towards him, were of the ſame Opinion: But He poſitively refuſed ſo to do, and reſolved to truſt to his Innocence, which He was ſure muſt appear.

Differences between the Houſes.

THE Debate continued ſtill between the two Houſes, which would entertain no other Buſineſs: The Houſe of Commons in frequent Conferences demanding the Commitment of the Chancellor; and the major Part of the Houſe of Peers, notwithſtanding all the indirect Proſecution and Interpoſition from the Court, remaining as reſolved not to commit him. In this unhappy Conjuncture, the Duke of York, who expreſſed great Affection and Concernment for the Chancellor, fell ſick of the Smallpox; which proved of great Diſadvantage to him. For not only many of the Peers who were before reſtrained by their Reſpect to him, and ſupported by his Countenance in the Debate, either changed their Minds, or abſented themſelves from the Houſe; but the General, who had always profeſſed great Friendſhip to the Chancellor, who had deſerved very well from him, and had endeavoured to diſſuade the King from withdrawing his Favour from him with all poſſible Importunity, was now changed by the unruly Humour of his Wife, and the frequent Inſtances of the King; and made it his Buſineſs to ſolicit and diſpoſe the Members of Both Houſes, with many of whom He had great Credit, "no longer to adhere "to the Chancellor ſince the King reſolved to ruin "him, and would look upon all who were his Friends "as Enemies to his Majeſty." Notwithſtanding all which, the major Part by much of the Houſe of Peers continued ſtill firm againſt his Commitment: With which the King was ſo offended, that there were ſecret Conſultations of ſending a Guard of Soldiers, by the General's Authority, to take the Chancellor out of his Houſe, and to ſend him to the Tower; whither Directions were already ſent what Lodging He ſhould have, and Caution given to the Lieutenant of the Tower, who was thought to have too much Reſpect for the Chancellor, "that He "ſhould not treat him with more Civility than He "did other Priſoners."

The Chancellor is again adviſed to withdraw.

HE had many Friends of the Council and near the King, who advertiſed him of thoſe and all other Intrigues, and thereupon renewed their Importunity that He would make his Eſcape; and ſome of them undertook to know, and without Queſtion did believe, "that his withdrawing would be grateful to the "King," who every Day grew more incenſed againſt him, for the Obſtinacy his Friends in Both Houſes expreſſed on his Behalf. They urged "the ill Condition He muſt in a ſhort Time be reduced to, "wherein his Innocence would not ſecure him; for "it was evident that his Enemies had no Purpoſe "or Thought of bringing him to a Trial, but to "keep him always in Priſon, which They would in "the End one Way or other bring to paſs: Whereas "He might now eaſily tranſport himſelf, and avoid "all the other Inconveniences. And They under-"took to know, "that if He were gone, there would "be no farther Proceeding againſt him."

THERE could not be a more terrifying or prevalent Argument uſed toward his withdrawing, than that of a Priſon; the Thought and Apprehenſion whereof was more grievous to him than of Death itſelf, which He was confident would quickly be the Effect of the other. However He very reſolutely refuſed to follow their Advice; and urged to them "the Ad-"vantage He ſhould give his Enemies, and the Diſ-"honour He ſhould bring upon himſelf, by flying, "in having his Integrity condemned, if He had not "the Confidence to defend it." He ſaid, "He could "now appear, wherever He ſhould be required, with "an honeſt Countenance, and the Courage of an in-"nocent Man: But if He ſhould be apprehended in "a Diſguiſe running away, which He could not but "expect by the Vigilance of his Enemies (ſince He "could not make any Journey by Land, being at "that Time very weak and infirm), He ſhould be "very much out of Countenance, and ſhould be ex-"poſed to publick Scorn and Contempt. And if "He ſhould make his Eſcape into foreign Parts, "it would not be reaſonable to expect or imagine "that his Enemies, who had ſo far aliened the King's "Affection from him, and in Spite of his Innocence "prevailed thus far, would want Power to proſecute "the Advantage They ſhould get by his Flight, "which would be interpreted as a Confeſſion of his "Guilt; and thereupon They would procure ſuch "Proceedings in the Parliament, as might ruin both "his Fortune and his Fame."

But refuſes.

HIS Friends, how unſatisfied ſoever with his Reſolution, acquieſced for the preſent, after having firſt prevailed with him to write himſelf to the King; which He did, though without any Hope that it would make any Impreſſion upon him. He could not comprehend or imagine from what Fountain, except the Power of the great Lady with the Conjunction of his known Enemies, which had been long without that Effect, that Fierceneſs of his Majeſty's Diſpleaſure could proceed. He had, before this Storm fell upon him, been informed by a Perſon of Honour who knew the Truth of it, "that ſome Per-"ſons had perſuaded the King, that the Chancellor had "a principal Hand in the Marriage of the Duke of "Richmond, with which his Majeſty was offended "in the higheſt Degree: And the Lord Berkley had "reported it with all Confidence." Whereupon the Chancellor had expoſtulated with the Lord Berkley, whom He knew to be his ſecret Enemy, though no Man made more outward Profeſſions to him: But He denied He had reported any ſuch Thing. And then He took Notice to the King himſelf of the Diſcourſe, and deſired to know, "whether any ſuch "Story had been repreſented to his Majeſty, ſince "there was not the leaſt Shadow of Truth in it:" To which the King anſwered with ſome Dryneſs, "that "no ſuch Thing had been told to him." Yet now He was aſſured, "that that Buſineſs ſtuck moſt with "his Majeſty, and that from that Suggeſtion his Ene-"mies had gotten Credit to do him the worſt Offices; "and his Majeſty complained much of the Inſolence "with which He uſed to treat him in the Agitation "and Debate of Buſineſs, if He differed from him in "Opinion" Upon theſe Reaſons He writ this Letter in his own Hand to the King, which was delivered to him by the Lord Keeper, who was willing to perform that Office. The Letter was in theſe Words.

The King offended with him about the Duke of Richmond's Marriage.

"May it pleaſe your Majeſty,"

His Letter to the King upon that Subject.

"I AM ſo broken under the daily inſupportable In-"ſtances of your Majeſty's terrible Diſpleaſure, that I "know not what to do, hardly what to wiſh. The "Crimes which are objected againſt me, how paſſion-"ately ſoever purſued, and with Circumſtances very "unuſual, do not in the leaſt Degree fright me. God "knows I am innocent in every Particular as I ought "to be; and I hope your Majeſty knows enough of "me to believe that I had never a violent Appetite "for Money, that could corrupt me. But alas! your "Majeſty's declared Anger and Indignation deprives "me of the Comfort and Support even of my own "Innocence, and expoſes me to the Rage and Fury of "thoſe who have ſome Excuſe for being my Enemies; "whom I have ſometimes diſpleaſed, when (and only "then) your Majeſty believed them not to be your "Friends. I hope They may be changed; I am ſure "I am not, but have the ſame Duty, Paſſion and Af-"fection for you, that I had when You thought it "moſt unqueſtionable, and which was and is as great "as ever Man had for any mortal Creature. I ſhould "die in Peace (and truly I do heartily wiſh that God "Almighty would free you from further Trouble, by

"taking

" taking me to himſelf), if I could know or gueſs at " the Ground of your Diſpleaſure, which I am ſure " muſt proceed from your believing, that I have ſaid " or done Somewhat I have neither ſaid nor done. If " it be for any Thing my Lord Berkley hath reported, " which I know He hath ſaid to many, though being " charged with it by me He did as poſitively diſclaim " it; I am as innocent in that whole Affair, and gave " no more Advice or Counſel or Countenance in it, " than the Child that is not born: Which your Ma- " jeſty ſeemed once to believe, when I took Notice to " you of the Report, and when You conſidered how " totally I was a Stranger to the Perſons mentioned, " to either of whom I never ſpake Word, or received " Meſſage from either in my Life. And this I proteſt " to your Majeſty is true, as I have Hope in Heaven: " And that I have never wilfully offended your Ma- " jeſty in my Life, and do upon my Knees beg your " Pardon for any over-bold or ſaucy Expreſſions I " have ever uſed to you; which, being a natural Diſ- " eaſe in old Servants who have received too much " Countenance, I am ſure hath always proceeded from " the Zeal and Warmth of the moſt ſincere Affection " and Duty."

" I HOPE your Majeſty believes, that the ſharp " Chaſtiſement I have received from the beſt-natured " and moſt bountiful Maſter in the World, and whoſe " Kindneſs alone made my Condition theſe many Years " ſupportable, hath enough mortified me as to this " World; and that I have not the Preſumption or the " Madneſs to imagine or deſire ever to be admitted " to any Employment or Truſt again. But I do moſt " humbly beſeech your Majeſty by the Memory of " your Father, who recommended me to you with " ſome Teſtimony, and by your own gracious Reflec- " tion upon ſome one Service I may have performed " in my Life, that hath been acceptable to you; that " You will by your Royal Power and Interpoſition put " a Stop to this ſevere Proſecution againſt me, and " that my Concernment may give no longer Interrup- " tion to the great Affairs of the Kingdom; but that I " may ſpend the ſmall Remainder of my Life, which " cannot hold long, in ſome Parts beyond the Seas, " never to return; where I will pray for your Ma- " jeſty, and never ſuffer the leaſt Diminution in the " Duty and Obedience of,

" May it pleaſe your Majeſty,

" Your Majeſty's

" Moſt humble and moſt

" Obedient Subject and Servant,

CLARENDON."

" From my Houſe this 16th of November."

THE King was in his Cabinet when the Letter was delivered to him; which as ſoon as He had read, He burned in a Candle that was on the Table, and only ſaid " that there was Somewhat in it that He did not " underſtand, but that He wondered that the Chan- " cellor did not withdraw himſelf:" Of which the Keeper preſently advertiſed him, with his earneſt Advice that He would be gone.

The King expreſſes a Deſire of his withdrawing.

THE King's Diſcourſe was according to the Perſons with whom He conferred. To thoſe who were engaged in the violent Proſecution He ſpake with great Bitterneſs of him, repeating many particular Paſſages, in which He had ſhewed much Paſſion becauſe his Majeſty did not concur with him in what He adviſed. To thoſe who He knew were his Friends He mentioned him without any Bitterneſs, and with ſome Teſtimony of his having ſerved him long and uſefully, and as if He had Pity and Compaſſion for him: Yet " that " He wondered that He did not abſent himſelf, ſince " it could not but be very manifeſt to him and to all " his Friends, that it was not in his Majeſty's Power " to protect him againſt the Prejudice that was againſt " him in Both Houſes; which," He ſaid, could not " but be increaſed by the Obſtruction his particular " Concernment gave to all publick Affairs in this Con- " juncture; in which," He ſaid, " He was ſure He " would prevail at laſt." All theſe Advertiſements could not prevail over the Chancellor for the Reaſons mentioned before; though He was very much afflicted at the Diviſion between the two Houſes, the evil Conſequence whereof He well underſtood, and could have been well content that the Lords would have conſented to his Impriſonment.

The Biſhop of Hereford ſent to adviſe him to leave the Kingdom.

THE Biſhop of Hereford, who had been very much obliged to the Chancellor, and throughout this whole Affair had behaved himſelf with very ſignal Ingratitude to him, and thereby got much Credit in the Court, went to the Biſhop of Winchester, who was known to be a faſt and unſhaken Friend to the Chancellor; and made him a long Diſcourſe of what the King had ſaid to him, and deſired him " that He " would go with him to his Houſe;" which He preſently did, and, leaving him in a Room, went himſelf to the Chancellor, and told him what had paſſed from the Biſhop of Hereford, " who was in the next Room " to ſpeak with him, but would not in direct Words " to him acknowledge that He ſpake by the King's " Order or Approbation; but that He had confeſſed " ſo much to him with many Circumſtances, and that " the Lord Arlington and Mr. Coventry had been pre- " ſent." The Chancellor had no Mind to ſee or ſpeak with the Biſhop, who had carried himſelf ſo unworthily towards him, and might probably miſreport any Thing He ſhould ſay: But He was over-ruled by the other Biſhop, and ſo They went Both into the next Room to him.

THE Biſhop of Hereford in ſome Diſorder, as a Man conſcious to himſelf of ſome Want of Sincerity towards him, deſired that " He would believe that He would " not at that Time have come to him, with whom He " knew He was in ſome Umbrage, if it were not with " a Deſire to do him Service, and if He had not " a full Authority for whatſoever He ſaid to him." Then He enlarged himſelf in Diſcourſe more involved and perplexed without any Mention of the King, or the Authority He had for what He ſhould ſay; the Care to avoid which was evidently the Cauſe of the Want of Clearneſs in all He ſaid. But the Biſhop of Winchester ſupplied it by relating all that He had ſaid to him: With which though He was not pleaſed, becauſe the King and others were named, yet He did not contradict it; but ſaid, " He did not ſay that He was " ſent by the King or ſpake by his Direction, only that " He could not be ſo mad as to interpoſe in ſuch an Affair " without full Authority to make good all that He ſhould " promiſe." The Sum of all was, " that if the Chan- " cellor would withdraw himſelf into any Parts beyond " the Seas, to prevent the Miſchiefs that muſt befal " the Kingdom by the Diviſion and Difference between " the two Houſes; He would undertake upon his " Salvation," which was the Expreſſion He uſed more than once, " that He ſhould not be interrupted in his " Journey; and that after He ſhould be gone, He " ſhould not be in any Degree proſecuted, or ſuffer " in his Honour or Fortune by his Abſence."

Which He refuſes to do without receiving a Command from his Majeſty.

THE Chancellor told him, " that He well under- " ſtood what He muſt ſuffer by withdrawing himſelf, " and ſo declining the Trial, in which his Innocence " would ſecure him, and in the mean Time preſerve " him from being terrified with the Threats and Ma- " lice of his Enemies: However He would expoſe " himſelf to that Diſadvantage, if He received his " Majeſty's Commands to that Purpoſe, or if He had " but a clear Evidence that his Majeſty did wiſh it, as " a Thing that He thought might advance his Ser- " vice. But without that Aſſurance, which He " might receive many Ways which could not be ta- " ken Notice of, He could not with his Honour or " Diſcretion give his implacable Enemies that Advan- " tage againſt him, when his Friends ſhould be able " to alledge Nothing in his Defence."

THE Biſhop replied, " that He was not allowed to " ſay that his Majeſty required or wiſhed it, but " that He could not be ſo mad as to undertake what " He had promiſed, without ſufficient Warrant;" and repeated again what He had formerly ſaid. To which the other anſwered, " that the Vigilance and Power " of his Enemies was well known: And that though " the King might in Truth wiſh that He were ſafe on " the other Side of the Sea, and give no Direction to " interrupt or trouble him in his Journey; yet that it " was liable to many Accidents in Reſpect of his Weak- " neſs and Infirmity," which was ſo great at that Time, that He could not walk without being ſupported by one or two; ſo that He could not be diſguiſed to any Body that had ever known him. Beſides that the Pain He was already in, and the Seaſon of the Year, made him apprehend, that the Gout might ſo ſeize upon him within two or three Days, that He might not be able to move: And ſo the Malice of thoſe who wiſhed his Deſtruction might very probably find an Opportunity, without or againſt the King's Conſent, to apprehend and caſt him into Priſon, as a Fugitive from the Hand of Juſtice. For the Prevention of all which, which no Man could blame him for apprehending, He propoſed, " that He might have a Paſs from the " King, which He would not produce but in ſuch an " Exigent: And would uſe all the Providence He " could, to proceed with that Secrecy that his Depar- " ture ſhould not be taken Notice of; but if it were, " He muſt not be without ſuch a Protection, to pre- " ſerve him from the preſent Indignities to which He " muſt be liable, though poſſibly it would not protect " him from the Diſpleaſure of the Parliament." The Biſhop thought this Propoſition to be reaſonable, and ſeemed confident that He ſhould procure the Paſs: And ſo that Conference ended.

THE next Day the Biſhop ſent Word, " that the " King could not grant the Paſs, becauſe if it ſhould be " known, by what Accident ſoever, it would much in- " cenſe the Parliament: But that He might as ſecure- " ly go as if He had a Paſs;" which moved no farther with him, than his former Undertaking had done. Nor could the Importunity of his Children, or the Advice of his Friends, perſuade him to depart from his Reſolution.

The French Ambaſſadour urges him to retire to France.

ABOUT the Time of the Chancellor's Diſgrace, Monſieur Ruvigny arrived at London as Envoy Extraordinary from the French King, and came the next Day after the Seal was taken from him. He was a Perſon well known in the Court, and particularly to the Chancellor, with whom He had been formerly aſſigned to treat upon Affairs of Moment, being of the Religion and very nearly allied to the late Earl of Southampton. And as theſe Conſiderations were the chief Motives that He was made Choice of for the preſent Employment, ſo the chief Part of his Inſtructions was to apply himſelf to the Chancellor, through whoſe Hands it was known that the whole Treaty that was now happily concluded, and all the Preliminaries with France, had entirely paſſed. When He found that the Conduct of Affairs was quite changed, and that the Chancellor came not to the Court, He knew not what to do, but immediately diſpatched an Expreſs to France, for farther Inſtructions. He deſired to ſpeak with the Chancellor; which He refuſed, and likewiſe to receive the Letters which He had brought for him and offered to ſend to him, all which He deſired might be delivered to the King. When the Proceedings in Parliament went ſo high, Ruvigny, who had at all Hours Admiſſion to the King, and intimate Converſation with the Lord Arlington, and ſo eaſily diſcovered the extreme Prejudice and Malice that was contracted againſt the Chancellor, ſent him frequent Advertiſements of what was neceſſary for him to know, and with all poſſible Earneſtneſs adviſed him, when the Diviſions grew ſo high in the Houſes, " that He would withdraw and retire into " France, where" He aſſured him " He would find " himſelf very welcome." All which prevailed no more with him than the reſt. And ſo another Week paſſed after the Biſhop's Propoſition, with the ſame Paſſion in the Houſes: And Endeavours were uſed to incenſe the People, as if the Lords obſtructed the Proceeding of Juſtice againſt the Chancellor by refuſing to commit him; and Mr. Seymour told the Lord Aſhley, " that the People would pull down the Chancel- " lor's Houſe firſt, and then thoſe of all the Lords " who adhered to him."

Which He declines.

At length the King ſends to him to withdraw.

BY this Time the Duke of York recovered ſo faſt, that the King, being aſſured by the Phyſicians that there would be no Danger of Infection, went on Saturday Morning, the twenty-ninth of November, to viſit him: And being alone together, his Majeſty bade him " adviſe the Chancellor to be gone," and blamed him that He had not given Credit to what the Biſhop of Hereford had ſaid to him. The King had no ſooner left the Duke, but his Highneſs ſent for the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and bade him tell the Chancellor from him, " that it was abſolutely neceſſary " for him ſpeedily to be gone, and that He had the " King's Word for all that had been undertaken by " the Biſhop of Hereford."

He unwillingly obeys, and leaves the Kingdom.

As ſoon as the Chancellor received this Advice and Command, He reſolved with great Reluctancy to obey, and to be gone that very Night: And having, by the Friendſhip of Sir John Wolſtenholme, cauſed the Farmers Boat to wait for him at Erith, as ſoon as it was dark He took Coach at his Houſe Saturday Night, the twenty-ninth of November 1667, with two Servants only. And being accompanied with his two Sons and two or three other Friends on Horſeback as far as Erith, He found the Boat ready; and ſo embarked about Eleven of the Clock that Night, the Wind indifferently good: But before Midnight it changed, and carried him back almoſt as far as He had advanced. And in this Perplexity He remained three Days and Nights before He arrived at Calais, which was not a Port choſen by him, all Places out of England being indifferent, and France not being in his Inclination, becauſe of the Reproach and Calumny that was caſt upon him: But ſince it was the firſt that offered itſelf, and it was not ſeaſonable to affect another, He was very glad to diſembark there, and to find himſelf ſafe on Shore.

He lands at Calais.

ALL theſe Particulars of which many may ſeem too trivial to be remembered, have been thought neceſſary to be related, it being a principal Part of his Vindication for going away, and not inſiſting upon his Innocence; which at that Time made a greater Impreſſion upon many worthy Perſons to his Diſadvantage, than any Particular that was contained in the Charge that had been offered to the Houſe. And therefore though He forbore, when all the Promiſes were broken which had been made to him, and his Enemies Malice and Inſolence increaſed by his Abſence, to publiſh or in the leaſt Degree to communicate the true Ground and Reaſons of abſenting himſelf, to avoid any Inconvenience that in ſo captious a Seaſon might thereby have befallen the King's Service; yet it cannot be thought unreaſonable to preſerve this Memorial of all the Circumſtances, as well as the ſubſtantial Reaſons, which diſpoſed him to make that Flight, for the clear Information of thoſe, who in a fit Seaſon may underſtand his Innocence without any Inconvenience to his Majeſty, of whoſe Goodneſs and Honour and Juſtice it may be hoped, that his Majeſty himſelf will give his own Teſtimony, both of this Particular of his withdrawing, and a Vindication of his Innocence from all the other Reproaches with which it was aſperſed.

An Inſtance of his generous Behaviour to his Enemies.

I WILL not omit one other Particular, for the Manifeſtation of the Inequality that was between the Nature of the Chancellor and of his Enemies, and upon what Diſadvantage He was to contend with them. Before the Meeting of the Parliament, when it was well known that the Combination was entered into by the Lord Arlington and Sir William Coventry againſt the Chancellor, ſeveral Members of the Houſe informed him of what They did and what They ſaid, and told him, " that there was but one Way to prevent the " Prejudice intended towards him, which was by fall-

" ing

" ing firſt upon them; which They would cauſe to be " done, if He would aſſiſt them with ſuch Informa- " tion as it could not but be in his Power to do. That " They were Both very odious generally: The one for " his inſolent Carriage towards all Men, and for the " Manner of his getting into that Office by diſpoſſeſ- " ſing an old faithful Servant, who was forced to part " with it for a very good Recompenſe of ten thouſand " Pounds in Money and other Releaſes and Grants, " which was paid and made by the King to introduce " a Secretary of very mean Parts, and without Induſtry " to improve them, and one who was generally ſuſ- " pected to be a Papiſt, or without any Religion at " all; it being generally taken Notice of, that He was " rarely ſeen in a Church, and never known to receive " the Communion. The other was known by his cor- " rupt Behaviour, and ſelling all the Offices in the " Fleet and Navy for incredible Sums of Money, and " thereby introducing Men, who had been moſt em- " ployed and truſted by Cromwell, into the ſeveral Of- " fices; whilſt loyal and faithful Seamen who had al- " ways adhered to the King, and many of them con- " tinued in his Service abroad and till his Return into " England, could not be admitted into any Employ- " ment: The ill Conſequence of which to the King's " Service was very notorious, by the daily manifeſt " ſtealing and embezzling the Stores of Ammunition, " Cordage, Sails, and other Tackling, which were " commonly ſold again to the King at great Prices. " And when the Perſons guilty of this were taken No- " tice of and apprehended, They talked loudly of the " Sums They had paid for their Offices, which obliged " them to thoſe Frauds: And that it might not be " more notorious, They were, by Sir William Coven- " try's great Power and Intereſt, never proceeded " againſt, or removed from their Offices and Employ- " ments"

THEY told him, "that He never ſaid or did any " Thing in moſt ſecret Council, where They two " were always preſent, and where there were frequent " Occaſions of mentioning the Proceedings of Both " Houſes, and the Behaviour of ſeveral Members in " Both, but thoſe Gentlemen declared the ſame, and " all that He ſaid or did, to thoſe who would be moſt " offended and incenſed by it, and who were like in " ſome Conjuncture to be able to do him moſt Miſ- " chief: And by thoſe ill Arts They had irreconciled " many Perſons to him. And that if He would now, " without its being poſſible to be taken Notice of, give " them ſuch Information and Light into the Proceed- " ings of thoſe Gentlemen, They would undertake to " divert the Storm that threatened him, and cauſe it " to fall upon the others." And this was with much Earneſtneſs preſſed to him, not only before the Meeting of the Parliament, and when He was fully informed of the ill Arts and ungentlemanly Practice thoſe two Perſons were engaged in to do him Hurt, but after the Houſe of Commons was incenſed againſt him; with a full Aſſurance, "that They were much inclin- " ed to have accuſed the other two, if the leaſt Occa- " ſion was given for it."

BUT the Chancellor would not be prevailed with, ſaying, "that no Provocation or Example ſhould diſ- " poſe him to do any Thing that would not become " him: That They were Both Privy Counſellors, and " truſted by the King in his moſt weighty Affairs; and " if He diſcerned any Thing amiſs in them He could " inform the King of it. But the aſperſing or accuſing " them any where elſe was not his Part to do, nor could " it be done by any without ſome Reflection upon the " King and Duke, who would be much offended at it: " And therefore He adviſed them in no Degree to " make any ſuch Attempt on his Behalf; but to leave " him to the Protection of his own Innocence and of " God's good Pleaſure, and thoſe Gentlemen to their " own Fate, which at ſome Time would humble them." And it is known to many Perſons, and poſſibly to the King himſelf, for whoſe Service only that Office was performed, that one or Both thoſe Perſons had before that Time been impeached, if the Chancellor's ſole Induſtry and Intereſt had not diverted and prevented it.

WHEN the Chancellor found it neceſſary, for the Reaſons aforeſaid, to withdraw himſelf, He thought it as neceſſary to leave ſome Addreſs to the Houſe of Peers, and to make as good an Excuſe as He could for his Abſence without aſking their Leave; which ſhould be delivered to them by ſome Member of their Body (there being many of them ready to perform that civil Office for him), when his Abſence ſhould be known, or ſome Evidence that He was ſafely arrived on the other Side of the Sea. And that Time being come (for the Packet Boat was ready to depart when the Chancellor landed at Calais), the Earl of Denbigh ſaid, "He had an Addreſs to the Houſe from the " Earl of Clarendon, which He deſired might be read;" which contained theſe Words.

The Chancellor's Apology to the Houſe of Lords for withdrawing.

To the Right Honourable the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled; the humble Petition and Addreſs of Edward Earl of Clarendon.

" May it pleaſe your Lordſhips,"

" I CANNOT expreſs the inſupportable Trouble and " Grief of Mind I ſuſtain, under the Apprehenſion of " being miſrepreſented to your Lordſhips; and when " I hear how much of your Lordſhips Time hath " been ſpent upon my poor Concern (though it be of " no leſs than of my Life and Fortune), and of the Dif- " ferences in Opinion which have already or may pro- " bably ariſe between your Lordſhips and the honour- " able Houſe of Commons; whereby the great and " weighty Affairs of the Kingdom may be obſtructed " in a Time of ſo general a Diſſatisfaction."

" I AM very unfortunate to find myſelf to ſuffer ſo much " under two very diſadvantageous Reflections, which " are in no Degree applicable to me: The firſt, from " the Greatneſs of my Eſtate and Fortune, collected " and made in ſo few Years; which, if it be propor- " tionable to what is reported, may very reaſonably " cauſe my Integrity to be ſuſpected. The ſecond, " that I have been the ſole Manager and chief Mini- " ſter in all the Tranſactions of State ſince the King's " Return into England to Auguſt laſt; and therefore " that all Miſcarriages and Misfortunes ought to be im- " puted to me, and to my Counſels."

" CONCERNING my Eſtate, your Lordſhips will not " believe, that after Malice and Envy hath been ſo " inquiſitive, and is ſo ſharp-ſighted, I will offer any " Thing to your Lordſhips but what is exactly true: " And I do aſſure your Lordſhips in the firſt Place, " that, excepting from the King's Bounty, I have ne- " ver received or taken one Penny, but what was ge- " nerally underſtood to be the juſt and lawful Perqui- " ſites of my Office by the conſtant Practice of the " beſt Times, which I did in my own Judgment con- " ceive to be that of my Lord Coventry and my Lord " Elleſmere, the Practice of which I conſtantly obſer- " ved; although the Office in Both their Times was " lawfully worth double to what it was to me and I " believe now is."

" THAT all the Courteſies and Favours, which I " have been able to obtain from the King for other " Perſons in Church or State or in Weſtminſter-Hall, " have never been worth me five Pound: So that " your Lordſhips may be confident I am as innocent " from Corruption, as from any diſloyal Thought; " which, after near thirty Years Service of the Crown " in ſome Difficulties and Diſtreſſes, I did never ſuſ- " pect would have been objected to me in my Age."

" That I am at preſent indebted about three or four " and twenty thouſand Pounds, for which I pay Inte- " reſt; the Particulars whereof I ſhall be ready to offer " to your Lordſhips, and for which I have aſſigned " Lands and Leaſes to be ſold, though at preſent No- " body will buy or ſell with me. That I am ſo far " from having Money, that from the Time the Seal was " taken

" taken from me I have lived upon the coining ſome " ſmall Parcels of Plate which have ſuſtained me and " my Family, all my Rents being withheld from me."

" That my Eſtate, my Debts being paid, will not " yield me two thouſand Pounds per Annum, for the " Support of myſelf, and providing for two young " Children, who have Nothing: And that all I have " is not worth what the King in his Bounty hath be- " ſtowed upon me, his Majeſty having out of his " Royal Bounty, within few Months after his coming " into England, at one Time beſtowed upon me twenty " thouſand Pounds in ready Money, without the leaſt " Motion or Imagination of mine; and, ſhortly after, " another Sum of Money, amounting to ſix thouſand " Pounds or thereabouts, out of Ireland, which ought " to have amounted to a much greater Proportion, and " of which I never heard Word, till Notice was given " me by the Earl of Orrery that there was ſuch a Sum " of Money for me. His Majeſty likewiſe aſſigned " me after the firſt Year of his Return an annual Sup- " ply towards my Support, which did but defray " my Expences, the certain Profits of my Office not " amounting to above two thouſand Pounds a Year " or thereabouts, and the Perquiſites not very conſi- " derable and very uncertain: So that the ſaid ſeve- " ral Sums of Money, and ſome Parcels of Land his " Majeſty beſtowed upon me, are worth more than " all I have amounts to. So far I am from advancing " my Eſtate by any indirect Means. And though this " Bounty of his Majeſty hath very far exceeded my " Merit or my Expectation; yet ſome others have been " as fortunate at leaſt in the ſame Bounty, who had as " ſmall Pretence to it, and have no great Reaſon to " envy my good Fortune."

" Concerning the other Imputation, of the Credit " and Power of being chief Miniſter, and ſo cauſing all " to be done that I had a Mind to; I have no more to " ſay, than that I had the good Fortune to ſerve a " Maſter of a very great Judgment and Underſtand- " ing, and to be always joined with Perſons of great " Ability and Experience, without whoſe Advice and " Concurrence never any Thing hath been done. Be- " fore his Majeſty's coming into England, He was " conſtantly attended by the then Marquis of Ormond, " the late Lord Colepepper, and Mr. Secretary Nicholas; " who were equally truſted with myſelf, and without " whoſe joint Advice and Concurrence, when They " were all preſent (as ſome of them always were), I " never gave any Counſel."

" As ſoon as it pleaſed God to bring his Majeſty " into England, He eſtabliſhed his Privy Council, and " ſhortly out of them a Number of honourable Per- " ſons of great Reputation, who for the moſt Part are " ſtill alive, as a Committee for foreign Affairs, and " Conſideration of ſuch Things as in the Nature of " them required much Secrecy; and with theſe Per- " ſons He vouchſafed to join me. And I am confi- " dent this Committee never tranſacted any Thing of " Moment, his Majeſty being always preſent, without " preſenting the ſame firſt to the Council Board: And " I muſt appeal to them concerning my Carriage, and " whether We were not all of one Mind in all Matters " of Importance. For more than two Years I never " knew any Difference in the Councils, or that there " were any Complaints in the Kingdom; which I " wholly impute to his Majeſty's great Wiſdom, and " the entire Concurrence of his Council, without the " Vanity of aſſuming any Thing to myſelf: And " therefore I hope I ſhall not be ſingly charged with " any Thing that hath ſince fallen out amiſs. But " from the Time that Mr. Secretary Nicholas was re- " moved from his Place, there were great Alterations; " and whoſoever knows any Thing of the Court or " Councils, knows well how much my Credit ſince that " Time hath been diminiſhed, though his Majeſty " graciouſly vouchſafed ſtill to hear my Advice in " moſt of his Affairs. Nor hath there been, from " that Time to this, above one or two Perſons brought " to the Council, or preferred to any conſiderable Of- " fice in the Court, who have been of my intimate " Acquaintance, or ſuſpected to have any Kindneſs for " me; and many of them notoriouſly known to have " been very long my Enemies, and of different Judg- " ment and Principles from me both in Church and " State, and who have taken all Opportunities to " leſſen my Credit to the King, and with all other " Perſons, by miſrepreſenting and miſreporting all that " I ſaid or did, and perſuading Men that I had done " them ſome Prejudice with his Majeſty, or croſſed " them in ſome of their Pretences; though his Ma- " jeſty's Goodneſs and Juſtice was ſuch, that it made " little Impreſſion upon him."

" In my humble Opinion, the great Misfortunes of " the Kingdom have proceeded from the War, to " which it is notoriouſly known that I was always " averſe; and may without Vanity ſay, I did not only " foreſee but did declare the Miſchiefs We ſhould run " into, by entering into a War before any Alliance " made with the neighbour Princes. And that it may " not be imputed to his Majeſty's Want of Care, or " the Negligence of his Counſellors, that no ſuch Al- " liances were entered into; I muſt take the Boldneſs " to ſay, that his Majeſty left Nothing unattempted in " Order thereunto: And knowing very well, that " France reſolved to begin a War upon Spain, as ſoon " as his Catholick Majeſty ſhould depart this World " (which being much ſooner expected by them, They " had two Winters before been at great Charge in " providing plentiful Magazines of all Proviſions upon " the Frontiers, that They might be ready for the " War), his Majeſty uſed all poſſible Means to prepare " and diſpoſe the Spaniard to that Apprehenſion, of- " fering his Friendſhip to that Degree, as might be " for the Security and Benefit of Both Crowns. But " Spain flattering itſelf with an Opinion that France " would not break with them, at leaſt, that They " would not give them any Cauſe by adminiſtering " Matter of Jealouſy to them, never made any real " Approach towards a Friendſhip with his Majeſty; " but both by their Ambaſſadour here, and to his " Majeſty's Ambaſſadour in Madrid, always inſiſted, " as Preliminaries, upon the giving up of Dunkirk, " Tangier, and Jamaica."

" Though France had an Ambaſſadour here, to " whom a Project for a Treaty was offered, and the " Lord Hollis, his Majeſty's Ambaſſadour at Paris, " uſed all Endeavours to promote and proſecute the " ſaid Treaty: yet it was quickly diſcerned, that the " principal Deſign of France was to draw his Ma- " jeſty into ſuch a nearer Alliance as might ad- " vance their Deſigns; without which They had no " Mind to enter into the Treaty propoſed. And this " was the State of Affairs when the War was entered " into with the Dutch, from which Time neither " Crown much conſidered their making an Alliance " with England."

" As I did from my Soul abhor the entering into " this War, ſo I never preſumed to give any Advice " or Counſel for the Way of managing it, but by op- " poſing many Propoſitions which ſeemed to the late " Lord Treaſurer and myſelf to be unreaſonable, as " the Payment of the Seamen by Tickets, and many " other Particulars which added to the Expence. My " Enemies took all Occaſions to inveigh againſt me: " And making Friendſhip with others out of the " Council of more licentious Principles, and who " knew well enough how much I diſliked and com- " plained of the Liberty They took to themſelves of " reviling all Councils and Counſellors, and turning " all Things ſerious and ſacred into Ridicule: They " took all Ways imaginable to render me ingrateful to " all Sorts of Men (whom I ſhall be compelled to " name in my own Defence), perſuading thoſe who " miſcarried in any of their Deſigns, that it was the " Chancellor's doing; whereof I never knew any " Thing. However They could not withdraw the

" King's Favour from me, who was ſtill pleaſed to " uſe my Service with others; nor was there ever any " Thing done but upon the joint Advice of at leaſt " the major Part of thoſe who were conſulted with. " And as his Majeſty commanded my Service in the " late Treaties, ſo I never gave the leaſt Advice in " private, nor writ one Letter to any Perſon in either " of thoſe Negotiations, but upon the Advice of the " Council, and after it was read in Council, or at leaſt " by the King himſelf and ſome others: And if I pre- " pared any Inſtructions or Memorials, it was by the " King's Command, and the Requeſt of the Secretaries, " who deſired my Aſſiſtance. Nor was it any Wiſh " of my own, that any Ambaſſadours ſhould give me " an Account of the Tranſactions, but to the Secre- " taries, with whom I was always ready to adviſe; nor " am I conſcious to myſelf of having ever given Ad- " vice that hath proved miſchievous or inconvenient to " his Majeſty. And I have been ſo far from being " the ſole Manager of Affairs, that I have not in the " whole laſt Year been above twice with his Majeſty " in any Room alone, and very ſeldom in the two or " three Years preceding. And ſince the Parliament " at Oxford, it hath been very viſible that my Credit " hath been very little, and that very few Things have " been hearkened to which have been propoſed by me, " but contradicted eo Nomine, becauſe propoſed by me."

" I MOST humbly beſeech your Lordſhips to re- " member the Office and Truſt I had for ſeven Years; " in which, in Diſcharge of my Duty, I was obliged " to ſtop and obſtruct many Mens Pretences, and to " refuſe to ſet the Seal to many Pardons and other " Grants, which would have been profitable to thoſe " who procured them, and many whereof, upon my " Repreſentation to his Majeſty, were for ever ſtop- " ped; which naturally have raiſed many Enemies to " me. And my frequent concurring with the late " Lord Treaſurer, with whom I had the Honour to " have a long and a faſt Friendſhip to his Death, in re- " preſenting ſeveral Exceſſes and Exorbitances (the " yearly Iſſues ſo far exceeding the Revenue), pro- " voked many Perſons concerned, of great Power and " Credit, to do me all the ill Offices They could. And " yet I may faithfully ſay, that I never meddled with " any Part of the Revenue or the Adminiſtration of " it, but when I was deſired by the late Lord Trea- " ſurer to give him my Aſſiſtance and Advice (having " had the Honour formerly to ſerve the Crown as " Chancellor of the Exchequer), which was for the " moſt Part in his Majeſty's Preſence: Nor have I " ever been in the leaſt Degree concerned in Point of " Profit in the letting any Part of his Majeſty's Reve- " nue, nor have ever treated or debated it but in his " Majeſty's Preſence; in which, my Opinion con- " curred always with the major Part of the Counſellors " who were preſent. All which, upon Examination, " will be made manifeſt to your Lordſhips, how much " ſoever my Integrity is blaſted by the Malice of thoſe, " who I am confident do not believe themſelves. Nor " have I in my Life, upon all the Treaties or other- " wiſe, received the Value of one Shilling from all the " Kings and Princes in the World (except the Books " of the Louvre Print ſent me by the Chancellor of " France by that King's Direction), but from my own " Maſter; to whoſe entire Service, and to the Good " and Welfare of my Country, no Man's Heart was " ever more devoted."

" THIS being my preſent Condition, I do moſt " humbly beſeech your Lordſhips to retain a favour- " able Opinion of me, and to believe me to be inno- " cent from thoſe foul Aſperſions, until the Contrary " ſhall be proved; which I am ſure can never be by " any Man worthy to believed. And ſince the Di- " ſtemper of the Time, and the Difference between " the two Houſes in the preſent Debate, with the " Power and Malice of my Enemies, who give out, " that I ſhall prevail with his Majeſty to prorogue or " diſſolve this Parliament in Diſpleaſure, and threaten " to expoſe me to the Rage and Fury of the People, " may make me looked upon as the Cauſe which ob- " ſtructs the King's Service, and the Unity and Peace " of the Kingdom; I muſt humbly beſeech your " Lordſhips, that I may not forfeit your Lordſhip's " Favour and Protection, by withdrawing myſelf from " ſo powerful a Perſecution; in Hopes I may be able, " by ſuch withdrawing, hereafter to appear, and make " my Defence; when his Majeſty's Juſtice, to which " I ſhall always ſubmit, may not be obſtructed nor " controlled by the Power and Malice of thoſe who " have ſworn my Deſtruction."

THE Chancellor knew very well, that there were Members enough in Both Houſes who would be very glad to take any Advantage of his Words and Expreſſions: And therefore as He weighed them the beſt He could himſelf in the ſhort Time from which He took his Reſolution to be gone; ſo He conſulted with as many Friends as that Time would allow, to the End that their Jealouſy and Warineſs might better watch, that no Expreſſion might be liable to a ſiniſter Interpretation, than his own Paſſion and Indiſpoſition could provide. And as They all thought it neceſſary that He ſhould leave Somewhat behind him, that might offer an Excuſe for his Abſence; ſo They did not conceive, that the Words before mentioned could give any Offence to equal Judges. But the leaſt Variety or Change of Wind moved thoſe Waters to wonderful Diſtempers and Tempeſts.

THIS Addreſs was no ſooner read, by which They perceived He was gone, but They who had contributed moſt to the abſenting himſelf, and were privy to all the Promiſes which had invited him to it, ſeemed much troubled that He had eſcaped their Juſtice; and moved, " that Orders might be forthwith ſent to ſtop " the Ports, that ſo He might be apprehended;" when They well knew that He was landed at Calais. Others took Exceptions at ſome Expreſſions, " which," They ſaid, " reflected upon the King's Honour and " Juſtice:" Others moved, " that it might be enter- " ed in their Journal-Book, to the End that They " might farther conſider of it when They ſhould " think fit;" and this was ordered.

THE Houſes till this Time had continued obſtinate in their ſeveral Reſolutions; the Commons every Day preſſing, " that He might be committed upon " their general Accuſation of Treaſon" (for though They had amongſt themſelves and from their Committee offered thoſe Particulars which are mentioned before, yet They preſented none to the Houſe of Peers); and the Lords as poſitively refuſing to commit him, till ſome Charge ſhould be preſented againſt him that amounted to Treaſon. But now all that Debate was at an End by his being out of their Reach, ſo that They purſued that Point no farther; which, being Matter of Privilege, ſhould have been determined as neceſſarily as before, for the Prevention of the like Diſputes hereafter But the Commons wiſely declined that Contention, well knowing that their Party in the Houſe, that was very paſſionate for the Commitment of the Chancellor, would be as much againſt the general Order as any of the reſt had been: And the Lords ſatisfied themſelves with ſending a Meſſage to the Houſe of Commons, " that They " found by the Addreſs which They had received that " Morning, and which They likewiſe imparted to " them, that the Earl of Clarendon had withdrawn " himſelf; and ſo there was no farther Occaſion of " Debate upon that Point."

THE Addreſs was no ſooner read in that Houſe, but They who had induſtriouſly promoted the former Reſolution were inflamed, as if this very Inſtrument would contribute enough to any Thing that was wanting; and They ſeverally arraigned it, and inveighed againſt the Perſon who had ſent it with all imaginable Bitterneſs and Inſolence: Whilſt others, who could not in the hearing it read obſerve that Malignity that it was accuſed of, ſate ſtill and ſilent, as if They ſuſpected that Somewhat had eſcaped their Obſervations and Diſcovery, that ſo much tranſported other Men; or becauſe They were well pleaſed that a Perſon, againſt whom there was ſo much Malice and Fury profeſſed, was got out of their Reach. In Concluſion, after long Debate it was concluded, "that the "Paper contained much Untruth and Scandal and Se-"dition in it, and that it ſhould be publickly burned "by the Hand of the Hangman;" which Vote They preſently ſent to the Lords for their Concurrence, who, though They had not obſerved any ſuch Guilt in it before, would maintain no further Conteſts with them, and ſo concurred in the Sentence: And the poor Paper was accordingly with Solemnity executed by the appointed Officer, which made the more People inquiſitive into the Contents of it; and having gotten Copies of it, They took upon them to cenſure the Thing and the Perſon with much more Clemency and Compaſſion, and thought He had done well to decline ſuch angry Judges.

The Chancellor writes to the French Court for Leave to remove to Roan.

Which is granted.

When the Chancellor found himſelf at Calais, He was unreſolved how to diſpoſe of himſelf, only that He would not go to Paris, againſt which He was able to make many Objections: And in this Irreſolution He knew not how to ſend any Directions to his Children in England, to what Place They ſhould ſend his Servants and ſuch other Accommodations as He ſhould want; and therefore ſtayed there till He might be better informed, and know Somewhat of the Temper of the Parliament. In the mean Time He writ Letters to the Earl of St. Albans at Paris, from whoſe very late Profeſſions He had Reaſon to expect Civility, and that was all He did expect; never imagining that He ſhould receive any Grace from the Queen, or that it was fit for him to caſt himſelf at her Feet, whilſt He was in his Majeſty's Diſpleaſure. Only He deſired to know, "whether there would be any Objection againſt "his coming to Roan," and deſiring, "if there were "no Objection againſt it, that a Coach might be hired "to meet him on ſuch a Day at Abbeville." The Lieutenant Governor of Calais had, upon his firſt Arrival there, given Advertiſement to the Court of it: And by the ſame Poſt that He received a very dry Letter from the Earl of St. Albans, in which He ſaid, "He thought that Court would approve of his com-"ing to Roan;" He received likewiſe a Letter of great Civility from the Count De Louvois, Secretary of State, in which He congratulated his ſafe Arrival in France, and told him, "that his Majeſty was well pleaſed with "it, and with his Purpoſe of coming to Roan, where "He ſhould find himſelf very welcome." At the ſame Time Letters were ſent to the Lieutenant Governour of Calais, Boulogne, and Montrevil, "to treat him as "a Perſon of whom the King had Eſteem, and to "give him ſuch an Eſcorte as might make his Jour-"ney ſecure;" of all which He received Advertiſement, and, "that a Coach would be ready at Abbeville "to wait for him at the Day He had appointed."

He begins his Journey.

And now He thought He might well take this Reſolution; and thereupon gave Direction, "that ſuch "of his Family, whoſe Attendance He could not be "well without, might with all Expedition be with "him at Roan; and ſuch Monies might be likewiſe "returned thither for him, as were neceſſary," for He had not brought with him Supply enough for long Time. And ſo He provided to leave Calais, that He might be warm in his Winter-Quarters as ſoon as might be, which both the Seaſon of the Year, it being now within few Days of Chriſtmas, and his Expectation of a ſpeedy Defluction of the Gout, made very requiſite. When He came to Boulogne, He found Orders from the Marſhal D'Aumont to his Lieutenant for a Guard to Montrevil, the Spaniſh Garriſons making frequent Incurſions into thoſe Quarters: And at Montrevil the Duke D'Elboeuf viſited him, and invited him to Supper, which the Chancellor was ſo much tired with his Journey that He accepted not; but was not ſuffered to refuſe his Coach the next Day to Abbeville, where He found a Coach from Paris ready to carry him to Roan.

It was Chriſtmas Eve when He came to Dieppe, and it was a long Journey the next Day to Roan; which made him ſend to the Governour, to deſire that the Ports might be open much ſooner than their Hour, which was granted: So that He came to a very ill Inn well known at Toſtes, near the middle Way to Roan, about Noon. And when He was within View of that Place, a Gentleman, paſſing by in a good Gallop with a Couple of Servants, aſked, "whether the Chancel-"lour of England was in that Coach;" and being an-"ſwered, that He was," He alighted at the Coach-Side, and gave him a Letter from the King, which contained only Credit to what that Gentleman, Monſieur Le Fonde, his Servant in Ordinary, ſhould ſay to him from his Majeſty. The Gentleman, after ſome Expreſſions of his Majeſty's Grace and good Opinion, told him, "that the King had lately received Advertiſement from "his Envoy in England, that the Parliament there was "ſo much incenſed againſt him, the Chancellor, that if "He ſhould be ſuffered to ſtay in France, it would be ſo "prejudicial to the Affairs of his Chriſtian Majeſty (to "whom He was confident the Chancellor wiſhed well), "that it might make a Breach between the two Crowns: "And therefore He deſired him to make what Speed "He could out of his Dominions; and that He might "want no Accommodation for his Journey, that Gen-"tleman was to accompany him till He ſaw him out "of France."

But retires on the Way Orders to leave France inſtantly.

He was marvellouſly ſtruck with this Encounter, which He looked not for, nor could reſolve what to do, being at Liberty to make his Journey which Way He would ſo He reſted not, which was the only Thing He deſired: So He deſired the Gentleman (for all his Converſation was in the Highway) "to come into the "Coach, and to accompany him to Roan, where They "would confer farther." The Gentleman, though He was a very civil Perſon, ſeemed to think that it would be better to return to Dieppe, and ſo to Calais, as the ſhorteſt Way out of France: But He had no Commiſſion to urge that, and ſo condeſcended to go that Night to Roan; with a Declaration "that it was "neceſſary for him to be the next Day very early in "the Coach, which Way ſoever He intended to make "his Journey."

It was late in the Night before They reached Roan: And the Coach was overthrown three Times in the Gentleman's Sight, who choſe to ride his Horſe; ſo that the Chancellor was really hurt and bruiſed, and ſcarce able to ſet his Foot to the Ground. And therefore He told the Gentleman plainly, "that He could not "make any Journey the next Day: But that He would "preſently write to Paris to a Friend, who ſhould in-"form the King of the ill Condition He was in, and "deſire ſome Time of Reſt; and that as ſoon as He "had finiſhed his Letter, He would ſend an Expreſs "with it, who ſhould make all poſſible Haſte in go-"ing and coming." Monſieur Le Fonde aſſured him, "the Matter was ſo fully reſolved, that no Writing "would procure any Time to ſtay in France; and "therefore deſired him to haſten his Journey, which "Way ſoever He intended it." But when He ſaw there was no Remedy, He likewiſe writ to the Court, and the Chancellor to the Earl of St. Albans, from whom He thought He ſhould receive Offices of Humanity, and to another Friend, upon whoſe Affection He more depended: And with thoſe Letters the Expreſs was diſpatched.

He repreſents his ill State of Health to the Court.

They who had prevailed ſo far againſt him in England were not yet ſatisfied, but contrived thoſe Ways to diſquiet him as much in France, by telling Monſieur Ruvigny (who was too eaſily diſpoſed to believe them), "that the Parliament was ſo much offended with the "Chancellor, that it would never conſent that the "King ſhould enter into a cloſe and firm Alliance with "France," which it was his Buſineſs to ſolicit, "whilſt Proceedings againſt him in England.

WHEN He was now gone, They obſerved to the King, " what a great Faction there was in Both Houſes that " adhered to the Chancellor," who were called Clarendonians; and when any Oppoſition was made to any Thing that was propoſed, as frequently there was, "it " was always done by the Clarendonians:" Whoſe Condition They thought was not deſperate enough, except They proceeded farther than was yet done. They laboured with all their Power, that He might be attainted of High Treaſon by Act of Parliament, and that Both his Sons might be removed from the Court: Both which, notwithſtanding all their Importunity, his Majeſty poſitively refuſed to conſent to. Then They told him, " that the Chancellor only waited the Seaſon that the " Parliament ſhould be confirmed in ill Humour, to " which They were inclined; and then He would re- " turn and ſit in the Houſe to diſturb all their Coun- " ſels, and obſtruct all his Service: And therefore " They propoſed, ſince He had fled from the Hand " of Juſtice, that there could be no more Proſecution " for his Guilt" (which was untrue, for They might as well have proceeded and proved the Crimes objected againſt him if They could), " a Bill of Ba- " niſhment" which they had prepared, " might be " brought in againſt him;" which his Majeſty conſented to, notwithſtanding all that the Duke of York urged to the Contrary upon the King's Promiſe to him, and which had only betrayed the Chancellor to making his Eſcape. But the King alledged, " that " the Condeſcenſion was neceſſary for his Good, and " to compound with thoſe who would elſe preſs that " which would be more miſchievous to him."

A Bill of Baniſhment paſſed againſt him.

WHEREUPON a Bill for his Baniſhment was preferred, only upon his having declined the Proceeding of Juſtice by his Flight, without ſo much as endeavouring to prove one of the Crimes They had charged upon him: And this Bill was paſſed by the two Houſes, and confirmed by the King; of whom They had yet ſo much Jealouſy, that They left it not in his Power to pardon him without the Conſent of the two Houſes of Parliament. And this Act was to be abſolute, " ex- " cept by a Day appointed" (which was ſo ſhort, that it was hardly poſſible for him to comply with it, except He could have rode Poſt) " He ſhould appear " before one of the Secretaries of State, or deliver " himſelf to the Lieutenant of the Tower, who was to " detain him in Cuſtody till He had acquainted the " Parliament with it: In the mean Time no Perſon " was to preſume to hold any Correſpondence with " him or to write to him, except his own Children or " his menial Servants, who were obliged to ſhew the " Letters which They ſent or received to one of the " Secretaries of State."

He receives Orders a ſecond Time to quit France.

THE Expreſs that had been ſent to Paris returned with reiterated Orders to Monſieur Le Fonde to haſten the Chancellor's Journey, and not to ſuffer him to remain there; who executed the Commands He had received with great Punctuality and Importunity. The Earl of St. Albans did not vouchſafe to return any Anſwer to his Letter, or to interpoſe on his Behalf, that He might reſt till He might ſecurely enter upon his Journey: Only Abbot Mountague writ very obligingly to him, and offered all the Offices could be in his Power to perform, and excuſed the Rigour of the Court's Proceedings, as the Effect of ſuch Reaſon of State, as would not permit any Alteration whilſt They had that Apprehenſion of the Parliament; and therefore adviſed him " to comply with their Wiſhes, and " make no longer Stay in Roan, which would not be " permitted." But the general Indiſpoſition of his Body, the Fatigue of his Journey, and the Bruiſes He had received by the Falls and Overturnings of the Coach, made him not able to riſe out of his Bed; and the Phyſicians, who had taken much Blood from him, exceedingly diſſuaded it. All which, how viſible ſoever, prevailed not with his French Conductor to leſſen his Importunity that He would go, though it was evident He could not eaſily ſtand; of which no Doubt He gave true and faithful Advertiſement to the Court, though the Jealouſy of being not thought active enough in his Truſt made his Behaviour much leſs civil, than is agreeable to the Cuſtom of that Nation.

He again repreſents his ill State of Health to the French Court.

HOWEVER the Chancellor, hardened by the Inhumanity of his Treatment, writ ſuch a Letter in Latin to Monſieur De Lionne, by whoſe Hand all the ungentle Orders to Monſieur Le Fonde had been tranſmitted, as expreſſed the Condition He was in, and his Diſability to comply with his Majeſty's Commands until He could recover more Strength; not without Complaint of the little Civility He had received in France. And He writ likewiſe to the Abbot Mountague, " to uſe his Credit with Monſieur De Tellier," upon whoſe Humanity He more depended, " to in- " terpoſe with his Chriſtian Majeſty, that He might " not be preſſed beyond what his Health would bear." And ſince at that Time He reſolved to make his Journey to Avignon, that He might be out of the Dominions of France, He deſired, " that He might have " Liberty to reſt ſome Days at Orleans, until his " Servants who were upon the Sea, and brought with " them many Things which He wanted, might come " to him; and that He might afterwards, in ſo long " a Journey in the worſt Seaſon of the Year, have " Liberty to take ſuch Repoſe as his Health would " require; in which He could not affect unneceſſary " Delay, for the great Charge and Expence it muſt " be accompanied with."

But receives freſh Orders to remove immediately.

THE Anſwer He received from Monſieur De Lionne was the renewing the King's Commands for his ſpeedy Departure, " as a Thing abſolutely neceſſary to his " Affairs, and which muſt not be diſputed." But that which affected him the more tenderly, was the Sight of a Billet which Abbot Mountague ſent to him, that He had received from Monſieur De Tellier, in which He ſaid, " that He had, according to his De- " ſire, moved his Chriſtian Majeſty concerning the " Chancellor of England; and that his Majeſty was " much diſpleaſed that He made not more Haſte to " comply with what was moſt neceſſary for his Af- " fairs, and that it muſt be no longer delayed; and " that if He choſe to paſs to Avignon, He might reſt " one Day in ten, which was all his Majeſty would " allow."

THIS unexpected Determination, without the leaſt Ceremony or Circumſtance of Remorſe, ſignified by a Perſon who He was well aſſured was well inclined to have returned a more grateful Anſwer, in the Inſtant ſuppreſſed all Hopes of finding any Humanity in France, and raiſed a Reſolution in him to get out of thoſe Dominions with all the Expedition that was poſſible: Which his French Conductor urged with new and importunate Inſtance; inſomuch as though there was ſure Information, that the Ship, in which the Chancellor's Servants and Goods were embarked, was arrived at the Mouth of the River, and only kept by the croſs Wind from coming up to the Town; He would by no Means conſent to the Delay of one Day in Expectation of it, or that his Servants might come to him by Land, as He had ſent to them to do.

AT this very Time arrived an Expreſs, a Servant of his, ſent by his Children, with a particular Account of all the Tranſactions in Parliament, and of the Bill of Baniſhment; of Nothing of which He had before heard, and upon which the Duke of York, who looked upon himſelf as ill uſed by that Proſecution, was of Opinion, " that the Chancellor ſhould make " all poſſible Haſte, and appear by the Day appoint- " ed, and undergo the Trial, in which He knew his

" Innocence

" Innocence would juſtify him." This Advice, with a little Indignation at the Diſcourteſy of the Court of France, diverted him from any farther Thought of Avignon. And though He did not imagine that his Strength would be ſufficient to perform the Journey by the Day aſſigned (for the Gout had already ſeized upon Both his Feet), nor did the Arguments for his Return ſatisfy him; and the Breach of all the Promiſes which had been made was no Sign that They meant ſpeedily to bring him to Trial, towards which They had not yet made any Preparation: Yet He reſolved to make all poſſible Haſte to Calais, that it might be in his Power to proceed according to ſuch Directions as He might reaſonably expect to receive there from his Friends from England, and from whence He might quickly remove into the Spaniſh Dominions; though the Climate of Flanders, well known to him, terrified him in Reſpect of the Seaſon and his approaching Gout. And with this Reſolution He diſpatched the Expreſs again for England; and left Order with a Merchant at Roan, " to receive his Goods " when the Ship ſhould arrive, and detain both them " and his Servants till He ſhould ſend farther Orders " from Calais:" And at the ſame Time He writ to a Friend in Flanders, to ſpeak to the Marquis of Carracena, with whom He had formerly held a fair Correſpondence, " to ſend him a Paſs to go through " that Country to what Place He ſhould think fit." And having thus provided for his Journey, He departed from Roan, after He had remained there about twenty Days.

He returns to Calais.

In how ill a Condition of Health ſoever He was to travel, when the Days were at ſhorteſt, He reſolved to make no Stay till He ſhould reach Calais, to the End, that if He met with no Advice there to the Contrary, He might be at London by the Day limited by the Proclamation, which was the firſt of February that Style: And it was the laſt of January the French Style when He arrived at Calais, ſo broken with the Fatigue of the Journey and the Defluxion of the Gout, that He could not move but as He was carried, and was ſo put into a Bed; and the next Morning the Phyſicians found him in a Fever, and thought it neceſſary to open a Vein, which They preſently did. But the Pains in all his Limbs ſo increaſed, that He was not able to turn in his Bed; nor for many Nights cloſed his Eyes. Many Letters He found there from England, but was not in a Condition to read them, nor in Truth could ſpeak and diſcourſe with any Body. Monſieur Le Fonde, out of pure Compaſſion, ſuffered him to remain ſome Days without his Vexation, until He received freſh Orders from Paris, " that the Chan- " cellor might not, in what Caſe ſoever, be ſuffered to " remain in Calais:" And then He renewed his Importunity, " that He would the next Day leave the " Town, and either by Sea or Land, if He thought it " not fit to paſs for England, put himſelf into the Spa- " niſh Dominions, which He might do in few " Hours."

Where He is confined to his Bed by a dangerous Illneſs.

Yet He is required to retire out of the French Territories.

He was ſo confounded with the Barbarity, that He had no Mind to give him any Anſwer; nor could He ſuddenly find Words, their Converſation being in Latin, to expreſs the Paſſion He was in. At laſt He told him, " that He muſt bring Orders from God Al- " mighty as well as from the King, before He could " obey: That He ſaw the Condition He was in, and " conferred every Day with his Phyſicians, by which " He could not but know, that He could neither " help himſelf, nor endure the being carried out of " that Chamber, if the Houſe were in a Flame; and " therefore that He did not uſe him like a Gentleman, " in adding his unreaſonable Importunities to the " Vexation He ſuffered by Pain and Sickneſs. That " He might be very confident, his Treatment had not " been ſo obliging to make him ſtay one Hour in " France, after He ſhould be able to go out of it: " But He would not willingly endanger himſelf by " Sea to fall into the Hands of his Enemies. That " He knew" (for He had ſhewed him his Letter), that " He had written into Flanders for a Paſs, which was " not yet come: As ſoon as it did, if He could pro- " cure a Litter and endure the Motion of it, He would " remove to St. Omers or Newport, which were the " neareſt Places under the Spaniſh Government."

To all which He replied with no Exceſs of Courteſy, " that He muſt and would obey his Orders as He had " done; and that He had no Power to judge of his " Diſability to remove, or of the Pain He underwent." And there is no Doubt the Gentleman, who was well bred and in his Nature very civil, was not pleaſed with his Province, and much troubled that He could not avoid the Delivery of the Orders He received: And the Conjuncture of their Affairs was ſuch with Reference to the Deſigns then on Foot, that every Poſt brought reiterated Commands for the Chancellor's Remove; which grew every Day more impoſſible, by the Acceſs of new Pain to the Weakneſs He was in for Want of Sleep without any Kind of Suſtenance.

Notwithstanding which, within few Days after the laſt Encounter, upon freſh Letters from Monſieur Lionne, the Gentleman came again to him, told him what Orders He had received, and again propoſed, " that He would either make Uſe of a Boat to Newport " or Oſtend, or a Brancard to St. Omers; either of which " He would cauſe to be provided againſt the next " Morning, for the King's Service was exceedingly " concerned in the Expedition." And when He ſaw the other was not moved with what He ſaid, nor gave him any Anſwer, He told him plainly, " that the King " would be obeyed in his own Dominions; and if He " would not chooſe to do that which the King had " required, He muſt go to the Governour, who had " Authority and Power to compel him, which He " durſt not but do." Upon which, with the Supply of Spirit that Choler adminiſtered to him, He told him, " that though the King was a very great and powerful " Prince, He was not yet ſo omnipotent, as to make a " dying Man ſtrong enough to undertake a Journey. " That He was at the King's Mercy, and would en- " dure what He ſhould exact from him as well as He " was able: It was in his Majeſty's Power to ſend him " a Priſoner into England, or to cauſe him to be carri- " ed dead or alive into the Spaniſh Territories; but " He would not be Felo de ſe, by willingly attempting " to do what He and all who ſaw him knew was not " poſſible for him to perform." And in this Paſſion He added ſome Words of Reproach to Le Fonde, which were more due to Monſieur De Lionne, who in Truth had not behaved himſelf with any Civility: Whereupon He withdrew in the like Diſorder, and for ſome Days forbore ſo much as to ſee him, in which He had never before failed a Day.

And the Chancellor, who really did believe that ſome Force and Violence would be uſed towards him, preſently ſent to deſire the chief Magiſtrates of the Town and the Lieutenant Governour to come to him; and then told them all the Treatment He had received from Monſieur Le Fonde, and appealed to them, " whe- " ther They thought him in a Condition to perform " any Journey." And the Phyſicians being likewiſe preſent, He required them to ſign ſuch a Certificate and Teſtimony of his Sickneſs as They thought their Duty, which They readily performed; very fully declaring under their Hands, " that He could not be removed " out of the Chamber in which He lay, without ma- " nifeſt Danger of his Life." And the Lieutenant Governour and the Preſident of Juſtice ſeemed much ſcandalized at what had been ſo much preſſed, of which They had taken Notice many Days: And the one of them wrote to the Count of Charrou, Governour of the Town and then at Court, and the other to Monſieur De Lionne, what They thought fit; and the Certificate of the Phyſicians was incloſed to the Abbot Mountague, with a full Relation of what had paſſed. And it was never doubted, but that Monſieur Le Fonde himſelf made a very faithful Relation of the

Impoſſibility

Impoſſibility that the Chancellor could comply with what was required, in the State of Sickneſs and Pain that He was in at preſent.

The French Court ſuddenly alters its Behaviour.

By this Time the French Court diſcovered, that They were prevented of entering into that ſtrait Alliance They hoped with England (and for obtaining whereof They had gratified the proud and malicious Humours of the Duke of Buckingham and Lord Arlington in the Treatment of the Chancellor), by the Triple League, which They had uſed all thoſe Compliances to prevent: So that by the next Poſt after the Receipt of the Certificate from the Phyſicians, Monſieur De Lionne writ a very civil Letter to the Chancellor, in which He proteſted, "that He had the ſame "Reſpect for him which He had always profeſſed to "have in his greateſt Fortune, and that it was never "in the Purpoſe of his Chriſtian Majeſty to endanger "his Health by making any Journey that He could "not well endure; and therefore that it was left en- He has Leave to reſide in France. "tirely to himſelf to remove from Calais when He "thought fit, and to go to what Place He would." And Monſieur Le Fonde came now again to viſit him with another Countenance, by which a Man could not but diſcern, that He was much better pleaſed with the Commiſſion He had received laſt than with the former; and told him, "that he was now to receive no "Orders but from himſelf, which He would gladly "obey."

THIS gave him ſome little Eaſe in the Agony He was in, for his Pains increaſed to an intolerable Degree, inſomuch that He could not riſe out of his Bed in ſix Weeks. And it was the more welcome to him, becauſe at the ſame Time He received an Account from his Friend in Flanders, "that the Marquis of "Caſtelle Roderigo, with as much Regret as a civil Man "could expreſs, proteſted, that the Fear He had of of- "fending the Parliament at that Time would not permit "him to grant a Paſs: But if He would come to New- "port, He ſhould find the Governour there well prepared "and diſpoſed to ſhew him all poſſible Reſpect, and to "accommodate him in his Paſſage throughout the Coun- "try, where it would not be convenient for him to make "any Stay: and that He looked upon it as a great Miſ- "fortune to himſelf, that He might not wait upon him in "his Paſſage." This made it eaſy for him to diſcern, that his Enemies would not give him any Reſt in any Place where their Malice could reach him: And ſince They were ſo terrible that the Marquis of Caſtelle Roderigo durſt not grant him a Paſs, He thought it would be no hard Matter for them to cauſe ſome Affront to be put on him when He ſhould be without any Paſs; though He had not the leaſt Suſpicion of the Marquis his failing in Point of Honour or Courteſy.

AT the ſame Time He received Advice from his Friends in England, "that the Storm from France was "over, and that He might be permitted to ſtay in any "Part thereof; and for the preſent Time They wiſh- "ed that He would repair to the Waters of Bourbon "for his Health, and then chooſe ſuch a Place to re- "ſide in, as upon Inquiry He ſhould judge moſt pro- "per." But He was not yet ſo far reconciled to that Court, though He liked the Climate well, as to depend upon its Protection: And therefore He reſumed his former Purpoſe of going to Avignon, and, if He could recover Strength for the Journey before the Seaſon ſhould be expired for drinking the Waters of Bourbon, to paſs that Way. And to that Purpoſe He ſent to the Court "for a Paſs to Avignon, with Liberty to ſtay "ſome Days at Roan," where his Goods and his Monies were (for his Servants had come from thence to him to Calais), "and to uſe the Waters of Bourbon in "his Way:" All which was readily granted.

He returns to Roan.

IT was the third of April, before He recovered Strength enough to endure a Coach: And then, having bought a large and eaſy Coach of the Preſident of Calais, He hired Horſes there. And ſo He began his Journey for Roan, being ſtill ſo lame and weak that He could not go without being ſupported: And the firſt Day had a very ill Omen by the Negligence of the Coachman, who paſſing upon the Sands between Calais and Boulogne, when the Sea was flowing, drove ſo unadviſedly (which He might have avoided, as the Horſemen and another Coach did), that the Sea came over the Boot of the Coach, to the Middle of all thoſe who ſate in it; and a Minute's Pauſe more had inevitably overthrown the Coach, (the Weight whereof only then prevented it), and They had been all covered with the Sea. And two Days after, by the Change of the Coachman for a worſe, He was overthrown in a Place almoſt as bad, into a deep and dirty Water, from whence He was with Difficulty and ſome Hurt drawn out. Both which wonderful Deliverances were comfortable Inſtances that God would protect him, of which He had within few Days a freſh and extraordinary Evidence.

WHEN He came to Roan, He received all thoſe Orders He had deſired from the Court. And a Letter from Abbot Mountague aſſured him, "that He need no "more apprehend any Diſcommodity from Orders of "the Court, but might be confident of the Contrary, "and of all Reſpect that could be ſhewed him from "thence: That He might ſtay at Roan as long as his "Indiſpoſition required; and when He had made "Uſe of the Waters of Bourbon, He might retire to "any Place He would chooſe to reſide in." Monſieur Le Fonde had Orders, "after He had accompanied "the Chancellor two or three Days Journey towards "Bourbon, except He deſired his Company longer, "to return to Court." Only Monſieur De Lionne deſired, "that He would not in his Journey come nearer "Paris than the direct Way required him to do, be- "cauſe the Emperour's Agent at London, the Baron "of Iſola, had confidently averred, that the King had "one Day gone incognito from the Bois de Vincennes "to meet the Chancellor, and had a long private Confe- "rence with him."

From whence He begins his Journey to Avignon.

WHEN He had ſtayed as long at Roan as was neceſſary for the taking a little Phyſick and recovering a little Strength, the Seaſon required his making Haſte to Bourbon: And ſo on the twenty third of April He began his Journey from thence; and that He might comply with the Directions of Monſieur De Lionne, He choſe to go by the Way of Eureux, and to lodge there that Night. And becauſe He was unable to go up a Pair of Stairs, He ſent a Servant before, as He had always done, to chooſe an Inn where there was ſome Ground-Lodging, which often was attended with Diſcommodity enough, and now (beſides being forced to go through the City into the Suburbs) was like to coſt him very dear.

He is greatly abuſed by ſome Engliſh at Eureux.

THERE happened to be at that Time quartered there a Foot-company of Engliſh Seamen, who had been raiſed and were entertained to ſerve the French in attending upon their Artillery, ſome of them being Gunners; and none of them had the Language, but were attended by a Dutch Conductor, who ſpake ill Engliſh, for their Interpreter. Their Behaviour there was ſo rude and barbarous, in being always drunk, and quarrelling and fighting with the Townſmen who would not give them any Thing They demanded, that the City had ſent to the Court their Complaints, and expected Orders that Night for their Remove. They quickly heard of the Chancellor's being come to the Town; and calling their Company together declared, "that there were many Months Pay due to them in "England, and that They would make him pay it be- "fore He got out of the Town."

HE was ſcarce gotten into his ill Ground-Lodging, when many of them flocked about the Houſe: Upon which the Gates of the Inn were ſhut, They making a great Noiſe, and ſwearing They would ſpeak with the Chancellor; and, being about the Number of fifty, They threatened to break open the Gate or pull down the Houſe. The Mutiny was notorious to all the Street; but They had not Courage to appear againſt them: The Magiſtrates were ſent to; but there was a Difference between them upon the Point of Juriſdiction, this Uproar being in the Suburbs. In ſhort, They broke open the Door of the Inn: And when They were entered into the Court, They quickly found which was the Chancellor's Chamber. And the Door being barricadoed with ſuch Things as were in the Room, They firſt diſcharged their Piſtols into the Window, with which They hurt ſome of the Servants, and Monſieur Le Fonde, who with his Sword kept them from entering in at the Window with great Courage, until He was ſhot with a Brace of Bullets in the Head, with which He fell: And then another of the Servants being hurt, They entered in at the Window, and opened the Door for the reſt of their Company, which quickly filled the Chamber.

The Chancellor was in his Gown, ſitting upon the Bed, being not able to ſtand; upon whom They all came with their Swords drawn: And one of them gave him a Blow with a great Broadſword upon the Head, which if it had fallen upon the Edge muſt have cleft his Head; but it turned in his Hand, and ſo ſtruck him with the Flat, with which He fell backward on the Bed. They gave him many ill Words, called him "Traitor," and ſwore, "before He ſhould "get out of their Hands He ſhould lay down all their "Arrears of Pay." They differed amongſt themſelves what They ſhould do with him, ſome crying, "that "They would kill him," others, "that they would "carry him into England:" Some had their Hands in his Pockets, and pillaged him of his Money and ſome other Things of Value; others broke up his Trunks and plundered his Goods. When himſelf recovered out of the Trance in which He was ſtunned by the Blow, They took him by the Hand who ſpake of carrying him into England, and told him, "it was the "wiſeſt Thing They could do to carry him thither, "where They would be well rewarded:" Another ſwore, "that They ſhould be better rewarded for kil-"ling him there." And in this Confuſion, the Room being full and all ſpeaking together, the Fellow who had given him the Blow, whoſe Name was Howard, a very luſty ſtrong Man, took him by the Hand, and ſwore, "They ſhould hurt one another if They killed "him there; and therefore They would take him into "the Court, and diſpatch him where there was more "Room." And thereupon others laid their Hands upon him and pulled him to the Ground, and then dragged him into the Court, being in the ſame Inſtant ready to run their Swords into him together: When in the Moment their Enſign, and ſome of the Magiſtrates with a Guard, came into the Court, the Gate being broken; and ſo He was reſcued out of their bloody Hands, and carried back into his Chamber.

Howard and many of the other, ſome whereof had been hurt with Swords as They entered at the Window, were taken and carried to Priſon, and the reſt diſperſed, vowing Revenge when They ſhould get the reſt of their Company together: And it cannot be expreſſed with how much Fear the Magiſtrates, and the poor Guard that attended them, apprehended their coming upon them together again.

The Chancellor himſelf had the Hurt before mentioned in his Head, which was a Contuſion, and already ſwollen to a great Bigneſs; Monſieur Le Fonde was ſhot into the Head with a Brace of Bullets, and bled much, but ſeemed not to think himſelf in Danger; two of the Chancellor's Servants were hurt with Swords, and loſt much Blood: So that They all deſired to be in ſome ſecure Place, that Phyſicians and Surgeons might viſit them. And by this Time many Perſons of Quality of the Town, both Men and Women, filled the little Chamber; bitterly inveighing againſt the Villainy of the Attempt, but renewing the Diſpute of their Juriſdiction. And the Provoſt, who out of the City was the greater Officer, would provide an Accommodation for them in his own Houſe in the City, and appoint a Guard for them; which the Magiſtrates of the City would not conſent to, nor He to the Expedient propoſed by them. And this Diſpute with Animoſity and very ill Words continued in the Chamber till Twelve of the Clock at Night, the hurt Perſons being in the mean Time without any Remedy or Eaſe: So that the Magiſtrates, though They were not ſo dangerous, were as troubleſome as the Seamen, againſt whom They were not yet ſecure upon a ſecond Attempt.

In the End; Monſieur Le Fonde was forced to raiſe his Voice louder than was agreeable to the State He was in, to threaten to complain of them to the King, for their Neglect before and after the Miſchief was done; by which they were much moved, and preſently ſent to the Governor of the Duke of Bouillon's Caſtle (which is a good and noble Houſe in the Town), "that he would receive the Chancellor and Monſieur "Le Fonde, with ſuch Servants as were neceſſary for "their Attendance;" which He did with great Courteſy, and gave them ſuch Accommodation as in an unfurniſhed Houſe could on the Sudden be expected. And ſo Phyſicians and Surgeons viſited their Wounds, and applied ſuch preſent Remedies as were neceſſary, till upon ſome Repoſe They might make a better Judgment.

The ſame Night there were Expreſſes diſpatched to the Court to give Advertiſement of the Outrage, and to Roan to inform the Intendant in whoſe Province it was committed: And He the next Day with a good Guard of Horſe arrived at Eureux. After he had viſited the Chancellor, with the juſt Senſe of the Inſolence he had undergone, and of the Indignity that the King and his Government had ſuſtained; He proceeded in the Court of Juſtice to examine the whole Proceedings, and much blamed the Magiſtrates on all Sides for their Negligence and Remiſſneſs. Upon the whole Examination there appeared no Cauſe to believe, that there was any formed Deſign in which any others had concurred than They who appeared in the Execution, who defended themſelves by being drunk, which did not appear in any other Thing than in the Barbarity of the Action. Yet it was confeſſed, that upon their firſt Arrival at Dieppe, and whilſt They were quartered there, the Chancellor then paſſing by between Roan and Calais, They had a Reſolution to have robbed or killed him, if They had not been prevented by his getting the Gates opened, and ſo going away before the uſual Hour.

The Surgeons found Monſieur Le Fonde's Wound to be more dangerous than They had apprehended, and that at leaſt one of the Bullets remained ſtill in the Wound, and doubted that it might have hurt the Scull, in which Caſe trepanning would be neceſſary; which made him reſolve, though He was feveriſh, preſently to have a Brancard made, and to be put into it in his Bed, and ſo with Expedition to be carried to Paris, where He was ſure to find better Operators, beſides the Benefit and Convenience of his own Houſe and Family. And ſo the third Day after his Miſadventure, and after He had given his Teſtimony to the Intendant, He was in that Manner, and attended by a Surgeon, conveyed to Paris; and, by the Bleſſing of God, recovered without the Remedy that had been propoſed.

The Chancellor, after He had been bled once or twice, found himſelf only in Pain with the Blow, without any other Symptoms which frequently attend great Contuſions; and therefore he poſitively rejected the Propoſition of trepanning, which had been likewiſe earneſtly urged by the Surgeons: And upon Application of ſuch Plaſters and Ointments as were preſcribed, He found both the Pain and Swelling leſſen by Degrees, though the Memory of the Blow laſted long; ſo that He thought himſelf fit enough for his Journey, and was impatient to be out of that unlucky Town; and his Servants, having only Fleſh-Hurts, could endure the Coach as well as He. The Intendant,

ant, who knew his Deſire, and was willing to defer his Judgment till he was gone from thence, was very well content that He ſhould proceed in his Journey, and ſent his Sons with his own Troop to convoy him two or three Leagues out of the Town; and appointed the Provoſt with his Troop of Horſe to attend him to his Lodging that Night, and farther if He deſired it. And the next Day He condemned Howard and two others, an Engliſhman, a Scotchman, and an Iriſhman (for the Company conſiſted of the three Nations), to be broken upon the Wheel; which was executed accordingly. And ſhortly after his Arrival at Bourbon, Monſieur de Lionne writ a very civil Letter to the Chancellor, "of the Trouble the King ſuſtained for "the Affront and Danger he had undergone; and "that his Majeſty was very ill ſatisfied, that ſo few as "three had been ſacrificed to Juſtice for ſo barbarous "a Crime."

He removes from thence to Bourbon.

And from thence to Avignon.

WHEN He had ſtayed as long at Bourbon in the Uſe of the Waters, as the Phyſicians preſcribed (in which Time He found a good Recovery of his Strength, ſave that the Weakneſs of his Feet ſtill continued in an uneaſy Degree); and had received great Civilities during his Abode there from all the French of Quality, Men and Women, who came thither for the ſame Remedies, and with whom the Town then abounded; He proſecuted his Journey to Avignon: And having ſtayed a Week at Lyons, without any new ill Accident, He arrived about the Middle of June there, by the pleaſant Paſſage of the Rhone.

THOUGH He deſired to make his Journey as privately as He could, and had no more Servants in his Train than was neceſſary to the State of Health He was in; yet He was known in moſt Places by the Preſence of Engliſh, or by ſome other Accident. And ſome Friends at Paris had given ſuch Advertiſement to Avignon, that when He arrived there, He had no ſooner entered into a private Lodging, which He procured the next Day, but the Vice-Legate came to viſit him in great State and with much Civility, offering all the Commodities of that Place if He would reſide there. The Archbiſhop a very reverend and learned Prelate, a Genoeſe, as the Vice-Legate likewiſe was, performed the ſame Ceremony to him; and afterwards the Conſuls and Magiſtrates of the City in a Body (who made a Speech to him in Latin, as all the reſt treated him in that Language), and all the principal Officers of the Court: So that He could not receive more Civility and Reſpect in any Place; which, together with the Cheapneſs and Convenience of Living, and the Pleaſantneſs of the Country about it, might have inclined him to reſide there. Yet the ill Savour of the Streets by the Multitude of Dyers and of the Silk-Manufactures, and the worſe Smell of the Jews, made him doubt that it could be no pleaſant Place to make an Abode in, during the Heat of Summer: And therefore receiving new Confirmation by Letters from Paris, "that He was entirely at Liberty to reſide "where He would in France", He reſolved to take a View of ſome Places before He would conclude where to fix; and the Fame of Montpelier, that was within two little Days Journey, invited him thither. And ſo after a Week's Stay at Avignon, and after having returned all the Viſits He had received, He went from thence, and came to Montpelier in the Beginning of July.

His good Reception there.

He goes to Montpelier.

Where He receives great Civilities from the Lady Mordaunt.

IT was his very good Fortune, that an Engliſh Lady of eminent Virtue and Merit, the Lady Viſcounteſs Mordaunt, who had in the Beginning of the Winter before, in as great Weakneſs of Body as Nature can ſubſiſt with, tranſported herſelf thither, remained ſtill at Montpelier; where She had miraculouſly, by the Benefit of that Air, recovered a comfortable Degree of Health: And the News of her being ſtill there was a great Motive to his Journey from Avignon thither. The Chancellor had no Mind to be taken Notice of; but ſome Relations which that Lady made to his Advantage, and the great Eſteem that City had of her, make his Reception there more formal and ceremonious than He deſired.

THE Marquis De Caſtro, Governour of the City and Caſtle, viſited him and welcomed him to the Town, though He had not ſo much as a Paſs to come thither. The Premier Preſident, and all the other Courts, and the Conſul and other Magiſtrates of the City, viſited him in their ſeveral Bodies, and entertained him in Latin. It is true, that ſome Days after, the Intendant of the Province (who was not then in the Town) came thither; and He had received Orders from the Court, as ſoon as it was known that the Chancellor was in Montpelier, "that He ſhould be looked upon "and treated as a Perſon of whom the Moſt Chriſtian "King had a good Eſteem:" And ſo, as ſoon as He came to the Town, He viſited him with much Ceremony, and told him, "that He had received a parti-"cular Command from the King to do him all the "Services He could in that City, and in the Province "of Languedoc." And it muſt be confeſſed, that during his Reſidence in Montpelier, which was not above one or two Months leſs than three Years, He did receive as much Civility and formal Courteſy from all Perſons of all Conditions in that Place, or who occaſionally reſorted thither, as could have been performed towards him, if He had been ſent thither as a publick Perſon. And when the Duke of Vernueil (who was Governour of the Province, and uſed to convene the States thither every Year) came to Montpelier, as He did three Times in thoſe three Years, He always viſited the Chancellor, and ſhewed a very great Reſpect to him: Which was as great a Countenance as He could receive.

Great Reſpect paid to him there.

YET He did always acknowledge, that He owed all the Civilities which He received at his firſt coming thither, and which were upon the Matter the firſt Civilities He had received in France, purely to the Friendſhip of the Lady Mordaunt, and to the great Credit She had there: And for which, and the Conſolation He received from her during the Time of her Stay there, He had ever a great Reſpect for her and her Huſband; who, coming likewiſe thither, when He received Information from England of a Deſign to aſſaſſinate him by ſome Iriſh, manifeſted a noble Affection for him, and ſtayed ſome Months longer than He intended to have done, that He might ſee the Iſſue of that Deſign. Of which He had a juſt Senſe, and tranſmitted the Information of it to his Children, to the End that They and his Friends might, upon all Opportunities, acknowledge it to them Both.

Which He imputes to the Friendſhip of Lady Mordaunt.

AND in Truth the great Reſpect the Place had for him was notorious, when any Engliſh came thither, and forbore to pay any Reſpect to the Chancellor; as only one Gentleman did, Sir Richard Temple, who publickly declared "that He would not viſit him," and diſſuaded others from it as a Matter the Parliament would puniſh them for, and ſhewed much Vanity and Inſolence in his Diſcourſes concerning him: But He found ſo little Countenance from any Perſon of Condition, though He called himſelf "the Premier Preſident of "the Parliament of England," and ſuch a general Averſion towards him; that as They who came with him, and his other Friends, deſerted him and paid their Civilities to the Chancellor, ſo himſelf grew ſo ridiculous, that He left the Town ſooner than He intended, and left the Reputation behind him of a very vain, humourous and ſordid Perſon.

AND having thus accompanied the Chancellor through all his ill Treatments and Miſadventures to Montpelier, where He reſolved to ſtay, it will be to no Purpoſe farther to continue this Relation; otherwiſe than as himſelf afterwards communicated his private Thoughts and Reflections to his Friends.

WHEN He found himſelf at this Eaſe, and with thoſe convenient Accommodations, that He might reaſonably believe He ſhould be no more expoſed to the Troubles and Diſtreſſes which He had paſſed through; He began to think of compoſing his Mind to his Fortune, and regulating and governing his own Thoughts and Affections towards ſuch a Tranquillity, as the Sickneſs of Mind and Body, and the continued ſharp Fatigue in the ſix or ſeven precedent Months had not ſuffered to enter into any formed Deliberation. And it pleaſed God in a ſhort Time, after ſome Recollections, and upon his entire Confidence in him, to reſtore him to that Serenity of Mind, and Reſignation of himſelf to the Diſpoſal and good Pleaſure of God, that They who converſed moſt with him, could not diſcover the leaſt Murmur or Impatience in him, or any Unevenneſs in his Converſations. He reſolved to improve his Underſtanding of the French Language, not towards ſpeaking it, the Defect of which He found many Conveniences in, but for the reading any Books; and to learn the Italian: Towards Both which He made a competent Progreſs, and had Opportunity to buy or borrow any good Books He deſired to peruſe.

He writes a Vindication of himſelf.

But in the firſt Place He thought He was indebted to his own Reputation, and obliged for the Information of his Children and other Friends, to vindicate himſelf from thoſe Aſperſions and Reproaches which the Malice of his Enemies had caſt upon him in the Parliament; which, though never reduced into any formal or legal Charge, nor offered to be proved by any one Witneſs, were yet maliciouſly ſcattered abroad and divulged to take away his Credit. And the Performance of this Work, that was ſo neceſſarily incumbent to him, was the more difficult, by his conſtant and uninterrupted Fidelity and Zeal for the King's Service, and his Reſolution to ſay Nothing on his own Behalf and for his own Vindication, that might in the leaſt Degree reflect upon his Majeſty; which Conſideration had before kept him from charging thoſe who perſecuted him, with ſuch indirect and naughty Proceedings as might have put an End to their Power. Nor did He think fit in that Conjuncture, when his Majeſty had not yet met with that Compliance and Submiſſion from the Parliament ſince the Chancellor's Remove, as had been promiſed to him as the Effect of that Counſel, to publiſh that his coming away (which was the greateſt Blot upon his Reputation) was with the King's Privity, and at leaſt with his Approbation. However He was reſolved to commit into the Cuſtody of his Children, who He knew could never commit a Fault againſt his Majeſty, ſuch a plain particular Defence of his Innocence upon every one of the Reproaches He had been charged with, that themſelves might infallibly know his Uprightneſs and Integrity in all his Miniſtry, which They obſerved and knew too much of to ſuſpect; and might likewiſe manifeſtly convince other Men, who were willing to be undeceived: But the Manner of doing it in Reſpect of the former Conſideration, He left to their Diſcretion. And having prepared this, and cauſed it to be fairly tranſcribed, before the Lord and Lady Mordaunt returned for England; He committed it to their Care, who delivered it ſafely to the Hands of his Sons.

They were themſelves upon that Diſadvantage under the Reproach of their Relation, that the eldeſt of them was removed from his Attendance upon the Queen for many Months without the Allegation of any Crime; and the other was retained only by the Goodneſs of the King, againſt the greateſt Importunity that could be applied: And therefore it concerned them to be very wary in giving any Offence, of which their Adverſaries might take any Advantage. Beſides, They obſerved that They, whoſe Credit and Intereſt had done all the Miſchief to their Father, were now fallen out amongſt themſelves with equal Animoſity, and had all carried themſelves ſo ill with Reference to the Publick, and ſo looſely and licentiouſly in Order to a good Name, that their being Enemies brought little Prejudice to any Man's Reputation; and many of thoſe, who had been made Inſtruments to deprave the Chancellor, were not ſcrupulous in declaring how They had been cozened, and how unjuſtly He had been traduced and accuſed: So that They made no other Uſe of the Anſwer and Vindication They had received, than to be thereby enabled to make a perfect Relation of ſome particular Matters of Fact which were variouſly reported, and could not be underſtood by any but thoſe who had been converſant in the Tranſactions.

It will be therefore neceſſary in this Place, ſince there hath been before ſo methodical an Account of all that the Committee brought into the Houſe of Commons againſt him, and never after mentioned when They had once accuſed him, to inſert ſuch a ſhort Anſwer and Defence to all that was alledged, out of that Vindication which He ſent from Montpelier, that Nothing may remain in the poſſible Thoughts of any worthy and uncorrupted Man that may reflect upon his Sincerity, or leave any Taint upon his Memory; the Preſervation of which from being ſullied by the Misfortunes which befell him, is the only End of this Diſcourſe, never to be communicated, or peruſed by any but his neareſt Relations; who, by the Bleſſing of God, can never but retain that Affection and Duty to the Crown and for the Royal Family, that by the Laws of God and Man is due to it and them, and without which They can never expect God's Bleſſing in this or the World to come. And in this I ſhall obſerve the Order I uſed before in the Mention of the ſeveral Allegations, omitting upon any Particular the Repetition of what hath been at large already ſaid in this Diſcourſe, which ſhall be referred to for Anſwer.

His Anſwer to the ſeveral Articles of the Charges againſt him.

To the First then, That He had deſigned a ſtanding Army, and to govern the Kingdom thereby; adviſed the King to diſſolve the preſent Parliament, and to lay aſide all Thoughts of future Parliaments; to govern by military Power, and to maintain the ſame by free Quarter and Contribution (which, if true, whether it was Treaſon or no, muſt worthily have made him odious to all honeſt Men):

The firſt Article.

The Anſwer which He then made, and which was dated at Montpelier, upon the twenty fourth of July 1668, within few Days after his Arrival there and Reſolution to ſtay there, was in theſe Words. He ſaid, As Nothing could be more ſurpriſing to him, nor He thought to any Man elſe, than to find himſelf after near thirty Years Service of the Crown in the higheſt Truſt; after having paſſed all the Time of his Majeſty's Exile with him beyond the Seas and in his Service, and in which the indefatigable Pains He took was notorious to many Nations; and after He had the Honour and Happineſs to return again with his Majeſty into England, and to receive from him ſo many eminent Marks of his Favour, and to ſerve him near eight Years after his Return in the Place of the greateſt Truſt, without ever having diſcovered that his Majeſty was offended with him, or in Truth that He had ever the leaſt ill Succeſs from any Counſel He had ever given him; or that any Perſons of Honour and Reputation, or Intereſt in the Nation, had ever made the leaſt Complaint againſt him, or had any Thought that the Miſcarriages (for Miſcarriages were enough ſpoken of) had proceeded from him, or from any Advice of his: He ſaid, that as after all this He could not but be exceedingly ſurpriſed to find himſelf on a Sudden, when He had not the leaſt Imagination of it, bereft of the King's Favour, and fallen ſo far from his Kindneſs, even within three or four Days after his Majeſty had vouchſafed to condole with him in his Houſe for the Death of his Wife, that He reſolved to take the Great Seal from him; ſo it was no ſmall Comfort to him to ſee and know, that very few Men of Honour and Reputation approved or liked what was done; but that the ſame was contrived, purſued, and brought to paſs by Men and Women of no Credit in the Nation; by Men, who had never ſerved his Majeſty or his bleſſed Father eminently or uſefully, but moſt of them of Truſt and Credit under Cromwell, or never of Credit to do the King the leaſt Service; and who were only only angry with him for not being pleaſed with their vicious and debauched Lives, or for oppoſing and diſſuading their looſe and unreaſonable Counſels, which They were every Day audaciouſly adminiſtering in Matters of the higheſt Moment, with great Licenſe and Preſumption.

BUT above all, He ſaid, it was of the higheſt Conſolation to him, when it was publickly and induſtriouſly declared, "that the King was firmly reſolved "to deſtroy him, and would take it very well from "all Men who would contribute thereunto, by bring-"ing in any Charge or Accuſation againſt him:" when the moſt notorious Enemies He had were the only Perſons truſted in Employment, Men who had moſt eminently diſſerved and maliciouſly traduced the King, and had been to that Time looked upon as ſuch by his Majeſty; and when all, who were believed to have any Kindneſs for the Chancellor, were diſcountenanced and ill looked upon; when Men of all Conditions and Degrees were daily ſolicited and importuned, by Promiſes and Threats, to declare themſelves againſt him, at leaſt if They would not be wrought over to do any Thing againſt their Conſcience, that They would abſent themſelves from thoſe Debates: That all this Malice and Conſpiracy, with ſo long Deliberation and Conſultation, ſhould not be able at laſt to produce and exhibit any other Charge and Accuſation againſt him, but ſuch a one as moſt Men who knew him, or who had any Truſt or Employment in the publick Affairs, were well able to vindicate him from the Guilt of, and even his Enemies themſelves did not believe. The Particulars whereof, He ſaid, as far as He could take Notice of them, they having not been to that Day reduced into any Form, ſo much as in the Houſe of Commons itſelf, He would then examine: And if He ſhould appear too tedious in the Examination and Diſquiſition of them, and to ſay more than was neceſſary in his own Defence, and to mention many particular Perſons in another Manner than is uſual upon Occaſions of this Kind; He deſired it might be remembered and conſidered, that this was not written as a formal Anſwer to an Impeachment, nor like to be publiſhed in his Life-Time, a Judgment of Baniſhment being paſſed againſt him (without the leaſt Proof made or offered for the making good any one Article of Treaſon or Miſdemeanor) by Act of Parliament; but that it was a Debt due to his Children and Poſterity, that They might know (how much ſoever They were involved or might be in the Effects of the ſharp Malice againſt him) how far He was from any Guilt of thoſe odious Crimes which had been ſo odiouſly laid to his Charge.

AND that being his End, He might be excuſed if He did ſo far enlarge upon all Particulars, that it might be manifeſt unto them how far He had been from treading in thoſe Paths, or having been acceſſory to thoſe Counſels, which had been the Source from whence all thoſe bitter Waters had flowed, that had corrupted the Taſte even almoſt of the whole Nation. And in Order to that ſo neceſſary Diſcourſe and Vindication of his Integrity and Honour, He could only take Notice of the printed Paper of thoſe Heads for a Charge, that had been reported from the Committee to the Houſe; all Correſpondence and Communication being ſo ſtrictly inhibited to all Kind of Men to hold any Kind of Commerce with him, except his Children and menial Servants, who only had Liberty to write unto him of his own domeſtick Affairs; and the Letters which They ſhould write or receive were to be firſt communicated to one of the Secretaries of State.

To the Charge of the firſt Article itſelf, He ſaid; it was no great Vanity to believe, that there was not one Perſon in England of any Quality to whom He was in any Degree known, who believed him guilty of that Charge: And that He wanted not a Cloud of Witneſſes (beſides the Teſtimony that He hoped his Majeſty himſelf would vouchſafe to give him in that Particular) who, from all that They had heard him ſay in Council and in Converſation, could vindicate him from having that odious Opinion. Having had the Honour, by the ſpecial Command of his late Majeſty of bleſſed Memory, to attend the Prince, his now Majeſty, into the Parts beyond the Seas, and to be always with him and in his Service thoſe many Years of his Exile, and till his happy Return; He had always endeavoured to imprint in his Majeſty's Mind an Affection, Eſteem and Reverence for the Laws of the Land; "without "the trampling of which under Foot," He told him "that himſelf could not have been oppreſſed; and "that by the Vindication and Support of them, He "could only hope and expect Honour and Security "to the Crown." Upon that Foundation and declared Judgment (He ſaid) He came into the Service of the King his Father, by oppoſing all irregular and illegal Proceedings in Parliament; and that He had never ſwerved from that Rule in any Advice and Counſel He had given to him or to his Son.

FROM the Time of his Majeſty's happy Return from beyond the Seas, He had taken Nothing ſo much to Heart, as the Eſtabliſhment of the due Adminiſtration of Juſtice throughout the Kingdom according to the known Laws of the Land, as the beſt Expedient He could think of for the compoſing the general Diſtempers of the Nation, and uniting the Hearts of the People in a true Obedience unto and Reverence for his Majeſty's Perſon and Government. And with what Succeſs He had ſerved his Majeſty in that Province (which He had been pleaſed principally to commit to his Care and Truſt), He did appeal to the whole Nation; and whether the oldeſt Man could remember, that in the beſt Times Juſtice was ever more equally adminiſtered, and with leſs Complaint and Murmur; which had been frequently acknowledged from all the Parts of the Kingdom, and had been often taken Notice of by the King himſelf with great Approbation, and confeſſed by moſt of the Nobility upon ſeveral Occaſions. He ſaid, He had often declared in Parliament the King's Affection and Reverence for the Laws, and his Reſolution neither to ſwerve from them himſelf, nor to ſuffer any Body elſe to do ſo: And upon the publick Occaſions of ſwearing the Judges in any Courts, He had always enjoined them "to be very ſtrict and "preciſe in the Adminiſtration of Juſtice according to "Law, with all Equality, and without Reſpect of Per-"ſons, which the King expected from them; and that "as his Majeſty reſolved never to interpoſe by Meſſage "or Letter for the Advancement or Favour of any "Man's Right or Title, ſo He would take it very ill "if any Subject (how great ſoever) ſhould be able to "pervert them." And He did believe there had never paſſed ſo many Years together in any Age, in which the Crown had not in the leaſt Degree interpoſed in any Cauſe or Title depending in Weſtminſter-Hall, to incline the Court to this or that Side; or in which the Crown itſelf hath had ſo many Cauſes judged againſt it in ſeveral Courts: At leaſt in which former Practice and Uſage on the Behalf of the Crown hath been leſs followed. And nothing is more known, than that from the Time of the King's bleſſed Return into England, even to the Preparation of that Charge againſt him, He had been reproached with Nothing ſo much as his too much adhering to the Law, and ſubjecting all Perſons to it; And this Reproach had not been caſt upon him ſo bitterly and ſo maliciouſly by any, and in Places where They thought it might produce moſt Prejudice to him, as by thoſe who now contrived that Charge, and who had been always great Enemies to the Law.

ALL this, and much more of the ſame Kind, He ſaid was manifeſt to all the World: And therefore He needed not more to labour in that Vindication. Yet He could not but obſerve, that there was not in all the King's Forces, nor was when his Forces were much greater than They were at that preſent, one Officer recommended by him: Almoſt of them were ſuch who profeſſed publickly a great Animoſity againſt him, having been, by the Malice of ſome Men, very unreaſonably perſuaded that the Chancellor was their Enemy; that He deſired that They might be diſbanded, or at leaſt ſo obliged to the Rules of the Law, that They ſhould be every Day caſt into Priſon. And they had indeed found, that in ſome Inſolencies which the Soldiers had committed contrary to the Law, and ſome Pretences which They made to Privileges againſt Arreſts, and the like, He had always oppoſed their Deſires with more Warmth than other Men had done; as believing it might be the Cauſe of notable Diſorders, and more alienate the Affection of the People from the Soldiers: So that it could not be thought probable, that He ſhould contribute his Advice for the raiſing a Standing Army, and that the Kingdom ſhould be governed thereby; when there were very few Men ſo like to be deſtroyed by that Army as himſelf, who was ſo induſtriouſly rendered to be odious to it.

To the other Part of that firſt Article, that He did adviſe the King to diſſolve the preſent Parliament, and to lay aſide all Thoughts of Parliaments for the future, &c. which it was ſaid two Privy Counſellors were ready to prove; He made a Relation of all that had paſſed in that Conſternation when the Dutch Fleet came into the River as far as Chatham, and when the Debate was in Council upon the reconvening the Parliament in Auguſt, when it ſtood prorogued till October, which the Chancellor affirmed could not legally be done; all which is more at large related in this Diſcourſe † of the Time when thoſe Tranſactions paſſed, and ſo need not to be repeated in this Place.

The ſecond Article. THE SECOND Article was, That He had, in the Hearing of many of his Majeſty's Subjects, falſely and maliciouſly ſaid, That the King was in his Heart a Papiſt, popiſhly affected, or Words to that Effect.

His Anſwer. HE ſaid, that He had Occaſion too often, throughout the whole Charge, to acknowledge and magnify the great Goodneſs of God Almighty, that ſince He thought not fit (for his greater Humiliation, and it may be to correct the Pride of a good Conſcience) to preſerve him entirely from thoſe Aſperſions of Infamy, and thoſe Flagella Linguæ, thoſe Strokes of the Tongue, which always leave ſome Mark or Scar in the Reputation they deſire to wound; He had yet infuſed into the Hearts of his Enemies, who had ſuggeſted and contrived this Perſecution againſt him, to lay ſuch Crimes to his Charge as his Nature is known moſt to abhor, and which cannot only not be believed, but muſt be contradicted, and a Vindication of him from that Guilt muſt be made, by all Men who know him to any Degree, or who have been much in his Company. And as Juſtice would have required it, ſo the uſual Form in Caſes of this Nature doth exact, that in ſo general a Charge They ſhould have named one ſingle Perſon of thoſe many, in whoſe Hearing He had laid that odious Imputation upon the King: And every Man will preſume, that one ſuch Perſon would have been named, if He could have been found.

THERE was no Man then alive, He ſaid, who had the Honour to be ſo many Years about or near the Perſon of the King as He had been: No Man who knew more of the Temptation his Majeſty had undergone, and the Aſſaults He had ſuſtained, in the Matter of Religion, during the whole Time of his Exile; when almoſt a total Deſpair poſſeſſed the Spirits of moſt Men of his own Religion, that He would recover his Regality; and the Hopes and Promiſes and Aſſurances were ſo pregnant of very many of all Conditions, that He would ſuddenly recover it if He would change it. No Man knew ſo well, with what Chriſtian Courage his Majeſty had repelled thoſe Aſſaults, or with what pious Contempt and Indignation He reſiſted and rejected thoſe Temptations. Nor had any Man, He thought, held ſo many Diſcourſes with his Majeſty concerning Religion as He had done; and ſooner and more clearly diſcerned the Reproaches He would undergo from that innate Candour in his princely Nature, which diſpoſed him to receive any Addreſſes, or to hear any Diſcourſes, which thoſe of ſeveral Factions in Religion with great Preſumption have uſed to preſent to him: Whilſt his Majeſty hath, with equal Temper and ſingular Benignity, heard all; and, pitying their Errours, diſmiſſed them with Evidence, that their Arguments were too weak to make Impreſſion upon his Judgment. Which though They knew well, yet either Party, out of the Vanity of their Hearts, uſed all the Endeavours They could to get it believed, that the King was propitious to them and their Party. And the Papiſts, being moſt preſumptuous in particular, and in their dark Walks in ſeveral Counties making it a ſpecial Argument to their Proſelytes, and thoſe They endeavoured to make ſo, that the King favoured them, and was of their Religion in his Heart (of which, and the great Prejudice it brought upon his Majeſty, He frequently received Advertiſements from many Perſons of Honour, and of warm Affections to the Government); of which He had always informed the King, who was exceedingly offended at their Folly and Preſumption, and wiſhed "that ſome of them might be "apprehended, and proſecuted with the utmoſt Ri-"gour; and that ſome ſuch Proſecution might be "made againſt all the Roman Catholicks, and that They "might be convicted;" which He always gave in Charge to the Judges accordingly. And upon that and the like Occaſions He had a juſt and neceſſary Opportunity to enlarge, in the Preſence of many Perſons of Honour and Intereſt in the Kingdom, upon the Sincerity of the King's Religion, and his conſtant Exerciſe of it when He ſuffered by it; giving ſuch Inſtances of many Particulars as were pertinent to the Diſcourſe: Of which Endeavours of his, and of ſome Fruit thereof, He doubted not but that many of as conſiderable Perſons as are in England would be ready to give him their Teſtimony. And (He ſaid) He might without Vanity ſay, that He had more than an ordinary Part in the framing and promoting that Act of Parliament, that hath made thoſe ſeditious Diſcourſes, of the King's being a Papiſt in his Heart, or popiſhly affected, ſo very penal as they are: And therefore there would be Need of an undoubted and uncontroulable Evidence, that He had ſo ſoon run into that Crime himſelf. Which was all He would for the preſent ſay upon that ſecond Article.

The third Article. THE THIRD Article was, That He had received great Sums of Money for paſſing the Canary Patent, and other illegal Patents; and granted ſeveral Injunctions to ſtop Proceedings at Law againſt them, and other illegal Patents formerly granted.

His Anſwer. To which He ſaid, that He had preſumed in his humble Addreſs to the Houſe of Peers to aſſure their Lordſhips, that He had never received one Penny over and above the juſt Perquiſites of his Office, according to the Precedents and Practice of the beſt Times, which He conceived to be thoſe of the Lord Coventry and the Lord Elleſmere; and which He had made his Rule in all that He had received, excepting only what He had from the immediate Bounty of the King. And as He had always done all that was in his Power to prevent and ſtop all illegal Patents, ſo He did believe that there would be more Patents then found in the Office, which had been ſtopped by him, than by any of his Predeceſſors in ſo ſhort a Time. He never granted any Injunctions in the Caſes mentioned in the Charge, nor in any Caſe, where, by the Courſe of the Court and the Rules of Juſtice, it was not warranted. And for the Canary Patent, and the Original, and all the Proceedings thereupon, ſo much is ſaid in the Body of this Diſcourſe according to the Time it was tranſacted in *, that there needs no Repetition of it in this Place.

The fourth Article. THE FOURTH Article was, that He had adviſed and procured divers of his Majeſty's Subjects to be impriſoned againſt Law in remote Iſlands, Garriſons and other Places; thereby to prevent them from the Benefit of the Law, and to introduce Precedents for impriſoning of other of his Majeſty's Subjects in like Manner.

His Answer. To which He said, He knew not what Answer to make to that Article, it being so general, and no particular Person being named: But, He said, it was generally known, that He had never taken it upon him to commit any Man to Prison, but such, who by the Course of the Chancery, for Matters of Contempt are justly and necessarily to be committed. It was probable that He had been present at the Council-Board, when many Persons had been ordered to be committed, and whose Commitment hath by the Wisdom of that Board been thought just and necessary; and therefore He was not to answer apart for any Thing done by them. Only He might say, that He was frequently of Opinion that the Commitments were very necessary: And it was notoriously known, that by such Commitments some Rebellions or Insurrections had been prevented; and that other Persons, who were afterwards attainted and executed for High Treason, had upon their Examinations and at their Death confessed, that their Purpose had been to rise in Arms at such and such Times, if their Friends upon whom They had principally relied had not been then committed to Prison. And, He said, He did well remember, that it was thought fit that most of the Persons who stand attainted for the Murder of the late King, his Majesty's Royal Father, should be removed out of the Tower, and dispersed into several Islands and Garrisons; And if any other Persons had been likewise sent thither, He presumed it was upon such Reasons, as upon a due Examination thereof would make it appear to be very just.

The fifth Article. THE FIFTH Article was, That He had corruptly sold several Offices contrary to Law.

His Answer. THIS He positively denied.

The sixth Article. THE SIXTH was, That He had procured his Majesty's Customs to be farmed at Under rates, knowing the same; and great pretended Debts to be paid by his Majesty; to the Payment whereof his Majesty was not in Strictness bound; and that He had received great Sums of Money for procuring the same.

His Answer. To this He said, He had never had any Thing to do in the disposing his Majesty's Customs, or any other Part of his Revenue, except for some short Time after his Majesty's first Arrival in England; when He, amongst others of the Lords of the Council, was a Commissioner for the Treasury: During which Time there was no Farm let of any of the Revenue, and the Customs were put into the Hands of Commissioners, to the End that a Computation might be made as near as was possible of the full Value of them, before that it should be put into a Farm, which every Man conceived would be fit to be done as soon as might be. The White Staff was shortly after given to the Earl of Southampton (to whom his Majesty had designed it before He returned), and the Chancellorship of the Exchequer to the Lord Ashley, the Lord Chancellor having resigned it into his Majesty's Hands, which He had been possessed of for many Years in the Time of the late King, and retained it till after his Majesty's Return; And from the Time that those two Officers of the Revenue were made, which determined the former Commission, He never intermeddled in the Customs, or in any other Branch of the Revenue; except when the King commanded him to be present in some Consultations which He had with the Lord Treasurer, and when there were other Lords of the Council present. That excellent Person, the Lord Treasurer, always resorted to the King for his Direction, in all Matters of the least Difficulty which occurred to him in the Administration of his Office; and frequently did desire to confer with the Chancellor (with whom He was known to have held a long and a fast Friendship) upon many Particulars of his Office, believing that He was not altogether ignorant in that Administration, with which He had been formerly so well acquainted. And that He conceived might be the Reason, why He did oftentimes procure him to be joined with him in References from the King, upon Matters wholly relating to his own Office. But the Chancellor did never then suffer any particular Application to be made to him in those Cases, nor had ever secret Conferences with any Persons who were concerned in those Pretensions.

WHAT was meant by his having procured his Majesty's Customs to be farmed at Under rates, knowing the same; and great pretended Debts to be paid by his Majesty, to the Payment whereof his Majesty was not in Strictness bound; He said, He could not imagine, except it did relate to the Payment of a Debt due from his late Majesty to some of the Farmers. In which though He had no more to do, than in giving Information and his particular Advice to his Majesty, in the Presence of the Lord Treasurer, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and other of the Lords, and so was not himself responsible for what his Majesty did thereupon; yet He thought himself obliged upon this Particular, which so much concerned the Honour and Justice of the late King and of his present Majesty, to enlarge, and relate all He knew of what their Majesties did, and what induced his present Majesty to do his Part in it.

HE said, it was notoriously known, that before the late Troubles, and in the very first Entrance into them, his Majesty was necessitated to borrow very great Sums of Money from his then Farmers of his Customs, and to oblige them to stand personally bound for many other great Sums of Money, which other Men lent to his Majesty upon their Security. That thereupon, and for the Repayment of those Sums which the Farmers had advanced, and for securing them from any Damage for those Monies which others had lent upon their Obligations; his late Majesty, with the Advice of the then Lord Treasurer and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, had granted a farther Lease of his Customs to those Farmers for three or four Years to come, after the Expiration of their former Lease; with a Covenant on his Majesty's Part, to pay the just Interest for all such Monies as were advanced by them, or for which They stood bound; and likewise that They should, out of their growing Rent, deduct such Sums of Money by the Year, as They had lent or been bound for, according to such Proportions yearly as was agreed upon. That it was as well known, that shortly after the Beginning of the Parliament in 1640, and before the Commencement of the second Lease, the House of Commons did not only force the said Farmers to pay a very great Sum of Money for their Presumption in receiving Customs and Impositions upon Merchandise in the former Years, when They pretended such Payments were not due; but took also from them their new Lease granted to them by the King, and so left them without any Capacity of reimbursing themselves of the Money They had lent, and likewise at the Mercy of their Creditors to whom They stood bound; many of whom quickly began to exercise that Severity towards them, that many of the poor Gentlemen had their Estates extended upon Judgments and Recognizances, and their Persons taken in Execution and committed to Prison; where some of them who had been known to have great Estates, as Sir Paul Pindar and others, were forced to end their Lives.

THERE were very few Circumstances in the late King's Misfortunes, which gave him more Trouble, or so much afflicted him as the Sense He had of the horrid and unjust Sufferings those poor Gentlemen underwent for him, and their Affection for his Service; which He often publickly mentioned, and as often declared, "that He held himself obliged to make "them full Reparation as soon as God should enable "him." And He frequently spake to the Chancellor, who was then Chancellor of the Exchequer, of that Affair; of the good Opinion He had of the Men, and of the great Services They had done for his Majesty; and commanded him expressly, when it should fall within his Power, He should do them all the Right He could. And of this He had often informed his Majesty Majeſty during the Time He was abroad, and after his Return, without any other Motive than his Father's Command and his own Honour, having himſelf never had any Degree of Friendſhip with any of the Perſons concerned, and a very ordinary Acquaintance with ſome of them. Upon his Majeſty's happy Return, thoſe Gentlemen who were alive of the old Farmers, who were Sir John Jacob, Sir Job Harby, Sir Nicholas Criſpe and Sir John Harriſon, applied themſelves to the King, having lain ſeveral Years and at that Time remaining in Execution in ſeveral Priſons, and having had their Eſtates ſold, upon the Proſecution of thoſe Creditors to whom They were bound for Money lent to his Majeſty.

As ſoon as Meaſures were taken for collecting the Revenue, thoſe four Gentlemen named before, and two others who had ſerved his Majeſty very well, were appointed his Commiſſioners for the collecting the Cuſtoms and Duties upon Trade; in which Collection They continued a Year or thereabouts; during which Time many of their Creditors, who had generouſly forbore to proſecute them whilſt They were in Priſon and undone, begun now to commence their Actions againſt them, preſuming They were then or would ſhortly be able to ſatisfy them. Whereupon the King commanded the Lord Treaſurer and the Chancellor, with ſome other Lords to ſend for thoſe Creditors, and to declare to them, "that his Majeſty would in a "ſhort Time enable his Farmers to pay their juſt "Debts, which He well knew were contracted for his "Service; and that He would take it very well from "them, if They would for the preſent give no Ob-"ſtruction to his Service, by the Proſecution of thoſe "Perſons at Law, whoſe Time was ſolely taken up in "the neceſſary Service of his Majeſty." Whereupon They willingly deſiſted from that Proſecution; and many of them finding now, that by his Majeſty's Favour They were like to recover their Debts They before thought to be deſperate, They frankly remitted the Whole or Part of the Intereſt, that in Strictneſs of Law was ſtill due to them.

His Majeſty ſhortly after, finding it beſt for his Profit to determine the Collection by Commiſſion, and to let the whole to Farm, gave Direction to the Lord Treaſurer to confer and treat with any fit Perſons who deſired to contract for the ſame. Many Overtures were made by ſeveral Perſons, and ſome applied themſelves directly to his Majeſty. Upon which, and after a competent Time in conſidering all that had been propoſed, the King appointed a Day, when He would be attended by the Lord Treaſurer and other of the Lords, and when all the Pretenders ſhould likewiſe be preſent, and He would then and there declare his own Judgment; having firſt declared to the Commiſſioners, whereof four were the old Farmers to whom ſuch Money was due, "that whoſoever "ſhould take the Farm, They ſhould be obliged to "pay them their juſt Debt at ſuch Times, and by "ſuch Proportions, as his Service could bear. But "as to the letting the Farm itſelf, He would neither "conſider the Debt He owed them, nor the Suffer-"ings They had undergone, but only the Rent They "ſhould offer; which if as much as any Body elſe, "would give, He would prefer their Perſons before "others; but if any other fit Men would offer more "than They thought fit to give, They ſhould be his "Farmers: And therefore wiſhed them well to con-"ſider what They would propoſe to him."

After two Days ſpent by his Majeſty with the ſeveral Pretenders apart, and finding that the Propoſitions made to him by the old Farmers, with whom the other two were to be joined who had ſerved with them as Commiſſioners, were at leaſt as much if not more for his Profit than any that had been made by any of the reſt; He did declare, that the Farm ſhould be let to thoſe who had been his Commiſſioners: Which at that Time was underſtood to be ſo far from being a good Bargain, that the two Commiſſioners, who were not concerned in the great Debt, utterly refuſed to meddle with the Farm at ſo great a Rent; the other four publickly declaring at the ſame Time, "that "They would not give the Rent but in Contemplati-"on of their Debt, which They thought They ſhould "ſooner and better receive, when it ſhould be aſſigned "upon their own Collections, than when it ſhould be "charged upon new Farmers." But They were Suitors to his Majeſty, that He would oblige the other two "(Sir John Wolſtenholme and Sir John Shaw) to be joint "Farmers with them;" which his Majeſty did, by making a gracious Promiſe to them, "that if They "ſhould be Loſers He would repair them:" And thereupon Directions were given to Mr. Attorney General to prepare a Grant accordingly. And, He ſaid, He did not know that there was one diſſenting Voice from what his Majeſty inclined to do upon the whole Matter, the ſame appearing to every Man to be moſt juſt and reaſonable.

The Farm being thus ſettled, the old Farmers were directed "to bring their Accompts to the Lord Trea-"ſurer and Chancellor of the Exchequer, by which it "ſhould manifeſtly appear how much the King was "juſtly and truly indebted to them, and how the "Debts were incurred; that ſo upon a juſt Computa-"tion ſuch Satisfaction might be made to them as was "conſiſtent with the preſent State of his Majeſty's Af-"fairs and Occaſions." Many Months, if not a whole Year, were ſpent in the Examination of thoſe Accompts before the Auditors: Who, beſides the Exceptions They took for Want of ſome Formalities in the Proof of ſome Money paid, which after twenty Years of Licenſe (in which all their Books and Papers had been taken, their Houſes plundered, and their Perſons impriſoned; and in which ſo many Perſons employed by the King to receive and by them to pay Money were dead) could hardly be made with the uſual Exactneſs; made likewiſe ſeveral Certificates of particular Caſes, which required farther Directions. And the Lord Treaſurer would never take upon himſelf to give thoſe Directions, only declaring to them, as He had frequently done, "that in Regard his Majeſty was not "ſtrictly bound in Juſtice to pay that Debt due from "his Father, but that his preſent Majeſty's generous "and Royal Diſpoſition had prevailed with him to "pay that juſt Debt, whereby They might be pre-"ſerved from Ruin, in which," He ſaid, "He had "fully concurred with his Majeſty; but that He "would never adviſe him, on the Contrary He would "always diſſuade his Majeſty from paying or allowing "any Intereſt, though paid by them, which would "ſwell the Debt to ſuch a Proportion, that his Ma-"jeſty could never undertake the Payment of it." Which Determination, how great ſoever their Loſs appeared to be, ſeemed to be ſo juſt, at leaſt ſo neceſſary for the King, that They wholly referred it to his Majeſty; hoping that it might prevail with many of their Creditors not to exact it from them, though the Sale of their whole Eſtates had made Satisfaction to others for the whole Intereſt, as well as for the Principal.

When the Auditors Certificate was ready, and all the Doubts and Queſtions that did ariſe thereupon were clearly ſtated, his Majeſty vouchſafed again to be preſent with the other Lords, who had from the Beginning aſſiſted in the Examination of that Buſineſs: And then the Lord Treaſurer declared to his Majeſty, what He had before ſaid to the Perſons concerned, "that "though He willingly approved his Majeſty's Good-"neſs in taking upon himſelf that great Debt, yet that "He would by no Means give his Advice or Conſent "that He ſhould pay or allow any Intereſt for it."

Upon the whole Matter, and upon all the Doubts ſtated to his Majeſty, and after the Rejection of ſeveral of the Sums of Money which were demanded by them, and for the Payment whereof ſuch direct Proof was not made as is required by the Courſe of the Exchequer (though, He ſaid, He thought moſt Perſons who were preſent were in their private Conſciences well ſatisfied, that that thoſe Sums had been in Truth paid to his Majeſty's Uſe, as had been alledged); there appeared to his Majeſty to be juſtly due to them the Sum of two hundred thouſand Pounds, Principal-Money, for almoſt twenty Years, and for which They had paid the Intereſt for many Years out of their own Eſtates. And his Majeſty thought it very juſt; and, with many gracious Expreſſions of his Purpoſe and Reſolution further to repair them as He ſhould be able, gave Order to the Lord Treaſurer, "that the ſaid Debt of two "hundred thouſand Pounds ſhould be paid to them in "five Years, that is, by forty thouſand Pounds for "every Year, out of the Rent of the Farm; and that "all Inſtruments neceſſary for their Satisfaction and "Security ſhould be preſently given to them, whereby "They might be able to comply with their Creditors, "and avoid their Importunity," wherewith his Majeſty begun to be troubled as much as themſelves.

HE did confeſs himſelf to have been preſent at thoſe Agitations, and to have contributed his humble Advice and Opinion to his Majeſty that He ſhould pay this Debt; which He thought himſelf obliged to do, as well as a faithful Counſellor to his preſent Majeſty, as in Diſcharge of his Duty and Obligation to his Father. And, He ſaid, He had very good Reaſon to believe, that if that two hundred thouſand Pounds be paid according to his Majeſty's Direction, and of which the Heirs and Executors of thoſe Farmers who are dead, as well as the four preſent Farmers, have their equal Proportions; the ſaid Perſons have not at this Day Half the Eſtates They had in the Year 1640, when They entered into thoſe Engagements for his Majeſty. Nor was there any one Perſon preſent at the Agitation of this Affair, who ſeemed in the leaſt Degree to differ in the Opinion, or to diſſuade his Majeſty from giving that Satisfaction for that Debt.

HE ſaid, He did likewiſe very willingly confeſs, that He had in the Manner aforeſaid, and being called to adviſe, given his Opinion for the Payment of many other conſiderable Debts incurred by his late Majeſty, and for which many Perſons of Honour, who adhered to him during that War, were perſonally bound for him, and whoſe Eſtates had been extended and their Perſons impriſoned for the ſame; many of whom were in Execution and in Priſon for the ſame when his Majeſty returned, and others were then ſued in Weſtminſter-Hall, in his Majeſty's own Courts. His late Majeſty having granted under his Great Seal of England, to ſeveral Perſons intruſted for the reſt, many of his Foreſts, Parks and other Lands, for their Security and Indemnity who were or ſhould ſtand bound for him, for Money that was then borrowed for and applied to the neceſſary Support of himſelf and his Army, and to no other Purpoſe; in that Grant He had been particularly truſted, as well by the Deſire of the Perſons particularly concerned, as by his Majeſty's Command to be ſolicitous for their Satisfaction. And He did not deny, that He was never more glad, than when He was able to procure Satisfaction for thoſe Perſons who were ſo bound and ſo ſecured; nor more troubled, than that He could do no more, and that there remained ſtill ſo many unſatisfied, and almoſt undone, for thoſe Debts ſo contracted; of which Number He believed there were ſtill too many.

BUT having made thoſe clear Confeſſions of what was Truth, and what He did do in thoſe Tranſactions, He ſaid, He muſt as poſitively deny, that ever He procured or adviſed the letting his Majeſty's Cuſtoms, or any other Part of his Revenue, at Under-rates: On the Contrary, that He uſed all the Ways He could to advance the Rents, without Reſpect of Perſons; and that He was never preſent at the letting any Farm that any Men would have given more for, than They did to whom it was let, what Offer ſoever were made afterwards, when his Majeſty himſelf had made a Contract, and when a Grant was iſſued accordingly under the great Seal of England. And He did as poſitively deny, that ever He received or expected the leaſt Sum of Money, or Money-worth, for any Leaſe made by his Majeſty of his Cuſtoms, or any other Part of his Revenue; or for the Payment of any one Debt made by his Majeſty, to which He was or was not bound: He having (He ſaid) never had any other Motive for the Performance of thoſe Offices, but the pure and entire Conſideration of his Majeſty's Honour, Juſtice and Profit, and his own Inclination to gratify worthy Perſons, who in Juſtice ought to be or might with Juſtice be gratified and obliged, and who had commonly been ſuch Perſons to whom He had had no Kind of Obligation.

THE SEVENTH Article was, That He had received great Sums of Money from the Company of Vintners, or ſome of them or their Agents, for enhancing the Prices of Wines, and for freeing them from the Payment of legal Penalties which They had incurred. The ſeventh Article.

HE ſaid, if He had been in the leaſt Degree guilty of that Charge, it would very eaſily have been proved; and the Vintners would very gladly have helped them in it, being Perſons who never thought themſelves beholden to him, and ſo not obliged to conceal any of his Corruptions. They well knew, that He could never be prevailed with to conſent to the enhancing the Prices of their Wines, and that He never had received from them the leaſt Sum of Money, or other Gratuity from them, in his Life. He ſaid, He did remember, that at a Time when his Majeſty had refuſed to grant all their other Petitions, the Company of Vintners did complain, "that there were ſo many Informations "againſt them proſecuted by Informers in the Exche-"quer, that They muſt give over their Trades, and "be likewiſe undone, if They ſhould be ſeverely pur-"ſued for what was paſt:" And therefore They beſought his Majeſty in Council, "that He would par-"don what was paſt; and that for the future They "would treſpaſs no more." Whereupon his Majeſty thought it worthy of his Mercy to ſhelter them for the preſent from that Proſecution; and thereupon commanded his Attorney General "to call the Informers "before him, and to appoint the Vintners to pay them "ſuch reaſonable Rewards for their Pains as He "thought fit; and thereupon He ſhould enter a Noli "Proſequi:" But his Majeſty charged them "for the "future not to run into the ſame Danger." And as this Grace from his Majeſty was not upon his Promotion, but purely from his own Bounty and Goodneſs, from which Nobody diſſuaded him; ſo He never received the leaſt Profit from the ſame. His Anſwer.

THE EIGHTH is, That He had in a ſhort Time gained to himſelf a far greater Eſtate, than can be imagined to be lawfully gained in ſo ſhort a Time; and contrary to his Oath He had procured ſeveral Grants under the Great Seal from his Majeſty, to himſelf and to his Relations, of ſeveral of his Majeſty's Lands, Hereditaments and Leaſes, to the Diſprofit of his Majeſty. The eighth Article.

TO this He ſaid, that He wiſhed with all his Heart, that the Truth of that Article (which He preſumed had drawn on all the reſt) were clearly known to all the World: And that They, who in Truth do believe that He hath ſo great an Eſtate, were well informed what it is; and They would then clearly diſcern that He needed not be aſhamed of having gotten ſuch an Eſtate, nor that He needed to have any Recourſe to any ill Arts or Means for the obtaining thereof. They would know, that He had been ſo far from procuring ſeveral Grants under the Great Seal of England from his Majeſty, to himſelf and his Relations, of ſeveral of his Majeſty's Lands, Hereditaments and Leaſes, to the Diſprofit of his Majeſty; that He never moved his Majeſty in his Life for any one Grant to himſelf or any of his Relations. If his Majeſty's Royal Bounty had diſpoſed him to confer Somewhat of Benefit and Advantage upon an old Servant, who had waited upon his Father and himſelf near thirty Years in ſome Truſt and Employment; He ſaid, He hoped it ſhould not be imputed as a Crime in him to receive his Favours. His Anſwer.

He was far from believing or imagining, that the poor Services He had ever done, or could do, were in any Degree proportionable to his Majesty's Bounty: Yet since his Majesty's Goodness had thought him fit for it, He hoped many others would think so too; at least as fit as some Men, who had received greater Marks and Proportions of it than He had done, and who, though They might serve much better, had not served so long.

He said, He forbore to enlarge upon that Charge, because He conceived that it was now evident to many, who had been wrought upon by those who did not believe it themselves, to think his Estate to be very great, that the Information They received was without Ground: And whoever considers, that the first Year after the King's Return yielded justly more Profit to the Great Seal than He ever received in all the Years following, and some particular Acts of Bounty conferred on him by his Majesty, without the least Suit from him, and unthought of by him, will believe that his Fault was greater in having no better an Estate, than that what He hath hath been gotten by Corruption. He said, He hath none of his Majesty's Lands, but what He had bought, for as much as any Body would pay for it, of those who had the same granted to them by his Majesty's Bounty, and that Grant confirmed to them by Act of Parliament. And He presumed that it could not have fallen from his Majesty's Memory, and was sure was well known to some Persons of Honour yet alive, that when his Majesty was graciously pleased, upon his first coming over, to offer him some Land that had never yielded any Thing to the Crown, He absolutely refused to receive it, because it was generally thought to be of great Value; and therefore He would not expose himself to the Envy which naturally attends those Donations, having in Truth never had an immoderate Appetite to make Haste to be rich; and had as much apprehended the being accused of Witchcraft or Burglary, as of Bribery and Corruption.

In a Word: He did declare, that, his Debts being discharged, for which He paid Interest, all his Estate was not worth, being sold, the Money that He had received from his Majesty's own Royal Bounty, and far from being suitable to the Quality He yet held, and which was never obtained by his own Ambition, as many Persons of Honour could testify.

The ninth Article. The Ninth Article was, That He had introduced an arbitrary Government in his Majesty's foreign Plantations; and had caused such as complained thereof before his Majesty and his Council, to be long imprisoned for so doing.

His Answer. To this He said, that though He could not possibly comprehend the full Meaning of that Article, yet because He had heard of many Discourses made of the Authority that He assumed to himself over the Plantations, and the great Advantage and Benefit that He had drawn to himself from thence, He was very willing to take that Occasion to relate all that He knew, and all that He had done, with Reference to any of his Majesty's Plantations; declaring in the first Place, that at his Majesty's Return, and before, He had used all the Endeavours He could to prepare and dispose the King to a great Esteem of his Plantations, and to encourage the Improvement of them by all the Ways that could reasonably be proposed to him. And He had been confirmed in that Opinion and Desire, as soon as He had a View of the Entries in the Customhouse; by which He found what a great Revenue accrued to the King from those Plantations, insomuch as the Receipts from thence had upon the Matter repaired the Decrease and Diminution of the Customs, which the late Troubles had brought upon other Parts of Trade, from what it had formerly yielded.

The first Consideration that offered itself before the King that related to the Plantations, was concerning the Barbadoes; which having been most discoursed of since, and, as He had heard, with some Reflections upon him of Partiality and Injustice, He said, He would in the first Place set down all He knew in that Affair, and how He came to meddle in it.

Before the Beginning of the late Troubles, the King had granted the Island of the Barbadoes to the Earl of Carlisle and his Heirs for ever, upon a Supposition that it had been first discovered, possessed and planted at his Charge: And the said Earl sent a Governour and People thither, and enjoyed it to his Death; and by his Will settled it for the Payment of his Debts, which were very great. The Troubles falling out in a short Time after, little or no Profit had been drawn from thence towards the Satisfaction of those Debts; and the Executors and Trustees totally neglected the taking Care of it, or prosecuting the Plantation. But in and after the War many Citizens, Merchants and Gentlemen, who were willing or forced to withdraw themselves from England, transported themselves thither, and planted without asking any Body's Leave, and without being opposed or contradicted by any Body.

About the Year 1647, or thereabouts, the late Earl of Carlisle, Son and Heir of the former Earl, to whom the Inheritance of that Island belonged, treated with the late Lord Willoughby of Parham, how that Island might be so husbanded, that the Plantation might be advanced, and Profit made by it; which would at last redound to himself, when the Debt should be paid. The late King was then in the Hands of the Army. And with his Majesty's Approbation and Consent, it was agreed between the said Earl and the said Lord, "that a Lease should be "made by the Earl of Carlisle to the Lord Willoughby, "of all the Profits which should arise out of that Plan- "tation, for the Term of twenty-one Years or there- "abouts; a Moiety of the whole Profits to be re- "ceived by the Lord Willoughby himself for his own "Use, in Recompense for his Pains and Charge. "And he was likewise to receive a Commission from "the said Earl, to be Governour of that and the rest "of the Caribbee Islands" (all which were comprehended in the Charter granted by the King to the Earl of Carlisle); "and that a Commission should be "likewise procured from the King or the Prince of "Wales, by which the Lord Willoughby was to be "constituted Governour of the said Islands."

About that Time the Fleet in the Downs returned to their Obedience to the King, withdrawing themselves to the Coast of Holland to offer their Service to the Prince of Wales, his Majesty that now is; the Lord Willoughby then likewise coming over to him, to serve him in any Condition his Highness would employ him in. That Summer being passed without any good Success, the Lord Willoughby then informed the Prince of what had passed between the Earl of Carlisle and him with the King his Father's Consent; which his Highness had likewise received from his Majesty himself, with much Recommendation of the Lord Willoughby. He said, He was then attending upon the Prince of Holland, as one of the King's Council assigned by his Majesty for that Service. Upon the understanding this whole Case, the Prince, upon the unanimous Advice of the Council, thought fit to grant such a Commission of Governour of the Barbadoes and the other Islands, as He desired: And He had the more Reason to desire it (notwithstanding the Earl of Carlisle's Grant and Commission), because the principal Planters upon the Barbadoes had been Officers in the King's Army, or of manifest Affections to him, and always looked upon as of his Party.

With this Commission the Lord Willoughby had, at his great Charge and Expence, transported himself to the Barbadoes, and was there received as Governour; and made a Contract with the Planters, "that "so much should be paid upon the Hundred to the "Earl of Carlisle," to whom the Propriety of the Whole belonged. But before this Agreement could be well executed, or any Profit drawn from thence, the the Iſland was reduced to the Obedience of the Parliament and of Cromwell, and a Governour appointed by them; the Lord Willoughby being ſent into England, where He remained till the King's Return, and had given unqueſtionable Evidence of his Affection to the King's Service, for which he had often been committed to Priſon before and after Cromwell's Death.

As ſoon as the King returned, the Lord Willoughby (who had then eight or nine Years to come of his Leaſe formerly granted to him by the Earl of Carliſle, who was then likewiſe living, and ready to do any other Act to the Lord Willoughby's Advantage) reſolved to return himſelf to the Barbadoes, and deſired the King to renew his Commiſſion to him for the Government, which his Majeſty was very willing to do, as to a Perſon He eſteemed very much, and who had ſpent very much of his own Fortune, as was notoriouſly known, in that Service. But the Barbadoes and all thoſe other Iſlands were now become of another Conſideration and Value, than they had been of before the Troubles: The Barbadoes itſelf was (by that Confluence and Reſort thither as was mentioned before) ſo fully planted, that there was no Room for new Comers, and They had ſent very many of their People to the other Iſlands to plant; many Citizens of London had raiſed very great Eſtates there, and every Year received a very great Revenue from thence; and the King's Cuſtoms from that one Iſland came to a very great Sum of Money yearly.

ALL theſe Men, who had entered upon that Plantation as a waſte Place, and had with great Charge brought it to that Perfection, and with great Trouble, begun now to apprehend, that They muſt depend upon the Good-Will of the Earl of Carliſle and Lord Willoughby for the Enjoyment of their Eſtates there, which They had hitherto looked upon as their own. All theſe Men joined together in an Appeal to the King, and humbly prayed "his Protection, and that "they might not be oppreſſed by thoſe two Lords." They pleaded, "that They were the King's Subjects; "that They had repaired thither as to a deſolate "Place, and had by their Induſtry obtained a Live-"lihood there, when They could not with a good "Conſcience ſtay in England. That if They ſhould "be now left to thoſe Lords to ranſom themſelves "and compound for their Eſtates, They muſt leave "the Country; and the Plantation would be de-"ſtroyed, which yielded his Majeſty ſo good a Re-"venue. That They could defend themſelves by "Law againſt the Earl of Carliſle's Title, if his Ma-"jeſty did not countenance it by a new Grant of the "Government to the Lord Willoughby: And there-"fore They were Suitors to His Majeſty, that He "would not deſtroy them by that Countenance.

AT the ſame Time, the Creditors of the late Earl of Carliſle (whoſe Debts were to be ſatisfied by the Profits of that Plantation, by the Will and Settlement of the ſaid Earl) petitioned the King, "that They might "be in the firſt Place provided for: Their principal "Money due to them at the Death of the Earl, "amounted to no leſs than fifty thouſand Pounds, of "which They had never yet received one Penny; "and therefore that the Profits which ſhould ariſe "ought in the firſt Place to be applied to them, "there having been many Families utterly ruined for "Want of their Monies ſo due to them." The King appointed to hear all their ſeveral Pretences at the Council-Board, where They all attended with their Council: And after his Majeſty had ſpent three or four Days himſelf in hearing the ſeveral Allegations, finding new Pretences and Difficulties every Day to ariſe (which ſhall be mentioned anon), the King appointed ſeveral of the Lords of the Council "to con-"ſider of the whole Matter, and to confer with the "ſeveral Parties, and, if it were poſſible, to make "an End between them by their own Conſent; other-"wiſe to report the ſeveral Titles to his Majeſty, "with ſuch Expedients as in their Judgments They "thought moſt like to produce a general Satisfac-"tion, without endangering the Plantation," the Preſervation whereof his Majeſty took to Heart. The Chancellor was one of that Committee, and took very much Pains in reading the Charters, Grants and Leaſes, and many other Papers and Diſpatches which concerned that Affair; and conferred with ſeveral of the Perſons intereſted; to the End that He might the better diſcern what could be done, having never underſtood or heard any Thing of the Matter, or that concerned that Plantation, otherwiſe than what He hath before ſet down upon the Diſpatch of the Lord Willoughby to Holland; nor had He the leaſt Inclination or Bias to any Party. Upon the hearing all the Allegations before the Lords, the ſeveral Pretences and Titles appeared to them to be theſe; which They afterwards reported to the King.

THE Lord Willoughby demanded Nothing from the King, but his Commiſſion to be Governour for the Remainder of the Years which had been granted to him by the Earl of Carliſle; to the End that He might receive one Moiety of thoſe Profits which ſhould ariſe to the Earl, and which had been aſſigned to him with the Conſent and Approbation of the late King, and of his Majeſty that now is; upon which He had undertaken that Voyage, and ſpent ſo much of his Eſtate.

THE Earl of Carliſle, whilſt this Contention was depending, died, and by his Will deviſed his Intereſt in the Barbadoes to the Earl of Kinnoul, who likewiſe petitioned the King for the Preſervation of his Right: But neither He, nor the Perſon under whom He claimed, had any Pretence till all the Debts ſhould be ſatisfied; nor did the Earl of Kinnoul demand any Thing till then, but believed the Profit would ariſe yearly to ſo much, that the Debts would quickly be ſatisfied, and then the Whole was to come to him.

THERE was another Title that preceded the Earl of Carliſle's, which was that of the Earl of Marlborough, who alledged, and proved it to be true, "that "the Barbadoes and thoſe adjacent Iſlands were firſt "granted by the King to his Grandfather the Earl "of Marlborough, who was then Lord High Treaſu-"rer of England, before the Earl of Carliſle had any "Pretence thereunto; and that the Lord Treaſurer, "had afterwards conſented that the ſame ſhould be "granted to the Earl of Carliſle, upon a full Contract, "that He ſhould firſt receive for ever the Sum of three "hundred Pounds by the Year out of the firſt Profits of "the Plantations; which Sum of three hundred "Pounds had never been yet paid: And therefore "the Earl of Marlborough deſired, as Heir to his "Grandfather, to have Satisfaction for the Arrears, "and that the growing Rent might be ſecured to "him."

THE Creditors were of two Kinds: The firſt, and who had firſt petitioned the King, as was ſaid before, had an Aſſignment made to them by the Executors and Truſtees of the Earl of Carliſle upon his Will, and who at his Death owed them the full Sum of fifty thouſand Pounds or thereabouts. The other Creditors conſiſted of ſeveral Tradeſmen and Artificers, to whom the ſaid Earl was indebted for Wares and Goods which They had delivered for his Uſe; and of ſeveral Servants for their Arrears of Wages: And all thoſe had, during the late Troubles, exhibited their Bill in Chancery againſt the Executors and Overſeers of the late Earl, and had obtained a Decree in that Court for their Satisfaction out of the Profits of thoſe Plantations (which Decree ſtood confirmed by the late Act of Judicial Proceedings); and, as He remembered, their Debts amounted to thirty thouſand Pounds or thereabout. None of the Creditors in general, of one or the other Sort, had ever received one Shilling from the Time that the Earl had firſt aſſigned it.

THE

THE Planters inſiſted poſitively "that the Charter "granted to the Earl of Carliſle by the King was void "in Point of Law." For which their Council alledged many Reaſons. And having ſpent much Time upon that Argumentation, They concluded with two humble Propoſitions to the King. (1.) "That his "Majeſty would give them Leave to proſecute in his "Name in the Exchequer, and at their own Charge, "to repeal that Grant to the Earl of Carliſle; by "which They ſhould be freed from the arbitrary "Power and Oppreſſion which would be exerciſed "upon them under the Colour of that Charter, and "his Majeſty might receive a great Benefit to him-"ſelf, by taking the Sovereignty into his own Hands, "to which it belonged. And in that Caſe They of-"fered in their own Names, and for the reſt of the "Planters who were in the Iſland, to conſent to an "Impoſition of ſo much in the Hundred, which "They confidently averred would amount in the Year "to ten thouſand Pounds at the leaſt; out of which "his Majeſty's Governour might be well ſupported, "and his Majeſty diſpoſe of the Overplus as He "ſhould think fit." (2.) "If his Majeſty would not "ſuffer the Charter to be repealed, that He would "leave thoſe who claimed under the Earl of Carliſle's "Patent to their Remedy at Law, and leave the "Planters to their own Defence; which They hoped "in Juſtice could not be denied to them, ſince They "alone had been at the Charge to ſettle the Planta-"tion, which brought every Year ſo great a Reve-"nue to the Crown, when the Earl had not been at "the leaſt Expence thereupon: And if his Majeſty "ſhould not aſſiſt their Pretences with his Royal Au-"thority, They muſt all quit the Plantation."

THESE being the ſeveral Pretences of the ſeveral Perſons, and Nothing being to be done by Agreement between themſelves, their Intereſts being ſo diſtinct and inconſiſtent with each other; his Majeſty thought fit, in the firſt Place, to refer the Conſideration of the Validity and Legality of the Patent to his Council at Law; who, upon full Deliberation and after the Hearing of all Parties, returned their Opinion "that their Patent was void, and that his Maje-"ſty might take the ſame into his own Power." This Report was no ſooner made to his Majeſty, but He very graciouſly declared, "that He would not "receive from hence any Benefit or Advantage to "himſelf, until all their Pretences had received Sa-"tisfaction; and that He would make no farther Uſe "of avoiding the ſaid Charter, than to diſpoſe the "Profits of the Plantation to thoſe, who in Juſtice "had any Pretence in Law or Equity to receive the "ſame: And therefore that the Lord Willoughby "ſhould proceed in his Voyage to the Barbadoes, and "ſhould receive according to his Bargain a Moiety of "the Profits; and that the other Part ſhould be diſ-"poſed of for the Satisfaction of the Debts and other "Incumbrances. In Order to which, his Majeſty appointed the ſame Committee of the Lords to meet again, and to adjuſt the ſeveral Proportions.

WHEN They met again, They had all the Perſons concerned with them, or ready to be called in upon any Occaſion; and They all appeared very glad that the King had taken the Care and Protection of the Plantation upon himſelf, which was all the Security the Planters had or could deſire. And the Lords firſt Care was, to make ſome Computation that might be depended upon, as to the yearly Revenue that would ariſe upon the Impoſition within the Iſland. But the Planters would not be drawn to any particular Agreement in that Point, not ſo much as to conſent to what ſhould be impoſed upon every Hundred; but on the Contrary declared, "that too much had been "undertaken in that Kind by one of their own Num-"ber, Mr. Kendall, in his Diſcourſe before the King "in the Council," and declared "that the Plantation "could not bear the Impoſition He had mentioned. "That whatſoever was to be done of that Nature was "to be tranſacted by an Aſſembly in the Iſland: And "that all that They could promiſe for themſelves "was, that They would uſe their utmoſt Endeavours "with their Friends in the Iſland, that when the Lord "Willoughby ſhould arrive there and call an Aſſembly, "They ſhould conſent to as great an Impoſition as "the Plantation would bear; by which," They ſaid, "a good Revenue would ariſe to the King for the "Purpoſes aforeſaid."

THE Creditors had great Reaſon to be glad of the Reſolution his Majeſty had taken: For though it would be a long Time before They could be fully ſatisfied out of a Moiety of the Profits, though it ſhould ariſe to the higheſt Computation, yet in Time They ſhould receive all, and ſhould every Year receive ſome; which would leſſen their Debt, and relieve thoſe who were in the higheſt Neceſſities, of which there was a great Number. Whereas They had hitherto in ſo many Years received not one Penny: And it was evident, that without His Majeſty's Authority They never ſhould, ſince the Planters were reſolved never to conſent to any Impoſition, nor ſubmit to any Authority that ſhould be exerciſed under the Earl of Carliſle's Patent, without a due Courſe of Law; the Way to obtain which would be very difficult to find out. And They underſtood well enough, that, without His Majeſty's Grace and Bounty to them, the Repeal or avoiding the Earl of Carliſle's Patent would put a quick End to all their Pretences.

THE greateſt Difficulty that did ariſe was from the Earl of Kinnoul, to whom the laſt Earl of Carliſle had devited theſe Iſlands by his Will: And He had a great Mind to go thither himſelf, and take Poſſeſſion of his Right; and his Council had perſuaded him, "that "the King's Charter granted to the firſt Earl of Car-"liſle was good and valid in Law, and that They be-"lieved They could defend and maintain it in any "Court of Juſtice." Then his own Eſtate in Scotland was ſo totally loſt by the Iniquity of the Time, and his Father having ſo frankly declared himſelf for the King, when very few of that Nation loſt any Thing for their Loyalty, that He had very little left to ſupport himſelf; and therefore was willing to retire into any Place abroad, where He might find but a bare Subſiſtance. But when He conſidered again, that He could have no Pretence to any Thing till after the Creditors were fully ſatisfied, and how long it was like to be before They could be ſatisfied, there remaining ſtill due to the Creditors of Both Kinds no leſs than fourſcore thouſand Pounds, Principal Money; He did not believe that his inſiſting upon the Patent would be worth the Charge and Hazard He muſt inevitably be put to: And therefore, upon farther Deliberation with his Friends, He willingly referred himſelf and all his Intereſt to the King's gracious Determination, as all the reſt of the Pretenders and intereſted Perſons had done.

THE Caſe being thus fully ſtated to the Lords, and every Man's Intereſt and Pretence clearly appearing before them. They conſidered ſeriouſly amongſt themſelves what They might reaſonably propoſe to the ſeveral Perſons, in Order to their Agreement amongſt themſelves; or, that proving ineffectual, what Advice They might reaſonably give his Majeſty. They were unanimouſly of Opinion, "not to adviſe his Ma-"jeſty to cauſe the Patent to be called in Queſtion: "For though They doubted not, upon the Opini-"on of his learned Council, that the ſame would be "judged void and illegal; yet They did not think it "a ſeaſonable Time, when the Nation was ſo active "and induſtrious in foreign Plantations, that They "ſhould ſee a Charter or Patent queſtioned and "avoided, after it hath been ſo many Years allowed "and countenanced, and under which it hath ſo "long flouriſhed, and was almoſt grown to Perfection. "And that ſince His Majeſty had declared, that not-"withſtanding any Right of his own, all poſſible Care"ſhould be taken for the Satisfaction of the Creditors,

"as

" as well as for the Preſervation and Support of the " Plantation; it would be equally equitable and ho " nourable in His Majeſty, not to leave the Earl of " Kinnoul the only Perſon unconſidered, and bereaved " of all his Pretence. But that They would humbly " move His Majeſty, that He would graciouſly vouch- " ſafe to aſſign ſome preſent Maintenance to the ſaid " Earl, which his unhappy Condition required, out " of the Revenue that ſhould be there ſettled, and " until the Debts ſhould be paid; and that after that " Time ſuch an Augmentation might be made to " him, as His Majeſty in his Royal Bounty ſhould " think fit: In Conſideration whereof, the Earl ſhould " procure the Patent to be brought in and ſurrender- " ed;" which He promiſed ſhould be done accord- ingly, as ſoon as the Settlement ſhould be made of that Proportion which ſhould be aſſigned to him.

" THAT the Lord Willoughby ſhould enjoy the Be- " nefit of his former Contract with the Earl of Carliſle, " and approved by His Majeſty, during the Remain- " der of thoſe Years which are not yet expired; that " He ſhould make what Haſte He could thither, and " call an Aſſembly, to the End that ſuch an Impoſiti- " on might be agreed upon to be paid to His Majeſ- " ty as ſhould be reaſonable, in Conſideration of the " great Benefit They had already and ſhould ſtill en- " joy, in being continued and ſecured in their ſeveral " Plantations, in which as yet They were as it were " but Tenants at Will, having no other Pretence of " Right but the Poſſeſſion: And therefore, that thoſe " Merchants and Planters who had petitioned the " King ſhould, according to their Obligation and " Promiſe made by them to His Majeſty, uſe all their " Credit with thoſe in the Iſland, that the Impoſiti- " on might ariſe to ſuch a Proportion, that the Re- " venue might anſwer the Ends propoſed; and that " one Moiety of that Revenue ſhould be enjoyed by " the Lord Willoughby for his Term."

" THAT the Annuity of three hundred Pounds by " the Year ſhould be paid to the Earl of Marlborough, " according to the original Contract mentioned before; " and that the Aſſignment, that His Majeſty would " likewiſe be pleaſed to make to the Earl of Kinnoul, " ſhould be firſt paid: And then that the Remain- " der of that Moiety ſhould be received to the Uſe of " the Creditors. And that when the Lord Willough- " by's Term ſhould be expired, His Majeſty ſhould " be deſired, after the Reſervation of ſo much as He " ſhould think fit for the Support of his Governour, " that all the Remainder might be continued to- " wards the Creditors, until their juſt Debts ſhould " be paid."

THESE Particulars appearing reaſonable to the Lords, all Perſons concerned were called, and the ſame communicated to them, who appeared all well contented: And thereupon the Lords reſolved to preſent the ſame to His Majeſty, which They did accordingly at the Board; and His Majeſty with a full Approbation and Advice of the whole Council ratified the ſame. Whereupon that Order was made by the King in Council, which comprehends all the Particulars mentioned before; which was delivered to the Lord Willoughby, with His Majeſty's expreſs Command, " that He ſhould ſee it punctually and pre- " ciſely executed;" and the like Order was delivered by the Clerk of the Council to every other Perſon mentioned, who deſired the ſame: To which Order He did for the more Certainty refer himſelf, being in no Degree confident (having then no other Help than his Memory), that all was ſet down with that Exactneſs as it ought to be. And, He ſaid, as He had throughout the whole Affair taken very great Pains to reduce it to that Agreement, which at that Time ſeemed to be ſatisfactory to all the Perſons concerned, ſo He had not the leaſt Temptation of particular Benefit to himſelf; and He did ſtill believe it to be very juſt, reaſonable, and agreeable to his Majeſty's Juſtice and Goodneſs, all Circumſtances being conſidered. And though it may be, in Strictneſs of Law, and by the avoiding the Grant made to the Earl of Carliſle, his Majeſty might have poſſeſſed himſelf of the whole Iſland, without any tender Conſideration of the Planters or the Creditors; He ſaid, He was not aſhamed that He had never given his Majeſty that or the like Counſel, in that or any other Matter of the like Nature; and if He had, He was confident his Majeſty would have abhorred it, and not have thought the better of him for giving it.

THE other Part of that Article, That He had cauſed ſuch as complained of the arbitrary Government in the Plantations before the King and Council, to be long impriſoned for ſo doing, did refer, He ſuppoſed, to the Commitment of one Farmer; who, being ſent over a Priſoner by the Lord Willoughby in a Ship that came from thence, made his Appearance at Oxford, his Majeſty being then there in the Sickneſs-Time, which, He ſaid, was the firſt Moment that He had ever heard of the Man or the Matter. And at the ſame Time one of the Secretaries of State received a Letter from the Lord Willoughby, which was ſent by the ſame Ship, in which his Lordſhip had ſent a direct full Charge of Mutiny, Sedition and Treaſon, againſt the ſaid Farmer; and by his Letter informed the Secretary of all his Behaviour and Carriage, with all the Circumſtances thereof; and " that He had, by his " ſeditious Practices, prevailed ſo far upon a diſaffected " Party in that Iſland, that the Lord Willoughby found " himſelf obliged in the Inſtant to ſend him on Board " the Ship, without which He did apprehend a gene- " ral Revolt in the Iſland from his Majeſty's Obedi- " ence:" And He did therefore deſire, " that Far- " mer might not be ſuffered to return thither before " the Iſland ſhould be reduced to a better Temper." The Man was called in before the King and Council, and the Charge that the Lord Willoughby had ſent read to him, the greateſt Part whereof He could not deny; and in his Diſcourſe upon it He behaved himſelf ſo peremptorily and inſolently before the King, that his Majeſty thought it very neceſſary to commit him; nor did any one Counſellor then preſent appear to think otherwiſe.

AND He did confeſs, that the diſcharging him from his Impriſonment was ſome Time afterwards moved, and that He was always againſt his Diſcharge; being of Opinion that it would be impoſſible for the Lord Willoughby, or any other Governour in any of the Plantations, to preſerve his Majeſty's Right and to ſupport the Government, if He ſhould be ſo far diſcountenanced, that a Man, being ſent over by him as a Priſoner under ſo particular and heinous a Charge, ſhould be upon his Appearance here ſet at Liberty. But his Opinion was, " that He ſhould be ſent back a " Priſoner thither, that He might be tried by the " Law and Juſtice of the Iſland, and receive condign " Puniſhment for his Offence:" And, He ſaid, He could not deny but that He was ſtill of the ſame Opinion; and, if it were an Errour, it proceeded from the Weakneſs of his Underſtanding, which was not in his Power to reform.

HE ſaid, what He had here ſet down was all that occurred to his Memory with Reference to the Iſland of the Barbadoes, which being not particularly mentioned in the Article, but comprehended under the general Expreſſion of his Majeſty's foreign Plantations, and ſecretly and maliciouſly inſinuated in private Diſcourſes, He took himſelf to be obliged to to give ſome Anſwer to what, how generally ſoever, had been charged. And He hoped it would not be imputed as a Crime to him, if He had taken more Pains than other Men in that important Service of his Majeſty concerning his foreign Plantations, which He did not think had been enough taken to Heart: And if his Deſire and Readineſs to take any Pains, or give any Aſſiſtance to the Advancement of that Service, had induced many Perſons to apply themſelves to him on thoſe Occaſions, He hoped it ſhould not be charged upon him as Over-Activity, or Ambition to engroſs more Buſineſs into his Hands than He was entitled to; for which He had this Excuſe to make for himſelf, that He found the Pains He took to be acceptable to his Majeſty. And He was ſo far from having any particular Deſign of Advantage to himſelf, that He did profeſs and declare, that from all or any of His Majeſty's Plantations He never had the leaſt Reward, or leaſt Preſent made to him; except that the now Lord Willoughby once told him, "that his "Brother had ſent over ſome Pieces of the ſpeckled "Wood which grows in Surinam, with Direction, "that if He liked it He might have what He would "of it;" whereupon He had ſome Pieces of it, which He thought might have been applied to the making of Cabinets or the adorning of Wainſcot (but as they were very ſmall, ſo the Middle of every Piece was wind-ſhaken and rotten that they could not be applied to any conſiderable Uſe); and except ſome Blocks of Walnut-Tree which the Governour of Virginia ſent to him, and of which He made ſome Table-Boards and Frames for Chairs; the Workmanſhip whereof coſt much more than the Wood was worth. And theſe two Particulars contained all the Rewards and Preſents or Profit, that ever He received from all his Majeſty's Plantations, or any Body to his Uſe.

The tenth Article. THE TENTH Article was, That He did reject and fruſtrate a Propoſal and Undertaking approved by his Majeſty, for the Preſervation of Nevis and St. Chriſtophers, and reducing the French Plantations to his Majeſty's Obedience, after the Commiſſions were drawn for that Purpoſe; which was the Occaſion of ſuch great Loſſes and Damages in thoſe Parts.

His Anſwer. To which He anſwered, that He never did reject or fruſtrate any ſuch Propoſal or Undertaking, never taking upon him in the leaſt Degree to make a Judgment of Enterpriſes of that Nature; nor was ever any ſuch Propoſition made to him. But He did very well remember, that his Majeſty himſelf did once deliver to the Council a Paper, which He ſaid one of his Servants (Mr. Marſh) had preſented to him, containing ſome Propoſitions for Ships and Men to be ſent by his Majeſty for the Recovery of St. Chriſtophers, which had been newly taken by the French. Upon the reading which Paper and Propoſitions, the ſame were referred to the Conſideration of the General, one of the Secretaries of State, and to the Vice-Chamberlain, who were to confer with Mr. Marſh, and ſuch others as joined with him. And They were at the ſame Time appointed to conſider of another Propoſition delivered in Writing by the now Lord Willoughby, and ſome Merchants of London who were Planters in the Barbadoes, for the ſupplying and better ſecuring that Iſland, and the reſt of thoſe Carribee Iſlands; and for the reducing and recovering any of them which were or might be taken by the Enemy. Upon the latter of which Somewhat was afterwards done: And if the other concerning Nevis and St. Chriſtophers, was rejected, of which, He ſaid, He knew Nothing, He preſumed it was, becauſe it either appeared unpracticable, or not conſiſtent with his Majeſty's other Affairs.

The eleventh Article. THE ELEVENTH Article was, That He adviſed and effected the Sale of Dunkirk to the French King, being Part of his Majeſty's Dominions, together with the Ammunition, Artillery, and all Sorts of Stores there; and for no greater Value than the ſaid Ammunition, Artillery and Stores were worth

His Anſwer. THIS whole Tranſaction of the Sale of Dunkirk, with all the Circumſtances, is ſo fully related in this Diſcourſe, in the Place and at the Time when this Affair was tranſacted*, that any Repetition here is to no Purpoſe: And whoſoever turns back and reads it will clearly ſee, that He had no Hand in the Counſel; though He is far from condemning it, or believing that it was not neceſſary, as his Majeſty's Affairs at that Time ſtood. To which may be added, that the Treatment He received after his coming into France was an unqueſtionable Evidence, that the King did never take himſelf to be beholden to him for that or any other Service; as in Truth He never was.

The twelfth Article. THE TWELFTH Article was, That He did unduly cauſe his Majeſty's Letters Patents under the Great Seal of England to one Dr. Crowther to be altered, and the Enrollment thereof to be unduly razed.

His Anſwer. To which He ſaid, that when He heard of this Charge, He could not comprehend what the Meaning thereof was, being moſt aſſured that He had never cauſed any Alteration to be made in any of his Majeſty's Letters Patents under the Great Seal, or the Enrollment thereof to be razed. But upon Inquiry He was informed, that Dr. Crowther, who was Chaplain to his Royal Highneſs the Duke of York, and had attended upon his Perſon during the whole Time that his Highneſs was beyond the Seas, upon his Majeſty's Return into England, had obtained from the King his Royal Preſentation to the Parſonage of Treddington in the County of Worceſter; which Preſentation, according to Courſe, paſſed under the Great Seal of England. That when He brought his Action againſt the Intruder, who refuſed to give him Poſſeſſion, and the Record was carried down to the Aſſizes in the County; when the Doctor's Council were to open his Title, and thereupon to produce the King's Preſentation, They found upon Peruſal thereof, that either by Miſinformation or Negligence of the Clerk, inſtead of the County of Worceſter, where the Rectory was, the County of Warwick was inſerted: Upon which Miſtake the Doctor was neceſſitated to be nonſuited. And thereupon He forthwith made a Journey to London to adviſe with his Council, and the moſt experienced Clerks, how to recover the Misfortune that had befallen him, and that his Majeſty's Right might not be deſtroyed by ſuch an Overſight in the Clerk. And it ſeems He was by them adviſed, as the uſual Way in "Caſes of that Nature, to petition the King, that in "his Majeſty's Preſence the Preſentation might be "mended, and Worceſter inſerted inſtead of Warwick, "and that thereupon the Great Seal might be again "affixed to it;" all which was done accordingly, as in ſuch Caſes is uſual.

The thirteenth Article. THE THIRTEENTH Article was, That He had in an arbitrary Way examined and drawn into Queſtion divers of his Majeſty's Subjects concerning their Lands, Tenements, Goods and Chattels, and Properties; determined thereof at the Council-Table, and ſtopped Proceedings at Law, and threatened ſome that pleaded the Statute of 17 Car.

His Anſwer. To this He ſaid, He muſt here again lament his own Misfortunes, that He was expoſed to publick Reproach under a general odious Charge, without inſerting any one Particular to which He might make his Defence. He had therefore no more to ſay, but that He was very innocent as to any Crime laid to his Charge in that Article: And that He had been ſo far from examining and drawing into Queſtion any of his Majeſty's Subjects, concerning their Lands, Tenements, Goods and Chattels, and Properties, and determining the ſame at the Council-Table, and ſtopping Proceedings at Law; that He did not know or believe, that any one Caſe of that Nature had been ever determined there, at leaſt when He had been preſent. That He had always diſcountenanced ſuch Addreſſes, and procured all Petitions of that Kind to be rejected as often as they had been tendered: And, He ſaid, He took himſelf obliged to ſay, for the Vindication of his Majeſty's Honour and Juſtice, that there had not been ſo many Years paſſed, ſince the Erection of the Council-Table, with ſo little Diſturbance or Diſquiet to the Subjects concerning their Lands, Tenements, Goods and Properties, as have been ſince his Majeſty's happy Return; nor hath the ordinary Courſe of Proceedings at Law been leſs obſtructed.

THE

The fourteenth Article.

THE FOURTEENTH Article was, That He had caused Quo Warrantos to be issued out against most of the Corporations in England, to the Intent that He might receive great Sums of Money from them for renewing their Charters; which when They complied with that, He caused the said Quo Warrantos to be discharged, and Prosecution thereon to cease

His Answer.

To this He answered, That He never caused any Quo Warranto to issue out against any one Corporation in England, but by his Majesty's express Command, or by Order of the Board; which was always upon some Miscarriage or Misbehaviour in the Corporation: And that He did not remember that He had ever moved the King against any particular Corporation but that of Woodstock; and which his Duty to his Majesty had obliged him to do, being intrusted by his Majesty with the Command of his House and Park there, and being his Majesty's Steward of his Majesty's Honour and Manor of Woodstock, upon which that Borough had always depended.

HE said, his Majesty having conferred that Charge upon him, He was no sooner possessed of it by the Death of the late Earl of Lindsey, who enjoyed that Place before, than He received a Petition from several Inhabitants and Burgesses of the Borough of Woodstock, who complained, "that the Mayor and Justices had "lately procured their Charter to be renewed, without "the Privity or Consent of the Borough; and that "under Pretence of renewing it, They had procured "many new Clauses to be inserted, and thereby re-"duced much of the Government, which before de-"pended on the whole Corporation, into their own "Hands; and had thereby likewise procured a Piece "of Ground, the Benefit whereof did formerly belong "to all the Burgesses, and was usually applied to the "Relief of such of them who were decayed in their "Estates, to be now granted to the Mayor and a se-"lect Number of the Justices, and the Profits thereof "to be at their Disposal, to the great Prejudice of the "Borough and the Inhabitants thereof." He referred this Petition to Mr. Justice Morton, who lived within four or five Miles thereof, and desired him to examine the Truth of those Allegations, and to certify him whether the Complaints were just and reasonable. Whereupon He took the Pains to go to the Town, and to confer with the Mayor and Justices, and heard the Allegations of the Petitioners; and upon the whole Matter certified, "that He found several im-"portant Alterations in the new Charter from what "had been in the old, and some new Concessions."

AND at the same Time Sir William Fleetwood, who was Ranger of the Parks, certified to him, "that since the "renewing their Charter, the Mayor and Justices were "not so good Neighbours to his Majesty's Game as "They had formerly been, and had withdrawn many "of those Services which They had used to perform: "And that when any Trespasses were committed by "those of the Borough upon his Majesty's Woods or "Game, which happened very frequently, and Com-"plaint was thereof made to the Mayor and Justices, "who had the sole Jurisdiction within the Borough; "there was so slight and perfunctory Examination "thereof, that the Prosecutors were wearied out, and "no Justice could be obtained."

THAT it was his Duty to inform the King of those Proceedings, who was much offended thereat, and thereupon gave his Direction to his Attorney General to bring a Quo Warranto, and to repeal the Charter which had been so unduly procured, and in which his Majesty had been so grosly deceived and abused: And He did believe that there was the less Vigour used in the Prosecution of that Quo Warranto, because the Mayor and Justices for some Time had pretended that They would surrender the said Charter, and receive a new one in such a Manner as his Majesty thought fit, though They afterwards changed their Mind. And this was the only Charter, He said, which He gave Direction for the Prosecution of.

NOR did He ever give Order, upon the Receipt of any Money to discharge any Quo Warranto, or cause the Prosecution thereupon to cease: Nor did He ever receive the least Sum of Money for the granting or renewing any Charter, other than the usual Fees received for the same by the Clerk of the Hanaper, and accounted to the Seal; which Fee, as He did remember, did amount to thirteen Shillings and four Pence, or thereabouts.

The fifteenth Article.

THE FIFTEENTH Article was, That He procured the Bills of Settlement for Ireland, and received great Sums of Money for the same, in a most corrupt and unlawful Manner.

His Answer.

To this Article needs no other Answer than what is contained in two † several Places of this Discourse, in which so full a Relation is made of the whole Settlement of Ireland, with all the Circumstances that accompanied it, that it would be to no Purpose to repeat it in this Place. And therein it appears what Money the Chancellor received from Ireland, and how He came to receive any, and by what Injustice He came to receive no more; all which was not only well known to the King himself, but to very many of those, who promoted the Accusation directly contrary to what They knew to be true.

The sixteenth Article.

THE SIXTEENTH Article was, That He had deluded and betrayed his Majesty and the Nation in all foreign Treaties and Negotiations relating to the late War.

His Answer.

To which He said, that He did heartily wish that those particular Treaties, and the Particulars in those Treaties, had been mentioned, wherein it was conceived that He had deluded and betrayed his Majesty, that He might at large have set down whatsoever He had known or done in those Treaties; and then it would easily have been made appear, how far He had been from betraying or deluding him. That it was never any Ambition of his own that brought him to have a Part in any Treaty: He said, God knew, that He heartily wished to have meddled in Nothing but the Administration of that great Office the King had thought fit to have trusted him with. But his Majesty had then so good an Opinion of him, that He required and commanded his Service in many of those Treaties: And therefore it would be necessary for him, according to the Method He had hitherto used, to mention every particular Treaty that had been entered into since the Time of his Majesty's Return into England, and the Part that He had in it; being as willing to be called to the strictest Account for any other Treaty He had been engaged in when He had been abroad, or for any Counsel He had ever given in his Life, publick or private; wherein, He doubted not, He should be found to have behaved himself (according to the weak Abilities God had given him) with Fidelity to his Master, and with all imaginable Affection to his Country, how unhappily soever He had been represented.

THE first Treaty, He said, was with the Crown of Portugal; in which He was none of the Commissioners who treated, and was only present when any Report was made by the Commissioners to the King, or to the Council-Board, where all the Articles were debated; and He did not remember that there had been any Difference of Opinion upon any of them: And that Treaty had been generally held the best that hath been made with any Crown, the Merchants having thereby greater Advantages in Trade than They have in any other Place, besides many other great Benefits, with a great Enlargement of his Majesty's Empire.

The second Treaty was with the States of the United Provinces; in which likewise He was none of the Commissioners who treated: But all that was by them transacted was still brought to the Council-Board, and debated there in his Majesty's Presence; in which the Rule by which his Majesty guided himself was, that He would not remit any of those Concessions which which had been formerly made by them in their laſt Treaty with Cromwell; and their Unwillingneſs to conſent to that was the Reaſon that their Ambaſſadours proceeded ſo ſlowly. And his Majeſty had the leſs Reaſon to be ſolicitous for Expedition, becauſe the King of France had given his Royal Word, and propoſed it himſelf, "that the two Crowns might "proceed in the ſeveral Treaties with the Dutch toge-"ther, that ſo They might be brought to thoſe good "Conditions, that They might live like good Neigh-"bours with Both the Crowns, which," He obſerved, "They were not naturally inclined to do;" and promiſed poſitively, "that for his Part He would not "conclude any Thing with the Dutch, before He had "entirely communicated the ſame to his Majeſty." Notwithſtanding which Engagement, France entered into and finiſhed their Treaty; and in it made that ſecret Article, which They declared afterwards to be the Ground of their Obligation to aſſiſt the Dutch in the enſuing War. However, his Majeſty proceeded not till the Holland Ambaſſadours conſented to all that had been before granted to Cromwell: Which being done, the Peace was made and ratified on Both Sides; and without Doubt was with more Advantage and Honour to the Engliſh, than ever had been provided by any former Treaty between the Crown of England and thoſe States.

FROM the two Crowns of Sweden and Denmark Ambaſſadours Extraordinary arrived at London ſhortly after the King's Return, and the ſeveral Treaties were made with Both thoſe Crowns before the Departure of the Ambaſſadours: In neither of which Treaties the Chancellor was a Commiſſioner, nor knew any Thing that paſſed in either, but as it was repreſented at the Council-Board, and debated in his Majeſty's Preſence; nor did He ever hear that either of them was reckoned a diſadvantageous Treaty, Both of them containing as much Benefit to the Engliſh as any Treaties which had been made before with thoſe Crowns. He ſaid, it was very true, that there were ſome unuſual Expreſſions of Kindneſs and Friendſhip in the Treaty with Denmark; which, in Reſpect of that King's being at that Time in a very low Condition, under the diſadvantageous Conditions of the Treaty at Copenhagen newly ſubmitted to, and under almoſt as ill a Treaty extorted from that Crown by the Dutch, and yet being in terrible Apprehenſion of ſome new Oppreſſion from the one and from the other, the Ambaſſadour did very earneſtly ſolicit to have inſerted; and which were upon great Deliberation allowed and inſerted by his Majeſty's own particular Direction, in Conſideration of the near Alliance in Blood between his Majeſty and that King, and the Civilities and Obligations his Majeſty had received from Denmark, during his being in Holland after the Murder of his Father, and during his being in Scotland, when the King of Denmark ſent him Horſes, Arms and Ammunition. Of which his Majeſty had ſo great a Senſe, that He was often heard to ſay, "that if it had pleaſed God to have brought him "Home before that diſadvantageous Peace at Copen-"hagen had been made" (which had been done by the Countenance of the Engliſh Ships, and the Threats of thoſe who were then Ambaſſadours from the governing Power in England), "He would have done the beſt He "could to have defended and protected him:" And therefore He did very readily yield to that Article drawn by the Ambaſſadour, his Majeſty declaring at the ſame Time "that He was very willing that thoſe "Princes who were Neighbours to Denmark, and "from whom that Kingdom apprehended new Op-"preſſions, ſhould know his Majeſty's Reſolutions to "ſupport that King, and to defend him from new "Injuries;" to which the Policy of his Government, as well as his Friendſhip, inclined and obliged him; though it is very true, the King of Denmark did ſhortly after make very ill Returns to his Majeſty for that his ſo ſignal Affection.

THESE were all the Treaties made by the King before the War with the Dutch (for there was very little Progreſs made either with France or Spain for the Reaſons mentioned before), except only a ſhort Treaty with the Elector of Brandenburgh; which Treaty was, for the moſt Part, particular with Reference only to the Prince of Orange, his Majeſty's Nephew, and for the better ordering his Affairs. In which Treaty his Majeſty likewiſe employed five or ſix of his Council: And the few Articles between his Majeſty and that Elector in Point of State were likewiſe tranſacted by them, and debated and conſidered at the Council-Board, and in which all Things were inſerted for his Majeſty's Benefit and Service; and if They had not been afterwards violated by the Elector, the King would have reaped much Fruit and Advantage even from that Treaty.

AFTER the War was entered into with Holland, his Majeſty ſent Mr. Coventry to Sweden, and Sir Gilbert Talbot to Denmark, to diſpoſe thoſe two Crowns to a Confidence in each other, and then to diſpoſe them Both to adhere to his Majeſty, or at leaſt not to aſſiſt or favour the Dutch. The Treaty with Sweden ſucceeded to his Majeſty's Wiſh, and was concluded in a League defenſive, very much to the King's Satisfaction, and with the full Approbation of the whole Board; that Crown having manifeſted ſo much Affection, and ſuch an Inclination to an entire Conjunction with him, that upon very reaſonable Conditions They would have been induced to have entered into a League offenſive, and even into the preſent War againſt the Dutch: In order to which, They ſent their Ambaſſadours to the King at the ſame Time when Mr. Coventry returned, and They became the Mediators for the Peace; having firſt declared to his Majeſty, "that if the Treaty ſhould prove ineffectual, "the Crown of Sweden would immediately join with "his Majeſty againſt the Dutch." What became of the other Treaty with Denmark is publickly known, his Majeſty having declared to all the World how perfidiouſly He was treated by the Dane.

THERE remains only one other Treaty to be mentioned, which is the laſt with the Dutch, upon which the Peace was made: And therefore it will be neceſſary to ſet down the Inducements to that Treaty, the whole Progreſs and Concluſion of it; by all which it will eaſily appear that his Majeſty was neither betrayed nor deluded in it, or, if He were, that it was not done by him.

AFTER ſo many Encounters and various Succeſſes in the War, which had been carried with a much greater Expence than his Majeſty at his firſt Entrance into it was perſuaded it would coſt him; when He ſaw the Strength and Power of the Dutch ſo much increaſed by the Conjunction of France and Denmark, who ſupplied them with Money, Ships, and, what They more wanted, with Men as many as They deſired; and that all the Propoſitions He could make to Spain could not induce them to enter into ſuch an Alliance with him, as might embark them againſt France, notwithſtanding it was evident to all but themſelves, that the French reſolved to break the Peace with them, having at that Time publiſhed thoſe Declarations which They afterwards made the Ground of the War: His Majeſty clearly diſcerned, that the Dutch grew leſs weary of the War than They had before ſeemed to have been; and that They would be able with that Aſſiſtance and Conjunction, to continue the War with leſs Inconvenience than his Majeſty was like to do.

HE had found it neceſſary for ſtreightening the Trade of the Enemy (the depriving them of which could only induce them to deſire a Peace, and which He could not do by the Strength of his own Ships, which were ſtill kept together to encounter their Fleet), to grant Commiſſions upon Letters of Marque to as many private Men of War as deſired the ſame, and with ſuch ſtrict Orders and Limitations as are neceſſary in thoſe Caſes; and He found indeed the Advantage very great, in the Damage thoſe Men of War did to the Enemy, which was conſiderable, and gave them great Trouble. On the other Side, the common Seamen choſe much rather to go on Board thoſe Men of War, where their Profit out of their Shares of the Booty was greater, and their Hazard much leſs, than in the King's Ships, where They got only Blows without Booty, though their Pay and Proviſions were much greater than They had been in any former Time: So that when the Royal Fleet was to be ſet out, there was greater Difficulty in procuring Seamen and Mariners to man it.

AND then, whereas the Advancement of Trade was made the great End of the War, it was now found neceſſary to ſuppreſs all Trade, that there might be Mariners enough to furniſh the Ships for the carrying on the War. And this Inconvenience produced another Miſchief: For by the great Diminution and even Suppreſſion of Trade, there was likewiſe ſo great a Fall in the Cuſtoms, Exciſe, and all other Branches of the King's Revenue, that it was evident enough that his Majeſty would have little to carry on the War, but what ſhould ariſe by Impoſition in Parliament upon the People; who already complained loudly of the Decay of their Rents, of the ſmall and low Prices which their Commodities yielded by the Ceſſation of Trade, and eſpecially by the carrying all the Money in Specie from the ſeveral Counties to London, for the carrying on the War. And the Parliament itſelf appeared ſo weary of it, that inſtead of granting a new Supply proportionable to the Charge, They fell upon Expedients to raiſe Money by the Sale of Part of the King's Revenue, which was already too ſmall to ſupport the ordinary and neceſſary Expence of the Crown.

BUT above all, his Majeſty was moſt diſcouraged by the extreme Licenſe of the Seamen in general; but eſpecially of thoſe who were called Privateers, ſet out in the particular Ships of War upon Adventure, who made no Diſtinction between Friends and Foes; but, as if the Sea had been their own Quarters, They ſeized upon all Ships which paſſed within their View, and either pillaged them entirely and ſo diſmiſſed them (which They uſually did to thoſe which They foreſaw would be delivered by the Courſe of Juſtice), or elſe brought them into the Harbours, after They had taken from them what They beſt liked. And then the formal Proceedings in the Court of Admiralty were ſo dilatory, and involved in ſo many Appeals, that the Proſecution of Juſtice for Injuries received grew as grievous as the Injury itſelf; which drew an univerſal Clamour from all Nations, "that without "being Parties to the War They were all treated as "Enemies."

FRANCE had made the Damage They had this Way received, and the Interruption of their Trade, a great Part of their Quarrel, and one Ground of their Conjunction with the Dutch. From Spain, which really wiſhed better to us than to our Enemies, the Complaints were as great; "that their whole Trade was "deſtroyed; their Ships of Flanders, which ſupplied "Spain with what They wanted for themſelves, and "with what was neceſſary for their Trade and Inter-"courſe with the Indies, were all taken as Dutch, be-"cauſe it was very hard to diſtinguiſh them by their "Language:" Which was likewiſe the Caſe of all the Hanſe-Towns, which made grievous Complaints, and had without Doubt received great Damage. Thoſe Princes of Italy whoſe Dominions reached to the Sea, as the two Republicks of Venice and Genoa, and the Duke of Florence, expoſtulated very grievouſly for their Ships taken by thoſe Free-booters of Scotland and of Ireland, Both which Nations enriched themſelves very much upon ſuch Depredations. And how much ſoever the Royal Navy was weakened every Day, the Number of thoſe Men of War daily increaſed; ſo that thoſe Kind of Ships of England, Scotland and Ireland, covered the whole Ocean: And of thoſe Ships which were taken and carried into Scotland or Ireland (in England there were many Redeliveries), it was obſerved, that there were Veſtigia nulla retrorſum. Even Sweden itſelf, with whom a new ſtricter Alliance was entered into at that Time, with as ſevere Reſtrictions to that Licenſe of the Men of War as could be contrived for the Liberty and Security of the Trade of that Crown, complained exceedingly of the Violation of all thoſe Conceſſions and Proviſions, and that their Ships, were every Day taken and plundered. And this univerſal Complaint began to awaken all Princes to a Jealouſy, that the Engliſh endeavoured to reſtrain all Trade, till They could make themſelves the entire Maſters of it, and by their naval Power put ſome Impoſition upon the whole Traffick of Europe.

IT is very true, at the firſt Entrance into the War there had been many unſkilful Expreſſions even in the Parliament itſelf, as well as in the frequent Diſcourſes of Parliament-Men, "that by this War, and "by ſuppreſſing the Power of the Dutch at Sea" (of which They made not the leaſt Doubt), "the King "would be able to give the Law to all the Trade of "the World, and that no Ships ſhould paſs the Sea "without paying ſome Tribute to England:" Which Liberty and Raſhneſs of Diſcourſe made great Impreſſion upon thoſe who wiſhed Miſchief enough to the Dutch, till They ſaw what Danger might enſue to themſelves by the Succeſs of the Engliſh; and thereupon wiſhed that They might break themſelves upon each other, without Advantage to either Party. And this general Diſtemper and Complaint made the deeper Impreſſion upon the King, by his diſcerning an extreme Difficulty, if not an Impoſſibility, to give any juſt Remedy to it; and conſequently, that He ſhould be ſhortly looked upon as a common Enemy.

HE had taken very great Pains, upon deliberate Conſultations, to ſuppreſs that odious Irregularity and deſtructive Licenſe that was practiſed amongſt the Seamen, and had in many particular Caſes himſelf examined the Exceſs, and cauſed exemplary Juſtice to be done upon the Offenders, and Reſtitution to be made of what had been taken, at leaſt of what was left; for no Juſtice could preſerve the injured Perſons from being Loſers. He had granted ſuch Rules and Privileges and Protection to the Ports in Flanders, and to others of his Allies, as themſelves deſired, and looked upon as full Security; but then He quickly found, that from thoſe very Ports and in thoſe very Ships which enjoyed thoſe Privileges, the Trade of the Dutch was driven on: So that it was evident that by that Liberty, which other Nations thought themſelves in Juſtice entitled to, if not reſtrained, the Hollanders themſelves would be eaſily able to carry on their whole Trade in the Ships of Flanders, Hamburgh, and the other free Towns, or in their own Ships owned by the other; and that the Reſtraint would likewiſe be impoſſible, without a total Suppreſſion of thoſe Men of War, and a Revocation of all Commiſſions granted to them or any of them, which would likewiſe be attended with the Freedom and Security of Trade to all his Majeſty's Enemies.

IN the laſt Encounter at Sea, the Prince Royal, and three other of his Majeſty's Navy, had been loſt; and another, the London, had been burned in the River by the Negligence of the Seamen; for there was never any Diſcovery made, that there was any Purpoſe or Malice in it. The French had obliged themſelves, that the Duke of Beaufort, Admiral of France, ſhould, with the whole Fleet under his Command, amounting to eighteen good Ships, join with the Dutch; and the King of Denmark was likewiſe engaged to ſend all his great Ships, which were Ten or a Dozen, in Order to the like Conjunction: So that it was evident to his Majeſty, that the Enemy would be much ſuperiour to him in Strength and Power, though He had been able to have manned and ſet out all his Royal Navy; which He well foreſaw He ſhould not be able to do, both for Want of Money and Want of Seamen, who were already in great Diſorder and Mutiny for Want of their Pay, of which there was indeed a great Arrear due to them. And, which was worſe, there was grown ſuch an Animoſity amongſt the principal Officers of the Fleet between themſelves, that the whole Diſcipline was corrupted; ſo that it was hard to reſolve into what Hands to put the Government thereof, if it could have been made ready.

Upon which, and the whole State of Affairs, and upon Deliberation and frequent Conſultation with the principal Officers of the Sea, and ſuch others whoſe Experience in ſuch Matters rendered them moſt capable to give Advice, the King found it moſt counſellable to reſolve to make a defenſive War the next Year, and to lay up all his great Ships, and to have ſome Squadrons of the lighter Veſſels to continue in ſeveral Quarters aſſigned to them, which ſhould be ready to take all Advantages which ſhould be offered; and that there ſhould be likewiſe ready in the River another good Squadron of Ships againſt the End of the Summer, which being ready to join with thoſe which lay out, when the Enemy was weary and their Ships foul, would be able to take many notable Advantages upon them; of which They who adviſed it were ſo confident, that They did believe this defenſive Way thus ordered and proſecuted would prove a greater Damage to the Enemy in their Trade, and all other Reſpects, than They had ever undergone. And in all this Counſel and Reſolution the Chancellor had no other Part than being preſent; and not underſtanding the Subject Matter of Debate could not be able to anſwer any of the Reaſons that had been alledged.

These Conſiderations, upon a full Survey of his ill Condition at Home and Abroad, induced the King to wiſh that there was a good End of the War; of which Inclination his Majeſty vouchſafed to inform the Chancellor, well knowing that He would be very glad to contribute all He could to it, as a Thing He deſired moſt in this World, and which He thought would prove the greateſt Benefit to the King and Kingdom; and his Majeſty likewiſe told him, "that He found "all thoſe, who had been moſt forward and impatient "to enter into this War, were now weary of it, and "would be glad of a Peace:" So that there remained now Nothing to do, but for his Majeſty to adviſe with thoſe whom He thought fit (for there ſeemed many Reaſons to conceal both the Inclination to Peace, and the Reſolution not to ſet out a Summer Fleet, from being publickly known), what Method to obſerve, and what Expedients to make Uſe of, for the better procuring this wiſhed for Peace, without appearing to be too ſolicitous or importunate for it, or ſo weary of the War as in Truth He was. And to this Conſultation the King was pleaſed to call together with his Royal Brother, Prince Rupert, the Chancellor, the General, the Lord Treaſurer, and thoſe other honourable Perſons with whom He uſed to adviſe in his moſt ſecret and moſt important Affairs.

That which occurred firſt to conſider was, whether there were any Hope to divide the French from the Dutch; upon which Suppoſition the Proſpect was not unpleaſant, the War with one of them being hopefully enough to be purſued; the Conjunction was only formidable. And to this Purpoſe ſeveral Attempts had been made both in France and in Holland; Both Sides being equally reſolved not to ſeparate from each other, till a joint Peace ſhould be made with England, though They Both owned a Jealouſy of each other: Thoſe of Holland having a terrible Apprehenſion and Foreſight of the King of France's Deſigns upon Flanders, which would make his Greatneſs too near a Neighbour to their Territories; beſides that the Logick of his Demands upon the Devolution and Nullity of the Treaty upon the Marriage was equally applicable to their whole Intereſt, as it was to their Demands from the King of Spain. And France, upon all the Attacks They had made both in France with the Dutch Ambaſſadour there, and in Holland by their own Ambaſſadour, found clearly, that They were to expect no Aſſiſtance from the Dutch in their Deſigns, and that at leaſt They wiſhed them ill Succeſs, and would probably contribute to it upon the firſt Occaſion: And this made them willing to put an End to their ſo ſtrict Alliance, which was already very chargeable to them, and not like to be attended with any notable Advantage, except in weakening an Ally from whom They might probably receive much more Advantage.

However, neither the one nor the other would be induced to enter into any Treaty apart, though They Both ſeemed willing and deſirous of a Peace; in Order to which, the Dutch, through the Swedes Ambaſſadours Hands, had writ to the King, "to offer a Treaty in "any ſuch neutral Place as his Majeſty ſhould make "Choice of;" profeſſing, "that They ſhould make "no Scruple of ſending their Ambaſſadours directly "to his Majeſty, but that their Conjunction with the "other two Crowns, who required a neutral Place, "would not admit that Condeſcenſion." And at the ſame Time They intimated to the Swedes Ambaſſadours, "that the King of France would not ſend his "Ambaſſadours into Flanders, or any Place of the "King of Spain's Dominions;" and therefore wiſhed, "that his Majeſty would make Choice of Duſſeldorp, "Cologne, Frankfort, or Hamburgh, or any other Place "that his Majeſty ſhould think more convenient than "the other, under that Exception:" All which Places, and in Truth any other out of the King of Spain's Dominions, were at ſuch a Diſtance (the Winter being now near over), that there could be no reaſonable Expectation of the Fruit of the Treaty in Time to prevent more Acts of Hoſtility.

How the Treaty came afterwards to be introduced by Overtures from France, and what Preliminaries were firſt propoſed from thence by the Earl of St. Albans, and how agreed to by his Majeſty; how the Place of the Treaty came to be adjuſted, the Ambaſſadours choſen, and the whole Progreſs thereupon, and the Publication of the Articles of the Peace; is ſo particularly ſet forth in this Narrative before †, that it needs not to be repeated here. And one of the Ambaſſadours repairing (as is there ſaid) to the King, and giving him an Account of all that had paſſed before any Thing was concluded, and every Particular having been debated at the Council-Board and conſented to; He ſaid, He could not underſtand how his Majeſty could be deluded or betrayed in that Treaty, which paſſed with ſuch a full Examination and Diſquiſition, and in all which Debates his Majeſty himſelf had taken the Pains to diſcourſe more, and to enlarge in the Anſwer to all Objections which were foreſeen, than He had been ever known to have done upon any other Article.

It is very true, that the Chancellor had been commanded by the King to write moſt of the Letters which had been ſent to the Earl of St. Albans, from the Time of his going over concerning the Treaty, his Lordſhip having likewiſe directed moſt of his Letters to him; and moſt of the Diſpatches to the Ambaſſadours were likewiſe prepared by him, They being by their Inſtructions (without his Deſire or Privity) to tranſmit all Accounts to one of the Secretaries or to himſelf. But, He ſaid, it was as true, that He never received a Letter from either of them, but it was read entirely, in his Majeſty's Preſence, to thoſe Lords of the Council who were aſſigned for that Service, where Directions were given what Anſwer ſhould be returned; and He never did return any Anſwer to either of them, without having firſt read it to the Council, or having firſt ſent it to one of the Secretaries to be read to his Majeſty. And He did with a very good Conſcience proteſt to all the World, that He never did the leaſt Thing, or give the leaſt Advice, relating to the War or relating to the Peace, which He would not have done if He had been to expire the next Minute, and to have given an Account thereof to God Almighty.

AND as his Majeſty prudently, piouſly and paſſionately deſired to put an End to that War, ſo no Man appeared more delighted with the Peace when it was concluded, than his Majeſty himſelf did; though (He ſaid) as far He could make any Judgment of publick Affairs, the Publication of that Peace was attended with the moſt univerſal Joy and Acclamation of the whole Nation, that can be imagined. Nor is it eaſy to forget the general Conſternation that the City and People of all Conditions were in, when the Dutch came into the River as high as Chatham; and when the Diſtemper in the Court itſelf was ſo great, that many Perſons of Quality and Title, in the Galleries and Privy Lodgings, very indecently every Day vented their Paſſions in bitter Execrations againſt thoſe who had firſt counſelled and brought on the War, wiſhing that an End were put to it by any Peace; ſome of which Perſons, within very few Days after, as bitterly inveighed againſt the Peace itſelf, and againſt the Promoters of it. But, He ſaid, He was yet ſo far from repenting or being aſhamed of the Part He had in it, that He looked upon it as a great Honour, that the laſt Service He performed for his Majeſty was the ſealing the Proclamations, and other Inſtructions for the Concluſion and Perfection of that Peace, the Great Seal of England being that very Day ſent for and taken from him.

The ſeventeenth Article.

THE SEVENTEENTH and laſt Article was, That He was a principal Author of that fatal Counſel of dividing the Fleet about June 1666.

His Anſwer.

FOR Anſwer to this, He ſet down at large an Account of all the Agitation that was in Council upon that Affair, and that the dividing and Separation of the Fleet at that Time was by the Election and Advice of the two Generals, and not by the Order or Direction of the Council: All which hath been at large in that Part of this Diſcourſe which relates the Tranſactions of that Time †, ſet down, and therefore needs not to be again inſerted.

HE took Notice of the Prejudice that might befall him in the Opinion of good Men, by his abſenting himſelf, and thereby declining the full Examination and Trial which the publick Juſtice would have allowed him; which obliged him to ſet down all the Particulars which paſſed from the taking the Seal from him, the Meſſages He had received by the Biſhop of Hereford, and finally the Advice and Command the Biſhop of Winchester brought him from the Duke of York with the Approbation of the King. Upon all which, and the great Diſtemper that appeared in the two Houſes at that Time, and which was pacified upon his withdrawing, He did hope, that all diſpaſſionate Men would believe that He had not deſerted and betrayed his own Innocence; but on the Contrary, that He had complied with that Obligation and Duty which He had always paid to his Majeſty and to his Service, in chooſing at that Time to ſacrifice his own Honour to the leaſt Intimation of his Majeſty's Pleaſure, and when the leaſt Inconvenience might have befallen it by his Obſtinacy, though in his own Defence: And concluded, that though his Enemies, who had by all the evil Arts imaginable contrived his Deſtruction, had yet the Power and the Credit to infuſe into his Majeſty's Ears Stories of Words ſpoken, and Things done by him, of all which He was as innocent as He was at the Time of his Birth, and other Jealouſies of a Nature ſo odious, that themſelves had not the Confidence publickly to own; yet, He ſaid, notwithſtanding all thoſe Diſadvantages for the preſent, He did not deſpair, but that his Majeſty, in his Goodneſs and Juſtice, might in due Time diſcover the foul Artifices which had been uſed to gain Credit with him, and would reflect graciouſly upon ſome poor Services (how over-rewarded ſoever) heretofore performed by him, the Memory whereof would prevail with him to think, that the baniſhing him out of his Country, and forcing him to ſeek his Bread in foreign Parts at this Age, is a very ſevere Judgment. However, He was confident that Poſterity will clearly diſcern his Innocence and Integrity in all thoſe Particulars, which have been as untruly as maliciouſly laid to his Charge by Men who did Nothing before, or have done any Thing ſince, that will make them be thought to be wiſe or honeſt Men; and will believe his Misfortunes to have been much greater than his Faults.

The Chancellor enjoys great Tranquillity of Mind in his Baniſhment.

As ſoon as He had digeſted and tranſmitted this his Anſwer and Vindication to his Children, which He did in a ſhort Time after his Arrival at Montpelier, He appeared to all Men who converſed with him to be entirely poſſeſſed of ſo much Tranquillity of Mind, and ſo unconcerned in all that had been done to him or ſaid of him, that Men believed the Temper to be affected with much Art; and that it could not be natural in a Man, who was known to have ſo great an Affection for his own Country, the Air and Climate thereof; and to take ſo much Delight and Pleaſure in his Relations, from whom He was now baniſhed, and at ſuch a Diſtance, that He could not wiſh that They ſhould undergo the Inconveniences in many Reſpects which were like to attend their making him many Viſits. But when there was viſibly always in him ſuch a Vivacity and Chearfulneſs as could not be counterfeited, that was not interrupted nor clouded upon ſuch ill News as came every Week out of England, of the Improvement of the Power and Inſolence of his Enemies; all Men concluded, that He had Somewhat about him above a good Conſtitution, and proſecuted him with all the Offices of Civility and Reſpect They could manifeſt towards a Stranger.

Two Apprehenſions give him ſome Uneaſineſs.

1. The Inſufficiency of his Fortune.

THERE were two Inconveniences which He foreſaw might happen, and could not but diſcompoſe the Serenity of his Mind. The firſt, and that which gave him leaſt Apprehenſion, though He could not avoid the thinking of it, nor the Trouble of thoſe Thoughts which could not be ſeparated from it, was, how He ſhould be able to draw as much Money out of England as would ſupport his Expence; which, though huſbanded with as much Frugality as could be uſed with any Decency, He foreſaw would amount to a greater Proportion than He had propoſed to himſelf His Indiſpoſition and Infirmity, which either kept him under the actual and ſharp Viſitation of the Gout, or, when the Vigour of that was abated, in much Weakneſs of his Limbs when the Pain was gone, were ſo great, that He could not be without the Attendance of four Servants about his own Perſon; having in thoſe Seaſons when He enjoyed moſt Health and underwent leaſt Pain, his Knees, Legs and Feet ſo weak, that He could not walk, eſpecially up or down Stairs, without the Help of two Men; and when He was ſeized upon by the Gout, They were not able to perform the Office of watching: So that to the Engliſh Servants which He had brought with him, which with a Cook, and a Maid to waſh his Linen, amounted to ſix or ſeven, He was compelled to take four or five French Servants for the Market and other Offices of the Houſe; and his Lodging coſt him above two hundred Piſtoles. But all the Apprehenſions of this Kind were upon ſhort Reflections compoſed, in the Aſſurance He had of the Affection and Piety of his Children, who He believed out of his and their own Eſtate would raiſe enough for his unavoidable Diſburſements.

This ſoon removed by his Confidence in the Piety of his Children.

2. The Fear of being again perſecuted abroad.

THE other Apprehenſion ſtuck cloſer to him, and made him even tremble in the very Reflection. He could not forget the Treatment He had between Calais and Roan, and the ſtrange violent Importunity that was uſed to him to get out of the Kingdom, when He had not Strength to get out of his Bed. And though He was now at Eaſe from ſuch inhuman Preſſures; yet his Enemies, who had even extorted that Importunity from a People not inclined to ſuch Incivilities, had ſtill the ſame Power, and the ſame Malice, and a froppiſh Kind of Inſolence, that delighted to deprive him of any Thing that pleaſed him, and manifeſtly pleaſed itſelf in vexing him. And if They

They ſhould again prevail with the ſame Miniſters to remove him from his Quiet, and oblige him to new Journies, the ſame Spirit would chace him from Place to Place; there being none in View like to be ſuperiour to their Influence, when France had been ſubdued by it. So that beſides the Impoſſibility of preſerving the Peace and Repoſe of his Mind in ſo grievous a Fatigue, and continual Torture of his Body, He ſaw no Hope of Reſt but in his Grave. And againſt this Kind of Tyranny He could by no reaſonable Diſcourſe with himſelf provide any Security, or Stock of Courage to ſupport it.

His Friend the Abbot Mountague, who was the only Advocate He had to that Court, uſed all his powerful Rhetorick to allay thoſe Fears, and to comfort him againſt thoſe melancholick Apprehenſions; by aſſuring him, "that the Miniſters were far from ſuch "Inclinations, and that Nothing but Reaſon of State "could diſpoſe them to that Severity:" Yet He prepared him not to think of removing from Montp lier, without firſt acquainting that Court with it. And when afterwards He propoſed to Him, "that He "might have Leave to reſide in Orleans, or ſome other "City, at ſuch a nearer Diſtance from England, that "his Children or Friends might more eaſily repair to "him;" the Court did not like the Propoſition, but propoſed Molins, whither They would not yet give him a Paſs, till firſt their Ambaſſadour in England ſhould know that it would not be unacceptable to his Majeſty: So that He found himſelf upon the Matter not only baniſhed from his Country, but confined to Montpelier, without any Aſſurance that He ſhould not be again ſhortly baniſhed from thence.

This removed by an entire Reſignation to Providence.

However after He had revolved all the Expedients that occurred to him for the Prevention of ſuch a Miſchief, He concluded there was no other Remedy to be applied to thoſe Contingencies, than in acquieſcing in the good Pleaſure of God, and depending upon him to enable him to bear what no Diſcretion or Foreſight of his own could prevent. And in this Compoſure of Mind He betook himſelf to his Books, and to the Entertainment and Exerciſe of ſuch Thoughts, as were moſt like to divert him from others which would be more unpleaſant.

Reflections on his undeſerved Treatment.

God bleſſed him very much in this Compoſure and Retreat. And the firſt Conſolation He adminiſtered to himſelf was, from the Reflection upon the wonderful and unuſual Proceedings and Proſecution that had been againſt him, in another Kind of Manner, and after another Meaſure, than uſed to be practiſed by the moſt bitter Enemies, and than was neceſſary to their Ends and Advantages who had contrived them: Not to mention the Malice and Injuſtice of their firſt Deſign of removing him from the Truſt and Credit He had with the King, and to alienate his Majeſty's Affection and Kindneſs from him, to which the corrupt Hopes and Expectation of Benefit to themſelves might incline them; and then ſuch unrighteous Ends cannot naturally be proſecuted but by as unrighteous Means. When they were not only privy to but Contrivers of his Eſcape, which They looked upon as attended with more Benefit to them than his Impriſonment, or the taking his Life, could have been; when They were ſecure of his Abſence, and of no more being troubled or contradicted by him, by the Bill of Baniſhment, by which They broke their Faith and Promiſes to the King, and made him depart from his own Reſolutions: To what Purpoſe was all their other Proſecution of him both at Home and Abroad, more derogatory to the King's Honour, and that innate Goodneſs of Nature and Clemency that all Men know He abounds in, than miſchievous to him? Why muſt He be abſurdly charged with Counſels and Actions, of which He could never be ſuſpected? And why muſt his Name be ſtruck out of all Books of Council, and Catalogues and Liſts of Servants, that it might not appear that He had ever been a Counſellor of State, or a Magiſtrate of Juſtice; a Method that was never practiſed towards the greateſt Malefactor? To what worthy or neceſſary End could that exorbitant Demand be made and purſued in France, to expoſe him and the Honour of that Crown to the general Reproach of all Men, with ſuch unparallelled Circumſtances?

Which raiſe his Confidence in God.

These very extraordinary Attempts and unheard of Devices ſeemed to all wiſe Men but the laſt Effort of vulgar-ſpirited Perſons, and the faint graſping of impotent Malice; and inſtead of depreſſing the Spirits of him They hated, raiſed his Confidence, that God would not permit ſuch groſs Inventions of very ill and ſhortſighted Men to triumph in the Ruin of an honeſt Man, whoſe Heart was always fixed upon his Protection, and whom He had ſo often preſerved from more powerful Stratagems: And He did really believe, that the divine Juſtice would at ſome Time expoſe the Pride and Ambition of thoſe Men to the Infamy They deſerved.

He reflects on his Conduct from the Time of the King's Return.

To thoſe Perſons with whom He did with the moſt Freedom communicate, He did often profeſs, that upon the ſtricteſt Inquiſition He could make into all his Actions from the Time of the King's Return, when his Condition was generally thought to have been very proſperous, though at beſt it was exerciſed with many Thorns which made it uneaſy, He could not reflect upon any one Thing He had done (amongſt many which He doubted not were juſtly liable to the Reproach of Weakneſs and Vanity), of which he was ſo much aſhamed, as He was of the vaſt Expence He had made in the Building of his Houſe; which had more contributed to that Guſt of Envy that had ſo violently ſhaken him, than any Miſdemeanor that He was thought to have been guilty of; and which had infinitely diſcompoſed his whole Affairs, and broken his Eſtate. For all which He had no other Excuſe to make, than that He was neceſſitated to quit the Habitation He was in at Worceſter-Houſe, which the Owner required, and for which He had always paid five hundred Pounds yearly Rent, and could not find any convenient Houſe to live in except He built one himſelf (to which He was naturally too much inclined); and that He had ſo much Encouragement thereunto from the King himſelf, that his Majeſty vouchſafed to appoint the Place upon which it ſhould ſtand, and graciouſly to beſtow the Inheritance of the Land upon him after a ſhort Term of Years, which He purchaſed from the preſent Poſſeſſor: Which Approbation and Bounty of his Majeſty was his greateſt Encouragement. And his own Unſkilfulneſs in Architecture, and the poſitive Undertaking of a Gentleman (who had Skill enough, and a good Reward for his Skill), that the Expence ſhould not amount to a third Part of what in Truth it afterwards amounted to, which He could without eminent Inconvenience have diſburſed, involved him in that raſh Enterpriſe, that proved ſo fatal and miſchievous to him; not only in the Accumulation of Envy and Prejudice that it brought upon him, but in the Entanglement of a great Debt, that broke all his Meaſures; and, under the Weight of his ſudden, unexpected Misfortune, made his Condition very uneaſy, and near inſupportable.

And blames himſelf chiefly for his Expence in Building.

And this He took all Occaſions to confeſs, and to reproach himſelf with the Folly of it. And yet, when his Children and his neareſt Friends propoſed and adviſed the Sale of it in his Baniſhment, for the Payment of his Debts, and making ſome Proviſion for two younger Children; He remained ſtill ſo much infatuated with the Delight He had enjoyed, that, though He was deprived of it, He hearkened very unwillingly to the Advice; and expreſsly refuſed to approve it, until ſuch a Sum ſhould be offered for it, as held ſome Proportion to the Money He had laid out; and could not conceal ſome Confidence He had, that He ſhould live to be reſtored to it, and to be vindicated from the Brand He ſuffered under, except his particular compleat Ruin were involved in the general Diſtraction and Confuſion of his Country, of which He had a more ſenſible and ſerious Apprehenſion. He

His three Acquieſcences, or Retreats from publick Buſineſs.

HE was wont to ſay, "that of the infinite Bleſſings which God had vouchſafed to confer upon him "almoſt from his Cradle," amongſt which He delighted in the reckoning up many ſignal Inſtances, "He eſteemed himſelf ſo happy in none as in his three "Acquieſcences," which He called his three Vacations and Retreats He had in his Life enjoyed from Buſineſs of Trouble and Vexation; and in every of which God had given him Grace and Opportunity to make full Reflections upon his Actions, and his Obſervations upon what He had done himſelf, and what He had ſeen others do and ſuffer; to repair the Breaches in his own Mind, and to fortify himſelf with new Reſolutions againſt future Encounters, in an entire Reſignation of all his Thoughts and Purpoſes into the Diſpoſal of God Almighty, and in a firm Confidence of his Protection and Deliverance in all the Difficulties He ſhould be obliged to contend with; towards the obtaining whereof, He renewed thoſe Vows and Promiſes of Integrity and hearty Endeavour to perform his Duty, which are the only Means to procure the Continuance of that Protection and Deliverance.

THE firſt of theſe Receſſes or Acquieſcences was, his remaining and reſiding in Jerſey, when the Prince of Wales, his now Majeſty, firſt went into France upon the Command of the Queen his Mother, contrary, as to the Time, to the Opinion of the Council the King his Father had directed him to govern himſelf by, and, as They conceived, contrary to his Majeſty's own Judgment, the knowing whereof They only waited for; and his Stay there, during that Time that his Highneſs firſt remained at Paris and St. Germains, until his Expedition afterwards to the Fleet and in the Downs. His ſecond was, when He was ſent by his Majeſty as his Ambaſſadour, together with the Lord Cottington, into Spain; in which two full Years were ſpent before He waited upon the King again. And the third was his laſt Receſs, by the Diſgrace He underwent, and by the Act of Baniſhment. In which three Acquieſcences, He had learned more, knew himſelf and other Men much better, and ſerved God and his Country with more Devotion, and He hoped more effectually, than in all the other more active Part of his Life.

The great Benefits He received in them.

A ſummary Recapitulation of his Life.

HE uſed to ſay, that He ſpent too much of his younger Years in Company and Converſation, and too little with Books; which was in ſome Degree repaired, by the greateſt Part of his Converſation being with Perſons of very eminent Parts of Learning and Virtue, and never with Men of looſe and debauched Manners. And He took great Pleaſure frequently to remember and mention the Names of thoſe with whom He kept moſt Company, when He firſt entered into the World; many whereof lived to be very eminent in Church and State: To whoſe Information and Example, and to the Affection, Awe and Reverence He had to their Perſons, He did acknowledge to owe all that was commendable in him. He did very much affect to be loved and eſteemed amongſt Men of good Name and Reputation, which made him warily avoid the Company of looſe and diſſolute Men, and to preſerve himſelf from any notable Scandal of any Kind, and to live cautè if not caſtè. Nor was the Converſation He lived in liable to any other Exception, than that it was with Men ſuperiour to him in their Quality and their Fortunes, which expoſed him to greater Expence than his Fortune would warrant: And yet it pleaſed God to preſerve him from ever undergoing any Reproach or Inconvenience.

HE accuſed himſelf of entering too ſoon out of a Life of Eaſe and Pleaſure and too much Idleneſs, into a Life of too much Buſineſs, that required more Labour and Experience and Knowledge than He was ſupplied for; for He put on his Gown as ſoon as He was called to the Bar; and, by the Countenance of Perſons in Place and Authority, as ſoon engaged himſelf in the Buſineſs of the Profeſſion as He put on his Gown, and to that Degree in Practice, that gave little Time for Study, that He had too much neglected before; beſides that He ſtill indulged to his beloved Converſation. Few Years paſſed before the Troubles in Scotland appeared, and The little Parliament was convened; which being diſſolved and preſently a new one called, He was a Member in Both, and wholly gave himſelf up to the publick Affairs agitated there, and where He was enough eſteemed and employed, till the Spirit reigned there, and drove Men of his Principles from thence.

HE was entirely and without Reſerve truſted, with two other of his Friends, in all the King's Affairs which related to the Parliament, before the Rebellion appeared; which brought him into Prejudice and Jealouſy with many of Both Houſes, who were before very kind to him. And in the Beginning of the Rebellion He was ſworn of the Privy Council and made Chancellor of the Exchequer: And from this Time the Pains He took, and the great Fatigue He underwent, were notorious to all Men; inſomuch as the Refreſhment of Dinner excepted, for He never ſupped, He had very little of the Day, and not much of the Night, vacant from the moſt important Buſineſs.

WHEN the Prince was ſeparated from his Father, the King commanded him to attend his Highneſs into the Weſt, under a more than common Truſt: And the Inequality of Humours amongſt the Counſellors, the Wants and Neceſſities of the Prince his little Court and Family, the Want of Wiſdom in his Governour, that made him want that Reſpect from the Prince and all other People that was due to him, the Faction amongſt all the Country Gentlemen, and above all, the ill Succeſs in the King's Affairs, and the Prevalence of the Parliament in all Places, made the Province He had very uncomfortable and uneaſy. The unavoidable Neceſſity of tranſporting the Perſon of the Prince out of the Kingdom (which was intruſted only to four of the Council by the King, and by his Command reſerved from his Governour and another) when there ſhould be apparent Danger of his falling into the Hands of the Rebels, and they as neceſſary deferring it till that Danger was even in View, and the Deſigns of ſome of the Prince his Servants with the County to obſtruct and prevent it when it was in View; the executing of it in a ſeaſonable Article of Time before or in the Moment that it was ſuſpected, and diſguiſing it by a Retreat to Scilly, and ſtaying there till They could be provided for a farther Voyage; and then the Prince's Remove from thence to Jerſey, the Conteſts which happened there between the Counſellors upon the Queen's Commands for his Highneſs's preſent Repair into France, her Majeſty's declared Diſpleaſure, and the perſonal Animoſities which grew from thence between the Perſons in the greateſt Truſt, were all Particulars of that Weight and Diſtraction, that made great Impreſſion upon his Mind and Faculties, which needed much Reflection and Contemplation to compoſe them.

His firſt Retreat in the Iſland of Jerſey.

THIS firſt Retreat gave him Opportunity and Leiſure to call himſelf to a ſtrict Account for whatſoever He had done, upon revolving of all his particular Actions, and the Behaviour of other Men; and to compoſe thoſe Affections and allay thoſe Paſſions, which, in the Warmth of perpetual Actions and chafed by continual Contradictions, had Need of Reſt and cool and deliberate Cogitations. He had now Time to mend his Underſtanding, and to correct the Defects and Infirmities of his Nature, by the Obſervation of and Reflection upon the Grounds and Succeſſes of thoſe Counſels He had been privy to, upon the ſeveral Tempers and Diſtempers of Men employed both in the martial and civil Affairs of the greateſt Importance, and upon the Experience He had and the Obſervation He had made in the three or four laſt Years, where the Part He had acted himſelf differed ſo much from all the former Tranſactions and Commerce of his Life.

He had originally in his Nature ſo great a Tenderneſs and Love towards Mankind, that He did not only deteſt all calumniating and Detraction towards the leſſening the Credit or Parts or Reputation of any Man, but did really believe that all Men were ſuch as They ſeemed or appeared to be; that They had the ſame Juſtice and Candour and Goodneſs in their Nature, that They profeſſed to have; and thought no Men to be wicked and diſhoneſt and corrupt, but thoſe who in their Manners and Lives gave unqueſtionable Evidence of it; and even amongſt thoſe He did think moſt to err and do amiſs, rather out of Weakneſs and Ignorance, for Want of Friends and good Counſel, than out of the Malice and Wickedneſs of their Natures.

But now, upon the Obſervation and Experience He had in the Parliament (and He believed He could have made the Diſcovery no where elſe, without Doubt not ſo ſoon), He reformed all thoſe Miſtakes, and mended that Eaſineſs of his Underſtanding. He had ſeen thoſe there, upon whoſe Ingenuity and Probity He would willingly have depoſited all his Concernments of this World, behave themſelves with that ſignal Uningenuity and Improbity that muſt pull up all Confidence by the Roots; Men of the moſt unſuſpected Integrity, and of the greateſt Eminence for their Piety and Devotion, moſt induſtrious to impoſe upon and to cozen Men of weaker Parts and Underſtanding, upon the Credit of their Sincerity, to concur with them in miſchievous Opinions, which They did not comprehend, and which conduced to diſhoneſt Actions They did not intend. He ſaw the moſt bloody and inhuman Rebellion contrived by them who were generally believed to be the moſt ſolicitous and zealous for the Peace and Proſperity of the Kingdom, with ſuch Art and Subtilty, and ſo great Pretences to Religion, that it looked like Illnature to believe that ſuch ſanctified Perſons could entertain any but holy Purpoſes. In a Word, Religion was made a Cloak to cover the moſt impious Deſigns; and Reputation of Honeſty, a Stratagem to deceive and cheat others who had no Mind to be wicked. The Court was as full of Murmuring, Ingratitude and Treachery, and as willing and ready to rebel againſt the beſt and moſt bountiful Maſter in the World, as the Country and the City. A barbarous and bloody Fierceneſs and Savageneſs had extinguiſhed all Relations, hardened the Hearts and Bowels of all Men; and an univerſal Malice and Animoſity had even covered the moſt innocent and beſt-natured People and Nation upon the Earth.

These unavoidable Reflections firſt made him diſcern, how weak and fooliſh all his former Imaginations had been, and how blind a Surveyor He had been of the Inclinations and Affections of the Heart of Man; and it made him likewiſe conclude from thence, how uncomfortable and vain the Dependance muſt be upon any Thing in this World, where whatſoever is good and deſirable ſuddenly periſheth, and Nothing is laſting but the Folly and Wickedneſs of the Inhabitants thereof. In this firſt Vacation, He had Leiſure to read many learned and pious Books; and here He began to compoſe his Meditations upon the Psalms, by applying thoſe Devotions to the preſent Afflictions and Calamities of his King and Country. He began now by the eſpecial Encouragement of the King, who was then a Priſoner in the Army, to write the History of the late Rebellion and civil Wars, and finiſhed the four firſt Books thereof; and made an Entry upon ſome Exerciſes of Devotion, which He lived to enlarge afterwards.

When He had enjoyed, in that pleaſant Iſland of Jerſey, full two Years, in as great Serenity of Mind as the Separation from Country, Wife and Children can be imagined to admit, He received a Command from the Queen, then at St. Germains, and an expreſs Order from the King, upon which the other had been ſent, his Majeſty being then Priſoner in the Iſle of Wight, that He ſhould forthwith attend the Perſon of the Prince of Wales, who, upon the Revolt of the Ships under the Command of the Parliament in the Downs, and their Profeſſion of Obedience to the King, was adviſed to make all poſſible Haſte to them; and the Chancellor was required to wait upon his Highneſs at Roan upon a Day aſſigned, which was paſt before the Orders came to him.

And then without any Delay He uſed all poſſible Diligence to find the Prince; who with greater Expedition, without coming to Roan, paſſed to Calais, and from thence to Holland to poſſeſs the Ships which He found there, and poſſeſſed with all that Alacrity (which is always very loud) that Seamen can expreſs; and by the Aſſiſtance of the Prince of Orange got more Victual quickly on Board, that He might be in the Downs with the Fleet to ſecond ſome Attempt which was already on Foot in Kent, and others expected in ſeveral Parts of the Kingdom. And the Chancellor having in his Way called upon the Lord Cottington at Roan, and together with him, and ſome other Perſons of Honour and Quality, made what Haſte They could to Dieppe, that They might there embark for any Place where They ſhould hear the Prince to be; there They were informed, that his Highneſs was at the Brill in Holland. And thereupon They put themſelves on Board a French Man of War, and upon the Sea were taken Priſoners by Oſtenders, who, upon the Advantage of being in the Ship of an Enemy, concluded them to be lawful Prize, and treated them accordingly, with all the Circumſtances of Barbarity; and after having plundered them thoroughly of Money and Jewels of great Value, and ſtripped moſt of their Servants to their Shirts, They carried them in great Triumph to Oſtend; where though their Perſons were uſed with Civility and Reſpect, and preſently ſet at Liberty, yet They were compelled to ſtay there many Days, in Hope to obtain the Jewels and Money of which They had been robbed, and, finding that not to be done (thoſe Privateers being ſubject to no Diſcipline, nor regarding the Orders of the Admiralty, or any other Governour), to make ſuch Proviſion as was neceſſary for a further Voyage. And at laſt They got from Oſtend to Fluſhing, having found Means to inform the Prince of their Miſadventures, and of their Readineſs at Fluſhing to receive and obey his Commands.

The Fleet was then in the Downs in ſo good a Poſture, by the Acceſs of other Ships and Veſſels to it, and by ſome notable Commotions on Land, that the Proſpect was fair and hopeful. And the Prince received the Advertiſement no ſooner, than He was pleaſed to ſend a Frigate to Fluſhing for thoſe who had been ſo long expected. But the Winds proved then ſo croſs and tempeſtuous in the gentleſt Seaſon of the Year, that after ſeveral Attempts at Sea, They were ſo often driven back again into the Harbour, ſometimes by very dangerous Storms, that in the End They received new Directions to attend the Prince at the Hague, the Fleet being at the ſame Time under Sail for that Coaſt.

The Earl of Lautherdale was at that Time come to the Fleet as Commiſſioner from the Kingdom of Scotland, to inform the Prince, that Duke Hamilton with a powerful Army was already marched into England; and thereupon to invite his Highneſs to make what Haſte He could, to put himſelf in the Head of that Army, according to a Promiſe the King had made in ſome private Treaty with the Scots; and which the Queen had ſent very poſitive Commands to be obſerved and obeyed. This was the Reaſon, not without other more reaſonable Motives, ſo ſuddenly to quit the Downs, that He might get more Victual for the Fleet, and therewith ſail to the North, and diſembark in ſuch a Place as ſhould be neareſt to the Scots Army, with which He doubted not to find a very conſiderable Conjunction of the Engliſh; ſince He knew that Sir Marmaduke Langdale had poſſeſſed himſelf with a Body of Engliſh Officers and Gentlemen, of Berwick, and Sir Philip Muſgrave had done the ſame with the like Aſſiſtance, at Carliſle, before the Scots began their March.

The

THE Lord Cottington and the Chancellor came to the Hague the next Day after the Prince his Arrival, and were very graciouſly received by his Highneſs, and with a wonderful Kindneſs by all the Court, and all the Gentlemen who had attended upon him; not ſo much out of Affection to them, as out of Deteſtation of one another, who had kept Company for the Space of two Months laſt paſt.

THE Prince had found the common Seamen full of ſuch a keen Devotion for his Service upon the true Principles of the Cauſe, and for the Redemption of the King his Father out of Priſon, and ſo full of Indignation againſt thoſe who had formerly miſled them into Rebellion, eſpecially the Preſbyterians; that as They had before the Declaration ſet all thoſe Officers on Shore by Force, who were appointed by the Parliament to command them, ſo now They thought the new ones which They had choſen for themſelves, not fierce and reſolute enough for their Purpoſes. The Truth is; there had been much unſkilful Tampering amongſt them by Emiſſaries from Paris, and other Attempts. And the Duke of York, having made his Eſcape very little Time before, and being then at the Hague when the Fleet came to Helvoetſluys, upon the firſt Notice loſt no Time in making Haſte to them. It was generally known, that the King his Father had long deſigned to make him High Admiral of England; and the Commiſſion which had been formerly granted to the Earl of Northumberland They all knew to be repealed and cancelled: So that He no ſooner came to the Fleet, but He was received with the uſual Acclamations of Joy as their Admiral, and He as chearfully aſſumed the Command. And his ſmall Family preſently began to propagate their ſeveral Factions and Animoſities, with which They abounded, to make ſuch Parties amongſt the Seamen as might advance their ſeveral Pretences. And in this Poſture the Prince found the Fleet when He came to it, and reſolved to take the Command immediately into his own Hand, and that the Duke ſhould remain at the Hague with his Siſter, till that Expedition were over; and ſo He made Haſte with the Fleet into the Downs, hoping that ſome preſent Occaſion would be the beſt Expedient to extinguiſh that Fire, and compoſe thoſe Diſtempers, which He diſcerned already to be kindled amongſt the Seamen.

THE Advice and Inſtruction which were brought from Paris were grounded upon the Treaty with Scotland, the marching of that Army and the Expectation of ſome notable Attempt by the Preſbyterian Party in London; in Order to which, all Addreſs was to be made to that City, and a Declaration to be publiſhed to gratify that Party. This Secret was intruſted only to one of the Council, and one other who was to be miniſterial in whatſoever the other directed. And this Temper was quickly diſcovered when They came into the Downs, by the great Care that was taken to give no Offence or Interruption to the Trade of the City, which all Men believed would be the beſt Means to reduce it. Ships of Return, richly laden, were ſuffered quietly to paſs thither; others coming from thence, very well freighted, were likewiſe quietly permitted to proſecute their Voyage: All which was paſſionately oppoſed by Prince Rupert and all the reſt of the Council. And this Contradiction was quickly known to the Lords of the Bedchamber, and others, who had no Reverence for that Council, and were now the more inflamed upon this Diviſion of Opinion. And the Seamen likewiſe coming to take Notice of it cried out, "the Prince was betrayed;" and grew into ſuch Rage and Fury, that They declared, "that "They would throw thoſe overboard who gave the "Prince ſuch evil Counſel." Two or three unproſperous Attempts at Land, and then the Lord Lautherdale's coming thither, and the Order thereupon for the Fleet to ſail preſently for Holland for the Reaſons aforeſaid, kindled all thoſe Sparkles into a bright Flame of Diſſenſion, ſo univerſal, that there were very few who ſpake with any Civility of one another, or without the higheſt Animoſity that can be imagined.

THIS was the diſtracted Condition of Affairs when the Lord Cottington and the Chancellor came to the Hague; the Council divided between themſelves, and more offended with the Court for Preſumption in making themſelves of the Council, and oppoſing whatſoever the other directed, by their private Whiſpering to the Prince in Reproach of them, and their publick Murmurings againſt their Perſons for the Counſel They gave, every Man endeavouring to incenſe others againſt thoſe who were not affected by him; and this ill Humour increaſed by ſuch an univerſal Poverty, that very few knew where to find a Subſiſtence for three Months to come, or how to diſpoſe of themſelves. The Clamour from the Fleet was ſo high for new Victual and for Money, that there was Apprehenſion juſt enough, that They would provide for themſelves by returning to their old Station; to which They had both Opportunity and Invitation, by the Parliament's having ſet out another Fleet ſuperiour in Power to them, that were already at Anchor in their View, under the Command of the Earl of Warwick, to block them up in that inconvenient Harbour. The ſudden News of the total Defeat of the Scots Army; and ſhortly after the Loſs of Colcheſter, and taking the Perſons of ſo many gallant Gentlemen, and murdering ſome of them in cold Blood; the daily warm Conteſts in Council upon the inſolent Behaviour and the unreaſonable Demands of the Lord Lautherdale, who as peremptorily inſiſted upon the Prince's going immediately with the Fleet into Scotland, as He had done before the total Defeat of Duke Hamilton, and without expecting to hear what Alteration that fatal Change had produced in that Kingdom, which was very reaſonable to apprehend, and in Truth had at that Time really fallen out: Theſe and many other ill Preſages made the Chancellor quickly find, that in his two Years Repoſe in Jerſey He had not fortified himſelf enough againſt future Aſſaults, nor laid in Ballaſt to be prepared to ride out the Storms and Tempeſts that He was like to be engaged in.

THE Preſervation of the Fleet was a Conſideration that would bear no Delay; and was in a ſhort Time, though with infinite Difficulties and Conteſts full of Animoſity, reſolved to be by committing the Charge of it to Prince Rupert, who was to carry it into Ireland, where were many good Ports in his Majeſty's Obedience. But that was no ſooner done, but the horrid Murder of the King, and the formed Diſſolution of the Monarchy there, and erecting and eſtabliſhing the Government in that Kingdom with a ſeeming general Conſent, at leaſt without any viſible Appearance or Poſſibility of Contradiction or Oppoſition; the faint Proclamation of the preſent King in Scotland, under the ſame Conditions which They would have impoſed, and with all the Circumſtances with which They had proſecuted the Rebellion againſt his Father; the Reſolution what was fit for the young King, to undertake in his own Perſon, and the diſmal Proſpect, how all the neighbour Princes were ſolicitous not to pay him any ſuch Civilities, as might encourage him to expect any Thing from them; were all Arguments of Perplexity and Conſternation to all Men, who had been moderately verſed in the Tranſaction of Affairs; and were too many Things to be looked upon at once, and yet could not be effectually looked upon but together. So that the Chancellor uſed to ſay, "that all the Bu-"ſineſs He had been converſant in, from the Begin-"ning to his coming to the Hague, had not admini-"ſtered Half the Difficulties and Diſconſolation, had "not Half ſo much diſturbed and diſtracted his Un-"derſtanding, and broken his Mind, as the next ſix "Months from that Time had done." Nor could He ſee any Light before him to preſent a Way to the King, by entering into which He might hopefully avoid the greateſt Miſery that ever Prince had been expoſed to. His own particular Condition (under ſo general a Mortification) Mortification) afflicted him very little, having long compoſed himſelf by a Reſolution, with God's Bleſſing, to do his Duty without Heſitation, and to leave all the reſt to the Diſpoſition of Providence.

When the Fleet was committed to the Government of Prince Rupert to embark for Ireland, it was enough foreſeen by thoſe who foreſaw what naturally might fall out, that Ireland was probably like to be the Place whither it might be the moſt counſellable for the Prince himſelf to repair. But as it was not then ſeaſonable in many Reſpects to publiſh ſuch an Imagination; ſo it was not poſſible to keep the Fleet where it then was, or in any Port of the Dominions of Holland, where the States were already perplexed what Anſwer They ſhould return if the new Commonwealth ſhould demand the Ships, or whether They were not obliged to deliver them: And therefore no Time was to be loſt. Nor was the Voyage itſelf like to be ſecure, but by the Benefit of the Winter Seaſon, and the unquiet Seas They were to paſs through; which would have made it too dangerous a Voyage for the Perſon of the Prince, who muſt find a ſhorter Paſſage thither, when it ſhould be neceſſary.

When that inhuman Impiety was acted at London, and the young King had in ſome Degree recovered his Spirits from the ſudden Aſtoniſhment, and had received the vile Proclamation and Propoſitions from Scotland, his Majeſty with thoſe few who were of neareſt Truſt concluded, "that it would be ſhortly of Neceſ-
"ſity to tranſport himſelf into Ireland; which was to be the higheſt Secret, that it might be equally unſuſpected in England and in Scotland. "That He ſhould incog-
"nito, or with a light Train, paſs through France to "Nants, or ſome other Port of Bretagne, where two "or three Ships of War, which He could not doubt of "obtaining by the Favour of his Brother the Prince "of Orange, might attend him; and from thence He "might with the leaſt Hazard embark for the near-
"eſt Coaſt of Ireland, where the Marquis of Ormond
"might meet him."

This being concluded in that Manner, the Lord Cottington went in a Morning to the King before He was dreſſed; and deſired, "that when He was ready,
"He would give him a private Audience in his Clo"ſet." He there told him, "that his Majeſty had "taken the moſt prudent Reſolution that his Condition
"would admit, for Ireland; where there remained yet
"ſome Foundation for Hope. That for himſelf He was
"ſo old and infirm" (for to his ſeventy five Years, which was then his Age, He had frequent and painful Viſitations of the Gout and the Stone) "that his Majeſty
"could not expect his perſonal Attendance in ſo many
"Journies by Land as He muſt be expoſed to: Yet
"having ſerved the Crown throughout the Reign of "his Grandfather and his Father, He was very deſi-
"rous to finiſh his Life in his Majeſty's Service."

"That He had reflected upon the woful Condi"tion his Affairs were in, not more by the Power of "his Rebels, than by being abandoned by all his "neighbour Princes. That it was too apparent, that "neither of them would embark themſelves in his "Quarrel; ſo that the utmoſt He could hope from "them was, that in ſome ſecret Manner They might "contribute ſuch a Supply and Relief to him, as "might give him a Subſiſtence, till ſome new Acci"dents and Alterations at Home or Abroad might "produce a more ſeaſonable Conjuncture. That even "in that Particular, He doubted the Magnanimity or
"Generoſity of Princes would not be very conſpicu-
"ous: However it being all his preſent Dependance,
"He muſt try all the Ways He could to provoke
"them to that Diſpoſition."

"That He knew the Crown of Spain was ſo low
"at that Time, that whatever their Inclinations might "be, They could neither ſupply him with Ships or "Men or Money towards the raiſing or ſupporting of "an Army: Yet that He knew too that there is ſuch
"a Proportion of Honour, and of a generous Com-"paſſion and Bounty, that is inſeparable from that "Crown, and even runs through that People, which "other Nations are not inſpired with. And He was "confident, that if his Majeſty ſent an Ambaſſadour
"thither, how neceſſitous ſoever that Court might be,
"it would never refuſe to make ſuch an Aſſignment
"of Money to him as might, well huſbanded, pro"vide a decent Support for him in Ireland; where
"likewiſe the King of Spain had Power to do his Ma-
"jeſty more Offices than any other Prince could do,
"or He any where elſe, by the univerſal Influence
"He had upon the Iriſh Nation. And General Owen
"O Neile, who was the only Man that then obſtruct-
"ed the Union of that People in a Submiſſion to the "King, had been bred up in the Court of Spain, and "had ſpent all his Time in the Service of that Crown,
"and had ſtill his ſole Dependance upon it; and there"fore it was to be preſumed, that He might be in"duced by Direction from Madrid, to conform him-
"ſelf to a Conjunction with the Marquis of Ormond,
"the King's Lieutenant there." He ſaid, "that his "Majeſty knew well that He had ſpent a great Part "of his Life in that Court, in the Service of his Grand"father and Father; and He would be willing to end
"his Days there, if it were thought of Uſe to his "Affairs."

The Diſcourſe was too reaſonable not to make Impreſſion upon the King; which diſcovering in his Countenance, the other deſired him, "that He would "think that Day upon all that He had ſaid, without "communicating it to any Body, till the next Morn"ing, when He would again wait on him to know his "Opinion upon the whole; for if his Majeſty ſhould
"approve of what He propoſed, He had another Par"ticular to offer, before the Matter ſhould be pub-
"lickly debated." When He came the next Morning, and found the King was much pleaſed with what He had before diſcourſed, and aſked what the other Particular was that He intended to offer; the Lord Cottington told him, "that He was very glad his Ma-
"jeſty was ſo well pleaſed with what He had pro-
"poſed, which He confeſſed the more He had re-
"volved himſelf, the more hopeful the Succeſs ap"peared to him; which made him the more ſolici-
"tous, that through any Inadvertency ſuch a Deſign
"might not miſcarry."

He put him then in Mind again "of his great "Age, how unlike it was that He ſhould be able to "hold out ſuch a Journey, or, if He did, the Fatigue
"thereof would probably caſt him into a Fit of the "Gout, or the Stone, or Both, which if He ſhould
"outlive, He ſhould be long detained from the Pro-
"ſecution of his Buſineſs, which the leſs vigorouſly
"purſued would be more ineffectual; and therefore propoſed, "that He might have a Companion
"with him, of more Youth and a ſtronger Conſtitu-
"tion, who would receive ſome Benefit by the Infor "mation and Advice He ſhould be able to give him,
"the Advantage whereof would redound for the pre-
"ſent, and might more in the future, to the King's "Service;" and in Fine propoſed, "that the Chancel"lor of the Exchequer might be joined in the Com-
"miſſion with him, and accompany him into Spain,
"from whence if They made Haſte in their Journey,
"They might make ſuch a Progreſs in that Court, that "He might be able to attend his Majeſty in Ireland in "a very ſhort Time after his Arrival there; whilſt
"himſelf remained ſtill at Madrid, to proſecute all
"farther Opportunities to advance his Service."

The King was ſurpriſed with the Overture; and aſked, "whether the Chancellor would be willing to "undertake the Employment, and whether He had "ſpoken with him of it." To which the other preſently replied, "that He knew not, nor had ever ſpoke to "him of it, nor would do, till his Majeſty, if He "liked it, ſhould firſt prepare him; for He knew "well He would at firſt be ſtartled at it, and it may

" be might take it unkindly. That He knew well " how much of the Weight of his Buſineſs lay upon " the Chancellor's Shoulders and in that Reſpect that " many others would not be willing He ſhould be ab- " ſent: Yet that there was a long Vacation in View, " and there could be little to be done till the King " ſhould come into Ireland, and by that Time He " might be with him again, with ſuch a Return from " Spain as might be welcome and convenient to him. " And therefore if his Majeſty would firſt break the " Matter to him, He would then take the Work " upon him; and He believed He ſhould give him " ſuch Reaſons, ſince He could not ſuſpect his Friend- " ſhip" (which was very notorious, and They lived then together), " as would diſpoſe him to the " Journey."

WHEN the King ſpake to him of it, as a Thing that had reſulted from his own Thoughts; " that He " had more Hope to obtain ſome Supply from Spain, " than from any other Place; that no Man could be " ſo fit to ſolicit it as the Lord Cottington, and No- " body ſo fit to accompany him as He, who might " be with him in Ireland in a ſhort Time;" He ſaid, " He had ſpoken with Lord Cottington to undertake " the Employment, to which He was not averſe; " but He had expreſsly refuſed to undertake it alone, " and He knew that no Companion would be ſo ac- " ceptable to him as He would be."

THE Chancellor did not at firſt diſſemble the Apprehenſion that this Device had been contrived at Paris, where He knew that neither of them were acceptable, nor were wiſhed to be about the King, or to have ſo much Credit with him as They were Both thought to have: But the King quickly expelled that Jealouſy. And He deſired a ſhort Time to conſider of it; and received ſuch Reaſons (beſides Kindneſs in the Invitation) from the Lord Cottington, that He did not ſubmit only to the King's Pleaſure, but very willingly undertook the Employment: And, though it was afterwards delayed by the Importunity of many, and the Queen's own Advice, who thought the Chancellor's Attendance about the Perſon of the King her Son to be more uſeful to his Service, than it was like to be in the other Climate, the King was firm to his Purpoſe; and diſpatched them ſhortly after his coming into France, when He reſolved and prepared for his own Expedition into Ireland, in Order to which there were then ſome Dutch Ships of War that waited for him at St. Maloes.

His ſecond Retreat in Spain.

THIS was the Occaſion and Ground of his ſecond Retreat and Receſs from a very uneaſy Condition, of which He was not more weary in Reſpect of the Difficulty and Melancholy of the Buſineſs, from which He could not entirely diſentangle himſelf by Abſence, than in Reſpect of the Company He was to keep in the conducting it, who had Humours and Inclinations uneaſy to him, irreſolute in themſelves, and contrary for the moſt Part to his Judgment. And He did ſtill acknowledge, that He did receive much Refreſhment and Benefit by that Negotiation. For though the Employment proved ineffectual to the Purpoſes for which it was intended, by the King's finding it neceſſary to divert his intended Journey for Ireland, into that of Scotland; yet he had Vacancy to recollect and compoſe his broken Thoughts; and mended his Underſtanding, in the Obſervation and Experience of another Kind of Negotiation than He had formerly been acquainted with, under the Aſſiſtance, Advice and Friendſhip of the moſt able Perſon, and the beſt acquainted with foreign Negotiations and the general Intereſts of the ſeveral Kings and States in Chriſtendom, of any Stateſman then alive in Europe, and who delighted in giving him all the Information He could. He was converſant in a Court of another Nature and Humour, of another Kind of Grandeur and Gravity, of another Conſtitution and Policy; and where Ambaſſadours are more eſteemed and regarded, and live with more Converſation and a better Intelligence amongſt themſelves, than in any other Court in the World.

THE leſs of Buſineſs He had, He was the more vacant to ſtudy the Language and the Manners and the Government of that Nation. He made a Collection of and read many of the beſt Books which are extant in that Language, eſpecially in the Hiſtories of their Civil and Eccleſiaſtical State. Upon the reading the Pontifical Hiſtory written by Illeſcas in two Volumes, and continued by one or two others in three other Volumes, He begun there firſt his ANIMADVERSIONS UPON THE SUPERIORITY and SUPREMACY OF THE POPE, which He afterwards continued to a perfect Work. Here He reſumed the Continuation of his DEVOTIONS ON THE PSALMS, and other Diſcourſes of Piety and Devotion, which He reviewed and enlarged in his later Times of Leiſure. Though He underwent in this Employment many Mortifications of ſeveral Kinds, yet He ſtill acknowledged that He learned much during the Time of his being in Spain, from whence He returned a little before the Battle of Worceſter; and after the King's miraculous Eſcape into France, He quickly waited upon his Majeſty, and was never ſeparated from his Perſon, till ſixteen or ſeventeen Years after by his Baniſhment.

His third Retreat after his Baniſhment.

THIS He called his third and moſt bleſſed Receſs, in which God vouchſafed to exerciſe many of his Mercies towards him. And though He entered into it with many very diſconſolate Circumſtances; yet in a ſhort Time, upon the Recovery of a better State of Health, and being remitted into a Poſture of Eaſe and Quietneſs, and ſecure from the Power of his Enemies, He recovered likewiſe a marvellous Tranquillity and Serenity of Mind, by making a ſtrict Review and Recollection into all the Actions, all the Faults and Follies, committed by himſelf and others in his laſt continued Fatigue of ſeventeen or eighteen Years; in which He had received very many ſignal Inſtances of God's Favour, and in which He had ſo behaved himſelf, that He had the good Opinion and Friendſhip of thoſe of the beſt Fame, Reputation and Intereſt, and was generally believed to have deſerved very well of the King and Kingdom.

IN all this Retirement He was very ſeldom vacant, and then only when He was under ſome ſharp Viſitation of the Gout, from reading excellent Books, or writing ſome Animadverſions and Exercitations of his own, as appears by the Papers and Notes which He left. He learned the Italian and French Languages, in which He read many of the choiceſt Books. Now He finiſhed the Work which his Heart was moſt ſet upon, THE HISTORY OF THE LATE CIVIL WARS AND TRANSACTIONS TO THE TIME OF THE KING'S RETURN IN THE YEAR 1660; of which He gave the King Advertiſement. He finiſhed his REFLECTIONS AND DEVOTIONS UPON THE PSALMS OF DAVID, which He dedicated to his Children; which was ended at Montpelier before the Death of the Dutcheſs. He wrote and finiſhed his ANSWER TO MR. HOBBES HIS LEVIATHAN, to which HE prefixed an Epiſtle dedicatory to the King, if his Majeſty would permit it. He wrote a good Volume of ESSAYS, DIVINE, MORAL, and POLITICAL, to which HE was always adding. HE prepared A DISCOURSE HISTORICAL OF THE PRETENCE AND PRACTICE OF THE SUCCESSIVE POPES FROM THE BEGINNING OF THAT JURISDICTION THEY ASSUME; in which He thought He had fully vindicated the Power and Authority of that odious Uſurpation. He entered upon the forming A METHOD FOR THE BETTER DISPOSING THE HISTORY OF ENGLAND, THAT IT MAY BE MORE PROFITABLY AND EXACTLY COMMUNICATED THAN

IT HATH YET BEEN. He left ſo many Papers of ſeveral Kinds, and cut out ſo many Pieces of Work, that a Man may conclude, that He never intended to be idle.

In a Word, He did not only by all poſſible Adminiſtrations ſubdue his Affections and Paſſions, to make his Mind conformable to his preſent Fortune; but did all He could to lay in a Stock of Patience and Proviſion, that might ſupport him in any future Exigent or Calamity that might befall him: Yet with a chearful Expectation, that God would deliver him from that powerful Combination which then oppreſſed him.
